LEE TELLS HIS STORY ON STAND

Little Mary Phagan's Mother Weeps Testifying

RICH GEORGIA GIRL LOST 3 WEEKS

Lynette Awtrey, Acworth Heiress, Strangely Missing, Wires Plea for Help From Utah.

A dramatic story behind the mysterious disappearance of Miss Lynette Awtrey, 18-year-old daughter of wealthy Orlando Awtrey, one of the leading citizens of Acworth, Ga., and a member of one of Cobb County's most prominent families, who, after a tour of Europe, boarded a train in New York for Atlanta and then vanished as utterly as though she had left the earth, is expected to be bared this week when the girl arrives home from Ogden, Utah, where she has been located.

Miss Awtrey has been missing for nearly two weeks. Becoming homesick during her European trip, she returned to New York and wired her father to send her money to come home. Mr. Awtrey wired her $200 and the same day received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta. Her trunk came on the train on which she was supposed to come, but there was no trace of the girl.

Since then her family has exhausted every means to locate the missing girl. The aid of the William J. Burns Detective Agency was enlisted and the operatives of the famous sleuth scoured the cities of the United States; the aid of police departments all over the country was invoked—but with no result. For all the detectives were able to ascertain to the contrary the girl had dissolved into thin air. After she boarded the train in New York absolutely no trace could be found of her.

Sends Mysterious Telegram.

With constant reports of failure being filed by America's most noted sleuths, Mr. Awtrey redoubled his efforts to find his missing daughter. More appeals were made to police departments, private detective agencies were enlisted in the search, and photographs of the young girl were sent out secretly by the Burns men in the hope that someone could be found who had seen her.

Sunday morning Miss Awtrey broke her silence of two weeks with a telegram from Ogden that intensified the mystery. It contained no explanation of her disappearance. The telegram was a piteous appeal for aid—a cry that she was alone and penniless in a strange land.

"Please help me," the telegram said. "I have no money. I am sorry I left home, but can not explain now. I will tell you about it when I get home."

The message was signed "Lynette," with no address in Ogden save the Western Union. Mr. Awtrey immediately wired his daughter money and a ticket to Acworth by way of the Union Pacific. It is probable that either he or one of the girl's brothers will meet her at Nashville or Chattanooga.

The disappearance of Miss Awtrey is almost identical with the case of Dorothy Arnold, the missing New York heiress, who still is being sought by detectives after a disappearance of more than a year, and has stirred and perplexed Cobb County more than any mystery of recent years.

Comes From Leading Family.

The fact that the girl comes from one of the leading families of North Georgia makes the interest in the mystery all the greater. Her father is president of the Acworth Cotton Mills Manufacturing Company of Acworth, and is interested largely in the commercial life of the town. She is a niece of Mrs. D. F. McClatchy, wife of the reading clerk of the Georgia House of Representatves, and a niece of John Awtrey, a prominent attorney of Marietta, and of Bernard Awtrey, editor of The Marietta News. She is also related to Mrs. R. M. Moon and a number of other prominent Marietta and Cobb County people.

Miss Awtrey is prominent in Ac-

ENGINEERS QUARREL; 1 KILLED

Sam Jackson, a freight engineer on the Georgia Railroad, was shot and fatally wounded by Grover Cleveland Partee, also an engineer, at the roundhouse in Inman Park about 3 o'clock Monday afternoon.

According to witnesses of the shooting, Jackson had just come in from a run, and on leaving his engine met Partee. It is said that there had been bad feling between the two men for some time, and after a few words, Partee drew a revolver and fired one time, the bullet striking Jackson in the neck.

The Grady ambulance was at once called, and the wounded man rushed to the hospital, but he died on the operating table without ever regaining consciousness.

Men at the roundhouse held Partee until the arrival of the police, when he was taken to the station. The cause of the murder is not yet known.

Conduct of Chipley Marshal Questioned

CHIPLEY, FLA., July 28.—City Council to-day appointed a committee of three to ascertain whether charges should be preferred against the town Marshal, with instructions to institute impeachment procedings if deemed necessary.

It is alleged that on Saturday the Marshal arrested a negro woman dressed in men's clothing, but failed to arrest a white man who furnished her with the clothes and was following her. Council Saturday night demanded the Marshal's resignation, but, acting on advice of his attorney, he refused to resign.

Two Men Drowned in Jacksonville Region

JACKSONVILLE, July 28.—Jesse Kramer, a newcomer to this city, was drowned at Pablo Beach to-day. His cries for help were not heard and his body floated ashore shortly afterward. The life savers and physicians who were summoned were unable to restore respiration, although they worked over him for two hours.

The body of J. B. Reynolds, of this city, who was drowned at James Point, in the St. Johns River, yesterday afternoon, was found to-day. Efforts to locate his wife have not been successful.

The big machine turned over twice and was badly damaged. The four occupants of the car escaped with minor injuries, although all were badly shaken up.

Miss Painter Sues Insurance Company

JACKSONVILLE, July 28.—Miss Opal Painter, daughter of the late E. O. Painter, filed suit this morning against the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, of Baltimore, for $50,000.

Only the declaration was filed and the counts of the action are not known, although it is supposed that she is attempting to collect the insurance carried by her father.

FRANK SKETCHED IN COURT

The prisoner is apparently the calmest and most collected person in the crowded courtroom. He is in the best of health and is keenly alive to every proceeding in the trial.

Vote Fraud Probe in Pensacola Resumed

PENSACOLA, July 28.—County Solicitor Loftin to-day resumed the investigation of charges of corrupt practices alleged to have taken place during the recent city election here which was interrupted several days ago. He spent the entire day considering evidence already secured and looking up statutes.

It is probable that indictments will be drawn immediately.

FILIBUSTER HALTS HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The House adjourned three minutes after its opening to-day. Gardner, of Massachusetts, continued the Republican filibuster.

NEGRO WATCHMAN SWEARS FRANK ACTED ODDLY DAY OF CRIME

Jury chosen at 1:30 p. m.

Mrs. Coleman, girl's mother, takes stand after recess, at 3:15, and tells of Mary leaving for the factory 11:45 a. m. on April 26.

George W. Epps, boy companion of Mary Phagan, repeats his story that he had an engagement to meet her on the afternoon of the fatal day.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the factory, tells his story of the finding of the body and subsequent developments. He says Frank acted queerly the day of the crime, and is cross-examined by Luther Rosser.

Court adjourned at 5:15 after an interesting session.

Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of murdered Mary Phagan, was the first witness for the prosecution at the trial of Leo Frank Monday afternoon. After answering several questions she broke down completely when the solicitor exhibited the little lavender skirt worn by her daughter when she last saw her alive. She covered her face with a fan and for several minutes could not answer a question.

The first question asked her was:

"What is your name?"

"Mrs. J. W. Coleman."

"When did you last see Mary Phagan alive?"

"April 26 at 11:45."

"What was she going to do when she lfet home?"

"She was going to the pencil factory to draw her pay."

Not Yet 14 Years Old.

Q. What did she eat before leaving?—A. Cabbage and bread.

Q. What was the age?—A. Nearly 14 years.

Q. Was she pretty or an ugly girl?—She was very pretty.

At this point Mrs. Coleman's voice began faltering.

Q. Did she have dimples in her cheeks?—A. Two pretty ones.

Q. What did she wear when you saw her the last time?—A lavender dress trimmed in lace.

Shows Victim's Dress.

Here Solicitor Dorsey took a large suitcase from the floor and opened it, and laid before the witness the clothes taken from Mary Phagan's body. It was then that Mrs. Coleman broke down and no more questions were asked for several minutes.

Between sobs, Mrs. Coleman, identified the clothes of Mary Phagan, which were laid at her feet. Deputy Miner gave her a glass of water. Solicitor Dorsey closed his questioning and Mr. Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. What trimming was on Mary's hat?—A. Pale blue ribbon and some small pink flowers.

Q. How far do you live from the car line?—A. Two blocks.

Q. Do you know that Mary caught a car immediately leaving home at 11:45 o'clock?—A. Yes, she caught a car in five or seven minutes.

Q. Do you know the boy who was with her?—A. Yes, Epps.

Solicitor Dorsey objected, desiring to know who the boy was and what about him.

"It is necessary for me to know the relation between little Mary Phagan and this boy," answered Mr. Rosser.

"I don't know what's on his mind," declared Dorsey. "We ought to know if he intends to endeavor to impeach this witness.

The cross-examination was resumed.

State Objects Again.

Q. Isn't it true that Mary told you that she detested Epps—that she didn't like him?

Dorsey objected again and Attorney Rosser withdrew his question.

Q. Didn't you tell L. P. Whitfield that Mary told you she detested Epps?

Objection again by the State, claiming that the question was immaterial and was mere hearsay.

Rosser said: "I am going to show the improbability of Mary Phagan making an engagement to meet this boy Epps."

Objection was overruled.

Says Girl Made Remark.

Mrs. Coleman finally replied that she thought Mary had made that remark.

Mrs. Coleman was excused with the intimation that she might again be called to testify.

Following Mrs. Coleman, George Epps was called to the witness stand. Solicitor Dorsey opened the questioning.

Q. Where do you live?—A. No. 246 Ross street.

Q. You waited at that corner all this time?—A. I never left there until 4 o'clock.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I went to the ball game and finished selling my papers there.

Q. When did you see Mary Phagan again?—A. The next morning at the pencil factory.

Epps was then excused and Newt Lee called to the stand.

Lee Begins His Story.

Lee is the negro night watchman at the pencil factory who discovered the body of Mary Phagan in the basement of the building. After being sworn, Solicitor Dorsey questioned him:

Q. What is your name?—A. Newt Lee.

Q. How long were you there?—A. Three weeks.

Q. Where were you night watchman before?—A. At the other place.

Q. Did he ever come out that way before?—A. No, when I went in he always hollered to me from his office.

Q. What was he doing when you went in?—A. He was rubbing his hands and kept on rubbing them. He told me I could go out for an hour and a half, or not later than by usual time for getting there. He told me he was sorry he had told me to come down early and I told him I was sorry, too, because I could have slept some more. He told me to go on out to town and have a good time.

Frank Said Not to Punch Clock.

Q. What was the appearance of his face?—A. I didn't pay much attention to his face. I offered him some bananas and went on out.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. I came back a few minutes before 6 o'clock.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say then?—A. H said: "Don't punch it yet, some of the workmen are still in." He said he wanted to change the slip.

Q. Did you ever see him fix the slip before?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know how to fix a time slip?—A. No, I never fixed one in my life.

Q. What did Mr. Frank do then?—A. He dropped his head and said for me to go up with Mr. Gantt to get the shoes.

Q. What did you find?—A. We found black shoes and tan shoes.

Frank Called Him.

Q. Did Mr. Frank call you over the 'phone that night?—A. Yes, he called me about 7 o'clock.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said: "How is everything?" I said everything was all right. He said "Goodbye."

Q. Did you hear from him any more?—A. Not until Sunday morning.

Solicitor Dorsey then exhibited a diagram of the scene of the crime, drawn by Bert Green, the Georgian staff artist. By this diagram Lee explained the lightin' system of the building.

Veniremen Keenly Watched.

Q. What did Frank tell you about the lights?—A. Frank told me to keep the lights on the street floor burning bright so that officers could see in. I always lighted up on Saturday at 5 o'clock.

Q. What about the street door and the office door?—A. They were closed.

Q. What kind of doors were they? —The kind you pull down.

Solicitor Dorsey here asked Lee to tell the jury in his own words of going into the basement at 3 o'clock and telling what he found there.

Q. Just how did you get up to the body?—A. I couldn't tell you just how I did get up to that body, but I did get up there.

Q. What did you do there?—A. I called up the police after I tried to get Mr. Frank, who I was trying to get when the police came.

Q. Who examined it?—A. Mr. Frank did. Mr. Darley was standing there.

Q. When did you see Frank again after that?—A. We went to the station in the same automobile.

Q. Did you have a conversation with him the next Thursday night?—A. I don't know what night it was, but they took me out of my cell and said they were going to let me and Mr. Frank have it out. They handcuffed me to a chair before he came. When he came, I told him it was mighty hard to be handcuffed to a chair about something I didn't know anything about. He said: "What's the difference." "Well," I said, "Mr. Frank, I don't know nothing about it, except finding the body." "Yes," he said, "if you keep that up, we both will go to hell."

Q. What did you say then?—A. The police came in then.

Q. Were you willing to come back to the factory that Saturday at 4 o'clock?—A. I told Mr. Frank Saturday was my shortest day, but I agreed to come back early.

Q. What was Mr. Frank's manner when you came in that Saturday afternoon?—A. Well, I never noticed his face, but he was rubbing his hands like he was worried.

Rosser Takes Witness.

At this point the State rested their examination of Lee and he was turned over to the defense for cross-examination. Mr. Rosser lead with the questioning for counsel for Frank.

Q. Did you testify at the Coroner's inquest?—A. I testified before something.

Q. How many times have you told this to Mr. Dorsey?—A. One time.

Has "Good Recollection."

Q. How many times did Mr. Black go over this statement with you?—A. I don't know; there have been so many I don't know them all.

Q. You have told this story many times, haven't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you always told it the same way?—A. Yes, sir; I got a good recollection.

Mr. Rosser was here insistent to know if Lee told about Frank appearing frightened when he met Gantt. He asked the negro if he didn't say Frank had said he gave the pair of shoes to a boy. Lee maintained that there were no contradictions in his statement.

"No, sir," he said, "you got that wrong."

Q. How many Saturdays were you at the pencil factory?—A. Four.

Q. What time did you usually get there on Saturday?—A. At 12 o'clock, to get paid.

Q. Did you stay there after that?—A. No, I got my keys and went away until 5.

Tells How He Called Frank.

Q. Your sleep was broken at 12 o'clock every Saturday except this one, was it not?—A. Yes.

Q. The first Saturday you were there what was Mr. Frank doing?—A. I don't know. I would have hollered to him, but he saw me and checked me in.

Q. How many times did you holler at him?—A. Three, Saturdays.

Q. What did you holler?—A. All right, Mr. Frank.

Q. What would he say?—A. He would just come out of the office.

Q. How far away?—A. About fifteen or sixteen feet.

Q. No closer than that?—A. It might have been a little closer.

Q. Isn't it true you told the Coroner that he had his head bound and was rubbing his hands?—A. I did.

Compares Former Testimony.

Q. Let's see if that is what you said. (Rosser examines testimony before Coroner.)—A. I can't tell what you got there.

Q. You said Frank told you to go out and have some fun.—A. That's wrong; he said have a good time.

Q. You never said anything before the Coroner about there being a place to sleep?—A. I told him there was, but they never asked me where it was.

Q. If the front door was locked, could you get into the basement from the first floor?—A. Yes.

Q. If the office door was locked, could you get into the basement without using the elevator?—A. No, sir.

Q. When you came back the last time, if Mr. Frank was in his office, could any one have gone anywhere in the factory without Mr. Frank seeing him or knowing him?—A. Yes, if he didn't hear him.

New Line of Questioning.

Q. If Mr. Frank was in his private office, and the front door locked, could anyone go over that whole factory without him knowing it?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. Well, you did do it the Saturday before, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir, I did.

Q. All the shutters in the factory except a few on the first floor near the front were closed, were they not? —A. Yes, sir.

Q. There was a light burning on the second floor near the clock, was there not?—A. He told me to go there every little while to look after the fires.

Q. Mr. Frank thought you went there every half hour?

When Lee did not answer, Solicitor Dorsey interrupted, saying that he did not want the negro committed by silence.

Lawyers in Clash.

"We want silence some times," said Mr. Rosser; "sometimes its more powerful. I am asking these questions and silence is one of my privileges. For the prosecution to interrupt is deliberately obstructing the testimony without intending to."

"I will make him answer," said Solicitor Dorsey, "when I get him."

"Yes," said Mr. Rosser, "I know you will. Probably you can get him to answer better than I can."

"I want the truth," rejoined Solicitor Dorsey.

"Yes, we all do in our partisan way,' replied Rosser.

Q. You watched Gantt get away and you knew Mr. Frank was uneasy about him being there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. They had had a difficulty, hadn't they?—A. Mr. Frank told me he had discharged Mr. Gantt and he didn't want him around.

Q. That is why you thought Mr. Frank wa sfrightened when you met him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Gantt is a big fellow, isn't he?—A. Yes, about 7 feet.

Q. You went over the building every half hour and into the basement a few feet from the ladder?—A. Yes, sir, except in the basement. I went there every hour.

Q. If you wanted to find whether the door at the rear was closed, you would have passed the body?—A. It was shut when I found the body.

Q. Did the police find it open?—A. They said they did.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the form of Mr. Rosser's questions and was sustained.

Q. The police got there in about eight minutes?—A. I don't know. I said all the time I didn't know how long it took them.

Light in Alley, He Says.

Q. You didn't get any closer to the basement door than the body was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you have seen out of the back door?—A. Yes, if it was open.

Q. Are you positive about the door being closed?—A. Yes. There was a light in the alley and I could have seen if the door had been open.

Q. Are you positive about the door being closed?—A. Yes; there was a light in the alley and I could have seen it if the door had been open.

Q. Did you go as far as the body before you found it that night?—A. Not until 3 o'clock, when I found the body.

Q. Why didn't you see the hat and shoes as you went along?—A. I don't know. I just didn't see them.

Court was then adjourned at 5:12 with Newt Lee still on the witness stand. He will be placed on the stand again when court opens at 9 o'clock Tuesday morning.

Leo M. Frank was back in the county jail twenty minutes after the conclusion of the first day's hearing in his trial. The calmness which had characterized his appearance all day was still with him and he smiled as he said good-bye to the friends who accompanied him to the Tower in company with Sheriff Mangum.

Newt Lee was returned to the county jail a few minutes before Frank. The negro has ben a model prisoner and while kept under the eyes of a special guard all day consideration was shown him in many little things.

All the force of attorneys at the table for the defense watched with keen eyes every man examined for the jury, and frequently referred to a voluminous record containing the names of all the veniremen and detailed statements of their history and associations so far as these might have a bearing on their desirability as jurors to pass on Leo Frank's guilt or innocence.

The keenest interest was manifested by those in the crowded little courtroom as the strategies of the brilliant lawyers were revealed during the examination.

State Had Veniremen's Records.

The thoroughness with which the Solicitor and his assistants had canvassed the history of every venireman and had investigated whether or not he had ever expressed an opinion on the guilt or innocence of the accused was demonstrated when W. W. Hemmett, a salesman for the Kingsbury Shoe Company, was being examined as to his qualifications.

"Have you ever said you thought Frank was guilty?" Mr. Dorsey inquired.

"No, I never have," replied Hemmett.

Here the Solicitor referred to some notes at hand and proceeded to call to Hemmett's recollection a certain talk he had with acquaintances at a certain time. Hemmett was forced to admit that he had talked of the case at that time, but declared that he had not expressed a definite opinion.

"I only said I would have to hear some evidence before I would believe Frank was guilty," he told Judge Roan.

He was rejected for cause.

Defense Equally Alert.

The defense showed that it was exactly as vigilant when the next venireman was examined. As soon as A. L. Bellingrath, of No. 91 Milledge avenue, arose from his seat, Attorney Arnold was on his feet prepared to state the objection of the defense. He pointed out that Bellingrath was the brother of Henry Bellingrath who has been employed in the Solicitor's office during the Phagan investigation and that he was reported to have expressed an opinion on the guilt of Frank.

A shrewd bit of strategy was used by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper in accepting the two negroes whose names were among the veniremen.

By doing this they forced the defense to use up two of their twenty challenges if they did not desire to have negroes on the jury. With Jim Conley, a negro, likely to be indicted for the murder in the event that Frank is cleared, the defense had no intention of allowing them to pass on Frank's guilt and promptly struck them. The two negroes were Earl Davis and E. E. Hawkins.

May Summon Reporters.

When court opened for the afternoon session, Attorney Arnold announced:

"We may want to use some of the members of the press as witnesses. I don't want to put them under the court rule which would exclude them from the courtroom."

Solicitor Dorsey hereupon arose and said:

"All right, but I want to reserve the right to do so at a later date if necessary."

Defense Loses First Clash.

The attorneys for Leo M. Frank lost out in their first skirmish with the prosecution, being compelled to read their list of witnesses against their wishes and their vigorous protests.

They evened up matters by obtaining from Solicitor Dorsey the concession of honoring the subpenas lecus tecum issued by the defense and demanding the production in court of all the affidavits of Jim Conley. After a short passage between Attorney Arnold for Frank and Solicitor Dorsey that the list must be read, the judge ruled, and the list was read by Attorney Stiles Hopkins.

The list included employees of the National Pencil Factory, where the murdered girl worked; members of Frank's immediate family, and other relatives and associates of the accused man, members of the same fraternal orders, acquaintances who saw Frank on the day of the crime and classmates in college.

Jurymen Chosen.

The reading of the last names came as a complete surprise. It developed that the defense had scoured the country for persons who had known Frank when he was a student at Cornell. They were subpenaed to bring the character testimony in his behalf up to the time he began his business career.

The picking of the jury proved less difficult than anticipated, twelve men being obtained before 1:30.

List of Jurors.

DANGEROUS CALOMEL GOING OUT OF USE

A Safer, More Reliable Remedy Has Taken Its Place in the Drug Store and in the Home.

A few years ago, men, women and children took calomel for a sluggish liver and for constipation. They took risks when they did so, for calomel is a dangerous drug. Your family doctor will be the first to tell this if he discovers you dosing yourself with calomel.

But the drug trade has found a safer, more pleasant remedy than calomel in Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dealers tell us that their drug store sells Dodson's Liver Tone in practically every case of biliousness and liver trouble where calomel used to be taken.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a vegetable liver tonic that is absolutely harmless for children and grown people. It sells for 50 cents a bottle and is guaranteed to be entirely satisfactory by all druggists who will refund your money with a smile if it does not give quick, gentle relief without any of calomel's unpleasant after-effects.

THRONG AT THE COURTHOUSE DOORS AS THE TRIAL OPENED

FRANK, FEELING TIPTOP, SMILING AND CONFIDENT, IS UP LONG BEFORE TRIAL

Frank was escorted from the Tower to the courthouse shortly after 6 o'clock in the morning, nearly three hours before the trial was scheduled to begin. This was done to avoid the curious crowd which it was expected would be about the courthouse and thronging the corridors at 9 o'clock.

"How are you feeling this morning, Mr. Frank?" the deputy inquired.

Exhibiting the same poised confidence that has characterized him through three months since he was locked in a cell in the county jail, the young factory superintendent chatted freely with Miner on the way to the courthouse.

Sure He Will Be Freed.

He was attired in a natty light gray mohair suit and wore a fancy gray tie. His face was fuller and he appeared slightly heavier than when he was arrested shortly after the murder of the Phagan girl. He seemed cheerful and in the best of health.

"I am very sure of acquittal," he said, as he arrived at the courthouse. "I am glad that the trial is about to begin after this long wait. I have no fear of the outcome. I am not only innocent of the terrible crime, but I am innocent of any knowledge of it, save as the information has come to me since the officers came to my house that morning three months ago."

At this moment E. C. Essenbach, a relative of Frank, appeared with a tempting breakfast which was spread in the prisoners' room at the courthouse. Frank gave ocular proof that his appetite had not suffered from his long confinement as he proceeded to make way with the delicacies prepared for him.

Frank greeted his relative cheerfully and conversed with him for more than an hour. The topic seldom was on the crime or the trial which was about to begin. Long before the time set for the judge to take the bench other friends and relatives of the prisoner had appeared and some of them were permitted to talk to him.

Conley Ready For the Stand.

Jim Conley, Frank's accuser, was made ready for the trial early in the morning, although it was not probable that he would be called during the day.

He was given a shave and a new suit of clothes, as he had worn for the last three months the same shabby garments that he had on at the time he was arrested while washing a shirt at the National Pencil Factory.

Conley said that he was ready to go on the witness stand at an instant's notice. He declared that he would stick to the same story that he told in his last affidavit and which he has since repeated many times for the benefit of Solicitor Dorsey.

"If they had just let me face Mr. Frank, I could have made him tell the truth long before this," he asserted.

Less than half a hundred persons were waiting about the courthouse at 8 o'clock, an hour before the time set for the beginning of the trial. It was thought that not a large crowd would be clamoring for admission to the courtroom as it had become quite generally known that the small room would accommodate hardly more than the witnesses and the veniremen and that it would be necessary to exclude practically all spectators.

Much Preparation Made.

For no trial in the history of Georgia have such elaborate arrangements been made for the comfort of the comparatively small number of spectators who will gain admission, the attorneys who will handle the case, the jury and the newspaper men. Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner has received much praise for the splendid preparations made.

Electric fans have been installed at every window and on the railing separating the spectators' seats from the bar, ozonators have been placed to keep the air purified. It probably will be the coolest and best ventilated place in Atlanta.

Not more than 250 spectators will be admitted. Approximately that number of chairs have been placed outside the inclosure. When they are filled the doors will be closed and no one else will be allowed in. No one will be permitted to occupy standing room.

The usual custom of permitting disinterested attorneys to occupy seats inside the bar will not be followed, and this particular part of the courtroom will be less crowded than during the average criminal trial.

How They Will Line Up.

Prosecuting Attorney Dorsey and at least five assistants will occupy a table directly in front of the bench and witness stand with the jury box close on the righthand side. Attorney Rosser with his assistants and the accused will be seated at a table to the left of the State's and farther away from the jury. The table for newspaper men is back of the State's table. The arrangements were agreed upon by the attorneys and the judge.

The table for the defense was selected by Attorney Rosser with a view to the number of persons who would wish to be near Frank during the trial. Seats have been arranged to the back of the table to accommodate at least 30 persons, friends and relatives of the accused, who have visited him constantly since he was confined at the Tower.

Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner, who will have charge of the crowd and keeping order in court, will also have charge of the prisoners. Long before any crowd congregated around the courthouse Frank and Lee were brought from the Tower and placed in the room reserved for them. When court opened Frank took his place at the table reserved for his attorneys.

The court rule to segregate the witnesses will, of course, be enforced, but it may not be until twelve men have qualified as jurors, which will hardly be before the middle of the week.

When the witnesses are segregated they will be kept in the large courtroom on the floor above the trial room. A bailiff will be placed in the hall and one on the door of the witness chamber, and as the names are called they will be brought from the floor above to the court.

It is probable some rule will be made to keep the witnesses for the State and the defense separated, in which event the third floor of the building would have to be used.

The jury room was selected with a great deal of care. It is almost inaccessible from the outside and large and airy. Its windows are about twenty feet above an alleyway that runs on either side. Deputies will be kept in the alley to keep anyone from getting this close to the room.

From the time a juror is acceptable to both sides until the conclusion of the case he will not be allowed to go to his home or communicate with anyone except a fellow juror.

The least of the deputies' troubles will not be in handling the crowd that will gain admission to the court, but in handling the crowd that will daily congregate on the outside and wait through the day for news of the proceedings in the trial. Ten deputies and as many members of the county police will be on duty on the streets around the building.

Climate Failed; Medicine Effective

Rest, fresh air and well-cooked, nourishing food do help many persons suffering with Lung Trouble. But in many cases the disease is only temporarily "arrested," and something more is needed. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for Throat and Lung Troubles and has brought about many complete recoveries—in many cases where the surroundings were not ideal. Judging by the many reports of recoveries received, we believe it should be used in every case of Lung Trouble. A remarkable case follows:

Weldon, Ill.

"My Dear Sir: Through your instrumentality I have been saved from a premature grave. On December 14, 1904, I was taken with Typhoid Pneumonia which developed into Consumption. In February, 1905, I went to Fort Worth, Texas, and later to Canon City, Colorado. After being there two weeks, my physician informed me that my case was hopeless. Three weeks later I returned home, weighing 103 pounds, the doctor having given me no assurance of reaching there alive.

"On July 14, 1905, I began taking Eckman's wonderful remedy for Consumption. To-day I weigh 158 pounds. I am stout and well and can do any kind of work about my grain elevator."

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Venire Whipped Into Shape Rapidly; Negro Is Eligible

Within a minute or two after Deputy Sheriff Plennie Minor had called the court to order the examination process was applied to the venire panel of 144 men. From each panel of twelve one or more men were excused after being asked the formal questions and furnished a sufficient reason to bar them.

J. H. Jones, Deputy Clerk, called the names. F. W. Stone, No. 82 East Linden street, was excused on account of illness. R. F. Shedden was refused on an excuse of military exemption. Only one man was excused from the first twelve men.

H. R. Calloway, of No. 691 Piedmont avenue, first of the second panel, was not served. F. A. Hull, No. 180 Grant street, was excused on account of his age, 20 years. T. J. Henderson, No. 25 Woodson street, was excused as opposed to capital punishment. J. A. McCreary, No. 78 East North street, was excused because of his residence in DeKalb County. J. F. Patterson, of College Park, was excused on account of deafness. Five were excused from the second panel.

Negro Declared Eligible.

W. H. Scott, No. 215 Gordon street, was excused on account of ill health. He had a doctor's certificate. W. H. Abbott, Record Clerk of the court, was refused excusal. Only one man was excused from the third panel.

The first surprise came with the questioning of the fourth panel, when Earl Davis, a negro, was not excused. He was ruled eligible to jury duty. There is little prospect that he will be drawn as one of the jurors.

George Mathieson, Assistant Chief of County Police, was excused on account of his duties. John W. Alexander, capitalist, of No. 439 South Pryor street, was excused because of illness. W. M. Donehoo, of Buckhead, was let out on account of the death of his mother. E. A. Massa, of No. 305 East Fair street, was over age. J. H. Gilbert, of South Bend, was let out because of illness. The jury panels were thus being revised and made into a compact venire by this process of elimination.

Joel Hurt Out of Town.

The following men were excused in the selection of the fifth panel: George R. Wall, No. 139 Hill street, on account of illness; F. M. York, No. 221 Cooper street, on account of the illness of his wife; W. I. Brooks, No. 224 East Fair street, on account of having removed from Fulton County. The following were excused in the selection of the sixth panel: H. Maness, No. 112 Jefferson street, account of deafness; Joel Hurt was out of town.

The circumstances surrounding the disappearance of the young girl are shrouded in mystery, owing to the unwillingness of her relatives to discuss the matter. According to her friends, however, this is all that is known of the case:

Early in June Miss Awtrey left New York to tour Europe under the care of Miss Olive Faw, of Marietta, who takes parties of Cobb County girls across the Atlantic each year. There were a number of Miss Awtrey's friends in the party, and she had been viewing the trip with pleasure. Her first letters from abroad were optimistic in tone. She declared she was having a glorious time. Suddenly there was a change. In her letters the girl reflected the homesickness that, she declared, was making Europe distasteful to her. She said she wanted to return home and see her friends.

Miss Faw conducts two tours during the summer, and Miss Awtrey had arranged to take both of them. When she reached London, on the second tour, however, she wrote to her parents that she was coming home. She was next heard of in New York, about two weeks ago. She wired her father that she was homesick and wanted to come home, and asked him to send her some money and a ticket. He wired her the $200. That same evening Mr. Awtrey received a telegram asking him to meet her in Atlanta a few days later.

Found Trunk—Not Daughter.

On the day mentioned Mr. Awtrey was at the Terminal Station to greet his daughter. The train pulled in, the father waited, but the girl did not appear. Thinking perhaps she had missed her train and would come on a later one, he stayed in Atlanta all day and met every train from New York. Mis Awtrey still did not come. Mr. Awtrey investigated and found that her baggage had been checked through from New York to Atlanta and had arrived on the first train he had met.

Mr. Awtrey then returned to his home. He waited several days, and when his daughter still failed to appear, he asked the aid and advice of his brother, John Atwrey, of Marietta, and his brother-in-law, D. F. McClatchy. A few days later Mr. McClatchy came to Atlanta and enlisted the services of the Burns agency. Detective Chatham, attached to the Atlanta office, went to Marietta and Acworth to determine if any clews could be developed there. His quest was fruitless. The Burns agency then obtained a photograph from a photographer in Marietta, a relative of the missing girl, and it was scattered broadcast over the country.

Miss Awtrey's family has made every effort to keep the fact of her disappearance a secret, and her relatives and intimate friends have been sworn to secrecy. None of them will discuss the mystery, nor advance any theories to account for her disappearance.

"I'm sure I do not know what caused Lynette to run away," said Mrs. R. M. Moon, a distant relative of the girl. "It is as great a mystery to me as it is to anyone.

Elopement Is Rumored.

"All I know is that she started home from New York and didn't get here," he said.

The girl's father could not be seen when a Georgian reporter visited Acworth Sunday night. One of her brothers declared that the members of her family entertain no theories of foul play or of a love affair.

"We are satisfied with the situation," he said. "She has been located."

Despite the assertions of the members of the girl's family that her disappearance is not the culmination of a love affair, several of Miss Awtrey's friends, in discussing the case, persist in mentioning the name of a young man, whose home is in Atlanta, who has been an ardent suitor of Miss Awtrey's for the past year. The suit of the young Atlantan, it is said, has not met with the approval of the girl's family, and it is intimated that he has been forbidden to call on her.

The theory evolved out of these facts by Miss Awtrey's friends is that the girl really came to Atlanta from New York and that her admirer met her here and persuaded her to elope with him.

Giant Negro Hunted For White Slavery

WINCHESTER, VA., July 28.—Despite the fact that several hundred regulars of the various cavalry regiments camped near town at the maneuver grounds have searched for him, the giant negro Franklin, who, it is alleged, was engaged in a white slave traffic and whose place near the campgrounds was raided on Thursday night by the Sheriff, so far has eluded capture.

The white women who were found in the company of a number of negro troopers of the Tenth Cavalry at 2 o'clock in the morning, when Franklin's tent was surrounded, are still in jail.

Both wooers are about 21 years old and both are members of the senior class at Princeton University, which is in the town where Miss Cleveland has spent most of her life. The classmates have been friends for years.

OPENING CLASHES LOST BY DEFENSE; FORCED AT START TO NAME ITS WITNESSES

At 9:58 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was ready to open the case of the State against Leo M. Frank, charged with having killed Mary Phagan by strangulation. This was followed by the request of the defense that the State's witnesses be called, sworn and put under the rule.

The prosecution opened by announcing its readiness to go on with the trial and called the list of witnesses. Bailiffs brought them down from the second floor. In regular order called, their names were: Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of Mary Phagan; J. W. Coleman, the girl's stepfather; George Epps, newsboy; L. S. Dobbs, policeman; W. W. Rogers, bailiff for constable; L. S. Starnes, detective and also prosecutor on the indictment; Pat Campbell, detective; Grace Hicks, girl who identified Mary Phagan's body; J. M. Gantt, once held for inquiry, now supposed to be a star witness for the prosecution; Harry Scott, the Pinkerton detective; R. P. Barrett, pencil factory employee; B. F. Haslett, policeman; M. V. Darley, factory employee; W. A. Gheesling, undertaker that cared for the girl's body; Dr. Claude Smith, City Bacteriologist; Dr. H. F. Harris, member of the State Board of Health; Dr. J. W. Hurt, Coroner's physician; E. L. Parry, court stenographer; E. S. Smith, Monteen Stover, girl employee at pencil factory; Minola McKnight, cook at Frank's home; Albert McKnight, Minola's husband (McKnight did not appear in court); Helen Ferguson, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of factory employee, and L. Stanford.

Attorney Reuben Arnold asked concerning the duces tecum that he had served on the State's attorneys for the affidavits of Jim Conley and others. On the promise of Solicitor Dorsey that he would produce the affidavits whenever needed the duces tecum was waived.

Solicitor Dorsey said he did not concede the right of the defense to force a production of the affidavit. He, however, at the request of Mr. Arnold, dictated a statement giving the dates of each of the affidavits signed by Conley, saying they were all of the affidavits Conley had made and that he would produce them whenever necessary.

The Solicitor asked then that the defense's witnesses be called and sworn. This was met by strenuous objection on the part of Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, who claimed their list was fragmentary.

Solicitor Dorsey protested vehemently, declaring that it would be extremely unfair to the State not to swear the defense's witnesses at this time. Attorney Rosser said it would delay the trial to complete their list at this time.

Judge Roan ruled that he would give the defense time to get up the list. The defense capitulated and it took but five minutes for the list to be made up.

Witnesses for Defense.

Attorney Stiles Hopkins, at the table for the defense, called the names of the witnesses by whom they expect to clear Frank. They were Mary Burke, Dora Small, Ella Thomas, C. P. Gilbert, F. Payne, Eula Flowers, Josephine Stelker, Mattie Thompson, Mrs. L. J. Cohen, J. C. Lowe, M. H. Liebman, Miss Bessie White, Joe Williams, Fred Howell, Wade Campbell, J. A. Price, J. E. Lyon, Cora Lavender, M. O. Nix, J. C. Matthews, F. Jenkins, Mrs. Josephine Selig, E. Selig, J. H. Haas, W. H. Mincey, J. B. Spier, E. L. Skipper, E. L. Sntell, May Barrett, Rebecca Carson, C. H. Carson, Harry Denham, Corinthia Hall, Mattie Hall, J. L. Holloway, Mrs. George Jefferson, Jerome Michael, George W. Parrott, M. W. Morrow, Mrs. M. W. Morrow, Rabi David Marx, A. E. Mayo, Fred Weller, A. E. Marcus, Ed Montag, I. H. Haas, W. B. Owens, T. Y. Brent and Ossie Shields.

These were all of the witnesses whose names were called, but at least 100 more, who will be used mostly as character witnesses, were in the room on the second floor waiting to be called.

First Talesman Too Old.

After the venire had been sifted and many excused, W. S. Copeland was the first talesman examined. He was excused when he said that he had passed the 60-year mark. Solicitor Dorsey put the questions, using the formal ones ask in murder trials.

Being conscientiously opposed to capital punishment or conviction by circumstantial evidence was held not to disqualify a juror by Judge Roan. This was in connection with O. T. Camp, the second talesman.

"I am conscientiously opposed to capital punishment on certain grounds," said Camp.

"What are those grounds," asked Solicitor Dorsey.

"Circumstantial evidence," he replied.

Judge Sustains Defense.

"That disqualifies him, then," said Solicitor Dorsey.

Attorney Rosser objected, saying that such belief did not disqualify the juror. Judge Roan sustained the defense, but Solicitor Dorsey struck him.

A. W. Brewerton was disqualified because he was opposed to capital punishment.

W. H. Winn was struck, Solicitor Dorsey taking this action after looking over his record.

R. G. Elliott was struck by the defense.

L. A. Smith was struck for cause.

C. T. Hopkins, Jr., struck by State.

W. E. Cates, disqualified because opposed to capital punishment.

T. G. Young, struck by defense.

D. D. Hewey, struck because he did not believe in capital punishment.

That ended the first panel of talesmen and not a single juror was obtained. The State struck three and the defense two. Seven were disqualified for cause.

Four Jurymen Obtained.

Four jurors were obtained from the second panel. They are:

A. H. Henslee, No. 74 Oak street, a salesman.

F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, a manufacturers agent.

J. F. Higdon, 108 Ormewood avenue, a contractor.

F. E. Winburn, No. 21 Lucile avenue, a claim agent.

On the second panel the following men were struck:

Howard Oliver, by the defense.

H. E. Luckey, for cause.

O. L. Spurlin, No. 156 Lawton street, struck by defense.

H. A. Slide, for cause.

E. E. Hawkins, No. 369 Edgewood avenue, a negro, who was accepted by the prosecution, but struck by the defense.

L. F. Davis, for cause.

David Woodward, for cause.

M. J. Sewell, for cause.

Third and Fourth Panels Go.

The following men were struck on the third panel: Charles Witherspoon, by defense; H. J. Kuglar, for cause; C. J. Hale, for cause; J. B. Hays, by defense; E. L. Winn, for cause; W. H. Abbott, for cause; K. P. Mayson, for cause; Boyd Perry, for cause.

The entire fourth panel was struck: Samuel Schoen, by the State; W. S. Singleton, by defense; Earle Davis, a negro, was accepted by the State, but struck by the defense; C. S. Cantrell, for cause; John W. Collier, for cause; W. W. Hammett, by the State; A. F. Bellingrath, by defense on ground that he was a brother to an employee of solicitor Dorsey's office and that he had expressed the opinion that Frank was guilty.

"I said it looked like he was guilty from what the newspapers said," declared Mr. Bellingrath. Solicitor Dorsey urged that the talesman was not disqualified by this. However, Judge Roan disqualified him for cause.

"I think he should be set aside for his own sake," ruled the judge.

D. Berger, for cause.

Two More Panels Struck.

The following men were struck from the fifth panel: W. C. Willis, for cause; H. C. Hasty, prejudice; C. H. Cook, by defense; C. H. Candler, in answer to a question from Solicitor Dorsey if he was impartial, said "No;" George R. Low, by the State; S. E. Owens, for cause; J. C. Henderson, for cause; C. M. Brown, opposed to capital punishment; C. A. Vaughn, prejudice.

The following men, comprising the entire sixth panel, were struck: Ben F. Willis, by defense; C. M. Petton, prejudice; W. H. Hudson, not impartial; G. R. Milner, by defense; John Head, age; Robert Smidt, opposed to capital punishment; J. N. Carroll, not impartial; C. H. Allen, opposed to capital punishment; P. F. Barber, opposed to capital punishment; O. Wingate, for cause; T. E. Winsow, by State; A. W. Wofford, by defense.

Every man on the seventh panel was struck, including H. H. Kelly, prejudice; N. A. Long, biased; C. W. Gittens, by defense; H. D. Ferguson, opposed to capital punishment; W. L. Merk, by defense; F. E. Walker, prejudice; P. B. Sale, prejudice; W. S. Gaston, biased; C. L. Asbury, biased; J. W. Chatham, prejudice; C. W. Seagroves, prejudice; Carl Weinmeister, opposed to capital punishment.

The last panel, from which the last juror was secured, was Panel No. 9. The following men were struck: S. L. Miller, by defense; H. L. Solomonson, biased; L. O. Hendon, by defense; H. C. Ashford, for cause; E. E. Wochendorff, prejudice; Nicholas Ittner, age; Bud Waites, prejudice; W. W. Sorrell, by defense; Soloman Benjamin, member of Grand Jury.

The buzz of conversation in the little courtroom instantly was hushed when Judge Roan appeared and Deputy Sheriff Piennie Miner called the court to order. The impaneling of jurors was begun at once.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, pressed his way to the defense's table just as Deputy Miner rapped for order. Solicitor Dorsey and his associates were at their table busily arranging papers and documents several minutes before the swearing of the veniremen began.

An imposing array of legal talent was presented when the case was called. Heading counsel for Frank were Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold, two of the foremost lawyers of the South. At their table were Herbert J. Haas, a civil attorney, who has been engaged in looking up character witnesses in behalf of Frank; Styles Hopkins of the Rosser & Brandon law firm; Oscar Simmons and Paul Goss, engaged especially to assist in picking the jury; George Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law firm, and Luther Z. Rosser, Jr.

Wife at Frank's Side.

With Solicitor Dorsey were Frank A. Hooper, the brilliant attorney who made his reputation as a prosecutor in criminal cases; E. A. Stephens, Assistant Solicitor, and detectives who have been working on the case. Jim Conley's attorney, W. M. Smith, also was in court.

A stir was created when Mrs. Frank, wife of the accused, made her way into the courtroom and hurried past the rows of spectators into the anteroom where her husband was confined. She bore herself bravely, and when she reached Frank, was seen to converse cheerfully with him.

The loyal woman, who insisted on being by the side of her husband until he was called into the courtroom with his attorneys, drew the attention away from the routine proceedings several minutes.

Judge Roan in Good Humor.

Judge Roan appeared in unusually radiant humor and enlivened the dull routine of the early proceedings with facetious remarks directed at the jurors who sought to evade duty on various pretexts.

To one who claimed deafness, Judge Roan said that he had heard his own name readily enough when it was called.

Another juror, Dr. E. L. Connally, well known capitalist, and gray haired veteran of the war, remarked, smiling rather slyly, that he thought he was over age.

"How do you know that?" inquired the judge.

"My mother says I am," was Dr. Connally's reply.

"Do you claim exemption on that account?" asked the court.

"I guess I do, judge," admitted the capitalist.

"Well, then, I guess I will excuse you," said the judge, amid a general laugh from the courtroom.

Dr. Connally left his place with a vigor that belied his years.

Old Dr. Stork was responsible for the excusing of several of the jurors. By the time the eighth panel of men had taken the oath three men had told of new arrivals at their homes and had been excused.

Defense Not to Ask Delay.

Luther Z. Rosser, of counsel for the defense, stated to a Georgian reporter as he left his office for the scene of the trial that the defense would make no move for delay.

"We will not seek a change of venue or make any move of any kind to delay justice for our client," he said. "We are entirely confident that justice and truth will prevail, as it always must."

Reuben R. Arnold, of the defense, made the same kind of a statement.

"We will announce ready as soon as the case is called," he said.

One important witness for the defense was reported to be missing. He is a traveling salesman, and the defense was said to be confident of locating him.

A great crowd gathered in front of the courthouse as the hour of the trial drew near, and when 9 o'clock arrived, Pryor street at Hunter was almost impassable. The corridors of the courthouse were a mass of humanity, through which a lane had to be cut by deputies to allow the passage of witnesses and lawyers and newspaper men.

The crowd was tense with curiosity, but to all appearances inclined to be orderly and apparently was moved only by the commonest of human motives—curiosity.

Judge Andrew Calhoun entered the courtroom when the court was about midway in its forenoon session and took a seat by Judge Roan. In the intervals when the proceedings were interrupted by conferences of the attorneys, he conversed with Judge Roan.

Newt Lee, who found Mary Phagan's body, was brought from the Tower in the middle of the forenoon in the custody of a deputy sheriff. He was placed in an anteroom adjoining the courtroom. It was expected that he would be one of the early witnesses, if not the first, to be called by the State. Lee testified before the Coroner's inquest that he found the body of the slain factory girl in the

WHOLE OF SOUTH ENTHRALLED BY PHAGAN CASE

Story of Pretty Little Girl's Death Gripped Public, Eager to Discover Her Slayer.

As Leo Frank faces to-day the ordeal decreed by law that for man's life, man's life shall pay, interest in his case that has held Atlanta, Georgia and the South enthralled for three months has diminished not a whit since the Sunday morning the body of the little factory girl was found.

Wise judges of news, men who are paid thousands of dollars each year for their knowledge of the fickleness of the public, men who can time to the second the period when interest dies in one thing before the public eye to be born anew in another, have for years contended that no single item of news can sustain its interest longer than one brief week.

And yet for three months the public has read of Mary Phagan's death and the quest for her slayer and their demand for this news has been insatiable.

That the vaunted insight of these news experts is as shallow as the mirror reflection of a beauty of the stage is the thought that common logic first presents.

Insight of Experts Borne Out.

The insight of these experts has not been at fault. On the contrary, it has been sustained. For in the mystery veiling the death of Mary Phagan and the trial of Leo Frank as her slayer, a more varied array of things that interest, thrill, horrify, shock and make men think is presented than in any one case developed since typesetting machines made the modern newspaper possible.

Harry Thaw's case comes to mind, that tragedy of romance that presented in the same cast of characters the brilliant Lothario, the man of millions, and a woman as fair as the dawn. But there was never the element of mystery in the slaying of Stanford White. District Attorney Jerome described it pretty well as a commonplace tragedy of the tenderloin.

The only question that confronted the public was whether there was a law decreed by God that a man should take up arms and avenge his family honor that should nullify the law made by man that decreed that the courts of the country and the judgment of heaven could alone mete out reparation for personal injury.

But in the Phagan case, there is a mystery so deep, so impenetrable, that there are thousands in Atlanta who believe that Mary Phagan's slayer walks about to-day a free man as another battles for his life accused of his crime.

Victim Only a Child.

There was mystery in the famous case of Henry Clay Beattie, the Virginia aristocrat, who met death in the electric chair for slaying his wife after his infatuation for Beulah Binford.

But again, we have a feature of the Phagan case which was missing in the Beattie tragedy that makes the Atlanta mystery as grippingly pitiful as the Virginia problem was sordid.

For in the Phagan case a child is one of the principals. All the world may love a lover, but all the world loves a child, more. And when the innocent, wistful, appealing face of the little factory girl first appeared in the public prints more heartstrings were touched than there were thrills caused in all the sinister revelations of the Virginia trial.

The child interest has made many a case appeal to the public interest more than struggles of statesmen, ravages of nature, or even the love of man for woman. The entire United States waited breathlessly for news of the capture of the kidnapers of little Billy Whitla, the sturdy Pennsylvania lad, in 1909.

But when the kidnapers were taken and Billy Whitla returned safe and sound and maybe a little happier from his thrilling experience to the home of his parents, the public forgot all about little Billy and to-day, in four short years, there are few who remember his case at all. For Billy Whitla lived. Mary Phagan died.

Lamana Case Was Absorbing.

In 1907 the hearts of every mother and father in the Southland bled for the wealthy father and mother of the little Lamana boy, who was taken from their New Orleans home by members of the Crescent City Mafia. Interest was intense at every period of the search and public sentiment was kindled near to the blazing point when the beheaded body of the boy was found in a Louisiana swamp.

But as thrilling as was the Lamana case, it did not have that quality that is so essential to make a case universally absorbing. The Lamanas were foreigners, the kidnapers were foreigners. And Americans want an American in their news stories.

And so on and on. Recall any case of thrilling interest to your mind, analyze it, and you will discover that the Phagan case has features which that case does not possess and any one of those features would make a story of breathless interest in itself.

TRIAL INTEREST SETS RECORD FOR COUNTY

No murder trial in Fulton County ever has approached the spectacular interest which is in prospect in the Frank case from the first, sharp skirmish between the opposing attorneys, through the long, bitter legal battle, and to the final pleas of the prosecution and the defense.

The presence of Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold in the brilliant array of legal talent at once made certain that the trial would be out of the ordinary. Neither has the reputation of making a half-hearted fight when there is anything at stake. This time it is a man's life that is depending upon their legal ability, their shrewdness and their eloquence.

Both have a disconcerting habit of carrying the fight to their opponents. In ring parlance, they do not give their courtroom rivals a chance to "get set." This is going to keep the spectators constantly on the edge of expectation, and will furnish a series of exciting incidents that will give the Frank trial a place by itself in the criminal annals of Georgia.

Crisis When Conley is Grilled.

To describe Rosser's tactics as aggressive is expressing it euphemistically. If he were only aggressive, his name would not inspire the trepidation that now is felt by persons who have to face him in the witness box or by young lawyers who have to pit their strength against him.

Rosser and Arnold are at their best when they are cross-examining the witnesses called by the other side. This fact is expected to bring about the most thrilling situation of the entire trial in the witness box grilling of the negro Jim Conley. Not satisfied with seeking to prove the entire innocence of their client, the two lawyers propose to show that Conley himself is the man who attacked Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory and flung her dead body upon the trash heap in the basement.

From whom are they to get testimony of this startling nature?

Certainly from no one else than the negro, and from him they intend to get it. It is a bold plan, but one characteristic of the two-handed fighting methods of Rosser. Anyone who has seen a witness made the object of Rosser's attack knows that Jim Conley is in for a bad day when he is called to the stand to testify that Leo Frank had him assist in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body.

Chance Seen for Confession.

Only a Rosser would have the courage of his convictions to expect to break down the negro after he repeatedly had told the remarkable story of finding the girl's dead body on the second floor of the pencil factory and carrying her, at Frank's direction and with Frank's assistance, down the elevator into the basement.

Rosser's plan opens up the dramatic possibility of a courtroom confession from Conley. In the opinion of those who are convinced of Frank's innocence and the negro's guilt, it would not be a matter of great surprise if Conley, under the fire of questions directed at him by Rosser and Arnold, should collapse and confess he alone was concerned in the crime.

The cross-examination of Conley is certain to be one of the spectacular features of the trial. His vivid tale, under the lead of questions by Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank A. Hooper, will be repeated to the courtroom full of spectators. It will lose none of its dramatic elements, in that its essential features already are well known to the public. They are waiting to hear it first hand from the negro's lips.

Raked Up His Past Life.

Then Conley will be turned over to the scarcely tender mercies of counsel for Frank. He probably will be on the rack for hours. Whether he will be able to stand the ordeal is problematical. No point in his history that could have any possible bearing on the case will be overlooked. The defense is in possession of a mass of information relating to Conley's conduct for years. He will be asked in regard to every one of these circumstances.

Before the events of the day of the tragedy are reached the negro will have undergone a searching examination of significant incidents in his past life. Then his story of his part in the crime will be attacked. The discrepancies will be brought out in the glare of the cross-examination. The falsehoods that he told for days after he was arrested will be resurrected. All of his affidavits will be ridiculed. The two attorneys will join in an effort to break down and utterly to discredit the story to which he now sticks. Whether or not they are successful, their attempt will be a dramatic feature of the trial.

A fight, scarcely less spectacular, will develop over the story of William H. Mincey. This time the attorneys for the prosecution will be in the role of scoffers. Mincey has declared that he heard Conley boasting of killing a girl.

Mincey, a quiet—almost diffident—type of the country pedagogue, will be made the target for the Solicitor's and Attorney Hooper's fire of questions. They will seek to show that Mincey never saw Conley the afternoon of April 26, when Mincey asserted he had the conversation with the negro.

Climax When Frank Is Called.

A hot fight also will be precipitated by the demand of the defense that the State make known the identity, at the beginning of the trial, of all the witnesses against Frank. Solicitor Dorsey has said that he will fight any demand of this sort.

The subpenas duces tecum issued by the defense will form another casus belli that is expected to provide a spirited skirmish between the attorneys at the beginning of the trial. The defense insists on having in court, for the purpose of comparison, all of the affidavits taken from Jim Conley, Newt Lee, Monteen Stover, W. M. Matthews and others. Dorsey declares this is a flimsy trick to discredit the State's witnesses, and proposes to resist to the extent of his ability any move to compel him to comply with the demand.

STREET CAR HITS WAGON, KILLING DAIRYMAN

R. R. Gresham, Father of Ten, Dies Three Hours After Crash. Thrown Forty Feet.

R. R. Gresham, a dairyman residing in Wyman street, Kirkwood, was struck by an outbound Kirkwood car at Whitefoord avenue early Monday morning and received injuries from which he died three hours later without regaining consciousness.

The accident occurred when the dairyman, driving his wagon into Atlanta, attempted to cross the car tracks in front of an approaching car. The wagon was smashed into splinters by the speeding car and its driver thrown 40 feet into a ditch. The horse was knocked over on its side amid the debris of the vehicle.

Gresham was picked up unconscious and hurried in an ambulance to the Atlanta Hospital. Physicians who attended him held out little hope for his recovery. He died three hours later.

Mr. Gresham was 52 years old, married and the father of ten children. But one member of the family, Herman Gresham, a son, reached the injured man before he died.

TRIAL OF FRANK MOVING WITH SWITNESS

D. Townsend, No. 84 Whitehall terrace, cashier Central Bank and Trust Corporation.

W. S. Medcalf, No. 136 Kirkwood avenue, circulation department of The Atlanta Journal.

C. J. Bosshardt, No. 216 Bryan street, pressman Foote & Davies.

Bosshardt, the twelfth juror chosen, was the last venireman in the last panel that had been called before the court at the opening of court in the morning. He was picked at exactly 1:25 o'clock and at 1:30 the recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser took very little part in the selection of the jury, except to interject a suggestion now and then. He evidently was reserving his strength for the real struggle to come.

Shortly before 2 o'clock Leo Frank was taken into a room adjoining the jury room, where he was served with a special dinner provided for him by his relatives. Frank's mother and wife were allowed to converse with him while he ate the dinner. He will remain in this room until the court reconvenes at 3 o'clock.

Wife and Mother With Frank.

Frank, accompanied by his wife and his mother, was brought into the courtroom at 10:30 o'clock. The striking of the jury was begun at once.

A half dozen of Frank's friends interrupted the order of the court for several minutes by clustering about him and shaking hands with him.

If there was any fear in the heart of the young prisoner it did not show in his calm features. He seemed perfectly assured and self-possessed. He nodded pleasantly to the judge and greeted his friends with a smile.

Frank and his mother took a good look at the jurors in the first panel that was brought in. The prisoner scrutinized each one closely as he was quizzed by the prosecutor to determine his qualifications.

Wife Fixes Gaze on Dorsey.

Mrs. Frank displayed no sign of emotion until she suddenly found that she was facing Solicitor Dorsey. Then anger appeared to blaze from her eyes She seldom removed her gaze from the Solicitor's face during the forenoon. If Dorsey was aware of the young woman's scrutiny, he made no sign and proceeded with the case in rapid fashion.

Occasionally Mrs. Frank would turn to her husband and nod toward the Solicitor as though she was ridiculing the efforts to convict Frank. Mrs. Frank was attired in a becoming suit of black and wore a black hat trimmed with black chiffon; also a black veil was drawn up over her hat. A black and white ribbon led to her watch in the pocket of her white silk waist. Two brilliant diamonds shone on the engagement finger of her left hand.

Frank occupied a seat between his wife and mother. He conversed with them alternately, at no time appearing nervous or the least apprehensive. His attitude was noticeably even more calm than at the time when he appeared before the Coroner's jury.

Frank Aids Attorneys.

Frank spoke frequently to his attorneys, whom he was near, and made suggestions while the jurors were being qualified. When each new panel was brought in he looked intently into the face of each man, beginning at the upper row and shifting his gaze from man to man until he had scrutinized them all.

Not infrequently, when the Solicitor had closed his examination and had said, "Juror, look on prisoner; prisoner, look on juror," Frank would turn to Attorney Arnold and an instant later the announcement would be made, "Storuck by the defense." Frank evidently was playing a large part in the striking of jurors by the defense.

The dagger-like gaze of Mrs. Frank seldom was removed from the Solicitor's face. Frequently she embraced all those at Dorsey's table in her scornful glance.

Wife Caresses Prisoner.

Chief of Detectives Newport A Lanford, whose department unearthed much of the evidence, happened to be sitting at her right. She turned to him while he was glancing over papers as if she were about to speak her mind to him, but thought better of it.

Once in a while she took her eyes from the Solicitor's table to lay her hand affectionately upon her husband's shoulder and draw him toward her to whisper in his ear. Once when she discovered the reporters eyeing her, she smiled mischievously and immediately whispered the information to Frank.

Frank's mother sat quietly through the routine of examining the veniremen. She spoke to her son frequently, directing her glance at the prospective jurors as though commenting on their fitness.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

There seems to be little, if any, doubt that the Legislature is to hurry along the general tax act, just as it has hurried along the general appropriations bill.

There are, counting to-day, exactly fourteen working days left to the Legislature's credit. This does not include two Saturdays and two Sundays, however.

It, therefore, may be seen that the Legislature can, if it will, place both the appropriations bill and the tax acts—the general tax act, at least—in the hands of the Executive ten days ahead of adjournment, as he has requested.

If this is done—and it likely will be done—the present Legislature will have accomplished a record of speed never before equaled in the history of the State.

Despite all the complaining and criticism to the contrary, the present Legislature has been the most prompt, within the memory of any Georgian, in the matter of passing the two vitally big and necessary measures of the session—the general appropriations bill and the general tax act.

Credit must be awarded the committee heads, the committees and the Speaker for this remarkable achievement, and President Anderson has given his assurance that the promptness of the House shall be duplicated in the Senate this week and next.

Taken altogether, the record of the Legislature as made up for this session is all right and a credit.

It is, indeed, far better than usual.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham, is very much opposed to the measure permitting the addition of a kindergarten system to the public schools of the State.

Mr. Shuptrine does not believe the Constitution of the State contemplates anything of the kind, and, moreover, he thinks it would be but the first step in the direction of greatly expanding the school fund, already smaller than the necessities of the State seem to warrant.

"If we permit this innovation, not warranted in the fundamental law at all, we shall have application made within the life of the present Legislature, perhaps, for more funds to meet the kindergarten requirements," said Mr. Shuptrine to-day.

"I know that it is proposed to add this feature to the school system without additional appropriations to cover it, but that is merely a sop to get the bill on the statute books. Once we inaugurate this system, we shall have to take care of it, and it will be argued that funds as now appropriated are not sufficient to handle the new department.

"Georgia already is dealing most generously with her schools—she is straining the limit to take care of them—and I am not complaining so much about that. But I do think it would be a sad mistake to add any further burdens to her budget—and certainly along the line of providing public education to tots from 4 to 6 years of age."

Senator M. C. Tarver has abandoned for the present his effort to get the Representatives and Senators of the various counties affected, interested in the proposed Chickamauga judicial circuit.

"The bill could not be passed at this session," said Mr. Tarver, "for several of the Representatives of the counties proposed for the new circuit are opposed to any change of the present arrangement. Others, while desiring a change, couldn't get together on an arrangement of counties that was mutually satisfactory."

Mr. Searcey's bill to make the buyer and the seller equally guilty in "blind tiger" cases, was killed in the Senate, upon the theory that it affords the "blind tiger" exactly the protection he desires, rather than retards him in the operation of his business.

"The one thing a 'blind tiger' dreads above all other things," said a Senator, discussing the bill, "is that among his numerous customers may be one who will tell.

"This bill removes that dread, for anybody who reported a 'tiger' under this measure would become a criminal himself. Besides, because of the law which excuses a man from incriminating himself in testifying, this man would become immediately incompetent as a witness.

"It is hard enough now to convict 'blind tigers', and it would be a thousand times harder under this law.

"Prohibitionists who seek to go the limits this bill proposes are to be commended for their zeal, perhaps, but surely not for their common sense. This bill is sound enough in theory, if you view it from a certain angle, but it falls to pieces as a practical measure and would defeat the very object its author had in mind when he framed it."

The Senate defeated the measure by a vote of 18 to 22, which was not such a wide margin of defeat, after all.

MAULS MAN FOR TALKING TO WIFE

W. M. Sexton, No. 18 Gaskill street, Monday morning remarked to Recorder Broyles that he had "cautioned this guy about talking to his wife," in explaining why he attacked W. L. Patterson, of No. 57 Powell street, Sunday night at the close of services in St. Luke's Methodist Church in Powell street.

Patterson told the court that Sexton is "insanely jealous."

Sexton, who is separated from his wife, attacked Patterson a short distance from the church after he had seen him talking to Mrs. Sexton inside of the church. Patterson said Mrs. Sexton called to him after the congregation had been dismissed, and that he meant no harm by conversing with her. He said Sexton lay in wait for him in a dark spot in Powell street and assailed him with metal knucks. Sexton denied this.

The two men were pummeling one another vigorously when interrupted by Detective Coker and Policeman Boggus, who were on their way home from the church service. Metal knucks were found on the ground. Patterson displayed an abrasion on his head, which he said was made by the knucks.

When Sexton told Judge Broyles he had warned his wife not to talk to other men, the Recorder informed him that as he was separated from his wife he had no right to beat up every person he saw talking to her."

The jealous husband was fined $25.75 and the case of Patterson was dismissed.

SEARCY'S LIQUOR BILL REVIVED IN SENATE

Resolution Providing for Its Reconsideration Adopted—Whitewashing of Soule Opposed.

The adoption of a resolution calling for the reconsideration of the Searcy prohibition bill, making the selling of liquor purchased from a "blind tiger" a misdemeanor, which was defeated in the Georgia Senate Friday, featured the session Monday. The bill probably will come up again this week under special order rule. A hot fight is expected.

Senators Foster and Hixon offered a resolution "whitewashing" the charges against President A. M. Soule, of the State Agricultural College. It sets forth that President Soule has rendered valuable service which should be recognized by the withdrawal of the charges, now pending in the House. The resolution will be considered Tuesday.

That a bitter contest will take place when it is presented for adoption was indicated Monday by Senator McGregor, who declared he would fight the measure to the last ditch, on the grounds that it is a "complete 'whitewash' without any sort of investigation."

The most important new bill introduced in the Senate Monday was that by Senator McGregor, limiting the power of the Governor in calling out troops in case of disorder. The bill aims to take the State militia out of the so-called police jurisdiction, and requires affidavits by civil authorities before the Governor may call out troops.

Senator Tarver's bill providing for the appointment of a State commission to investigate conditions as regards drug users, with a view to establishing a State sanitarium for them, was passed by the Senate.

Senator Bush's bill making the State Superintendent of Education an ex-officio member of the eleven agricultural schools of the State was lost after President Randolph Anderson made a fight on the measure.

Senator McNeil's bill providing for a new Great Seal of State, changing the date 1799 to 1776, commemorating the Declaration of Independence, was sent back to the committee.

DR. STARNES BIDS ATLANTA GOODBYE

One-third of the seats in the Auditorium were filled Sunday afternoon for the farewell concert given by Dr. Percy Starnes and Mrs. Starnes.

A program in which Mozart's "Magic Flute" predominated, and which contained two compositions by the organist himself, was well received. The overture to Wagner's "Tannhauser," which was to have been the final number, was omitted because the organ got out of order. In its place, Dr. Starnes made a little speech of farewell. He said he would take away with him the pleasant recollection that his Atlanta audiences have been uniformly attentive and cordial.

Dr. Starnes' two compositions were "Improvisations Upon a Scotch Melody," the air being "Auld Lang Syne," and a song, "A Lake and a Fairy Boat," which Mrs. Starnes sang.

Clarence H. Mackay Sued for $2,000,000

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

Kings to Send Costly Gifts to Miss Wilson

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

Panama Has 'Noah;' Believers Build Ark

Special Cable to The Georgian.

PANAMA, July 28.—Word has been received from Penonome, a town in the interior of the republic, that Segundo Sanchez, a native, has proclaimed himself the Messiah and has issued a "prophecy" of the destruction of the world by a deluge in a short time.

Gabrielle Ray Wins Suit Against Loder

LONDON, July 28.—Gabrielle Ray the famous Gayety beauty, to-day won her suit against her husband, Eric Loder, for the restoration of her conjugal rights. Loder made no defense.

The actress and Loder, who is the son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married March 1, 1912. The marriage was to have taken place the previous day, but Miss Ray kept Loder "waiting at the church."

Berlin Bars Organ Grinders; Must Toil

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, July 28.—The Berlin police have barred organ grinders, declaring that the majority of them are strong enough to work, and that there is too much good music to be heard to have one's nerves racked by hand-organs.

REMOVAL OF U. S. CONSUL ASKED BY TEXANS

American Envoy at Juarez Charged With Neglecting to Protect His Countrymen.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera among them a number of women and children.

U. S. to Hunt Down Dixon's Assailant.

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Bryan Studies Report.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. AMERICA WINS DAVIS TENNIS TROPHY

McLaughlin Brings Cup Back Home by Victory Over Dickson of England.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28. The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

Maurice E. McLoughlin, the young Californian, brought victory to his country by defeating C. P. Dixon in three straight sets in the single match to-day. Although his service was faulty at the beginning of the match to-day, McLoughlin soon got into his stride.

He won the first set after a hard-fought set-to, the score being 8-6.

From then on the issue was never in doubt, the American proving himself the master of the Englishman at all stages of the second and third sets, winning the former 6-3 and the latter 6-2.

The match for the trophy began on Friday, when McLoughlin was defeated by J. C. Parke, the Irish champion. R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia, evened up matters when he defeated Dixon in the other single match that day.

Saturday the Americans jumped into the foreground, when McLoughlin and Harold H. Hacket, the double team, defeated Dixon and H. Roper Barrett.

McLoughlin's play, which was a little off color on Friday, was much improved Saturday and to-day. His individual skill did much to bring the cup back to America.

In the semi-final game between Parks and Williams, the Englishman won after a hard match of five sets. The score: 6-2, 5-7, 5-7, 6-4, 6-2. This defeat did not have any bearing on the general result.

Urges Bathing Skirts For 'Unshapely' Men

CHICAGO, July 28.—A legal fight was started to-day by Dr. Rosalie M. Ladova, who was arrested at a park bathing beach because she appeared in a Sunday afternoon crowd of swimmers in bloomers.

"Women can not swim well in skirts," said Dr. Ladova to-day. "Their figures are rounded so that they do not need as thorough covering as men. Men bathers go about almost naked. Their hideous figures should be covered from their necks to their toes. They should be compelled to wear the skirts."

Turkey Trot Causes Fatal German Duel

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BERLIN, July 28.—The turkey trot caused a fatal duel at Landau between a Prussian general and a colonel, whose names are suppressed.

PONY RIVALS ARE HUSTLING IN 3 LAST DAYS

Standing Changes Fast—County Contestants Redouble Efforts. Shetlands To Be Exhibited.

Four yearly subscriptions, with Red Letter Ballots, counting in all 8,000 votes—were brought in by one contestant in The Georgian and American pony contest.

"Was it a rival in your district?" the contest manager asks the boys and girls. "You don't know. Very likely it was. Nothing is more treacherous nowadays than over-confidence.

"Three days remain, after M[illegible] day. The strain soon will be over. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not well afford to put every effort into the work for this brief, final spurt."

Some May Be Disappointed.

When the contestants come into the office, the contest manager gets an excellent line on their ideas. Sometimes they are amusing. There are several boys and girls who were leading a week ago by good margins. Strangely enough, in spite of repeated warnings, these youngsters will not believe that they are behind now. This is the attitude which will bring bitter disappointment when the final standings are published next Sunday and the winners announced.

One feature of the contest upon which little stress has been put is the fact that the boy or girl who gets the greatest total of votes has first choice of all twenty-two ponies, and so on down the list. For the ambitious lad it is not enough to win in his district. He wants also to get one of the first selections from the herd of twenty-two Shetlands.

No Apathy in Country.

True, it may happen that the very last pony may suit the very last contestant to perfection. But, again, the chances are it will not.

There is no apathy in the country districts. The work done by the contestants outside of Atlanta is remarkable.

The ponies were to have been paraded Sunday, but the weather was not propitious. If the weather does not again interfere the ponies will be shown in the business section of Atlanta Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

VICTIM OF NEGRO REGRETS HANGING

Wounded Dunbar Merchant Not in Sympathy With Houston County Mob's Action.

MACON, July 28.—When G. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, was told at a private hospital here to-day that John Shake, the negro who shot him Saturday night, had been lynched by a Houston County mob, he said:

"I am sorry the boys did that. Shake was a bad negro, all right, but it wasn't right to hang him."

Hammock is not seriously injured, though weak from loss of blood. He expects to return to his home this week.

Hammock detected the negro burglarizing his store about midnight. When he called on Shake to surrender, the negro fired a shotgun. The shot fractured Hammock's left wrist and also caused a painful wound in the chest.

The negro escaped and took refuge in the swamps below Wellston. A mob caught him late Sunday afternoon. After confessing that he did the shooting, the negro was hanged to a tree on the outskirts of Dunbar.

AUGUSTA BILL'S AUTHORS LOSE FIRST CLASH

Commission Government Act Denied to Friendly Committee. Lipscomb Act Up Tuesday

A fight for the reference of the bill giving Augusta the commission form of government, by members of the Richmond County delegation, featured Monday's session of the House, Judge Picquett winning in his efforts to have it referred to the Committee on Municipal Government, of which he is chairman.

The authors of the bill, Olive and Garlington, sought to have the bill referred to the General Judiciary Committee No. 1, of which both are members.

The Lipscomb taxation bill was set as a continuing order beginning Tuesday. This provides a tax of $50 on lobbyists; doubles the occupation tax of corporations; increases the tax on bottling plants; places an annual tax of $5 on automobiles; levies an inheritance tax and various other taxes to increase the revenue of 1915.

It is expected that this bill will occupy the House for several days. If it passes within this time limit it will be a record time for Georgia lawmakers to dispose of so important a matter.

Senator Kelley, of the Eighteenth District, introduced a bill in the Senate last Friday covering the same matter. This has not as yet been acted upon.

Considerable discussion resulted when the optometrist bill, providing for a board to examine opticians in Georgia before they be allowed to practice, was read. This bill previously had been adversely reported. Its author, Wallace Miller, of Bibb, urged that the bill be considered seriously.

Rich Man a Negro; Death Bares Secret

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

Appendix All Alone In London, Said Jack

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Here is the latest joke Jack London, the famous author, is telling on himself.

London was operated on recently for appendicitis. After the ordeal the surgeon held up the severed appendix in his fingers for the patient to see. The author looked at it thoughtfully, then grinned and said:

"It was a case of all alone in London, wasn't it, doc?"

sane man will contend that the Augusta disturbance justified its enforcement. If in foreign invasion or civil war the courts are actually closed and it is impossible to administer criminal justice according to law, then, in the theater of active military operations, where war really prevails, there is a necessity to furnish a substitute for the civil authority, and as no power is left but the military, it is allowed to govern by martial rule until the laws can have their free course.

Constitution Paramount.

Martial rule is employed when force may expel the civil authorities from a part of the State, or when the civil law is unable to perform its functions, the military being on the spot to execute it where no civil authority exists. When it does exist the Constitution is imperative that it shall be paramount to the military.

The power of arrest in this case would have secured the alleged disturbers and law-breakers until the State was prepared for their trial and the courts were ready to try them.

The men responsible for this atrocity were tried by a court-martial and acquitted, but as the military was without jurisdiction, the conclusion reached is not binding upon the State.

Courts-martial may try offenses committed in violation of the military law, as above defined, but acts done in the caprice of tyranny under martial rule make the military commander and his subordinates accountable to the law of the land, both by prosecution in the criminal courts and by civil action at the instance of the parties aggrieved.

TRIES TO SHOOT HIS WIFE; KILLS AN OFFICER

DALTON, July 28.—At an early hour this morning the posse organized to hunt down Clem Poole, who near midnight shot and killed Policeman Harry Cook while the officer was attempting to arrest him, disbanded, the search being fruitless.

Poole last night shot twice at his wife as he followed her to the home of her parents on First avenue. There Policeman Cook met him. As the officer advanced, Poole fired, the bullet piercing the policeman's heart and bringing instant death. Henry Mitchell, accompanying the officer, grabbed the weapon from Poole, but he escaped. Bloodhounds trailed the fugitive for a time and then lost the scent.

The murder has greatly aroused Dalton, for Policeman Cook was a popular member of the force. He is survived by his wife. A reward of $100 has been offered by the city for Poole's capture.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now, I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return.

It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

If you are blessed with a good memory, don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

THIS STORY WON PRIZE OF $100.00

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.

375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,
Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him. "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runabout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and leggins.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidden among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. As the instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can. Then you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habits and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keeping no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases, it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

"Gordon Kelly batting in place of Leonard."

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" calls the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon fouls the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor.'

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will require it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued:

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"I thought the lady looked peculiar.

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying, I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again.

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

The young man took a piece of ice out of a lemonade glass and pressed it to his brow.

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt to happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Strange Behavior.

Then it occurred to the poet that she was perhaps a foreigner who did not understand German and he was surprised that he had not discovered that right away.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

An Understanding.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

And now she smiled, a tender, happy smile and, trembling with delight, her lips whispered: "Yes, I understand you."

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

The Elastic Fish.

"Speaking of the fish that you caught——"

"What about it?"

"I notice you modify its size to your various listeners."

"Well, I never tell a man more than I think he'll believe."

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood; from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says 'they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

Salesman—Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age!

Passer-by (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Salesman—A magnetized keyhole plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary steel key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole at night is to take out your key and hang on to it.

Things Worth Remembering

Gout is rarely known among the working classes of Ireland. Their immunity from this complaint is thought to be due to the fact that their food consists largely of potatoes.

There were 20,000 people in England and Wales without a birthday this year owing to the fact that February contained only twenty-eight days.

Spain has more sunshine than any other country in Europe. The yearly average is 3,000 hours. In England its is 1,400.

Germany is the greatest beer-producing country in the world. Of 51,000 breweries in the world, 25,000 are in Germany.

A lock of hair from the head of George Washington was bought at an auction sale in New York for $480.

On an average no fewer than two hundred people are killed by lightning every year.

More matches are used in the United Kingdom than in any other country in the world.

FIVE TEAMS TO BATTLE IN RACE FOR 30 MINUTES

A HALF-HOUR team race is to be the big feature at the Motordrome to-morrow night, and for the really jammy excitement this should top anything that has been staged yet at Jack Prince's saucer.

Five teams will be in the long grind. And what a wrangle the ten riders had trying to get matched up! Finally Morty Graves suggested that the partners be found by a drawing. Manager Noon Hudson put all the numbers in his new straw lid and the result was:

Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

These teams appear to be very evenly matched. Graves and McNeil will probably rule favorites, with Richards and Shields second choice.

No rider will be allowed to remain on the track over twenty successive minutes. But each rider can call for his partner as often as he desires. The partners who are not racing will remain in front of the paddock. The partner riding must drop off the track and touch his teammate on the shoulder before the latter can take up the racing.

It sure will be a thrilling event if all goes well.

The Motordrome Sweepstakes is the second feature event. All the riders will start, five in each qualifying heat. The qualifying heats will be over a one-mile course, while the final will be two miles.

Harry Glenn, who defeated Schwartz the other night, will meet Luther in a match race. It will be the two best heats in three over a two-mile circuit. Glenn is a local boy and he will be backed heavily to down his worthy opponent.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the complete card for Tuesday night:

First Event.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance—two miles.

Third Event.

Fourth Event.

Fifth Event.

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Even.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil; Schwartz and Lockner; Shields and Richards; Luther and Lewis; Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over twenty consecutive minutes.)

Wolgast and Ritchie May Sign Articles

LOS ANGELES, July 28.—Eager to nail down Ad Wolgast to his offer—a $25,000 side bet for a return match—Willie Ritchie to-day is making a desperate effort to get the former title-holder to meet him to-day and sign articles. On Saturday, Wolgast posted with James J. Jeffries $1,000, part of a $25,000 side bet, in a twenty-round title contest with Ritchie. Wolgast specified that half is to go that he will win from the title-holder in twenty rounds, the other half that he knocks out, stops or forces Ritchie to quit within the limit.

Ritchie lost no time in accepting the offer when he learned that there was seriousness to Ad's movements, and he asked Jeffries to effect a meeting between he and Ad for this afternoon in the hope that articles might be signed. Ritchie leaves here for 'Frisco Wednesday afternoon and he would like to close the match before starting. Should the pair come together they will clash either September 1 or 2.

WHY IS A LAZY DOG LIKE A HILL?

Pelky in No Hurry to Fight Theatrical Tour Awaits Champ

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 28.—Arthur Pelky, the new white heavyweight champion, possesses most of the facial characteristics of the professional pugilist, but it can scarcely be said that he has a fighting eye.

Now, do not misunderstand me.

There is nothing in Pelky's look to suggest that he is lacking in courage, but, sizing him up as he sat in my den yesterday, I could not help thinking how different he was from other brand-new champions I had known. In most cases the eye of a freshly-fledged champ glints with a mixture of pride and defiance. If looks could be construed into words the look to which I refer would read, "I can lick anything that walks in two shoes."

Pelky's eyes are large and dark—the eyes of a man who broods. To me it almost seemed as if the shadow of that fearful experience he had in the ring at Calgary was still upon him. The suspicion was confirmed by his evident reluctance to talk about the recent past and his palpable inclination to talk about ringmen other than himself. To the majority of champions the recital of how they won their spurs gives unbounded pleasure. To Pelky the recollection brings a shudder.

* * *

PELKY is tall, squarely built and has a strong jaw and large, firmly-knit hands. He is big enough to tackle anything in human shape. He is here with Tommy Burns, once world's champion in his own right, but now fallen into flesh and quite content to be known as a connoisseur.

Tommy is Pelky's manager, and the manner in which Burns discovered that Pelky was worth managing was not the least interesting thing he had to tell. Pelky went to Calgary to box six rounds with Burns. While the affair was in progress the beauties of Pelky's character as a fighter unfolded to Tommy. At the end of the bout Tommy was all in, and an hour later Tommy was Pelky's manager.

"We are in no hurry to make matches," said Burns. "We have twelve weeks' work in the theaters, beginning at Pantages next week, and in the meantime the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn match will be decided and the winner will stand forth as a challenger of Pelky. If Smith wins, and I think he will—"

"Pardon me," said Pelky in a soft-voiced way. "I think Flynn will defeat Smith."

"And if it is Smith you'll like it all the better. You have always wanted to box him, haven't you?"

Pelky nodded his approval.

BURNS and Pelky were reminded that Sam Langford, the negro pugilist, is back from Australia, and were asked how overtures for a Pelky-Langford match would be regarded.

"I want it to be understood that I will never box a colored man," said Pelky. "Some time ago when the promoters of the country decided to discourage the making of mixed matches and contests were arranged to decide who was the white heavyweight champion, I thought it one of the best moves ever made in pugilism. I am still of that way of thinking. I call myself the white champion, and feel that I have every right to do so, but if the public took the stand that I ought to accept matches with negroes, I'd be willing to drop out of the game entirely."

* * *

"I THINK he's right," said Burns. "Of course I fought a negro when I met Jack Johnson, but if I had my time to go over again he would wait a long time for a match. To tell the truth, I never wanted to fight Johnson. I was offered big money by the National Club of London, and I turned it down. When I went to Australia and the question came up again, I said that I wanted every cent of $30,000 before I'd go into the ring with Johnson. It was a lot of money, but McIntosh produced it, and then there was no getting out of it, so far as I was concerned.

"And talking of public opinion in such matters, I have lived to learn that a fighter should not lay too much stress upon public opinion. It shifts and veers too much. Before I boxed Johnson I used to receive letters taunting me with being afraid to meet the negro. After I went against him and lost my title the letters still came in. But their tone had changed. I was reviled for having given a negro a chance at the championship."

* * *

WHEN matchmaking is in order, it is just possible that a trip to Australia will be included in the Burns-Pelky itinerary. In response to a message from out yonder, Burns has cabled that Pelky will be willing to take the journey and engage in a series of three fights.

Tommy has named as possible opponents for Pelky: Jim Flynn, Jess Willard, Jim Coffey, Al Palzer and Gunboat Smith.

FIRST DAY.

THE Magnate tore his seldom hair
And roared in fearsome rage:
Jake Stahl is canned—my own pick—Jake!
Oh, gimme room to cuss!
I'll show those Boston guys they can't Make us ridiculous!"

THIRD DAY.

The Magnate speeded to the West—
The wild news speeded, too;
In Cleveland he was cornered by Reporters quite a few.
"Ahem!" he said. "About Jake Stahl—
I do not care to state
My full conclusions at this time—
I must investigate."

SEVENTH DAY.

At last he makes his lakeside home;
And Fandom stands agog
[illegible] or put
Those ingrates on the hog!
And now the crushing sentence comes—
With quite some 'pshaw" and "pish"—
"In this I can not interfere.
E'en if I had the wish!"

BROWN COMES BACK, HURLS IN OLD-TIME FORM

MORDECAI BROWN is not through. In fact, it looks as if Manager Joe Tinker, of the Reds, said very true words when in the spring he claimed that the three-fingered wonder still had a lot of good baseball left in him. True, Brown is not hurling the kind of ball he did several seasons ago, but just the same, Johnny Evers could use him at present, and to good advantage.

After Brown had helped the Cubs to four pennants and two world's championships, his arm went to the bad in 1912. When the off season came C. Webb Murphy thought he would not need the three-fingered boy any more, and shipped him to the minors.

But Joe Tinker, new manager of the Reds, thought different. Joe was with "Brownie" a long time, and when he was shipped to the A. A., he and Garry Herrmann arranged a deal whereby Miner would come back to the National League. And it looks as if they made no error in securing Brown.

Beats Old Mates Twice.

Maybe now C. Webb Murphy and Johnny Evers see they made a big mistake in releasing the former star of the Cubs. Recently when the Reds were playing the Bruins, the three-fingered hurler took a pair of games from Johnny Evers' gang, one of them being a shutout, in which only six base knocks were made off him.

When Tinker secured Brown, it was for the simple reason to use him as a coach for his young moundmen. He was carried until May 1 before he made his appearance on the firing line. Since the hot weather arrived, though, Brown's good right arm seems to be as good as ever, and he is taking his regular turn on the mound for his club.

Has Good Record.

Although Brown is not winning as regular or working quite as often as he did a few years back, he has a record which is far better than the one owned by his club.

Miner has won seven games and lost six this campaign. That's a percentage of .538. The Reds own a mark of .380, so it can be seen that Brownie is 158 points ahead of his team.

So far this season Brown has appeared in 22 games, being used as a relief hurler most of the time. In these 22 contests he has worked 95 innings.

How Fogel Will Wreck Majors Dryden Makes Big "Discovery"

Charles Dryden.

HONORABLE HORACE FOGEL is getting ready to absorb both big circuits and put the magnates on the bum. He has said it, and what Horace says goes. As the present major leagues are a joke, Horace will start a lieutenant-colonel league for a change, grabbing off all the star talent now employed grinding out the national pastime.

The new organization should be accomplished without much trouble. Mr. Fogel talked himself out of the old league, and he is now engaged asking himself into the new one, or lieutenant-colonel league, to distinguish it from the old majors. Horace has his towns for the circuit booked out already yet once. They are New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis. That makes seven, and they need one more. The eighth city will be either Boston, Indianapolis or Kansas City. If Horace included both Boston and Kansas City, look what a fine jump the athletes would have from Boston to play a Sunday game at Kansas City.

Backers of New League Named.

The financial backers of the lieutenant-colonel league are said to be Otto Steifel, of St. Louis, and Jeff Livingston, the well-known pickle expert of Cincinnati. Mr. Steifel is behind the Federal League at St. Louis, and Mr. Livingston is in the pickle and tomato ketchup line at Cincy. They are to furnish the money, and Horace will supply the words. It is claimed that Horace has landed all the stars worth having in the two major circuits, but the statement is discredited, because Tom Needham has not been signed by the lieutenant-colonels. We are inclined to believe that if there were anything in the new organization, Mr. Needham would not have been overlooked. If Tom is not a star, where could they find one?

Be that as it may, the lieutenant-colonel league will be in full operation next spring, and the magnates of the two so-called major leagues will be begging for peanut concessions and hot dog stands in the parks of the new baseball body. They made a goat of Horace, and now he is getting back at them.

His Investigation Sidetracked.

His investigation of the trust was sidetracked, and just for that the National and American must get out of business for all time. By next Fourth of July we will hear of Pittsburg, New York and Cleveland selling their new steel stands for old iron. It is an awful picture to contemplate, but the magnates showed Horace no mercy, and he is determined not to spare them in the hour of retribution. Otherwise Horace is a mighty good fellow.

P. S.—Mr. Fogel has prepared an advance statement of 8,000 words in reference to the new league, which statement was to have been released simultaneously with a lot of papers on July 7.

Double P. S.—We do not know why the statement was not released on July 7.

MAGNATE REFUSES TO OBEY COMMISSION'S RULING

LOS ANGELES, CAL., July 28.—Henry Berry, president of the Los Angeles baseball club of the Coast League, said to-day he would not obey the baseball law which forbids a class AA team to carry more than twenty players in the middle of the season.

"If the National Commission decided that I should pay a fine I will not do it," said Berry.

Charles Arbogast, a catcher, is expected to join the Los Angeles team to-morrow. This would make 21 players. Berry declared to-day he would not release any of the old men for the reason that three of his players were in the hospital.

FANS REMEMBER HOLLIDAY IN HOT DASH FOR VOTES

Waycross Player Is Now Second in Popularity Contest—Manchester Still Holds Lead.

"GOAT HOLLIDAY, the Waycross first baseman, had his day in The Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's contest to decide the most popular player in the Empire State League and is now second in the mad dash for votes.

The Waycross player is trailing Dick Manchester, of Brunswick, and if his supporters continue their great work it would not surprise the Baseball Popularity Editor to see Holliday in the lead by Wednesday if not sooner. Otto Jordan, Valdosta's manager, dropped to third position, topping "Pat" Murphy by a few votes.

Holliday's spurt is due to his great playing around the initial sack. He is a great favorite with the Waycross fans and they are now pulling hard for him to capture the beautiful loving cup that goes to the winner.

Manchester Holds Lead.

Manchester, the leader of the contest at the present time, now holds the distinction of holding the lead longer than any one player, with the exception of Otto Jordan. Dick had a busy day yesterday and coupons kept pouring in for him in large batches.

Pat Murphy and H. Champlin continue to put up their dogged fight, with Dudley, the Thomasville manager, slowly coming to the front. When it is taken into consideration that three Thomasville players are entered in this contest it is certainly wonderful the support Thomasville fans are giving their players. All of them are close up and might oust the leaders at any time.

Others Players in Race.

Whitey Morse, Eubanks, Baby Wilder, Franks and Rube Zellers were also remembered by their friends yesterday in the votes sent in.

Get Busy Now.

Fans wishing to help their favorite player win the loving cup and honor of being the most popular player in this league can do so by clipping the coupon that appears in to-day's paper, fill it in and mail it to the Baseball Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga. The time to do it is now. Don't wait until to-morrow. Vote to-day.

CLABBY VS. PAPKE.

DENVER, COLO., July 25.—Articles have been signed for a ten-round bout between Jimmy Clabby, the Milwaukee middleweight, and Billy Papke, of Kewanee, Ill., to be held at the Denver A. C. on August 11.

OHNE WINS RACE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Paul Ohne, of Brooklyn, won the three-cornered match race at Brighton Motodrome last night, thereby earning the right to meet Arthur Chappelle, the champion motorcyclist.

ALPERMAN HAS APPENDIX CUT; OUT FOR A YEAR

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Whitey Alperman, field captain and second baseman of the Crackers, was operated on this noon in a local hospital for appendicitis.

As a result of the operation, Alperman will not be able to play again this season. This is a severe blow to Manager Billy Smith, as it practically kills whatever chance the Atlanta team has of winning the pennant.

Alperman was out of the game yesterday. He complained of severe pains in his right side. Last night a local physician was called, but was unable to diagnose the case until this morning.

Manush will probably cover the keystone sack the remainder of the season.

POOR ABIE IS THROUGH; HAS LITTLE CLASS LEFT

NEW YORK, July 28.—Abie Attell had better give up the Queensberry pastime. Abe has something left in the ducking and the nodding of the head in getting away from some wicked punches, but that is about all.

His latest opponent was Willie Beecher, the well-known mitt man of the East side, and the contest took place at the Atlantic Athletic Club of Rockaway. There was a rather good gathering of the fight fans. They were of the opinion that Abe would hand out some of that old championship stuff that made him famous in the days of long ago. The person who suffered the most at the bout was Referee Draycott. Abe's judgment of distance was bad in the fifth, sixth and eighth rounds, and he whanged the judge three times.

The winner of the bout was Beecher. The latter, after finding out that Attell was not there any more, chased Abe around the ring, and Beecher had a difficult time in catching his opponent. Beecher did his best work in the sixth and seventh rounds. From the fifth round to the finish, Beecher was the busy man and he had enough lead in the first five to give him the fight. All that Abe had was a bad lip as he came out of the ring.

Dunn Fined $5 for "Cussing" Umpire

MOBILE, ALA., July 28.—Joe Dunn, the heavy backstop of the Crackers, who was arrested yesterday at the ball park during the game between Atlanta and Mobile clubs, on a charge of using profane language was fined $5 in the Recorder's Court here this morning. Joseph paid.

The Recorder gave Dunn the preference of spending ten days in the workhouse or paying $5. "It is too hot these days to stay indoors so long," said the catcher, as he passed the "five iron men" over. "But I guess the judge wanted me to coach the rock-pile team at that," added Joe.

DODGE MAY GO TO VOLS; INDIANS SECURE NELSON

CINCINNATI, July 28.—Pitcher Albert Nelson, who was sold by the Reds to Nashville, but refused to report there, has been disposed of to Indianapolis. The Cincinnati club will send Nashville another player in place of Nelson, possibly Infielder Dodge, recently secured from the Phillies in exchange for Becker.

YOUNGSTERS FOR BLOOMINGTON.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 28.—The Bloomington management, in an effort to check the losing streak of its club, has signed two promising youngsters. They are Outfielder Ralph Craig, of Sioux City, and Pitcher John Duggan, of the Southern League.

NAPS GET NEW PLAYER.

DECATUR, ILL., July 28.—The sale is announced of Dick Staley, first baseman of the Danville baseball club, to the Cleveland Americans for $2,500.

Atlanta Should Have Polo Club

Will Introduce Game August 6

THE most rabid polo'st's appetite will be satisfied at Fort McPherson on Wednesday afternoon, August 6.

Here are some of the events carded by those interested in the plan to form the Atlanta Polo Club:

Polo match between the Fort McPherson quartet and an All-Southern team, which will consist of Tom Weaver, Lamar Hill, Dr. J. O. Seamans, local players, and experts from surrounding Southern clubs.

A polo pony race.

A "polo pony" concert by Company M Glee Club.

And in hope of encouraging those who will be unable to attend to become interested in the game, moving pictures will be taken of the struggle and thrown on local screens a day or two after the match.

It will be the biggest society event ever held in Atlanta. It is to be hoped that the game will "take strong," for if it does, the Atlanta Polo Club will surely be formed.

A big tract of land will be purchased and a clubhouse erected. There are enough Atlantans who play the game to form an excellent team with very little coaching. Within a very few months the local club could arrange games with teams from all parts of the country, and not be afraid of defeat.

A worthy aim would be to develop players for the International Cup team. New Yorkers have had this all to themselves for some time, but Atlanta, like Camden, Augusta and Jacksonville, could in time probably develop some "big leaguers."

RINGSIDE NOTES

Jack White has finally secured a match with Johnny Dundee. Tom McCarey signed the pair yesterday to meet in a 20-round bout at his Vernon arena on August 12. They are to box at catch weights.

* * *

Johnny Kilbane, who has been holdfast to his title as featherweight champion, says that he is going to tour the world after visiting Ireland, and will meet all the good boys as he goes along. Perhaps he can find some amusement and some dollars scattered in his pathway.

* * *

Mike Saul is one fighter who thinks Kid Young can defeat Charlie Lee, providing the fighting newsboy gets into shape. Saul refereed the former scrap between the pair and says condition is all that kept Young from winning.

* * *

Spider Britt is walking the streets with a chip on his shoulders these days. Spider wants to know why the fighters around here are continually dodging a match with him. Britt is anxious to get on with Lee or Young and says he will give either of them a neat side bet.

* * *

Billy Lutz, manager of Eddie Hanlon, has a few words to say regarding Mike Saul. Lutz called at the Georgian Sporting department yesterday and said that he would gladly send his protege against Mike, if the latter will agree to let Eddie weigh 128 pounds at 3 o'clock. Billy is also prepared to put up $25 to go as a weight forfeit and side bet. Billy wants to meet Saul at this office this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

* * *

Jack Britton appears to be the easiest lightweight in the world to deal with when it comes to making a match. Britton is always ready to take on the best of them, while his manager, Danny Morgan, stands by with a few nickels to wager on his protege's chances.

* * *

The proposed return scrap between Johnny Williams and Eddie Campi "t Los Angeles has been called off and Williams, accompanied by his manager, Sammy Harris, has left for New York. Williams asked $3,000 for his services, a sum that McCarey refused to grant.

Carl Morris, the Oklahoma heavyweight, knocked out Al Benedict in the fifth round of a scheduled 15-round go the other night.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Total of $131,000 In New Dwellings

Plans for three handsome dwellings in Druid Hills, costing more than $40,000, are in course of preparation by Hentz & Reid, architects in the Candler Building. These are for houses to be built in the spring by J. Carroll Payne, Alex W. Smith, Jr., and Charles T. Hopkins, Jr., on adjoining lots on Ponce DeLeon avenue east of the bridge near Lullwater road. They will be handsomely done in the New England colonial style.

Jobs now in the hands of the above firm of architects total $131,000, including, among a number of dwellings, a structure for the West End Presbyterian Church, on Gordon street, to cost $20,000; a refreshment pavilion in Grant Park, $10,000, and additions to the dining room of the Piedmont Driving Club, $4,000. Plans are being drawn for the following other residences:

Edgar Dunlap, Druid Hills, two-story brick veneer house of New England colonial style, $17,000.

E. W. More, Peachtree road, near Lakeview avenue, two-story Dutch colonial and shingle, $6,000.

E. Lee Worsham, Wesley avenue, near Clark Howell's country place, one-story English type of plaster and stone, $10,000.

E. L. Bishop, Peachtree road, at Brookhaven, two-story plaster house, $7,000.

Fred Stone, Fairview road, Druid Hills, two-story New England colonial frame or brick veneer, $8,000.

W. White, Prado, Asley Park, two-story Dutch colonial frame and stone, $9,000.

Ivy Street Car Tracks.

Work has been in progress several days laying the old car tracks on Ivy street, preparatory to the resumption of trolley traffic on that street. There was a plan to put these tracks on Piedmont avenue, but objection on the part of property owners caused the project to be abandoned. The idea was to relieve Peachtree congestion as much as possible by having all tracks and heavy wagons use Ivy street.

To Start on West Peachtree.

Materials for repaving West Peachtree and building retaining walls are being gathered together for work that will begin within a few days. The walls will go up first and then regrading will start. A number of interesting improvements are expected to be made as soon as the work has assumed definite shape.

Mr. Cochran's Measure.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, introduced in the Legislature Monday a bill intended to make equities in property subject to levy and sale, as well as deeds. Eugene and Gordon Mitchell drew the measure. All outstanding notes against property must be paid up before a sale can be made under the present law.

It is also sought to repeal existing legislation which makes real estate men take out a license in every county where a sale is made.

Marietta Street Barbecue.

Marietta street property owners are beginning to whet their appetites for a mammoth barbecue which they will give next month or in September commemorating the completion of the Marietta street widening and repaving to the city limits and the Cobb County line. The place will be either the Chattahoochee River or Howell Station, according to W. Tom Winn, one of the first to urge the Marietta street improvement.

Invited to the barbecue will be the city officials, the County Commissioners, a number of prominent real estate men and others, probably 500 people.

This barbecue was first set for July 4, but a delay in the work made a postponement necessary. The job is postponement necessary. The job is postponed to be completed in a very short time, and Marietta street will take its place as the best crosstown street in the city.

New Apartment Houses.

The Lawrence, a new apartment house at Nos. 52 and 54 West Peachtree place, will be ready for occupancy September 1. J. L. Turner & Co. are the owners. Each room is outside and the two-room apartments have disappearing wall beds, which have only recently come to Atlanta. The Maryland, corner of Peachtree Circle and Seventeenth street, Ansley Park, will also be ready September 1. This contains four, five and six-room apartments.

Seeking More Floor Space.

A move for more floor space has been made by two Atlanta concerns located in the Empire Building. The Royal Insurance Company will soon leave the eleventh floor to take the entire twelfth floor of the Hurt building and the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency will take the offices of the insurance company, moving from the tenth floor. The Bottenfield Agency has leased this half floor for five years at a price which approximates $4,000 a year. This is the third move of the company. First in small offices on the second floor of the Empire, it moved to larger offices on the tenth, and now finds it necessary again to seek more floor space.

For Public Market.

Housewives of Atlanta have revived the interest of several years ago which was displayed in a public market. Committees are being formed and it is thought that within a comparatively short time there will be a place where women can buy direct and save half a dozen profits of middlemen. Should the Plaza project ever become a reality, it is possible that the market will be placed on the site of the Union Depot. It has been suggested that $250,000 be invested in a site and from another source that $500,000 in city bonds be issued.

To Purge Peachtree Creek.

Real estate men having subdivisions in the vicinity of Peachtree Creek have become greatly interested in the suggestion that the bed of the creek be cleared from the bridge at Peachtree to Howell Mill road, about two and one-half miles, in order to prevent overflows into the lowlands during the rainy seasons. Winds from Peachtree Creek blow mosquitoes into the city, it is claimed, and there are other reasons for wanting to remedy the conditions. The effect of Peachtree Creek on land can readily be understood when it is pointed out that Peachtree road frontage at $35 a front foot and less has not had an active market, whereas property has changed hands at nearly $100 a foot a mile farther to the north.

COTTON MARKET ACTIVE ALL DAY

NEW YORK, July 28.—Weakness in Liverpool cables as a result of Southern and Continental selling, coupled with private reports of rains over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma, resulted in the local cotton market opening barely steady to-day with first prices unchanged to 10 points from Saturday's final. At the end of 15 minutes the new crop positions were fairly steady.

The detailed weather reports did not disclose as much rainfall as earlier advices had suggested and a covering movement followed the establishment of new low levels. Losses were wiped out. Besides covering of shorts there was what observers thought was buying for fresh long account. Offerings became scarce and scattered. Larger spot houses were aggressive buyers of the old crops, but August seemed in greater demand, by rallying from 11.44 to 11.60 for a net gain of 16 points from the opening, while July only advanced 8 points. New crop were heavily purchased by strong sources, aggregating a gain of 5 to 11 points from the initial level. Liverpool continued to report bearish cables and at the close the English market was 7½ to 9 points lower.

The advance in some quarters was explained by the crumbling of new and old crop positions last week, which made new low levels for the month, when August went 70 points under the best price of the month, or $3.50 a bale. These offerings were absorbed by brokers said to be buying for Liverpool account against straddle sales there. The advance came in the face of a bearish condition report of The Memphis Commercial-Appeal, which gave condition of July 25, 82.1 per cent.

At the close the market was very steady with prices showing irregularity, being 5 points higher to 3 points lower than the closing quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 11.75; August, 11.50; October, 11.17; January, 11.05.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, La., July 28.—According to reliable private information further rains occurred Saturday night in north Texas and Oklahoma.

The map to-day shows generally fair weather in the western half; cloudy in the eastern half. No rain of consequence in the West, but general rainfall in Alabama and Atlantic States. Rising temperatures in the Western States, Arkansas and Tennessee; normal in the rest of the belt. Indications are for part cloudy to fair; rising temperatures in Texas; unsettled in Oklahoma, probably some rain in the northwestern portion. Part cloudy in the central and eastern States; some scattered showers.

The Shreveport Times says cotton made rapid progress during the past two weeks, due largely to the heavy rains of last week. The dry hot spell preceding the rains has practically solved the weevil problem and there is little complaint.

First grades here were at about unchanged figures, and the market showed remarkable steadiness from the start with a pronounced disposition to buy on depressions. This was undoubtedly based on the absence of rain in the lower half of Texas, rising temperatures in the West, anticipation of an unfavorable weekly weather report tomorrow in portions of Texas and the fear of a lower August Bureau report on Friday.

STOCK MAKRET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 28.—There was a broadening in speculative interest at the opening of the stock market to-day. In the early trading, stocks joined in a brisk upward movement. During that period new high records were established in many issues.

New Haven was up 1½, Great Northern preferred 1 point, while the rest of the list ruled from fractions to nearly a point above Saturday's close.

There was a varying tendency in London, but American stocks were steady.

The curb market was dull.

Traders continuing to fight the bullish tendency caused slight recessions at intervals, but on the whole the market was steady and slight upturns during the forenoon were recorded. A gain of 1⅞ by Chesapake and Ohio was the largest gain of the day, with Union Pacific and United States Steel both advancing ⅜. Southern Pacific declined ⅛. Great Northern preferred sold around 126⅝, a fractional loss since its opening. Call money loaned at 2¼.

Trading became dull in the afternoon, although the supply showed no increase. Selling by room traders was sufficient to cause recessions in a number of important issues.

Highest Government Officials
Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime
President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them only enough to pay for the transaction.

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child." "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate
It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in the great new railroad station at Forty-second street and Park avenue, New York, was asked by a patron of his department whether the trains to New Haven went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the Grand Central Station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The New Haven and Hartford trains and those passing on to Boston are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information in his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

The Song of Joy and Pain

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

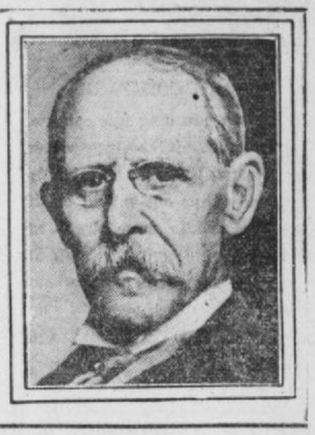
O, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, known to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, which has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

ROSSER TRIES TO INVOLVE LEE

PRESIDENT IS SET AGAINST MEDIATION

Carranza, Therefore, Looms Up as the Hope for Peace in Mexico.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—From information which seems to me in the last degree reliable, I have it that the Administration—White House and President—are rigidly set against intervention in Mexico.

All forms of diplomacy they are willing to apply and exhaust. All efforts of mediation they are willing to try. Perhaps in co-operation with other nations they might be willing to intervene, but as an abstract American proposition, neither the President nor Mr. Bryan will ever consent to intervention by the United States in Mexico unless the compulsion should be stronger than policy and forced by evident unavoidable necessity.

So, therefore, Carranza looms up on the Mexican horizon as the man of the future, the next revolutionary dictator or President of the so-called Mexican republic.

If the present attitude of neutrality restricts the advantage of Huerta in importing arms or gives equal chance to Carranza with Huerta, then the experts of our own arm agree perfectly with the optimist of the constitutionalists and revolutionists that within sixty days Huerta will be relegated to the ranks of the discredited and dethroned and Carranza, for a time at least, will be the dictator.

Carranza's Spokesman.

There speaks for Carranza in Washington, Escudero, his Minister of Finance, his expert in political economy, soldier, economist, statesman and dreamer—with a career as romantic and a temper as dashing as Madero, whom he loved and served. He was Madero's bosom friend and followed the romantic and tragic fortunes of the late President with courage and devotion. He was a member of the Mexican Congress when Madero fell. He was Mexico's spokesman and leader upon the floor.

When the Huerta bullets clipped the vital cord of Mexico on that midnight ride, Huerta lavished all his blandishments and promises upon Escudero to attach him to himself. He offered him office and power. Escudero refused. Huerta threatened, but still Escudero refused. Huerta set a limit on Escudero's acceptance or his banishment.

Finally one day in the Mexican Congress with Huerta's soldiers civilian clad in the galleries and Huerta's soldiers full armed in the basement of the Capitol, Escudero mounted the rostrum and in a speech ringing with fire of old Spain and the fervor of the Aztecs denounced the usurpation of Huerta, his tyranny and his part in Madero's death. In the storm that followed he vaulted through a window of the Congressional chamber, flung on a disguise and escaped by a waiting train to Vera Cruz.

His Escape.

Huerta's wires followed him and Huerta's officers were on his trail. But two loyal students piloted Escudero to a smack in the harbor, where he set sail for Guatemala, and joined himself to Carranza, whom he now holds as fervently as he did Madero as the leader of the constitutionalists and the hope of the Mexican people.

Escudero holds that the Mexican struggle must last forever, or until the people are redeemed from the bondage of the aristocracy, the church and the army. The enormous fortunes piled up during the diplomatic years of the elder Diaz have established conditions of money power in Mexico far beyond the conditions

Ex-Georgian, Held As Kidnaper, Wins First Tilt for Child

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A. T. Martin, a real estate dealer, formerly of Fulton County, Georgia, won the first round in his fight against his divorced wife, Lillie, for the custody of their child, Sarah, when Judge Wilbur allowed him to retain the custody of the child pending the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus.

The writ alleges that Martin kidnaped the child soon after a divorce decree was granted Mrs. Martin in Fulton County, Georgia, in 1911. The court gave the child to the mother.

According to McLoughlin, Martin alleges his former wife is unfit to care for the girl.

Crazed at Sight of Ex-Wife, Man Kills Her; Wounds Self

BIRMINGHAM, July 29.—Frenzied at sight of his former wife, Henry J. Naff, son of one of the oldest families in Birmingham, to-day walked next door to his home, where Mrs. Marie Naff, from whom he was divorced six months ago, was sitting on the porch, pulled out a pistol and shot her, and then put a bullet into his own head.

The woman died on the way to the hospital, and Naff was pronounced fatally wounded when he arrived at an infirmary.

Moore's Aide Heads U. S. Weather Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Professor Charles F. Marvin, chief of the instrument division of the Weather Bureau, to-day was selected by President Wilson to be chief of the Weather Bureau.

He succeeds Professor Willis L. Moore, who recently was dismissed.

Professor Marvin is a native of Columbus, Ohio, but is one of the oldest employees of the Weather Bureau. He has been connected with the instrument division for 25 years. He is considered by members of the department the most expert of scientific observers in the bureau.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston said his appointment was entirely on merit.

Sylvia Pankhurst's Arrest Causes Riots

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, July 29.—Charged with making a demonstration in front of Holloway jail, where Sylvia Pankhurst, daughter of the militant leader, was taken yesterday, two women suffragettes were to-day sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a man sympathizer to four months in jail.

The demonstrators marched from the East End to the jail, followed by a riotous crowd. Violent speeches were made, blank shots fired from pistols and windows smashed. The mounted police had a hard time in dispersing the gathering.

Bitter Fight Certain Over Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A bitter fight on the question of prohibiting interlocking directorates in all banks under the proposed Federal reserve system, provided for by the Glass currency bill, is anticipated in the Democratic caucus of the House to be called August 11.

President Wilson is opposed to this proposal, although the Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee have accepted such a proposal by a vote of 6 to 5.

Slays Husband Who Didn't Support Her

SHREVEPORT, LA., July 29.—Mrs. N. B. Leopard to-day declared she killed her husband because he would not support her.

She fired the shot that killed Leopard in the presence of her four children.

UNDERWOOD DENOUNCES MULHALL

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

Wins Pie-Eating, but Dies Within an Hour

He won the prize, a cowboy saddle, his nearest competitor being able to eat only eight pieces.

Three of the pieces Evans ate were made of goosberries, three of cherries, three of custard and the other two of pumpkin.

Court Too Small; Trial Held Outdoors

BARNWELL, KY., July 29.—The preliminary hearing of May Copeland, confessed slayer of her brother-in-law, Hugh Atchinson, and Lucien Turk, her fiance, held as an accomplice, was held in the courthouse yard to-day.

The crowd wishing to attend the trial was so great that Judge Hobbs ordered a temporary trial chamber arranged in the open air.

65 Sing Sing Rioters Transferred in Irons

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

25 Young Men Held For Death of Typist

DALLAS, TEXAS, July 29.—Twenty-five young men, rounded up by the police after the murder of Miss Florence Brown, were being held to-day as suspects.

The girl was a stenographer in a real estate office and was alone when she was attacked.

NEGRO WATCHMAN IS GRILLED ABOUT NOTES FOUND BESIDE BODY

A startling turn to the trial of Leo M. Frank was given Tuesday by the determined efforts of Frank's attorneys to connect Newt Lee, nightwatchman at the National Pencil Factory, with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, revealed the hand of the defense for the first time when he began a merciless cross-examination of the negro which was intended utterly to discredit Lee's testimony and show that he knew much more about the crime than he ever had told in his two appearances before the Coroner's Jury and in his sweating at the police station.

Rosser's inquisitorial tactics brought remonstrance after remonstrance from Solicitor Dorsey, but was allowed to continue on a ruling from Judge Roan.

Rosser read extracts from Lee's tstimony at the Coroner's inquests and pointed out discrepancies and omissions. When these were called to the negro's attention, he declared emphatically that the stenographer had made a mistake.

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was concerned in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

Jurors Sent From Room.

The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's, and the jurors were excused while Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall black negro di it by his-self.'

Cites Lee's Explanation.

"In an instant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me,'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions now and again interpreted thi mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note itself, there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

"Suspicion on Lee," Says Rosser.

"We expect to show that the notes were obscure and doubtful in meaning. We expect to show that the officers were endeavoring to read them. But they were of doubtful and strange meaning. In one of them we will show that the wording was something like this, so far as I can decipher it: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long, tall, black negro did it by his-self.'

"We want to show," continued Arnold, "that Lee spoke up and said, 'That's me, boss. That means night watchman.'

"Isn't it strange that a negro so ignorant and dull that Mr. Rosser had to ask him a question ten times over could in a flash interpret this illegible scrawl?"

Rosser supplemented Arnold's argument by remarking that he regarded Lee's alleged remarks as highly suspicious, and that he considered he had the right to question a witness with a view of showing that a person or persons other than the defendant had a part in the crime.

Judge Roan ruled with the deefnse, and the jury was returned. The judge declared:

"The attorneys for Frank are privileged to bring out evidence showing anxiety or fear on the part of the negro."

Lee Makes Denial.

Lee denied when questioned that he had said, "That's me, Boss; that means night watchman." He testified that he told the officers that someone was trying to put the crime on him.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers who visited the factory after Lee called the police station, testified before the Coroner's jury in regard to Lee's ready explanation of the notes.

Rosser ended his cross-examination of Lee at 10:50 a. m. Tuesday, after the negro had been on the grill two hours Monday afternoon and nearly as long Tuesday.

The efforts to discredit Lee's story began the moment Rosser got him on the stand. He sought first to show that it was a very peculiar circumstance that Lee went clear to the rear of the factory basement, where he found the girl's body, when all through the earlier part of the night he had gone only a short distance from the foot of the ladder in the front of the basement.

Calls Lee's Excuse Flimsy.

"Every time you went down into the basement you went only about 25 feet from the ladder to see if there was fire in the dust pan," said Rosser, repeating Lee's testimony, "and yet at this time, when you say you found the girl's body, you assert that it was necessary to go clear to the rear to ascertain the same fact?"

Lee replied that he had gone to the rear of the basement for another purpose and Rosser attempted to show that this was only a flimsy excuse.

By his line of questioning Rosser endeavored to ridicule the idea that Lee could have identified Mary Phagan as a white girl by the dim light of his dirty lantern when, as he testified, he got no nearer than five or six feet to the body, and when the officers with electric searchlights were not able to determine whether the girl was white or a negro because of the grime and cinders on her body, until they had pulled down her stocking.

Session Full of Clashes.

The session was full of spirited clashes between Rosser and Dorsey. It was a favorable forenoon for the defense, Rosser almost invariably being permitted to continue the line of questioning which he was pursuing.

Rosser, while he succeeded in showing up discrepancies in Lee's present story with that before the Coroner's jury, was unable to force the negro to any admissions incriminating in themselves.

Dorsey questioned Lee in re-direct examination and Rosser in re-cross-examination. Lee left the stand at 11:40 o'clock, after a total of four hours and forty minutes' grilling.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs followed Lee on the stand. He told the story of finding the body and identified the Phagan girl's clothes and the cord that was used to strangle her.

Frank, his face a mask, was brought into the courtroom just before the court was called to order by Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

After taking a cool survey of the courtroom, the factory superintendent conversed a moment with is counsel and then centered his attention on the night watchman. Frank took no notes of the negro's testimony, but he evidently was making a mental record of every word of it.

What he thought of the negro's statements could not be guessed from his features. Whether the negro was giving testimony which might be construed as favorable or as most damaging, there was not the shade of a change in the expression of the young factory superintendent.

He only took his eyes from the witness to speak a word to his wife or to answer an occasional question whispered to him by one of his counsel. He was brought to the courthouse from the Tower at 7:45 by Sheriff Mangum and Deputy Sheriff Miner. He was dressed in a blue mohair suit with a striped effect, and wore a fancy gray tie.

Eats Light Breakfast.

His breakfast was brought to him at the courthouse by a relative, and consisted only of two slices of toast and a bottle of milk.

"I am well pleased with the progress of the trial to this point, he said in his conversation with Essenbach. "Nothing has been developed which has not already been well known to the public and attorneys and which will be explained in the light of the defense's case.

"I am feeling well and confident. Nothing has taken place to disturb me in the least. I hope that the trial will move as rapidly toward its conclusion as the first day's session gave promise. I have nothing to conceal and nothing to fear."

Grilling of Lee Resumed.

The cross-examination of Lee was resumed as soon as court opened.

Q. How far were you from the body when you first saw it?—A. About ten feet.

Q. Could you see to either side?—A. No. I stood up, picked up lantern and went toward the dust pan.

Q. Why didn't you go to the pan earlier in night?—A. I just happened to take a notion to go this time.

Q. When you were in closet, which way did you look?—A. Toward the wall.

Q. What do you call the right?—A. This (indicating right hand).

Q. Well, the dust pan was on your right, wasn't it?—A. Not exactly.

Q. Where you were sitting, you had to walk quite a distance to see whether there was any fire in the dust pan, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Tell me exactly how far it was?—A. About as far as that man there. (About 25 feet.)

Q. You only went to the dustpan once that night?—A. Mr. Frank told me not to go near it with the lantern.

Shows How He Held Light.

Q. How close did you go to the body?—A. That wall there.

Q. How far is that?—A. About six feet.

Q. How did you hold the lantern to see it?—A. Like this. (Holding hand over head.)

Q. What did you see first?—A. The feet.

Q. How far was the body from the closet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it two feet, ten feet or twenty feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it fifty feet, forty feet or thirty feet?—A. Somewhere about thirty feet, maybe not that much.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. I looked to see whether it was a natural body.

Q. You didn't linger?

At this question Lee arose and pointed his finger at Rosser. "Just as soon as I saw what it was I went to tell you I lit a rag."

Saw It Was White Girl.

Q. You saw it was a white woman?—A. There were one or two white spots on the face and her hair was frizzled.

Q. How long did it take the police to find she was a white girl?—A. I don't know; they arrested me.

Q. What did they say?—A. One of them said this girl has been dead three or four days.

Q. When you came up did you go back down in the cellar?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you notice whether the door was open when you went back?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell the police it was a white girl or a white woman?—A. I think I told them it was a white woman.

Q. She was lying on her back, with her face up?—A. Yes, sir; she was lying on her side with her face up, with blood on her head.

Q. Which side was the blood on?—A. It was on the right side. It was dry.

Q. Are you sure it was the right side?—A. No, sir; her left side was turned up to me.

Grill Grows More Severe.

Q. You swear she was on her back?—A. Yes, sir; her face was turned up kind of to one side.

Q. When you went up to the office the first time, did Mr. Frank close his office door?—A. I don't know. I couldn't see his office.

Q. I mean the outside door?—A. It was open.

Mr. Rosser then read Lee's testimony about the time slip before the Coroner's jury.

Q. You helped him put the page in, didn't you, Newt? This is right, isn't it?—A. Read that again.

Mr. Rosser read it.

A. No, sir; you got me wrong. He didn't come out of his office.

Q. You said yesterday that Mr. Frank jumped back when he met Mr. Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Dorsey Objects to Methods.

Mr. Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's jury, which said nothing about Frank jumping back.

Lee—"Well, they got that wrong."

Q. That was a bad stenographer down there, wasn't he?

Solicitor Dorsey here objected to this method of questioning the witness. He declared the negro should first be questioned and then an effort to impeach him made.

To this Mr. Rosser replied: "Of course, this gentleman on account of his age is entitled to lecture me!"

"I am addressing his honor," retorted Dorsey.

"Are you through?" asked Rosser of Dorsey.

"I have stated my objection," said Dorsey.

"He misunderstood what I am trying to show," said Rosser.

Court Sustains Dorsey.

"This witness can't tell what his opinion is," said Judge Roan, for the first time speaking. "He can tell what he swore to before the Coroner's jury."

Following this ruling the cross-examination was resumed.

Rosser read from the stenographic report of the Coroner's inquest:

"Mr. Frank jumped when he met Mr. Gantt and I taken it this way."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper then asked that Mr. Rosser state what Coroner's inquest he was referring to.

Attorneys in Clash.

"I am always glad to accommodate these men whenever I can," said Rosser.

"You have got to accommodate me," retorted Hooper.

"No, I haven't. The man never was born whom I have got to accommodate."

Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Rosser must state what Coroner's jury he was referring to, as there were two, one in April and one in May.

Rosser resumed his questioning.

Q. I asked you if you were before the Coroner's jury at the police station?—A. Yes, sir.

State's Objection Overruled.

Q. Did you the first time say anything about Mr. Frank jumping back when he met Mr. Gantt?

Dorsey again objected, and was overruled.

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's first hearing, saying he was going to ask him if that was all he said. This testimony was to the effect that Frank looked as though he was frightened. It did not mention, however, that Frank jumped back when he met Gantt.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. No, sir; that wasn't all I said.

Negro Answers Warily.

Q. Newt, I ask you if you didn't leap right out of there and run and call the police when you saw that body?—A. Just as soon as I saw what it was.

Q. Didn't you say this before the Coroner's jury: "I thought some devilish boys had put something there to fool me. I got close enough to see it was a body and leaped right away?"—A. No, sir; I'll tell you what I said.

Mr. Rosser interrupted Lee.

Q. Mr. Frank told you if anything serious happened, to call the police, and if anything trivial, to call him?—A. Yes.

Q. When Frank told you to go off and have a good time, you lit right out, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that after two or three minutes you lit out?—A. Not exactly that way.

Says He Doesn't Recall.

Q. You said yesterday that when Frank put on the lock tape that Saturday it took twice as long as it did on the other times you saw him do it. When they asked you how long it took him to put it in before, did you not tell them you did not pay much attention to it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Why didn't you tell the Coroner it took twice as long the last time as it did before?—A. I did tell them it took longer.

Q. Who asked you?—A. He looked like a blind man.

Q. Then all this record here is wrong?—A. I can't help about those records.

Q. You never told it until yesterday?—A. Yes; I told the Coroner it took him longer.

Q. If you didn't pay attention to him the first time, how did you know it took longer the second time?—A. I held the lever for him.

Q. You couldn't say whether it took him a minute the first time?—A. Yes, it took over a minute.

Questioned About Notes.

Q. You could not say whether it took under a minute or over a minute?—A. No.

Q. Who did you live with?—A. No one.

Q. Who lived with you?—A. A woman. She just stayed there and cooked for me.

Q. You and her lived together?—A. No, she just cooked for me.

Q. Did you pay the rent for the last one?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the first one?—A. I just paid board.

Q. Were you down in the basement when the police found some notes?—A. They said something about a book.

Q. They read you something about the night watch doing it?

Dorsey here objected to anything anybody else said.

Attorneys in Wrangle.

Rosser replied that his object was to get to the truth and show what Newt Lee did at the time, indicating a ready interpretation of the notes.

Mr. Arnold then addressed the court.

He began an argument and Solicitor Dorsey insisted that the jury be withdrawn.

"Of course, after he has discussed the case, he wants the jury withdrawn at our statements," said Mr. Rosser.

Defense Is Sustained.

"I understood Mr. Rosser to say he would not introduce the contents, and I understand this ruling excludes the contents of one of the notes?" asked Dorsey.

"No, I didn't say we were not going to present the contents of the notes. I am going to introduce what I please," answered Rosser.

Judge Roan again sustained the defense and ordered the jury brought back. Attorney Rosser then resumed his cross-examination.

Q. When you were in the basement, didn't one of the policemen read a note which said something about a long, tall, black negro?

"I object," said Dorsey. "I understood his honor to rule that the attorneys for the defense could not go into the contents of the notes."

"Are we going on with this argument before the jury, after we just had them sent out?" asked Rosser.

"Let the question be put," said Judge Roan.

Lee Denies Saying "That's Me."

Q. When he said "the night witch," didn't you say "Boss, that's me?"—A. No, sir; I said, "Boss, it looks like they are trying to lay it on me."

Q. No, I want yes or no from this—"The tall, black, long negro?"

Here Dorsey interrupted with an objection.

"Now where did Lee swear that," he asked, "A section of the Code says that you can't question a man like that unless you first present some certain evidence of the statement having been made or written."

At this, Attorney Rosser sat down and Dorsey began questioning Lee on the redirect examination.

Q. You said something about somebody trying to put it off on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Jim Conley? A. I never saw him until that time last week.

Q. Have you talked to anybody about this?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk to this man (indicating Arnold)?—A. Yes, he was over to the jail after you were.

Lee Quizzed on Diagram.

Q. The first time Frank put that tape on the clock, did he say anything?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything the second time?—A. He made a remark about its taking longer.

Q. What was the reason he changed the tape?—A. It had been used.

Q. Was it as dark in the basement at night as it was in the daytime?—A. Mighty near.

Solicitor Dorsey started over the diagram drawn by Bert Green, Georgian staff artist, of the National Pencil Factory, and proceeded to ask Lee a question and pointed at the diagram.

"He's not asking about anything but the physical appearance of the building," replied Judge Roan.

The crowd gathered early in front of the courthouse Tuesday morning. By 9 o'clock both sides of South Pryor street near its junction with Hunter were filled with people drawn by curiosity and the hope that they might have the good fortune to get admission to the small courtroom.

Taking a lesson from the first day, many of Frank's relatives avoided the stares of the throng by entering through a side door.

Secrecy was preserved as to the State's plans concerning Jim Conley, and for a time there were rumors that the negro, whose affidavits have been the most sensational feature of the case, might not be called at all. His name was not on the witness list, but Solicitor Dorsey said the omission was an error.

It was said the sweeper might follow immediately after Newt Lee, but Mr. Dorsey refused to give any specific information as to his plans. At police headquarters no word had been received to prepare to bring Conley to court.

Old Marshal to Give Successor Pointers

Howard Thompson is expected to arrive in Atlanta from Gainesville today to confer with Walter Johnson regarding the transfer of the office of United States marshal, to which Mr. Thompson has been appointed. Two conferences have been held by them since Mr. Thompson's appointment was confirmed, and it is expected the formal transfer of the office will take place Friday.

While of different political faiths Messrs. Thompson and Johnson have been life-long friends, which adds a unique touch to the transfer of the office, which Mr. Johnson has held for sixteen years.

Space in Demand at Local Goods Exhibit

Space for the manufacturers' exhibit in the Chamber of Commerce building is being rapidly taken up. At a meeting of the Manufacturers' Exhibit Association Monday afternoon Bolling H. Jones, of the Atlanta Stove Works, asked that half of the top floor be reserved for the manufacturers of kitchenware and household furniture. This was granted.

The remaining space will be allotted to manufacturers in other lines and an effort made to close up all leases next week.

PEACE HOPE RESTS WITH CARRANZA

against which the American people have fought and won the progressive battles of our new democracy.

So says Escudero. Madero had the heart, but not the opportunity to put these reforms in order. He was hailed by crowding revolutions within a week of his inauguration, and was assassinated by Huerta before he could serve the people.

"Carranza," says Escudero, "has all the loyalty of Madero, but greater strength. He is not an idealist like Madero nor a dreamer. He is a strong practical man, intensely earnest and very strong, a man of enormous physical build and of tremendously impressive person and personality. He will not make the mistakes that Madero made through overtrustfulness or optimism. Eighty per cent of the real people of Mexico are for him, and if he is put on equal terms with Huerta in the matter of getting arms and munitions he will win beyond a doubt within sixty days."

Carranza's Policy.

I asked Escudero this vital question, "If Carranza should win and become dictator in Mexico, what guarantee would the American people and other peoples have that we would not have another revolution before December?"

Escudero said Carranza's plans are clear upon that point. He would disbands the army of Huerta, which has been the basis of previous revolutions. He would as rapidly as possible change the Huerta Congress and the Huerta Supreme Court, who have been the agencies of revolution. He would put into execution as dictator the reforms for which the people of México are waiting at the earliest possible moment.

And then, with the vindictive spirit of the Mexican mingled with the policy of the statesman, Escudero said with a gleam in his eye: "We would eradicate the Huertaists and their conspirators by banishment, confiscation and perhaps imprisonment!"

Carranza would not wait for the slow processes of legislative reforms, but as dictator would admit the people as far as possible to a chance at the lands of the Government upon easy terms and would thereby establish such a hold upon the sympathies of the people that no revolution could be established again.

This, in brief, is Escudero's plan, and as Escudero is Carranza, it is a forecast what Carranza means to do.

Burglars Make Two Attempts to Break Into Home of Juror

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

When Officers Shumate and Cochran, who answered the call, arrived five minutes later, the burglars were gone.

LEE'S QUAINT ANSWERS ROB LEO FRANK'S TRIAL OF ALL SIGNS OF RANCOR

By L. F. W OODRUFF.

A page was ripped from a story of Harris Dickson. "Old Reliable" was paraded in the life in as somber a setting as was ever conceived, and the temper of the audience that is following the fortunes of Leo Frank through his struggle for life and liberty was revealed.

Some sinister things have been said of the spirit of Atlanta in reference to the trial of the pencil factory superintendent as the slayer of Mary Phagan. It was whispered once that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that those who believe Frank guilty would take vengeance as their own.

And, on the other hand, it has been said in sotto voce that the purses of Frank's friends would be opened to the last penny to see that he receives a verdict of acquittal.

Laugh Gives Lie to Rumor.

But right at the start the whisperings were given the lie, just as happens to most whisperings. A jury was selected and sworn in record time, and the story of a people torn by factional feeling by the case was crushed.

People inflamed by a passion so deadly that they are willing to defy the law to obtain their vengeance do not laugh when the issue is being fought.

People who are willing to spend their last dollar to see a man freed do not giggle when a witness relates circumstances which, the opposition maintains, adds a strand to the cord of hemp which it is striving to weave about his neck.

Frank Getting Fair Trial.

Newt Lee, black, ignorant, cornfield ,pot-licker-fed darky, by the homeliness of his words proved beyond peradventure that Leo M. Frank is getting a fair and impartial trial as the law decrees, and that Atlanta is willing to abide by the verdict which the twelve men return when the historic case shall have passed to its final stage.

It took just such a character as Newt Lee to bring to light the true nature of the people who are listening to the trial, who are following the legal battle step by step, whose interest in the case is so intense that it has kept the slaying of Mary Phagan the big thing in the public mind for three long months.

Fortune favored both sides when the prosecution decided to place him on the stand among the first. Whether his story materially damaged Frank or his cross-examination materially aided the defense is of little moment. The reception of his testimony indicated to each side just what the public thought and enabled them to know that the case will be tried in the orderly manner which justice demands.

Newt Enjoys His Fame.

Let's have a look at Newt Lee. There's a lot to be learned from this homely negro. When his name was called and he entered the courtroom, he had a joyful realization of his own importance. His face showed he was again enjoying the thrilling pleasure of "comin' thru" or going on a "scuss-sion."

He is typical of the type that Judge Dickson so vividly depicts. His head is flat as a ballroom floor. His big frame is slightly bent, not from weakness, but from the natural laziness of his type.

Sympathy that has been spent on him for his months in jail, though admittedly innocent of any crime, has been spent in vain. Newt Lee has been having the time of his life.

"Ain't dat nigger had his picture took and put in de white folks' papers? Don't dem big lawyers pay him respecks? Ain't he jest sot dere in jail an' not have to wuk?"

That's the negro point of view and that's Newt Lee's. He has tasted all the popularity of a negro about to be hung and escaped the only drawback to the final ceremony, the actual hanging.

Sang-froid Never Shaken.

He enjoyed every minute of the experience.

He spoke in a dialect that Dockstader would pay thousands for and he spoke with a directness and an intelligence that showed that he had either been thoroughly rehearsed or that he was possessed of one of those quick, in-seeing mind, so rarely found among negroes of his type, but so typical of the class.

Lee is beyond doubt "a white man's nigger." He spread a feeling of kindliness over a courtroom where bitterness was supposed to prevail. Judge, jurors, spectators, all seemed in sympathy with him, and even Mr. Rosser did not prod him in the merciless manner that has made him one of the most famous, one of the most feared cross-examiners in the entire South.

Newt did not wish to let one sweet moment of his self-aggrandizement slip. Once during the testimony he was asked as to his faithfulness in performing his duties as night watchman.

"Light Jest Wuz Shinin'."

He "swelled visibly," as Sam Weller remarked, before he answered. "Folks say there never is been a nigger to punch that clock so prompt as me," and a stern objection from Mr. Rosser kept him from going on with his story of personal prowess, though his lips struggled to speak the forbidden words.

And his illustrations were apt. They were not strained. They fitted like a glove. He was asked to tell whether a light was burning dimly or brightly. Like a flash he replied:

"Has you ever seed a lightnin' bug? Has you ever seed one whut's jest been hit with a stick? Well, you knows how his light shines. Hit jest do shine. Well, dat was dat light. Hit just wuz shinin' and dat's all."

Racial horror of being alone in the presence of the dead was also displayed.

Lee was in a dramatic period of his story. He had just told of his grim discovery in the cellar of the pencil factory.

"What did you do when you saw the girl?" Solicitor Dorsey's question was spoken with rifle shot ring.

He "Went Right Back Up."

"I went right back up dat ladder," said Lee, as though he were repeating a confession of faith.

"I dunno how I got up dar, but I sho' wuz up dar. I sho' wuz," the negro replied fervently.

And on he went with his story, practically each reply being greeted by an outburst of laughter until a bailiff had to threaten to clear the courtroom.

He came down from the stand, smiling still, his glory gone, but realizing that for days he was sure to be a power on Decatur street, a person sought for socially, a man among men. And as he descended the audience smiled an applause as gracious as bowing prima donnar or stentorian tragedian ever received.

Mincey Adheres to Published Statement

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher, who says that Jim Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Company, confessed to him that he had killed a girl, declared Tuesday that he had conferred with attorneys for Leo Frank, and that he was ready to make his statement from the witness stand.

Mincey said his statement would be identical with the one recently published in The Georgian. He claims to have met Conley on the Saturday afternoon on which Mary Phagan was killed. He said that Conley was drunk and that Conley threatened to kill him, saying that he had already killed a girl that afternoon.

Mincey came to Atlanta from Ringgold Monday afternoon. He is accompanied by B. E. Neal, an attorney of Ringgold.

Tragedy, Ages Old, Lurks in Commonplace Court Setting

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

One of the most commonplace things in the world—crime—is riveting the attention of Atlanta and Georgia to-day.

Crime is almost as commonplace as death—and yet death, in a thousand ways, never is commonplace at all.

If I were a stranger in Atlanta and should walk into the courthouse where Leo Frank is being tried for the murder of Mary Phagan, doubtless I should be utterly astounded to discover what I had walked into.

That pale-faced, slight, boyish-looking party over there—the one sitting beside the massive frame of Luther Z. Rosser and the well-groomed person of Reuben Arnold—I should be shocked, I am sure, to learn that he stands charged with one of the blackest, most inhuman and most unspeakable crimes in all Georgia's somewhat long and varied catalogue of crime.

Yet that is the truth—Leo Frank is answering to the charge of the Grand Jury, and he has pleaded not guilty.

Crime and wrongdoing began, of course, when Mother Eve, through no motive other than curiosity, and without malice aforethought, either expressed or implied, bit a small and toothsome morsel from the first apple.

Cain performed the first murder not so very long afterward.

There were no newspapers in those days, but a well-authenticated story of those first infractions of the law have come down to us—and to-day crime runs riot throughout all the world!

Here in Atlanta, thousands of years after Cain committed the primary murder in history, Leo Frank is answering to the charge of killing Mary Phagan, some three months ago.

Frank Calm, Unagitated.

There sits the judge, and over yonder the jury. Pale of long confinement in jail, calm, unagitated, and even smiling, sits Leo Frank, the defendant.

Beside him are his devoted wife and his mother—his mother, who would as soon believe the stars had ceased to move in their orbits as to believe—even to suspect—that her boy was ever so remotely concerned in the death of Mary Phagan.

Over on the other side, however, sit the relatives of Mary Phagan—those who are not under the rule and debarred from the courtroom. They are grim and unsmiling—they are invoking the law's sternest displeasure upon whoever it was that took the life of their innocent little one!

Many and varied must be the emotions surging within the hearts and souls of these people, notwithstanding their outward poise—but I, who am theoretically a stranger in Atlanta's courtroom for the moment, still am wondering what it all can be about.

Gradually I realize a tenseness in the atmosphere, perhaps—and there may steal over me, as I grope mentally for something to fasten upon, a feeling that, after all, tragedy is in the air, and that its sinister shadow has fallen athwart this courtroom, the while I still recall that outside the sunshine is very bright, and is beaming upon the just and the unjust, impartially and alike.

One of the world's truly great physicians says "death is never uninteresting," and that no really great physician possibly can find it so.

He may become used to it, he may grow to view the mere physical fact of death itself as not a particularly astounding phenomenon, but never does he see in any one death the same sequenced things he has observed in others.

It is much the same way with crime, I think.

Murder is as old as the hills—as old as laughter, love, and the hate of hell—but it never loses its repugnant appeal—and so, all Atlanta and all Georgia to-day is watching the progress of the Frank trial, because Atlanta and Georgia are made up of human beings—that's all!

Few Women Present.

There are few women attending the trial of Frank. If there were thousands, however, one alone and above all other would stand forth and challenge the attention of the spectators. I mean, of course, Frank's wife.

There isn't anything the least bit "weepy" or downcast about her. She's a woman—the accused man's wife—but she plainly is a most extraordinary woman, nevertheless.

Whatever her thoughts, and whatever she expects of this trial, she gives no sign. She counsels freely with her husband's lawyers, but not frequently. She leans over and whispers something into Frank's ear now and then, but not often. She smiles upon him, and occasionally she runs her hand lightly along his shoulder, and maybe her arm is around his neck for the flitting fraction of a second, but if any of it is for effect or the least spectacular or theatrical, she is a consummate artist and surpassingly adroit.

Somehow she gave me the impression of the wife affectionate, but not demonstrative, of the wife unafraid but not obtrusive, of the wife deeply concerned, but too proud to let it be seen any more than it must be.

Perhaps there is a subtle motive in her quiet and repressed movements in the courtroom now and then—if so, I can but admire the complete perfectness of her methods and the dramatic excellence of her role as she enacts it.

Looking there at Leo Frank's wife and then at Leo Frank, one unconsciously finds himself asking himself this all-important question: What could have been Frank's motive when he killed Mary Phagan, if it be possible that he could have performed that monstrous deed?

Far and away the most frequent thing encountered in the unraveling of murder cases is the eternal triangle—the man, the wife, and the other woman!

That "other woman" may be an angel, she may be a devil; she may be a princess, she may be a pauper; she may be an innocent child, she may be a faded courtesan; she may be a willing third party, and she may be the most unwilling—but too often she is there, in some aspect, when murder has been done!

Could the motive behind the murder of Mary Phagan have been an unrighteous infatuation upon the part of Frank toward the dead girl—an unholy infatuation repelled to the extent of bringing about murder itself?

Was it that? And if it wasn't that, what was it?

Unless there was malicious motive and intent behind the slaying of Mary Phagan, there has been no murder done. The law says that malice is as essential to murder as oxygen is to the breath of life.

Frank? Of all the defendants I ever saw arraigned, Leo Frank, I think, looks the least the part of a murderer!

Not that that means anything whatever conclusively—but it is a thought that must obtrude itself upon all who view him there in the courthouse, battling in his own way for his life and liberty.

Frank never could be made to look the part of a hero, no more than he can be made to look the part of a villain—and yet he might be either, and deceive his looks no more than hundreds have done before his time and will do hereafter.

If someone should have told me that Frank is a bookworm, or a collector of postage stamps, or a person with a fad for pottering around in the garden at early morn, it never should have occurred to me to doubt it.

But Frank a murderer, a thing lost to every sense of decency and right, a traitor to his dearest and nearest, a—well, I should have asked explanations and enlightenment as to detail!

And yet, if Frank be the thing charged in that bill of indictment, he must be all of those sinister things combined.

Is he? Frankly, I have no fixed opinion, and I am of open mind.

The sweetest-tempered play-fellow otherwise I ever had when I was a boy had a marked passion to sneaking off by himself and robbing birds' nests, particularly when he young birds were in the nests!

One Touch of the Dramatic.

There has been so far in the trial of Leo Frank but one touch of the genuinely dramatic—properly designated melodramatic, perhaps—and that was when the clothing little Mary Phagan wore when murdered was exhibited to the jury.

This, of course, was one of the tricks of the trade, and it was indulged in entirely for the jury's benefit.

It is not unusual—the same thing happens in all murder trials, and I have wondered why it could happen save for the doubtful effect of it desired.

To be sure, the sweet and innocent cause of this trial—the pathetic victim prerequisite to it—is, of all the parties to it, save one, absent.

She may be there in spirit, comforting and sustaining her grief-stricken mother, but her voice is not heard, and never will or can be heard.

She is not in the courtroom, and the one other extreme of the tragedy—omitting the yet undetermined status of Frank—is over yonder in the Tower—Conley.

In the grewsome exhibition of Mary Phagan's clothing, just as it was removed from her dead body, there was a power of appeal hardly to be described in words. The youthful garments spoke eloquently, if inconclusively, of the deceased—the unoffending, methodical, carefree little working girl, so suddenly and so frightfully thrust into public notice, never to know what it all was about.

If within the person of Mary Phagan dwelt the awful propelling force of motive that prompted Frank or someone else to murder, her simple clothing there in the courtroom suggested wonderfully clear the pathos of it and the inhumanity.

And there must have been a motive! What was it about Mary Phagan that gave rise to it in the heart and mind of—Frank?

The things that have happened so far in the trial of Frank are relatively inconsequential, as concerns the verdict.

Battle of Wits.

Two conclusions stand out unmistakably—the trial is to be a battle of legal wits, and it is to rage most fiercely about the negro Jim Conley—the big, black and all-meaning factor yet held jealously in the background.

Mr. Dorsey, the Solicitor General, evidently feels the strain of his position. He is plainly nervous at times, and unmistakably irritable now and then. He snaps his points to the court, and sometimes borders almost upon the rough and querelous in his language.

Undoubtedly Mr. Rosser disconcerts and irritates the Solicitor continuously. At times Mr. Dorsey's objections have seemed more like complaints—and when Mr. Rosser turns his massive head around and stage-whispers additional words not to Dorsey's liking, he resents it in every sentence and gesture he offers by way of comment or reply.

Reuben Arnold has had little to say so far, but he is forever whispering something into Rosser's ear—Rosser frowning like a thundercloud the while he listens.

Mr. Rosser is fighting his way along cautiously and carefully. He seemed upon the point almost of browbeating Newt Lee more than once, as that darky's examination proceeded, but generally he quit just short of actual performance.

Lee, too, was unconsciously outspoken in his resentment of the Rosser treatment, and more than once scored well and powerful in reply to Mr. Rosser's questions—particularly when couching his replies in quaint and curious negro illustrations and phrases.

If at times Lee became more or less confused and contradictory, he proved in the main to be something of a Tartar under cross-examination, and while his testimony as a whole could not amount to much as an isolated proposition and is valuable only as one link in a long chain yet to be forged about Frank, it nevertheless went to the jury in pretty good shape, and will be hard to discount, whatever it may be worth.

Hooper Singularly Calm.

But if Dorsey is agitated and irritable, and if Rosser is imposing and pugnacious, and if Arnold is keyed to a high pitch and continuously prompting his associate counsel, the other big figure among the attorneys, Frank Hooper, is as calm as a May morning, smiling, dispassionate and altogether at his ease.

Hooper looks as if he had just stepped out of a cold-storage bandbox.

Handsome, as he certainly is, if not of particularly commanding presence, and well dressed, he moves about with all the unconscious grace and ease of a—panther?

Hardly that, and yet—Frank Hooper may loom larger than any attorney in this case before the final word is written in respect of it.

There is no doubt that the trial is to be long drawn out. Every inch is being disputed pro and con, and every possible point is being raised to keep the case strictly within its legal bounds.

The jury apparently is much above the average—it was plain enough all along that the defense was seeking a jury of high intelligence, and a city jury, moreover.

I think the jury trying Leo Frank may be expected to record the truth of the trial—it appears to be composed of level-headed, clean cut, sensible men, as it should be, if it is to give a fair play to all parties concerned.

The climax of the fight, of course, will be entirely within Jim Conley. The State will make every possible effort to sustain him, and the defense will make every possible effort to break him down.

Luther Rosser will exhaust his remarkable resourcefulness in this mighty effort, aided and abetted to the very limit by the subtle and incisive art of Reuben Arnold.

Frank Hooper will strive as he never before has striven to hold Conley together—and Hugh Dorsey will back him with all the experience of his career at the criminal bar.

A happy and reassuring circumstance is that over and above all these contending forces sits Judge Roan—unruffled, unafraid, of unblemished and unquestioned integrity, upright and just—to hold all the stormy elements eventually in order and within the rules of the law.

The real trial of Leo Frank hardly yet has begun!

Lee's Testimony Feature of First Day of Trial

Attorney Rosser began cross-examination of Newt Lee at the point he had reached when Judge Roan ordered the adjournment Monday night. Frank's leading counsel had not succeeded in his early questioning to shawe the negro to any great extent.

Lee, in fact, stuck with amusing steadfastness to every statement he had made previously and was inclined to believe that the stenographer at the Coroner's inquest had not been successful in getting all of his testimony.

That he had been quoted as saying that Frank on the afternoon of April 26 had told him to go away and have "some fun" instead of "a good time" was a serious and most vital error in his opinion.

"No, sah; I didn't say he told me to go away and have some fun. I said he told me to go away and have a good time!" declared Lee, vehemently, glaring at Attorney Rosser.

Lays Error to Typist.

"I dunno who done it, but I suppose it must have been the stenographer," replied Lee.

Rosser forced Lee to admit that when he came there at 4 o'clock to report to Frank the front door was unlocked and that anyone might have come in on the first floor and gone to the basement through the scuttle hole near the elevator without Frank's knowledge. The double doors leading to the second floor were locked at this time. Solicitor Dorsey had brought this fact out as significant. They were never locked before when he went there, Lee said.

Lee, under Rosser's cross-examination, also admitted that when he returned to the factory at 6 o'clock in the evening the stairway doors leading to the second floor were unlocked, as well as the outside doors, and that anyone might have come into the factory and gone all over the building without Frank knowing anything about it.

The negro also related to Rosser that Frank had told him J. M. Gantt, who came there at 6 o'clock Saturday night after his shoes, was a discharged employee and that he must not be permitted to enter the building.

Solicitor Dorsey, in questioning the negro earlier in the day, had emphasized Frank's appearance of fright when he came out of the factory and unexpectedly ran into Gantt, who was standing outside trying to persuade Lee to let him into the factory to get the shoes.

"Then, your first thought at that time was that Frank was afraid of Gantt on account of the difficulty they had had?" inquired Rosser.

"Yes sah," admitted the negro.

"How big a man is Gantt?" continued the attorney.

"I reckon he must be about seven feet tall," Lee replied.

Attorney Rosser brought out the peculiar circumstance that the back door of the factory basement was closed when Lee found the body of Mary Phagan, but that the officers declared the door was open when they came eight or ten minutes later. This cross-examination by Rosser took place:

Q. If you wanted to find whether the door at the rear was closed, you would have passed the body?—A. It was shut when I found the body.

Police Found Door Open.

Q. Did the police find it open?—A. They said they did.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the form of Mr. Rosser's questions and was sustained.

Q. The police got there in about eight minutes?—A. I don't know. I said all the time I didn't know how long it took them.

Q. You didn't get any closer to the basement door than the body was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you have seen out of the back door?—A. Yes, if it was open.

Q. Are you positive about the door being closed?—A. Yes. There was a light in the alley and I could have seen if the door had been open.

It was rumored Tuesday morning that Jim Conley would be called by Solicitor Dorsey during the day to tell his story of helping Frank dispose of the body. Conley was made ready for the witness stand Monday, but was not called.

Judge Roan announced that a regular recess hour from 12:30 until 2 o'clock would be set for the remainder of the trial.

Resume of First Day.

Taking up the events from the moment that Mary Phagan left her home in Bellwood Saturday noon, April 26, until her mutilated body was found in the National Pencil Factory early the next morning, the prosecution began weaving the net of evidence about Frank Monday, using Newt Lee, night watchman at the pencil factory, as the most damaging witness against the young factory superintendent.

By Mary Phagan's mother, Mrs. J. W. Coleman, and George W. Epps, who testified that he rode to town with Mary the day she was murdered, Solicitor Dorsey brought the little factory girl from her home to the point at the viaduct on Forsyth street where Epps said he left her to get his newspapers to sell.

That Frank came "bustin' out of his office" rubbing his hands nervously when Lee appeared at the factory at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon was Lee's first important statement. He asserted that Frank always before this had sat quietly in his office when he reported for duty.

Said Frank Sent Him Away.

He said that Frank had sent him away, although Lee said he would have preferred to stay in the factory and sleep.

Other circumstances which Solicitor Dorsey brought out with great stress were contained in Lee's testimony that Frank had tinkered a long time with the time clock Saturday night, twice as long as usual, and had appeared to be making some marks upon it; that Lee had not missed a punch during the night after Mary Phagan entered the factory; that Frank Sunday had told Lee that the time clock tape was "all right," and that Frank later had said there were three misses.

Lee continued his testimony against Frank by saying that later in the day, shortly after 6 o'clock, Frank burst out of the factory and appeared greatly frightened when he ran into J. M. Gantt, a discharged employee, who was asking Lee permission to go into the factory to get two pairs of shoes.

The negro said that Frank objected to Gantt going into the factory and told Gantt that he had seen the shoes swept up some time before. Gantt persisted in his request, Lee testified, and Frank, after hanging his head for some time, consented with evident reluctance. Lee said that Gantt found both pairs. Le also said that Frank never had telephoned him before in the evening as he did the night of April 26.

He declared that Frank asked nothing about Gantt when he called up.

Kills His Sister by Mistake for Burglar

ELBERTON, July 29.—Mack Guest shot and instantly killed his 17-year-old sister last night, mistaking her for a burglar. She was visiting from the country.

Guest told his sister to leave a window open when she retired. About 10:30 o'clock Miss Guest decided to close the window. Mrs. Guest awoke, telling her husband someone was breaking into his sister's room. Guest secured a shotgun and shot his sister in the back. No arrest has been made. Guest is prostrated.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return. It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

THIS STORY WON PRIZE OF $100.00

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.
375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,
Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him. "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runsbout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and leggins.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidgen among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. At the same instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can; when you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that Mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habite and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keeping no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases, it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" yells the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon fouls the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebeneser Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor."

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will require it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it, the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued.

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"I thought the lady looked peculiar.

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying, I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again.

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt so happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beutiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very, loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

WOMAN'S ILLS DISAPPEARED

Like Magic After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

NORTH BANGOR, N. Y.—"As I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with great benefit I feel it my duty to write and tell you about it. I was ailing from female weakness and had headache and backache nearly all the time. I was later every month than I should have been and so sick that I had to go to bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and these troubles have disappeared like magic. I have recommended the Compound to many women who have used it successfully."—Mrs. James J. Stacy, R. F. D. No. 3, North Bangor, N. Y.

Another Made Well

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done wonders for me. For years I suffered terribly with hemorrhages and had pains so intense that sometimes I would faint away. I had female weakness so bad that I had to doctor all the time and never found relief until I took your remedies to please my husband. I recommend your wonderful medicine to all sufferers as I think it is a blessing for all women."—Mrs. L. E. Wyckoff, 112 S. Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

There need be no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to remedy woman's diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical. Why don't you try it?

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says, "they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

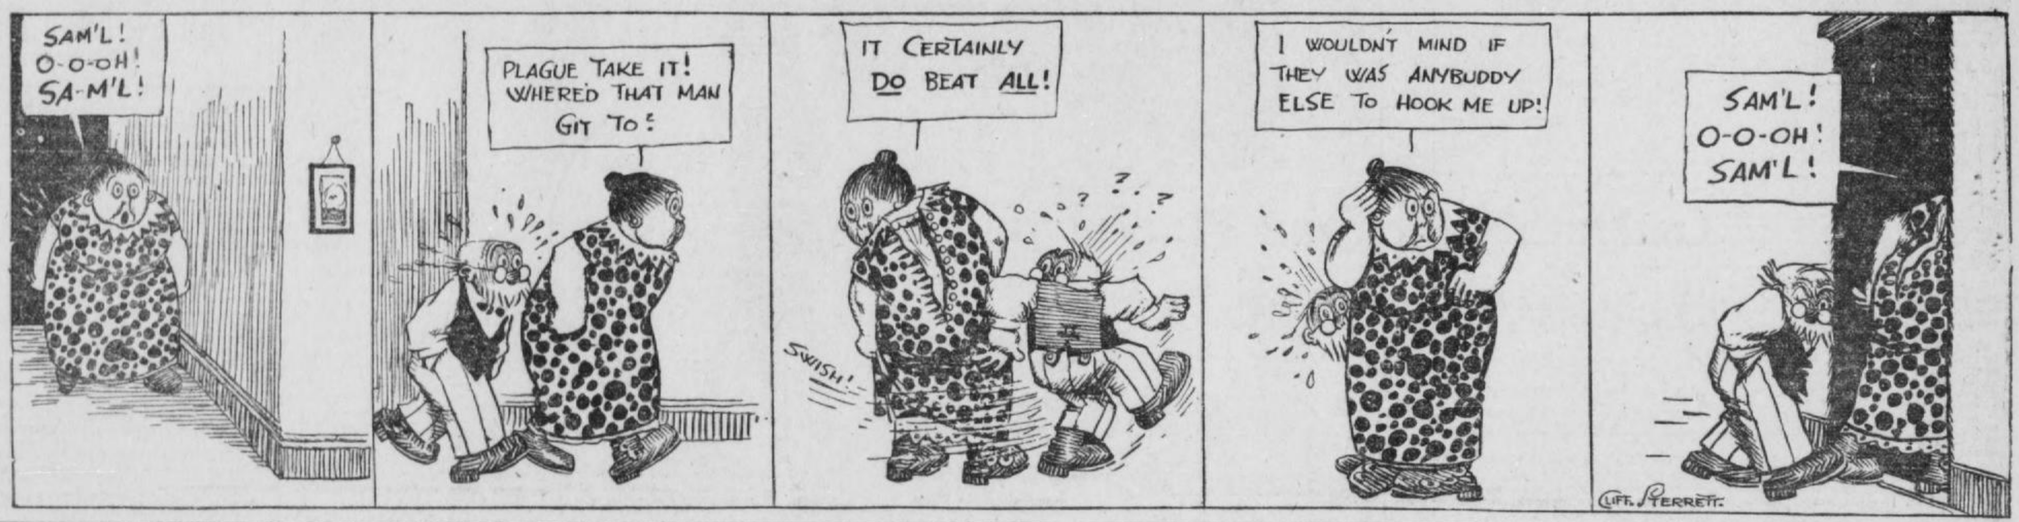
She Couldn't See Pa Anywhere Around



Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physican said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 200-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles an hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-Away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

LEACH CROSS AND BALDWIN MIX TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A small army of riding celebrities will be on hand at Vernon arena to-night to see Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin scheduled twenty-round bout. The affair appears to be one that the boxers themselves have long been wanting to see, as it is known that considerable bad blood exists between Leach and Matty.

Seat reservations have been made by Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast, Joe Rivers, Bud Anderson, Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard, "Bull" Young and Harry Trendall, the latter having come all the way from St. Louis to challenge the winner of to-night's go.

Cross has faced Matty twice, and each time came away with second money and a sore jaw. Matty holds a twenty-round decision over Willie Ritchie, the present champion. But this victory was earned before Ritchie was considered to be of championship caliber.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when the battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

Thirty-Minute Race On To-night

Glenn Says He'll Beat Luther

FOR 30 minutes to-night at the Motordrome five two-men teams will whirl around the wooden saucer at an 85-mile-an-hour clip. Barring accidents, this will be by far the most exciting event that has ever been staged here.

All ten of the riders spent the day tuning up their motors and each predicts a victory for their team. They also practiced relieving their partners. The man riding has to come off the track onto the flat space in front of the paddock and touch his partner on the shoulder before the latter can take up the sprinting.

The early arrivals to-night will grab the seats in front of the paddock as this will enable them to witness the "relieving."

Here is how the teams are made up: Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

* * *

BUT the 30-minute race is not the only event carded that is attracting attention. The Motordrome Sweepstakes ought to be a corker. There will be two qualifying heats. In the first the riders will be Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel and Lewis. In the second Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil and Glenn will start.

McNeil and Richards are bitter enemies once they get hooked up in a race. Richards holds a couple of decisions over the little Scotchman, but Jock's machine is O. K. now and he is confident that to-night he will lead Tex to the wire.

Harry Glenn and Luther are going to battle in a two-mile match race, two best heats out of three. Glenn beat Schwartz the other night, and says he will surely down Luther. But the latter's motor is going immense these days and he predicts the local boy will have to be satisfied with second place.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the program for to-night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (1 mile to qualify and 2-mile final). Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance, 2 miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over 20 consecutive minutes.)

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League, and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 29.—Bloomington (Three-I) owners have refused Sacramento's offer of $1,000 for Shortstop Bruce Hartford.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time than an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest sift down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARSATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Haban, the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

SPORTS—TUESDAY.

AMOS RUSIE IN HOSPITAL; INJURED BY IRON BAR

SEATTLE, WASH., July 29.—Amos Rusie, once famous pitcher of the New York Giants, is in a local hospital today suffering from an injury to his arm. Rusie is now a plumber. A heavy iron bar fell and struck him on the arm while at work here yesterday.

LEAGUE HEAD TO DECIDE PROTESTED BALL GAMES

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 29.—To straighten out a tangle over protested games which Waterloo won and Keokuk and Burlington protested, alleging the player limit had been violated, President Justice, of the Central Association, has gone to Waterloo.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

CLARKE WILL TRY TO STOP GULLS TODAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—The Gulls seemed to have such a liking for right-hand dealing that Manager Smith decided last night to flip from the other side of the deck, so he turned up George Clarke, who will work this afternoon. Dunn will catch the game out, provided he can control his conversation.

The jinx still pursues us. Whitey Alperman's operation for appendicitis yesterday was said to have been just in time, and, at that, Whitey had about as close a call as possible. We hear he is resting well to-day, and that the chances are in his favor. But, of course, he won't be able to play ball any more this season.

The Crackers held a little meeting yesterday and Billy Smith appointed Wally Smith to be field captain in Whitey's place. Wally also will play second base, and Frank Manush will go to third. Bill Bailey's injury leaves an outfield job vacant, and Smith is going to try out a recruit from Selma in the Cotton States League; a big chap named Holz, who came along with Pitcher Love.

Holz pegs right handed and hits from the port side of the platter. He is said to be a good batter and a fast fielder, and we are hoping he will help to brace our crippled line-up.

There isn't much to say about the game yesterday. The Gulls got to Thompson for a big lead, and then we got to Pug Cavet and made it all square, only to lose out, 6 to 5, in the ninth inning. We did manage to deliver a kick or two, which is encouraging. Maybe we will win a ball game by one run some day, the way we have been losing them all lately.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Leach Cross is to have his final test for a bout with Willie Ritchie when he takes on Matty Baldwin in a twenty-round battle at Los Angeles to-night. Promoter Tom McCarey has promised the winner a match with the champion and Tom's word is usually as good as gold.

* * *

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender.

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 3.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Colo., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time, to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 22. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to bet Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 23. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Crackers Slip Into Fourth Place
Don't Count G. Molesworth Out Yet

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE gleam penetrates the Stygian gloom of the situation.

The Crackers finally delivered a kick.

It may have been a dying kick. But a kick's a kick, for a' that.

With a shot-to-pieces line-up, with Alperman in the hospital minus an appendix, Bill Bailey carrying a couple of ribs in a sling, Wally Smith at second base, Manush at third and Chapman playing right field without his mitt, the disheveled Smithies collected themselves yesterday afternoon and landed a solid punch on the revered Pug Cavet.

The trouble was that the Gulls kicked Thompson first—and last.

And now the Town Boys are crouching on the rim of Lower Four, wondering how soon the porter will turn out the lights.

* * *

LITERARY TIP FROM WHITEY.

Believe me, boys, this is no nonsense:
When your tummy again and again kicks,
Don't fool with the Table of Contents—
Look it up in the blamed old Appendix!

* * *

Whitey's wise old noodle and timely bat are bound to be sadly missed in the final drive. Not that Wally Smith isn't a good, heady player and a man who, as field captain, will keep his mates well on their toes. Wally is all of that.

But the combination, of necessity, will be unsettled for a bit. Bill Bailey also is out of the game and a Cotton States rookie, Holz, will appear in right field this afternoon. Manush will play third and Wally Smith second.

On the other hand, the shakeup may shift the breaks, which certainly haven't been coming our way lately.

Anyway, we're in for it. And instead of blubbering over the latest handicap for the Crackers, let's just cheer up over the report that good old Whitey, in a tough sprint against the Old Boy with the Sickle, is pulling ahead to-day.

* * *

TURNING the burglar-finder on the little club that has supplanted the Town Boys at the dizzy elevation of third place, we discern without much difficulty that odd equine anomaly, the Dark Horse.

Gladys Molesworth is up, and how d. h. can run at all is by us. Gladys' managerial worries seem to sit lightly on his embonpoint.

The real point, however, is that the Barons have bludgeoned their way upward from seventh place since June 8. That achievement was largely at the expense of Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans and Memphis. The latter pair are thrown in merely as lagniappe, because any club that can trim the Billikens and the Gulls this year would find a pleasant relaxation playing the rest of the bunch.

* * *

THE Baronial collection is one that might be expected to speed up toward the shank of the season. No fewer than eleven of Molesworth's hands have worn the spangles of the big show at one time or another. Of these, Foxen, Mayer, Moley, McDonald and Knisely moved for very respectable periods in select company.

And with the advent of the real hotness in weather circles, and the time of year when the old strain begins to turn the edge of the younger generation's dash and daring, the old boys are rounding to.

We decline to count Gladys out yet.

* * *

SWITCHING to politics, it seems Colonel Robert Lee Hedges—sometimes known as the Sick Man of Baseball because he is unfortunate enough to be responsible for the St. Louis Browns—it seems Colonel Hedges is hedging.

The report persists that the Colonel is going to finance the Montgomery club of the Southern League. He is even accused of intending to buy the Billikens' franchise outright.

That is carrying things rather far.

On the whole, intimate diplomatic relations between Montgomery and the Browns mightn't be a bad idea at all.

If the Browns continue to evince a disposition to travel farther south than eighth place in the American League, Colonel Hedges might swap them for the Billikens.

* * *

NOW some statistician is trying to show that because New York bugs persist in packing the Polo Grounds to see the Giants clean up on the pop-eyed Cardinals, St. Louis is enabled by the cut in the "gate" to stick in the league with a club that is totally unable to give any pangs of joy to the wretched fans on the home lot.

It is said the Cardinals carried away $12,500 as their share of a recent series at the Polo Grounds.

McGraw should worry.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

* * *

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

* * *

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

* * *

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

* * *

The Pirates, outside of Carey, who cornered half of the hits, could do nothing with Seaton, and the Phillies scored another easy victory.

* * *

Earl Moore, released by the Phillies to St. Louis, and who refused to report to the Cardinals, is now the property of the Chicago Cubs, according to an announcement of Charles W. Murphy.

* * *

* * *

William Lathrop, the Notre Dame University pitcher, will be seen in the uniform of the White Sox, having been signed up by Comiskey.

ALPERMAN REPORTED ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—A report from the Inge Bondurant Sanitarium to-day, where Captain Alperman, of the Atlanta Club, lies ill from an operation for appendicitis, was to the effect that he spent a restful night and was on the road to recovery. The request of Manager Smith for his technical suspension will be granted by the League in order to let Holtz get in he game. Pitcher Love worked out yesterday and looked like a real pitcher.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29. Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $300 a month.

WHY NOT?

They are sending auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell.
They inject them in the hoose gow for a long and dreary spell.
Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark,
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

We have given up all hope that Ad Wolgast will come back. Jones has quit him, and Tom never gave up a meal ticket until the meals were all punched.

Ty Cobb is dissatisfied again, leading one to suspect that he aims to be the Bob LaFollette of baseball.

If Tyrus were an up-to-date young man he would augment his meager salary by busting into the chautauqua circuit.

CHAUTALKING.

"I am starving," said the athlete,
"On my miserable pay."
So he beat it from the ball yard
And chautalked the livelong day.

It is said that the dead do not return, and yet Bombardier Wells is mached with Gunner Moir.

We note that Jess Willard is going to fight in Los Angeles. That is, he will enter the ring in Los Angeles. Even his bitterest enemies never would accuse him of fighting.

The report that Pal Brown is going to Australia leads us to hope that he is a good swimmer.

It is rumored that since Ad Wolgast took up the job of managing himself he has had the worst manager in pugilism.

One can hardly blame those English tennis experts if they chuckle when they see their American brethren kicking in with a flock of alibis.

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games
Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant, and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fail to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outlucked us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

TIGERS BUY PITCHER.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 29.—Russell Betsill, of Enoree, S. C., a member of the pitching staff of the Asheville club, of the North Carolina League, was sold to-day to the Detroit club, of the American League. The price paid for the player has not been given out.

SLAIN ENGINEER CALLED VICTIM OF SLANDER

W. D. Porter Pleads Self-Defense for Killing Samuel Jackson in Georgia Road Roundhouse.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis, the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

Monday the tale came to the ears of the husband of the woman, and he asked Jackson about it. Jackson, it is said, denied the accusation, and suggested that both confront Partee and make him retract the statements.

Carried Coat Over Arm.

Jackson and the husband, according to the evidence secured by the detectives waited until Partee came in from his run, and then entered the roundhouse to ask him about the statements he is said to have made. Partee was standing in about the center of the roundhouse when Jackson entered. The latter had his coat thrown over his arm.

"Partee," said Jackson, "I——"

As Jackson spoke, according to the police, Pardee turned quickly, drew a revolver, and fired. The bullet struck Jackson in the neck and ranged upward, penetrating the brain. Jackson was hurried to Grady Hospital, where he died on the operating table fifteen minutes after the shot was fired. Partee surrendered to the police and is still locked up in police headquarters on a charge of murder. He probably will be given a preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Claims Self-Defense.

Partee declared, after his arrest, that he shot Jackson because he thought Jackson was going to shoot him. He admitted there had been bad blood between them for some time, but declined to give any cause for the trouble.

"Jackson has been gunning for me for some time," said Partee. "He has been making threats to kill me, and I have been told of these threats I have gone armed for the past week, and was determined to take no chances when he attacked me. When I alighted from my engine Monday afternoon and turned to walk into the roundhouse, I turned and saw Jackson walking toward me. He had his coat thrown over his arm, and I thought he had a revolver concealed in it. I called to him several times to halt, and when he refused to do so, I drew my gun and fired. I did it to save my own life."

No weapon was found on Jackson when his clothing was searched by the police.

T. N. Page Delays Arrival at Rome

Special Cable to The Georgian.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

Report Hoke Smith Backed Negro U. S. Official Is False

The Georgian Monday printed a press dispatch from Washington which stated that Senator Hoke Smith had called on President Wilson to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, a negro, to be Register of the Treasury.

Being in doubt as to the accuracy of the dispatch, The Georgian wired Senator Smith for an expression of his attitude on the negro's appointment. Tuesday morning Senator Smith wired as follows:

Washington, D. C., July 28.
The Georgian, Atlanta:
The report is utterly false. I told the President I would oppose the confirmation and endeavor to defeat the appointment.

CHAINS FOR WIFE DESERTERS URGED

Probation Officer Coogler Frames Bill Providing Penalty for Recreant Husbands.

Probation Officer Coogler is preparing a bill which he will present to the Legislature, providing for the punishment of the man who deserts his wife and children. The bill will be sent to a member of the Fulton County delegation with the request that it be introduced in the House.

The bill provides that a man refusing to support his wife or child shall first be brought before the probation officer, and if such office does not exist in the county, then to be taken before the Ordinary and placed on probation to support them. In the event of his failure to do this, after being placed on probation, he will be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a heavy fine or one year's sentence at hard labor on the chain-gang.

In the event of the payment of a fine by the defendant on a charge like this, the bill provides that the fine, either in whole or part, shall be turned over to the probation officer or Ordinary for the support of the deserted wife or child.

Wells, Supreme Lodge representatives of the Benevolent Order of Buffaloes, have come to Macon to straighten out the affairs of the order which were put in such tangled shape here last week by Dr. Bernard C. Goldberg, of Atlanta, an organizer, who, it is alleged, absconded after obtaining cash payments from scores of Macon citizens and for whom there is a warrant now outstanding.

Bak and Wells state they have apprehended Dr. Goldberg in Chicago, and that they will bring him back to Macon for prosecution.

WHITEWASH FOR SOULE, CHARGE OF SENATOR

The introduction in the Senate of the Foster-Hixon resolution, seeking to exonerate President Andrew M. Soule, of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, from charges made in the House, has precipitated a bitter fight in the Assembly.

Senator McGregor, of the Nineteenth, after reading the resolution, declared that the effort of his colleagues was an attempt to "whitewash" the whole thing without proper investigation, and that he proposed to fight its passage.

Charges Political Intrigue.

The resolution sets forth that President Soule is being made a victim of political intrigue, that he has rendered the State valuable service, which should be recognized.

Representative W. H. Connor, of Spalding, who introduced the resolution in the House calling for an investigation of the charges, holds a different view, however, and demands that the matter be thoroughly investigated and the defendant either declared guilty or not guilty.

In a statement Tuesday, Mr. Connor asks why Dr. Soule left for Canada immediately after his resolution was introduced in the House. He would be glad, he says, to see Dr Soule "come up like a man and explain the disposition of the $3,000 appropriated for several years for the manufacture of hog cholera serum."

Charges Sale of Serum.

He also asks what became of the $6,000 appropriated at the first time for the serum. In addition, he charges that Dr. Soule sells every bit of the serum he manufactures to-day for more than it costs him to manufacture it.

"When I was in Athens last time," said Mr. Connor, "I requested Dr. Soule to show me the poultry department. He referred me to Professor Jones, head of the department, who escorted me to the said department, contained not more than 25 fowls—representing an expenditure of $3,000 per year on that department. Does that sound reasonable?"

PONY RIVALS IN SCRAMBLE FOR FREE VOTES

Red Letter Ballots, the sort that yield 2,000 votes for $2, must be turned in by The Georgian and American pony contestants before Tuesday night. From indications close to the hour of closing, thousands upon thousands of votes will be earned in just this way by the boys and girls trying to win one of the beautiful Shetlands.

Thursday night the contest comes to a close. All the struggle and excitement will be over then, and nothing will remain but to count the votes and announce the winners.

Between now and Thursday night, though, the tale will be told. There is not a contestant who has his place "clinched"—not one who can not be beaten. Some of the contestants will dispute this. They believe themselves safe. They are not. Overconfidence is going to bring grief to many a youngster.

By way of diversion, however, there will be a parade of the 22 ponies Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, in which all the contestants are invited to participate. It will be a last glimpse of the ponies before they pass into the hands of new owners.

West Virginia Gets Portia Who Couldn't Practice in Georgia

Prevented by the law of Georgia from practicing in the courts here, Mrs. G. McIntyre-Weaver has gone to Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and hung out her shingle. In a letter to friends she writes that she is doing splendidly, and berates Georgia for being so slow as to refuse to allow women to practice law.

"It is time Georgia was sitting up and taking notice in this regard," she writes. "Other States are progressing, so why can't the old Empire State? I notice the woman lawyer bill is again before the State of Georgia, and I hope the present Legislature will be fair enough to pass it."

Griffin Pastor Called To Northern Church

GRIFFIN, July 29.—The Rev. Clayton E. Wheat has tendered his resignation as rector of St. George's Episcopal Church to accept a call from the Church of St. John the Evangelist at Hingham, Mass.

The Rev. Mr. Wheat has been in charge of St. George's Church two and a half years and is one of Griffin's ablest and most popular ministers. His resignation is regretted by people here of all denominations and would not be accepted by his Parish were it not for the fact that he goes to a larger field. His resignation is effective August 17.

Saloon Men Unite To Resist Closing

MACON, July 29.—The saloon men of Macon have united to resist the effort of the Law Enforcement League to put them out of business. The local association has raised a sum sufficient to insure ample and able legal representation.

MISSING HEIRESS WAS ON A VISIT, SAYS FATHER

Orlando Awtrey, of Acworth, Ga., whose daughter, Miss Lynette Awtrey, vanished while en route from New York to Atlanta, has issued a statement in which he declares that his daughter's disappearance from home was the result of a change in her plans by which she decided to visit friends in the West.

He declares that in all probability she failed to notify him of her change of plans because, having been away for several months, she didn't realize that any additional delay in reaching home would cause uneasiness. His statement follows:

"My daughter left home in May on a tour of Europe with a party of Georgians, conducted by Miss Olive Faw, a teacher of Marietta.

"Before leaving home she purchased a ticket for an extensive tour of Europe and was provided with funds for a much longer tour, if she desired to take it.

"On completing the first tour that the party was making, she consulted me about the second one, and decided to return home. Leaving the party in London, she sailed from Southampton and reached New York City with ample funds, probably about $200. She reached there last week.

"On reaching New York she wired me of her safe arrival, and, as she had plenty of funds, she seems to have changed her plans for coming directly home and to have gone on a trip into the West. She had, however, sent a portion of her baggage home, and when it reached Acworth without her, the family naturally began to feel uneasy and started an investigation as to her whereabouts.

"Having been away for several months, she probably didn't realize that a few days of additional delay would cause any special uneasiness.

"On reaching her destination she wired me and is now en route home. She has made several former visits to the West and has friends there."

Miss Awtrey went to Ogden, Utah, from which place she sent a telegram last Sunday asking for aid. She probably will arrive within a week.

There Is Something Compelling About the New Suits

Everyone Is Talking About Them

and we have never before at this season had so many early Fall Suits go out of the house—which is further proof of their appealing style.

"Good-Bye Fluffy Ruffles"

is the cry as women see themselves reflected in the tall mirrors and catch the true becomingness and real elegance in these smart suits and if they are going away or if staying at home the question of certain apparel needs is answered in a suit.

The materials are especially pleasing—all, or nearly all, are rough weaves, basket cloths, eponges, brocade effects; also many combined fabrics are used.

For instance:

An elegant Suit of rich coloring and material has a coat of matelasse in burgundy color with skirt of plaid storm serge in burgundy and blue. Long cutaway coat, draped skirt, button-trimmed. This suit is only $25.

The coats are much longer than last season, and are in cutaway style; some taper to a decided point in back.

Among the leading shades are: Browns—from light, leather tones through to very rich mahogany. Red tones are good, too—very dark, shading into wines and mulberry. Blues, of course, are in favor and many new shades are shown.

From $15 to $65

—the prices run; and there are suits for all tastes, all occasions, from the perfectly plain tailored model—to the very elegant, fur-trimmed, two-piece costume.

We want you to see the display here now—for whether you wish to buy a suit or not, at present, you will be interested in this show of coming fashions.

AGED PAIR FLEE IN TERROR OF POORHOUSE

Illinois Couple Reach Atlanta After Wandering Aimlessly About Country for a Month.

Fleeing from an Illinois poorhouse, William Smith and his wife, both more than 80 years old, arrived in Atlanta Monday afternoon after a month of aimless drifting about the country, with no money and no idea of their ultimate destination.

They had eaten nothing for nearly twelve hours, their clothes were mere rags, and they were so feeble they had to be assisted to seats in the station by Train Caller Charles Griffin and the matron, Mrs. J. W. Payne.

A month ago they had a little home in Brown County, Ill., they said, a house and an acre or two on which they raised enough to keep them alive. One day the old man hurt his foot. Unable to work, they appealed to their neighbors for aid. The county officials took up the matter and decided to send them to the poorhouse.

The old man and his wife, once fairly well-to-do, were terror-stricken at the thought of living on the bounty of the county. When the poorhouse wagon came and took their furniture and their meager belongings they pleaded to be allowed to spend one more night in their own home. That night they gathered what little of their clothing was left, collected their few pennies and fled.

Their only idea of their destination is that they want to "go somewhere South." They have no relatives, but say they have a friend in the "South" who owns a plantation.

The old people were taken in charge by Mrs. Payne and Mr. Griffin and made as comfortable as possible for the night. They were still at the Terminal Station at an early hour Tuesday morning, and it has not yet been determined what will be done with them. They say they are willing to go anywhere except to a poorhouse.

The visitors will be complimented with a barbecue at the Idle Hour Country Club.

Birthday Fete for 'Uncle Luke' Wood

The seventy-seventh anniversary of "Uncle Luke" Wood will be celebrated August 1 by a host of friends and relatives at his residence in Riverside. For many years his birthday has been celebrated at Grant Park, but it was decided to give a "home party" this year, and a basket picnic will be held there.

"Uncle Luke's" four daughters, all of whom are well known in Atlanta, will be in charge of the celebration this year. They are Mrs. E. L. Jett, Mrs. Lizzie Davis, Mrs. Brown Carroll and Mrs. E. L. Smith.

OBITUARY.

The funeral of William C. Allen, who died Saturday, will be held from the home, No. 19 Abbott street, at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, the Rev. W. O. Foster officiating. Interment at Greenwood.

Mrs. Mary C. Smith, sixty-two years old, died at her home, No. 60 Berean avenue, Monday night. She is survived by her husband, J. R. Smith, and three daughters, Mrs. Martha Ellison, Mrs. A. D. Ellison and Mrs. M. Ellenberg. Funeral announcement later.

Isaac Steinheimer, seventy-nine years old, died Monday night at his home, No. 779 West Peachtree street. He is survived by a wife, two sons and three daughters. Funeral announcement later.

The body of George W. Chappelle, twenty years old, No. 210 Plum street, is at the chapel of Barclay & Brandon waiting funeral arrangements. Mr. Chappelle is survived by his wife and a four-month-old infant, and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Chappelle.

Atlantic Liner Sets Long Course Record

NEW YORK, July 29.—The steamer Kronprinzessin Cecelle, which arrived to-day from Bremen and other ports, made a record run of five days, fourteen hours and twenty-four minutes over the long course. The vessel maintained an average speed of 23.40 knots. Her best day's run was 603 miles.

This is the fastest time and best average speed made by any westbound German steamer over this route. Clear weather prevailed throughout the voyage.

GIRL IN CONTEST PROVES SELF LIVE WIRE

Keeps Her Eyes Open and Gets the Business—Opportunity Open for All Contestants.

There's at least one girl worker in The Georgian's Want Ad Contest who is going to be a real business woman some day. She is a live wire.

She walked up Oak street in West End, planning a call on a friend. As she passed Ashby street she saw a negro woman with a telescope grip in one hand and a bundle in the other, leaving a house. Miss Contestant walked in, rang the bell, and the mistress of the house came to the door.

"I want to find you a new cook to take the place of the one just quit," said Miss Contestant.

The housewife looked puzzled.

"A Georgian Want Ad will do it," explained Miss Contestant. "The cook will be here tomorrow."

And the next morning the housewife had a choice of four would-be servants, brought by one little ad which cost 20 cents.

A Want Ad in The Sunday American or The Georgian will find almost any want, as Atlanta readers have learned by experience. Contestants in the race for an automobile, a piano, a trip to California and other prizes are learning how to suggest want ads, and almost every person they approach finds a need he hadn't thought of before. And the Want Ad way is the quickest way on earth to get results.

Friends of the contestants may send their want ads direct to the office if they like, requesting that their votes be cast for any contestant they desire to name. Somebody is going to win a handsome prize, and your friend might as well be the winner.

COTTON GOSSIP

Neil Bros., of London, in their latest circular maintain their estimate of 14,750,000 bales as the actual consumption of American cotton for the present season. This estimate was made public the latter part of October, 1912.

* * *

The market is extermely sensitive to all reports and did a lot of nervous flopping around.

* * *

The change is the attitude of the Exchange Place house yesterday did not seem to attract outside buying of consequence, probably because crop conditions as a whole are considered excellent.

* * *

An increased trade demand for contracts is reported on a scale down.

* * *

Further rains in the Western section would undoubtedly bring out heavy sales from Wall Street and the South. It seems purely a weather market now and will be influenced accordingly.

* * *

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crops in Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas:

"Tennessee—Prospects for cotton are better than for many years. The plant is strong and well fruited, with a good stand and free from insects. Fields are clean and well cultivated. A few localities are needing rain, but as a rule precipitation has been ample. Percentage condition is considerably higher than a month ago, when it was 82.7. The sason is about normal, though some correspondents report it earlier than usual.

"Louisiana—Owing to drouth and the almost universal presence of the boll weevil, percentage condition appears to have lost a few points from last month, when it was 80.6, but the prospects are better than a year ago, when condition was 74.7. Otherwise, prospects for a large crop are excellent and the outturn repends largely upon the success of the fight against the boll weevil. The plant is strong and healthy, with a fair stand and good fruitage.

"Arkansas—Cotton has maintained its rather high percentage condition of a month ago, when it was 85.4 and 77.7 a year ago. The plant is of good size, with fair stands and fruiting rather heavily. Cultivation and condition of the fields are unusually fine and a number of correspondents look for the biggest crop in years. The only drawback has been the hot dry weather, which has checked growth and fruiting. Damage from boll weevil is very slight and the crop is very free from other insect pests."

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma, clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Haywood & Clark: The weather map shows fair over Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas shows rising temperatures. No rain, except .72 at Amarillo, cloudy over Central and Eastern States to light showers in Alabama, Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina. Map favorable owing to less rain in the Central and Eastern States, but unfavorable owing to absence of rain in the lower half of Texas. Indications point to generally fair weather over the Western States, except possibly cloudy in Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma; part cloudy to fair in the Central and Eastern States, possibly faw scattered showers there.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market had digested reports showing continued dry weather in Central Texas, which produces the bulk of the crop of the Lone Star State. It also had to discount the market effect of probable higher temperatures in that section. Hence the steady tone ond higher range in values. The talent is fully aware of the fact that rain relief did not reach North and West Texas in time to figure in the data gathered on July 25 for the government crop condition report, which will be promulgated on August 1. It is also convinced that the official instructions to government agents to watch out for weevil damage will result in some Bureau utterances that will aid the bulls rather than the bears.

"Under the circumstances the rings were inclined to think the decline had gone far enough for the present, and that a moderate upward reaction was in order. Meanwhile, optimistic opinions as to the crop promise reach the rings in numbers every day. On the other hand, Texas is not offering new crop cotton in anything like the volume usual at this time of year, and exporters are beginning to believe that Texas contribution of new cotton during August will be comparatively small, probably very much smaller than that of last year, according to one of them. In normal seasons this is the time when consumers and importers in America sell specific grades and weights in volume for delivery in October, December, January and March. Such business, of course, generally trading in contracts, with the speculator supplying the difference between the long and the short hedges required by the trade."

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 3 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say: "The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The oats crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among realiers generally."

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, July 29.—Corn was the leader in activity, as well as strength, at the opening of the grain market today. The continued absence of rain in the corn belt and the additional claims of further and marked deterioration were the leading bullish influences, which drove many shorts to cover and developed an investment demand.

It was said that the losses in the corn belt were pronounced in many sections.

Wheat was lower on increased offerings and a general bearish condition.

Oats were higher on poor threshing returns.

Provisions were a shade higher.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends extirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and lookd lower.

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—An irregular tone was shown in the early trading on the Stock Exchange, there being complete absence of vigor which characterized the dealings for the two preceding weeks. In some quarters it was thought that enough long stock was sold to make the market again susceptible to their influence.

Union Pacific yielded ½ and losses of around ½ point were also sustained in Amalgamated, American Can and Canadian Pacific. Steel rose ¼, but later reacted the same amount. Americans were well above parity in London, where the trading was of an irregular character.

The curb was steady.

The market continued irregular with considerable losses and small trading except the buying at the start from London. Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Steel and Chesapeake and Ohio were the most active although they recorded losses. Reading sold ex-dividend of 2 per cent at 160⅛, a decline of ⅜. Missouri Pacific and Steel common were both off ⅝. Union Pacific lost ⅛ at 149⅛. Northern Pacific and Lehigh Valley both declined ¾. Southern Pacific was off ⅛ to 93. The tone continued weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

Highest Government Officials
Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime
President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

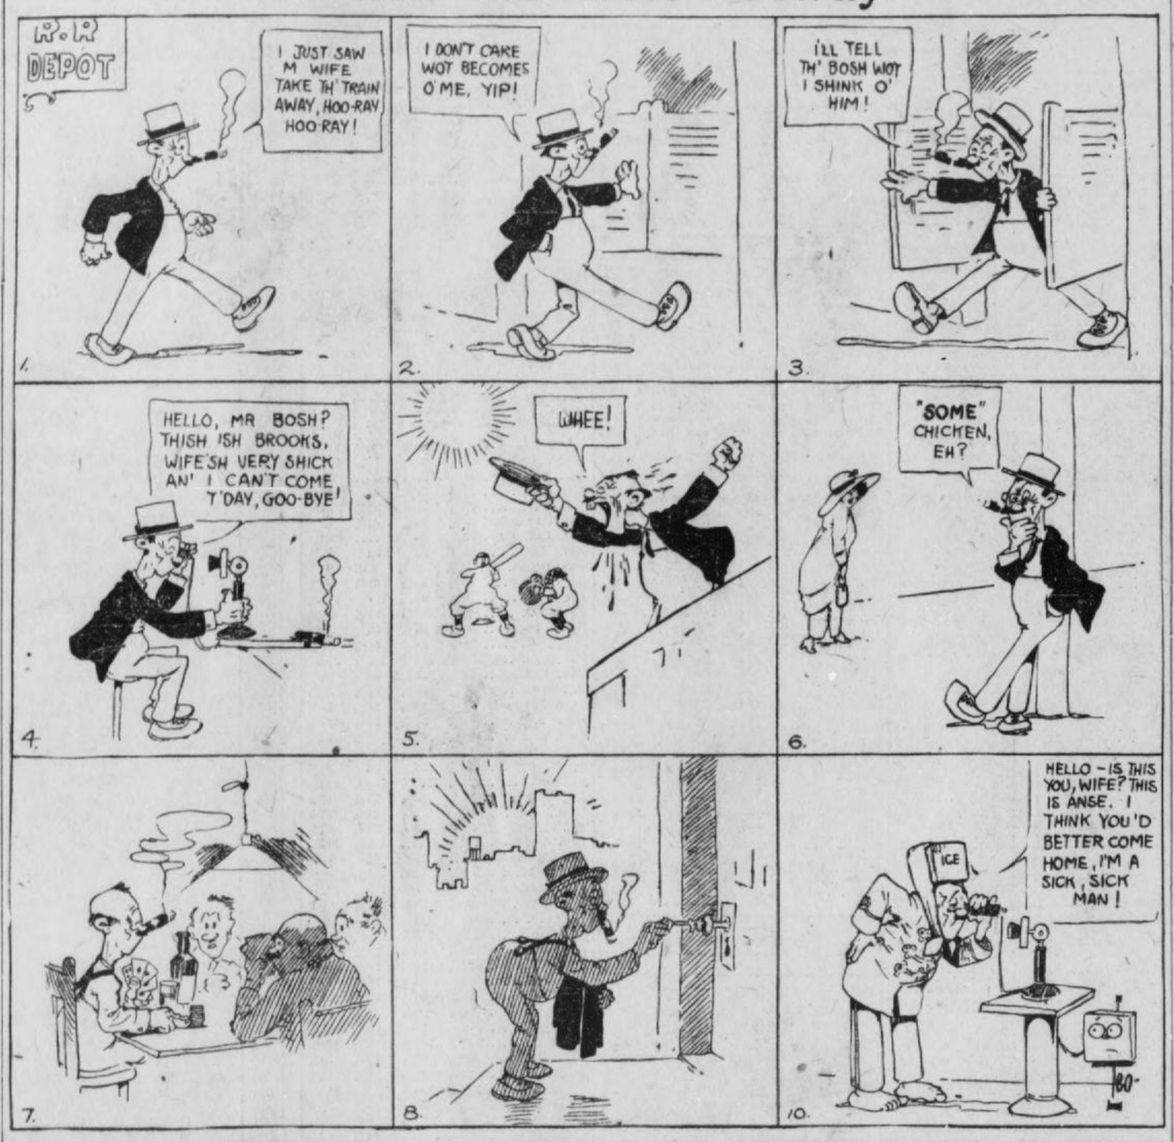
It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

When the Wife's Away



Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate
It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information as his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindness and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

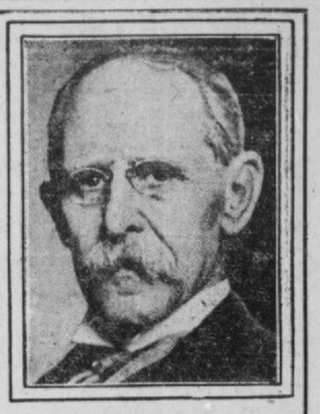
It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, known to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, which has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

The Song of Joy and Pain

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

OH, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them only enough to pay for the transaction."

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child." "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

Ex-Georgian, Held As Kidnaper, Wins First Tilt for Child

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A. T. Martin, a real estate dealer, formerly of Fulton County, Georgia, won the first round in his fight against his divorced wife, Lillie, for the custody of their child, Sarah, when Judge Wilbur allowed him to retain the custody of the child pending the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus.

The writ alleges that Martin kidnaped the child soon after a divorce decree was granted Mrs. Martin in Fulton County, Georgia, in 1911. The court gave the child to the mother.

According to McLoughlin, Martin alleges his former wife is unfit to care for the girl.

The woman died on the way to the hospital. Naff died two hours later at an infirmary.

Naff was living with his parents, while his former wife resided next door with friends.

CREMATORY MUST STAND RIGID TEST

Penalty Clause To Be Enforced if Plant Is Not in Operation by August 15.

"If the crematory is not completed and in operation by August 15, as called for in the contract, the penalty of $25 per day will be paid by the Destructor Company," said Councilman Claude Ashley, chairman of the Committee on Sanitation.

"Tests under the supervision of a competent engineer will be made, and I will devote all the time I can to the tests, so if the plant is accepted by the committee it will do what the contract calls for.

"I have my doubts as to the ability to burn garbage composed of one pound of combustible material to 1.95 water, but the company claims this can be done. However, it will hardly be necessary to burn garbage in such proportions.

"Another thing is the fact that there is only one generator for the entire plant, and should this generator become disabled from any cause, the whole plant will be compelled to shut down. There should be another generator in place in case of accident."

That the test will be severe and complete is certain, for Councilman Ashley will personally supervise the tests, having a competent man there in his place during his absence.

BITTER FIGHT OVER DEATH NOTES

NASHVILLE, July 29.—Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, who was caught in a raid on a house in the restricted district last Thursday night, crushed and deeply mortified over the affair, has been joined by a faithful wife in a statement to the public, and in breaking the silence which he has steadfastly maintained admits that he was in a stupor from drink at the time of the arrest. He offers no apology for his transgression, but makes a public pledge that such an occurrence shall not be repeated. The statements follow:

I am leaving for home to-night with Mrs. Patterson, who has been with me for two days, and before going I wish to express the deepest appreciation of us both to the friends and those who were not my friends in the past for their kind and generous sympathy.

For my own part in this unfortunate affair I have no excuse to offer and have borne the condemnation of my own conscience.

My mission in Nashville was not political, as has been erroneously assumed, but purely legal, and while waiting the return of Mr. Nall, of Nashville, from Red Boiling Springs, who had in his possession certain papers which I was to examine, I began to drink, and continued until all sense of responsibility was gone.

However gross my delinquency, I want the world to know that it is my last offense, and the weakness will never be repeated which brought upon me and mine this deep humiliation and gave to my enemies an opportunity for revenge.

MALCOLM R. PATTERSON.

My heart and my sympathies are all with my husband, and I love him with all the strength of my soul. He has been shamefully, cruelly treated, and I stand with him in this hour of trouble.

MRS. M. R. PATTERSON.

Bitter Fight Certain Over Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A bitter fight on the question of prohibiting interlocking directorates in all banks under the proposed Federal reserve system, provided for by the Glass currency bill, is anticipated in the Democratic caucus of the House to be called August 11.

President Wilson is opposed to this proposal, although the Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee have accepted such a proposal by a vote of 6 to 5.

UNDERWOOD DENOUNCES MULHALL

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

Underwood was angered because Mulhall had written in his letters that he had seen Underwood and obtained information from him about the make-up of the committees of the House.

Underwood declared that Mulhall was giving false information to his employers. This testimony that Underwood objected to was developed at the session of the committee yesterday.

While Underwood was making his statement to the lobby committee, Colonel Mulhall denounced him for making accusations against him (Mulhall) and said he would call on the country to decide "which is the cleaner of us."

Moore's Aide Heads U. S. Weather Bureau

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Professor Charles F. Marvin, chief of the instrument division of the Weather Bureau, to-day was selected by President Wilson to be chief of the Weather Bureau.

He succeeds Professor Willis L. Moore, who recently was dismissed.

Professor Marvin is a native of Columbus, Ohio, but is one of the oldest employees of the Weather Bureau. He has been connected with the instrument division for 25 years. He is considered by members of the department the most expert of scientific observers in the bureau.

Secretary of Agriculture Houston said his appointment was entirely on merit.

LONDON, July 29.—Charged with making a demonstration in front of Holloway jail, where Sylvia Pankhurst, daughter of the militant leader, was taken yesterday, two women suffragettes were to-day sentenced to two months' imprisonment and a man sympathizer to four months in jail.

The demonstrators marched from the East End to the jail, followed by a riotous crowd. Violent speeches were made, blank shots fired from pistols and windows smashed. The mounted police had a hard time in dispersing the gathering.

Dr. Frank Bird, whose automobile ran down C. H. Phillips Monday afternoon in Lee street near Murphy avenue, was arraigned before Recorder Nash Broyles Tuesday morning charged with reckless driving. He pleaded guilty and was fined $25.75.

Dr. Bird said his car was a new one, that the steering gear failed to perform its proper function and also a woman was driving the car at the time of the accident.

"That being the case," said the Recorder, "I advise you to at once dispose of the machine or not to venture out upon the public highway and endanger the life and limb of the public until the machine is put in good repair."

Mrs. Rumsey put the gems in a bureau drawer in her bedroom Saturday night. Sunday night she opened the drawer to don some of the jewels. It was then she discovered they were missing.

FRANK LAWYERS FAIL TO DRAW CRIMINATING REPLIES FROM NEGRO

Here are Tuesday's important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory, Saturday, April 26.

Newt Lee, negro night watchman at the pencil factory, leaves the stand after four hours and forty minutes of examination and cross-examination with the essential points of his story unshaken.

Efforts to discredit the negro's story result only in showing several discrepancies in the story he told before the Coroner's jury and his testimony on the stand at the trial.

All attempts to confuse Lee by telling him that the stenographer's report of the inquest has him making slightly different statements met invariably with his declaration that "they didn't get it right down there."

L. S. Dobbs, police sergeant, testifies to the finding of the body of the Phagan girl and says that Lee had a ready interpretation of the two notes when they were found by the dead body.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the National Pencil Factory, was harassed and assailed by counsel for Leo Frank Tuesday in a vain effort to win from him admissions aiding the theory that he was otherwise involved in the crime than as the man who found the body. Lee was on the stand from 9 o'clock to 11:40 a. m.

However, through Lee and Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers called to the factory the morning of Sunday, April 27, the attorneys for Frank laid the groundwork for the elaboration of their theory that Jim Conley was the murderer of Mary Phagan and that Lee assisted in writing the notes that were found by her body.

Points in Dobbs' Story.

That Lee, ignorant and illiterate, was able to decipher and explain in a flash the mysterious notes over which the officers had puzzled for several minutes.

That Lee spoke up and said, referring to the words "night witch" in one of the notes: "That's me, boss; that means the night watchman.

That the condition of Mary Phagan's begrimed and bruised face gave the indication that the girl had been dragged along the dirt floor of the factory basement, although Jim Conley, in his story of his part in the crime, declared that he had carried the body to the trash heap in the rear of the basement.

That Dobbs, with the aid of an electric flashlight, was unable to tell whether the slain girl was white or colored until he had pulled down her stocking, although Lee had testified to being able to tell that the girl was white by the dim rays from his smoky lantern while he was standing at a distance or five or six feet.

Lee's Story at Variance.

That Dobbs at the Coroner's inquest testified that he had had a Mr. Williams lie down in the place where Mary Phagan's body was found and, taking the position Lee said he was in when he first saw the body, discovered that, as a matter of fact, the body could hardly be seen from this point unless one was looking especially for it.

That the time he found the body was the first time he had gone farther than 25 feet from the ladder in the front of the basement that night.

That he knew it was a white woman, although he did not approach nearer the body than five or six feet, and had no light except the dirty lantern.

That he recalled that the officers, with a flashlight, were unable to identify it as white or colored for some time.

That he did not say, "That's me, boss," referring to one of the notes, but something to the effect that "They are trying to put this on me."

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, revealed the hand of the defense for the first time when he began a merciless cross-examination of the negro which was intended utterly to discredit Lee's testimony and show that he knew much more about the crime than he ever had told in his two appearances before the Coroner's jury and in his sweating at the police station.

Rosser's inquisitorial tactics brought remonstrance after remonstrance from Solicitor Dorsey, but was allowed to continue on a ruling from Judge Roan.

Rosser read extracts from Lee's testimony at the Coroner's inquests and pointed out discrepancies and omissions. When these were called to the negro's attention, he declared emphatically that the stenographer had made a mistake.

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was concerned in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

Jurors Sent From Room.

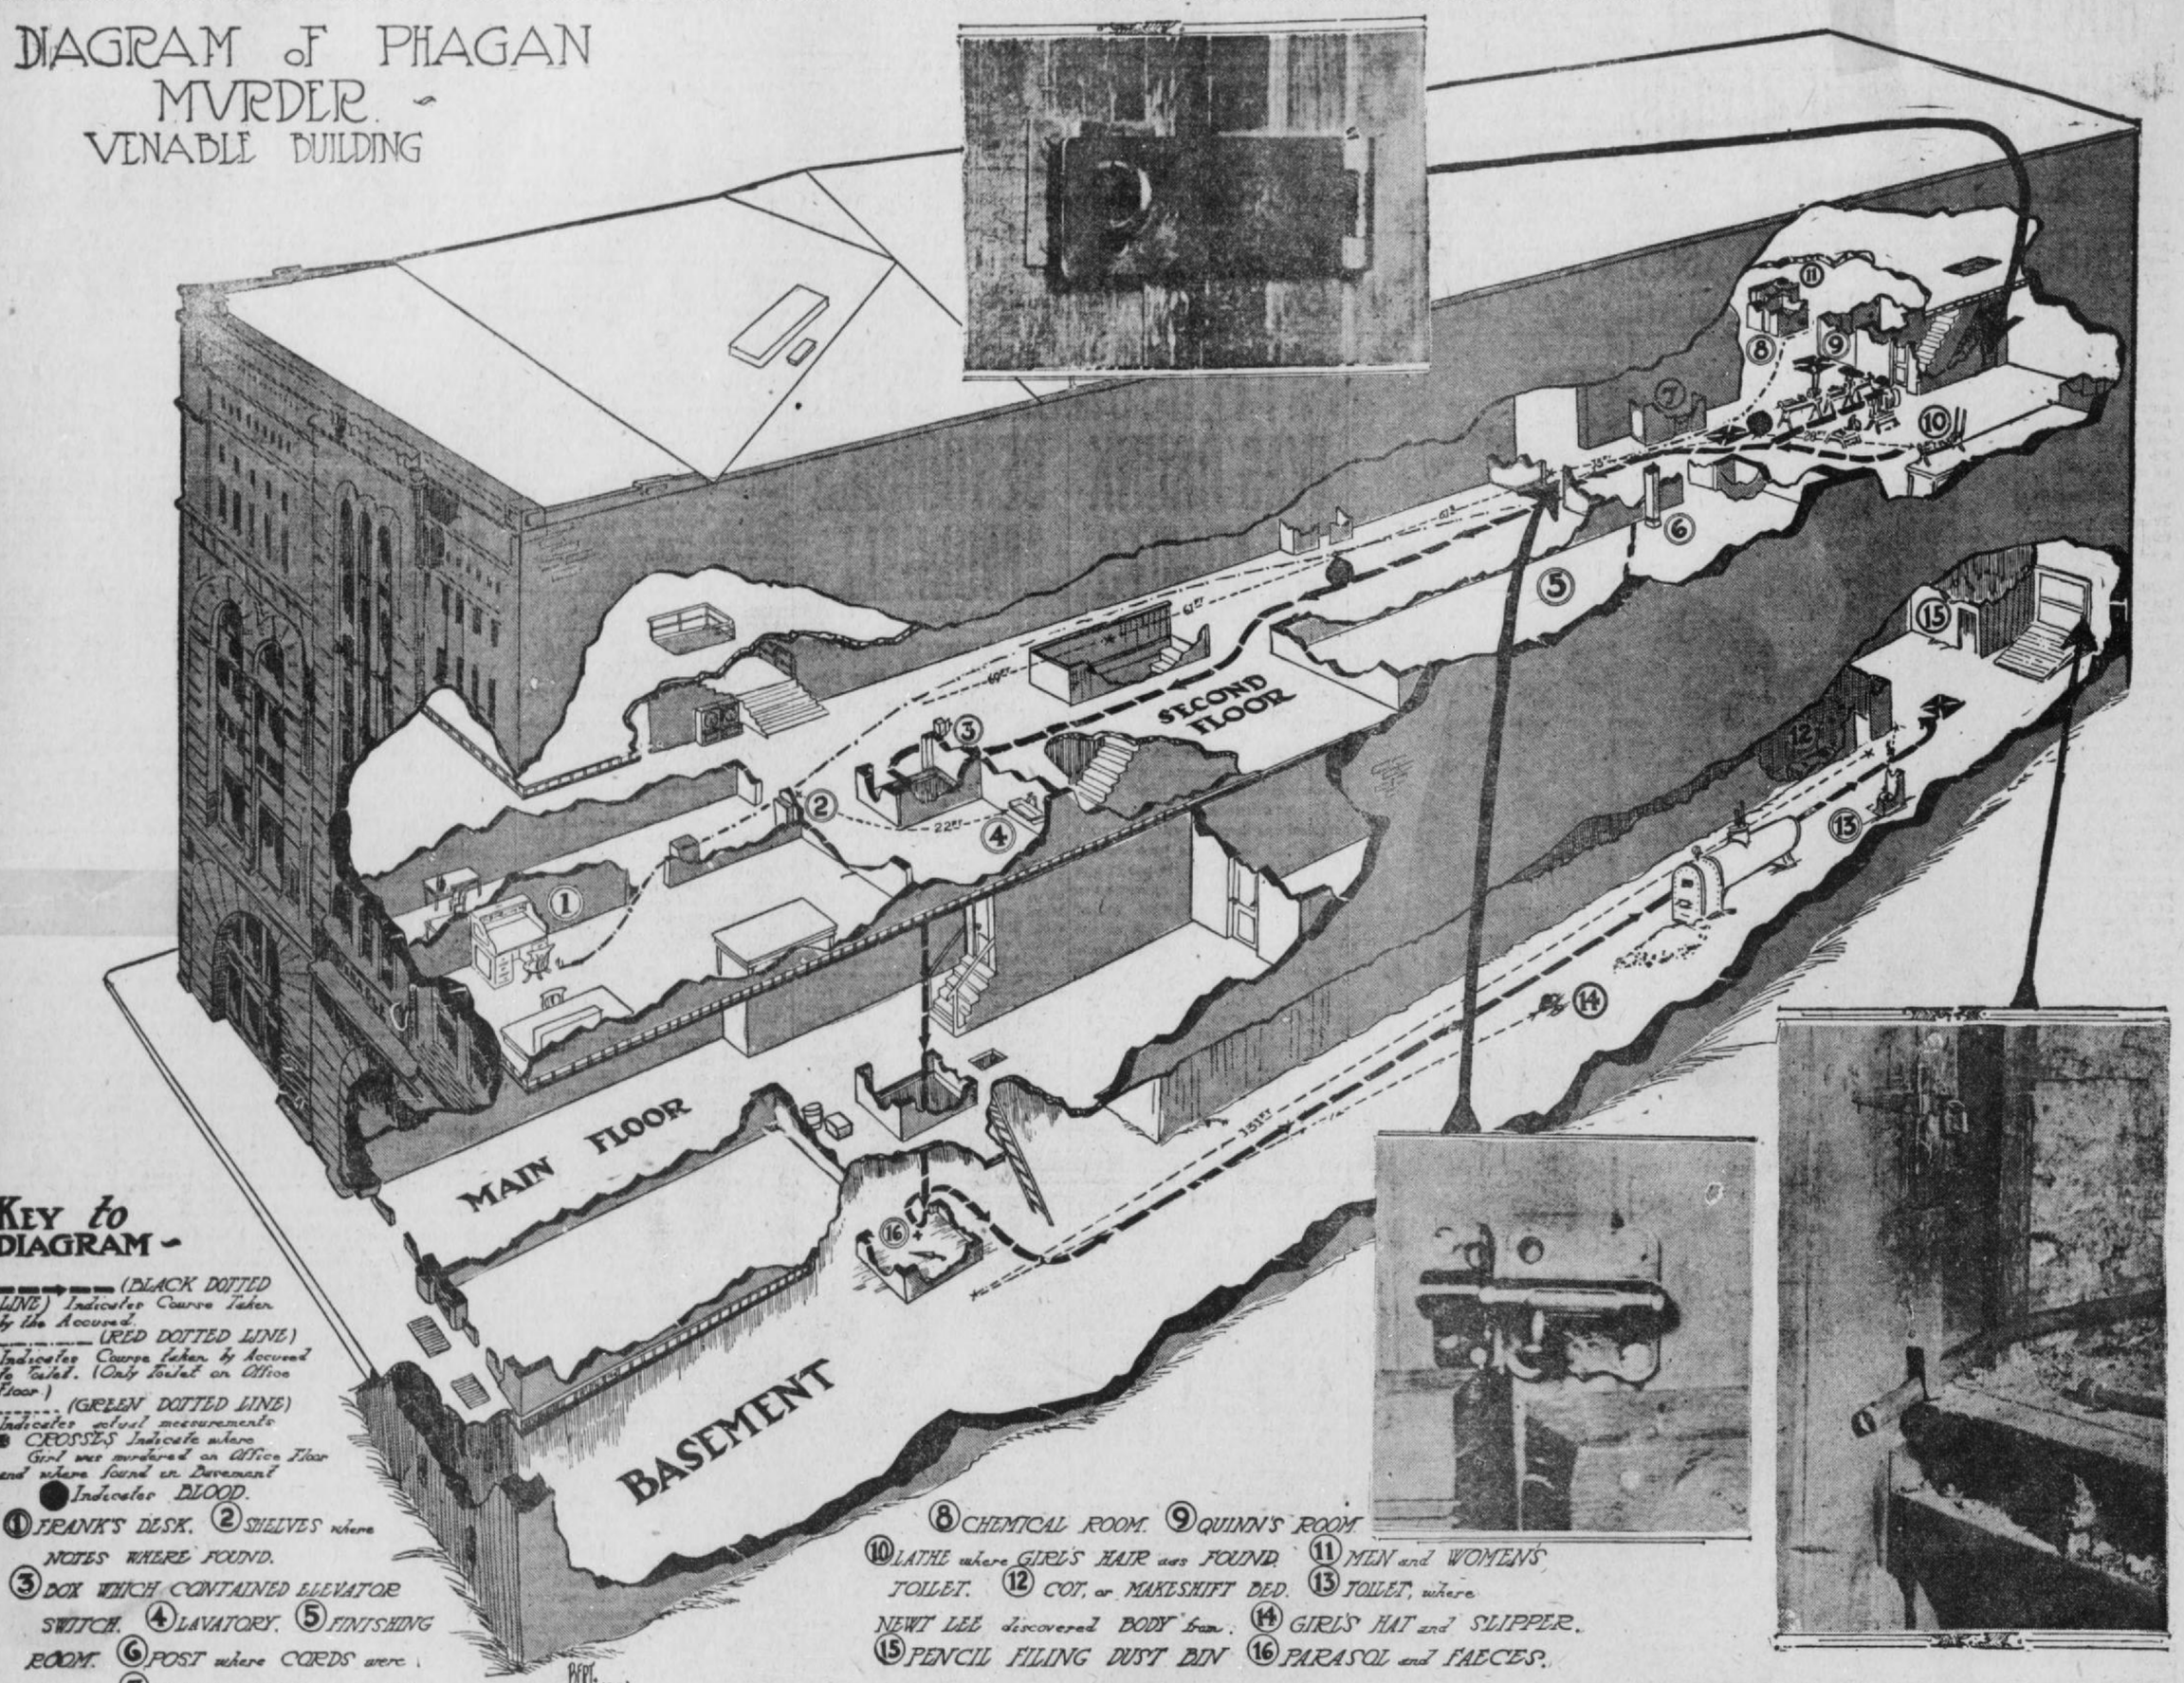
The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's, and the jurors were excused while

One Crowd as Bad As the Other, Says Lee of His Quizzers

Newt Lee, after being grilled by attorneys for more than four hours, said he was not tired, and all he wanted was a chew of tobacco. He was asked who he would rather have question him—the lawyers of the detectives.

"Mr. Rosser certainly is terrible," he declared, "but I would just as soon have one crowd as the other."

DIAGRAM USED BY DORSEY TO ILLUSTRATE STATE'S THEORY



DEFENSE FAILS TO OBTAIN CRIMINATIONS FROM LEE

Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall black negro did it by his-self.'

Cites Lee's Explanation.

"In an instant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me.'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions [illegible] and again interpreted thi mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note [illegible] there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

"Suspicion on Lee," Says Rosser.

"We expect to show that the notes were obscure and doubtful in meaning. We expect to show that the officers were endeavoring to read them. But they were of doubtful and strange meaning. In one of them we will show that the wording was something like this, so far as I can decipher it: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it but that long, tall, black negro did it by his-self.'

"We want to show," continued Arnold, "that Lee spoke up and said, 'That's me, boss. That means night watchman.'

"Isn't it strange that a negro so ignorant and dull that Mr. Rosser had to ask him a question ten times over could in a flash interpret this illegible scrawl?"

Rosser supplemented Arnold's argument by remarking that he regarded Lee's alleged remarks as highly suspicious, and that he considered he had the right to question a witness with a view of showing that a person or persons other than the defendant had a part in the crime.

Judge Roan ruled with the defense, and the jury was returned. The judge declared:

"The attorneys for Frank are privileged to bring out evidence showing anxiety or fear on the part of the negro."

Lee Makes Denial.

Lee denied when questioned that he had said, "That's me, Boss; that means night watchman." He testified that he told the officers that someone was trying to put the crime on him.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers who visited the factory after Lee called the police station, testified before the Coroner's jury in regard to Lee's ready explanation of the notes.

Rosser ended his cross-examination of Lee at 10:50 a. m. Tuesday, after the negro had been on the grill two hours Monday afternoon and nearly as long Tuesday.

The efforts to discredit Lee's story began the moment Rosser got him on the stand. He sought first to show that it was a very peculiar circumstance that Lee went clear to the rear of the factory basement, where he found the girl's body, when all through the earlier part of the night he had gone only a short distance from the foot of the ladder in the front of the basement.

Calls Lee's Excuse Flimsy.

"Every time you went down into the basement you went only about 25 feet from the ladder to see if there was fire in the dust pan," said Rosser, repeating Lee's testimony, "and yet at this time, when you say you found the girl's body, you assert that it was necessary to go clear to the rear to ascertain the same fact?"

Lee replied that he had gone to the rear of the basement for another purpose and Rosser attempted to show that this was only a flimsy excuse.

By his line of questioning Rosser endeavored to ridicule the idea that Lee could have identified Mary Phagan as a white girl by the dim light of his dirty lantern when, as he testified, he got no nearer than five or six feet to the body, and when the officers with electric searchlights were not able to determine whether the girl was white or a negro because of the grime and cinders on her body, until they had pulled down her stocking.

Session Full of Clashes.

The session was full of spirited clashes between Rosser and Dorsey. It was a favorable forenoon for the defense, Rosser almost invariably being permitted to continue the line of questioning which he was pursuing.

Rosser, while he succeeded in showing up discrepancies in Lee's present story with that before the Coroner's jury, was unable to force the negro to any admissions incriminating in themselves.

Dorsey questioned Lee in redirect examination and Rosser in recross-examination. Lee left the stand at 11:40 o'clock, after a total of four hours and forty minutes' grilling.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs followed Lee on the stand. He told the story of finding the body and identified the Phagan girl's clothes and the cord that was used to strangle her.

Frank, his face a mask, was brought into the courtroom just before the court was called to order by Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

After taking a cool survey of the courtroom, the factory superintendent conversed a moment with is counsel and then centered his attention on the night watchman. Frank took no notes of the negro's testimony, but he evidently was making a mental record of every word of it.

What he thought of the negro's statements could not be guessed from his features. Whether the negro was giving testimony which might be construed as favorable or as most damaging, there was not the shade of a change in the expression of the young factory superintendent.

He only took his eyes from the witness to speak a word to his wife or to answer an occasional question whispered to him by one of his counsel. He was brought to the courthouse from the Tower at 7:45 by Sheriff Mangum and Deputy Sheriff Miner. He was dressed in a blue mohair suit with a striped effect, and wore a fancy gray tie.

Eats Light Breakfast.

His breakfast was brought to him at the courthouse by a relative, and consisted only of two slices of toast and a bottle of milk.

"I am well pleased with the progress of the trial to this point, he said in his conversation with Essenbach. "Nothing has been developed which has not already been well known to the public and attorneys and which will be explained in the light of the defense's case.

"I am feeling well and confident. Nothing has taken place to disturb me in the least. I hope that the trial will move as rapidly toward its conclusion as the first day's session gave promise. I have nothing to conceal and nothing to fear."

Grilling of Lee Resumed.

The cross-examination of Lee was resumed as soon as court opened.

Q. How far were you from the body when you first saw it?—A. About ten feet.

Q. Could you see to either side?—A. No. I stood up, picked up lantern and went toward the dust pan.

Q. How far was the body from the closet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it two feet, ten feet or twenty feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it fifty feet, forty feet or thirty feet?—A. Somewhere about thirty feet, maybe not that much.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. I looked to see whether it was a natural body.

Q. You didn't linger?

At this question Lee arose and pointed his finger at Rosser. "Just as soon as I saw what it was I want to tell you I lit a rag."

Saw It Was White Girl.

Q. You saw it was a white woman?—A. There were one or two white spots on the face and her hair was frizzled.

Q. How long did it take the police to find she was a white girl?—A. I don't know; they arrested me.

Q. What did they say?—A. One of them said this girl has been dead three or four days.

Q. When you came up did you go back down in the cellar?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you notice whether the door was open when you went back?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell the police it was a white girl or a white woman?—A. I think I told them it was a white woman.

Q. She was lying on her back, with her face up?—A. Yes, sir; she was lying on her side with her face up.

LEE'S QUAINT ANSWERS ROB LEO FRANK'S TRIAL OF ALL SIGNS OF RANCOR

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

A page was ripped from a story of Harris Dickson. "Old Reliable" was paraded in the life in as somber a setting as was ever conceived, and the temper of the audience that is following the fortunes of Leo Frank through his struggle for life and liberty was revealed.

Some sinister things have been said of the spirit of Atlanta in reference to the trial of the pencil factory superintendent as the slayer of Mary Phagan. It was whispered once that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that those who believe Frank guilty would take vengeance as their own.

And, on the other hand, it has been said in sotto voce that the purses of Frank's friends would be opened to the last penny to see that he receives a verdict of acquittal.

Laugh Gives Lie to Rumor.

But right at the start the whisperings were given the lie, just as happens to most whisperings. A jury was selected and sworn in record time, and the story of a people torn by factional feeling by the case was crushed.

People inflamed by a passion so deadly that they are willing to defy the law to obtain their vengeance do not laugh when the issue is being fought.

People who are willing to spend their last dollar to see a man freed do not giggle when a witness relates circumstances which, the opposition maintains, adds a strand to the cord of hemp which it is striving to weave about his neck.

Frank Getting Fair Trial.

Newt Lee, black, ignorant, cornfield ,pot-licker-fed darky, by the homeliness of his words proved beyond peradventure that Leo M. Frank is getting a fair and impartial trial as the law decrees, and that Atlanta is willing to abide by the verdict which the twelve men return when the historic case shall have passed to its final stage.

It took just such a character as Newt Lee to bring to light the true nature of the people who are listening to the trial, who are following the legal battle step by step, whose interest in the case is so intense that it has kept the slaying of Mary Phagan the big thing in the public mind for three long months.

Fortune favored both sides when the prosecution decided to place him on the stand among the first. Whether his story materially damaged Frank or his cross-examination materially aided the defense is of little moment. The reception of his testimony indicated to each side just what the public thought and enabled them to know that the case will be tried in the orderly manner which justice demands.

Newt Enjoys His Fame.

Let's have a look at Newt Lee. There's a lot to be learned from this homely negro. When his name was called and he entered the courtroom, he had a joyful realization of his own importance. His face showed he was again enjoying the thrilling pleasure of "comin' thru" or going on a "scussion."

He is typical of the type that Judge Dickson so vividly depicts. His head is flat as a ballroom floor. His big frame is slightly bent, not from weakness, but from the natural laziness of his type.

Sympathy that has been spent on him for his months in jail, though admittedly innocent of any crime, has been spent in vain. Newt Lee has been having the time of his life.

"Ain't dat nigger had his picture took and put in de white folks' papers? Don't dem big lawyers pay him respecks? Ain't he got sot dere in jail an' not have to wuk?"

That's the negro point of view and that's Newt Lee's. He has tasted all the popularity of a negro about to be hung and escaped the only drawback to the final ceremony, the actual hanging.

Sang-froid Never Shaken.

He enjoyed every minute of the experience.

He spoke in a dialect that Dockstader would pay thousands for and he spoke with a directness and an intelligence that showed that he had either been thoroughly rehearsed or that he was possessed of one of those quick, in-seeing mind, so rarely found among negroes of his type, but so typical of the class.

Lee is beyond doubt "a white man's nigger." He spread a feeling of kindliness over a courtroom where bitterness was supposed to prevail. Judge, jurors, spectators, all seemed in sympathy with him, and even Mr. Rosser did not prod him in the merciless manner that has made him one of the most famous, one of the most feared cross-examiners in the entire South.

Newt did not wish to let one sweet moment of his self-aggrandizement slip. Once during the testimony he was asked as to his faithfulness in performing his duties as night watchman.

"Light Jest Wuz Shinin'."

He "swelled visibly," as Sam Weller remarked, before he answered. "Folks say there never is been a nigger to punch that clock so prompt as me," and a stern objection from Mr. Rosser kept him from going on with his story of personal prowess, though his lips struggled to speak the forbidden words.

And his illustrations were apt. They were not strained. They fitted like a glove. He was asked to tell whether a light was burning dimly or brightly. Like a flash he replied:

"Has you ever seed a lightnin' bug? Has you ever seed one whut's jest been hit with a stick? Well, you knows how his light shines. Hit jest do shine. Well, dat was dat light. Hit just wuz shinin' and dat's all."

Racial horror of being alone in the presence of the dead was also displayed.

Lee was in a dramatic period of his story. He had just told of his grim discovery in the cellar of the pencil factory.

"What did you do when you saw the girl?" Solicitor Dorsey's question was spoken with rifle shot ring.

He "Went Right Back Up."

"I went right back up dat ladder," said Lee, as though he were repeating a confession of faith.

"I dunno how I got up dar, but I sho' wuz up dar. I sho' wuz," the negro replied fervently.

And on he went with his story, practically each reply being greeted by an outburst of laughter until a bailiff had to threaten to clear the courtroom.

He came down from the stand, smiling still, his glory gone, but realizing that for days he was sure to be a power on Decatur street, a person sought for socially, a man among men. And as he descended the audience smiled an applause as gracious as bowing prima donnar or stentorian tragedian ever received.

Mincey Adheres to Published Statement

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher, who says that Jim Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Company, confessed to him that he had killed a girl, declared Tuesday that he had conferred with attorneys for Leo Frank, and that he was ready to make his statement from the witness stand.

Mincey said his statement would be identical with the one recently published in The Georgian. He claims to have met Conley on the Saturday afternoon on which Mary Phagan was killed. He said that Conley was drunk and that Conley threatened to kill him, saying that he had already killed a girl that afternoon.

Mincey came to Atlanta from Ringgold Monday afternoon. He is accompanied by B. E. Neal, an attorney of Ringgold.

Tragedy, Ages Old, Lurks in Commonplace Court Setting

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

One of the most commonplace things in the world—crime—is riveting the attention of Atlanta and Georgia to-day.

Crime is almost as commonplace as death—and yet death, in a thousand ways, never is commonplace at all.

If I were a stranger in Atlanta and should walk into the courthouse where Leo Frank is being tried for the murder of Mary Phagan, doubtless I should be utterly astounded to discover what I had walked into.

That pale-faced, slight, boyish-looking party over there—the one sitting beside the massive frame of Luther Z. Rosser and the well-groomed person of Reuben Arnold—I should be shocked, I am sure, to learn that he stands charged with one of the blackest, most inhuman and most unspeakable crimes in all Georgia's somewhat long and varied catalogue of crime.

Yet that is the truth—Leo Frank is answering to the charge of the Grand Jury, and he has pleaded not guilty.

Crime and wrongdoing began, of course, when Mother Eve, through no motive other than curiosity, and without malice aforethought, either expressed or implied, bit a small and toothsome morsel from the first apple.

Cain performed the first murder not so very long afterward.

There were no newspapers in those days, but a well-authenticated story of those first infractions of the law have come down to us—and to-day crime runs riot throughout all the world!

Here in Atlanta, thousands of years after Cain committed the primary murder in history, Leo Frank is answering to the charge of killing Mary Phagan, some three months ago.

Frank Calm, Unagitated.

There sits the judge, and over yonder the jury. Pale of long confinement in jail, calm, unagitated, and even smiling, sits Leo Frank, the defendant.

Beside him are his devoted wife and his mother—his mother, who would as soon believe the stars had ceased to move in their orbits as to believe—even to suspect—that her boy was ever so remotely concerned in the death of Mary Phagan.

Over on the other side, however, sit the relatives of Mary Phagan—those who are not under the rule and debarred from the courtroom. They are grim and unsmiling—they are invoking the law's sternest displeasure upon whoever it was that took the life of their innocent little one!

Many and varied must be the emotions surging within the hearts and souls of these people, notwithstanding their outward poise—but I, who am theoretically a stranger in Atlanta's courtroom for the moment, still am wondering what it all can be about.

Gradually I realize a tenseness in the atmosphere, perhaps—and there may steal over me, as I grope mentally for something to fasten upon, a feeling that, after all, tragedy is in the air, and that its sinister shadow has fallen athwart this courtroom, the while I still recall that outside the sunshine is very bright, and is beaming upon the just and the unjust, impartially and alike.

One of the world's truly great physicians says "death is never uninteresting," and that no really great physician possibly can find it so.

He may become used to it, he may grow to view the mere physical fact of death itself as not a particularly astounding phenomenon, but never does he see in any one death the same sequenced things he has observed in others.

It is much the same way with crime, I think.

Murder is as old as the hills—as old as laughter, love, and the hate of hell—but it never loses its repugnant appeal—and so, all Atlanta and all Georgia to-day is watching the progress of the Frank trial, because Atlanta and Georgia are made up of human beings—that's all!

Few Women Present.

There are few women attending the trial of Frank. If there were thousands, however, one alone and above all other would stand forth and challenge the attention of the spectators. I mean, of course, Frank's wife.

There isn't anything the least bit "weepy" or downcast about her. She's a woman—the accused man's wife—but she plainly is a most extraordinary woman, nevertheless.

Whatever her thoughts, and whatever she expects of this trial, she gives no sign. She counsels freely with her husband's lawyers, but not frequently. She leans over and whispers something into Frank's ear now and then, but not often. She smiles upon him, and occasionally she runs her hand lightly along his shoulder, and maybe her arm is around his neck for the fitting fraction of a second, but if any of it is for effect or the least spectacular or theatrical, she is a consummate artist and surpassingly adroit.

Somehow she gave me the impression of the wife affectionate, but not demonstrative, of the wife unafraid but not obtrusive, of the wife deeply concerned, but too proud to let it be seen any more than it must be.

Perhaps there is a subtle motive in her quiet and repressed movements in the courtroom now and then—if so, I can but admire the complete perfectness of her methods and the dramatic excellence of her role as she enacts it.

Looking there at Leo Frank's wife and then at Leo Frank, one unconsciously finds himself asking himself this all-important question: What could have been Frank's motive when he killed Mary Phagan, if it be possible that he could have performed that monstrous deed?

Far and away the most frequent thing encountered in the unraveling of murder cases is the eternal triangle—the man, the wife, and the other woman!

That "other woman" may be an angel, she may be a devil; she may be a princess, she may be a pauper; she may be an innocent child, she may be a faded courtesan; she may be a willing third party, and she may be the most unwilling—but too often she is there, in some aspect, when murder has been done!

Could the motive behind the murder of Mary Phagan have been an unrighteous infatuation upon the part of Frank toward the dead girl—an unholy infatuation repelled to the extent of bringing about murder itself?

Was it that? And if it wasn't that, what was it?

Unless there was malicious motive and intent behind the slaying of Mary Phagan, there has been no murder done. The law says that malice is as essential to murder as oxygen is to the breath of life.

Frank? Of all the defendants I ever saw arraigned, Leo Frank, I think, looks the least the part of a murderer!

Not that that means anything whatever conclusively—but it is a thought that must obtrude itself upon all who view him there in the courthouse, battling in his own way for his life and liberty.

Frank never could be made to look the part of a hero, no more than he can be made to look the part of a villain—and yet he might be either, and deceive his looks no more than hundreds have done before his time and will do hereafter.

If someone should have told me that Frank is a bookworm, or a collector of postage stamps, or a person with a fad for puttering around in the garden at early morn, it never should have occurred to me to doubt it.

But Frank a murderer, a thing lost to every sense of decency and right, a traitor to his dearest and nearest, a —well, I should have asked explanations and enlightenment as to detail!

And yet, if Frank be the thing charged in that bill of indictment, he must be all of those sinister things combined.

Is he? Frankly, I have no fixed opinion, and I am of open mind.

The sweetest-tempered play-fellow otherwise I ever had when I was a boy had a marked passion to sneaking off by himself and robbing birds' nests, particularly when he young birds were in the nest!

One Touch of the Dramatic.

There has been so far in the trial of Leo Frank but one touch of the genuinely dramatic—properly designated melodramatic, perhaps—and that was when the clothing little Mary Phagan wore when murdered was exhibited to the jury.

This, of course, was one of the tricks of the trade, and it was indulged in entirely for the jury's benefit.

It is not unusual—the same thing happens in all murder trials, and I have wondered why it could happen save for the doubtful effect of it desired.

To be sure, the sweet and innocent cause of this trial—the pathetic victim prerequisite to it—is, of all the parties to it, save one, absent.

She may be there in spirit, comforting and sustaining her grief-stricken mother, but her [illegible] is not heard, and never will or can be heard.

She is not in the courtroom, and the one other extreme of the tragedy—omitting the yet undetermined status of Frank—is over yonder in the Tower—Conley.

In the grewsome exhibition of Mary Phagan's clothing, just as it was removed from her dead body, there was a power of appeal hardly to be described in words. The youthful garments spoke eloquently, if inconclusively, of the deceased—the unoffending, methodical, carefree little working girl, so suddenly and so frightfully thrust into public notice, never to know what it all was about.

If within the person of Mary Phagan dwelt the awful propelling force of motive that prompted Frank or someone else to murder, her simple clothing there in the courtroom suggested wonderfully clear the pathos of it and the inhumanity.

And there must have been a motive! What was it about Mary Phagan that gave rise to it in the heart and mind of—Frank?

The things that have happened so far in the trial of Frank are relatively inconsequential, as concerns the verdict.

Battle of Wits.

Two conclusions stand out unmistakably—the trial is to be a battle of legal wits, and it is to rage most fiercely about the negro Jim Conley—the big, black and all-meaning factor yet held jealously in the background.

Mr. Dorsey, the Solicitor General, evidently feels the strain of his position. He is plainly nervous at times, and unmistakably irritable now and then. He snaps his points to the court, and sometimes borders almost upon the rough and querelous in his language.

Undoubtedly Mr. Rosser disconcerts and irritates the Solicitor continuously. At times Mr. Dorsey's objections have seemed more like complaints—and when Mr. Rosser turns his massive head around and stage-whispers additional words not to Dorsey's liking, he resents it in every sentence and gesture he offers by way of comment or reply.

Reuben Arnold has had little to say so far, but he is forever whispering something into Rosser's ear—Rosser frowning like a thundercloud the while he listens.

Mr. Rosser is fighting his way along cautiously and carefully. He seemed upon the point almost of browbeating Newt Lee more than once, as that darky's examination proceeded, but generally he quit just short of actual performance.

Lee, too, was unconsciously outspoken in his resentment of the Rosser treatment, and more than once scored well and powerful in reply to Mr. Rosser's questions—particularly when couching his replies in quaint and curious negro illustrations and phrases.

If at times Lee became more or less confused and contradictory, he proved in the main to be something of a Tartar under cross-examination, and while his testimony as a whole could not amount to much as an isolated proposition and is valuable only as one link in a long chain yet to be forged about Frank, it nevertheless went to the jury in pretty good shape, and will be hard to discount, whatever it may be worth.

Hooper Singularly Calm.

But if Dorsey is agitated and irritable, and if Rosser is imposing and pugnacious, and if Arnold is keyed to a high pitch and continuously prompting his associate counsel, the other big figure among the attorneys, Frank Hooper, is as calm as a May morning, smiling, dispassionate and altogether at his ease.

Hooper looks as if he had just stepped out of a cold-storage bandbox.

Handsome, as he certainly is, if not of particularly commanding presence, and well dressed, he moves about with all the unconscious grace and ease of a—panther?

Hardly that, and yet—Frank Hooper may loom larger than any attorney in this case before the final word is written in respect of it.

There is no doubt that the trial is to be long drawn out. Every inch is being disputed pro and con, and every possible point is being raised to keep the case strictly within its legal bounds.

The jury apparently is much above the average—it was plain enough all along that the defense was seeking a jury of high intelligence, and a city jury, moreover.

I think the jury trying Leo Frank may be expected to record the truth of the trial—it appears to be composed of level-headed, clean cut, sensible men, as it should be, if it is to give a fair play to all parties concerned.

The climax of the fight, of course, will be entirely within Jim Conley. The State will make every possible effort to sustain him, and the defense will make every possible effort to break him down.

Luther Rosser will exhaust his remarkable resourcefulness in this mighty effort, aided and abetted to the very limit by the subtle and incisive art of Reuben Arnold.

Frank Hooper will strive as he never before has striven to hold Conley together—and Hugh Dorsey will back him with all the experience of his career at the criminal bar.

A happy and reassuring circumstance is that over and above all these contending forces sits Judge Roan—unruffled, unafraid, of unblemished and unquestioned integrity, upright and just—to hold all the stormy elements eventually in order and within the rules of the law.

The real trial of Leo Frank hardly yet has begun!

Lee's Testimony Feature of First Day of Trial

Attorney Rosser began crosg-examination of Newt Lee at the point he had reached when Judge Roan ordered the adjournment Monday night. Frank's leading counsel had not succeeded in his early questioning to shawe the negro to any great extent.

Lee, in fact, stuck with amusing steadfastness to every statement he had made previously and was inclined to believe that the stenographer at the Coroner's inquest had not been successful in getting all of his testimony.

That he had been quoted as saying that Frank on the afternoon of April 26 had told him to go away and have "some fun" instead of "a good time" was a serious and most vital error in his opinion.

"No, sah; I didn't say he told me to go away and have some fun. I said he told me to go away and have a good time!" declared Lee, vehemently, glaring at Attorney Rosser.

Lays Error to Typist.

"I dunno who done it, but I suppose it must have been the stenographer," replied Lee.

Rosser forced Lee to admit that when he came there at 4 o'clock to report to Frank the front door was unlocked and that anyone might have come in on the first floor and gone to the basement through the scuttle hole near the elevator without Frank's knowledge. The double doors leading to the second floor were locked at this time. Solicitor Dorsey had brought this fact out as significant. They were never locked before when he went there, Lee said.

Lee, under Rosser's cross-examination, also admitted that when he returned to the factory at 6 o'clock in the evening the stairway doors leading to the second floor were unlocked, as well as the outside doors, and that anyone might have come into the factory and gone all over the building without Frank knowing anything about it.

The negro also related to Rosser that Frank had told him J. M. Gantt, who came there at 6 o'clock Saturday night after his shoes, was a discharged employee and that he must not be permitted to enter the building.

Solicitor Dorsey, in questioning the negro earlier in the day, had emphasized Frank's appearance of fright when he came out of the factory and unexpectedly ran into Gantt, who was standing outside trying to persuade Lee to let him into the factory to get the shoes.

"Then, your first thought at that time was that Frank was afraid of Gantt on account of the difficulty they had had?" inquired Rosser.

"Yes, sah," admitted the negro.

"How big a man is Gantt?" continued the attorney.

"I reckon he must be about seven feet tall," Lee replied.

Attorney Rosser brought out the peculiar circumstance that the back door of the factory basement was closed when Lee found the body of Mary Phagan, but that the officers declared the door was open when they came eight or ten minutes later. This cross-examination by Rosser took place:

Q. If you wanted to find whether the door at the rear was closed, you would have passed the body?—A. It was shut when I found the body.

Police Found Door Open.

Q. Did the police find it open?—A. They said they did.

Solicitor Dorsey objected to the form of Mr. Rosser's questions and was sustained.

Q. The police got there in about eight minutes?—A. I don't know. I said all the time I didn't know how long it took them.

Q. You didn't get any closer to the basement door than the body was?—A. No, sir.

Q. Could you have seen out of the back door?—A. Yes, if it was open.

Q. Are you positiye about the door being closed?—A. Yes. There was a light in the alley, and I could have seen if the door had been open.

It was rumored Tuesday morning that Jim Conley would be called by Solicitor Dorsey during the day to tell his story of helping Frank dispose of the body. Conley was made ready for the witness stand Monday, but was not called.

Judge Roan announced that a regular recess hour from 12:30 until 2 o'clock would be set for the remainder of the trial.

Resume of First Day.

Taking up the events from the moment that Mary Phagan left her home in Bellwood Saturday noon, April 26, until her mutilated body was found in the National Pencil Factory early the next morning, the prosecution began weaving the net of evidence about Frank Monday, using Newt Lee, night watchman at the pencil factory, as the most damaging witness against the young factory superintendent.

By Mary Phagan's mother, Mrs. J. W. Coleman, and George W. Epps, who testified that he rode to town with Mary the day she was murdered, Solicitor Dorsey brought the little factory girl from her home to the point at the viaduct on Forsyth street where Epps said he left her to get his newspapers to sell.

That Frank came "bustin' out of his office" rubbing his hands nervously when Lee appeared at the factory at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon was Lee's first important statement. He asserted that Frank always before this had sat quietly in his office when he reported for duty.

Said Frank Sent Him Away.

He said that Frank had sent him away, although Lee said he would have preferred to stay in the factory and sleep.

Other circumstances which Solicitor Dorsey brought out with great stress were contained in Lee's testimony that Frank had tinkered a long time with the time clock Saturday night, twice as long as usual, and had appeared to be making some marks upon it; that Lee had not missed a punch during the night after Mary Phagan entered the factory; that Frank Sunday had told Lee that the time clock tape was "all right," and that Frank later had said there were three misses.

Lee continued his testimony against Frank by saying that later in the day, shortly after 6 o'clock, Frank burst out of the factory and appeared greatly frightened when he ran into J. M. Gantt, a discharged employee, who was asking Lee permission to go into the factory to get two pairs of shoes.

The negro said that Frank objected to Gantt going into the factory and told Gantt that he had seen the shoes swept up some time before. Gantt persisted in his request, Lee testified, and Frank, after hanging his head for some time, consented with evident reluctance. Lee said that Gantt found both pairs. Le also said that Frank never had telephoned him before in the evening as he did the night of April 26.

He declared that Frank asked nothing about Gantt when he called up.

Kills His Sister by Mistake for Burglar

ELBERTON, July 29.—Mack Guest shot and instantly killed his 17-year-old sister last night, mistaking her for a burglar. She was visiting from the country.

Guest told his sister to leave a window open when she retired. About 10:30 o'clock Miss Guest decided to close the window. Mrs. Guest awoke, telling her husband someone was breaking into his sister's room. Guest secured a shotgun and shot his sister in the back. No arrest has been made. Guest is prostrated.

Bees Usurp Bed and Couple Can't Sleep

BUCK GROVE, IOWA, July 29.—A swarm of bees does not form as easy as a resting place as a feather bed, as Mr. and Mrs. Nels Wingrove discovered. Going to bed in an upstairs room in the dark, as was their custom, they heard the buzzing of bees. It was discovered that a swarm of bees had settled in their bed.

WATCHMAN STICKS TO HIS TALE OF FINDING OF BODY

with blood on her head.

Q. Which side was the blood on?—A. It was on the right side. It was dry.

Q. Are you sure it was the right side?—A. No, sir; her left side was turned up to me.

Grill Grows More Severe.

Q. You swear she was on her back?—A. Yes, sir; her face was turned up kind of to one side.

Q. When you went up to the office the first time, did Mr. Frank close his office door?—A. I don't know. I couldn't see his office.

Q. I mean the outside door?—A. It was open.

Mr. Rosser then read Lee's testimony about the time slip before the Coroner's jury.

Q. You helped him put the page in, didn't you, Newt? This is right, isn't it?—A. Read that again.

Mr. Rosser read it.

A. No, sir; you got me wrong. He didn't come out of his office.

Q. You said yesterday that Mr. Frank jumped back when he met Mr. Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Dorsey Objects to Methods.

Mr. Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's jury, which said nothing about Frank jumping back.

Lee—"Well, they got that wrong."

Q. That was a bad stenographer down there, wasn't he?

Solicitor Dorsey here objected to this method of questioning the witness. He declared the negro should first be questioned and then an effort to impeach him made.

To this Mr. Rosser replied: "Of course, this gentleman on account of his age is entitled to lecture me!"

"I am addressing his honor," retorted Dorsey.

"Are you through?" asked Rosser of Dorsey.

"I have stated my objection," said Dorsey.

"He misunderstood what I am trying to show," said Rosser.

Court Sustains Dorsey.

"This witness can't tell what his opinion is," said Judge Roan, for the first time speaking. "He can tell what he swore to before the Coroner's jury."

Following this ruling the cross-examination was resumed.

Rosser read from the stenographic report of the Coroner's inquest:

"Mr. Frank jumped when he met Mr. Gantt and I taken it this way."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper then asked that Mr. Rosser state what Coroner's inquest he was referring to.

Attorneys in Clash.

"I am always glad to accommodate these men whenever I can," said Rosser.

"You have got to accommodate me," retorted Hooper.

"No, I haven't. The man never was born whom I have got to accommodate."

Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Rosser must state what Coroner's jury he was referring to, as there were two, one in April and one in May.

Rosser resumed his questioning.

Q. I asked you if you were before the Coroner's jury at the police station?—A. Yes, sir.

State's Objection Overruled.

Q. Did you the first time say anything about Mr. Frank jumping back when he met Mr. Gantt?

Dorsey again objected, and was overruled.

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's first hearing, saying he was going to ask him if that was all he said. This testimony was to the effect that Frank looked as though he was frightened. It did not mention, however, that Frank jumped back when he met Gantt.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. No, sir; that wasn't all I said.

Negro Answers Warily.

Q. Newt, I ask you if you didn't leap right out of there and run, and call the police when you saw that body?—A. Just as soon as I saw what it was.

Q. Didn't you say this before the Coroner's jury: "I thought some devilish boys had put something there to fool me. I got close enough to see it was a body and leaped right away?"—A. No, sir; I'll tell you what I said.

Mr. Rosser interrupted Lee.

Q. Mr. Frank told you if anything serious happened, to call the police, and if anything trivial, to call him?—A. Yes.

Q. When Frank told you to go off and have a good time, you lit right out, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that after two or three minutes you lit out?—A. Not exactly that way.

Says He Doesn't Recall.

Q. You said yesterday that when Frank put on the lock tape that Saturday it took twice as long as it did on the other times you saw him do it. When they asked you how long it took him to put it in before, did you not tell them you did not pay much attention to it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Why didn't you tell the Coroner it took twice as long the last time as it did before?—A. I did tell them it took longer.

Q. Who asked you?—A. He looked like a blind man.

Q. Then all this record here is wrong?—A. I can't help about those records.

Q. You never told it until yesterday?—A. Yes; I told the Coroner it took him longer.

Q. If you didn't pay attention to him the first time, how did you know it took longer the second time?—A. I held the lever for him.

Q. You couldn't say whether it took him a minute the first time?—A. Yes, it took over a minute.

Questioned About Notes.

Q. You could not say whether it took under a minute or over a minute?—A. No.

Q. Who did you live with?—A. No one.

Q. Who lived with you?—A. A woman. She just stayed there and cooked for me.

Q. You and her lived together?—A. No, she just cooked for me.

Q. Did you pay the rent for the last one?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the first one?—A. I just paid board.

Q. Were you down in the basement when the police found some notes?—A. They said something about a book.

Q. They read you something about the night watch doing it?

Dorsey here objected to anything anybody else said.

Attorneys in Wrangle.

Rosser replied that his object was to get to the truth and show what Newt Lee did at the time, indicating a ready interpretation of the notes.

Mr. Arnold then addressed the court.

He began an argument and Solicitor Dorsey insisted that the jury be withdrawn.

"Of course, after he has discussed the case, he wants the jury withdrawn at our statements," said Mr. Rosser.

"I understood Mr. Rosser to say he would not introduce the contents, and I understand this ruling excludes the contents of one of the notes?" asked Dorsey.

"No, I didn't say we were not going to present the contents of the notes. I am going to introduce what I please," answered Rosser.

Judge Roan again sustained the defense and ordered the jury brought back. Attorney Rosser then resumed his cross-examination.

Q. When you were in the basement, didn't one of the policemen read a note which said something about a long, tall, black negro?

"I object," said Dorsey. "I understood his honor to rule that the attorneys for the defense could not go into the contents of the notes."

"Are we going on with this argument before the jury, after we just had them sent out?" asked Rosser.

"Let the question be put," said Judge Roan.

Lee Denies Saying "That's Me."

Q. When he said "the night witch," didn't you say "Boss, that's me?"—A. No, sir; I said, "Boss, it looks like they are trying to lay it on me."

Q. No, I want yes or no from this—"The tall, black, long negro?"

Here Dorsey interrupted with an objection.

"Now where did Lee swear that," he asked. "A section of the Code says that you can't question a man like that unless you first present some certain evidence of the statement having been made or written."

At this, Attorney Rosser sat down and Dorsey began questioning Lee on the redirect examination.

Q. When you said something about somebody trying to put it off on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Jim Conley? A. I never saw him until that time last week.

Q. Have you talked to anybody about this?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk to this man (indicating Arnold)?—A. Yes, he was over to the jail after you were.

Lee Quizzed on Diagram.

Q. The first time Frank put that tape on the clock, did he say anything?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything the second time?—A. He made a remark about its taking longer.

Q. What was the reason he changed the tape?—A. It had been used.

Q. Was it as dark in the basement at night as it was in the daytime?—A. Mighty near.

Solicitor Dorsey started over the diagram drawn by Bert Green, Georgian staff artist, of the National Pencil Factory, and proceeded to ask Lee a question and pointed at the diagram.

"He's not asking about anything but the physical appearance of the building," replied Judge Roan.

Q. Newt, say whether the body of Mary Phagan was lying the same way

THE $55 SHORTHAND COURSE AND $55 BOOKKEEPING COURSE, BOTH FOR THE PRICE OF ONE, THIS WEEK ONLY AT THE SOUTHERN BUSINESS COLLEGE

As the Southern's Great Offer Draws to a Close the Demand for Scholarships Becomes More Lively—Last Week in Which to Obtain Two $55.00 Courses for the Price of One.

Saved, $55!

Are you one of the fortunate ones?

The unusual midsummer offer of the Southern Shorthand and Business University, 10 West Mitchell street, this city, will close on Saturday, August 2.

Until then the $55 Shorthand Course and the $55 Bookkeeping Course, both combined, are offered for the price of one course—$55!

While this extraordinary offer is in effect, either of the $55 courses may be obtained at $40!

Since this special offer was announced just a few days ago, the demand for scholarships has been unprecedented.

"Find inclosed check for $55, for which please send me one of the combined scholarships, although I shall not enter school until October," writes a young man at Tallulah Falls.

Others are securing scholarships to be used in August, September and later, just to receive the benefit of the overwhelming reduction now made.

It is not a question of obtaining as low or even a lower rate at some other colleges, but the point of great interest is that you can now secure such a remarkably low rate in the long-established, old reliable, superbly equipped and well-known Southern Shorthand and Business University, "the school that gets results," and naturally the school you prefer to attend.

Remember, the two $55 Courses for the price of one, this week only.

Don't delay, enter now or else buy scholarship now for future entrance, and save this big discount.

HERMAN STRAUSS,
The Former Pupil who wrote 125 words a minute after 30 days' study at the S. S. & B. U., is now a leading reporter in South Georgia.

"This is the first time in three years that we have put on sale our scholarships at a reduced rate," said the managers, "and we are doing this merely as a midsummer advertising proposition to invade new territory, the plan being to secure a large list of names of prospective pupils from those who obtain this low-priced scholarship. From this list we hope to secure many pupils at the regular rates, which will be in effect by August 1, and thus be reimbursed for the loss we are now sustaining by this advertising offer."

when you saw it with the officers as when you first saw it.—A. I don't know, officers were all around it, and I couldn't see very good.

Lawyers Clash Again.

Mr. Rosser took a stand directly behind Mr. Dorsey and objected to Dorsey leading the witness.

"Well, this negro is not as well educated as some of these lawyers," said Mr. Dorsey. "It takes a little patience to get him to understand."

"What lawyers are you referring to?" asked Mr. Rosser. "Do you mean yourself?"

"Of course, myself," answered Mr. Dorsey.

Q. Was the toilet west or east from the boiler in the basement?—A. West.

Q. Was the body west or east?—A. The body was kinder west.

Q. Could you see Frank from that desk up stairs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Rosser asked you how far it was from the steps leading up to the second floor to Mr. Frank's office. How far was it?—A. About as far as from here to that wall across the room.

Called Only Police.

Q. Did you call anybody on the phone that night but the police?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you call Mr. Haas?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the shutters on the north side of the second floor of that building closed on Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes, sir; they were closed.

Q. Were there apartments back there on the third floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they for?—A. White people.

Q. Did white people use the closet in the basement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who told you to use it?—A. Mr. Frank took me down there and told me to use it.

Q. What did he call it?—A. He called it a toilet.

Q. At night it is darker in the rear of that basement than it is outside?—A. You can't see inside there at all back where the body was found.

Tries to Discount Diagram.

This ended the redirect examination, and Mr. Rosser began the re-cross-examination. He took up the questioning in an effort to prove that Lee did not understand the diagram of the pencil factory.

"I don't know, sir," the negro replied.

Q. It looks like a mill pond, doesn't it?—A. I don't know just what it is meant for.

Q. The policemen and detectives talked to you all the time, didn't they? They fired a pistol beside you; they cussed you and they praised you, didn't they?—A. No sir; they didn't praise me none.

Q. My friend, John Black, and those fellows talked to you day and night, didn't they?—A. Well, just let me tell you, I couldn't sleep even for two nights after I was put in jail. They just questioned me all the time, policemen and everybody.

Q. Is there any other way to get out of the basement except by the ladder?—A. Only the back door.

Q. Are there not some steps between the boiler and the back door up to the first floor?—A. If there are any there I don't know it.

Black Talked to Him More.

Solicitor Dorsey at this point took up the examination.

Q. Did Frank talk to you in jail?—Yes, sir.

Q. Who talked longer to you, Frank or John Black, the detective? Rosser objected, saying the Solicitor had gone over the interview between Frank and Lee and no one had referred to it since.

"We want to know if repetition is going to be allowed," Rosser asked Judge Roan. "It is simply to repeat. If we start a repeating contest we will be here forever."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

Lee replied: "Detective Black talked to me the most.

Q. Who talked to you longer, the detectives or Mr. Arnold, when he came to see you the other day?—A. Mr. Arnold.

Newt Lee was then called off the stand, after having been questioned for 4 hours and 15 minutes.

Sergeant Dobbs Testifies.

Q. Where were you at about 3 o'clock April 27?—A. At the station house.

Q. Did anything unusual happen?—A. At about 3:25 a call came to go to the pencil factory. When we got there the door was locked. Later a negro came and let us in. He said there was a woman murdered in the basement. The negro led the way down, and about fifteen feet back we found the body. She was lying with her face down. We couldn't tell whether she was white or black except that her hair was light. I told someone to turn her over. A cord was around her neck and sunk in her flesh. There was also a piece of cloth. I began to look around and found a couple of notes. One of them read——"

Mr. Dorsey interrupted. "Never mind about the notes," he said.

Identifies Cord and Cloth.

Q. I will first get you to identify this cord (taking the death loop from a suitcase).—A. That looks like it.

Q. And this (exhibiting a torn piece of cloth)?—A. It is.

Q. Was there much blood?—A. Very little.

Q. Was the hair bloody?—A. Very little; I had to almost reach the skin to feel blood.

Q. Was it moist?—A. Dry.

Q. Are these the notes you found near the body? (Exhibiting notes.)—A. Yes.

Q. And this pad?—A. Yes.

Q. How were they lying?—A. Near the head.

Q. Were they close together?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with Lee?—A. Took him to the station.

Q. What was his bearing?—A. Cool.

Q. Mr. Dobbs, look at this (pointing to diagram of factory); point where the body was found?—A. Right here. (Indicating spot.)

Rosser—"I object to that picture until the witness says it is a fair representation of the building."

Judge Roan—"I sustain the objection."

Dorsey—"Is it a fair representation of the building?"

A. It is.

Dorsey: "That's All."

Rosser After Details.

Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. The negro told you she was a white woman?—A. Yes.

Q. You had to look very closely to find out?—A. Yes.

Q. What kind of light did you have?—A. We lit some gas jets and had lanterns.

Q. You found the notes under the sawdust?—A. Yes.

Q. You were not able to see them until you raked in the sawdust?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the note attached to the pad?—A. No.

Q. How far from the child's head was the first note?—A. Not over eight or ten inches.

Q. What note did you find first. A. The white one.

Q. Did you find much trash in the buliding?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find other notes?—A. No.

Q. Did you search?—A. Yes, we were looking for the shoe, you know.

Q. Where was the shoe found?—A. Some one else found them.

Q. What was the condition of the child's face?—A. You mean about dust?

Q. No; was there any indication that she was dragged?—A. I thought there was.

Q. Lee did become excited become he left the factory?—A. Yes.

Lee Could Have Seen Body.

Q. From the place where Lee stood, could he have seen the body?—A. Yes; part of it.

Q. Didn't you make any experiment in the day time to see whether Lee could see the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you?—A. Yes, sir; the feet and part of the legs.

Q. I asked you if you said the evidences of dragging did not begin immediately in front of the elevator?—A. No, I said it appeared to me to begin immediately in front of the elevator.

Q. As a matter of fact, you didn't find the hat and the shoes close together?—A. The hat and the shoes were on the garbage pile.

Q. The floor was rough and one being dragged over it would be scarred up?—A. Yes.

Q. Captain, you are mistaken about the wound being on the right side of the head, aren't you?—A. I won't be positive. It was near the rear of the head.

Q. Was the blood wet or dry?—A. Dry.

Q. This little trail which you thought showed where the body had been dragged extended to the body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took hold of the hands and worked them?—A. Yes, but she was stiff. Her joints worked a little.

Door Staples Pulled.

Q. What was the condition of the back door?—A. The staple had been pulled, but the lock was still locked.

Q. Was the door open or shut?—A. It was a slide door and shut.

Q. Was it a bar door?—A. Yes. The bar was down.

Q. Did it appear to be a recent withdrawal of the staple?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you either read or quote to the negro Lee a statement about who had committed the crime, and when you said "night" Lee interrupted with a statement that he was the one referred to?—A. Yes, before I read the word "witch" he said he was the one referred to.

Q. Did you examine her underclothes?—A. Not very closely.

Court was then adjourned until 2 o'clock when the redirect examination of Dobbs was taken up by Solicitor Dorsey.

Dobbs Recalled to Stand.

It was 5 minutes to 2 o'clock when Judge Roan walked to the bench and called order. He asked Solicitor Dorsey if he cared to question the last witness, Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, further. Mr. Dorsey replied that he did. Sergeant Dobbs was then returned to the stand, and the redirect examination began.

Solicitor Dorsey directed the questioning for the State:

Q. To what undertaker did you turn Mary Phagan's body over?—A. Bloomfield, I think.

Q. How far is it from the ladder to the spot where you found the body?—A. 150 feet.

Q. What was lying on the trash pile?—A. A hat and this pump (displaying one of Mary Phagan's shoe).

Q. What else?—A. Nothing.

Q. What about the hat trimming?—A. I never saw it.

Q. The hair ribbon?—A. We took it from her head.

Experimented to Solve Crime.

Q. Did you make any experiments at night in the factory in an effort to ascertain just how and who committed the crime?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you become convinced that Newt Lee could have seen the body from where he sat?

Attorney Rosser objected to this question and the objection was sustained.

Q. Could more than one person at a time have gone down the ladder to the basement?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been possible for anyone to have taken the body down the ladder with them?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been necessary for anyone taking or dropping a body down the ladder to have gone around the elevator shaft?—A. No.

Q. Could you tell whether the evidence you saw of dragging was caused from the feet of some person carrying a heavy burden or actually dragging it?—A. No, sir.

The crowd gathered early in front of the courthouse Tuesday morning. By 9 o'clock both sides of South Pryor street near its junction with Hunter were filled with people drawn by curiosity and the hope that they might have the good fortune to get admission to the small courtroom.

DEEP CRACKS ON JOINTS

Of Toes and Fingers. Hands So Bad Had to Sleep With Gloves On. Suffered Agony. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Completely Cured.

P. O. Box 378, El Paso, Texas.—"My trouble began December, 1911. It commenced on me by causing a scurf-like skin and my toe joints, finger joints and lips commenced to crack and split open. My finger cracks would bleed all day long; the cracks were very deep and my thumbs seemed to be cracked to the bone. My hands were so bad that I had to sleep with gloves on. The cracks in my lips would bleed often during the day and I used to put adhesive plaster across them to try to keep them closed. My toes would bleed and I would find blood in my socks when the day's work was done. The skin around the cracks was red and inflamed. I wore shoes one size too large on account of my feet being so sore. I used to become frantic with pain at times. My hands and feet used to smart.

"I suffered agony for four months. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and as a last resort I answered and got samples immediately. After trying them one night the next morning I found relief. I went to town and got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. From the time I commenced with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment until completely cured was just nineteen days." (Signed) Jack Harrison, Nov. 19, 1912.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold throughout the world. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Promises Punishment of Dixon's Assailants and Release of Two Americans.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—Spurred by President Wilson's demand for the punishment of the men who shot United States Immigration Agent Charles B. Dixon at Juarez, and the release of two other American prisoners, President Huerta to-day ordered an investigation of the case.

President Wilson's peremptory demand, presented to the Huerta Government by Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American Charge d'Affaires, demanded the immediate courtmartial and punishment of the Federal officers who shot Dixon, and the immediate release of McDonald and Bissell, United States citizens, who were condemned to death by Pasqual Orozco.

Huerta promised the release of the two prisoners and the punishment of those who shot Dixon. Dixon is now undergoing treatment in an El Paso hospital.

After O'Shaughnessy had left the President, Huerta called in his Foreign Minister and ordered him to comply with the demands of President Wilson. A most energetic campaign is now in progress at Juarez, according to word received to-day.

American residents are delighted with the firm stand taken by President Wilson and express the belief that if such a step had been taken long ago the present revolution would not have been started and Mexico would have been completely pacified.

Aviator's Bomb Sinks Mexican Ship; Others Flee.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 29.—Mexican Federal gunboats being used in the shelling of Guaymas withdrew from their positions in the harbor today following the sinking of the gunboat Tampico.

President Thinks Mediation Is Solution.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—No Cabinet meeting was held to-day. This gave President Wilson time to study the reports and recommendations on the Mexican situation submitted to him by Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson.

The President, it was said at the White House to-day, believes mediation in some form is the logical solution of the Mexican tangle.

Notwithstanding expert opinion that mediation should not be considered and the views of Ambassador Wilson, who yesterday informed him that in his opinion conciliation of this kind should not be attempted, the President is determined, it is said, to try mediation first, either through a conciliating commission or by direct appeal to the warring factions in Mexico.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—That Americans and other foreigners are in danger if the United States fails to recognize the Huerta administration in Mexico, is the opinion prevailing here. While high Government officials decline to discuss the impending crisis, Minister of Gubernacion Urrutia, who is generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the Huerta Government, has been predicting that President Wilson will recognize the administration by to-morrow.

It is believed the conflicting views of Ambassador Wilson and the President presage the announcement of the plan for mediation by the United States. The plan will not be accepted by Huerta, according to Government officials, as interference by the United States is unwelcome.

Envoy Called Before Senate Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Ambassador Wilson will appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, to discuss with that body the situation in Mexico.

At a meeting to-day the committee authorized Chairman Bacon to request the State Department to direct the Ambassador to appear before the committee.

Report Hoke Smith Backed Negro U. S. Official Is False

The Georgian Monday printed a press dispatch from Washington which stated that Senator Hoke Smith had called on President Wilson to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, a negro, to be Register of the Treasury.

Being in doubt as to the accuracy of the dispatch, The Georgian wired Senator Smith for an expression of his attitude on the negro's appointment. Tuesday morning Senator Smith wired as follows:

Washington, D. C., July 28.

The Georgian, Atlanta:

The report is utterly false. I told the President I would oppose the confirmation and endeavor to defeat the appointment.

I.W.W. Protest Buried By President's Aide

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The protest from the Industrial Workers of the World against what they termed the "incendiary tactics" of Secretary of the Navy Daniels at Seattle, about ten days ago, reached the White House to-day.

Receipt of the protest was acknowledged by Joseph Tumulty, secretary to the President, who placed the paper in a pigeonhole without bringing it to the attention of the President.

For instance:

An elegant Suit of rich coloring and material has a coat of matelasse in burgundy color with skirt of plaid storm serge in burgundy and blue. Long cutaway coat, draped skirt, button-trimmed. This suit is only $25.

The coats are much longer than last season, and are in cutaway style; some taper to a decided point in back.

Among the leading shades are: Browns—from light, leather tones through to very rich mahogany. Red tones are good, too—very dark, shading into wines and mulberry. Blues, of course, are in favor and many new shades are shown.

SLAIN ENGINEER CALLED VICTIM OF SLANDER

W. D. Porter Pleads Self-Defense for Killing Samuel Jackson in Georgia Road Roundhouse.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis, the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

Monday the tale came to the ears of the husband of the woman, and he asked Jackson about it. Jackson, it is said, denied the accusation, and suggested that both confront Partee and make him retract the statements.

Carried Coat Over Arm.

Jackson and the husband, according to the evidence secured by the detectives waited until Partee came in from his run, and then entered the roundhouse to ask him about the statements he is said to have made. Partee was standing in about the center of the roundhouse when Jackson entered. The latter had his coat thrown over his arm.

"Partee," said Jackson, "I——"

As Jackson spoke, according to the police, Pardee turned quickly, drew a revolver, and fired. The bullet struck Jackson in the neck and ranged upward, penetrating the brain. Jackson was hurried to Grady Hospital, where he died on the operating table fifteen minutes after the shot was fired. Partee surrendered to the police and is still locked up in police headquarters on a charge of murder. He probably will be given a preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Claims Self-Defense.

Partee declared, after his arrest, that he shot Jackson because he thought Jackson was going to shoot him. He admitted there had been bad blood between them for some time, but declined to give any cause for the trouble.

"Jackson has been gunning for me for some time," said Partee. "He has been making threats to kill me, and I have been told of these threats I have gone armed for the past week, and was determined to take no chances when he attacked me. When I alighted from my engine Monday afternoon and turned to walk into the roundhouse, I turned and saw Jackson walking toward me. He had his coat thrown over his arm, and I thought he had a revolver concealed in it. I called to him several times to halt, and when he refused to do so, I drew my gun and fired. I did it to save my own life."

No weapon was found on Jackson when his clothing was searched by the police.

PONY RIVALS IN SCRAMBLE FOR FREE VOTES

Final Offer About to End—Contest Man Again Warns Against Overconfidence.

Red Letter Ballots, the sort that yield 2,000 votes for $2, must be turned in by The Georgian and American pony contestants before Tuesday night. From indications close to the hour of closing, thousands upon thousands of votes will be earned in just this way by the boys and girls trying to win one of the beautiful Shetlands.

J. D. Tucker, Decatur, R. No. 1.

Thursday night the contest comes to a close. All the struggle and excitement will be over then, and nothing will remain but to count the votes and announce the winners.

Between now and Thursday night, though, the tale will be told. There is not a contestant who has his place "clinched"—not one who can not be beaten. Some of the contestants will dispute this. They believe themselves safe. They are not. Overconfidence is going to bring grief to many a youngster.

By way of diversion, however, there will be a parade of the 22 ponies Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, in which all the contestants are invited to participate. It will be a last glimpse of the ponies before they pass into the hands of new owners.

DENIES SHE PUT GLASS IN DRINK FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Blanche Sweat Declares the Relatives of Mate Incited Him to Make Charge.

Emphatic denial of her husband's charges that she tried to kill him by putting particles of broken glass in his coffee cup are made in the cross bill filed by Mrs. Blanch Sweat in answer to the petition for divorce filed recently by her husband, E. R. Sweat. The husband bases his plea for divorce on the assertion that his wife had tried to kill him by placing the glass in his cup.

In her cross bill Mrs. Sweat declares that Sweat himself had, through accident and while drunk, placed the broken glass in the cup. The incident occurred at supper time on July 15, 1913, Mrs. Sweat says. She asserts that Sweat had broken the covering of the sugar bowl of which he had sweetened his coffee, and that some of the glass had dropped into the cup. Mrs. Sweat declares that when she learned the glass was in the cup she had asked her husband to secure medical attention, which he refused to do.

Mrs. Sweat also charges her husband's parents with prejudicing him against her, and declares that they induced him to accuse her of placing the glass in the cup. At first, she says, her husband told her he had dropped the glass in the cup, but that later, after he had conferred with his parents, accused her of trying to kill him.

Mrs. Sweat asserts also that she has been assaulted and brutally treated by her husband's father, for which, she says, he is now under bond in the Superior Court. She also charges her husband with drunkenness and failure to support her.

T. N. Page Delays Arrival at Rome

Special Cable to The Georgian.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

GIRL IN CONTEST PROVES SELF LIVE WIRE

Keeps Her Eyes Open and Gets the Business—Opportunity Open for All Contestants.

There's at least one girl worker in The Georgian's Want Ad Contest who is going to be a real business woman some day. She is a live wire.

She walked up Oak street in West End, planning a call on a friend. As she passed Ashby street she saw a negro woman with a telescope grip in one hand and a bundle in the other, leaving a house. Miss Contestant walked in, rang the bell, and the mistress of the house came to the door.

"I want to find you a new cook to take the place of the one just quit," said Miss Contestant.

The housewife looked puzzled.

"A Georgian Want Ad will do it," explained Miss Contestant. "The cook will be here -tomorrow."

And the next morning the housewife had a choice of four would-be servants, brought by one little ad which cost 20 cents.

A Want Ad in The Sunday American or The Georgian will find almost any want, as Atlanta readers have learned by experience. Contestants in the race for an automobile, a piano, a trip to Callafornia and other prizes are learning how to suggest want ads, and almost every person they approach finds a need he hadn't thought of before. And the Want Ad way is the quickest way on earth to get results.

Friends of the contestants may send their want ads direct to the office if they like, requesting that their votes be cast for any contestant they desire to name. Somebody is going to win a handsome prize, and your friend might as well be the winner.

Burglars Make Two Attempts to Break Into Home of Juror

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

When Officers Shumate and Cochran, who answered the call, arrived five minutes later, the burglars were gone.

Hundreds of New Suits Have Arrived, That the Women of Atlanta May See and Know The Fashions for Fall.

The woman whose vacation will take her to the cool mountains or northern resorts will find in these new fall models the weight and style of suit that will serve her best. They are not too heavy, and yet they are, in line, in material, in trimming, the style that will be best for fall.

There are literally hundreds of new suits now lined up in the big crystal cases, bringing their message of new styles, new fabrics, new colors, new fashion-turns.

We emphasize the quantity merely to impress that the announcement of this display is based upon the fact that the display is indeed worthy of the attention of every woman who would off with the old and on with the new.

The suits are ready!

And they are novel and interesting.

Novel and interesting from many viewpoints.

There are draped cutaway coats; there are cutaway coats that button close up to the neck, and there are others that have the semblance of a blouse—all different from styles we have known.

And coats are to be longer this fall, they measure 38 to 42 inches.

Many of the skirts are slashed, many are draped in one way and another.

Materials show the new scheme of things. Soft finished fabrics are prominent, velour cloths self-striped, crepons, ratine striped fabrics, bayadere poplins, trimmings often take a contrasting shade, and again the use of embroidered velvet is pronounced on collars, on cuffs, on skirts.

What are the colors?

See with your own eyes! Naming the mahogany, cinnamon, prune, amethyst, Copenhagen and navy shades is but poor apology for their richness and beauty.

This is a worthy display of the new suit fashions, one that a woman may approach with the confidence that the suit she selects will be an authentic style.

AGED PAIR FLEE IN TERROR OF POORHOUSE

Illinois Couple Reach Atlanta After Wandering Aimlessly About Country for a Month.

Fleeing from an Illinois poorhouse, William Smith and his wife, both more than 80 years old, arrived in Atlanta Monday afternoon after a month of aimless drifting about the country, with no money and no idea of their ultimate destination.

They had eaten nothing for nearly twelve hours, their clothes were mere rags, and they were so feeble they had to be assisted to seats in the station by Train Caller Charles Griffin and the matron, Mrs. J. W. Payne.

A month ago they had a little home in Brown County, Ill., they said, a house and an acre or two on which they raised enough to keep them alive. One day the old man hurt his foot. Unable to work, they appealed to their neighbors for aid. The county officials took up the matter and decided to send them to the poorhouse.

The old man and his wife, once fairly well-to-do, were terror-stricken at the thought of living on the bounty of the county. When the poorhouse wagon came and took their furniture and their meager belongings they pleaded to be allowed to spend one more night in their own home. That night they gathered what little of their clothing was left, collected their few pennies and fled.

Their only idea of their destination is that they want to "go somewhere South." They have no relatives, but say they have a friend in the "South" who owns a plantation.

The old people were taken in charge by Mrs. Payne and Mr. Griffin and made as comfortable as possible for the night. They were still at the Terminal Station at an early hour Tuesday morning, and it has not yet been determined what will be done with them. They say they are willing to go anywhere except to a poorhouse.

Thousands Suffer For Food in Sofia

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BELGRADE, July 29.—Unless food can be rushed to Sofia thousands will die of starvation. The cutting of railroad communications due to the war between Bulgaria and the other Balkan states, has cut off all supplies. There is considerable suffering among all classes.

As a last resort, Bulgaria to-day appealed to Roumania to reopen the route between Varna and Sofia so that food can be rushed to the Bulgarian capital.

The Rev. Mr. Craighill was ordained by Bishop Nelson, of Atlanta, in 1898.

MISSING HEIRESS WAS ON A VISIT, SAYS FATHER

Orlando Awtrey, of Acworth, Ga., whose daughter, Miss Lynette Awtrey, vanished while en route from New York to Atlanta, has issued a statement in which he declares that his daughter's disappearance from home was the result of a change in her plans by which she decided to visit friends in the West.

He declares that in all probability she failed to notify him of her change of plans because, having been away for several months, she didn't realize that any additional delay in reaching home would cause uneasiness. His statement follows:

"My daughter left home in May on a tour of Europe with a party of Georgians, conducted by Miss Olive Faw, a teacher of Marietta.

"Before leaving home she purchased a ticket for an extensive tour of Europe and was provided with funds for a much longer tour, if she desired to take it.

"On completing the first tour that the party was making, she consulted me about the second one, and decided to return home. Leaving the party in London, she sailed from Southampton and reached New York City with ample funds, probably about $200. She reached there last week.

"On reaching New York she wired me of her safe arrival, and, as she had plenty of funds, she seems to have changed her plans for coming directly home and to have gone on a trip into the West. She had, however, sent a portion of her baggage home, and when it reached Acworth without her, the family naturally began to feel uneasy and started an investigation as to her whereabouts.

"Having been away for several months, she probably didn't realize that a few days of additional delay would cause any special uneasiness.

"On reaching her destination she wired me and is now en route home. She has made several former visits to the West and has friends there."

Miss Awtrey went to Ogden, Utah, from which place she sent a telegram last Sunday asking for aid. She probably will arrive within a week.

CHAINS FOR WIFE DESERTERS URGED

Probation Officer Coogler is preparing a bill which he will present to the Legislature, providing for the punishment of the man who deserts his wife and children. The bill will be sent to a member of the Fulton County delegation with the request that it be introduced in the House.

The bill provides that a man refusing to support his wife or child shall first be brought before the probation officer, and if such office does not exist in the county, then to be taken before the Ordinary and placed on probation to support them. In the event of his failure to do this, after being placed on probation, he will be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a heavy fine or one year's sentence at hard labor on the chaingang.

In the event of the payment of a fine by the defendant on a charge like this, the bill provides that the fine, either in whole or part, shall be turned over to the probation officer or Ordinary for the support of the deserted wife or child.

CHAINGANGS IN GEORGIA

You Will Write "Hope" Into Our Laws

---Proverbs 30-19.

"Judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor."
---Proverbs 31:9.

"For we are saved by hope."
---Romans 8:24.

The child-mother is nursing her fatherless baby.

What have we done to her?

You said in your laws:

"She can sell herself if she is ten years old."

But she must be twenty-one before she can trade a cow or hog.

You appropriated thousands of dollars to save cattle from the tick—

Thousands to make hog cholera serum—

You gave nothing for these pitiable girls.

Georgia has no place for them.

For the want of it, seventy-five known to us—they are only children—they are being lost to-day.

Only God knows how many more!

Forty-four other States have reformatories for such as these.

The bill introduced by Jones of Coweta, and Mills of Butts, provides a reformatory for girls in Georgia.

The Prison Commission approves it.

The Penitentiary Committee has unanimously recommended that it pass.

The Committee on Appropriations referred it to a subcommittee of Judge W. H. Griffin, Chairman; S. E. Berry, C. F. Holberg, A. B. Greene and J. L. Lane.

They have recommended that thirty thousand dollars be appropriated and the bill be made the law.

Father, grant that this be done.

No man in Georgia values a cow or hog more than he does a girl.

We had not seen the bitter need.

You can and will provide for these.

You arrested him for this.

He did not have the money to pay his fine.

For this lack of funds, we clothed him in stripes and put him in our chaingang for eight months.

If our laws had provided for probation, our Judge could have released the boy on good behavior.

He could have given the boy a chance.

By writing Probation into our laws, you would not compel—

But you would give your Judge the right to save a boy or girl.

A bill introduced by Senator Tarver and Representatives Myrick and Gower making this the law is pending in the Legislature.

Judges and the Prison Commission—

And the Judiciary Committees of both Houses have approved it.

You will.

If the Indeterminate Sentence were the law in Georgia, a Judge in sentencing a man would say:

"Not less than ——— not more than ——— years."

Within the limits named, the man's stay in the penitentiary would depend upon himself.

Hope of liberty instead of fear of the lash would make him obey.

He would win release by showing himself fit to be free.

His incentive for not committing crime again would be this: caught a second time, he might be sentenced as an habitual criminal for the greatest number of years prescribed for that particular crime.

In Illinois, in the twelve years before the indeterminate sentence became the law, one judge sentenced either three or four different times the same one hundred criminals.

In the twelve years since it was made the law, only four have had to be re-sentenced by him.

Commitments to the penitentiary have been forty per cent less despite the great increase in population in that State in the ten years since the indeterminate sentence became part of its law.

Twenty-two States have adopted it.

The Prison Commission and the Penitentiary Committees of the House and Senate approve the bill of Senator Foster and Representative Loyd that will make it the law of Georgia.

You will help make this the aim of Georgia.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now, I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return.

It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

If you are blessed with a good memory, don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

THIS STORY WON PRIZE OF $100.00

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.

375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,

Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him. "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runabout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and leggins.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidden among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. At the same instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can; when you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that Mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habits and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keeping no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases, it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

"Gordon Kelly batting in place of Leonard."

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" yells the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon fouls the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor.'

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will 'equire it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it, the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued.

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"I thought the lady looked peculiar.

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying, I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that, you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

The young man reached for a fan. "Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

The young man took a piece of ice out of a lemonade glass and pressed it to his brow.

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

MAULL BROS.,
St. Louis, Mo.

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt to happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

I had female weakness so bad that I had to doctor all the time and never found relief until I took your remedies to please my husband. I recommend your wonderful medicine to all sufferers as I think it is a blessing for all women."—Mrs. L. E. Wyckoff, 112 S. Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

There need be no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to remedy woman's diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical. Why don't you try it?

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says, "they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

Salesman—Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age!

Passer-by (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Salesman—A magnetized keyhole plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary steel key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole at night is to take out your key and hang on to it.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

BRICKLEY WITH MACKMEN; MAY PLAY IN THE OUTFIELD

She Couldn't See Pa Anywhere Around

Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physican said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 50-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles an hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-Away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

LEACH CROSS AND BALDWIN MIX TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A small army of riding celebrities will be on hand at Vernon arena to-night to see Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin scheduled twenty-round bout. The affair appears to be one that the boxers themselves have long been wanting to see, as it is known that considerable bad blood exists between Leach and Matty.

Seat reservations have been made by Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast, Joe Rivers, Bud Anderson, Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard, "Bull" Young and Harry Trendall, the latter having come all the way from St. Louis to challenge the winner of to-night's go.

Cross has faced Matty twice, and each time came away with second money and a sore jaw. Matty holds a twenty-round decision over Willie Ritchie, the present champion. But this victory was earned before Ritchie was considered to be of championship caliber.

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when the battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

Thirty-Minute Race On To-night

Glenn Says He'll Beat Luther

FOR 30 minutes to-night at the Motordrome five two-men teams will whirl around the wooden saucer at an 85-mile-an-hour clip. Barring accidents, this will be by far the most exciting event that has ever been staged here.

All ten of the riders spent the day tuning up their motors and each predicts a victory for their team. They also practiced relieving their partners. The man riding has to come off the track onto the flat space in front of the paddock and touch his partner on the shoulder before the latter can take up the sprinting.

The early arrivals to-night will grab the seats in front of the paddock as this will enable them to witness the "relieving."

Here is how the teams are made up: Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

* * *

BUT the 30-minute race is not the only event carded that is attracting attention. The Motordrome Sweepstakes ought to be a corker. There will be two qualifying heats. In the first the riders will be Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel and Lewis. In the second Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil and Glenn will start.

McNeil and Richards are bitter enemies once they get hooked up in a race. Richards holds a couple of decisions over the little Scotchman, but Jock's machine is O. K. now and he is confident that to-night he will lead Tex to the wire.

Harry Glenn and Luther are going to battle in a two-mile match race, two best heats out of three. Glenn beat Schwartz the other night, and says he will surely down Luther. But the latter's motor is going immense these days and he predicts the local boy will have to be satisfied with second place.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the program for to-night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (1 mile to qualify and 2-mile final). Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance, 2 miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over 20 consecutive minutes.)

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 29.—Bloomington (Three-I) owners have refused Sacramento's offer of $1,000 for Shortstop Bruce Hartford.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time than an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest riff down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARSATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Haban, the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a local hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

CLARKE WILL TRY TO STOP GULLS TODAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—The Gulls seemed to have such a liking for right-hand dealing that Manager Smith decided last night to flip from the other side of the deck, so he turned up George Clarke, who will work this afternoon. Dunn will catch the game out, provided he can control his conversation.

The jinx still pursues us. Whitey Alperman's operation for appendicitis yesterday was said to have been just in time, and, at that, Whitey had about as close a call as possible. We hear he is resting well to-day, and that the chances are in his favor. But, of course, he won't be able to play ball any more this season.

The Crackers held a little meeting yesterday and Billy Smith appointed Wally Smith to be field captain in Whitey's place. Wally also will play second base, and Frank Manush will go to third. Bill Bailey's injury leaves an outfield job vacant, and Smith is going to try out a recruit from Selma in the Cotton States League; a big chap named Holz, who came along with Pitcher Love.

Holz pegs right handed and hits from the port side of the platter. He is said to be a good batter and a fast fielder, and we are hoping he will help to brace our crippled line-up.

There isn't much to say about the game yesterday. The Gulls got to Thompson for a big lead, and then we got to Pug Cavet and made it all square, only to lose out, 6 to 5, in the ninth inning. We did manage to deliver a kick or two, which is encouraging. Maybe we will win a ball game by one run some day, the way we have been losing them all lately.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Leach Cross is to have his final test for a bout with Willie Ritchie when he takes on Matty Baldwin in a twenty-round battle at Los Angeles to-night. Promoter Tom McCarey has promised the winner a match with the champion and Tom's word is usually as good as gold.

* * *

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender.

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 2.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Colo., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 22. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to bet Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 22. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

* * *

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Crackers Slip Into Fourth Place

Don't Count G. Molesworth Out Yet

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE gleam penetrates the Stygian gloom of the situation.

The Crackers finally delivered a kick.

It may have been a dying kick. But a kick's a kick, for a' that.

With a shot-to-pieces line-up, with Alperman in the hospital minus an appendix, Bill Bailey carrying a couple of ribs in a sling, Wally Smith at second base, Manush at third and Chapman playing right field without his mitt, the disheveled Smithies collected themselves yesterday afternoon and landed a solid punch on the revered Pug Cavet.

The trouble was that the Gulls kicked Thompson first—and last.

And now the Town Boys are crouching on the rim of Lower Four, wondering how soon the porter will turn out the lights.

* * *

LITERARY TIP FROM WHITEY.

Believe me, boys, this is no nonsense:
When your tummy again and again kicks,
Don't fool with the Table of Contents—
Look it up in the blamed old Appendix!

* * *

Whitey's wise old noodle and timely bat are bound to be sadly missed in the final drive. Not that Wally Smith isn't a good, heady player and a man who, as field captain, will keep his mates well on their toes. Wally is all of that.

But the combination, of necessity, will be unsettled for a bit. Bill Bailey also is out of the game and a Cotton States rookie, Holz, will appear in right field this afternoon. Manush will play third and Wally Smith second.

On the other hand, the shakeup may shift the breaks, which certainly haven't been coming our way lately.

Anyway, we're in for it. And instead of blubbering over the latest handicap for the Crackers, let's just cheer up over the report that good old Whitey, in a tough sprint against the Old Boy with the Sickle, is pulling ahead to-day.

* * *

TURNING the burglar-finder on the little club that has supplanted the Town Boys at the dizzy elevation of third place, we discern without much difficulty that odd equine anomaly, the Dark Horse.

Gladys Molesworth is up, and how d. h. can run at all is by us. Gladys' managerial worries seem to sit lightly on his embonpoint.

The real point, however, is that the Barons have bludgeoned their way upward from seventh place since June 8. That achievement was largely at the expense of Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans and Memphis. The latter pair are thrown in merely as lagniappe, because any club that can trim the Billikens and the Gulls this year would find a pleasant relaxation playing the rest of the bunch.

* * *

THE Baronial collection is one that might be expected to speed up toward the shank of the season. No fewer than eleven of Molesworth's hands have worn the spangles of the big show at one time or another. Of these, Foxen, Mayer, Moley, McDonald and Kniseley moved for very respectable periods in select company.

And with the advent of the real hotness in weather circles, and the time of year when the old strain begins to turn the edge of the younger generation's dash and daring, the old boys are rounding to.

We decline to count Gladys out yet.

* * *

SWITCHING to politics, it seems Colonel Robert Lee Hedges—sometimes known as the Sick Man of Baseball because he is unfortunate enough to be responsible for the St. Louis Browns—it seems Colonel Hedges is hedging.

The report persists that the Colonel is going to finance the Montgomery club of the Southern League. He is even accused of intending to buy the Billikens' franchise outright.

That is carrying things rather far. But the Billies need help, and Colonel Hedges can afford it, in spite of the Browns.

On the whole, intimate diplomatic relations between Montgomery and the Browns mightn't be a bad idea at all.

If the Browns continue to evince a disposition to travel farther south than eighth place in the American League, Colonel Hedges might swap them for the Billikens.

NOW some statistician is trying to show that because New York bugs persist in packing the Polo Grounds to see the Giants clean up on the pop-eyed Cardinals, St. Louis is enabled by the cut in the "gate" to stick in the league with a club that is totally unable to give any pangs of joy to the wretched fans on the home lot.

It is said the Cardinals carried away $12,500 as their share of a recent series at the Polo Grounds.

McGraw should worry.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

The Pirates, outside of Carey, who cornered half of the hits, could do nothing with Seaton, and the Phillies scored another easy victory.

Earl Moore, released by the Phillies to St. Louis, and who refused to report to the Cardinals, is now the property of the Chicago Cubs, according to an announcement of Charles W. Murphy.

The Cubs pounded the ball hard in the game with Boston and the Braves trailed from the beginning.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29.

Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and, as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $300 a month.

WHY NOT?

They are sending auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell.
They inject them in the hoose gow for a long and dreary spell.
Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark.
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

We have given up all hope that Ad Wolgast will come back. Jones has quit him, and Tom never gave up a meal ticket until the meals were all punched.

Ty Cobb is dissatisfied again, leading one to suspect that he aims to be the Bob LaFollette of baseball.

If Tyrus were an up-to-date young man he would augment his meager salary by busting into the chautauqua circuit.

CHAUTALKING.

"I am starving," said the athlete,
"On my miserable pay."
So he beat it from the ball yard
And chautalked the livelong day.

It is said that the dead do not return, and yet Bombardier Wells is mached with Gunner Moir.

We note that Jess Willard is going to fight in Los Angeles. That is, he will enter the ring in Los Angeles. Even his bitterest enemies never would accuse him of fighting.

The report that Pal Brown is going to Australia leads us to hope that he is a good swimmer.

It is rumored that since Ad Wolgast took up the job of managing himself he has had the worst manager in pugilism.

One can hardly blame those English tennis experts if they chuckle when they see their American brethren kicking in with a flock of alibis.

—BEWARE OF IMITATIONS—

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games

Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fail to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outlucked us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

TIGERS BUY PITCHER.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 29.—Russell Betsill, of Enoree, S. C., a member of the pitching staff of the Asheville club, of the North Carolina League, was sold to-day to the Detroit club, of the American League. The price paid for the player has not been given out.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Atlanta Man Plans $200,000 Building

Award to Thornton Mayre—Contractors Seek $1,000,000 Job. $40,000 Cash for Lot.

Local contractors and architects continue to be successful bidders on jobs outside of Atlanta. Recently announcement was made of a considerable architectural job in Spartanburg, S. C., landed by A. Ten Eyck Brown, and now comes the announcement that a fellow architect, P. Thornton Marye, is to draw plans for the new $200,000 courthouse of Wake County, North Carolina. Frank P. Simpson, of North Carolina, is associate architect.

Contractors have been invited to bid on the new twenty-one-story building of the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Memphis, and inasmuch as several are in the competition, the chances of an award to a local concern are considered good. One of the largest contracting firms in the country is bidding on this job through its Atlanta office, and there are others. The cost will be $1,000,000, or more.

Refuses $40,000 Cash.

That many people are in the real estate market with cash to pay for good property is borne out in an offer on West Peachtree street which has just been declined. E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, carried on offer of $40,000 cash to Mrs. J. A. Finley for her home at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and Simpson streets, but the offer was refused. This was at the rate of $800 a foot, since the Finley lot fronts 50 feet.

Subdivision Sales.

W. H. Allen, of the Edwin P. Ansley Agency, and H. N. Van Devander have sold to George L. Morris six residence lots in their City View Park, corner of Ashby street and Mayson and Turners Ferry road, for a total of $3,000, or $500 a lot. The lots are mostly 40 feet wide by 112 to 165 feet deep. They have been on the market only a week and Mr. Allen expects to close up sales for eight more in a few days.

Record of Deeds.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale Saturday of No. 532 Ponce DeLeon avenue from R. C. Taylor to Dr. William Asher, for $9,500. The lot is 55 by 231 feet and is 234 feet west of Bonaventure street.

Durant Place Dwelling.

Edward M. Durant will soon start another house on Durant Place, just a few rods north of Ponce DeLeon avenue. Permit for a $2,500 structure of two stories has been sought at the office of Building Inspector Ed R. Hayes. Durant Place contains some of the most attractive medium-priced houses in the city. It is a neighborhood very much like West Peachtree Park, which A. B. Buehl has developed with attractive houses.

Peachtree Store Leased.

The Goodyear Raincoat Company has leased for a short term the store at No. 35 Peachtree, which was formerly a part of the Nunnally establishment at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue. The price is not given. The Nunnally Company obtained control of this property through the Clarke estate, owners.

J. H. Ewing and Shorter Rankin, of the Smith and Ewing Real Estate Agency, will leave for New York Friday to make loan connections for their firm and to bring home some money for substantial improvements in Atlanta. Mr. Rankin is interested in the loans and Mr. Ewing in the other item, a more definite announcement of which is expected soon.

To Remodel Plaza Hotel.

Work is expected to start in a few days on the renovation of the old Plaza Hotel, at the southern junction of the Peachtrees, plans for the same having been completed some time ago for Colonel Willis E. Ragan, the owner of this valuable triangle. The architect is A. F. N. Everett, who has designed a store for the point of the triangle at the south. A drug concern will probably locate in the latter space and the main building is expected to be leased as a hotel or large boarding house.

Copper Mines Open; Guarded by Troops

CALUMET, MICH., July 29.—Twenty-one of the 30 copper mines in the Calumet district were in operation today and plans were being made to resume work in the others to-night.

The 18,000 striking miners made no demonstrations to-day at any of the mines. State troops on duty at the shafts kept the strikers from congregating about the mines.

Connecticut Bars Runaway Weddings

HARD FIGHT NEAR OVER MILITIA BILL

Opponents Draw Measures to Offset Plan to Restrict Calling Out of Troops.

A contest over the question of calling out the State militia in case of riot probably will be precipitated in the General Assembly following the introduction of Senator McGregor's bill providing for the making of affidavits by the civil authorities before the Governor orders out troops.

According to information Tuesday two bills are being prepared to be put before the House seeking to revive the old law, repealed last year, giving to a judge, a Mayor, a Sheriff or other civil authority, the power to call out a company of militia in case of riot.

Under the present law the militia can be called out only by the Governor, who has the right to investigate before taking action.

Senator McGregor's bill has the support of the Governor and the military authorities, including Adjutant General Van Holt Nash. Every effort will be made to have it passed in the Senate before the allegeda reactionary House bills are acted on.

Gallinger Resents Tillman's Attack On Suffragettes

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, rose to the defense of the high-minded Southern women who favor equal suffrage to-day when he protested against the appearance in The Congressional Record this morning of an article by the late Albert Taylor Bledsoe.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, yesterday secured the consent of the Senate to have the article printed in The Record. To-day when a dozen Senators had protested indignantly against the article word was sent to Senator Tillman and he hurried to the chamber and asked to have it withdrawn.

The article was written several years ago. It warned the women of the South not to follow the pace set by the strong-minded women of the North, who "would fain enter the lists with pothouse politicians and become the rivals of negroes."

Heat Wave Sneaks Back; Showers to Bring Some Relief

People who believe in mental suggestion are trying to keep cool by looking at the scenes in the Frozen North, which are being shown at a local theater this week, while nonbelievers are wearing just as few clothes as possible. The customary breezes were not on duty Tuesday and the heat was unusually oppressive downtown.

Monday night was cool enough for comfort, with the mercury at 72 at daybreak. As the hands of the clock climbed, the mercury climbed, too, and at 1 o'clock it stood at 90.

Relief is promised by thundershowers Tuesday night and Wednesday.

Essig Co. to Furnish Uniforms to Police

For the third consecutive time, Essig Bros. Co. has been awarded the contract to furnish uniforms for the Atlanta police.

A departure was made in the summer uniforms, a light weight serge being substituted for the heavy doeskin formerly used. This uniform has given great satisfaction, it being not only a great deal lighter, but has worn so well that very few officers will be forced to purchase new ones next summer.

The material selected for winter is a 28-ounce doeskin, every garment made to measure.

Asks Funds to Study Tariff Bill's Effect

WASHINGTON, July 29.—It was ported to-day that Secretary of Commerce Redfield will appear before the House Appropriations Committee to ask for $100,000 to investigate the effect of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill upon business.

While he has not yet made his plans public, it is known that he desires the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to undertake the inquiry should the appropriations be allowed.

Family Feud in Crisp Results in Stabbing

CORDELE, July 29.—Because it is alleged he made remarks reflecting on Mrs. John Warren, Ambrose Powell, a Crisp County farmer, was stabbed several times in the back by his brother-in-law, Harry Blanchard, a brother of Mrs. Warren. Powell says he was waylaid by Blanchard and Warren.

It is said that a family feud has existed for years. Powell is at a local hospital in a serious condition. Warrants have been obtained for Warren and Blanchard, but no arrests have been made.

GAG FOR POLICE IS PROVIDED IN HOUSE BILL

An echo of the charges made during the early stages of the Phagan case, that the investigation of the mystery was hampered by too much publicity given the evidence and the movements of the detectives, is heard in a bill introduced in the House Tuesday morning by Representative D. P. Methvin, of Clayton County.

Mr. Methvin's bill prohibits detectives, sheriffs and all other officers from giving out evidence obtained against criminals or supposed criminals, except under oath. The bill permits the giving of such evidence to the prosecuting attorney or the leading counsel for the defense, but expressly prohibits detectives and other officers from giving any evidence to the general public.

The bill provides a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment, for violation of the law.

The introduction of the bill aroused considerable discussion in the lobbies of the House. The general impression appears to be that the bill will meet with opposition, and it is not considered likely to pass. Friends of the measure declare it is designed to remedy such conditions as arose during the Phagan case, when evidence obtained by the detectives was often published before it was reported to their superiors.

Other important bills introduced in the House Tuesday morning follow:

By Smith, of Fulton—Relative to the custody and control of minor children, and to provide under what circumstances they shall be awarded to the mother, and under what circumstances to the father.

By Slaten, of Bryan—To provide for the employment of a limited number of convicts upon trunk line public roads.

By Slater, of Bryan, and Methvin, of Dodge—A bill to enjoin and restrain the keepers of lewd houses, and to declare such houses a nuisance.

By Greene, of Houston—To provide for the establishing of a school of agriculture.

By Crawley and Cooper—To amend Section 129, Vol 1, of the Code, to provide early primary elections, not later than June 15.

By Clarke and Pierce—To repeal Sections 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433 and 434 of the Code of 1910, relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

By Toole, of Tattnall—A bill to require by grand juries semi-annual inspection of private sanitariums, orphan asylums, convents, Houses of the Good Shepherd, convent schools, monasteries, etc.

He won the prize, a cowboy saddle, his nearest competitor being able to eat only eight pieces.

Three of the pieces Evans ate were made of gooseberries, three of cherries, three of custard and the other two of pumpkin.

Court Too Small; Trial Held Outdoors

BARNWELL, KY., July 29.—The preliminary hearing of May Copeland, confessed slayer of her brother-in-law, Hugh Atchinson, and Lucien Turk, her fiance, held as an accomplice, was held in the courthouse yard to-day.

The crowd wishing to attend the trial was so great that Judge Hobbs ordered a temporary trial chamber arranged in the open air.

Czar's Daughter to Wed Roumanian Heir

Special Cable to The Georgian.

PARIS, July 29.—It was reported here to-day that the engagement of the Grand Duchess Olga, eldest daughter of Czar Nicholas of Russia, and Prince Charles, eldest son of the Crown Prince of Roumania, will be announced shortly.

Fraser Boys' School To Begin New Career

The Donald Fraser School for Boys, in Decatur, which suspended last year, will reopen in September with Professor Paul J. King, formerly of the University School at Stone Mountain, as its official head. Professor King will have an efficient faculty associated with him and a new life is predicted for the famous school.

Donald Fraser will take a leading part in athletics during the coming year, for Mr. King has stated that he is in favor of all varieties of sport. He is now negotiating with one of the best athletic directors in Southern "prep" circles. The limit of the school will be about 60 boys for the first year.

WILSON SCORED IN WHITE SLAVE ROW

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In a speech bristling with criticism of the actions of the administration in the Caminetti-Diggs white slave cases, Representative Julius Kahn, a California Republican, to-day in the House called on the Attorney General for information regarding the postponed trial of these cases.

"The administration has not come out of this controversy with honor and credit," said Kahn. He declared there was abundant evidence of "pull" in both the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

Kahn concluded his speech saying: "Instead of having been blamed and condemned, McNab should have been commended by the President. The President has done just what McNab wanted done, but how is it to be done? By special counsel, who will be paid large fees for doing the very thing that the United States Attorney would have performed as a matter of duty.

"The Department of Justice above all others must be above suspicion. It has long been believed by the masses that there is one kind of law for the rich and the politically powerful in this country and another kind of law for the poor and weak. The action of the Department of Justice in the Caminetti-Diggs cases and the Western Fuel cases would seem to stamp this charge as true."

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Joe Welch at Forsyth.

Joe Welch, the Hebrew comedian, who has made Atlanta laugh many a time, is doing it again this week. His turn is the headliner of the new bill of vaudeville at the Forsyth. He springs many of his old jokes and many new ones, and sings a few new parodies.

Elsa Ward, a pretty young woman, who sings splendidly, takes second honors. Her gown attracts more attention from a certain part of the audience than does her singing, but she has an excellent voice, nevertheless. Other acts are Karl Cress, a painter of oils and water colors; Robert L. Dailey and company in a sketch; Cunningham and Marion, acrobats; the Lefel Trio, gymnasts; a tiresome lot of nonsense by a company of three persons and the Patheplay.

Alaska Pictures Winners.

Educational pictures of the Alaska-Siberia hunt of the Carnegie museum tour, which, starting from Seattle, covered hitherto unexplored lands in the Frozen North, are being shown for the first time in Atlanta at the Grand this week. The pictures are extremely interesting and held the breathless attention of a large audience.

The hunt was made in the interest of science, and to obtain specimens and pictures of wild animal life for the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburg. Scenes that have been visited by few white men are shown and the vast snow fields and mountains of ice shown on the screen are specially suited for the summer season.

65 Sing Sing Rioters Transferred in Irons

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

Space in Demand at Local Goods Exhibit

Space for the manufacturers' exhibit in the Chamber of Commerce building is being rapidly taken up. At a meeting of the Manufacturers' Exhibit Association Monday afternoon Bolling H. Jones, of the Atlanta Stove Works, asked that half of the top floor be reserved for the manufacturers of kitchenware and household furniture. This was granted.

The remaining space will be allotted to manufacturers in other lines and an effort made to close up all leases next week.

Peru in Throes of Political Upheaval

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Unofficial reports of a political upheaval in Peru reached the State Department to-day. The last official dispatches from Lima were received Saturday, but at that time no unusual revolutionary disturbance was indicated.

No details of the nature of the disturbances were received.

BATTLE FOR TAX REFORM BEGUN IN HOUSE

Lipscombe Measure Is Taken Up in Sections as the Special Order of Business.

The first active steps toward tax reform in Georgia were taken by the House Tuesday morning, when the consideration of the Lipscombe bill, which creates a State and County Boards of Tax Equalizers was begun. The bill, together with amendments offered by the Ways and Means Committee and by members from the floor of the House, was made a special order of the day, and was taken up by sections.

The work of perfecting the bill probably will not be completed for several days. Though there were several lively skirmishes to-day, in one of which Speaker Burwell saved a section of the bill, as amended by the committee, by voting aye, opponents of the measure will reserve their heavy fire until the bill comes up for passage. This is not expected until the latter part of the week.

Three Members on Board.

The Lipscombe bill, as amended by the Ways and Means Committee, provides that the State board shall consist of three members appointed by the Governor for two, four and six-year terms. An amendment offered by Moon, of Troup, that the Governor appoint one members from North Georgia, one from South Georgia and one from Central Georgia, was adopted. The county board shall consist of three members appointed by the judge of the Superior Court of the county, upon recommendation of the Board of County Commissioners.

The only fight of any consequence that developed during the consideration of the bill came when section 12, providing for a secretary for the board, was read. The Ways and Means Committee amended the original bill, which provided for a secretary at $2,000 a year by striking the entire section and substituting a provision that the Comptroller General should be secretary of the board at no salary at all. Half a dozen amendments were offered by members from the floor.

Secretary Given $500 Salary.

After much discussion, amendments offered by Representatives Fullbright, Miller and Wimberly were adopted. Mr. Fullbright's amendment provided for the employment of secretary at a salary of $500 a year; Mr. Wimberly's and Mrs. Miller's amendment made the Comptroller General an ex-officio member of the board, to act in an advisory capacity without a vote.

FFifteen sections of the bill were adopted Tuesday. The remaining seven will be considered Wednesday, after which the bill will be placed upon its passage.

Trains Collide in Fog; Brakeman Dead

VALDOSTA, July 29.—In a head-on collision between freight trains on the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, 21 miles north of here, to-day Henry Castello, a negro brakeman, was instantly killed. The other members of the crews jumped and none was seriously hurt, except Engineer Mann, who had an ankle broken.

The collision took place during a fog and, it is said, was caused by the operator at Adel misunderstanding orders and failing to hold the southbound train. The two locomotives and thirteen loaded cars were demolished.

Army Paymaster Liable for $86,510

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Captain R. C. Williams, U. S. A. paymaster at Olongapo, P. I., personally is liable to the Government for $86,510.84 until he presents receipts and evidences that he paid out this amount.

Captain Williams says he paid the money to contractors, soldiers and others to whom payment was due from the Government and that the receipts were lost in the wreck of the collier Brutus at sea.

England May Call On Boers in Mine Strife

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

JOHANNESBURG, July 29.—Business is at a complete standstill here. The miners, angry over the refusal of the Government to meet their demands are in an ugly mood. Threats to burn the mining property have been made.

The men also resent the report that the Government intends to bring commands of armed Boers to quell any possible rioting.

Eugenic Bride of A Month Deserts

BOSTON, July 29.—"Eugenic marriage may be all right as a health proposition, but it isn't a guarantee of future happiness," declared Edwin Perron, of Lynn, the first eugenic husband in Massachusetts.

His wife, he says, ran away a month after the wedding.

Highwaymen Slug Guest of Waldorf

NEW YORK, July 29.—Evidently the victim of a highwayman's assault, Frederick B. Wells, millionaire merchant of Minneapolis, was found to-day lying on the sidewalk at a corner of the lower West Side. He was hatless and coatless.

Wells was hurried to a hospital. He had been stopping at the Waldorf Astoria.

JULY AND AUGUST TAKE AEROPLANE

Spot Sources and Shorts Buy Heavily When Map Failed to Show Rains in Texas.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 3 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Apart from the absence of rain in the southern half of Texas, the map shows favorable conditions. The most favorable developments were the let-up in the heavy rainfall in the Central and Eastern States, where a spell of comparatively dry weather is desired in order to reduce the best results. There were only a few light showers overnight in Oklahoma and the Atlantics, generally fair weather is shown in Texas and Oklahoma. Northwest Texas, Amarillo, had .72 inch of rain.

Indications are for generally fair weather in the West, except possibly some cloudiness over Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma. Part cloudy in the Central and Eastern States, with a few scattered showers.

Houston, Texas, to-day officially recorded the receipt of six new bales of cotton, making receipts to date 31 new, against 13 last year. This supports the contention that, owing to the uniformity of crop development, the movement of new cotton will increase much more rapidly this year when once started.

Our markets showed indecision, opinions varying as to whether to act on the bullish weather conditions in the West, or to expect a bearish effect from the increase in the new movement reflected by the Houston receipts. First trades were at an advance of 3 to 5 points, which was soon lost.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: Fluctuations in the market depend greatly on climatic conditions.

A. Norden & Co.: In such a weather market it seems useless to express any opinion.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think that present conditions are of a nature to promote bullish activity at this time.

Atwood, Violett & Co.: Advantage should be taken of all strong spots to sell on.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, July 29.—The cotton seed oil market was partly lower at the start, but soon rallied on the strength of crude at the South, covering in new crop months and scattered local buying.

COTTON GOSSIP

The market has ruled very steady all day on buying from the some sources as yesterday. Brokers representing spot interests have been principal buyers. Selling has come from the uptown crowd and Wall street apparently. The market is narrow, with transactions small. Until further weather developments prevail a narrow market is looked for with an upward tendency.—Anderson.

Pell interests were credited with buying considerable cotton yesterday on the decline, covering shorts and probably going long on the belief that a large portion of Texas is in a bad way. Riordan purchases supposedly for the above firm were in the neighborhood of 35,000 bales. Liverpool was a large seller.

* * *

Neil Bros., of London, in their latest circular maintain their estimate of 14,750,000 bales as the actual consumption of American cotton for the present season. This estimate was made public the latter part of October, 1912.

* * *

The market is extremely sensitive to all reports and did a lot of nervous flopping around.

* * *

The change is the attitude of the Exchange Place house yesterday did not seem to attract outside buying of consequence, probably because crop conditions as a whole are considered excellent.

* * *

An increased trade demand for contracts is reported on a scale down.

* * *

Further rains in the Western section would undoubtedly bring out heavy sales from Wall Street and the South. It seems purely a weather market now and will be influenced accordingly.

* * *

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crops in Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas:

"Tennessee—Prospects for cotton are better than for many years. The plant is strong and well fruited, with a good stand and free from insects. Fields are clean and well cultivated. A few localities are needing rain, but as a rule precipitation has been ample. Percentage condition is considerably higher than a month ago, when it was 82.7. The season is about normal, though some correspondents report it earlier than usual.

"Louisiana—Owing to drouth and the almost universal presence of the boll weevil, percentage condition appears to have lost a few points from last month, when it was 80.6, but the prospects are better than a year ago, when condition was 74.7. Otherwise, prospects for a large crop are excellent and the outturn depends largely upon the success of the fight against the boll weevil. The plant is strong and healthy, with a fair stand and good fruitage.

"Arkansas—Cotton has maintained its rather high percentage condition of a month ago, when it was 85.4 and 77.7 a year ago. The plant is of good size, with fair stands and fruiting rather heavily. Cultivation and condition of the fields are unusually fine and a number of correspondents look for the biggest crop in years. The only drawback has been the hot dry weather, which has checked growth and fruiting.

"Damage from boll weevil is very slight and the crop is very free from other insect pests."

* * *

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Haywood & Clark: The weather map shows fair over Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas shows rising temperatures. No rain, except .72 at Amarillo, cloudy over Central and Eastern States to light showers in Alabama, Louisiana, Florida and South Carolina. Map favorable owing to less rain in the Central and Eastern States, but unfavorable owing to absence of rain in the lower half of Texas. Indications point to generally fair weather over the Western States, except possibly cloudy in Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma; part cloudy to fair in the Central and Eastern States, possibly few scattered showers there.

* * *

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market had digested reports showing continued dry weather in Central Texas, which produces the bulk of the crop of the Lone Star State. It also had to discount the market effect of probable higher temperatures in that section. Hence the steady tone and higher range in values. The talent is fully aware of the fact that rain relief did not reach North and West Texas in time to figure in the data gathered on July 25 for the government crop condition report, which will be promulgated on August 1. It is also governed in that the official instructions to government agents to watch out for weevil damage will result in some Bureau utterances that will aid the bulls rather than the bears.

"Under the circumstances the rings were inclined to think the decline had gone far enough for the present, and that a moderate upward reaction was in order. Meanwhile, optimistic opinions as to the crop promise reach the rings in numbers every day. On the other hand, Texas is not offering new crop cotton in anything like the volume usual at this time of year, and exporters are beginning to believe that Texas contribution of new cotton during August will be comparatively small, probably very much smaller than that of last year, according to one of them. In normal seasons this is the time when consumers and importers in America sell specific grades and weights in volume for delivery in October, December, January and March. Such business, of course, generally trading in contracts, with the speculator supplying the difference between the long and the short hedges required by the trade."

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The oats crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among reailers generally."

DAMAGE TO CORN WORRIES STREET

By CHARLES W. STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—An irregular tone was shown in the early trading on the Stock Exchange, there being complete absence of vigor which characterized the dealings for the two preceding weeks. In some quarters it was thought that enough long stock was sold to make the market again susceptible to their influence.

Union Pacific yielded ½ and losses of around ½ point were also sustained in Amalgamated, American Can and Canadian Pacific. Steel rose ¼, but later reacted the same amount. Americans were well above parity in London, where the trading was of an irregular character.

The curb was steady.

The market continued irregular with considerable losses and small trading except the buying at the start from London. Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Steel and Chesapeake and Ohio were the most active although they recorded losses. Reading sold ex-dividend of 2 per cent at 160½, a decline of ⅝. Missouri Pacific and Steel common were both off ⅝. Union Pacific lost ½ at 149¾. Northern Pacific and Lehigh Valley both declined ¾. Southern Pacific was off ⅛ to 93. The tone continued weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

STOCK GOSSIP

T. D. Potter says: "The market has every appearance of going higher and stocks like Union Pacific, Reading, Steel and Copper should be bought on every recession.

"I believe another effort to secure higher freight rates will be successful. Steel earnings for quarter published today will probably show $28,250,000. This will be bullish and should have a stimulating effect on prices."

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Speculative sentiment is better in the foreign markets. Information channels favor purchase of Standard stocks on reactions for turns. We would not climb for stocks, but would buy conservatively on fair reactions for moderate profits."

The reactionary tendency of the stock market is due to some reports of damage in sections of France to the corn crop. WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Mean temperatures ranged from 1 to 3 degrees below normal, except in the Central and Southern portions of Texas, and middle and East Tennessee, where there was an excess ranging from 1 to 3 degrees. Weekly mean temperatures ranged from 72 to 84 degrees over the Eastern, from 78 to 82 over the Central, and from 82 to 86 over the Western portion of the cotton region. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 72 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 86, occurred at San Antonio and Tayor, Texas.

Precipitation occurred generally over the cotton region, except that there was none in parts of Central and Southern Texas and at a few stations in Northwestern Oklahoma. More than 2 inches of rain fell during the week over the greater portion of the East Gulf and South Atlantic States, in Southern Louisiana, at a few stations in Arkansas, North Central Texas and South Central Oklahoma.

The greatest weekly amount, 6.20 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La., and there was more than 4 inches in a few other widely scattered localities.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends entirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and looks lower.

"Corn—The map shows no rain in the corn belt and very high temperatures prevailed yesterday in all territories west of the river. As long as present weather conditions prevail higher prices seem inevitable.

"Oats—We believe the market will gradually work higher.

"Provisions—Foreigners buyers of lard. The continued strength in corn adds to the general firmness."

Omaha, reports no rain in Nebraska. Generally clear over the State. Winnipeg clear, 60; Duluth clear, 40; Glenwood clear; Bismarck clear, 70; Kansas City says corn and wheat bulletin shows no rain.

* * *

Provisional Department of Agriculture of Manitoba estimates wheat crop of 65,000,000 bushels, against 58,000,000 last year.

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "My returns to date, covering almost one-half of the corn producing counties, are showing some sensational losses in corn prospect. Kansas returns as far as tabulated and covering nearly half of the State, show a drop approaching 50 per cent since July 1, and working lower as later reports come in. Nebraska is off nearly 20 points and Oklahoma 40 points; Missouri to date shows 10 points off, and both Illinois and Indiana have lost ground. Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are also showing heavy losses. If the latter reports prove in line with those already received, the general average condition will fall several points under 80, and the official indication on August 1 may not be for a crop over 2,700,000 bushels."

* * *

B. W. Snow has the following from Edgar County, Ill.: "From April 10, we had nine weeks of dry weather, which ruined oats and hay, then we had some rain, which gave corn a fair start, but for the last five weeks we had hot weather and no rain. Unless we get rain in a few days corn will be the worst failure we have had in the 60 years that I have been in this country."

* * *

The Weekly Iowa Weather and Crop Report says: "In some localities in the southeastern counties, where there has been only .05 inch rain during the last 30 days, corn is firing and is at a standstill. Pastures are brown."

* * *

Selling in corn to-day was very scattered and sellers really scarce. That's why the market went up so easy, as nobody dares to take the short side.

Highest Government Officials
Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime
President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them only enough to pay for the transaction."

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child," "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

When the Wife's Away

Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate
It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information in his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

The Song of Joy and Pain

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

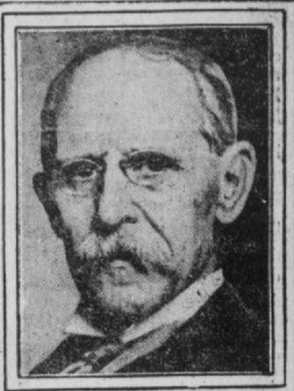
O H, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, kpown to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, which has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

BITTER FIGHT OVER DEATH NOTES

UNDERWOOD DENOUNCES MULHALL

House Leader Calls Lobbyist Blackmailer to His Face Before Inquiry Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

Calls Him Blackmailer.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

Underwood was angered because Mulhall had written in his letters that he had seen Underwood and obtained information from him about the make-up of the committees of the House.

Underwood declared that Mulhall was giving false information to his employers. This testimony that Underwood objected to was developed at the session of the committee yesterday.

While Underwood was making his statement to the lobby committee, Colonel Mulhall denounced him for making accusations against him (Mulhall) and said he would call on the country to decide "which is the cleaner of us."

Declares Mulhall Lied.

Mulhall wrote in a letter to J. P. Bird, previously read, that he had a long interview with Underwood respecting the chairmanship of the chairmanship of the House Labor Committee. This position was given to William B. Wilson, now Secretary of Labor.

Mulhall said in this letter that he had learned from Underwood that Wilson first was considered for chairman of the Census Committee.

"The whole statement is a lie out of whole cloth," said Underwood. "I was chairman of the committee which named Mr. Wilson as chairman of the House Labor Committee. There never was any question about Wilson being named chairman of the committee on Labor.

"I never talked to this man in my life. The only time he ever saw me, apparently, was when I was walking through a corridor of the House."

Senator Reed then asked Mulhall if he wished to say anything.

"To the statement of the gentleman that I lied, I want to say that I met him in the back hall near the stairway of the Capitol," replied Mulhall, "asked him questions and as I stated yesterday he answered them like a gentleman. I do not wish to contradict him and I do not want to cast any reflection upon him, but before the examination is over Mr. Underwood will take back part of what he said."

PATTERSON WAS DRUNK HE ADMITS

NASHVILLE, July 29.—Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, who was caught in a raid on a house in the restricted district last Thursday night, crushed and deeply mortified over the affair, has been joined by a faithful wife in a statement to the public, and in breaking the silence which he has steadfastly maintained admits that he was in a stupor from drink at the time of the arrest. He offers no apology for his transgression, but makes a public pledge that such an occurrence shall not be repeated. The statements follow:

I am leaving for home to-night with Mrs. Patterson, who has been with me for two days, and before going I wish to express the deepest appreciation of us both to the friends and those who were not my friends in the past for their kind and generous sympathy.

For my own part in this unfortunate affair I have no excuse to offer and have borne the condemnation of my own conscience.

My mission in Nashville was not political, as has been erroneously assumed, but purely legal, and while waiting the return of Mr. Nall, of Nashville, from Red Boiling Springs, who had in his possession certain papers which I was to examine, I began to drink, and continued until all sense of respsonbility was gone.

However gross my delinquency, I want the world to know that it is my last offense, and the weakness will never be repeated which brought upon me and mine this deep humiliation and gave to my enemies an opportunity for revenge.

MALCOLM R. PATTERSON.

My heart and my sympathies are all with my husband, and I love him with all the strength of my soul. He has been shamefully, cruelly treated, and I stand with him in this hour of trouble.

HILLSBOROUGH VOTES ON $1,000,000 BONDS

TAMPA, July 29.—Hillsborough County, of which Tampa is the county seat, voted to-day on an issue of $1,000,000 of bonds to be devoted to building brick roads. There was a general sentiment for the bond issue, especially in the city where 80 per cent of the voting strength is located and more than 80 per cent of the tax is paid.

It is planned to build about 60 miles of brick roads.

Triple 'Alibi' Fails To Save Dr. F. Bird, Autoist, From Fine

Dr. Frank Bird, whose automobile ran down C. H. Phillips Monday afternoon in Lee street near Murphy avenue, was arraigned before Recorder Nash Broyles Tuesday morning charged with reckless driving. He pleaded guilty and was fined $25.75.

Dr. Bird said his car was a new one, that the steering gear failed to perform its proper function and also a woman was driving the car at the time of the accident.

"That being the case," said the Recorder, "I advise you to at once dispose of the machine or not to venture out upon the public highway and endanger the life and limb of the public until the machine is put in good repair."

Mayor Swearingen Starts Warfare On Auto Speed Demons

JACKSONVILLE, July 29.—Mayor Van C. Swearingen's suit against the Board of Bond Trustees to decide who has the right to control the police department has not as yet been filed. Inquiry to-day at the Mayor's office elicited the fact that a rough draft of the bill had been prepared, but that the paper had not been filed and might not be until Wednesday afternoon.

The Mayor has started a fight to get the police to enforce the speed laws of the city in such a manner as to catch those who are really a menace to life and limb, and not those who merely break the speed limit in the outskirts of the city.

Thief Gets $75,000 in Gems From Former Miss Mary Harriman

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—The entire collection of jewels of Mrs. Charles C. Rumsey, who was Miss Mary Harriman, daughter of the late E. H. Harriman, has been stolen, it was announced to-day. The gems are worth $75,000, one piece alone—a string of pearls—being valued at $50,000.

Mrs. Rumsey put the gems in a bureau drawer in her bedroom Saturday night. Sunday night she opened the drawer to don some of the jewels. It was then she discovered they were missing.

Says He Married While On a Spree; Seeks Annulment

PENSACOLA, July 29.—Nathaniel Allen, Jr., has filed suit in Circuit Court to annul his marriage to Katie Pugh Waters, which occurred in Brewton, Ala., in march, 1910.

Allen declares he was intoxicated at the time of his marriage and had been for more than a week. He charges that his wife's family conspired to bring about the marriage. He even claims that he does not remember the marriage, and that it was only after some of his friends had informed him of it that he became cognizant of the fact.

Buffalo Organizer Located in Chicago

MACON, July 29.—S. S. Bak and W. S. Wells, Supreme Lodge representatives of the Benevolent Order of Buffaloes, have come to Macon to straighten out the affairs of the order which were put in such tangled shape here last week by Dr. Bernard C. Goldberg, of Atlanta, an organizer, who, it is alleged, absconded after obtaining cash payments from scores of Macon citizens and for whom there is a warrant now outstanding.

Bak and Wells state they have apprehended Dr. Goldberg in Chicago, and that they will bring him back to Macon for prosecution.

STATE TRIES TO SHOW GIRL WAS STRANGLED ON THE SECOND FLOOR

Here are Tuesday's important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory, Saturday, April 26.

Newt Lee, negro night watchman at the pencil factory, leaves the stand after four hours and forty minutes of examination and cross-examination with the essential points of his story unshaken.

Efforts to discredit the negro's story result only in showing several discrepancies in the story he told before the Coroner's jury and his testimony on the stand at the trial.

All attempts to confuse Lee by telling him that the stenographer's report of the inquest has him making slightly different statements met invariably with his declaration that "they didn't get it right down there."

L. S. Dobbs, police sergeant, testifies to the finding of the body of the Phagan girl and says that Lee had a ready interpretation of the two notes when they were found by the dead body.

City Detective Starnes testifies to finding bloodstains on second floor and says Frank was nervous the day after the crime. He says he found what he took to be fingerprints of blood on a door in the basement.

Starnes is closely cross-questioned by the defense in an effort to show the spots he thought blood might have been aniline dye. In a lawyers' clash over certain questions Solicitor Dorsey is told to "sit down" by the judge.

Court adjourned until 9 a. m., Wednesday.

City Detective J. M. Starnes told late Tuesday afternoon at the trial of Leo Frank of the finding of a number of red splotches resembling blood in the northeast corner of the women's dressing room in the National Pencil Factory, testimony on which the prosecution relies to support its theory that Mary Phagen was murdered on the second floor of the building.

Starnes said that the principal part of the largest splotch was about as big as the palm of his hand.

He also testified that he found blood about 40 or 50 feet from the dressing room toward the front of the building, and that he discovered what he took to be finger-prints of blood on the door of the basement. The fingerprints, he said, he chipped off and now has the chips of wood in his office.

Starnes asserted that there were indications that a white substance had been used with the evident purpose of eradicating what appeared to be bloodstains. The detective described Frank as nervous when he was brought down to the factory the morning after the crime.

Tells of Clock Tests.

He said in reply to Solicitor Dorsey's questions that he had witnessed the new night watchman make a complete series of punches in the time clock for an entire twelve hours within a space of five minutes, in an effort to support the theory the State is expected to advance that Frank doctored the time tape submitted to the police department which seemed to show that the neight watchman, Lee, had made three skips.

Attorneys Go After Lee.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the National Pencil Factory, was harassed and assailed by counsel for Frank in a vain effort to win from him admissions ading the theory that he was otherwise involved in the crime than as the man who found the body. Lee was on the stand from 9 o'clock to 11:40 a. m.

However, through Lee and Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers called to the factory the morning of Sunday, April 27, the attorneys for Frank laid the groundwork for the elaboration of their theory that Jim Conley was the murderer of Mary Phagan and that Lee assisted in writing the notes that were found by her body.

Points in Dobbs' Story.

That Lee, ignorant and illiterate, was able to decipher and explain in a flash the mysterious notes over which the officers had puzzled for several minutes.

That Lee spoke up and said, referring to the words "night witch" in one of the notes: "That's me, boss; that means the night watchman.

That the condition of Mary Phagan's begrimed and bruised face gave the indication that the girl had been dragged along the dirt floor of the factory basement, although Jim Conley, in his story of his part in the crime, declared that he had carried the body to the trash heap in the rear of the basement.

That Dobbs, with the aid of an electric flashlight, was unable to tell whether the slain girl was white or colored until he had pulled down her stocking, although Lee had testified to being able to tell that the girl was white by the dim rays from his smoky lantern while he was standing at a distance or five or six feet.

Lee's Story at Variance.

That Dobbs at the Coroner's inquest testified that he had had a Mr. Williams lie down in the place where Mary Phagan's body was found and, taking the position Lee said he was in when he first saw the body, discovered that, as a matter of fact, the body could hardly be seen from this point unless one was looking especially for it.

That the time he found the body was the first time he had gone farther than 25 feet from the ladder in the front of the basement that night.

That he knew it was a white woman, although he did not approach nearer the body than five or six feet, and had no light except the dirty lantern.

That he recalled that the officers, with a flashlight, were unable to identify it as white or colored for some time.

That he did not say, "That's me, boss," referring to one of the notes, but something to the effect that "They are trying to put this on me."

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly

CREMATORY MUST STAND RIGID TEST

Penalty Clause To Be Enforced if Plant Is Not in Operation by August 15.

"If the crematory is not completed and in operation by August 15, as called for in the contract, the penalty of $25 per day will be paid by the Destructor Company," said Councilman Claude Ashley, chairman of the Committee on Sanitation.

"Tests under the supervision of a competent engineer will be made, and I will devote all the time I can to the tests, so if the plant is accepted by the committee it will do what the contract calls for.

"I have my doubts as to the ability to burn garbage composed of one pound of combustible material to 1.95 water, but the company claims this can be done. However, it will hardly be necessary to burn garbage in such proportions.

"Another thing is the fact that there is only one generator for the entire plant, and should this generator become disabled from any cause, the whole plant will be compelled to shut down. There should be another generator in place in case of accident."

That the test will be severe and complete is certain, for Councilman Ashley will personally supervise the tests, having a competent man there in his place during his absence.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A bitter fight on the question of prohibiting interlocking directorates in all banks under the proposed Federal reserve system, provided for by the Glass currency bill, is anticipated in the Democratic caucus of the House to be called August 11.

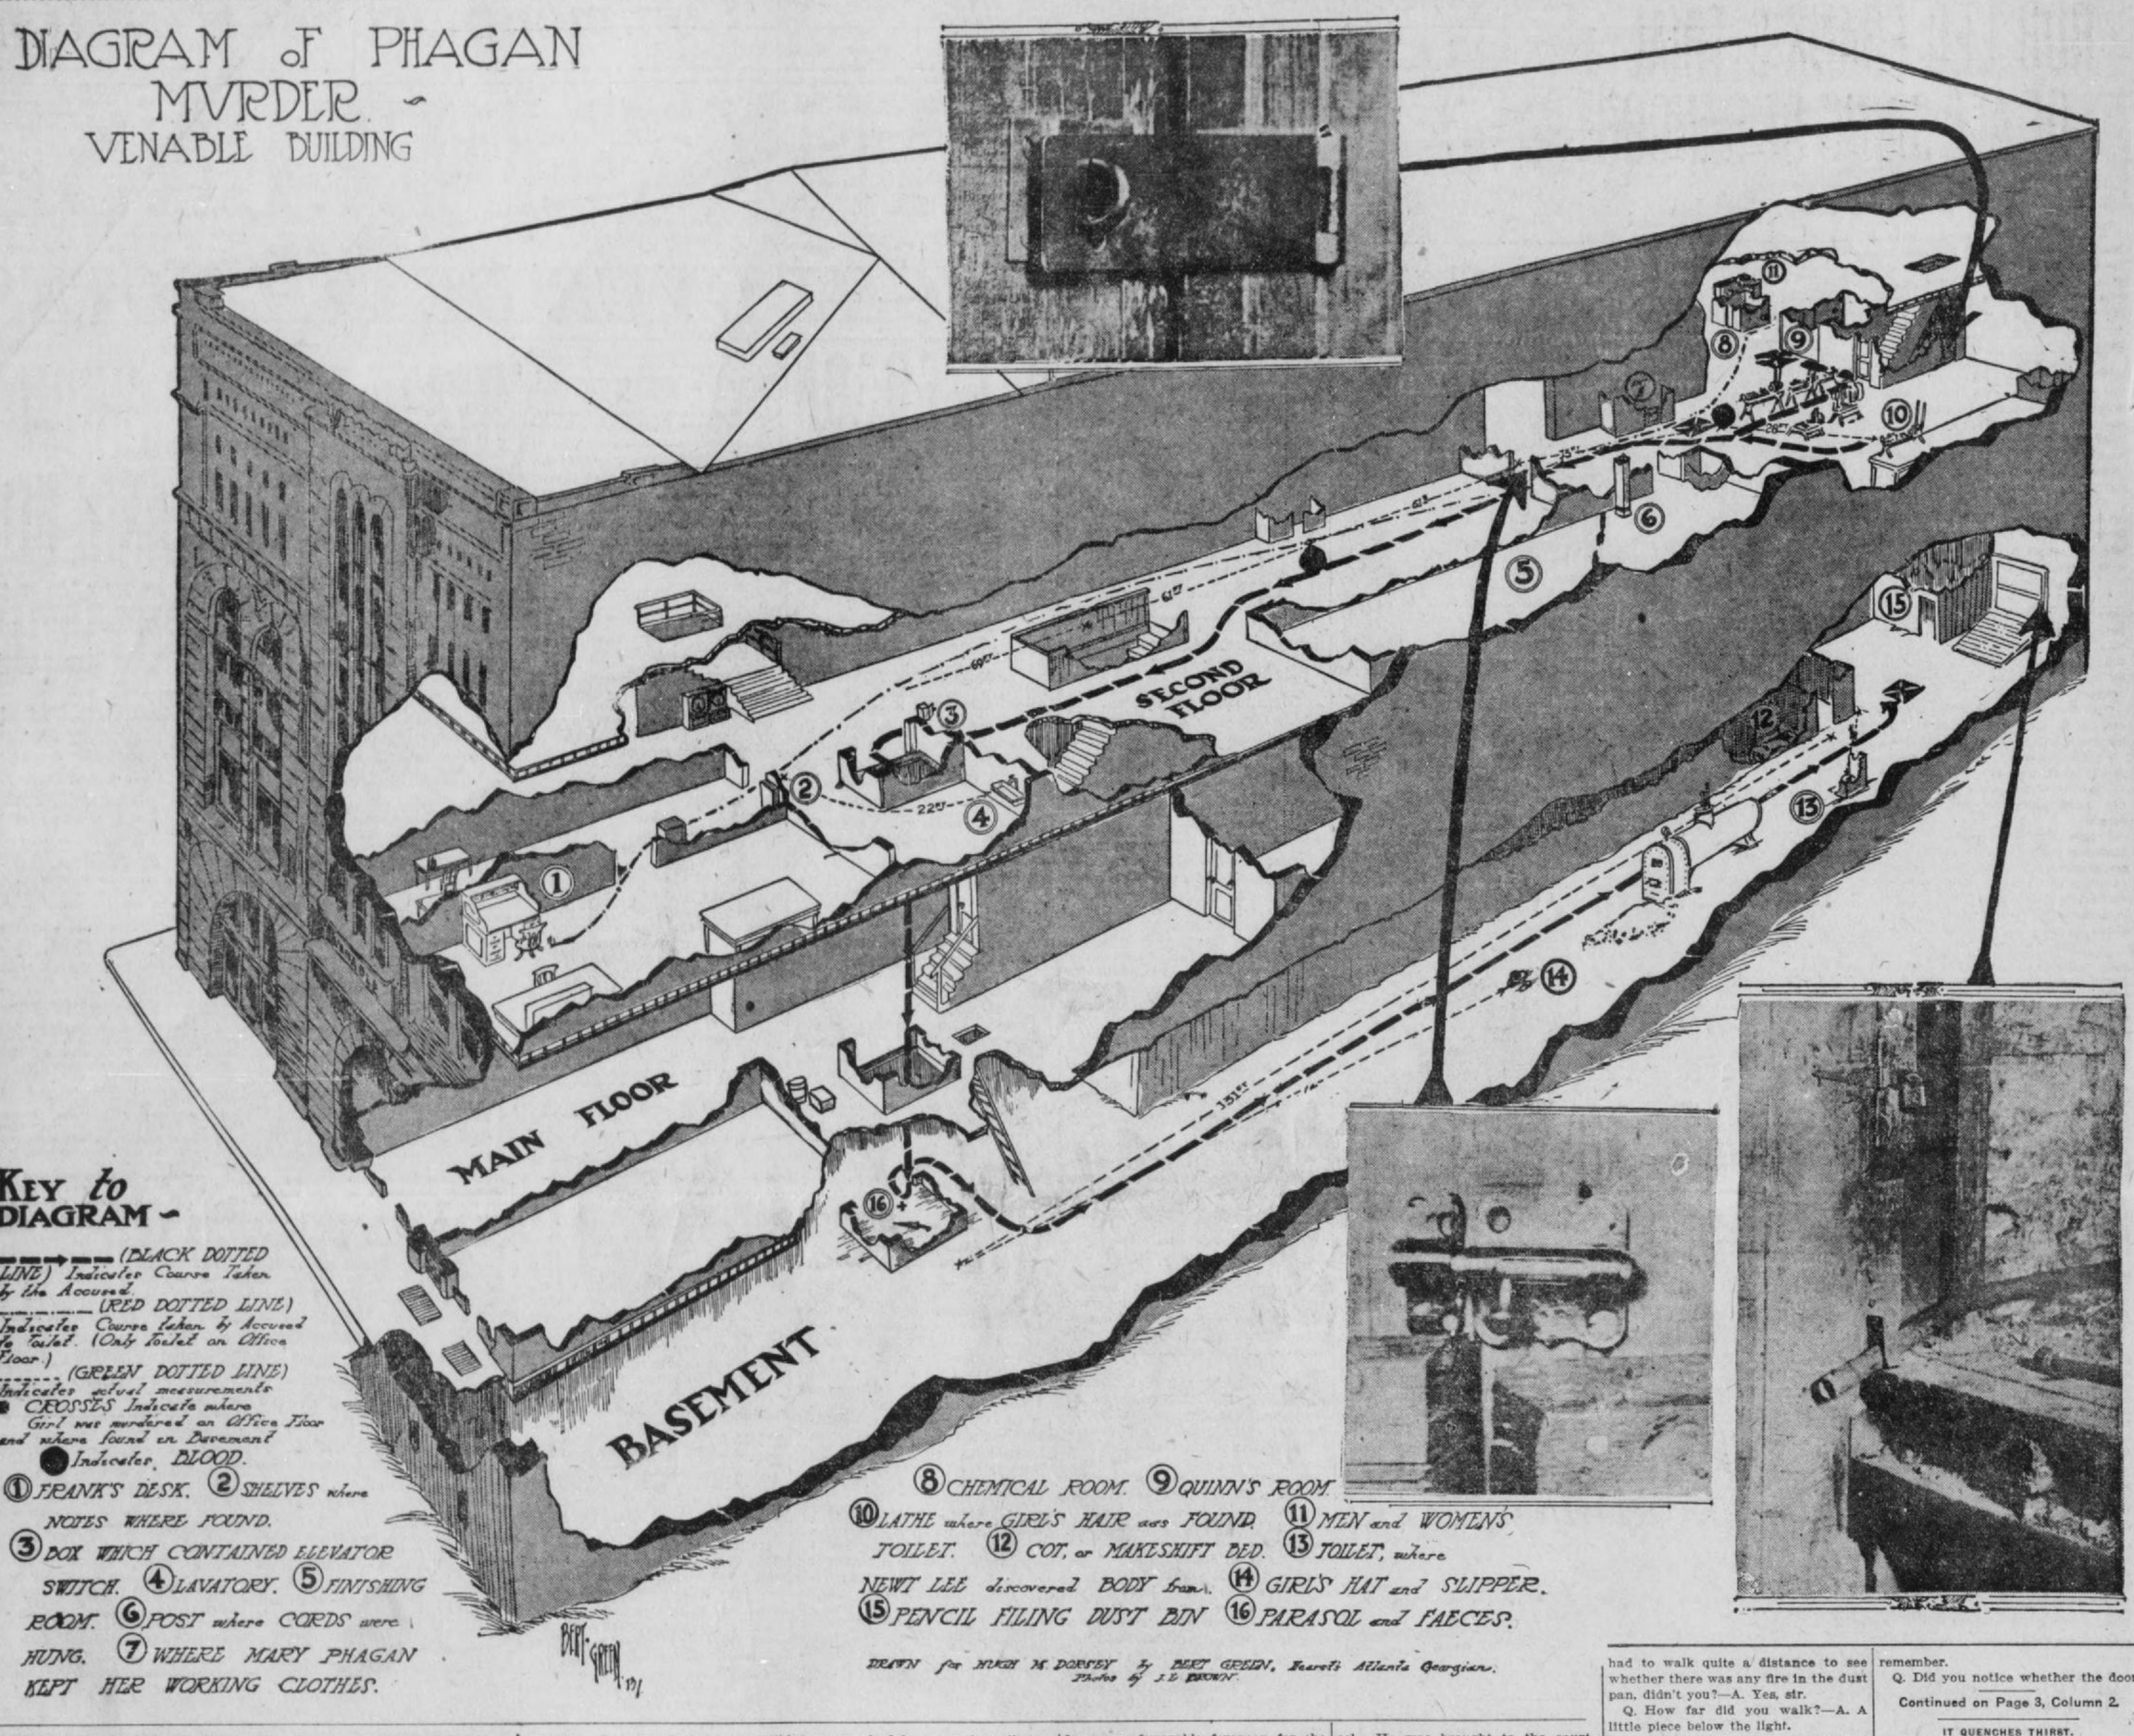
DIAGRAM USED BY DORSEY TO ILLUSTRATE STATE'S THEORY



DEFENSE FAILS TO OBTAIN CRIMINATIONS FROM LEE

indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was connected in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

Jurors Sent From Room.

The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's, and the jurors were excused while Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall black negro did it by his-self.'

Cites Lee's Explanation.

"In an instant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me.'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions now and again interpreted thi mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note itself, there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

"Suspicion on Lee," Says Rosser.

"We expect to show that the notes were obscure and doubtful in meaning. We expect to show that the officers were endeavoring to read them. But they were of doubtful and strange meaning. In one of them we will show that the wording was something like this, so far as I can decipher it:

'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it but that long, tall, black negro did it by his-self.'

"We want to show," continued Arnold, "that Lee spoke up and said, 'That's me, boss. That means night watchman.'

"Isn't it strange that a negro so ignorant and dull that Mr. Rosser had to ask him a question ten times over could in a flash interpret this illegible scrawl?"

Rosser supplemented Arnold's argument by remarking that he regarded Lee's alleged remarks as highly suspicious, and that he considered he had the right to question a witness with a view of showing that a person or persons other than the defendant had a part in the crime.

Judge Roan ruled with the defense, and the jury was returned. The judge declared:

"The attorneys for Frank are privileged to bring out evidence showing anxiety or fear on the part of the negro."

Lee Makes Denial.

Lee denied when questioned that he had said, "That's me, Boss; that means night watchman." He testified that he told the officers that someone was trying to put the crime on him.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers who visited the factory after Lee called the police station, testified before the Coroner's jury in regard to Lee's ready explanation of the notes.

Rosser ended his cross-examination of Lee at 10:50 a. m. Tuesday, after the negro had been on the grill two hours Monday afternoon and nearly as long Tuesday.

The efforts to discredit Lee's story began the moment Rosser got him on the stand. He sought first to show that it was a very peculiar circumstance that Lee went clear to the rear of the factory basement, where he found the girl's body, when all through the earlier part of the night he had gone only a short distance from the foot of the ladder in the front of the basement.

Calls Lee's Excuse Flimsy.

"Every time you went down into the basement you went only about 25 feet from the ladder to see if there was fire in the dust pan," said Rosser, repeating Lee's testimony, "and yet at this time, when you say you found the girl's body, you assert that it was necessary to go clear to the rear to ascertain the same fact?"

Lee replied that he had gone to the rear of the basement for another purpose and Rosser attempted to show that this was only a flimsy excuse.

By his line of questioning Rosser endeavored to ridicule the idea that Lee could have identified Mary Phagan as a white girl by the dim light of his dirty lantern when, as he testified, he got no nearer than five or six feet to the body, and when the officers with electric searchlights were not able to determine whether the girl was white or a negro because of the grime and cinders on her body, until they had pulled down her stocking.

Session Full of Clashes.

The session was full of spirited clashes between Rosser and Dorsey. It was a favorable forenoon for the defense. Rosser almost invariably being permitted to continue the line of questioning which he was pursuing.

Rosser, while he succeeded in showing up discrepancies in Lee's present story with that before the Coroner's jury, was unable to force the negro to any admissions incriminating in themselves.

Dorsey questioned Lee in redirect examination and Rosser in recross-examination. Lee left the stand at 11:40 o'clock, after a total of four hours and forty minutes' grilling.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs followed Lee on the stand. He told the story of finding the body and identified the Phagan girl's clothes and the cord that was used to strangle her.

Frank, his face a mask, was brought into the courtroom just before the court was called to order by Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

After taking a cool survey of the courtroom, the factory superintendent conversed a moment with is counsel and then centered his attention on the night watchman. Frank took no notes of the negro's testimony, but he evidently was making a mental record of every word of it.

What he thought of the negro's statements could not be guessed from his features. Whether the negro was giving testimony which might be construed as favorable or as most damaging, there was not the shade of a change in the expression of the young factory superintendent.

He only took his eyes from the witness to speak a word to his wife or to answer an occasional question whispered to him by one of his counsel. He was brought to the courthouse from the Tower at 7:45 by Sheriff Mangum and Deputy Sheriff Miner. He was dressed in a blue mohair suit with a striped effect, and wore a fancy gray tie.

Eats Light Breakfast.

His breakfast was brought to him at the courthouse by a relative, and consisted only of two slices of toast and a bottle of milk.

"I am well pleased with the progress of the trial to this point, he said in his conversation with Essenbach. "Nothing has been developed which has not already been well known to the public and attorneys and which will be explained in the light of the defense's case.

"I am feeling well and confident. Nothing has taken place to disturb me in the least. I hope that the trial will move as rapidly toward its conclusion as the first day's session gave promise. I have nothing to conceal and nothing to fear."

Grilling of Lee Resumed.

The cross-examination of Lee was resumed as soon as court opened.

Q. How far were you from the body when you first saw it?—A. About ten feet.

Q. Could you see to either side?—A. No. I stood up, picked up lantern and went toward the dust pan.

Q. Why didn't you go to the pan earlier in night?—A. I just happened to take a notion to go this time.

Q. When you were in closet, which way did you look?—A. Toward the wall.

Q. What do you call the right?—A. This (indicating right hand).

Q. Well, the dust pan was on your right, wasn't it?—A. Not exactly.

Q. Where you were sitting, you had to walk quite a distance to see whether there was any fire in the dust pan, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far did you walk?—A. A little piece below the light.

Q. Tell me exactly how far it was?—A. About as far as that man there. (About 25 feet.)

Q. You only went to the dustpan once that night?—A. Mr. Frank told me not to go near it with the lantern.

Shows How He Held Light.

Q. How close did you go to the body?—A. That wall there.

Q. How far is that?—A. About six feet.

Q. How did you hold the lantern to see it?—A. Like this. (Holding hand over head.)

Q. What did you see first?—A. The feet.

Q. How far was the body from the closet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it two feet, ten feet or twenty feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it fifty feet, forty feet or thirty feet?—A. Somewhere about thirty feet, maybe not that much.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. I looked to see whether it was a natural body.

Q. You didn't linger?

At this question Lee arose and pointed his finger at Rosser. "Just as soon as I saw what it was I want to tell you I lit a rag."

Saw It Was White Girl.

Q. You saw it was a white woman?—A. There were one or two white spots on the face and her hair was frizzled.

Q. How long did it take the police to find she was a white girl?—A. I don't know; they arrested me.

Q. What did they say?—A. One of them said this girl has been dead three of four days.

Q. When you came up did you go back down in the cellar?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you notice whether the door

LEE'S QUAINT ANSWERS ROB LEO FRANK'S TRIAL OF ALL SIGNS OF RANCOR

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

A page was ripped from a story of Harris Dickson. "Old Reliable" was paraded in the life in as somber a setting as was ever conceived, and the temper of the audience that is following the fortunes of Leo Frank through his struggle for life and liberty was revealed.

Some sinister things have been said of the spirit of Atlanta in reference to the trial of the pencil factory superintendent as the slayer of Mary Phagan. It was whispered once that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that those who believe Frank guilty would take vengeance as their own.

And, on the other hand, it has been said in sotto voce that the purses of Frank's friends would be opened to the last penny to see that he receives a verdict of acquittal.

Laugh Gives Lie to Rumor.

But right at the start the whisperings were given the lie, just as happens to most whisperings. A jury was selected and sworn in record time, and the story of a people torn by factional feeling by the case was crushed.

The first important witness looked and spoke like "Old Reliable." And his hearers laughed.

People inflamed by a passion so deadly that they are willing to defy the law to obtain their vengeance do not laugh when the issue is being fought.

People who are willing to spend their last dollar to see a man freed do not giggle when a witness relates circumstances which the opposition maintains, adds a strand to the cord of hemp which it is striving to weave about his neck.

Frank Getting Fair Trial.

Newt Lee, black, ignorant, cornfield pot-licker-fed darky, by the homeliness of his words proved beyond peradventure that Leo M. Frank is getting a fair and impartial trial as the law decrees, and that Atlanta is willing to abide by the verdict which the twelve men return when the historic case shall have passed to its final stage.

It took just such a character as Newt Lee to bring to light the true nature of the people who are listening to the trial, who are following the legal battle step by step, whose interest in the case is so intense that it has kept the slaying of Mary Phagan the big thing in the public mind for three long months.

Fortune favored both sides when the prosecution decided to place him on the stand among the first. Whatever his story materially damaged Frank or his cross-examination materially aided the defense is of little moment. The reception of his testimony indicated to each side just what the public thought and enabled them to know that the case will be tried in the orderly manner which justice demands.

Newt Enjoys His Fame.

Let's have a look at Newt Lee. There's a lot to be learned from this homely negro. When his name was called and he entered the courtroom, he had a joyful realization of his own importance. His face showed he was again enjoying the thrilling pleasure of "comin' thru" or going on a "'cussion."

He is typical of the type that Judge Dickson so vividly depicts. His head is flat as a ballroom floor. His big frame is slightly bent, not from weakness, but from the natural laziness of his type.

Sympathy that has been spent on him for his months in jail, though admittedly innocent of any crime, has been spent in vain. Newt Lee has been having the time of his life.

"Ain't dat nigger had his picture took and put in de white folks' papers? Don't dem big lawyers pay him respecks? Ain't he jest sot dere in jail an' not have to wuk?"

That's the negro point of view and that's Newt Lee's. He has tasted all the popularity of a negro about to be hung and escaped the only drawback to the final ceremony, the actual hanging.

Sang-froid Never Shaken.

His sang-froid never left him even during the cross-examination he underwent under the skillful questioning of Luther Rosser.

He enjoyed every minute of the experience.

He spoke in a dialect that Dockstader would pay thousands for and he spoke with a directness and an intelligence that showed that he had either been thoroughly rehearsed or that he was possessed of one of those quick, in-seeing mind, so rarely found among negroes of his type, but so typical of the class.

Lee is beyond doubt "a white man's nigger." He spread a feeling of kindliness over a courtroom where bitterness was supposed to prevail. Judge, jurors, spectators, all seemed in sympathy with him, and even Mr. Rosser did not prod him in the merciless manner that has made him one of the most famous, one of the most feared cross-examiners in the entire South.

Newt did not wish to let one sweet moment of his self-aggrandizement slip. Once during the testimony he was asked as to his faithfulness in performing his duties as night watchman.

"Light Jest Wuz Shinin'."

He "swelled visibly," as Sam Weller remarked, before he answered. "Folks say there never is been a nigger to punch that clock so prompt as me," and a stern objection from Mr. Rosser kept him from going on with his story of personal prowess, though his lips struggled to speak the forbidden words.

And his illustrations were apt. They were not strained. They fitted like a glove. He was asked to tell whether a light was burning dimly or brightly. Like a flash he replied:

"Has you ever seed a lightnin' bug? Has you ever seed one whut's jest been hit with a stick? Well, you knows how his light shines. Hit jest do shine. Well, dat was dat light. Hit just wuz shinin' and dat's all."

Racial horror of being alone in the presence of the dead was also displayed.

Lee was in a dramatic period of his story. He had just told of his grim discovery in the cellar of the pencil factory.

"What did you do when you saw the girl?" Solicitor Dorsey's question was spoken with rifle shot ring.

He "Went Right Back Up."

"I went right back up dat ladder," said Lee, as though he were repeating a confession of faith.

"How did you get up the ladder?" asked the Solicitor.

"I dunno how I got up dar, but I sho' wuz up dar. I sho' wuz," the negro replied fervently.

And on he went with his story, practically each reply being greeted by an outburst of laughter until a bailiff had to threaten to clear the courtroom.

He came down from the stand, smiling still, his glory gone, but realizing that for days he was sure to be a power on Decatur street, a person sought for socially, a man among men. And as he descended the audience smiled an applause as gracious as bowing prima donnar or stentorian tragedian ever received.

Mincey Adheres to Published Statement

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher, who says that Jim Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Company, confessed to him that he had killed a girl, declared Tuesday that he had conferred with attorneys for Leo Frank, and that he was ready to make his statement from the witness stand.

Mincey said his statement would be identical with the one recently published in The Georgian. He claims to have met Conley on the Saturday afternoon on which Mary Phagan was killed. He said that Conley was drunk and that Conley threatened to kill him, saying that he had already killed a girl that afternoon.

Mincey came to Atlanta from Ringgold Monday afternoon. He is accompanied by B. E. Neal, an attorney of Ringgold.

Tragedy, Ages Old, Lurks in Commonplace Court Setting

Outwardly Quiet and Singularly Lacking in Excitement, Frank Trial Is Enactment of Grim Drama.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

One of the most commonplace things in the world—crime—is riveting the attention of Atlanta and Georgia to-day.

Crime is almost as commonplace as death—and yet death, in a thousand ways, never is commonplace at all.

If I were a stranger in Atlanta and should walk into the courthouse where Leo Frank is being tried for the murder of Mary Phagan, doubtless I should be utterly astounded to discover what I had walked into.

That pale-faced, slight, boyish-looking party over there—the one sitting beside the massive frame of Luther Z. Rosser and the well-groomed person of Reuben Arnold—I should be shocked, I am sure, to learn that he stands charged with one of the blackest, most inhuman and most unspeakable crimes in all Georgia's somewhat long and varied catalogue of crime.

Yet that is the truth—Leo Frank is answering to the charge of the Grand Jury, and he has pleaded not guilty.

Crime and wrongdoing began, of course, when Mother Eve, through no motive other than curiosity, and without malice aforethought, either expressed or implied, bit a small and toothsome morsel from the first apple.

Cain performed the first murder not so very long afterward.

There were no newspapers in those days, but a well-authenticated story of those first infractions of the law have come down to us—and to-day crime runs riot throughout all the world!

Here in Atlanta, thousands of years after Cain committed the primary murder in history, Leo Frank is answering to the charge of killing Mary Phagan, some three months ago.

Frank Calm, Unagitated.

There sits the judge, and over yonder the jury. Pale of long confinement in jail, calm, unagitated, and even smiling, sits Leo Frank, the defendant.

Beside him are his devoted wife and his mother—his mother, who would as soon believe the stars had ceased to move in their orbits as to believe—even to suspect—that her boy was ever so remotely concerned in the death of Mary Phagan.

Over on the other side, however, sit the relatives of Mary Phagan—those who are not under the rule and debarred from the courtroom. They are grim and unsmiling—they are invoking the law's sternest displeasure upon whoever it was that took the life of their innocent little one!

Many and varied must be the emotions surging within the hearts and souls of these people, notwithstanding their outward poise—but I, who am theoretically a stranger in Atlanta's courtroom for the moment, still am wondering what it all can be about.

Gradually I realize a tenseness in the atmosphere, perhaps—and there may steal over me, as I grope mentally for something to fasten upon, a feeling that, after all, tragedy is in the air, and that its sinister shadow has fallen athwart this courtroom, the while I still recall that outside the sunshine is very bright, and is beaming upon the just and the unjust, impartially and alike.

One of the world's truly great physicians says "death is never uninteresting," and that no really great physician possibly can find it so.

He may become used to it, he may grow to view the mere physical fact of death itself as not a particularly astounding phenomenon, but never does he see in any one death the same sequenced things he has observed in others.

It is much the same way with crime, I think.

Murder is as old as the hills—as old as laughter, love, and the hate of hell—but it never loses its repugnant appeal—and so, all Atlanta and all Georgia to-day is watching the progress of the Frank trial, because Atlanta and Georgia are made up of human beings—that's all!

Few Women Present.

There are few women attending the trial of Frank. If there were thousands, however, one alone and above all other would stand forth and challenge the attention of the spectators. I mean, of course, Frank's wife.

There isn't anything the least bit "weepy" or downcast about her. She's a woman—the accused man's wife—but she plainly is a most extraordinary woman, nevertheless.

Whatever her thoughts, and whatever she expects of this trial, she gives no sign. She counsels freely with her husband's lawyers, but not frequently. She leans over and whispers something into Frank's ear now and then, but not often. She smiles upon him, and occasionally she runs her hand lightly along his shoulder, and maybe her arm is around his neck for the flitting fraction of a second, but if any of it is for effect or the least spectacular or theatrical, she is a consummate artist and surpassingly adroit.

Somehow she gave me the impression of the wife affectionate, but not demonstrative, of the wife unafraid but not obtrusive, of the wife deeply concerned, but too proud to let it be seen any more than it must be.

Perhaps there is a subtle motive in her quiet and repressed movements in the courtroom now and then—if so, I can but admire the complete perfectness of her methods and the dramatic excellence of her role as she enacts it.

Looking there at Leo Frank's wife and then at Leo Frank, one unconsciously finds himself asking himself this all-important question: What could have been Frank's motive when he killed Mary Phagan, if it be possible that he could have performed that monstrous deed?

Far and away the most frequent thing encountered in the unraveling of murder cases is the eternal triangle—the man, the wife, and the other woman!

That "other woman" may be an angel, she may be a devil; she may be a princess, she may be a pauper; she may be an innocent child, she may be a faded courtesan; she may be a willing third party, and she may be the most unwilling—but too often she is there, in some aspect, when murder has been done!

Could the motive behind the murder of Mary Phagan have been an unrighteous infatuation upon the part of Frank toward the dead girl—an unholy infatuation repelled to the extent of bringing about murder itself?

Was it that? And if it wasn't that, what was it?

Unless there was malicious motive and intent behind the slaying of Mary Phagan, there has been no murder done. The law says that malice is as essential to murder as oxygen is to the breath of life.

Frank? Of all the defendants I ever saw arraigned, Leo Frank, I think, looks the least the part of a murderer!

Not that that means anything whatever conclusively—but it is a thought that must obtrude itself upon all who view him there in the courthouse, battling in his own way for his life and liberty.

Frank never could be made to look the part of a hero, no more than he can be made to look the part of a villain—and yet he might be either, and deceive his looks no more than hundreds have done before his time and will do hereafter.

If someone should have told me that Frank is a bookworm, or a collector of postage stamps, or a person with a fad for potterhug around in the garden at early morn, it never should have occurred to me to doubt it.

But Frank a murderer, a thing lost to every sense of decency and right, a traitor to his dearest and nearest, a —well, I should have asked explanations and enlightenment as to detail!

And yet, if Frank be the thing charged in that bill of indictment, he must be all of those sinister things combined.

Is he? Frankly, I have no fixed opinion, and I am of open mind.

The sweetest-tempered play-fellow otherwise I ever had when I was a boy had a marked passion for sneaking off by himself and robbing birds' nests, particularly when the young birds were in the nests!

One Touch of the Dramatic.

There has been so far in the trial of Leo Frank but one touch of the genuinely dramatic—properly designated melodramatic, perhaps—and that was when the clothing little Mary Phagan wore when murdered was exhibited to the jury.

This, of course, was one of the tricks of the trade, and it was indulged in entirely for the jury's benefit.

It is not unusual—the same thing happens in all murder trials and I have wondered why it could happen save for the doubtful effect of it desired.

To be sure, the sweet and innocent cause of this trial—the pathetic victim prerequisite to it—is, of all the parties to it, save one, absent.

She may be there in spirit, comforting and sustaining her grief-stricken mother, but her voice is not heard, and never will or can be heard.

She is not in the courtroom, and the one other extreme of the tragedy—omitting the yet undetermined status of Frank—is over yonder in the Tower—Conley.

In the grewsome exhibition of Mary Phagan's clothing, just as it was removed from her dead body, there was a power of appeal hardly to be described in words. The youthful garments spoke eloquently, if inconclusively, of the deceased—the unoffending, methodical, carefree little working girl, so, suddenly and so frightfully thrust into public notice, never to know what it all was about.

If within the person of Mary Phagan dwelt the awful propelling force of motive that prompted Frank or someone else to murder, her simple clothing there in the courtroom suggested wonderfully clear the pathos of it and the inhumanity.

And there must have been a motive! What was it about Mary Phagan that gave rise to it in the heart and mind of—Frank?

The things that have happened so far in the trial of Frank are relatively inconsequential, as concerns the verdict.

Battle of Wits.

Two conclusions stand out unmistakably—the trial is to be a battle of legal wits, and it is to rage most fiercely about the negro Jim Conley—the big, black and all-meaning factor yet held jealously in the background.

Mr. Dorsey, the Solicitor General, evidently feels the strain of his position. He is plainly nervous at times, and unmistakably irritable now and then. He snaps his points to the court, and sometimes borders almost upon the rough and querelous in his language.

Undoubtedly Mr. Rosser disconcerts and irritates the Solicitor continuously. At times Mr. Dorsey's objections have seemed more like complaints—and when Mr. Rosser turns his massive head around and stage-whispers additional words not to Dorsey's liking, he resents it in every sentence and gesture he offers by way of comment or reply.

Reuben Arnold has had little to say so far, but he is forever whispering something into Rosser's ear—Rosser frowning like a thundercloud the while he listens.

Mr. Rosser is fighting his way along cautiously and carefully. He seemed upon the point almost of browbeating Newt Lee more than once, as that darky's examination proceeded, but generally he quit just short of actual performance.

Lee, too, was unconsciously outspoken in his resentment of the Rosser treatment, and more than once scored well and powerful in reply to Mr. Rosser's questions—particularly when couching his replies in quaint and curious negro illustrations and phrases.

If at times Lee became more or less confused and contradictory, he proved in the main to be something of a Tartar under cross-examination, and while his testimony as a whole could not amount to much as an isolated proposition and is valuable only as one link in a long chain yet to be forged about Frank, it nevertheless went to the jury in pretty good shape, and will be hard to discount, whatever it may be worth.

Hooper Singularly Calm.

But if Dorsey is agitated and irritable, and if Rosser is imposing and pugnacious, and if Arnold is keyed to a high pitch and continuously prompting his associate counsel, the other big figure among the attorneys, Frank Hooper, is as calm as a May morning, smiling, dispassionate and altogether at his ease.

Hooper looks as if he had just stepped out of a cold-storage bandbox.

Handsome, as he certainly is, if not of particularly commanding presence, and well dressed, he moves about with all the unconscious grace and ease of a—panther?

Hardly that, and yet—Frank Hooper may loom larger than any attorney in this case before the final word is written in respect of it.

There is no doubt that the trial is to be long drawn out. Every inch is being disputed pro and con, and every possible point is being raised to keep the case strictly within its legal bounds.

The jury apparently is much above the average—it was plain enough all along that the defense was seeking a jury of high intelligence, and a city jury, moreover.

I think the jury trying Leo Frank may be expected to record the truth of the trial—it appears to be composed of level-headed, clean cut, sensible men, as it should be, if it is to give a fair play to all parties concerned.

The climax of the fight, of course, will be entirely within Jim Conley. The State will make every possible effort to sustain him, and the defense will make every possible effort to break him down.

Luther Rosser will exhaust his remarkable resourcefulness in this mighty effort, aided and abetted to the very limit by the subtle and incisive art of Reuben Arnold.

Frank Hooper will strive as he never before has striven to hold Conley together—and Hugh Dorsey will back him with all the experience of his career at the criminal bar.

A happy and reassuring circumstance is that over and above all these contending forces sits Judge Roan—unruffled, unafraid, of unblemished and unquestioned integrity, upright and just—to hold all the stormy elements events in order and within the rules of the law.

The real trial of Leo Frank hardly yet has begun!

FRANK LAWYERS FAIL TO INCRIMINATE LEE

was open when you went back?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell the police it was a white girl or a white woman?—A. I think I told them it was a white woman.

Q. She was lying on her back, with her face up?—A. Yes, sir; she was lying on her side with her face up, with blood on her head.

Q. Which side was the blood on?—A. It was on the right side. It was dry.

Q. Are you sure it was the right side?—A. No, sir; her left side was turned up to me.

Grill Grows More Severe.

Q. You swear she was on her back?—A. Yes, sir; her face was turned up kind of to one side.

Q. When you went up to the office the first time, did Mr. Frank close his office door?—A. I don't know. I couldn't see his office.

Q. I mean the outside door?—A. It was open.

Mr. Rosser then read Lee's testimony about the time slip before the Coroner's jury.

Q. You helped him put the page in, didn't you, Newt? This is right, isn't it?—A. Read that again.

Mr. Rosser read it.

A. No, sir; you got me wrong. He didn't come out of his office.

Q. You said yesterday that Mr. Frank jumped back when he met Mr. Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Dorsey Objects to Methods.

Mr. Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's jury, which said nothing about Frank jumping back.

Lee—"Well, they got that wrong."

Q. That was a bad stenographer down there, wasn't he?

Solicitor Dorsey here objected to this method of questioning the witness. He declared the negro should first be questioned and then an effort to impeach him made.

To this Mr. Rosser replied: "Of course, this gentleman on account of his age is entitled to lecture me!"

"I am addressing his honor," retorted Dorsey.

"Are you through?" asked Rosser of Dorsey.

"I have stated my objection," said Dorsey.

"He misunderstood what I am trying to show," said Rosser.

Court Sustains Dorsey.

"This witness can't tell what his opinion is," said Judge Roan, for the first time, speaking. "He can tell what he swore to before the Coroner's jury."

Following this ruling the cross-examination was resumed.

Rosser read from the stenographic report of the Coroner's inquest:

"Mr. Frank jumped when he met Mr. Gantt and I taken it this way."

Here Solicitor Dorsey interrupted:

"I object to what he taken," the Solicitor said.

Judge Roan ruled that no opinion of a witness was admissible.

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper then asked that Mr. Rosser state what Coroner's inquest he was referring to.

Attorneys in Clash.

"I am always glad to accommodate these men whenever I can," said Rosser.

"You have got to accommodate me," retorted Hooper.

"No, I haven't. The man never was born whom I have got to accommodate."

Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Rosser must state what Coroner's jury he was referring to, as there were two, one in April and one in May.

Rosser resumed his questioning.

Q. I asked you if you were before the Coroner's jury at the police station?—A. Yes, sir.

State's Objection Overruled.

Q. Did you the first time say anything about Mr. Frank jumping back when he met Mr. Gantt?

Dorsey again objected, and was overruled.

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's first hearing, saying he was going to ask him if that was all he said. This testimony was to the effect that Frank looked as though he was frightened. It did not mention, however, that Frank jumped back when he met Gantt.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. No, sir; that wasn't all I said.

Negro Answers Warily.

Q. Newt, I ask you if you didn't leap right out of there and run and call the police when you saw that body?—A. Just as soon as I saw what it was.

Q. Didn't you say this before the Coroner's jury: "I thought some devilish boys had put something there to fool me. I got close enough to see it was a body and leaped right away?"—A. No, sir; I'll tell you what I said.

Mr. Rosser interrupted Lee.

Q. Mr. Frank told you if anything serious happened, to call the police, and if anything trivial, to call him?—A. Yes.

Q. When Frank told you to go off and have a good time, you lit right out, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that after two or three minutes you lit out?—A. Not exactly that way.

Says He Doesn't Recall.

Q. You said yesterday that when Frank put on the lock tape that Saturday it took twice as long as it did on the other times you saw him do it. When they asked you how long it took him to put it in before, did you not tell them you did not pay much attention to it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Why didn't you tell the Coroner it took twice as long the last time as it did before?—A. I did tell them it took longer.

Q. Who asked you?—A. He looked like a blind man.

Q. Then all this record here is wrong?—A. I can't help about those records.

Q. You never told it until yesterday?—A. Yes; I told the Coroner it took him longer.

Q. If you didn't pay attention to him the first time, how did you know it took longer the second time?—A. I held the lever for him.

Q. You couldn't say whether it took him a minute the first time?—A. Yes, it took over a minute.

Questioned About Notes.

Q. You could not say whether it took under a minute or over a minute?—A. No.

Q. Who did you live with?—A. No one.

Q. Who lived with you?—A. A woman. She just stayed there and cooked for me.

Q. You and her lived together?—A. No, she just cooked for me.

Q. Did you pay the rent for the last one?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the first one?—A. I just paid board.

Q. Were you down in the basement when the police found some notes?—A. They said something about a book.

Q. They read you something about the night watch doing it?

Dorsey here objected to anything anybody else said.

Rosser replied that his object was to get to the truth and show what Newt Lee did at the time, indicating a ready interpretation of the notes.

Mr. Arnold then addressed the court.

He began an argument and Solicitor Dorsey insisted that the jury be withdrawn.

"Of course, after he has discussed the case, he wants the jury withdrawn at our statements," said Mr. Rosser.

"I understood Mr. Rosser to say he would not introduce the contents, and I understand this ruling excludes the contents of one of the notes?" asked Dorsey.

"No, I didn't say we were not going to present the contents of the notes. I am going to introduce what I please," answered Rosser.

Judge Roan again sustained the defense and ordered the jury brought back. Attorney Rosser then resumed his cross-examination.

Q. When you were in the basement, didn't one of the policemen read a note which said something about a long, tall, black negro?

"I object," said Dorsey. "I understood his honor to rule that the attorneys for the defense could not go into the contents of the notes."

"Are we going on with this argument before the jury, after we just had them sent out?" asked Rosser.

"That's the question he put," said Judge Roan.

Lee Denies Saying "That's Me."

Q. When he said "the night witch," didn't you say "Boss, that's me?"—A. No, sir; I said, "Boss, it looks like they are trying to lay it on me."

Q. No, I want yes or no from this—"The tall, black, long negro?"

Here Dorsey interrupted with an objection.

"Now where did Lee swear that,"

DEEP CRACKS ON' JOINTS

Of Toes and Fingers. Hands So Bad Had to Sleep With Gloves On. Suffered Agony. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Completely Cured.

P. O. Box 378, El Paso, Texas. — "My trouble began December, 1911. It commenced on me by causing a scurf-like skin and my toe joints, finger joints and lips commenced to crack and split open. My finger cracks would bleed all day long; the cracks were very deep and my thumbs seemed to be cracked to the bone. My hands were so bad that I had to sleep with gloves on. The cracks in my lips would bleed often during the day and I used to put adhesive plaster across them to try to keep them closed. My toes would bleed and I would find blood in my socks when the day's work was done. The skin around the cracks was red and inflamed. I wore shoes one size too large on account of my feet being so sore. I used to become frantic with pain at times. My hands and feet used to smart.

"I suffered agony for four months. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and as a last resort I answered and got samples immediately. After trying them one night the next morning I found relief. I went to town and got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. From the time I commenced with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment until completely cured was just nineteen days." (Signed) Jack Harrison, Nov. 19, 1912.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold throughout the world. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

HUERTA HASTENS TO OBEY ORDER OF PRESIDENT

Promises Punishment of Dixon's Assailants and Release of Two Americans.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—Spurred by President Wilson's demand for the punishment of the men who shot United States Immigration Agent Charles B. Dixon at Juarez, and the release of two other American prisoners, President Huerta to-day ordered an investigation of the case.

President Wilson's peremptory demand, presented to the Huerta Government by Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American Charge d'Affaires, demanded the immediate courtmartial and punishment of the Federal officers who shot Dixon, and the immediate release of McDonald and Bissell, United States citizens, who were condemned to death by Pasqual Orozco.

Huerta promised the release of the two prisoners and the punishment of those who shot Dixon. Dixon is now undergoing treatment in an El Paso hospital.

After O'Shaughnessy had left the President, Huerta called in his Foreign Minister and ordered him to comply with the demands of President Wilson. A most energetic campaign is now in progress at Juarez, according to word received to-day.

American residents are delighted with the firm stand taken by President Wilson and express the belief that if such a step had been taken long ago the present revolution would not have been started and Mexico would have been completely pacified.

Aviator's Bomb Sinks Mexican Ship; Others Flee.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 29.—Mexican Federal gunboats being used in the shelling of Guaymas withdrew from their positions in the harbor today following the sinking of the gunboat Tampico.

President Thinks Mediation Is Solution.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—No Cabinet meeting was held to-day. This gave President Wilson time to study the reports and recommendations on the Mexican situation submitted to him by Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson.

The President, it was said at the White House to-day, believes mediation in some form is the logical solution of the Mexican tangle.

Notwithstanding expert opinion that mediation should not be considered and the views of Ambassador Wilson, who yesterday informed him that in his opinion conciliation of this kind should not be attempted, the President is determined, it is said, to try mediation first, either through a conciliating commission or by direct appeal to the warring factions in Mexico.

Foreigners in Mexico City Await Next Move in Fear.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—That Americans and other foreigners are in danger if the United States fails to recognize the Huerta administration in Mexico, is the opinion prevailing here. While high Government officials decline to discuss the impending crisis, Minister of Gubernacion Urrutia, who is generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the Huerta Government, has been predicting that President Wilson will recognize the administration by to-morrow.

It is believed the conflicting views of Ambassador Wilson and the President presage the announcement of the plan for mediation by the United States. The plan will not be accepted by Huerta, according to Government officials, as interference by the United States is unwelcome.

Disquieting rumors are being circulated freely. All foreigners are anxiously awaiting the first move by President Wilson.

Envoy Called Before Senate Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Ambassador Wilson will appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, to discuss with that body the situation in Mexico.

At a meeting to-day the committee authorized Chairman Bacon to request the State Department to direct the Ambassador to appear before the committee.

Report Hoke Smith Backed Negro U. S. Official Is False

The Georgian Monday printed a press dispatch from Washington which stated that Senator Hoke Smith had called on President Wilson to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, a negro, to be Register of the Treasury.

Being in doubt as to the accuracy of the dispatch, The Georgian wired Senator Smith for an expression of his attitude on the negro's appointment. Tuesday morning Senator Smith wired as follows:

Washington, D. C., July 28.

The Georgian, Atlanta:

The report is utterly false. I told the President I would oppose the confirmation and endeavor to defeat the appointment.

SLAIN ENGINEER CALLED VICTIM OF SLANDER

W. D. Porter Pleads Self-Defense for Killing Samuel Jackson in Georgia Road Roundhouse.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis, the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

Monday the tale came to the ears of the husband of the woman, and he asked Jackson about it. Jackson, it is said, denied the accusation, and suggested that both confront Partee and make him retract the statements.

Carried Coat Over Arm.

Jackson and the husband, according to the evidence secured by the detectives waited until Partee came in from his run, and then entered the roundhouse to ask him about the statements he is said to have made. Partee was standing in about the center of the roundhouse when Jackson entered. The latter had his coat thrown over his arm.

"Partee," said Jackson, "I——"

As Jackson spoke, according to the police, Pardee turned quickly, drew a revolver, and fired. The bullet struck Jackson in the neck and ranged upward, penetrating the brain. Jackson was hurried to Grady Hospital, where he died on the operating table fifteen minutes after the shot was fired. Partee surrendered to the police and is still locked up in police headquarters on a charge of murder. He probably will be given a preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Claims Self-Defense.

Partee declared, after his arrest, that he shot Jackson because he thought Jackson was going to shoot him. He admitted there had been bad blood between them for some time, but declined to give any cause for the trouble.

"Jackson has been gunning for me for some time," said Partee. "He has been making threats to kill me, and I have been told of these threats I have gone armed for the past week, and was determined to take no chances when he attacked me. When I alighted from my engine Monday afternoon and turned to walk into the roundhouse, I turned and saw Jackson walking toward me. He had his coat thrown over his arm, and I thought he had a revolver concealed in it. I called to him several times to halt, and when he refused to do so, I drew my gun and fired. I did it to save my own life."

No weapon was found on Jackson when his clothing was searched by the police.

Jackson and Partee boarded together at Mrs. J. R. Murden's, 896 DeKalb avenue, until about a month ago, when Jackson left. Partee formerly lived in Smyrna, while Partee came to Atlanta from Augusta.

PONY RIVALS IN SCRAMBLE FOR FREE VOTES

Final Offer About to End—Contest Man Again Warns Against Overconfidence.

Red Letter Ballots, the sort that yield 2,000 votes for $2, must be turned in by The Georgian and American pony contestants before Tuesday night. From indications close to the hour of closing, thousands upon thousands of votes will be earned in just this way by the boys and girls trying to win one of the beautiful Shetlands.

J. D. Tucker, Decatur, R. No. 1.

Thursday night the contest comes to a close. All the struggle and excitement will be over then, and nothing will remain but to count the votes and announce the winners.

Between now and Thursday night, though, the tale will be told. There is not a contestant who has his place "clinched"—not one who can not be beaten. Some of the contestants will dispute this. They believe themselves safe! They are not. Overconfidence is going to bring grief to many a youngster.

By way of diversion, however, there will be a parade of the 22 ponies Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, in which all the contestants are invited to participate. It will be a last glimpse of the ponies before they pass into the hands of new owners.

Joe Tinker May Give Blood to Save Wife

CINCINNATI, July 29.—In order to save the life of his wife, Joseph Tinker, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, may be compelled to submit to an operation for transfusion of blood at a Kansas City hospital.

Mrs. Tinker, who was, until recently, in a Chicago hospital, has suffered a decided change for the worse and a telegram summoned the Reds' leader to her side.

Winnipeg Entertains U. S. Realty Dealers

DENIES SHE PUT GLASS IN DRINK FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Blanche Sweat Declares the Relatives of Mate Incited Him to Make Charge.

Emphatic denial of her husband's charges that she tried to kill him by putting particles of broken glass in his coffee cup are made in the cross bill filed by Mrs. Blanch Sweat in answer to the petition for divorce filed recently by her husband, E. R. Sweat. The husband bases his plea for divorce on the assertion that his wife had tried to kill him by placing the glass in his cup.

In her cross bill Mrs. Sweat declares that Sweat himself had, through accident and while drunk, placed the broken glass in the cup. The incident occurred at supper time on July 15, 1913, Mrs. Sweat says. She asserts that Sweat had broken the covering of the sugar bowl of which he had sweetened his coffee, and that some of the glass had dropped into the cup. Mrs. Sweat declares that when she learned the glass was in the cup she had asked her husband to secure medical attention, which he refused to do.

Mrs. Sweat also charges her husband's parents with prejudicing him against her, and declares that they induced him to accuse her of placing the glass in the cup. At first, she says, her husband told her he had dropped the glass in the cup, but that later, after he had conferred with his parents, accused her of trying to kill him.

Mrs. Sweat asserts also that she has been assaulted and brutally treated by her husband's father, for which, she says, he is now under bond in the Superior Court. She also charges her husband with drunkenness and failure to support her.

T. N. Page Delays Arrival at Rome

Special Cable to The Georgian.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

West Virginia Gets Portia Who Couldn't Practice in Georgia

Prevented by the law of Georgia from practicing in the courts here, Mrs. G. McIntyre-Weaver has gone to Berkeley Springs, W. Va., and hung out her shingle. In a letter to friends she writes that she is doing splendidly, and berates Georgia for being so slow as to refuse to allow women to practice law.

"It is time Georgia was sitting up and taking notice in this regard," she writes. "Other States are progressing, so why can't the old Empire State? I notice the woman lawyer bill is again before the State of Georgia, and I hope the present Legislature will be fair enough to pass it."

Griffin Pastor Called To Northern Church

GRIFFIN, July 29.—The Rev. Clayton E. Wheat has tendered his resignation as rector of St. George's Episcopal Church to accept a call from the Church of St. John the Evangelist at Hingham, Mass.

The Rev. Mr. Wheat has been in charge of St. George's Church two and a half years and is one of Griffin's ablest and most popular ministers. His resignation is regretted by people here of all denominations and would not be accepted by his Parish were it not for the fact that he goes to a larger field. His resignation is effective August 17.

GIRL IN CONTEST PROVES SELF LIVE WIRE

Keeps Her Eyes Open and Gets the Business—Opportunity Open for All Contestants.

There's at least one girl worker in The Georgian's Want Ad Contest who is going to be a real business woman some day. She is a live wire.

She walked up Oak street in West End, planning a call on a friend. As she passed Ashby street she saw a negro woman with a telescope grip in one hand and a bundle in the other, leaving a house. Miss Contestant walked in, rang the bell, and the mistress of the house came to the door.

"I want to find you a new cook to take the place of the one just quit," said Miss Contestant.

The housewife looked puzzled.

"A Georgian Want Ad will do it," explained Miss Contestant. "The cook will be here -tomorrow."

And the next morning the housewife had a choice of four would-be servants, brought by one little ad which cost 20 cents.

A Want Ad in The Sunday American or The Georgian will find almost any want, as Atlanta readers have learned by experience. Contestants in the race for an automobile, a piano, a trip to Callafornia and other prizes are learning how to suggest want ads, and almost every person they approach finds a need he hadn't thought of before. And the Want Ad way is the quickest way on earth to get results.

Friends of the contestants may send their want ads direct to the office if they like, requesting that their votes be cast for any contestant they desire to name. Somebody is going to win a handsome prize, and your friend might as well be the winner.

Burglars Make Two Attempts to Break Into Home of Juror

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

When Officers Shumate and Cochran, who answered the call, arrived five minutes later, the burglars were gone.

Howard Thompson is expected to arrive in Atlanta from Gainesville today to confer with Walter Johnson regarding the transfer of the office of United States marshal, to which Mr. Thompson has been appointed. Two conferences have been held by them since Mr. Thompson's appointment was confirmed, and it is expected the formal transfer of the office will take place Friday.

While of different political faiths Messrs. Thompson and Johnson have been life-long friends, which adds a unique touch to the transfer of the office, which Mr. Johnson has held for sixteen years.

ATLANTA NEW YORK PARIS

Hundreds of New Suits Have Arrived, That the Women of Atlanta May See and Know The Fashions for Fall.

The woman whose vacation will take her to the cool mountains or northern resorts will find in these new fall models the weight and style of suit that will serve her best. They are not too heavy, and yet they are, in line, in material, in trimming, the style that will be best for fall.

There are literally hundreds of new suits now lined up in the big crystal cases, bringing their message of new styles, new fabrics, new colors, new fashion-turns.

We emphasize the quantity merely to impress that the announcement of this display is based upon the fact that the display is indeed worthy of the attention of every woman who would off with the old and on with the new.

The suits are ready!

And they are novel and interesting.

Novel and interesting from many viewpoints.

There are draped cutaway coats; there are cutaway coats that button close up to the neck, and there are others that have the semblance of a blouse—all different from styles we have known.

And coats are to be longer this fall, they measure 38 to 42 inches.

Many of the skirts are slashed, many are draped in one way and another.

Materials show the new scheme of things. Soft finished fabrics are prominent, velour cloths self-striped, crepons, ratine striped fabrics, bayadere poplins, trimmings often take a contrasting shade, and again the use of embroidered velvet is pronounced on collars, on cuffs, on skirts.

What are the colors?

See with your own eyes! Naming the mahogany, cinnamon, prune, amethyst, Copenhagen and navy shades is but poor apology for their richness and beauty.

This is a worthy display of the new suit fashions, one that a woman may approach with the confidence that the suit she selects will be an authentic style.

AGED PAIR FLEE IN TERROR OF POORHOUSE

Illinois Couple Reach Atlanta After Wandering Aimlessly About Country for a Month.

Fleeing from an Illinois poorhouse, William Smith and his wife, both more than 80 years old, arrived in Atlanta Monday afternoon after a month of aimless drifting about the country, with no money and no idea of their ultimate destination.

They had eaten nothing for nearly twelve hours, their clothes were mere rags, and they were so feeble they had to be assisted to seats in the station by Train Caller Charles Griffin and the matron, Mrs. J. W. Payne.

A month ago they had a little home in Brown County, Ill., they said, a house and an acre or two on which they raised enough to keep them alive. One day the old man hurt his foot. Unable to work, they appealed to their neighbors for aid. The county officials took up the matter and decided to send them to the poorhouse.

The old man and his wife, once fairly well-to-do, were terror-stricken at the thought of living on the bounty of the county. When the poorhouse wagon came and took their furniture and their meager belongings they pleaded to be allowed to spend one more night in their own home. That night they gathered what little of their clothing was left, collected their few pennies and fled.

Their only idea of their destination is that they want to "go somewhere South." They have no relatives, but say they have a friend in the "South" who owns a plantation.

The old people were taken in charge by Mrs. Payne and Mr. Griffin and made as comfortable as possible for the night. They were still at the Terminal Station at an early hour Tuesday morning, and it has not yet been determined what will be done with them. They say they are willing to go anywhere except to a poorhouse.

Thousands Suffer For Food in Sofia

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BELGRADE, July 29.—Unless food can be rushed to Sofia thousands will die of starvation. The cutting of railroad communications due to the war between Bulgaria and the other Balkan states, has cut off all supplies. There is considerable suffering among all classes.

As a last resort, Bulgaria to-day appealed to Roumania to reopen the route between Varna and Sofia so that food can be rushed to the Bulgarian capital.

The Rev. Mr. Craighill was ordained by Bishop Nelson, of Atlanta, in 1898.

MISSING HEIRESS WAS ON A VISIT, SAYS FATHER

Orlando Awtrey, of Acworth, Ga., whose daughter, Miss Lynette Awtrey, vanished while en route from New York to Atlanta, has issued a statement in which he declares that his daughter's disappearance from home was the result of a change in her plans by which she decided to visit friends in the West.

He declares that in all probability she failed to notify him of her change of plans because, having been away for several months, she didn't realize that any additional delay in reaching home would cause uneasiness. His statement follows:

"My daughter left home in May on a tour of Europe with a party of Georgians, conducted by Miss Olive Faw, a teacher of Marietta.

"Before leaving home she purchased a ticket for an extensive tour of Europe and was provided with funds for a much longer tour, if she desired to take it.

"On completing the first tour that the party was making, she consulted me about the second one, and decided to return home. Leaving the party in London, she sailed from Southampton and reached New York City with ample funds, probably about $200. She reached there last week.

"On reaching New York she wired me of her safe arrival, and, as she had plenty of funds, she seems to have changed her plans for coming directly home and to have gone on a trip into the West. She had, however, sent a portion of her baggage home, and when it reached Acworth without her, the family naturally began to feel uneasy and started an investigation as to her whereabouts.

"Having been away for several months, she probably didn't realize that a few days of additional delay would cause any special uneasiness.

"On reaching her destination she wired me and is now en route home. She has made several former visits to the West and has friends there."

Miss Awtrey went to Ogden, Utah, from which place she sent a telegram last Sunday asking for aid. She probably will arrive within a week.

The girl's father took her home, warning Lewis that if he returned to Carrollton he would be in danger.

Lewis' creditors assert that he owes debts which exceed $1,000 and that he has not been seen in Carrollton for some time.

Fifty acres of land valued at $1,500, two horses, one automobile, two wagons, two buggies and miscellaneous household effects and office fixtures are named as assets.

The Sheriff of Carroll County threatens to sell the effects at the expiration of ten days.

CHAINS FOR WIFE DESERTERS URGED

Probation Officer Coogler is preparing a bill which he will present to the Legislature, providing for the punishment of the man who deserts his wife and children. The bill will be sent to a member of the Fulton County delegation with the request that it be introduced in the House.

The bill provides that a man refusing to support his wife or child shall first be brought before the probation officer, and if such office does not exist in the county, then to be taken before the Ordinary and placed on probation to support them. In the event of his failure to do this, after being placed on probation, he will be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a heavy fine or one year's sentence at hard labor on the chaingang.

In the event of the payment of a fine by the defendant on a charge like this, the bill provides that the fine, either in whole or part, shall be turned over to the probation officer or Ordinary for the support of the deserted wife or child.

CHAINGANGS IN GEORGIA

You Will Write "Hope" Into Our Laws

"The way of a man with a maid."
---Proverbs 30-19.

It is not a doll in her arms.

The child-mother is nursing her fatherless baby.

What have we done to her?

You said in your laws:

"She can sell herself if she is ten years old."

But she must be twenty-one before she can trade a cow or hog.

You appropriated thousands of dollars to save cattle from the tick—

Thousands to make hog cholera serum—

And thousands to study hogs that are sick.

You gave nothing for these pitiable girls.

Georgia has no place for them.

For the want of it, seventy-five known to us—they are only children—they are being lost to-day.

Only God knows how many more!

Forty-four other States have reformatories for such as these.

The bill introduced by Jones of Coweta, and Mills of Butts, provides a reformatory for girls in Georgia.

The Prison Commission approves it.

The Penitentiary Committee has unanimously recommended that it pass.

The Committee on Appropriations referred it to a subcommittee of Judge W. H. Griffin, Chairman; S. E. Berry, C. F. Holberg, A. B. Greene and J. L. Lane.

They have recommended that thirty thousand dollars be appropriated and the bill be made the law.

Father, grant that this be done.

No man in Georgia values a cow or hog more than he does a girl.

We had not seen the bitter need.

You can and will provide for these.

"Judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor."
---Proverbs 31:9.

A boy of seventeen stole a ride on a train.

You arrested him for this.

He did not have the money to pay his fine.

For this lack of funds, we clothed him in stripes and put him in our chaingang for eight months.

If our laws had provided for probation, our Judge could have released the boy on good behavior.

He could have given the boy a chance.

By writing Probation into our laws, you would not compel—

But you would give your Judge the right to save a boy or girl.

A bill introduced by Senator Tarver and Representatives Myrick and Gower making this the law is pending in the Legislature.

Judges and the Prison Commission—

And the Judiciary Committees of both Houses have approved it.

You will.

"For we are saved by hope."
---Romans 8:24.

If the Indeterminate Sentence were the law in Georgia, a Judge in sentencing a man would say:

"Not less than ——— not more than ——— years."

Within the limits named, the man's stay in the penitentiary would depend upon himself.

Hope of liberty instead of fear of the lash would make him obey.

He would win release by showing himself fit to be free.

His incentive for not committing crime again would be this: caught a second time, he might be sentenced as an habitual criminal for the greatest number of years prescribed for that particular crime.

In Illinois, in the twelve years before the indeterminate sentence became the law, one judge sentenced either three or four different times the same one hundred criminals.

In the twelve years since it was made the law, only four have had to be re-sentenced by him.

Commitments to the penitentiary have been forty per cent less despite the great increase in population in that State in the ten years since the indeterminate sentence became part of its law.

Twenty-two States have adopted it.

The Prison Commission and the Penitentiary Committees of the House and Senate approve the bill of Senator Foster and Representative Loyd that will make it the law of Georgia.

You, like them, would rather save than destroy the fallen.

You will help make this the aim of Georgia.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

BRICKLEY WITH MACKMEN; MAY PLAY IN THE OUTFIELD

PHILADELPHIA, July 29.—George Brickley, the 19-year-old brother of Charles Brickley, the Harvard football star, reported to the Philadelphia American team here to-day. It is likely that Brickley will be given a chance to play in the outfield.

Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physician said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 99-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles an hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

D. MANCESTER GAINS VOTES IN HOT RACE

Somebody Will Have to Get Busy Soon or Americus Player Will Win Contest.

"Pat" Murphy lost a few votes in the eHarst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's great race for baseball popularity and the beautiful loving cup that goes to the player found to be the most popular in the Empire State League.

Dick Manchester gained a few. Otto Jordan also gained a few and it now looks as if Otto will soon pass "Goat" Holliday for second place.

* * *

SOMEBODY will have to get busy soon or Dick Manchester will take the trophy and honors that go with it. The Americus player is increasing his lead daily and it is beginning to look as if his admirers intend to stick to him to the finish.

* * *

IF you fans want your favorite player to be known as the most popular in the Empire State League clip the coupon hat is printed in today's paper and mail it to the Baseball Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga. Remember the contest is getting well on its way and the time to hustle is now.

Here Is a Player With $4,000,000

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games

Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant, and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fail to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outlucked us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League, and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Hagan the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

AMOS RUSIE IN HOSPITAL; INJURED BY IRON BAR

SEATTLE, WASH., July 29.—Amos Rusie, once famous pitcher of the New York Giants, is in a local hospital today suffering from an injury to his arm. Rusie is now a plumber. A heavy iron bar fell and struck him on the arm while at work here yesterday.

LEAGUE HEAD TO DECIDE PROTESTED BALL GAMES

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 29.—To straighten out a tangle over protested games which Waterloo won and Keokuk and Burlington protested, alleging the player limit had been violated, President Justice, of the Central Association, has gone to Waterloo.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29.—Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and, as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $300 a month.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 3.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Colo., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 22. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to bet Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 23. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

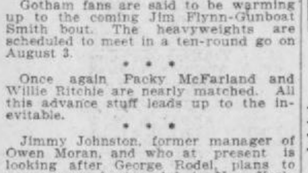
* * *

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when they battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

How to Get Rid of Eczema



If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Roads Select Wage Dispute Arbitrators

NEW YORK, July 29.—The Eastern railroads to-day selected W. W. Atterbury, vice president of the Pennsylvania, and A. H. Smith, vice president of the New York Central, to act as their arbitrators in the dispute with the trainmen.

ALPERMAN REPORTED ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—A report from the Inge Bondurant Sanitarium to-day, where Captain Alperman, of the Atlanta Club, lies ill from an operation for appendicitis, was to the effect that he spent a restful night and was on the road to recovery. The request of Manager Smith for his technical suspension will be granted by the League in order to let Holtz get in the game. Pitcher Love worked out yesterday and looked like a real pitcher.

WHY NOT?

They are sending auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell.
They inject them in the hoose gow for a long and dreary spell.
Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark.
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

We have given up all hope that Ad Wolgast will come back. Jones has quit him, and Tom never gave up a meal ticket until the meals were all punched.

Ty Cobb is dissatisfied again, leading one to suspect that he aims to be the Bob LaFollette of baseball.

If Tyrus were an up-to-date young man he would augment his meager salary by busting into the chautauqua circuit.

CHAUTALKING.

"I am starving," said the athlete,
"On my miserable pay."
So he beat it from the ball yard
And chautalked the livelong day.

It is said that the dead do not return, and yet Bombardier Wells is mached with Gunner Moir.

We note that Jess Willard is going to fight in Los Angeles. That is, he will enter the ring in Los Angeles. Even his bitterest enemies never would accuse him of fighting.

The report that Pal Brown is going to Australia leads us to hope that he is a good swimmer.

It is rumored that since Ad Wolgast took up the job of managing himself he has had the worst manager in pugilism.

One can hardly blame those English tennis experts if they chuckle when they see their American brethren kicking in with a flock of alibis.

PIRATES PAY $3,000 FOR HARD-HITTING FIELDER

SPOKANE, WASH., July 29.—Jules Pappa, a hard-hitting rightfielder on the Spokane, Northwestern League, baseball team, has been sold to the Pittsburg Nationals for $3,000. This is Pappa's first year in professional company. He will finish the season here.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

* * *

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

* * *

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

* * *

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

* * *

The Pirates, outside of Carey, who cornered half of the hits, could do nothing with Seaton, and the Phillies scored another easy victory.

* * *

Earl Moore, released by the Phillies to St. Louis, and who refused to report to the Cardinals, is now the property of the Chicago Cubs, according to an announcement of Charles W. Murphy.

* * *

* * *

William Lathrop, the Notre Dame University pitcher, will be seen in the uniform of the White Sox, having been signed up by Comiskey.

* * *

Rain prevented the Yankee-Naps, Tigers-Athletic and White Sox-Red Sox games yesterday.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time that an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest sift down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

REFUSES $1,000 FOR PLAYER.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 29.—Bloomington (Three-I) owners have refused Sacramento's offer of $1,000 for Shortstop Bruce Hartford.

DON'T BE TORTURED

Eczema can be instantly relieved and permanently cured. Read what J. R. Maxwell, Atlanta, Ga., says. It proves that

Tetterine Cures Eczema

I suffered agony with severe eczema. Tried six different remedies and was in despair when a neighbor told me to try Tetterine. After using $3 worth I am completely cured.

Why should you suffer when you can so easily get a remedy that cures all skin troubles—eczema, itching piles, erysipelas, ground itch, ringworm, etc. Get it to-day—Tetterine. 50c at druggists, or by mail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Atlanta Man Plans $200,000 Building

Award to Thornton Mayre—Contractors Seek $1,000,000 Job. $40,000 Cash for Lot.

Local contractors and architects continue to be successful bidders on jobs outside of Atlanta. Recently announcement was made of a considerable architectural job in Spartanburg, S. C., landed by A. Ten Eyck Brown, and now comes the announcement that a fellow architect, P. Thornton Marye, is to draw plans for the new $200,000 courthouse of Wake County, North Carolina. Frank P. Simpson, of North Carolina, is associate architect.

Contractors have been invited to bid on the new twenty-one-story building of the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Memphis, and inasmuch as several are in the competition, the chances of an award to a local concern are considered good. One of the largest contracting firms in the country is bidding on this job through its Atlanta office, and there are others. The cost will be $1,000,000, or more.

Refuses $40,000 Cash.

That many people are in the real estate market with cash to pay for good property is borne out in an offer on West Peachtree street which has just been declined. E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, carried on offer of $40,000 cash to Mrs. J. A. Finley for her home at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and Simpson streets, but the offer was refused. This was at the rate of $800 a foot, since the Finley lot fronts 50 feet.

Subdivision Sales.

W. H. Allen, of the Edwin P. Ansley Agency, and H. N. Van Devander have sold to George L. Morris six residence lots in their City View Park, corner of Ashby street and Mayson and Turners Ferry road, for a total of $3,000, or $500 a lot. The lots are mostly 40 feet wide by 112 to 165 feet deep. They have been on the market only a week and Mr. Allen expects to close up sales for eight more in a few days.

Record of Deeds.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale Saturday of No. 532, Ponce DeLeon avenue from R. C. Taylor to Dr. William Asher, for $9,500. The lot is 55 by 231 feet and is 234 feet west of Bonaventure street.

Durant Place Dwelling.

Edward M. Durant will soon start another house on Durant Place, just a few rods north of Ponce DeLeon avenue. Permit for a $2,500 structure of two stories has been sought at the office of Building Inspector Ed R. Hayes. Durant Place contains some of the most attractive medium-priced houses in the city. It is a neighborhood very much like West Peachtree Park, which A. B. Buehl has developed with attractive houses.

Peachtree Store Leased.

The Goodyear Raincoat Company has leased for a short term the store at No. 35 Peachtree, which was formerly a part of the Nunnally establishment at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue. The price is not given. The Nunnally Company obtained control of this property through the Clarke estate, owners.

County Board Meeting.

When Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, returns Friday from his vacation, several things of interest will be brought before the board. The regular monthly meeting will be held on August 6, at which time much accumulated business will be taken up.

Off for New York.

J. H. Ewing and Shorter Rankin, of the Smith and Ewing Real Estate Agency, will leave for New York Friday to make loan connections for their firm and to bring home some money for substantial improvements in Atlanta. Mr. Rankin is interested in the loans and Mr. Ewing in the other item, a more definite announcement of which is expected soon.

To Remodel Plaza Hotel.

Work is expected to start in a few days on the renovation of the old Plaza Hotel, at the southern junction of the Peachtrees, plans for the same having been completed some time ago for Colonel Willis E. Ragan, the owner of this valuable triangle. The architect is A. F. N. Everett, who has designed a store for the point of the triangle at the south. A drug concern will probably locate in the latter space and the main building is expected to be leased as a hotel or large boarding house.

BUILDING PERMITS.

Copper Mines Open; Guarded by Troops

CALUMET, MICH., July 29.—Twenty-one of the 30 copper mines in the Calumet district were in operation today and plans were being made to resume work in the others to-night.

The 18,000 striking miners made no demonstrations to-day at any of the mines. State troops on duty at the shafts kept the strikers from congregating about the mines.

Connecticut Bars Runaway Weddings

NEW HAVEN, CONN., July 29.—No more hair trigger marriage licenses will be issued in this State after August 1.

Five days' notice will be required before a marriage license will be issued, according to the Secretary of State, who says that for several years runaway couples have been swarming into Connecticut.

HARD FIGHT NEAR OVER MILITIA BILL

Opponents Draw Measures to Offset Plan to Restrict Calling Out of Troops.

A contest over the question of calling out the State militia in case of riot probably will be precipitated in the General Assembly following the introduction of Senator McGregor's bill providing for the making of affidavits by the civil authorities before the Governor orders out troops.

According to information Tuesday two bills are being prepared to be put before the House seeking to revive the old law, repealed last year, giving to a judge, a Mayor, a Sheriff or other civil authority, the power to call out a company of militia in cas- of riot.

Under the present law the militia can be called out only by the Governor, who has the right to investigate before taking action.

Senator McGregor's bill has the support of the Governor and the military authorities, including Adjutant General Van Holt Nash. Every effort will be made to have it passed in the Senate before the allegeda reactionary House bills are acted on.

Gallinger Resents Tillman's Attack On Suffragettes

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, rose to the defense of the high-minded Southern women who favor equal suffrage to-day when he protested against the appearance in The Congressional Record this morning of an article by the late Albert Taylor Bledsoe.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, yesterday secured the consent of the Senate to have the article printed in The Record. To-day when a dozen Senators had protested indignantly against the article word was sent to Senator Tillman and he hurried to the chamber and asked to have it withdrawn.

The article was written several years ago. It warned the women of the South not to follow the pace set by the strong-minded women of the North, who "would fain enter the lists with pothouse politicians and become the rivals of negroes."

Heat Wave Sneaks Back; Showers to Bring Some Relief

People who believe in mental suggestion are trying to keep cool by looking at the scenes in the Frozen North, which are being shown at a local theater this week, while nonbelievers are wearing just as few clothes as possible. The customary breezes were not on duty Tuesday and the heat was unusually oppressive downtown.

Monday night was cool enough for comfort, with the mercury at 72 at daybreak. As the hands of the clock climbed, the mercury climbed, too, and at 1 o'clock it stood at 90.

Relief is promised by thundershowers Tuesday night and Wednesday.

Essig Co. to Furnish Uniforms to Police

For the third consecutive time, Essig Bros. Co. has been awarded the contract to furnish uniforms for the Atlanta police.

A departure was made in the summer uniforms, a light weight serge being substituted for the heavy doeskin formerly used. This uniform has given great satisfaction, it being not only a great deal lighter, but has worn so well that very few officers will be forced to purchase new ones next summer.

The material selected for winter is a 28-ounce doeskin, every garment made to measure.

Asks Funds to Study Tariff Bill's Effect

WASHINGTON, July 29.—It was ported to-day that Secretary of Commerce Redfield will appear before the House Appropriations Committee to ask for $100,000 to investigate the effect of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill upon business.

While he has not yet made his plans public, it is known that he desires the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to undertake the inquiry should the appropriations be allowed.

Family Feud in Crisp Results in Stabbing

CORDELE, July 29.—Because it is alleged he made remarks reflecting on Mrs. John Warren, Ambrose Powell, a Crisp County farmer, was stabbed several times in the back by his brother-in-law, Harry Blanchard, a brother of Mrs. Warren. Powell says he was waylaid by Blanchard and Warren.

It is said that a family feud has existed for years. Powell is at a local hospital in a serious condition. Warrants have been obtained for Warren and Blanchard, but no arrests have been made.

GAG FOR POLICE IS PROVIDED IN HOUSE BILL

An echo of the charges made during the early stages of the Phagan case, that the investigation of the mystery was hampered by too much publicity given the evidence and the movements of the detectives, is heard in a bill introduced in the House Tuesday morning by Representative D. P. Methvin, of Clayton County.

Mr. Methvin's bill prohibits detectives, sheriffs and all other officers from giving out evidence obtained against criminals or supposed criminals, except under oath. The bill permits the giving of such evidence to the prosecuting attorney or the leading counsel for the defense, but expressly prohibits detectives and other officers from giving any evidence to the general public.

The bill provides a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment, for violation of the law.

The introduction of the bill aroused considerable discussion in the lobbies of the House. The general impression appears to be that the bill will meet with opposition, and it is not considered likely to pass. Friends of the measure declare it is designed to remedy such conditions as arose during the Phagan case, when evidence obtained by the detectives was often published before it was reported to their superiors.

By Smith, of Fulton—Relative to the custody and control of minor children, and to provide under what circumstances they shall be awarded to the mother, and under what circumstances to the father.

By Slaten, of Bryan—To provide for the employment of a limited number of convicts upon trunk line public roads.

By Slater, of Bryan, and Methvin, of Dodge—A bill to enjoin and restrain the keepers of lewd houses, and to declare such houses a nuisance.

By Greene, of Houston—To provide for the establishing of a school of agriculture.

By Crawley and Cooper—To amend Section 129, Vol 1, of the Code, to provide early primary elections, not later than June 15.

By Clarke and Pierce—To repeal Sections 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433 and 434 of the Code of 1910, relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

By Toole, of Tattnall—A bill to require by grand juries semi-annual inspection of private sanitariums, orphan asylums, convents, Houses of the Good Shepherd, convent schools, monasteries, etc.

State Medical Board Bill Passes Senate

The Longino-Richardson medical practice bill, providing for the establishment of a State board of medical examiners to supervise and regulate the practice of medicine throughout the State so as to eliminate quacks and fakers, was passed in the Senate Tuesday morning by the vote of 36 to 4. The bill as adopted includes the amendment of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-second, providing for trial by jury and right of appeal to the Supreme Court by physicians whose licenses are revoked by the State board.

The bill is revolutionary in its scope for it not only gives to the State board, consisting of eight members appointed by the Governor, the right to grant and revoke the licenses of practitioners of medicine, but the right also to define the standing of medical colleges of the State as specified by the provisions of the bill itself.

Senate Head Urges Speed on Budget Bill

President Anderson in the Senate Tuesday called for the reading of the house general appropriations bill, which reached the Senate for the first time Tuesday. He urged the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill was referred, to consider the matter with all possible speed.

Among the new bills introduced Tuesday morning was the bill of Senator DuBose, providing for the regulation of the business of fire, marine and inland insurance by companies chartered by other States or foreign Governments.

A bill of President Anderson, providing for the decreasing of the minimum and the increase of the maximum limits of the number of directors of navigation companies, also was introduced.

Sunday Schools of DeKalb County Meet

The DeKalb County Sunday School convention and the Mills District Association convened jointly at Clifton Church in DeKalb County Tuesday. The convention will last two days. The usual contest singing will take place Wednesday afternoon.

Arrangements have been made to carry all who desire to attend from the junction of the East Lake and South Decatur car lines for 10 cents each way per person. Conveyances will leave the junction at from 7:45 to 8:15 and from 9:45 to 10 o'clock in the morning, returning will leave the grounds at a time to suit the crowd. Dinner will be for sale on the grounds for those who do not desire to bring baskets.

Fraser Boys' School To Begin New Career

The Donald Fraser School for Boys, in Decatur, which suspended last year, will reopen in September with Professor Paul J. King, formerly of the University School at Stone Mountain, as its official head. Professor King will have an efficient faculty associated with him and a new life is predicted for the famous school.

Donald Fraser will take a leading part in athletics during the coming year, for Mr. King has stated that he is in favor of all varieties of sport. He is now negotiating with one of the best athletic directors in Southern "prep" circles. The limit of the school will be about 60 boys for the first year.

WILSON SCORED IN WHITE SLAVE ROW

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In a speech bristling with criticism of the actions of the administration in the Caminetti-Diggs white slave cases, Representative Julius Kahn, a California Republican, to-day in the House called on the Attorney General for information regarding the postponed trial of these cases.

"The administration has not come out of this controversy with honor and credit," said Kahn. He declared there was abundant evidence of "pull" in both the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

Kahn concluded his speech saying: "Instead of having been blamed and condemned, McNab should have been commended by the President. The President has done just what McNab wanted done, but how is it to be done? By special counsel, who will be paid large fees for doing the very thing that the United States Attorney would have performed as a matter of duty.

"The Department of Justice above all others must be above suspicion. It has long been believed by the masses that there is one kind of law for the rich and the politically powerful in this country and another kind of law for the poor and weak. The action of the Department of Justice in the Caminetti-Diggs cases and the Western Fuel cases would seem to stamp this charge as true."

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Joe Welch at Forsyth.

Joe Welch, the Hebrew comedian, who has made Atlanta laugh many a time, is doing it again this week. His turn is the headliner of the new bill of vaudeville at the Forsyth. He springs many of his old jokes and many new ones, and sings a few new parodies.

Elsa Ward, a pretty young woman, who sings splendidly, takes second honors. Her gown attracts more attention from a certain part of the audience than does her singing, but she has an excellent voice, nevertheless. Other acts are Karl Cress, a painter of oils and watercolors; Robert L. Dailey and company in a sketch; Cunningham and Marion, acrobats; the Lefel Trio, gymnasts; a tiresome lot of nonsense by a company of three persons and the Patheplay.

Alaska Pictures Winners.

Educational pictures of the Alaska-Siberia hunt of the Carnegie museum tour, which, starting from Seattle, covered hitherto unexplored lands in the frozen North, are being shown for the first time in Atlanta at the Grand this week. The pictures are extremely interesting and held the breathless attention of a large audience.

The hunt was made in the interest of science, and to obtain specimens and pictures of wild animal life for the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburg. Scenes that have been visited by few white men are shown and the vast snow fields and mountains of ice shown on the screen are specially suited for the summer season.

65 Sing Sing Rioters Transferred in Irons

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

BATTLE FOR TAX REFORM BEGUN IN HOUSE

Lipscombe Measure Is Taken Up in Sections as the Special Order of Business.

The first active steps toward tax reform in Georgia were taken by the House Tuesday morning, when the consideration of the Lipscombe bill, which creates a State and County Boards of Tax Equalizers was begun. The bill, together with amendments offered by the Ways and Means Committee and by members from the floor of the House, was made a special order of the day, and was taken up by sections.

The work of perfecting the bill probably will not be completed for several days. Though there were several lively skirmishes to-day, in one of which Speaker Burwell saved a section of the bill, as amended by the committee, by voting aye, opponents of the measure will reserve their heavy fire until the bill comes up for passage. This is not expected until the latter part of the week.

Three Members on Board.

The Lipscombe bill, as amended by the Ways and Means Committee, provides that the State board shall consist of three members appointed by the Governor for two, four and six-year terms. An amendment offered by Moon, of Troup, that the Governor appoint one members from North Georgia, one from South Georgia and one from Central Georgia, was adopted. The county board shall consist of three members appointed by the judge of the Superior Court of the county, upon recommendation of the Board of County Commissioners.

The only fight of any consequence that developed during the consideration of the bill came when section 12, providing for a secretary for the board, was read. The Ways and Means Committee amended the original bill, which provided for a secretary at $2,000 a year by striking the entire section and substituting a provision that the Comptroller General should be secretary of the board at no salary at all. Half a dozen amendments were offered by members from the floor.

Secretary Given $500 Salary.

After much discussion, amendments offered by Representatives Fullbright, Miller and Wimberly were adopted. Mr. Fullbright's amendment provided for the employment of secretary at a salary of $500 a year; Mr. Wimberly's and Mrs. Miller's amendment made the Comptroller General an ex-officio member of the board, to act in an advisory capacity without a vote.

FFifteen sections of the bill were adopted Tuesday. The remaining seven will be considered Wednesday, after which the bill will be placed upon its passage.

Trains Collide in Fog; Brakeman Dead

VALDOSTA, July 29.—In a head-on collision between freight trains on the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, 21 miles north of here, to-day Henry Castello, a negro brakeman, was instantly killed. The other members of the crews jumped and none was seriously hurt, except Engineer Mann, who had an ankle broken.

The collision took place during a fog and, it is said, was caused by the operator at Adel misunderstanding orders and failing to hold the southbound train. The two locomotives and thirteen loaded cars were demolished.

Army Paymaster Liable for $86,510

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Captain R. C. Williams, U. S. A. paymaster at Olongapo, P. I., personally is liable to the Government for $86,510.84 until he presents receipts and evidences that he paid out this amount.

Captain Williams says he paid the money to contractors, soldiers and others to whom payment was due from the Government and that the receipts were lost in the wreck of the collier Brutus at sea.

England May Call On Boers in Mine Strife

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

JOHANNESBURG, July 29.—Business is at a complete standstill here. The miners, angry over the refusal of the Government to meet their demands are in an ugly mood. Threats to burn the mining property have been made.

The men also resent the report that the Government intends to bring commands of armed Boers to quell any possible rioting.

Eugenic Bride of A Month Deserts

BOSTON, July 29.—"Eugenic marriage may be all right as a health proposition, but it isn't a guarantee of future happiness," declared Edwin Perron, of Lynn, the first eugenic husband in Massachusetts.

His wife, he says, ran away a month after the wedding.

Highwaymen Slug Guest of Waldorf

NEW YORK, July 29.—Evidently the victim of a highwayman's assault, Frederick B. Wells, millionaire merchant of Minneapolis, was found to-day lying on the sidewalk at a corner of the lower West Side. He was hatless and coatless.

Wells was hurried to a hospital. He had been stopping at the Waldorf Astoria.

JULY AND AUGUST TAKE AEROPLANE

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 3 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

During the afternoon session part of the early advance was wiped out through active selling, believed to be profit-taking by early buyers. Old crop positions, however, held firm. Losses were attributed mainly to new crops. At the close the market was steady with prices 1 to 2 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Apart from the absence of rain in the southern half of Texas, the map shows favorable conditions. The most favorable developments were the let-up in the heavy rainfall in the Central and Eastern States, where a spell of comparatively dry weather is desired in order to produce the best results. There were only a few light showers overnight in Oklahoma and the Atlantics, generally fair weather is shown in Texas and Oklahoma. Northwest Texas, Amarillo, had .72 inch of rain.

Indications are for generally fair weather in the West, except possibly some cloudiness over Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma. Part cloudy in the Central and Eastern States, with a few scattered showers.

Houston, Texas, to-day officially recorded the receipt of six new bales of cotton, making receipts to date 31 new, against 13 last year. This supports the contention that, owing to the uniformity of crop development, the movement of new cotton will increase much more rapidly this year when once started.

Our markets showed indecision, opinions varying as to whether to act on the bullish weather conditions in the West, or to expect a bearish effect from the increase in the new movement reflected by the Houston receipts. First trades were at an advance of 3 to 5 points, which was soon lost.

COTTON GOSSIP

The market has ruled very steady all day on buying from the some sources as yesterday. Brokers representing spot interests have been principal buyers. Selling has come from the uptown crowd and Wall street apparently. The market is narrow, with transactions small. Until further weather developments prevail a narrow market is looked for with an upward tendency.—Anderson.

Pell interests were credited with buying considerable cotton yesterday on the decline, covering shorts and probably going long on the belief that a large portion of Texas is in a bad way. Riordan purchases supposedly for the above firm were in the neighborhood of 35,000 bales. Liverpool was a large seller.

* * *

Nell Bros., of London, in their latest circular maintain their estimate of 14,750,000 bales as the actual consumption of American cotton for the present season. This estimate was made public the latter part of October, 1912.

* * *

The market is extremely sensitive to all reports and did a lot of nervous flopping around.

* * *

The change is the attitude of the Exchange Place house yesterday did not seem to attract outside buying of consequence, probably because crop conditions as a whole are considered excellent.

* * *

An increased trade demand for contracts is reported on a scale down.

* * *

Further rains in the Western section would undoubtedly bring out heavy sales from Wall Street and the South. It seems purely a weather market now and will be influenced accordingly.

* * *

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crops in Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas:

"Tennessee—Prospects for cotton are better than for many years. The plant is strong and well fruited, with a good stand and free from insects. Fields are clean and well cultivated. A few localities are needing rain, but as a rule precipitation has been ample. Percentage condition is considerably higher than a month ago, when it was 82.7. The season is about normal, though some correspondents report it earlier than usual.

"Louisiana—Owing to drouth and the almost universal presence of the boll weevil, percentage condition appears to have lost a few points from last month, when it was 80.6, but the prospects are better than a year ago, when condition was 74.7. Otherwise, prospects for a large crop are excellent and the outturn depends largely upon the success of the fight against the boll weevil. The plant is strong and healthy, with a fair stand and good fruitage.

"Arkansas—Cotton has maintained its rather high percentage condition of a month ago, when it was 85.4 and 77.7 a year ago. The plant is of good size, with fair stands and fruiting rather heavily. Cultivation and condition of the fields are unusually fine and a number of correspondents look for the biggest crop in years. The only drawback has been the hot dry weather, which has checked growth and fruiting. Damage from boll weevil is very slight and the crop is very free from other insect pests.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market had digested reports showing continued dry weather in Central Texas, which produces the bulk of the crop of the Lone Star State. It also had to discount the market effect of probable higher temperatures in that section. Hence the steady tone and higher range in values. The talent is aware of the fact that rain relief did not reach North and West Texas in time to figure in the data gathered on July 25 for the government crop condition report, which will be promulgated on August 8. It is also convinced that the official instructions to government agents to watch out for weevil damage will result in some Bureau utterances that will aid the bulls rather than the bears.

"Under the circumstances the rings were inclined to think the decline had gone far enough for the present, and that a moderate upward reaction was in order. Meanwhile, optimistic opinions as to the crop promise reach the rings in numbers every day. On the other hand, Texas is not offering new crop cotton in anything like the volume usual at this time of year, and exporters are beginning to believe that Texas contribution of new cotton during August will be comparatively small, probably very much smaller than that of last year, according to one of them. In normal seasons this is the time when consumers and importers in America sell specific grades and weights in volume for delivery in October, December, January and March. Such business, of course, generally results in contracts, which the speculator supplying the difference between the long and the short hedges required by the trade."

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say: "The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The oats crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among reailers generally."

DAMAGE TO CORN WORRIES STREET

By CHARLES W. STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—An irregular tone was shown in the early trading on the Stock Exchange, there being complete absence of vigor which characterized the dealings for the two preceding weeks. In some quarters it was thought that enough long stock was sold to make the market again susceptible to their influence.

Union Pacific yielded ½ and losses of around ½ point were also sustained in Amalgamated, American Can and Canadian Pacific. Steel rose ¼, but later reacted the same amount. Americans were well above parity in London, where the trading was of an irregular character.

The curb was steady.

The market continued irregular with considerable losses and small trading except the buying at the start from London. Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Steel and Chesapeake and Ohio were the most active although they recorded losses. Reading sold ex-dividend of 2 per cent at 160⅛, a decline of ⅝. Missouri Pacific and Steel common were both off ⅝. Union Pacific lost ½ at 149¼. Northern Pacific and Lehigh Valley both declined ¾. Southern Pacific was off ⅛ to 93. The tone continued weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

After a listless, lagging market for a good part of the afternoon strength developed with a more active demand and many of the important issues made substantial gains.

The market closed steady. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

STOCK GOSSIP

T. D. Potter says: "The market has every appearance of going higher and stocks like Union Pacific, Reading, Steel and Copper should be bought on every recession.

"I believe another effort to secure higher freight rates will be successful. Steel earnings for quarter published to-day will probably show $35,250,000. This will be bullish and should have a stimulating effect on prices."

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Speculative sentiment is better in the foreign markets. Information channels favor purchase of Standard stocks on reactions for turns. We would not climb for stocks, but would buy conservatively on fair reactions for moderate profits."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends extirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and looks lower.

"Corn—The map shows no rain in the corn belt and very high temperatures prevailed yesterday in all territories west of the river. As long as present weather conditions prevail higher prices seem inevitable.

"Oats—We believe the market will gradually work higher.

"Provisions—Foreigners buyers of lard. The continued strength in corn adds to the general firmness."

Omaha reports no rain in Nebraska. Generally clear over the State. Winnipeg clear, 60; Duluth clear, 40; Glenwood clear; Bismarck clear, 70; Kansas City says corn and wheat bulletin shows no rain.

* * *

Provisional Department of Agriculture of Manitoba estimates wheat crop of 65,000,000 bushels, against 58,000,000 last year.

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "My returns to date, covering almost one-half of the corn producing counties, are showing some sensational losses in corn prospect. Kansas returns as far as tabulated and covering nearly half of the State, show a drop approaching 50 per cent since July 1, and working lower as later reports come in. Nebraska is off nearly 20 points and Oklahoma 40 points; Missouri to date shows 10 points off, and both Illinois and Indiana have lost ground. Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are also showing heavy losses. If the latter reports prove in line with those already received, the general average condition will fall several points under 80, and the official indication on August 1 may not be for a crop over 2,700,000 bushels."

* * *

B. W. Snow has the following from Edgar County, Ill.: "From April 10, we had nine weeks of dry weather, which ruined oats and hay, then we had some rain, which gave corn a fair start, but for the last five weeks we had hot weather and no rain. Unless we get rain in a few days corn will be the worst failure we have had in the 60 years that I have been in this country."

* * *

The Weekly Iowa Weather and Crop Report says: "In some localities in the southeastern counties, where there has been only .05 inch rain during the last 30 days, corn is firing and is at a standstill. Pastures are brown."

* * *

Selling in corn to-day was very scattered and sellers really scarce. That's why the market went up so easy, as nobody dares to take the short side.

How Many Dignified United States Senators Are Getting or Hope to Get Money from the Express Companies?

We Shall Know Exactly When We See How Many Senators Fight Improvements in the Parcel Post.

(Copyright)

Betterments suggested and predicted in this and other newspapers have already "arrived" in the parcel post system.

Mr. Burleson, the present Postmaster General, deserves credit and praise for his efforts to make the parcel post a useful servant of the people, instead of leaving it like a pigeon with its wings clipped—clipped to oblige the express companies.

The silly special stamps that were first necessary have been abolished.

The Government has arranged to send parcel post C. O. D.—a great convenience for merchants and the public.

The sending of larger packages, raising the limit from eleven to twenty pounds, will be of great benefit to business men—especially to the small merchants throughout the country who require and ought to have for the benefit of their customers a complete postal delivery service.

Thanks to Burleson, the stupidities of the zone system are being corrected with reasonable speed.

Before long it is safe to hope that the zones will be abolished, that the postoffice will be the real delivery service of all the people, facilitating transactions and exchanges of all kinds, bringing in many millions of revenue of profit to the Government, saving still many more millions to the people, and abolishing the dishonest, extortionate, monopolistic and stupid reign and control of the express companies.

Do you need to be told that these improvements in the postal service are opposed violently and as usual BY MEMBERS OF THE UNITED STATES CONGRESS, ESPECIALLY BY "DIGNIFIED" SENATORS?

One thing is quite certain, you won't need to be told when United States Senators of the Lorimer type are taking or have taken the cash of the express companies.

You will have a fairly complete list of those gentlemen, when you find which of the "honorable Senators" are most ardent in opposing parcel post improvement, and most vicious in their attacks on Postmaster General Burleson.

Is Your Child Afraid at Night?

(Copyright, 1913.)

Many little boys and girls are frightened at night.

They are in terror if compelled to sleep alone in a dark room. They awake, frightened by bad dreams, shaking with fear, tormented with all kinds of apprehension.

Such children are to be pitied, and they are to be pitied especially when they happen to be "blessed" with parents that do not understand the treatment of such children.

There are many so-called "old-fashioned" fathers and mothers, which usually means IGNORANT fathers and mothers, who believe that nervous, frightened children should be disciplined and made to get over their fears.

Such old-fashioned, ignorant parents send the child to bed alone, preferably up a dark stairway. They put out the light and shut the door when the child is in bed.

AND THE UNFORTUNATE, UNFIT PARENTS DO NOT REALIZE THAT THEY ARE DOING THEIR VERY BEST TO DESTROY THE CHILD'S CHANCE OF SUCCESS AND NORMAL GROWTH.

Fathers and mothers should remember that the one important thing the child possesses is brain. And they should remember that the one valuable thing in the brain IS IMAGINATION.

The child that is frightened, afraid of the dark, afraid of its own strange dreams, is the child with an active mind and an active imagination. AND THAT IS THE CHILD THAT IS APT TO AMOUNT TO SOMETHING LATER ON, IF THE PARENTS WILL GIVE IT A CHANCE.

Remember that the mind, in its nervousness, feeds upon the body.

If you compel your child night after night to undergo the torture of fear you are destroying the child's health, its nerves, taking away its chance of strong growth and future useful work.

A child such as we have described, imaginative, timid, should be constantly surrounded with sympathy and the deepest affection.

In extreme cases, such a child should be allowed to go to sleep within hearing of the voice of an older person. If it is a young child, it is simple enough to allow it to sleep in an adjoining room while you read or talk. It can be moved to its own bed still sleeping when the time comes.

Or the father and mother fit to have a child, fit for the responsibility for developing a human being, will take the trouble to spend the hours of the evening near enough to the child's bedroom so that an occasional kind, encouraging word may dispel fear.

If the child is happier with a light, LET THE LIGHT BURN after the child goes to bed, placing the light in such a way that the child will know it is there, without having any glare in the eyes.

Or a very small night lamp, a mere tumbler of water with a few cents' worth of oil on the water and a floating wick, will answer the purpose.

Remember that a child's fears, nervousness and strange dreams are THE EXPRESSION OF THAT CHILD'S INTELLECTUAL FORCE.

If you were the father of a little gorilla, it would go to sleep at once, not dream, not imagine anything. BUT YOU WOULDN'T BE VERY PROUD TO HAVE A YOUNG GORILLA OR CHIMPANZEE FOR YOUR CHILD.

If you are the father of a highly strung, nervous, imaginative child, be glad that you have such a child, and do all that you can with sympathy, love and kindness to make the child's early years happy and free from nervous strain.

The Good and Evil of Modern Inventions

Where They Endanger the Peace and Safety of One They Brighten and Better a Hundred---It Is Foolish to Rail at Them.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

TWO bright and gifted women have spent much valuable thought, time and words in condemnation of the telephone and the automobile.

Both women assert that these modern inventions have done much to lower the standard of manners and morals in the last decade.

Young girls particularly have been led to do foolish and undignified things by the use of the telephone and by the convenience of the motor car.

The Evils These Women See In "Auto" and "Phone."

Invitations are given over the telephone to meet friends who own a motor car, and the lack of ceremony and lack of time for reflection lead quite frequently to lack of discretion. The bodiless voice and the horseless vehicle seem (so these good ladies think) like secret emissaries of Evil, moving through the earth to work mischief for the unwary.

Besides this, the motor car has led women to be careless in dress and careless in deportment.

It has led to noise and hurry and confusion and extravagance and roadhouse indiscretions. And to a disregard for the nice proprieties and courtesies of life.

People drive now to speed from somewhere to nowhere and back again, without having enjoyed the scenery or the fresh air—just to make a speed record. And much more, these good ladies say in condemnation of the motor car and of the telephone, which interrupts all efforts at quiet conversation, and which has quite done away with the art of letter writing or the habit of sending pretty notes of invitation or greeting, and which very often makes an excuse easy where social obligations have been neglected.

However true all these accusations are against the telephone and automobile, there is no waste of energy more foolish and none which brings less reward than railing at new inventions.

Precisely so was the railroad assailed when it first appeared as a means of locomotion. Its noise, its expense, its dangers, its vulgarity, were set forth beside the time-honored stage coach; where people could be comfortable and safe and dignified; but the assailants achieved nothing, and the stage coach departed and the railroad remained.

And, despite its objectionable features, the railroad opened up new worlds to commerce, industry and art. It brought education into remote places and gave a larger aspect to life for millions of mentally and physically starving human beings.

The bicycle was the first vehicle after the railroad which brought forth the condemnation of the type of mind which produces the Protestor.

The Bicycle a Wonderful Factor in Woman's Development.

Its lack of dignity, its boldness and its danger were all dwelt upon as features which made it a particularly improper conveyance for woman's use. Yet the bicycle has been a wonderful factor in producing our present type of athletic outdoor woman.

Before it came into use, the delicate woman with a thousand feminine ailments was prevalent everywhere—in the country places. Now she is rarely around, because for two generations woman has been able to go beyond her dooryard without waiting for the men folks to "hitch up" a tired horse and drive her to make a call or do an errand.

The bicycle made it possible for woman to occupy a better-paying position than that of household drudge, because she could go to and from her more agreeable labor independently and swiftly.

The automobile is doing more to help the cause of the suffering horse than all the S. P. C. A. and humane associations combined.

It is teaching geography more practically than all the schools of the land; and it is one of the most efficient aids in detective work, and in first help to the wounded, the sick, the needy and the overworked.

Where it endangers the peace and safety of one individual, it brightens and betters a hundred. Where it brings into one home temptation and indiscretion, it helps a hundred people to do good deeds and to carry comfort and joy into other homes. Where it destroys one life, it restores health to human beings whose lung cells have been starved for fresh air.

Where one person uses a motor car for evil purposes, fifty use it for doing good deeds, for speeding through familiar scenes in order to enlarge the vision by the sight of the unfamiliar, and for giving pleasure to relays of other human beings who have not the money or time to travel by train, or the strength and leisure to travel by foot.

Besides which, the automobile is bringing human beings in hailing distance and doing away with the sense of separateness, which means a foe to real altruism.

All the world needs for its regeneration is a clear knowledge and understanding between the various classes and denizens of earth.

The motor car is a great introduction and interpreter.

People who waste their time and energy in fighting against, or even in decrying, such an invention as the railroad, the telephone or the motor, are working against their own best growth and progress.

It is wiser to learn to understand the great psychic meaning underlying all these modern inventions, and we must get into touch with their vibrations, and feel their rhythm in our own minds and bodies, and to use them as they are meant to be used—sanely and helpfully.

Great Mental Realm Will Not Be Closed to All But Few.

All these marvellous things are being invented that man may rise out of drudgery and avail himself of the still more wonderful opportunities which are coming to the race.

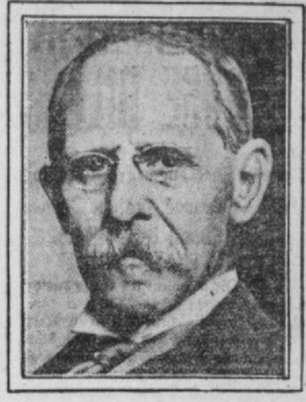
The vacuum cleaners are emancipating the dust-smothered slaves of the broom. The world's work will eventually all be done by machinery, and three hours' time will be quite sufficient for each individual to give in directing this machinery.

Then the great mental realms, the realms of art and literature and research, will not be closed to all save the favored few.

All hail to the age of invention! And let us devoutly thank God that we are privileged to live in this most remarkable and glorious era of the world's history. The best thing about the Past is that it has gone, to give us the better Present, and to make ready for the still better Future.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

Microbes, When Trained, Are Capable of Aiding Efficiently Man's War Against Disease, Such as the Infections That Are Spread by Flies, Aid Industry Also.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

THE name "microbe" is one that generally inspires terror because of all the wonderful discoveries that have been made concerning the fearful death-dealing powers that many microbes possess.

But, in a most interesting article in Hearst's Magazine for July, Sir William Ramsay has just pointed out how microbes may be, and are, engaged as allies of man, either by changing their malignant nature, or by setting them to war upon other minute foes with which we can not ourselves directly fight.

In some cases the services which microbes are able to render in the battle against disease might be compared to that of fleets of small armed boats sent out from a squadron of battleships to enter the shallow and hidden creeks and coves on an enemy's coast, and attack the foe in positions unapproachable to the heavy vessels.

Our trained microbe allies may race through our blood, and penetrate the most secret regions of our bodies, either destroying the enemies already lurking there, or laying waste the territory against their advance by depriving it of the means of subsistence upon which the invaders must depend.

Microbes Are Scouts.

And all this may be done without harm to the tissues or the functions of the body.

Such beneficent microbes are like scouts and guerrillas, and where they have skirmished the enemy is found to be so disorganized and broken up that it can be swept out of existence.

A dramatic example of the way in which the discovery was made that microbes can, as Professor Ramsay says, be "harnessed" for useful work, is afforded by Pasteur's experience with "chicken cholera." He had been inoculating healthy chickens with microbes taken from fowls infected with the disease, in order to study its method of development. The vacation period came along, and Pasteur went away, leaving some of the cultures of microbes in his laboratory. When he returned he resumed his experiments with the microbes that had been left over, and which seemed, as far as appearances went, to be as virulent as ever.

But to his astonishment, when he inoculated them into healthy chickens, the latter went about their gallinaceous (henlike) affairs with their usual zest and good appetite, and did not develop diseases of any kind. Here was an opportunity for genius, and Pasteur was a genius. Instantly he set to work to find out the reason for the immunity of the chickens from so deadly an enemy. First he inoculated them over again with microbes taken fresh from fowls that had the cholera. But the chickens remained as lively and healthy as ever. Then he found out that if the microbes were exposed for a long time to the air, at a certain temperature, they lost their virulence, they could no longer communicate disease, but they could, like scavengers, remove from the blood of the chickens into which they were introduced the elements upon which the disease-breeding microbes subsisted.

Pasteur's Discovery.

Thus Pasteur, led by a happy accident, had learned how to "harness" the microbes of chicken cholera and make them work for health and life instead of for disease and death. They became his guerrillas, with which he waged successful war upon an enemy of the domestic fowl that had hitherto defied attack.

After that it was found that many other microbes, some of them deadly enemies to human life, like the terrible germ of spinal meningitis, could be subdued and trained in a similar way, and thus the great science of inoculation against disease had its birth.

Professor Ramsay shows that microbes can be employed not only in combating disease, but in aiding man in a hundred other ways. For instance, the preparation of tea, the curing of tobacco and the manufacture of butter and cheese are all processes conducted through the intervention of our microbe friends, which are falling more and more under our control and guidance. Science is teaching them new duties.

Public Should Approve.

"New bacteria," says Professor Ramsay (bacteria are microbes), "are being discovered, or old bacteria are being given unaccustomed food, from which they evolve useful products. The conversion of starch, a cheap commodity in the form of maize or potatoes, into two chemical substances, named acetone and butyl alcohol, is likely to have far-reaching results, for the latter can easily be transformed into india rubber, and the former is largely used in the manufacture of certain kinds of high explosives."

Mistaken people who would interfere with such work on purely sentimental grounds are capable of doing much harm to the best interests of humanity.

Julius Caesar

As the Movies Would Have Given It

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

SCENE ONE—A crowd of scowling thugs, in flowing bathrobes clad,
Whose gestures seem to indicate that some one is in bad.
They crowd around a high-browed gent, and whisper in his ear;
He waves a deprecating hand, as if in doubt or fear.
A tall, gaunt person enters now and winks a leering eye,
And next appear these fateful words:

"WE GOT TO GET THAT GUY!"

SCENE TWO—A statue in a street—a large, imposing man,
Surrounded by the gang we saw when first the show began.
And as they move along they shield their faces with their hats,
And each deposits as he leaves a dagger in his slats.
The large man starts; among the gang a friend he's recognized,
And this appears upon the screen:

"WHY, BRUTUS; I'M SURPRISED!"

SCENE THREE—A man with waving arms is talking to a crowd;
At first he doesn't seem to stir them much, although his voice looks loud.
But by and by they pay more heed and make quick movements, showing
That something he has said to them has really got them going.
Some now grab brickbats and run off, a dozen at a time,
And on the screen these words appear:

"ANOTHER BLACK-HAND CRIME."

SCENE LAST—A tent, two generals indulge in jeer and scoff,
But presently by shaking hands they seem to call it off.
And now a page comes rushing in, and by his attitude
You know the plotters' army has been walloped and pursued.
The generals calmly kill themselves; the reels no longer hum,
And this appears upon the screen:

ROSSER TRIES TO INVOLVE NEGRO

Newton Lee, Night Watchman, Is Grilled by Lawyer for Defense in Frank Trial.

A startling turn to the trial of Leo M. Frank was given Tuesday by the determined efforts of Frank's attorneys to connect Newt Lee, night-watchman at the National Pencil Factory, with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief counsel for Frank, revealed the hand of the defense for the first time when he began a merciless cross-examination of the negro which was intended utterly to discredit Lee's testimony and show that he knew much more about the crime than he ever had told in his two appearances before the Coroner's jury and in his sweating at the police station.

Rosser's inquisitorial tactics brought remonstrance after remonstrance from Solicitor Dorsey, but was allowed to continue on a ruling from Judge Roan.

Rosser read extracts from Lee's testimony at the Coroner's inquest and pointed out descrepancies and omissions. When these were called to the negro's attention, he declared emphatically that the stenographer had made a mistake.

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was concerned in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's and the jurors were excused while Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall negro did it by his-self.'

"In an instant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me,'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions now and again interpreted this mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note itself, there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it.

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

65 RIOTERS IN IRONS.

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

KILLS EX-WIFE; WOUNDS SELF.

BIRMINGHAM, July 29.—Frenzied at sight of his former wife, Henry J. Naff, son of one of the oldest families in Birmingham, to-day walked next door to his home, where Mrs. Marie Naff, from whom he was divorced six months ago, was sitting on the porch, pulled out a pistol and shot her, and then put a bullet into his own head.

The woman died on the way to the hospital, and Naff was pronounced fatally wounded when he arrived at an infirmary.

Naff was living with his parents while his former wife resided next door with friends.

THIS is a picture of Leo M. Frank, the young pencil factory superintendent, who was placed on trial in Atlanta on Monday charged with slaying Mary Phagan, a girl employee of the concern.

Kills His Sister by Mistake for Burglar

ELBERTON, July 29.—Mack Guest shot and instantly killed his 17-year-old sister last night, mistaking her for a burglar. She was visiting from the country.

Guest told his sister to leave a window open when she retired. About 10:30 o'clock Miss Guest decided to close the window. Mrs. Guest awoke, telling her husband someone was breaking into his sister's room. Guest secured a shotgun and shot his sister in the back. No arrest has been made. Guest is prostrated.

TRY TO ROB JUROR'S HOUSE.

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

HIS BLOOD MAY SAVE WIFE.

CINCINNATI, July 29.—In order to save the life of his wife Joseph Tinker, manager of the Cincinnati Reds, may be compelled to submit to an operation for transfusion of blood at a Kansas City hospital.

Mrs. Tinker, who was until recently in a Chicago hospital, has suffered a decided change for the worse, and a telegram summoned the Reds' leader to her side.

REAL ESTATE MEN ENTERTAIN.

WINNIPEG, MANITOBA, July 29. One thousand real estate dealers in the United States arrived here to-day to take part in the National Real Estate Convention. The Government and the railroad are entertaining the visitors with the idea of counteracting the unfavorable impressions being expressed regarding Canadian real estate specualtion.

Bees Usurp Bed and Couple Can't Sleep

BUCK GROVE, IOWA, July 29.—A swarm of bees does not form as easy a resting place as a feather bed, as Mr. and Mrs. Nels Wingrove discovered. Going to bed in an upstairs room in the dark, as was their custom, they heard the buzzing of bees. It was discovered that a swarm of bees had settled in their bed.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

BRIDE DENIES POISON PLOT.

Emphatic denial of her husband's charges that she tried to kill him by putting particles of broken glass in his coffee cup are made in the cross bill filed by Mrs. Blanche Sweat in answer to the petition for divorce filed recently by her husband, E. R. Sweat. The husband bases his plea for divorce on the assertion that his wife had tried to kill him by placing the glass in his cup.

In her cross bill Mrs. Sweat declares that Sweat himself had, through accident and while drunk, placed the broken glass in the cup.

25 YOUNG MEN HELD

DALLAS, TEXAS, July 29.—Twenty-five young men, rounded up by the police after the murder of Miss Florence Brown, were being held to-day as suspects

The girl was a stenographer in a real estate office and was alone when she was attacked.

WILSON OPPOSED TO INTERVENTION

Carranza, Therefore, Looms Up as the Hope for Peace in Mexico.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—From information which seems to me in the last degree reliable, I have it that the Administration—White House and President—are rigidly set against intervention in Mexico.

All forms of diplomacy they are willing to apply and exhaust. All efforts to mediation they are willing to try. Perhaps in co-operation with other nations they might be willing to intervene, but as an abstract American proposition, neither the President nor Mr. Bryan will ever consent to intervention by the United States in Mexico unless the compulsion should be stronger than policy and forced by evident unavoidable necessity.

So, therefore, Carranza looms up on the Mexican horizon as the man of the future, the next revolutionary dictator or President of the so-called Mexican republic.

If the present attitude of neutrality restricts the advantage of Huerta in importing arms or gives equal chance to Carranza with Huerta, then the experts of our own arm agree perfectly with the optimist of the constitutionalists and revolutionists that within 60 days Huerta will be relegated to the ranks of the discredited and dethroned, and Carranza, for a time at least, will be the dictator.

DENOUNCES MULHALL.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee, had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

SAY SLANDER CAUSED KILLING.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow-engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis, the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

MAY CALL IN BOERS.

JOHANNESBURG, July 29.—Business is at a complete standstill here. The miners, angry over the refusal of the Government to meet their demands, are in an ugly mood. Threats to burn the mining property have been made.

The men also resent the report that the Government intends to bring commands of armed Boers to quell any possible rioting.

CZAR'S DAUGHTER TO WED.

PARIS, July 29.—It was reported here to-day that the engagement of the Grand Duchess Olga, eldest daughter of Czar Nicholas of Russia, and Prince Charles, eldest son of the Crown Prince of Roumania, will be announced shortly.

The Grand Duchess was born November 3, 1895, and Prince Charles October 3, 1893.

SHE COULDN'T PLAY PIANO.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Five dollars a week alimony was granted Mrs. Amelia Cohn after she told the court her husband abandoned her because she could not play the piano.

Her husband said the trouble was "too much mother-in-law."

Who Makes the "Criminals?"

Much interest just now in CRIMINALS.

Much horror aroused by depravity.

Many plans more or less appropriate for making the air pure.

Many good men, politicians, women and bishops who spend the summer at the seaside are willing to spend a few days wiping "CRIME" off the earth.

What is CRIME? Who are the CRIMINALS? Who makes the criminals?

Do criminals viciously and voluntarily arise among us, eager to lead hunted lives, eager to be jailed at intervals, eager to crawl in the dark, dodge policemen, work in stripes and die in shame? Hardly.

Will you kindly and patiently follow the lives, quickly sketched, of a boy and a girl?

THE GIRL.

Born poor, born in hard luck, her father, or mother, or both, victims of long hours, poor fare, bad air and little leisure.

As a baby she struggles against fate and manages to live while three or four little brothers and sisters die and go back to kind earth.

She crawls around the rooms of a small house, a good deal in the way. She is hunted here and chased there.

She is cold in winter, ill-fed in summer, never well cared for.

She gets a little so-called education. Ill-dressed and ashamed beside the other children, she is glad to escape the education. No one at home can help her on. No one away from home cares about her.

She grows up white, sickly, like a potato sprouting in a cellar. At the corner of a fine street she sees the automobiles passing with other girls in warm furs, or in fine, cool summer dresses.

With a poor shawl around her and with heels run down she peers in at the restaurant window, to see other women leading lives very different from hers.

Steadily she has impressed upon her the fact, absolutely undeniable, that as the world is organized there is no especial place for her—certainly no comfort for her.

She finds work, perhaps. Hours as long as the daylight.

Ten minutes late—half a day's fine.

At the end of the day aching feet, aching back, system ill-fed, not enough earned to live upon honestly—and that prospect stretches ahead farther than her poor eyes can see.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Disorderly conduct, Your Honor."

There's the criminal that Society is hunting so ardently.

THE BOY.

Same story, practically.

He plays ball in the street—cuffed, if caught by the policeman.

He swings on the awning poles, trying to exercise his stunted muscles—cuffed again.

In burning July, with shirt and trousers on, he goes swimming in private ponds—caught and cuffed and handed over to the police.

He tries for work.

"What do you know?"

"I don't know nothin'; nobody ever taught me."

He can not even endure the discipline of ten hours' daily shoveling—it takes education to instill discipline, if only the education of the early pick and shovel.

He has not been taught anything. He has been turned loose in a city full of temptation. He had no real start to begin with, and no effort was ever made to repair his evil beginning.

"WHAT'S THE CHARGE, OFFICER?"

"Attempted burglary; pleads guilty."

In prison he gets an education. They teach him how to be a good burglar and not get caught. Patiently the State boards him, and educates him to be a first-rate criminal.

Dear bishops, noble women, good men and scheming politicians, listen to this story:

In the South Sea Islands they have for contagious diseases a horror as great as your horror of crime.

A man or woman stricken with a loathsome disease, such as smallpox, is seized, isolated, and the individual sores of the smallpox patient are earnestly scraped with sea shells—until the patient dies. It hurts the patient a good deal—without ever curing, of course—but it relieves the feelings of the outraged good ones who wield the sea shells.

You kind-hearted creatures, hunting "crime" in great cities, are like the South Sea Islanders in their treatment of smallpox.

You ardently wield your reforming sea shells and you scrape very earnestly at the sores so well developed.

But if you ever get tired of scraping with sea shells, try vaccination, or, better still, try to take such care of youth, to give such chances and education to the young, as will save them from the least profitable of all careers—CRIME.

Scrape away with your sea shells, but try also to give a few more and a few better chances in youth to those whom you now hunt as criminals in their mature years.

God creates boys and girls, anxious to live decently.

YOUR SOCIAL SYSTEM makes criminals and fills jails.

Government Officials Protecting Crime

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

:-: Peter the Great's Window :-:

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

"I don't know whether to accept this testimonial or not," mused the hair restorer man.

"What's the matter with it?" demanded the advertising manager.

"Well," explained the boss, "the man writes, 'I used to have three bald spots on the top of my head, but since using one bottle of your hair restorer I have only one.'"

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt to happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

And now she smiled, a tender, happy smile and, trembling with delight, her lips whispered: "Yes, I understand you."

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

Not Slow.

A reverend gentleman was addressing a school class recently, and was trying to enforce the doctrine that the hearts of the little ones were sinful and needed regulating. Taking out his watch and holding it up he said:

"Now, here is my watch; suppose it doesn't keep good time—now goes too fast, and now goes slow. What shall I do with it?"

"Sell it!" shouted a small youngster.

:: Our Jap Brother ::

By BERTON BRALEY.

(With the Usual Apologies.)

THIS talk of our "Japanese brother"
Has rather got under my skin,
For taking one thing with another
I do not consider him kin.
I freely confess I don't love him,
However his virtues may shine.
He may be a brother of William J. Bryan,
But he ain't no brother of mine!

I think he's a fraud and a shammer
For all of his courteous ways,
And I'll just add my voice to the "clamor
The ignorant populace raise."
I don't like the Japanese coolie
(I'm narrow, of course, you opine).
He may be a brother of William J. Bryan,
But he ain't no brother of mine!

He may be all right out in Nippon,
And that's where I want him to stay,
I don't like his getting his grip on
The soil of the old U. S. A.
I don't like his ways or his morals,
His creed or his facial design.
He may be a brother of William J. Bryan,
But he ain't no brother of mine!

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."

E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says, "they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

REPUDIATES CONFESSION THAT SHE SHOT HUSBAND

GAINESVILLE, July 22.—Repudiating her confession as to the shooting of her ball player husband, Tom Wood, and charging a man with firing the bullet will be the sensational testimony of Mrs. Pearl Thomas Wood before the Hall County Grand Jury this afternoon. This man comes from a prominent family and his arrest is ending in the probably fatal wounding of Wood.

Gainesville is greatly excited over the shooting. The statement this morning that Mrs. Wood would completely repudiate her confession and charge the man with firing the shot aroused intense interest. The Grand expected.

This man was an old friend of Mrs. Wood's, and when she was told by her husband that he was going to desert her, it is said, she appealed to him. He came to the Wood home on Athens street, where a quarrel began, Jury is in session, and the Solicitor announced this morning that an immediate investigation would be held.

At a local hospital Tom Wood lies in a dying condition, a bullet hole in one of his lungs and with but two days at the most in which he can possibly live. At the county jail is his bride of a few months, completely prostrated. Tuesday night she confessed to the killing, declaring that she had determined to kill her husband rather than have him desert her. She declared that he had decided upon a separation and was preparing to leave Gainesville.

According to the account of the shooting, which, it is said, Mrs. Wood will make to the Grand Jury, her husband, another man and herself were in the Wood home when a quarrel ensued, during which the other man drew a pistol. Wood ran from the house and as he darted out the front door the other man shot, Wood falling fatally wounded upon the porch.

Neighbors rushed in and found Mrs. Wood weeping over the body of her youthful husband. An automobile was obtained and the wounded man placed in it. Mrs. Wood accompanied him to the hospital, holding his head tenderly in her lap, while her cries drew the tears from others in the machine. In contrast to her piteous condition the husband charged her time and again with shooting him. His protestations that "She shot me!" "She shot me!" continued after he had been placed upon the operating table.

A few moments after the wounded man was taken to the hospital Sheriff Spencer arrived there. Mrs. Wood surrendered to him and admitted that she had done the shooting. She begged to be allowed to remain with her husband, but owing to his condition and his continual charges that she had done the shooting, it was thought best to remove her. She was taken to the county jail, where she spent the night weeping and piteously declaring her love for her husband.

"He was preparing to desert me, and was going away at midnight," she told the Sheriff. "He came to the house to tell me good-bye. I made up my mind I would rather kill him than have him desert me."

Mrs. Wood is a bride of but a few months. Wood has played with the Gainesville ball club for a long while. The courtship began a few months ago, when he was introduced to her at the ball park. She was Miss Pearl Thomas, and comes from a highly respected family, which has been living in Gainesville for ten years. She was extremely popular and a host of her friends called at the county jail this morning.

GIVEN LIFE SENTENCE.

LEXINGTON, July 23.—Andrew Johnson, charged with being one of the men who assassinated Ed Callahan, former noted feudist of the Breathitt County mountains, has been found guilty at Winchester, Ky., and given a life sentence.

Court immediately began the trial of Fletcher Deaton, charged with conspiracy in the assassination plot. Eighteen more will be tried for the actual murder, and twelve others for perjury. These cases are expected to consume five weeks. The feature evidence in each case is that of the woman who traced the murder plots or who heard the conspirators plan the murder.

WANTS INVESTIGATION.

Representative Connor, of Spalding County, introduced a resolution in the House to-day calling for a legislative investigation of the State Agricultural College at Athens, particularly with respect to Dr. Andrew M. Soule's connection therewith.

Mr. Connor's resolution recites the fact that Dr. Soule has been publicly accused in The Southern Fancier-Farmer, a poultry and agricultural magazine, with having obtained a recent raise in salary upon false representations, and calls upon the Legislature to investigate the charge and summon Dr. Soule before the Committee on Appropriations to answer the same.

BILL ON SEED COTTON.

A bill requiring all purchasers of seed cotton to keep a complete record of the same has been introduced in the House by Representatives Hines and Moon, of Troup County.

In the last few weeks many complaints have been filed with the Commissioner of Agriculture by farmers who stated that seed cotton which they had purchased under the highest recommendations had proved to be either of inferior quality or absolutely worthless.

NURSE IS ARRESTED.

JOHNSTOWN, PA., July 23.—Miss Ella P. Behe, 23, a nurse, is in the county jail at Ebensburg, charged with horsestealing. She was arrested near Portage riding a horse taken from a livery stable.

SUFFRAGE CAUSE HERE BOOSTED BY BIG MEET

Mrs. M. C. Hardin, a prominent worker for suffrage in Georgia.

Spurred to enthusiasm by Mrs. William Peel, presiding officer, several hundred suffragists and a suffragette or two at Taft Hall Tuesday participated in a monster meeting, in many respects unequaled before in Atlanta. Round after round of applause marked the efforts of every speaker.

The meeting was an all-suffrage affair, for although a debate was advertised not a single out-and-out anti-suffragist speech was made. Ernest Neal, member of the House of Representatives, was the only speaker of the opposition, and even he declared he had little faith in many of the stock arguments of the antis and that he wished Mrs. Peel godspeed in the present movement.

Among the other speakers were Dr. A. M. Hughlett, who declared he was a suffragist first, last and all the time, for the reason that women are as intelligent as men; Mrs. S. E. Cunningham, who paid high tribute to the cause; Mrs. Frances Whitesides, a leader in the Civic League; Mrs. Mary McLendon, "the original suffragette," president of the Georgia League, Mrs. M. C. Hardin and Dr. John E. White.

U. S. PREPARED TO ACT ON SHORT NOTICE IN MEXICO

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Dispatch of a gunboat to Mexican waters, in addition to the four battleships already there, the presence of Secretary of War Garrison and General Leonard Wood on the Texas border and the summoning of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson to Washington are taken to indicate the intention of official circles here that the Mexican situation will no longer be allowed by President Wilson to drift.

Reports from Chihuahua and Coahuila indicate the centralization of the Federalist forces in those provinces and the opening of railroad communication from the capital to the border within a week.

SENATE PASSES MEASURE TO ENFORCE LIQUOR BILL

By a vote of 36 to 3 the Senate Wednesday afternoon passed the Hixon-Searcy prohibition bill providing for the enforcement of the Webb bill in Georgia.

The bill makes it unlawful for any firm or corporation to transport liquor into the State for illegal purposes and places the burden of proof of such legality upon the shipper when quantities in excess of three gallons are shipped.

It was around the three-gallon provision as recommended in the Temperance Committee substitute that the fight centered Wednesday morning.

58 PERSONS LOSE LIVES IN GREAT FACTORY FIRE

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., July 23.—Searching parties to-day worked in the ruins of the building of the Binghamton Clothing Company seeking bodies believed to be buried there.

Streams of water were played on the building all night to cool them enough to allow the rescue work to begin. Workmen at daylight began digging at the tons of charred timber, brick and mortar, in an effort to reach the bodies still known to be buried in the debris.

At noon on Wednesday twenty-one bodies had been recovered. The death list will reach 58, it was estimated. Ten injured are in a hospital. Of the 111 persons in the building at the time the fire broke out only 38 escaped. Forty-seven are missing.

Belief that the alarm was sounded only as a fire drill, caused the great loss of life. When the girls and women working in the factory realized that the building was burning the main avenue of escape had already been cut off. Instantly the other exits were choked with panic-stricken girls.

Many reached the windows but the firemen and others bent on rescuing inmates were powerless to aid them, owing to the rapidity with which the flames licked up the inflammable mill material.

Eighteen minutes elapsed from the time the fire broke out until the walls fell and the building was in ruins.

Reed B. Freeman, president of the company, attributes the fire to the carelessness of an employee in throwing a cigarette butt under a stairway, where inflammable material was stored.

Smoking was prohibited in the building, but many employees were addicted to the habit, according to Freeman, and often went to the alley near the building to smoke.

Rigid investigation of the fire will be made by the authorities. They will investigate the charges made that gasoline was stored in the building, dangerously near the stairway from the upper floors and that the fire escapes were so exposed that many victims were burned while trying to descend.

CONFER ON MEXICO.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—President Wilson to-day summoned Representative Flood, chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and Senator Bacon, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, to the White House to confer on conditions in Mexico.

The delicacy of the present situation enforced a policy of secrecy at the White House, but it was asserted that the purpose of to-day's conference was to discuss the advisability of removing the ban from shipments of arms and ammunition to the constitutionalists in Northern Mexico.

General Carranza and other revolutionists have been pleading for weeks for the removal of this prohibition, claiming that they are entitled to the same privileges accorded to the Maderists by President Taft.

It is doubtful if any decisive move will be made until after the removal of Ambassador Wilson, but it is practically certain that this Government will favor the removal of the prohibition relative to the shipment of arms to the rebels and then will await developments in the hope of establishing a stable government in Mexico.

DR. FRIEDMANN SCORED.

Bitter arraignment of Dr. Franz Friedrich Friedmann, the German scientist and discoverer of a serum hailed as a curative of tuberculosis, followed the death of Austell Thornton, one of the best-known young bankers in Atlanta, near Asheville, N. C., early Wednesday morning.

Thornton's death was the result of tuberculosis, which set in following an attack of pneumonia eighteen months ago. When Dr. Friedmann came to this country last winter with his serum, heralded as a cure for consumptives, Thornton went to New York and underwent the treatment.

While Dr. Friedmann used the Bellevue Hospital there in demonstrating his cures, he also did a great deal of work in hotels among patients who flocked to Manhattan from all over the United States.

Thornton received his injections at the hotel where he was stopping, and it is said that Dr. Friedmann himself administered them. It is also declared that the German physician charged young Thornton a fabulous price for the treatment, one person Wednesday morning placing the sum at $3,500.

In an official note to Sofia to-day Roumania insists that she be allowed to retain strategetic position on the frontier; that specified privileges shall be extended to the Roumanian population in Macedonia and that the peace negotiations shall be opened in Roumanian territory after an armistice has been signed.

NEWS OF THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1913

PRESIDENT IS DENOUNCED ON FLOOR OF U. S. SENATE

WASHINGTON, July 24.—On the floor of the Senate to-day Senator Works, of California, denounced President Wilson for influencing tariff legislation in the summing up of a speech on the tariff bill pending before the Senate.

"The tendency of latter-day politics is to exalt the executive at the expense of the legislative and judicial power of the Government, and make the President the master and ruler of them all, and the master and not the servant of the whole people," said the Senator.

"It is an unwarranted and dangerous tendency. Every public official, however exalted, is only the servant of the people, and should at all times be subject to their control and subservient to their will in conformity to the Constitution and laws of the country, and each department of the Government, if its institutions are to be preserved, must be kept within the limitations of its powers as fixed by the Constitution.

"If this bill is passed, it will not be by the willing and voluntary consent of a majority of this body. It will be the result, in part, of outside influence that should never enter into the deliberations or acts of Congress. The Constitution provides:

> All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

"The President is also made Commander-in-Chief of the army and navy. That instrument further provides that 'the executive power shall be vested in the President of the United States of America.' It is further provided: 'He shall from time to time give to the Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.'

"This is the only power vested in the President in respect of the making of laws. There is no warrant in the Constitution for his participation in the formation or passage of laws or the exercise of any influence on legislation beyond that of recommending to the consideration of the lawmaking power such measures as he shall judge necessary or expedient."

MONKEY WAS DRUNK.

SMITHERS, W. VA., July 24.—A drunken monkey belonging to George Smith, went on a rampage and after killing a bulldog, so severely chewed up Smith's hand that he was forced to have it amputated.

Smith gave a party and the monkey had come in for his share of refreshments. After the guests departed the monkey evinced a desire for another drink. Smith refused. The bulldog then sprang at the Simian, but the latter jumped on the dog's back and with his claws soon blinded him, then sank his teeth into the neck, killing him.

Smith suffered his injuries in his efforts to subdue his pet.

HEADLESS BODY FOUND.

BOSTON, July 24.—The finding of the headless body of an apparently well-to-do young woman at sea, 35 miles east of the Georges Bank by Captain Charles White, of the Gloucester fishing schooner Jennie H. Gilbert, is believed to reveal a death by violence at sea, possibly on a trans-Atlantic liner.

The body was found ten miles south of the southerly track of trans-Atlantic steamers, about 170 miles out from Boston. Corsets of apparently expensive make, a black shirtwaist, portions of a dark green silk skirt and high button boots were on the body.

CHILDREN HANDICAPPED.

NEW YORK, July 24.—"Thousands of children are brought into the world handicapped for life because their mothers were ill-nourished before they were born."

Miss Mabel A. Parker thus tersely explains why she has embarked on one of the most novel eugenic experiments that has yet been made in this country—a prenatal restaurant.

This restaurant, which will be conducted solely for women who are expected to give birth to a child within six months, will be opened in two weeks.

MANN FILIBUSTERS.

WASHINGTON, July 24.—Representative Mann again prevented the House from transacting any business to-day. Employing the same tactics he used yesterday—a point of no quorum—Mann demanded a roll call. Adjournment finally was ordered by a vote of 154 to 58.

The Mann filibuster is occasioned by the action of the Democrats in preventing a discussion last week of the Caminetti-Diggs white slave cases.

RHODES SCHOLARS BACK.

BOSTON, July 24.—Being a student at Oxford is strenuous work, according to the verdict of five Rhodes scholars who returned to-day on the White Star liner Arabic.

The five were Frank B. Bristow, son of Senator Bristow, of Kansas; Walter S. Bryan, of Georgia; C. B. Grosland, of Alabama; W. Lloyd Williams, of North Dakota, and W. A. Zeigler, of Iowa. The five have completed the four years' course at Oxford.

COTTON CARNIVAL OPENS.

GALVESTON, July 24.—The fifth annual cotton carnival opened to-day with thousands of visitors here for the eleven days' festivities.

Features of the carnival will be automobile races on the beach on July 28, 29 and 30; horse racing on the next two days, and a military parade, in which 12,000 Federal troops will take part.

ORDER OF COMMISSION SAVES PUBLIC $42,000,000

WASHINGTON, July 24.—The answer of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the application of the railroads east of the Mississippi and north of the Ohio and Potomac Rivers for permission to make a general increase of 5 per cent in freight rates, will be as follows:

1. The application will be denied.
2. All railroads will be ordered to discontinue making "allowances" to certain favored big industrial combinations.

This will save the general public from paying the additional $42,000,000 a year which the railroads are asking for and deprive certain big industrial corporations of a sum ranging between $50,000,000 and $100,000,000 annually.

The Commission during the past few months has secretly made an investigation to determine just the extent to which the practice of making "allowances" to industrial short line railroads, owned by manufacturing concerns, is prevalent.

It is now in possession of the names of the concerns which receive these "allowances" or rebates, or discriminatory rates—and in addition it has the names of the railroads which pay them, the amounts received by the favored industrial corporations and something of the extent to which the practice injures the competing manufacturers, who are not in a position to enter into such arrangements.

In a large number of instances, it is claimed, the practice amounts to extortion. The railroads are compelled by the demands of competition to make allowances to the manufacturer for transferring his product over his own insignificant trackage to the junction where the regular railroad takes up his cars. Where several railroads are bidding for such a manufacturer's business the one which makes the most liberal allowance usually gets the freight.

MUTINOUS CONVICTS TRY TO BURN PENITENTIARY

OSSINNING, N. Y., July 24.—Mutinous convicts, in open rebellion against their keepers, to-day made an attempt to destroy the entire Sing Sing prison property by fire.

They set fire to the clothing manufacturing building, in which all the shoes, clothing and like articles are made. The fire was extinguished by the prison fire department after it had swept the shoeshop.

The entire penal population is being kept under lock in fear of further outbreaks.

The attempt to burn the prison building came early to-day after a night of wild excitement in the prison.

When the warden, James H. Clancey, was told of the threats, he directed that no prisoners, excepting the trusties, should be allowed out of their cells. It is believed that some of the trusties, acting under orders of their imprisoned fellows, applied the match to the clothing factory building.

As the fire raged the criminals behind locked doors set up a terrific din. They shouted "fire," called vile names, beat their doors and made the prison hideous with noise.

"We want Kennedy," came the constant chant above the din.

This protest against the removal of the former warden, who was indicted by the Westchester County Grand Jury, was the keynote of the entire rebellion that for 36 hours has had the State's largest penal institution in a state of mutiny.

All night long the convicts kept up their riotous demonstration. They made the food the first basis of complaint. They contemptuously tossed away bits of food and went to their cells surly and disobedient.

Guards are on duty to-day all along the prison walls, the officers fearing that the sullen convicts may make a concerted effort to escape.

Seeking to relieve the perilous situation at the prison, Warden Clancey this afternoon made arrangements with the railroad to take 200 second and third term prisoners to Auburn to-morrow. With these riotous prisoners out of the way, the warden believes he can restore order in the institution.

PAROLES RECOMMENDED.

Paroles for Julian Hawthorne and Dr. William J. Morton, ex-Treasurer of the United States, who have been serving sentences in the Federal Penitentiary for misuse of the mails in a stock scheme, were recommended on Thursday in a report submitted by the Federal Pardon Board to Attorney General McReynolds.

The recommendation in respect to Hawthorne and Morton had been agreed upon by the Pardon Board since their meetings at the Federal prison some time ago, but they have withheld their report, as is the custom, until the prisoners named are eligible to parole.

PREMIER IS ATTACKED.

MORLEY, YORKSHIRE, ENGLAND, July 24.—Premier Asquith was again attacked by suffragettes to-day. While he was proceeding to the town hall to receive the freedom of the borough a woman ran screaming to his automobile and threw package after package of papers at the Premier.

The police rushed to the Premier's rescue and after a desperate struggle the woman was arrested. She was Miss Hey Jones, a well-known sympathizer with the cause.

CHARLTON VERY ILL.

JERSEY CITY, N. J., July 24.—Porter Charlton, who is in jail here awaiting extradition to Italy for trial for the murder of his bride at Lake Como, three years ago, is so ill he never will reach Italy alive, according to a statement by his physicians. He is a victim of pulmonary tuberculosis.

Two members of the Italian constabulary are expected to arrive in this country this week to take Charlton to Milan.

TO FRIGHTEN HIM.

NEW YORK, July 24.—The Government's real object in secretly indicting David Lamar after his revelations before the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee was to frighten the "Wolf of Wall Street" into giving information in contemplated action against the men higher up in Lamar's impersonations. Men high in political and financial life are believed to have profited through Lamar's operations.

WAR FOR CLEAN BREAD.

CHICAGO, July 24.—Clean gloves must be worn by wagon drivers who handle bread, if an ordinance recommended by the Health Committee passes the Council. Alderman Pretzel is chairman of the committee.

STATEMENT OF THE OWNERSHIP, MANAGEMENT, CIRCULATION, Etc., of THE GEORGIAN'S WEEKLY NEWS BRIEFS, published weekly at Atlanta, Georgia, required by the Act of August 24, 1912. GEORGIA'S TAX SYSTEM ARRAIGNED BY GOVERNOR

LA GRANGE, July 24.—Members of the Georgia Weekly Press Association left LaGrange this morning for Brunswick, still discussing Governor John Marshall Slaton's scathing arraignment of Georgia's tax system at the annual banquet of the association Wednesday night. The Governor appealed to the editors for aid in what he declared to be the most serious financial crisis in the history of the State. He said that Georgia's tax system and reckless spending by the Legislature have brought about present conditions, when the State finds itself unable to pay its school-teachers.

"We must admit it is indefensible to maintain a system that pays its teachers a year after their work has been performed," Governor Slaton said. "It is pleasant to spend money and hard to make it. We love to appropriate, yet shrink from the tax levy. In two years, the Treasurer says, we have spent nearly three-quarters of a million more than our income. The teachers—patient and hard-working—teaching during the day and working examinations at night—molding the characters and training the minds of those upon whom our civilization depends—under our system find no ray of hope from the injustice they suffer.

"While unpleasant to do, I have recommended a levy—an extra tax of 1 mill for 1915, and 1-2 mill in 1916, as the brave way to get relief. The taxpayer will find it the best trade he ever made. It would prevent the imposition of drastic taxing laws, the deficit in the treasury would be satisfied, the State could say to purchasers of her bonds that she is on a solid financial basis, her teachers would be paid, and the kiting policy, which is opposed to all sound principle, would be abolished."

Governor Slaton emphatically declared himself in favor of the plan of equalization of taxes that has been recommended by the Legislature.

"Is not equalization just that requires all to pay the same percentage?" he asked. "Is it right that one many pays on 16 per cent of the value of his property when another pays on 40? An increase of 20 per cent, by simply equalizing the burden, not increasing that of him who is already bearing his part, would produce an abundance of revenue for every legitimate purpose."

The editors will arrive at Brunswick this afternoon and enjoy an outing of several days in that city and at St. Simons Island, where the Second Georgia Infantry is in camp.

SHE "CUT HIM OUT."

WHEELING, W. VA., July 24.—War, or Sherman's equivalent for it, "hath no fury like a woman scorned," Harry Pendleton mournfully confides to his friends.

Pendleton had been engaged to Dessie McIntyre for two years, when he met Henrietta Aiken, a Bridgeport, Ohio, belle. He fell a willing conquest and Miss McIntyre was peeved, but not without hope. She went cupid one better by going to Bridgeport, cutting her hair short, donning the clothes of a modern Beau Brummel and "cutting out" Pendleton in masterly fashion. Then she doffed her masquerade.

Pendleton refuses to say whether or not Miss Aiken has permitted him to resume his courtship.

HOLDS BABY FOR BILL.

PEORIA, ILL., July 24.—Mrs. Sarah Cook, to-day appealed to the courts to recover her year-old baby which is held by Harry Dudley, a landlord, for a board bill.

Mrs. Cook says when she tendered the money for her week's board Dudley demanded also full pay for the baby's keep, but she was penniless after paying her own board.

NEWS OF FRIDAY, JULY 25, 1913

LIE IS PASSED ON FLOOR OF HOUSE OF LAWMAKERS

The lie was passed in the House Friday, Representative Barry Wright, of Floyd, using the word in resenting lobbying charges intimated by Representative Howard Ennis, of Baldwin. Ennis started toward Wright, but several of the other members of the House intervened and the matter was quickly straightened out, Mr. Ennis declaring that his words carried no innuendo or intimation, but that he was simply asking for information.

Representative Wright had moved for a reconsideration of sections 4 and 5 of the general appropriations bill, which the House was considering as a committee of the whole. These two sections provide for the appropriations for schools, colleges and State institutions.

Ennis interrupted Wright in a speech and inquired if "he was not inspired by members of the 'third house' to ask for a reconsideration."

The reply of Wright was that "any such a statement was a lie, an absolute falsehood." He demanded that if Ennis had such proof or evidence that he at once submit it to the House.

Ennis explained that he had no such evidence; that he did not mean to intimate that the Representative from Floyd had been so inspired, but that he simply wanted to find out if such could be the case.

Carrying with it an appropriation of $5,795,667, which is $108,900 under last year's bill, and carrying an additional appropriation of $3,679,000 to refund bonds in 1914-15, the general appropriations bill was passed by the House Friday.

By the passage of the bill at this time all House records were broken, and everything looks safe for a quick passage through the Senate and to the Governor for approval.

The bill, as amended, showed a difference in but three of the appropriations recommended by the committee. This included $2,550,000 for the public school fund for each of the years 1913 and 1914. which was an increase of $50,000 over the committee recommendation; $30,000 instead of $25,000 for the maintenance of the Soldiers' Home, and a slight increase in the appropriation for clerical help in one of the Statehouse departments.

Much debate was indulged in on several items, Representative Barry Wright objecting to many on the grounds that it was following in the footsteps of the 1911 Legislature, "which was the most extravagant in the history of Georgia."

The Confederate pensions section, which covered many items, totaling $1,074,800, was an object of special attack, but no change was made in it.

MRS. PANKHURST ILL.

LONDON July 25.—The condition of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, who was released from Holloway jail yesterday, is reported to-day to be grave.

The "hunger strike" which she inaugurated when in jail has greatly undermined Mrs. Pankhurst's constitution. So weakened was her condition to-day that she was subjected to a transfusion of blood operation. The physicians decided that an operation was necessary in order to save the militant leader's life.

Declaring that they will serve their imprisonment rather than pay fines, Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Lady Sybil Smith and Miss Evelyn Sharpe, who were arrested yesterday when they tried to hold a suffrage meeting at the entrance to the House of Commons, were taken to jail to-day. The women were fined $200 or the option of spending fourteen days in jail.

DIVED ONTO MAN.

CONNERSVILLE, IND., July 25.—Edward Voltz was fatally hurt and Frank Davis may die of injuries received in diving at a beach here.

Davis dived from a high springboard and was followed immediately by Voltz. Just as Voltz reached the water Davis bobbed up and their heads met with a crack. Davis was under water two minutes.

JAPS ARE DISSATISFIED.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 25.—A Tokio dispatch to a local Japenese paper to-day said that the Japanese Government, dissatisfied with the reply of Secretary of State Bryan to its protest against the California alien land bill, is preparing a third note of protest to the United States.

It will be ready for presentation within a few days.

LOBBYISTS ARE SCARCE.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Doorkeepers of the House declare that President Wilson's war on the "insidious lobby" has made lobbyists scarcer than ever before.

They say that whereas lobbyists formerly made dozens of trips during the day to the House chamber with cards of visitors to members, they now make very few such trips.

TRAIN IS WRECKED.

Passenger train No. 17 on the Seaboard Air Line, due in Atlanta from Abbeville, S. C., at 8:40 a. m., was wrecked Friday morning when just abreast the National Furniture Company plant at 844 Marietta street, by plunging into an interlocking switch set against it.

DESERTERS NOT WANTED.

CHICAGO, July 25.—"Men who desert their wives and refuse to support their families are not entitled to become naturalized citizens," said Judge Petit here when he refused the applications of two men who admitted having left their wives.

THIEVES HAD AUTO.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 25.—Thieves who traveled in an auto dynamited the postoffice safe at Creswood, Ky., and fled with $400.

MISS SARAH WIBORG, a beautiful American girl, who is making a brilliant society success in London. Her mother and two sisters share her popularity.

AUTOMOBILE TURNS TURTLE; GEORGIA GIRL IS INJURED

MONROE, LA., July 25.—One person was killed outright, two others were seriously injured and another bruised when an automobile, occupied by a party of men and women, turned turtle while racing another machine two miles from Monroe just before midnight.

The Dead.

Victor C. Smith, son of A. L. Smith, a wealthy planter, residing at Stearlington, La., crushed to death.

The Injured.

Miss Theo Prioleau, daughter of Mrs. E. L. Prioleau, of Atlanta, Ga., right leg broken in two places.

R. L. Prophet, Jr., back sprained.

Miss Ruth Williams, of Monroe, badly bruised.

Others in the party included Miss Dolly Prioleau, sister of Miss Theo, and H. P. Decker, of Newburg, N. C. They were unhurt.

The Smith car was being driven by the man who was killed, and with Morgan George and a party of friends, was returned from Horseshoe Lake, a pleasure resort above Monroe.

George says the two cars were racing and were going at least 45 miles an hour. He said he was about half mile ahead of the Smith car and did not see the accident. From reliable reports, it is learned that when about two miles from town the Smith car, striking a sharp curve in the road, turned a double somersault, going over a ditch.

Victor Smith was crushed to death almost instantly, Miss Prioleau's right leg was broken in two places. Prophet, Jr., was injured in the back.

FINDS PETRIFIED KITTEN.

COTTONWOOD FALLS., KANS., July 25.—While repairing the floor of his house John Mann, a farmer living southeast of here, found a petrified kitten in perfect condition.

The cat weighed five pounds and its body was smooth and hard as though the work of a sculptor. Its tail, feet and ears were intact and there were a few whiskers projecting from the jaws.

PROCLAIMS SELF "MESSIAH."

PANAMA, July 25.—Word has been received from Penonome, a town in the interior of the republic, that Segundo Sanchez, a native, has proclaimed himself the Messiah and has issued a "prophecy" of the destruction of the world by a deluge in a short time.

Some of his 80 adherents are building an ark, while others are collecting pairs of animals of all species found in the region.

DOUBLE SHOOTING.

BASS LAKE, IND., July 25.—Martin Strasburger tried to kill his stepmother and then ended his own life, that the way might be cleared for a reconciliation between his father and divorced mother.

This is the theory held by many here as the solution of the double shooting at Frank Strasburger's country home, in which the second Mrs. Strasburger was wounded and Strasburger's son Martin killed himself.

DONS ARE STILL ANGRY

MADRID, July 26.—The newspaper Imparcial asserts to-day that the members of the old aristocracy of Cadiz have refused the invitations sent them by the officers of the American training ship Illinois.

The refusal, according to the newspaper, was due to the ill feeling engendered during the Spanish-American War.

ALLEGED KIDNAPER CAUGHT AFTER A 3,000-MILE CHASE

BOSTON, July 25.—Chased for more than 3,000 miles, from Atlanta to Boston, John D. Mattiford, 50 years of age, was arrested here to-day, charged with being a fugitive from justice. Mattiford is charged by the Atlanta police with Kidnaping John A. Barwick, Jr., 5 years old, and his sister, Dorothy T., 9, children of John A. Barwick, of Atlanta.

Mattiford pleaded not guilty in the police court to-day and was held in $1,000 for the Atlanta police.

The police also are looking for Mrs. Barwick, mother of the children, and Mrs. Annie Laurie Jeter, mother of Mrs. Barwick. Mrs. Jeter is also charged with kidnaping the children.

For the past three months Inspectors Dorsey and O'Neal had been searching for Mattiford. He has been trailed all over New England, but escaped. For several weeks Mattiford and Mrs. Barwick were registered at the Clarendon Hotel under the name of Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Martin.

Shortly before 10 o'clock to-day they saw Mattiford walking down Columbus avenue alone. Inspector Dorsey approached him, spoke his name and Mattiford turned. He was immediately placed under arrest and taken to police headquarters.

He told Chief McCarr that he did not know where the women or the children are, but he supposed they had gone back to Atlanta.

WILSON FAVORS HUERTA.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Admitting he had done all he could to have the Huerta Government in Mexico recognized and charging that Mrs. Francisco I. Madero, wife of the slain President of that country, is a forger, Henry Lane Wilson, Ambassador to Mexico, who has been summoned to Washington by President Wilson, arrived here this afternoon on the liner Mexico. He will leave to-night for the Capital.

Mr. Wilson appeared to be in excellent health and spirits, but he declined to discuss the proposed visit of Secretary Bryan to Mexico or what might be the outcome of any intervention in that country on the part of the United States.

He said that when he left Mexico everything was as quiet as could be expected under the present conditions.

MAY ASK POSTPONEMENT.

Despite the fact that Superior Judge L. S. Roan stated everything was in readiness for the trial of Leo M. Frank next Monday, that State's Attorney Hugh M. Dorsey has announced he will fight a delay, and that the defense actually commenced summoning witnesses, the impression still prevailed Friday that a motion for continuance would be made by the defense when the case is opened.

Attorneys Luther Rosser and Reuben R. Arnold declined flatly to say whether they would permit the trial to proceed without introducing some motion for a postponement, and the report was that witnesses had been summoned to be on the safe side in the event a request to put off the trial is refused.

HIS SUGGESTION.

"Repeal the prohibition law and you won't have to worry so much about the finances of the State," was the emphatic statement made in the House Friday morning by Representative C. M. Clark, of Dougherty County.

The remark came as an interruption in a speech by Representative L. R. Akin during the heated discussion of the general appropriations bill. It was Clark's first statement to the House this session.

NEW REPUBLIC TOTTERING.

MADRID, July 25.—The Portuguese Republic is tottering. The country seethes with the revolutionary spirit to overthrow the Republican Government and re-establish a monarchy. Travelers from Portugal arriving here to-day say the movement is the best organized since King Manuel was dethroned.

Troops are being rushed to all points in an effort to check the rebellion, which Government officials consider the most serious since the new form of government was established.

ORDERS THEM CLOSED.

ZION CITY, ILL., July 25.—The young sports and old ones of Zion City hereafter will go to bed without rolling their accustomed series of games of Keely pool. The other residents of the city will retire without having made their nightly excursion to the moving picture theater.

The City Council, controlled by the forces of Overseer Voliva, ordered the theater and the poolroom closed.

TO FIGHT FRUIT FLY.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Secretary of Agriculture Houston to-day asked Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo for aid in the fight against the Mediterranean fruit fly, which menaces California fruit interests.

He wants Secretary McAdoo to hold in quarantine all passenger vessels entering California ports that officials may examine luggage for fruit bearing the fly.

FROGS ARE MOVING.

PORT CLINTON, OHIO, July 25.—Thousands of frogs are migrating overland from the marshes of Lake Erie and the Portage River to Sandusky Bay. In the evenings when they lift up their voices their numbers seem to have been multiplied to millions. They fill the roads and streets and hundreds hop into homes.

Nervous women have become more afraid of the clammy little frogs than of the proverbial mice.

THREE SUICIDES FOLLOW ELOPEMENT OF THIS GIRL

NEW YORK, July 25.—The tragedy of suicides which followed the elopement of Elsa Schroeder with "Baron" Richard Arkovy, a Hungarian adventurer, culminated to-day when Robert W. Schroeder, a retired stock broker, ended his life by gas in the same room where his wife, heartbroken over their daughter's marriage, also committed suicide with the same gas jet.

In 1909 the "Baron" captivated Elsa, then a 19-year-old girl. She had inherited $200,000 from her grandfather, Jacob Hoffman, a brewer. Despite her parents' opposition, Elsa eloped. The "Baron" went through the girl's fortune in a few months. She left him to return to her parents, but in the interval, her mother had taken her life.

Arkovy continued in the limelight for a time after his wife had sued him for separation. He was heard of in Monte Carlo and other gambling resorts. Then came the news that in April last he had killed himself with morphine in a London hotel.

The suicide of the father came as a climax to the disasters which followed on the heels of the elopement.

TWO DIE AT INITIATION.

BIRMINGHAM, July 25.—In the presence of 125 members of the secret fraternal order of Moose, in Moose Hall last night, Donald A. Kenny, president of the local Chauffeurs' Union, and Christopher Gustin, an iron molder, met almost instantaneous death from an overshock of electricity received while being initiated into the organization.

Both were young and strong men. Other candidates going through the same initiation before them were not injured.

After Kenny was seen to be sinking and before John P. Abbott, presiding officer, could stop the proceedings, Gustin also had been fatally injured.

Both men died within five minutes, although the lodge physician, Dr. L. V. Neill, was present and lent immediate attention.

The ceremony that proved fatal is the branding one. The candidate stands upon a tilting board with his chest bared. A magneto is connected with his leg by a metal band and chain.

SAYS ASYLUM NEEDS FUNDS.

"There are wards in the State Sanitarium which the public is not allowed to see on account of the terrible conditions caused by the failure of the State to appropriate sufficient money to properly care for the inmates," said Representative Henry L. Fullbright of Burke in the House Friday morning. "The unfortunates who are inmates of Georgia's Insane Asylum deserve every care possible, and this appropriation is not too much."

The charges were made during an attack on the Appropriation Committee's recommendations for a half million dollars for the institution, included in the general appropriations bill. Representative Barry Wright and others brought objection to it on the grounds that it was an increase of more than $100,000 of the 1909 appropriation, and an increase of $10,000 over last year.

The appropriation as recommended was passed.

GIRL DIES FROM BURNS.

As a result of severe burns received when her skirts caught fire from a grate in which she was burning some trash at her home, No. 349 Capitol avenue, Miss Bessie Lyon, 19 years old, died Thursday night at the Georgian Hospital. She was the daughter of R. L. Lyon, superintendent of the Austell Building.

In the room next to the one in which the girl succumbed, her heroic mother Friday lay, suffering from serious burns received while trying to extinguish the flames which enveloped the daughter.

SAY HE ATTACKED GIRL.

MACON, July 25.—A dark-skinned man, who says he is the Rev. Adolphus Sampson, a Hindu, was arrested here this afternoon on a warrant charging him with attacking the daughter of a minister living at Spread, Ga. The Sheriff of Jefferson County has already arrived to take him to Louisville. He says there is high feeling against the man at Spread.

The Rev. Adolphus was arranging with Dr. W. N. Ainsworth to preach a series of sermons in the latter's church when arrested.

TO EXPLAIN NEW RATES.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—Postmaster General Burleson has been requested by the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads to appear before the committee Thursday and explain his order reducing parcel post rates and increasing the maximum size packages to be carried by that service from 11 to 20 pounds. This order is to become effective August 15.

Certain members of Congress, including members of the Senate committee, are opposed to this new order of the Postmaster General.

GEORGIA POSTMASTERS.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—The President to-day nominated the following Georgia postmasters:

Joseph M. McAfee, Canton, Cherokee County; Annie K. Bunn, Cedartown, Polk County, and George Dansby, Rockmart, Polk County.

NEWS OF SATURDAY, JULY 26, 1913

MEXICAN SOLDIERS SHOOT U. S. IMMIGRANT OFFICER

EL PASO, TEX., July 26.—Among the latest outrages perpetrated on American citizens in Mexico was the shooting of Charles S. Dixon, of San Diego, United States Immigrant Inspector, by the Mexican regular soldiers to-day. Dixon may die.

Inspector Dixon was in Juarez, across the Rio Grande from El Paso, investigating a white slave case, when a band of Federals arrested him, forcing him to march in front of them in the direction of the foothills beyond the city, where many summary executions have taken place.

According to the Mexicans, Dixon started to run, and after getting a block away, was fired upon and hit in the back. He was brought back to El Paso badly wounded.

Dixon, in his own statement to American officials, said the Mexicans were drunk, and that he was satisfied the soldiers intended to kill him.

The Mexican Federal authorities refuse to allow the United States immigrant officials to remove Dixon to El Paso. He is in a dying condition, one of the shots entering his hip and coming out in the stomach. Attending physicians say that they do not believe he can survive the night. When seen by a reporter at Juarez this evening, Dixon, who is conscious, but weak from the loss of blood, said that he believes a negro whom he was after on a white slave charge paid the Federals to shoot him.

"I told the soldiers when they arrested me that I would go to the commandant's office," said Dixon. "But instead of taking me there, they started to the foothills south of the city. I was attired in the immigration uniform of khaki, and I thought perhaps that they had taken me for an American spy and intended executing me. I thought the only chance I had was to run for the border, so I broke loose from the two drunken troopers that had hold of me and started for the Rio Grande. I had perhaps gone a block when the detachment of troops opened fire and I was struck. The soldiers, while escorting me to the outskirts of Juarez, swore vengeance at the Americans."

Feeling runs high in El Paso tonight, and all that is needed to start a movement to cross the border to avenge Dixon is a leader. Troops are patrolling the border and will prevent Americans from crossing. Mexican Federals have threatened many Americans and it has become dangerous for Americans to cross the river.

Consul Edwards, a Taft appointee, is being severely criticised for his attitude in refusing to offer Americans, arrested by federals, assistance and to-morrow morning an El Paso paper will editorially ask for his removal.

U. S. MUST TAKE STAND.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—The report of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson on the situation in Mexico, asked for by the President, was finished this afternoon at 5 o'clock and was sent to the President to-night.

The report of Mr. Wilson comprises his views as to an effective remedy for conditions in Mexico, and, substantially, this is that the neutrality laws be enforced strictly and adequately. By that enforcement, he believes, the revolution will disintegrate and peace will be restored. This is the proposition of Ambassador Wilson, originally made to the Taft administration, and which President Taft adopted by sending a division of the army to the frontier.

But that the United States must take a firm and decided stand at once developed yesterday at the series of conferences of Secretary Bryan, Ambassador Wilson and his commissioner, Mr. Del Valle, and between the Secretary and the Foreign Relations Committee.

TWO AMERICANS HELD.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—The State Department made a formal demand on the Huerta Government in Mexico to-day to protect the life of Charles Bessel, manager of the Mines Company of America, who is said to have been arrested in Chihuahua and held under sentence of death.

Mr. Bessel is prominent in New York, but his family is said now to be in El Paso. The information that the mining man had been arrested came through Arthur T. Black, of New York, vice president of the Mines Company of America, who appealed to the Government.

Word also has been received here that F. C. Herr, of Newark, Ohio, is held in Madera, Mexico. Herr, who was attacked by bandits, killed one of them, and for thus defending his life and property was seized by the rebels.

SHE CHOSE STORM.

EAGLESMERE, PA., July 26.—With a rain of sparks from a burning cottage pouring into her window and a regular old-fashioned rain driving out of doors, Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson, daughter of the President, chose the damp variety to-day and fled into the storm.

The fire was in the summer home of W. C. Dodge, well known in Washington. Miss Wilson was one of the first to give the alarm, and, aided by several other young women of the summer colony, went into nearby cottages to make sure all were out.

PINNED UNDER AUTO.

EAU CLAIRE, WIS., July 26.—Mrs. W. D. Armstrong was killed and her husband was seriously injured to-day in an automobile accident near Meridian. The machine ran up an embankment and tipped over.

Both victims were pinned under the car ten hours before a passing farmer discovered the situation.

MRS FRANCES E. WHITESIDE, sister of Senator Hoke Smith, is a leader in suffrage movement in Georgia. Mrs. Whiteside outlined her views on question to mass meeting of D. A. R. chapter.

TIES HUSBAND, SHOOTS HIM AND THEN KILLS HERSELF

TAMPA, July 26.—Tired of being abused, Mrs. Avalina Rodriguez tied her husband to his bed to-day and fired five bullets into his head and body and then killed herself. They had quarreled last night and he is believed to have beat her, as was his custom, it is claimed, from the disturbance the neighbors heard.

Early this morning Mrs. Rodriguez gave part of her clothing to a neighbor, told the neighbor she was going to kill herself and her husband, and went back to the house. Within five minutes the shots were heard, and the policemen, who had been called, had to break down the door to get in Both were dead. She had shot him, then untied the cords that held him, lay down by his side and shot herself through the heart.

TO PLANT 100,000 TREES.

MACON, July 26.—Edward J. Martin, a large peach grower of Marshallville, while in Macon to-day, stated that fully 100,000 peach trees would be set out this fall by the orchard men in his section. "The fine prices brought by this year's crop," he stated, "have encouraged the fruit growers to enlarge their orchards.

"With satisfactory weather conditions in the spring I expect the 1914 fruit crop, especially the peaches, to be the largest in the history of the State, even exceeding that of 1909."

ASKS FOR TWO AUTOS.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—A stir was caused in the House to-day when it became known that Secretary of Labor William B. Wilson has asked Congress for a $5,000 touring car for his personal use, a $2,500 electric automobile to b eused for personal and official purposes and a $1,500 electric truck for the official business of the new Department of Labor.

MAY INCREASE PARCEL POST LIMIT TO 100 LBS.

Great commercial possibilities in the parcel post are seen through the prospect of an increase in the package limit to 100 pounds, which Atlanta postoffice authorities expect as the next move of the Federal Postal Department.

Beginning as an experiment with a limit of eleven pounds, the parcel post achieved a vogue that was unexpected. Last week came Postmaster General Burleson's announcement of the proposed change in the weight of the package limit to twenty pounds. In Atlanta the announcement was received, accompanied by the following statement:

"It was predicted that during the first year of this new service 300,000,000 pieces would be handled. From the data we have in hand, it is safe to estimate that we will handle twice that many."

Atlanta clerks announced that the limit would have been made 25 instead of 20 pounds had it not been for the fact that the last administration stocked the department with 20-pound scales, and that the cost of replacing them would have been too great to ignore. Hereafter, they give assurance, when scales are purchased, the limit capacity will be 100 pounds.

The average weight of haul of the rural delivery wagons is 24 pounds, and the average capacity is 400 pounds. It is therefore asserted that there is much room for increased service.

Opposing the increase in limit come representatives of railroads who have protested formally to the Interstate Commerce Commission against the increase in size of the parcel post packages on the ground that it would cost them $20,000,000 of revenue annually which they now receive from express companies.

DR. M'NAUGHTON'S FRIENDS RENEW EFFORTS FOR PARDON

Their claim based on the declaration that the recent abandonment of the murder charge against Mrs. Fred Flanders is palpable evidence that powerful Emanuel County forces had sought to railroad Dr. W. J. McNaughton, of Swainsboro, to the gallows, Emanuel County friends of the convicted physician have renewed their efforts to have him pardoned or at least granted a new trial.

The application will soon be presented to Governor Slaton and he will be the third chief executive to play a part in this, the most bitterly fought criminal case in Georgia's history.

Nolle pros of Mrs. Flanders' case, McNaughton's friends say, is proof conclusive of their contention that the relatives of her dead husband have always known that her trial would establish the physician's innocence, and that for three years they have had the case postponed in the hope that McNaughton would be hanged before the truth could be established.

Fred Flanders, prominent in Emanuel County's business, social and political life, died at his home in Covena.

A few days later Dr. McNaughton, his attending physician, and Mrs. Flanders were arrested and charged with having poisoned him. ublic sentiment ran high against the doctor. Relatives of the dead man declared that he had given his patient arsenic in order to possess his wife.

McNaughton's trial was sensational. He was convicted and sentenced to hang. Then began his remarkable legal fight. The Supreme Court has ruled on his case from every conceivable angle. And always it has ruled that McNaughton must hang.

As a last resort the McNaughton faction appealed to Governor Brown. At that time the story was circulated that powerful political forces were working to have the doctor hanged before Mrs. Flanders could be tried.

This was told Governor Brown so convincingly that he gave McNaughton reprieve after reprieve as court term after court term passed without the trial of the accused woman.

MINISTER BOUND OVER.

The Rev. Crawford Jackson, secretary of the Juvenile Protective Association of Atlanta and a widely-known Methodist minister, was bound over under bond of $1,000 to a higher court following a sensational trial by Justice of the Peace Girardeau late Saturday afternoon on charges of Miss Lovinia Dundir, a 15-year-old girl of No. 432 Central avenue, who charged that he had attempted to hug and kiss her under protest in his office in the Third National Bank Building.

The girl charged that the offense was committed while she was substituting for her sister, who is the Rev. Mr. Jackson's stenographer, on last Thursday afternoon. She also said that he offered her an intoxicating drink.

As a sensational climax to the trial, Judge Girardeau in delivering his charge brought the accused man up for strong arraignment.

FIRST PARDON BY SLATON.

Mrs. Lula Berbig was released from the Fulton County Jail Saturday on the first pardon issued by Governor John M. Slaton. The recent death of her mother, the ill health of her father, and the fact that she has two small children in Meridian, Miss., to whom she wishes to go, were elements of her plea for freedom. The State Prison Commission, Judge A. E. Calhoun and Solicitor Lowry Arnold, of the City Court, recommended the pardon.

Mrs. Berbig has been in prison two months. She was sentenced to terms aggregating nine months on charges of disorderly conduct and of conducting a disorderly house.

A RECORD SESSION.

WASHINGTON, July 26.—The House of Representatives made a record for a short session to-day. Just four minutes was the length of the session. The prayer was heard, but the journal went unread. There were signs of a Republican filibuster when Gardner of Massachusetts made a point of no quorum. Speaker Clark's count showed less than 100 members present and a motion to adjourn prevailed.

There was more than a quorum of the House at the double-header ball game, however.

EX-CASHIER INDICTED.

MOULTRIE, July 26.—The Colquitt County Grand Jury returned an indictment yesterday against J. H. Cason, former cashier of the Bank of Crosland, charging him with embezzling several thousand dollars.

Cason was arrested several weeks ago and has been in prison here in default of $6,000 bond. Notwithstanding the fact that Cason has confessed to using over $7,000 of the bank's funds, he will plead not guilty when his case is called for trial next week, according to the statement of his attorney, Alfred Kline, of Moultrie.

NEWS OF SUNDAY, JULY 27, 1913

REFORMS IN U. S. CURRENCY ARE SURE TO BE ENACTED

WASHINGTON, July 27.—President Wilson has received further assurances from leaders in Congress that his program of currency reform will receive favorable action at this session of Congress. These assurances have been made in the face of the sharp split amongst Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and in spite, also, of the desire of many Democrats in the Senat to delay currency action until the December session.

Rapid progress has been made on the tariff bill in the Senate and the President and his Congressional advisers have been encouraged at the prospect of the passage of the tariff bill much earlier than had been expected. Republican Senators, defeated at every turn in their efforts to amend the bill, have given way on much of their proposed opposition, and the Democrats propose to push the revision bill rapidly during the coming week.

While the Democrats of the House Currency Committee have found it impossible to agree on the Glass-Owen currency bill, the House leaders and President Wilson believe the measure can be whipped into shape in a Democratic caucus, if it is necessary to adopt that course. The President has been conferring with the so-called "insurgents," one by one, and has secured their views and ascertained the strength of their opposition.

It is believed the bill could be taken into a caucus with the backing of the President, Democratic Leader Underwood, Speaker Clark, Chairman Glass, and could be perfected there and given the indorsement of the Democratic party. Further efforts will be made this week to bring the House committee members together on the bill, but should the attempts fail, the Administration is prepared to push the currency measure into the House without delay.

The tariff bill has gone through its early stages in the Senate with unexpected rapidity. Few members have attempted to make general tariff speeches; and it is believed the debate will be meager during the next two or three weeks. The chemical schedule had been practically completed yesterday; and the earthenware tariff will be taken up tomorrow, with Senator Stone in charge of the debate and amendments on the floor.

Interest in the revision has flagged throughout the week, and indications point to less Republican opposition as the bill progresses. Senator LaFollette has not yet entered the debate. He has employed two experts for many weeks, in the preparation of substitutes for many schedules of the Democratic tariff. When these are offered, the Wisconsin Senator is expected to lead a hard fight for their adoption, and Democratic leaders are looking forward to that phrase of the debate as most likely to cause delay.

OUTBREAK IN LISBON.

LONDON, July 27.—A rumor was current in Madrid last night that a serious uprising had occurred in Lisbon.

The Daily Mail estimates that 1,600 bombs of various sizes hav been found in the streets of Lisbon since the organized attempt to bomb throwing was frustrated there Sunday, July 20. The paper adds that following the publication of a book last year giving directions for their manufacture, all the revolutionary societies have been busy making bombs.

FOUR PERSONS KILLED.

IRON MOUNTAIN, MICH., July 27. Four persons were killed and one was seriously injured last night when the Copper County Limited, on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad, running between Calumet and Chicago, struck a tree which the wind had blown across the track at Cable Line, Wis. The storm which caused the wreck also prevented news of the accident from being sent over the wires until to-day.

UNKNOWN VICTIMS BURIED.

BINGHAMPTON, N. Y., July 27.—Attended by thousands of mourners, many of them relatives or close friends of the victims, the funeral of the 21 unidentified dead, who lost their lives in the Binghampton Clothing Company fire, was held to-day.

Services were held in the Opera House, clergymen of all religious denominations taking part in the exercises.

FIGHTING IN BALKANS.

LONDON, July 27.—The Balkan peace conferenec is expected to open at Bucharest Wednesday, but meantime serious fighting continues.

The Greeks refused Bulgaria's request for even a three days' truce, and after heavy fighting, have gotten through Krefina Pass, defeating the Bulgarians at Simekle, capturing three siege guns and driving the Bulgarians back on Djuma.

NEGRO IS LYNCHED.

MACON, G., July 27.—After an all day's search for a negro burglar, who last midnight shot down J. F. Hammock, a merchant of Dunbar, 15 miles south of here, a possee to-night captured the negro in a swamp at Wellston, and after taking him back to Dunbar, strung him to a pole in the heart of a negro settlement and riddled his body with bullets.

POLICEMAN SHOT TO DEATH.

DALTON, GA., July 27.—Policeman Harry Cooke was shot and instantly killed by Clem Poole, a desperate character. Poole was creating a disturbance at his home, and Cooke was called upon to arrest him. Poole placed a pistol against the officer's body and fired a bullet through his heart. A posse is now searching for Poole.

CLAYTON ROBSON IS GIVEN BIRTHDAY 'CUE

CLAYTON ROBSON.

Joe Pottle, Solicitor General of the Ocmulgee Circuit, aided and abetted by sundry members of the Georgia Legislature and citizens of Atlanta, gave a barbecue at the Kimball House the other evening in honor of Clayton Robson, who has just turned 35. The affair was a huge success. Also it was a complete surprise to the guest of honor because the whole thing was impromptu. And before it was over Robson had been presented with an umbrella in addition to good things to eat, plus much applause and kind words. Robson is a traveling salesman and is known in every town in the State of Georgia. No session of the Legislature would be complete without his presence.

CHINESE REBELS DEFEATED; U. S. MARINES ON GUARD

PEKIN, July 27.—The capture of the Hu Kow forts by a joint land and naval attack Friday night, is regarded as the most important news which reached Pekin to-day from the scene of the rebellion in the South. In the capture of forts, the rebels lost their hold on the Yang-Tse River in Kiang-Si Province, and the river now is clear for the Northerners to Nanking, where the forts held by rebels prevent the fleet passing.

The Southern troops on the Tien Tsin Pukow line are retiring southward from Hwai-He, evidently fearing that General Hau, at the juncture of the Grand Canal and the Yang-Tse will participate with the Northern forces and cut their communications. Hsu's command has been regarded as practically an outlaw band, but both sides are now willing to accept his assistance. It is thought the decisive combat of the rebellion may be fought at Nanking.

Disarming the Rebels.

SHANGHAI, July 27.—In accordance with a proclamation issued Sunday, the municipal police, reinforced by a strong body of Shanghai volunteers, went to-day to the rebel headquarters at Chapel, immediately north of the foreign settlement boundary, where they disarmed 300 soldiers and twelve officers, and tooff six 3-inch guns.

There was no actual resistance on the part of the rebels, but for a brief period a conflict seemed imminent. The rebels, however, were overawed by the firm attitude of the municipal police.

Detachments of American, British, Japanese, French and Italian bluejackets are patrolling the settlement and the Chapel boundaries.

The rebels Saturday morning captured the Lienching, a Chinese admiralty yacht, which, it is believed, was bringing dispatches to Shanghai.

The departure of transports from Che Foo points to the probability of a battle at the Wn Sung arsenal.

GIRL KEEPS DEATH PACT; MAN CHANGES HIS MIND

BOSTON, July 27.—A suicide pact is believed to have led to the death of Rose Fivanson, aged 20, of Hartford, Conn., who was found in a hotel room to-day, a victim of poisoning. The police are looking for an unknown man who was registered with the girl at the hotel last night.

This morning the man, who seemed ill, went to the hotel office and inquired the address of a doctor. Half an hour later groans were heard from the room, and the girl was found near death.

A fragment of paper clutched in her hand bore the name "G. W. Man, Shelbyville, Ind.," and asked the police not to blame "Billy."

"I am tired of the life I am leading and am doing this with a clear mind," the note said.

The girl was taken to the city hospital, where she died. The police think the pair intended to die together, but that the man, after his first sip of the poison, changed his mind.

OLD MEN ARRESTED.

MULDROW, OKLA., July 27.—J. F. Rogers, aged 50, and N. J. Brogden, aged 70, two of the most prominent merchants of Sequoyah County, were arrested at their homes here to-day charged with an assault upon the 14-year-old daughter of a farmer. The alleged crime was committed last December. Both men were released under bonds of $5,000. Both are married and have families.

ALPINE CLIMBERS FALL.

ST. MAURICE, SWITZERLAND, July 27.—A terrible sight was seen from Salvan last night. Three Alpine climbers were observed to be in difficulties and then to drop 3,500 feet off the Sallieres Tower of the Dent-du-Midi. The mountain climbers are believed to have been Frenchmen, who ascended the peak without a guide, despite warnings.

UNCLE SAM ORDERS MEXICO TO MAKE SPEEDY REDRESS

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Strong representations, the most drastic in phraseology that have been made since the present American Administration came into power, were made to the Huerta Government in Mexico to-day.

The United States Government demanded not only the prompt arrest, courtmartial and punishment of the Mexican Federal soldiers who shot Charles B. Dixon, an American immigration official at Juarez, Mexico, but the immediate release of Charles Bissell and Bernard McDonald, mining managers, imprisoned by Federal soldiers at Chihuahua City, and said to be threatened with execution.

So serious were these incidents regarded in official circles that they overshadowed largely the theoretical considerations of policy which the visit of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson has brought to a climax.

The Ambassador himself was so exercised over the developments in Mexico that he dictated two strong telegrams, one to the Embassy at Mexico City and the other to the American Consul at Juarez, and while Secretary Bryan slightly modified their tone, they were approved and promptly dispatched.

Ambassador Wilson declined to discuss the affair, but he will probabiy explain his views on such happenings when he meets President Wilson for a general examination of conditions in Mexico.

Dixon Is Released.

EL PASO, TEX., July 27.—Charles B. Dixon, Jr., the United States immigration inspector, who was shot in Juarez Saturday by Mexican soldiers, was released from the Juarez hospital and brought to El Paso to-day, after American Consul T. D. Edwards had made a demand for his release and for the arrest of the men who shot him.

Mexican Consul Miranda and Guillermo Porras, former Secretary of State of Chihuahua, also interceded for the release of Dixon, after conference with the United States officials, who represented to the Mexicans the grave impression that had been produced in Washington by the news of the shooting of the inspector.

The demand of Consul Edwards was in vigorous language. He told the Mexican authorities that Dixon must be delivered up to his friends and permitted to be brought to El Paso without delay.

DESERTED, SHOOTS SELF.

KANSAS CITY, MO., July 27.—Douglas G. Hertz, of St. Louis, will recover from bullet wounds he inflicted upon himself last night after a telephone conversation with his wife, according to his physicians. Hertz shot himself because he was convinced he could not induce his bride of three weeks to return to him.

Mrs. Hertz to-day expressed regret that Hertzt had shot himself, but emphatically declared she would not live with him again.

She declined to discuss her husband's statements that his father was a member of British Parliament, and was worth $5,000,000.

27 PERSONS INJURED.

BOULDER, COLO., July 27.—Twenty-seven persons were injured, some seriously, in a wreck on Switzerland Trail, ner here to-day when four cars filled with tourists overturned.

The cars were on the Rio Grande, Boulder and Western Railroad. Among the probably fatally injured were Mrs. Martha Chalfont and Miss Blanche Chalfont, Sinneston, W. Va.; Mrs. John Henson and Laura Henson, Chicago. All suffered internal injuries and cuts from breaking glass.

ARRESTED IN PULPIT.

DAYTON, OHIO, July 27.—With a Bible in his hands and in the act of delivering the invocation at the evening services in a local church, Rev. Virgil B. Slater, of Youngstown, Ohio, was arrested to-night by detectives on the c harge of non-support of his wife and two children. Rev. Dr. Slater has been sought for several months by the Youngstown authorities. He came here about a year ago.

NEWS OF MONDAY, JULY 28, 1913

TRIAL OF LEO FRANK BEGINS; JURY IS SELECTED QUICKLY

Leo M. Frank, superintendent of a pencil factory in Atlanta, was put on trial for his life before Judge L. S. Roan, in the Fulton Superior Court, Monday morning. He is accused of killing Mary Phagan, aged 14, who was an employee of the factory.

Contrary to general belief, a jury was selected quickly. The courtroom was crowded all day, and many persons, men and women, stood on the sidewalks outside hoping to see and hear something of the trial.

When adjournment for the day had been taken in the afternoon, three witnesses had been examined.

Newt Lee, the night watchman who discovered the dead body of Mary Phagan in the basement of the National Pencil Factory, and who gave the first news of the crime to the police, was still on the stand, undergoing a rigid cross-examination by Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Frank. Throughout the grueling cross-examination of Mr. Rosser, Lee stuck to his original story in minutest detail.

Questions that would have confused or befuddled a man of education failed to budge him from the statement he originally made to the police and has repeated from time to time to reporters and court officials.

The first day's proceedings proved singularly free of the dramatic element or the unexpected in testimony.

There were touches of the pathetic, as, for example, when Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of the dead child, broke down and cried bitterly when she viewed the clothing of her little daughter; and there were touches of humor when the little Epps boy, who had ridden to town with Mary Phagan on the day of her murder, explained to Rosser his method of telling the time of day by the sun, and of Newt Lee, who amused the courtroom by his quaint allusions and his negro descriptions of a tiny light in the basement of the pencil factory, which he likened to the gleam of a lightning bug, and of his quick retort when Mr. Rosser purposely spoke of this insect as a June bug.

"I didn't say June bug—I said lightning bug," contradicted Newt.

Mrs. Frank sat near her husband and eyed Solicitor Dorsey throughout the hearing. Frank appeared cool and collected. A great many witnesses have been called for the trial.

SUES FOR $2,000,000.

NEW YORK, July 28.—That Clarence H. Mackay, to keep up the pace of a millionaire's son, borrowed heavily in Wall Street and failed to pay back after he had inherited $40,000,000 from the estate of his father, is charged in a suit brought by W. L. Stow, a broker, for an accounting of more than $2,000,000.

The plaintiff was at the head of the firm of W. L. Stow & Co., which failed for $6,000,000 some years ago. He charges that Mr. Mackay is directly responsible for that failure by failing to meet obligations contracted in a pool organized to buy and control stocks and bonds of the Mexican Central Railway.

GIFTS FROM ROYALTY.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Despite President Wilson's attitude in discouraging the gift of Baltimore Democrats to his daughter, Jessie, at her wedding next November to Francis B. Sayre, kings and princes of foreign nations will flood the White House with costly gifts.

The marriage of a President's son or daughter is the only occasion on which foreign governments can get around the American constitution, which forbids the President accepting personal gifts from rulers of foreign nations.

The gifts from foreign potentates, naturally, cannot be discouraged.

THREE MEN DROWNED.

NEW YORK, July 28.—Three men were drowned when the steamer City of Atlanta, of the Savannah Line, ran down and cut in half the tender of the Government lightship off Cape Lookout, N. C., last Friday. The accident was reported when the steamer arrived here to-day.

There was some delay in launching a lifeboat after the accident, and the remaining two of the crew on the tender were rescued in an exhausted condition.

CUP COMES TO AMERICA.

WIMBLEDON, ENGLAND, July 28.—The Davis trophy, the most sought-for cup in the tennis world, which has been away from the United States since 1903, will come back to America.

The United States team, after beating the Australians in the preliminary games in New York last June and working their way up to the challenge round by defeating the German and Canadian teams in England, today won the trophy for the United States by defeating the English defenders.

RICH MAN'S SECRET BARED.

CHICAGO, July 28.—William Henry Lee, wealthy publisher whose $200,000 estate will be taken by the State of Illinois because there were no relatives to claim it, was a negro. For nearly 50 years he kept the secret.

The secret of his being of negro blood was admitted by Fred C. Laird, for ten years his partner. Lee never married, Mr. Laird said, because he feared that in his children the secret of his negro ancestry might be revealed.

COMMITTEE FAVORS DAVIS.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The Senate Judiciary Committee to-day ordered a favorable report on the nomination of Representative John W. Davis, of West Virginia, to be Solicitor General of the United States.

HERE is Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for the defense in the trial of Leo Frank. Mr. Rosser is one of the most noted lawyers in Georgia.

SITUATION IN MEXICO INVESTIGATED BY WILSON

WASHINGTON, July 28.—"Ambassador Wilson—2:30 o'clock."

This simple announcement, placed at the bottom of President Wilson's official list of callers to-day, was the only indication at the White House that the most momentous conference at the White House scheduled since President Roosevelt maneuvered the Russian-Japanese peace conclave was due to take place.

For the past 36 hours the President has had before him the lengthy report dictated by Ambassador Wilson detailing all the events of importance which have happened in Mexico from the time the Diaz regime first began to topple down to the attempted murder of Charles B. Dixon, the American immigration official, at Juarez on Saturday.

Secretary Bryan, the first caller at the White House to-day, was closeted with the President for more than an hour, while he discussed the details of the Wilson report.

In discussing the Mexican situation with the newspaper cabinet to-day the President authorized the statement that nothing has happened within the past ten days to make matters better or worse.

The President further said that, as he has not yet conferred with Ambassador Wilson, he can not announce any future policy with respect to President Huerta or Mexico for the reason that he has not decided upon one.

STEAMER GOES ASHORE.

NEW YORK, July 28.—The steamer Chalmette from New Orleans for New York went ashore early to-day in a thick fog while a mile and a half South of Barnegat.

DEMANDS U. S. CONSUL AT JUAREZ BE REMOVED

WASHINGTON, July 28.—The removal from office of Thomas Edwards, the American Consul at Juarez, Mex., was requested of the State Department to-day by Representative Smith, of Texas, who charges that Edwards has been negligent in relieving American refugees at Madera. Representative Smith acted on complaint of his constitutents in the El Paso district.

The Congressman also urged Secretary Bryan to stop the shipments of arms and ammunition from this country to the Huerta administration.

"I informed the Secretary of State," said Representative Smith, "that so long as we do not recognize the Huerta Government we should not favor it by allowing it to secure arms from this country. We deny that they have a constitutional government and yet they are allowed to get arms and ammunition. We ought to allow both factions to have war supplies or we ought to give the privilege to neither of them."

Smith received telegrams to-day from his constituents saying that 35 Americans are in peril at Madera, among them a number of women and children.

TO ARRANGE PEACE TERMS.

ATHENS, July 28.—The terms of the armistice and peace between the other Balkan States and Bulgaria will be arranged at Bucharest.

To-day the delegates left Nish for the Roumanian capitol to begin their deliberations.

MICHIGAN SENATOR CHARGES BAD FAITH TO DEMOCRATS

WASHINGTON, July 28.—A defense of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and a vigorous attack upon the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill and the manner of the framing were made by Senator Townsend, of Michigan, during the tariff debate to-day.

He charged the Democratic party with bad faith to the farmers, and declared President Wilson had been the "most insidious lobbyist of them all" in the interest of the Democratic bill.

"It is said that the Payne tariff bill caused the impending measure," said Senator Townsend. "To a certain extent that is true, but it is not because the Payne bill was intrinheaval occurred, but rather it was partially because politicians said it was bad. Industrial, moral and insically a bad bill that a political uptellectual progress was never so great as under the unhampered operation of the Payne law.

"The Democratic party, through a division in the Republican ranks, is now in control of the nation, and after months of secret work the Democratic Senate has presented the pending bill. It was conceived in hatred of the American policy of protection and brought forth in the darkness of the secret caucus."

Senator Townsend said both President Wilson and the Democratic platform had assured the people "no legitimate business" would be injured. He asked what Senator would deny that the sugar industry was a legitimate business, yet it was doomed under the pending bill.

MAN AND WOMAN FINED.

LONDON, July 28.—Twenty-four men and women to-day were fined or ordered to furnish bonds to keep the peace as the result of the riots of yesterday, when Sylvia Pankhurst, the daughter of the militant leader, led a mob to storm Premier Asquith's house.

A huge crowd followed in the wake of the suffragettes as they began the march to the Premier's house, but the police, aided by motor busses, blocked the way of the on-rushing mob.

In the fight that followed, several officers were injured, but the police dispersed the mob, after arresting the militant leader's daughter and some of her followers.

The police had been searching for Sylvia as her release license under the "cat-and-mouse" act had expired. She was removed to Halloway jail to continue her sentence for inciting to riot. Before being taken to jail Miss Pankhurst promised to lead a greater uprising than ever before upon her release.

Mrs. Pethick Lawrence, Lady Sybil Smith and Miss Evelyn Sharpe, who were sentenced to Halloway jail for rioting during the recent suffragette demonstration were released today. They had gone on a hunger strike immediately after being taken to jail.

HOT WEATHER ADVICE.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Surgeon General Blue, of the public health service, to-day gave some hot weather advice, as follows:

Drink beverages of the soft, non-alcoholic variety; plenty of buttermilk and pure sweet milk, certified milk preferred; alcoholic drinks in great moderation, if at all, and cool carbonated or oxygenated drinks.

Wear white outer clothes, blue underwear, soft collars straw hats and easy shoes.

MAY REACH AGREEMENT.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—President Wilson having withdrawn his demand that the Glass currency bill be sent immediately to a Democratic caucus of the House, the Democratic members of the House Banking and Currency Committee prepared to consider the bill late to-day, with the expectation that an agreement could be reached before the end of the week.

The committee planned to take up the Ragsdale amendments to the bill providing for an industrial and agricultural currency. It is expected these will be voted down.

Market Quotations For Week Ending July 29, 1913

REVIEW OF COTTON MARKET

Heavy liquidation by strong interests of long lines, Continental and Southern selling, coupled with a continuation of excellent weather and brilliant crop advices, resulted in the cotton market developing a downward tendency during the past week and at the close of business Monday the readjustment which took place in the New York future contract market showed a maximum decline of 22 to 56 points from the final quotations of last Tuesday. New Orleans was the vulnerable spot in the cotton market. July New Orleans almost repeated its sensational decline of 37 points of Tuesday, declining 30 points last Wednesday before the New York close. This market was relatively strong, as it was up to the initial of last week but almost repeated history by losing ground The break in the Soutern markets was followed by liquidation by New York and New Orleans ring professionals and by bearish operators who believed that at last the long awaited break was approaching. The market developed a far greater degree of activity than has been noted in the recent past and there seemed a general disposition to get on the selling side.

Day after day the trade witnessed a repetition of sensational breaks.

Influential in causing the decided downward trend in prices were not only the factors already stated, but Liverpool cables were of a bearish character and Manchester advices suggested a slight relapse in the trade boom enjoyed so long there. Germany cabled that business was slow because of the Balkan war.

The curtailment of July long lines sent this option tumbling in value. August also was making new low values for the month, declining to 11.44 Monday. That also was making new low levels for the month, declining to 11.44 Monday. That was 76 points off from the best price for the month, or something over $3.50 a bale. A feature of the decline in August was that offerings were absorbed by brokers buying for Liverpool account against straddle sales in Liverpool. Many of the strongest spot sources also were noted as buyers of the option.

New crop positions monopolized attention. October, December and January displayed considerable activity, such as had not been noticeable in weeks and suggested a revival of public interest in the market. October during the week has lost 37 points, December 23 points and January 24 points. A good deal of selling pressure was stimulated by lower temperatures in the Western section of the belt and propitious rainfalls in Texas, Oklahoma, Central and Eastern States. Such rains, however, were not badly needed elsewhere, except in the Western States. In the face of this, however, many reliable authorities have sent in favorable replies to inquiries concerning the condition of the crop. Many replies were to the effect that rains were only needed in a few localities, and asserting that a dry spell at this time of the season would give the plants sufficient tap root to withstand any long drouth. The crop is facing its most critical period, but, notwithstanding the fact that the plant is supposed to have sustained deterioration, reports of deterioration are not to be taken as official, as they are generally originated from outsiders or those unfriendly to the course of the market.

Private estimates of the condition of the crops, such as The Memphis-Commercial-Appeal, Miss Giles, National Ginners and Weld Bros., have already made public the condition figures on the crop, all of which give conditions a slight increase, when usually there is a setback in condition. As to the percentage the Government in its condition report Friday, August 3, will give the crop no one knows, but the consensus of opinion is to the effect that the crop has moved back slightly. Those inclined to the bear side, however, give little or no credence to such a theory, saying that the Bureau's figures are made up as of condition to July 25, and the benefit of the cooler weather and good rains will not be shown in the report, but will be shown in the September report. On the other hand private reports received during the week from experts who are traveling over the cotton belt indicate that the plant has improved materially and that the prospects for a 'bumper" crop are of the best. There are a few complaints of boll-weevil damage in Arkansas and Mississippi. This has had but little effect on the market, and, with further rains, wich are forecasted for this territory very soon, will probably remove the only good argument which the bull element has to hold prices.

Weekly figures on consumption were bullish. Despite the uncertainties of war in the Balkans and tight money, the Continent took 20,000 more bales of cotton last week than the corresponding week last year. Spinners came into the market and purchased rather freely on declines, apparently taking advantage of low values. Spinners' takings for the week aggregated 182,000 bales, exceeding those of the previous year by 12,000 bales. Takings since September 1 of American cotton by spinners total 13,419,000 bales, as compared with 14,720,000 bales for the same period last year and 11,561,000 bales for the same time the year before. On the other hand all indications point to an early movement of the new crop. Some go as far as to predict the movement in both the Eastern and Western belts as early as August 15, which offsets any immediate scarcity of cotton.

Sentiment regarding the amendment which has been added to the tariff bill providing a tax of 1-10 of 1 cent a pound, or 50 cents a bale, has evidently passed out of the minds of those who were so bitterly opposed to the amendment at first. Some of the largest cotton men in the State have sent messages to the Finance Committee at Washington showing why this amendment should not be passed, and have received favorable replies from their Senators, but none was to the effect that they would oppose the issue.

Those interested in cotton futures seem to have a sure tip that the amendment will never become a law, otherwise some one would be fighting and pulling hair until the ultimate outcome of the pending issue is known.

Recently The New York American had the following in its weekly business and financial article:

"The vicious proposal to tax dealings in cotton 'futures' has naturally aroused a storm of protest, for it would embarrass cotton growers, cotton manufacturers, spinners and everyone associated with the business, to say nothing of driving dealings in the staple from New York and New Orleans to Liverpool, where the advantages of a free, unfettered market are properly appreciated.

"The manufacturer who undertakes to make and supply so many gross of shorts or dresses or sheetings at a stipulated price, in order to escape risk at once arranges to have the raw material delivered to him at a specified price. On the Cotton Exchanges he can buy this material for future delivery, as there is an active market all the time for 'futures.' But if every bale thus traded in be taxed two or three dollars this market will be ruined.

"The manufacturer will have to pay more for his protection against uncertain fluctuations and the grower will not find a ready market for his crop the moment he has it gathered and baled.

"The cotton tax is barbaric, and should be killed before it reaches the statute book. It would benefit nobody but would injure everybody."

TUESDAY'S REVIEW.

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 8 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

During the afternoon session part of the early advance was wiped out through active selling, believed to be profit-taking by early buyers. Old crop positions, however, held firm. Losses were attributed mainly to new crops. At the close the market was steady with prices 1 to 2 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday.

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Apart from the absence of rain in the southern half of Texas, the map shows favorable conditions. The most favorable developments were the let-up in the heavy rainfall in the Central and Eastern States, where a spell of comparatively dry weather is desired in order to produce the best results. There were only a few light showers overnight in Oklahoma and the Atlantics, generally fair weather is shown in Texas and Oklahoma. Northwest Texas, Amarillo, had .72 inch of rain.

Indications are for generally fair weather in the West, except possibly some cloudiness over Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma. Part cloudy in the Central and Eastern States, with a few scattered showers.

Houston, Texas, to-day officially reorded the receipt of six new bales of cotton, making receipts to date 31 new, against 13 last year. This supports the contention that, owing to the uniformity of crop development, the movement of new cotton will increase much more rapidly this year when once started.

Our markets showed indecision, opinions varying as to whether to act on the bullish weather conditions in the West, or to expect a bearish effect from the increase in the new movement reflected by the Houston receipts. First trades were at an advance of 3 to 5 points, which was soon lost.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, July 29.—The cotton seed oil market was partly lower at the start, but soon rallied on the strength of crude at the South, covering in new crop months and scattered local buying.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: Fluctuations in the market depend greatly on climatic conditions.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think that present conditions are of a nature to promote bullish activity at this time.

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The oats crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among reailers generally."

Markets---Continued

Grain Markets

CHICAGO, July 29.—The wheat market ruled firm and higher to-day, due almost entirely to the strength in coarse grains which caused considerable covering. General run of news was bearish. Prices at the high were up 1 1-8 to 1-4 on July, and 1 1-8 on other months. The close shows net gain of 1-2 to 5-8 on July and September and 5-8 on December.

There was no notable improvement in the milling or export demand, advance tending to check business.

A very dry map, with high temperatures, with no relief in sight for good portion of the belt, was the all-important factor in corn to-day, resulting in a sharp bulge on general covering by shorts, both big and little. Prices at the high were up 2 1-2 on July, 2 1-4 on September and nearly 3 cents on December. The close showed net gains of 2 1-2 on July and December and 1 3-4 up on September.

Oats were strong with corn, shorts being the best buyers, with selling largely in the way of realizing on resting orders. Prices at the high were up 1 cent on July, 1 1-4 on September and 1 3-8 on December. The close shows net gain of 3-4 on July and about 1 cent on September and December.

Provisions showed small net gains.

Corn opened unchanged; at 1:30 p m. the market was unchanged to ⅛d higher; closed ⅛d higher.

LAMBS AGAIN CHEAPER.

CHICAGO, July 29.—Packers again lowered the lamb market, owing to an excessive supply of Western stock, mainly from Idaho and Washington. Sheep were scarce and steady. Light hogs were few and held yesterday's prices, $9.50 being paid, but the heavy packer delegation, selling below $9, was conspicuous and weak to 5c lower. Cattle trade was of small volume and steady as to prices. Waterholes in Southwestern pastures have been filled, relieving the necessity of liquidation, and both Kansas City and St. Louis receipts were light, helping trade in native cattle.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends extirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and looks lower.

"Corn—The map shows no rain in the corn belt and very high temperatures prevailed yesterday in all territories west of the river. As long as present weather conditions prevail higher prices seem inevitable.

"Oats—We believe the market will gradually work higher.

"Provisions—Foreigners buyers of lard. The continued strength in corn adds to the general firmness."

Omaha reports no rain in Nebraska. Generally clear over the State. Winnipeg clear, 60; Duluth clear, 40; Glenwood clear; Bismarck clear, 70; Kansas City says corn and wheat bulletin shows no rain.

Provisional Department of Agriculture of Manitoba estimates wheat crop of 65,000,000 bushels, against 58,000,000 last year.

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "My returns to date, covering almost one-half of the corn producing counties, are showing some sensational losses in corn prospect. Kansas returns as far as tabulated and covering nearly half of the State, show a drop approaching 50 per cent since July 1, and working lower as later reports come in. Nebraska is off nearly 20 points and Oklahoma 40 points; Missouri to date shows 10 points off, and both Illinois and Indiana have lost ground. Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are also showing heavy losses. If the latter reports prove in line with those already received, the general average condition will fall several points under 80, and the official indication on August 1 may not be for a crop over 2,700,000 bushels."

* * *

B. W. Snow has the following from Edgar County, Ill.: "From April 10, we had nine weeks of dry weather, which ruined oats and hay, then we had some rain, which gave corn a fair start, but for the last five weeks we had hot weather and no rain. Unless we get rain in a few days corn will be the worst failure we have had in the 60 years that I have been in this country."

* * *

The Weekly Iowa Weather and Crop Report says: "In some localities in the southeastern counties, where there has been only .05 inch rain during the last 30 days, corn is firing and is at a standstill. Pastures are brown."

* * *

Selling in corn to-day was very scattered and sellers really scarce. That's why the market went up so easy, as nobody dares to take the short side.

STOCK GOSSIP

T. D. Potter says: "The market has every appearance of going higher and stocks like Union Pacific, Reading, Steel and Copper should be bought on every recession.

"I believe another effort to secure higher freight rates will be successful. Steel earnings for quarter published today will probably show $38,250,000. This will be bullish and should have a stimulating effect on prices."

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Speculative sentiment is better in the foreign markets. Information channels favor purchase of Standard stocks on reactions for turns. We would not climb for stocks, but would buy conservatively on fair reactions for moderate profits."

St. Louis Clearing House Association urges the government to retire $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 2 per cent bonds at par.

The reactionary tendency of the stock market is due to some reports of damage in sections of France to the corn crop. We are likely to have reports of this character at this season, but damage is usually exaggerated. We have not changed our opinion of stock market and believe the upward trend will continue.—T. WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Mean temperatures ranged from 1 to 3 degrees below normal, except in the Central and Southern portions of Texas, and middle and East Tennessee, where there was an excess ranging from 1 to 3 degrees. Weekly mean temperatures rangd from 72 to 84 degrees over the Eastern, from 78 to 82 over the Central, and from 82 to 86 over the Western portion of the cotton region. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 72 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 86, occurred at San Antonio and Tayor, Texas.

Precipitation occurred generally over the cotton region, except that there was none in parts of Central and Southern Texas and at a few stations in Northwestern Oklahoma. More than 2 inches of rain fell during the week over the greater portion of the East Gulf and South Atlantic States, in Southern Louisiana, at a few stations in Arkansas, North Central Texas and South Central Oklahoma.

The greatest weekly amount, 6.20 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La., and there was more than 4 inches in a few other widely scattered localities.

Helping Our Neighbor

A Sermon By REV. W. H. FAUST, Lexington, Ga.

Text: "A certain man was going down from Jerusalem to Jericho; and he fell among robbers, which both stripped him and beat him, and departed, leaving him half dead."—Luke x:30.

The story of the man going down from Jerusalem to Jericho and falling among thieves, and losing all his possessions, and being robbed and wounded, and the priest and Levite passing by and refusing to render him aid, and the Samaritan coming up and washing off the blood, and pouring in the oil, and putting him on his own beast and carrying him to the inn and providing so richly and graciously for all his needs, has always thrilled me and made me love the Samaritan, who believed more in orthopraxy than in orthodoxy, who followed right inclinations despite the fact that they crossed his opinions, who stood for right and principle against custom and tradition.

Jesus graphically and powerfully drives home the idea of who is our neighbor by the short and simple story of these three men and their dealing with the wounded and robbed citizen. The treatment accorded by priest and Levite makes us shudder and wonder to what depths human nature can decend. The incident of the Samaritan's love and care and thoughtfulness restores our confidence in nature and causes the throb of optimism again to pulse through our hearts.

Who Is Our Neighbor?

A question that the world has made big, and yet one which Christ makes wonderfully simple. We have for all these past years thought that our neighbor was the man who lived next door to us, and who belonged to our government, and thought and acted in accord with the ideas to which we ourselves subscribed—flesh of our flesh, blood of our blood, color of our color and religion of our religion. Human nature down through the centuries has made ability the test of neighborliness, and Christ makes need the test. Whoever is in need and receives assistance, whoever is found giving aid to the distressed and helpless, such ones are neighbors, and upon such Christ sets the seal of His divine approval.

Yonder in distant China with its millions who know not the Savior is to be found our neighbors. Among the yellow men of the East who need most the Savior there are they. In the jungles of Africa where the roar of the lion is heard and where the black race lifts up helpless faces to the skies for assistance there is to be seen our neighbors. On the coral strands of India, in the clutches of heathenish customs are to be found our neighbors; yea, even in America, with all its civilization, Christianity and enlightenment, they are found who need our aid, encouragement, sympathies, love, service.

To all the world we owe a debt, not merely to a portion of it. Asia gave us our religion and sent us the word of life, and brought us the gospel that has meant so much to us in our political as well as religious development. To boast of our honesty and the fact that we believe that we ought not to owe any man anything save to love one another is folly and error so long as we are not willing to do for the East what the East has done for us. We shall always be debtor to Asia until through our instrumentality the people of China and Western Asia are as thoroughly evangelized as are we, and until there are as many followers of Jesus in Asia as there are in America. And our debt will not stop then, the interest will still be accruing.

Home First.

Our Lord in establishing the working plans of His followers commanded them to begin in Jerusalem, and in this was manifest His divine wisdom. It is but natural to suppose that a person will wield the greatest influence and be able to do the greatest good and perform the most efficient service right where he lives. Despite this fact, to-day thousands of so-called Christians cling to the old idea that only a certain class of people are their neighbors. For instance, the cities are full of people who hold their membership back in the old country church where they joined in early boyhood and girlhood. True it is that fond and tender memories cling about those rural churches. Their influence and service can never be appreciated properly, but where a man's home is and among those people with whom he associates daily is the exact spot where he can do the most good, and so in the town, in the ward, in the block, in the church where you live and work is the place for your membership and there you can best serve the Master by uniting with those about you, your neighbors, to fight sin and wrong and evil.

Police the Pericho Road.

None of us would dare say that the good Samaritan didn't do his best, when he tended to the wounded man as he did. All of us, if we would think, would say that the Jew didn't have the proper love for each other or they would have by proper means attempted to make the road safe.

It is useless for us to get down on our knees and pray Almighty God to keep our boys pure and sober while we go to the polls and license saloons and permit the scarlet women to flaunt their shame in their faces every time they pass along the street. Our limitation is God's opportunity, when we have done our best and our all and failed, then we may expect God to come in and take our future and by His divine power turn it into success.

Too long has the church believed that Christ meant salt as an antiseptic instead of an aseptic. When the farmers kill their meat they put salt on it while it is fresh and do not wait until it becomes tainted and putrifaction sets in. In our church life we seem to be imbued with the general idea that we must let sin do all of its deadly work before we begin. Wait until other forces have had free sway before we let Christianity have a showing. If we are the salt of the earth, then by all means we should apply it to the sin of the world about us or else how can it be of any value to the people? It is fine to have an ambulance at the foot of the precipice, with stretchers and men and medicines and surgeons and nurses and care for ones who fall over the precipice that have not been properly warned, but it is much better to go and build a fence or place a rail around the precipice to keep people from falling over. The church isn't intended to be a hospital for the sick and wounded victims of sin, but rather a home in which children of Christ may be trained and developed into strong citizens of the Kingdom.

The Missing Situation.

Slow were we to catch the spirit of the Master as He agonized over the lost of earth. Slow are we to see that every needy man is our neighbor, we looked upon Africa and China and their people as foreigners, and so God has permitted us to build up great railway and steamship lines and opened up commerce and religious interests and brought the inhabitants of the Old World to us until to-day there are in New York more Italians than there is in Rome, more Jews than there is in Jerusalem, and when we proved remiss in our duties to those faw away God lovingly gave us another chance and brought them to our own doors and literally made them in out own cities our neighbors, and to-day we are responsible for these sin bruised immigrants white, black, yellow, red, who come to our shores. It is our duty to bind up their wounds and pour on the oil of the Gospel and pay out of our bank accounts for their care and in the spirit of the Christ let them know that they are our neighbors and that we love them and want them to subsist of the kingdom of our Savior, heirs of God and spirit heirs with us to all the glories of the better world, with united hand and hearts Christians of America must with sympathy, love, service, time, talents, money, sacrifice and consecration meet the lost of earth at home, abroad, everywhere and with words of cheer and sympathetic handclasps seek to lead them to the Christ so that our neighbors may indeed and in truth become the citizens of our Lord's Kingdom.

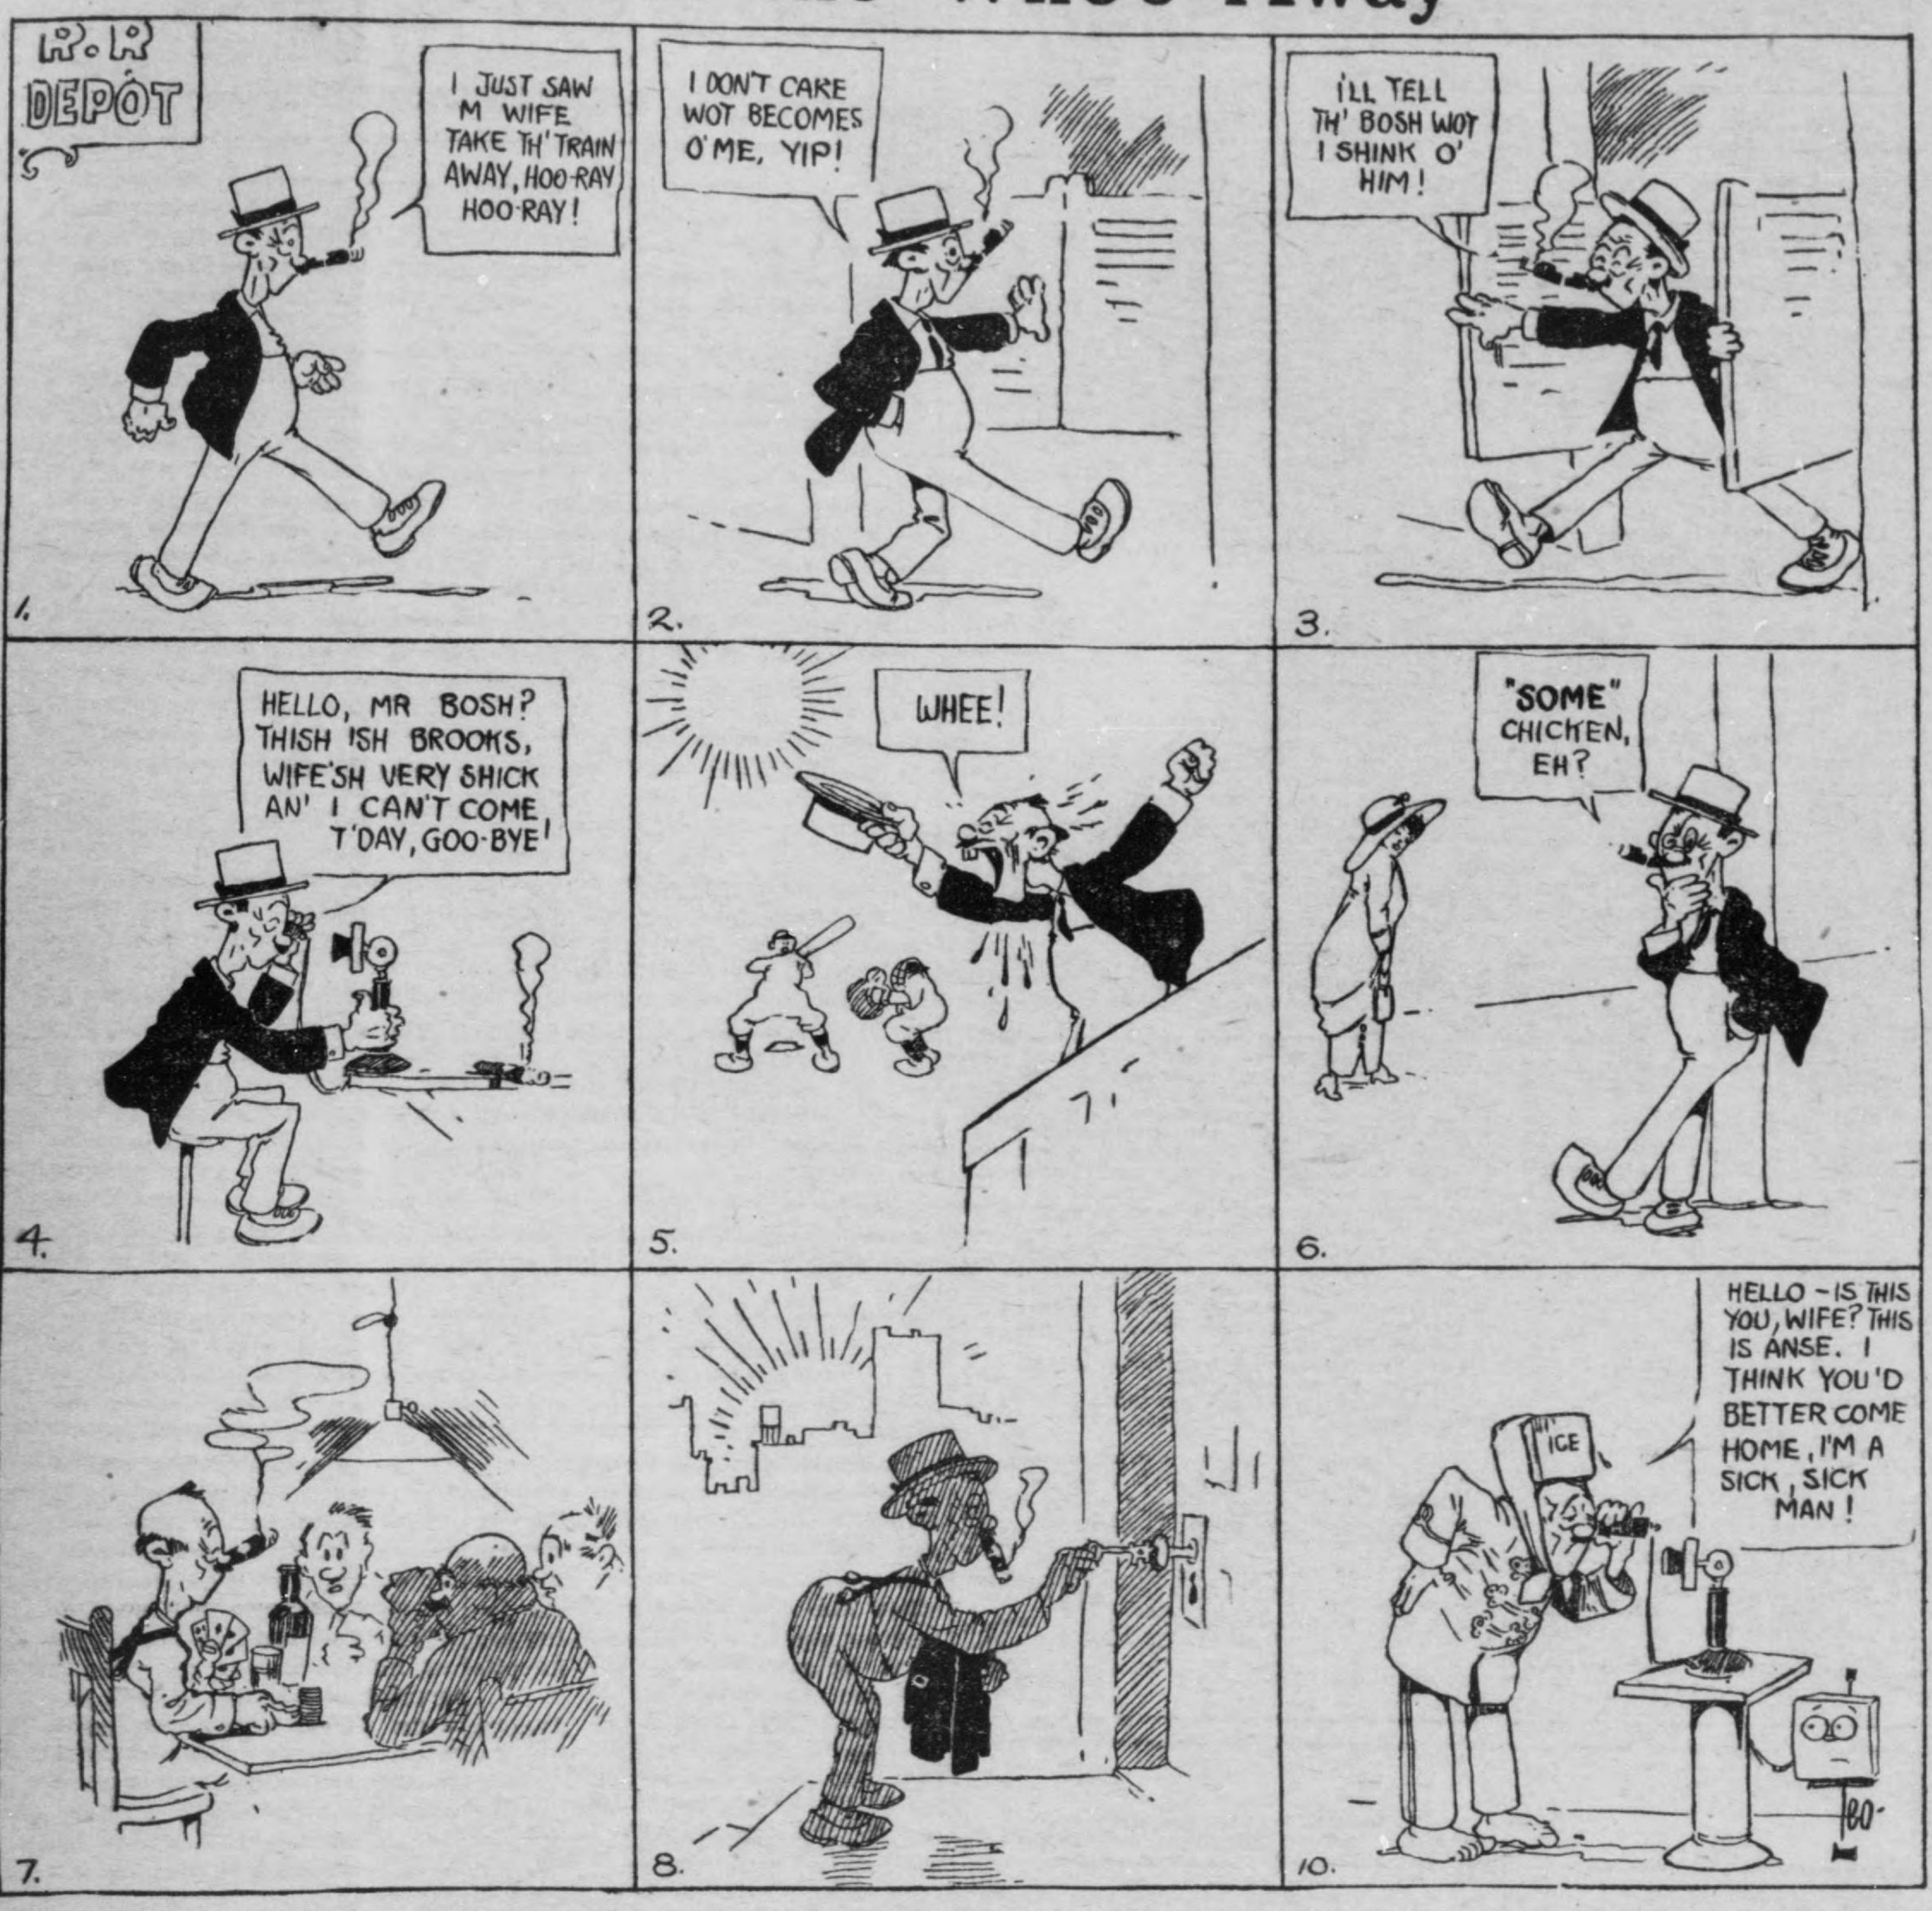
When the Wife's Away



Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information as his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

(Three men were injured in the crowd that rushed to buy.)

A Desperate Woman

Thanks to the information I had received from Mrs. Rolfe's little chambermaid, I knew that Rolfe kept the family jewels in the safe of the library and also knew which were the windows of this room. The girl had told how cruel the old miser was to his young wife, and how he had kept her a virtual prisoner for four years in the house where I was about to crack a crib. I wanted to get hold of the family jewels, which were worth at least a half million.

To break open the shutters and open the windows was an easy matter, but just as I had closed the shutters again I heard a shot from the next room. This upset me so that for nearly a minute I stood motionless, and just as I was about to leave by the way I came I heard light steps and a woman's voice whispered:

"Is it you, Charles? Why didn't you knock at the shutter?"

"No, it is not Charles," I answered, my courage returning as I reasoned that the woman, whoever she was, had good reasons not to alarm the rest of the house. "But he sent me to tell—"

I got no further, for the electric light was turned on and I found myself looking into the barrel of a most businesslike revolver. The most beautiful woman I have ever laid eyes upon was at the other end of the revolver.

"Who are you, and what do you want?" she asked. "Hands up!" she added, as I was too confused to answer a single word.

"Now, you may take them down again," she said, when she had relieved me of the gun I carried. "And, now, sit down!"

"What do you intend to do with me?" I asked, after obeying her order.

"I have not quite made up my mind yet," she said. "I suppose you were after these old family jewels, which I am wearing now."

And she pointed to some costly diamonds and pearls she was wearing.

"You are quite right," I said, understanding no more why she was wearing this small fortune on her now than why she had not rung the bell for the servants and told them to send for the police.

One thing was clear. She could be nobody but Rolfe's beautiful young wife. The shot I had heard was also a mystery to me. She must be the one who fired, since she was still holding the revolver in her hand. But at whom had she fired, and why was everything still quiet in the house?

"Did you ever kill a human being?" she suddenly asked.

"No, but I tried once," I answered.

"I suppose you were sorry you did not succeed?"

"No; I was glad he escaped, though I hated him as much as one person may hate another."

"But if you had been a woman, and your father had sold you to a human beast—sold you to a husband who tortured you in the worst manner for four long years, and who discovered your plan when you had just got enough courage to run away with the man you loved and who then gave you the choice of killing him or remaining in hell all the rest of your life? What would you have thought then? Woud you have chosen to let him live?"

Before I could think of an answer, there was a sharp knock at the shutters. Charles, whoever he was, had come.

"Come in, Charles," she said, almost triumphantly. "I thought you were never going to come," she added, as a tall young man entered exactly as I had done.

"Who is that man, Muriel?" he asked.

She did not answer his question, but said:

"I have killed my husband."

"Good God! It can't be true," he burst out, throwing himself heavily into the chair from which I had got up as he entered.

"Go in and look for yourself," she replied, and walking to the other end of the room she drew a heavy velvet portiere aside.

And now I saw a dead man with the most cruel-looking face I have ever seen lying on the floor.

"You need not look so worried, Charles, dear," she said, drawing the portiere again. And, pointing to me, she went on:

"That fellow will have to take the punishment. He broke in here to steal my jewels just as I fired. I kept him here, waiting for you to come. Nobody will ever suspect us."

"Oh, why did you do this, Muriel?" he cried, in despair. "And how can you think of adding a new murder to the first?"

"We must act quickly," she said, and rang a bell. "You must hurry out the way you came. I have rung for the butler, and when he comes I will denounce the burglar as the murderer. Nobody will take his word against mine. Then we will wait some time and get married."

He jumped up and looked at her with disgust and indignation.

"Never! Never!" he cried. "It is all over now. I could never marry a murderess."

Never have I seen an expression of despair like the one which came into her face at these words.

I almost felt sorry for her, but I used the chance to escape through the window. When outside I stood awaiting what would happen next. I saw an elderly man enter and heard him say:

"You rang for me, madam?"

"Yes, I did," she said, calmly. "Your master has been shot, and there"—pointing to Charles—"stands his murderer."

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

OH, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

Their Strength

Paul Meran said to Annette:

"To-morrow I will speak to my father, I will tell him that I love you, and that you are willing to share my life. I will speak to him, I will convince him and about 6 o'clock tomorrow night I will come and tell you what he says. I love you Annette and you may trust me."

Standing at the window Annette saw him crossing the street with the firm step of an energetic and determined man. He was tall and broad shouldered while she was little and frail and as she sat down near the fireplace she felt that she loved him even more because of his strength. Annette had no dowry and she knew that M. Meran expected his son to marry a girl with money. The son of a peasant he had kept some of the mighty. When, therefore, he had oppressed, who have too long bent their shoulders under the blows of the mighty. When therefore he had reached a position where he had others under him he used his authority like a vengeance and the power of money had become his religion. He was feared for his violent temper and as Annette knew that he was determined to get a rich daughter-in-law she was awaiting the coming of the morrow with anxiety.

The bell rang. She ran out herself to open the door and turned a little pale when she found herself face to face with Mme. Meran.

When they were alone in the room Mme. Meran was the first to speak:

"I know my son's feelings for you my child. I also know that you are more than worthy of his love and I should have liked nothing better than to have seen you as his wife. But what can we do when my husband is against it. Paul is quite crushed."

Annette buried her face in her hands and the tears ran out between her slender fingers.

"Then my heart, my love, my courage counts for nothing. I have no money. Because I am a poor girl M. Meran parts Paul and me. It is unjust, terribly unjust!"

And Mme. Meran repeated:

"Yes it is unjust," and because she found nothing else to say, she caressed Annette's hair with her hand and was silent.

"I know that it is hard to make a living." Annette went on, "and I know that Paul is not earning much money now, but I did not mind that, he would have got on better later, I would have shared his days, and bad ones with the good, and later on we should feel we were so much closer, because we had gone through the struggle together. I would have been a good helpmate to him. I am not selfish, Mme. Meran."

"I know that, my child and I would have learned to love you like a mother. Don't cry dear, you will be happy. You deserve it. You can get a better husband than my Paul would have been to you. Perhaps if you had married him the day would have come when you would have regretted it."

"Never, for I love him, and no matter what sorrows and trials might have come to us, they would only have tied me closer to him, when we thought of the confidence with which we began our life. Oh Madame Meran, it is cruel to part us."

"I feel so sorry for you my dear child. You speak just as I thought thirty years ago."

"And when he thinks of that don't you think M. Meran will give in?"

"Give in!"

Mme. Meran spoke these words as if she did not believe her own ears. She looked at Annette and her eyes filled with tears.

"Do you think, dear," she said sadly, "that my husband ever remembers those days? Do you think he even thinks of them for a single moment? Of course, I married him because I loved him and I loved him because being timid and frail myself, I needed him to protect me. But I also wanted to share his life and his burdens. Did I ever share them? I was little, I told you, and I loved him. Very soon he got into the habit of saying: 'I want this,' and 'I want that,' and after a while I was only a shadow of myself while he seemed to grow bigger and I trembled at him. My husband! He very quickly forgot that I had a heart, that I loved him. He took my feelings for granted, as something that was his by right. Yesterday he said. 'No' and Paul meekly gave in, as everybody else does to him."

"Paul! Paul, who is so firm and so stern, and of whom I have always been just a little bit afraid though I loved him."

"Paul, firm? Why he is meek, timid. He has always been weak, and without any will of his own. I have known that ever since he lay in his cradle.

"He was firm and sometimes even a little domineering towards me, and I feared he would make a dreadful scene and part from you in anger.

"He did nothing of the kind. And, besides, what could he have done? He is absolutely dependent on his father."

Annette wrung her hands.

"And I who thought him so brave and strong. Didn't he say anything didn't he put up a fight for me."

"He could not, dear."

They were both silent for a while Then Mme. Meran said as if to herself:

"Once, thirty years ago, my husband had made a scene and treated me very unjustly. He had left me sitting at home quite crushed and scared at his temper. In the evening he came back from the office, all upset, with a face which I hardly recognized. He had been unjustly called down by one of his superiors. I thought he had made a scene and had lost his position so I asked: 'And what did you say?' 'Nothing he is stronger than I, isn't he?' he replied. Oh Annette that day I knew what kind of courage he possessed, and I also knew what a poor companion I had been to him. I had always submitted and because I was weaker he had taken his revenge on me, when he had been abused by one stronger than himself. When he tyrannized us it was because he knew he had nothing to fear from us. And Paul who loves you Annette would have tyrannized you, though he has no courage himself."

Annette listens no longer, a terrible feeling fills her heart, the feeling that she had come near giving all that was best in her to a man, who would not have understood to appreciate it and who would have loved her so little as to make her either a slave or a rebel.

Old Mme. Meran continued talking of her youth: "He did not even protect me, me who did not even dare open my heart to him in my darkest hours."

Annette is listening no more. She is crying softly and murmurs: "I had courage, I was not afraid of life, I had courage!"

Mme. Meran finishes her thought, saying: "They think they are brave, because we, who love them, obey them. They imagine they are strong, though in reality they are the weak and we who submit, are the strong ones."

.:. The Judge .:.

KHIRODA, at the fag end of her youth, woke up one morning to find that her lover had departed in the night, leaving her destitute. She found that, in all the 38 years of her life, she had not even made one person her own, nor earned the right even to the corner of a home in which to live and die. She realized that life had no pity upon her and would relax none of its claims which must be attended to down to the smallest detail, and she rolled on the floor, beating its hardness with her forehead in an agony of despair.

Evening came and it grew dark. Khiroda had not the heart to tidy the room, nor to light the lamp. Her hungry child cried till it could cry no longer, and fell asleep. A knock came to the door and a man's voice called out, "Khiro, Khiro." Khiroda flung open the door and rushed out at him who stood there with her broom putting the youth to precipitate flight. Then, convulsively clutching the child to her bosom, she went out of the house and jumped into the well.

The splash brought the neighbors hurrying to the spot and the bodies were fished out. The mother was unconscious, but the child was dead. Khiroda was brought round in the hospital and was committed to the sessions by the magistrates.

II.

Mohit Datta was the Sessions Judge. He sentenced Khiroda to death. Her advocates tried their utmost to get some mitigation of the sentence, but without success.

There was some reason for this severity of his attitude toward feminine frailty, as a glimpse into his earlier history will disclose.

His Youth.

Mohit in his undergraduate days lived near the house of an elderly couple with a young widowed daughter, Sasi. What little of the world Sasi used to see from behind the barrier of her lonely widowhood seemed to her like some golden land of mystery, where happiness stalked abroad. Unsatisfied longing cramped the beatings of her heart.

In the intervals of her domestic duties Sasi sat at the window watching the crowd on the public road. She thought to herself how happy were the passersby, how free the tramps, what gay characters were the hawkers in the comedy of life, and morning and evening she saw the well-groomed Mohit strutting past in the fullness of his self-conceit. To her he was a demi-god, far above the mortals she saw around her.

Perhaps Sasi could have cheerfully spent all her life playing with her demi-god in the heaven of her fancy had not her evil star made the demi-god smile upon her and materialize the heaven within her reach. It is needless to relate at length when Mohit's covetous glance first fell upon Sasi, how he began to write to her under the false name of Binode, when the first trembling, ill-spelt reply reached him; how, at last, the whole of the poor little widow's world was turned topsy-turvy in the whirlwind of ecstatic surrender.

Late one night Sasi left her father and mother and got into a carriage brought by Mohit, alias Binode. When her demi-god, with all his tinsel showing, got inside and sat close beside her, a sudden inrush of remorse bowed her to the dust. And when the carriage actually began to move she fell at his feet, crying, "For pity's sake, let me go back home." But the carriage rapidly drove away.

To narrate all the episodes of Mohit's early career would grow monotonous. This will serve as a sample.

To-day there was no one to remember the escapades of young "Binode." Mohit Datta was quite a reformed character. His reading of the sacred books was incessant; he even practised austerities.

A few days after passing sentence on Khiroda, Mohit happened to be in the prison garden, with a view to securing some nice, fresh vegetables for his own table. He heard from inside the jail the sound of high words, and entering, found Khiroda in the midst of a vigorous bickering with the warder. Mohit smiled a superior smile. This is what woman is! Death at her door, and yet she must quarrel. She would dispute, thought he, amused at his conceit, even with the doorkeepers of Hades!

As he drew nearer, Khiroda with clasped hands, addressed him, saying, "Mr. Judge, for mercy's sake, tell him to give me back my ring!"

On inquiry, he found that a ring had been hidden in the loops of Khiroda's hair, which the warder discovering, had appropriated. Mohit was again amused. This desire for a bauble on the steps of the gallows! Oh, woman, woman!

"Let me see the ring," said he to the warder, who handed it over to him.

Mohit started as if it had been a piece of live coal. In the ring was set a miniature portrait on ivory of gold rim was engraved the name a young beardless youth. In its gold rim was engraved the name "Binode." He raised his eyes from the ring, and for the first time looked Khiroda keenly in the face. He seemed to see there the fresh, fond, tear-bedewed countenance of twenty-four years ago. But, ah! and what a difference.

Twice as Many Cattle Could Be Raised By Use of Silo

Permits Greatest Amount of Food Per Acre, Conserves the Waste, Furnishes Appetizing, Succulent Food.

By CHARLE S A. WHITTLE.

With a silo it is possible to grow two cows where one was grown before.

More succulent food can be grown on an acre for the silo than can be grown in any other form. When converted into ensilage more of the food content of a plant is conserved than when kept in any other shape. Cattle fed from the silo with suitable quantities of other food, are kept healthier and thrive better than when fed in any other manner.

The silo is both a source of economy and efficiency. Ten times as much space is required for storing corn field-cured than when put in the silo. Three times as much space is required to store hay in the barn than in the silo. So it is that the silo makes it possible to have smaller barns, carry less insurance, save cost of repairs.

In feeding, the silo preserves from waste a larger quantity of food materials than is possible in any other way. True, there is some waste from fermentation in the silo, but the curing process of corn in the field or other field-cured crops, exceeds by far the waste from the silo.

Economy of Silo.

The chief economy in using the silo is that it is the means of converting portions of the plant into appetizing food which otherwise the cattle would discard in the trough.

The equivalent of four tons of hay in feeding value can be easily obtained from an acre of silage. Four tons of hay per acre, of course, are not to be had, except from a good patch of alfalfa. Crops for ensilage can be grown on most any kind of land and with little trouble. It is not so easy to get hay crops.

No part of the country affords the opportunity that the South presents for growing, at lowest cost, abundant silage matter. Corn and sorghum with cowpeas can be gathered in great abundance from a field of ordinary fertility. Nothing like the equal amount of feeding matter can be grown in any other way. Considering that the silage crop can be grown as a second crop of the long growing season in the South, it is apparent, of course, that the kinds of crops that can be grown are not alone the South's advantage.

Necessity of the Dairy.

To keep a dairy up to maximum milk production all the year, of course, requires care in feeding. Experience has put beyond all question that no food source better serves the dairyman than the silage which he can get in great amounts from a small tract of land.

Aside from the unquestioned economy, the silage has special value in maintaining a healthy condition of the animal. It operates as a mild laxative and when properly balanced with cotton seed meal and some dry hay, the cow is in prime condition for the maximum production of milk.

If a dairy is maintained on small acreage near a city where land is expensive, pasturage is out of the question, and the silo alone is the solution of an economic feed. For most parts of the South, however, pasturage is abundant and easily maintained, so that it is the cheapest possible source of food for cattle. Considering that there is a nine-month pasturage season on lands covered with Bermuda grass, where one might consider that from $1 to $1.50 per month would be a fair charge as pasturage cost, it is apparent at once that cattle growing in the South need not be an expensive proposition. The cheapness of pasturage, together with the long growing season, makes it unnecessary to go to the lengths in providing silage to which more Northern farmers have to go during the longer period of stall feeding.

But a long grazing season on inexpensive pasturage does not abate the necessity of a silo. The mere fact that cattle graze so much in the South makes the silo the more necessary, for no food better follows or precedes pasturage than succulent silage. They supplement each other splendidly.

For Beef Production.

Because of the healthy condition which silage produces in the animal, and because of the enlarged capacity for food which feeding silage creates, beef growers have long recognized the value of leading up to the finishing season by using silage.

Recent years have developed that silage is not only good as a succulent food between pasturage seasons, but is a food that can be carried along till the feeding is finished. Formerly it was said that cattle fattened by use of silage did not kill out well, that the meat did not have good color and the bone was too hard, that in shipping the shrinkage was greater than in the case of strictly corn-fed animals. Careful experiments have largely disproved these claims. At the Virginia station 124 beef animals were fed with reference to testing silage in beef production, for a period of 149 days and were then sold on the market. These cattle were fed from eight to nine pounds of concentrates per day from twenty-five to thirty-nine pounds of silage per day and about two pounds of dry stover or hay. When shipped to market the shrinkage was not as large as usually prevailed on shipment of corn-fed cattle from the same territory. The lot of cattle dressed out 56.9 per cent; a very creditable record, considering that they were grades, fed only 149 days. Instead of the meat being inferior, it turned out superior in quality. The fat and lean were well blended and the color was excellent.

It will be noted that some dry matter was fed. This is generally advised as a check on the laxativeness of the silage. Professor Charles Plumb, one of the greatest feeding experts of this country, connected with the Ohio State University, while strongly advocating silage, believes that to feed silage twice a day and hay once would prove a good policy. Others, however, claim that no more dry matter need be fed than by experiments prove is necessary to prevent too great a laxativeness of the animal.

The most rapid and economic gains made in a car load of cattle averaging 800 pounds each and fed from March 17 to July 15, by the Indiana Station, were those made from feeding 33.81 pounds of silage, 14.6 pounds of corn, 2.34 pounds of cotton seed meal, 2.38 pounds of clover hay. This experiment, as will be observed, was conducted during the summer months. The cattle relish silage in the summer as well as in the winter. For those sections of the country where droughts occur, the summer silo is considered a most important adjunct to cattle raising.

The Illinois station used silage for finishing choice Hereford steers along with a ration of broken ear corn and alfalfa. The cheapest gains were made where the silage exceeded the alfalfa, but the most rapid gains were made where the proportion of alfalfa to silage was greater.

Corn silage, when supplemented with oats and hay and used for calves intended for beef production, will produce 35 pounds more gain per steer during the season at the same cost of ration than when shock corn similarly supplemented is fed, according to experiment conducted by the Illinois station.

Another experiment where cattle were fed a ration of silage, shelled corn and cotton seed meal, as against another group that was fed all the corn and clover it would eat. The cost of gain per 100 pounds in the first was $9.79 and in the second $12.99. This experiment was conducted by the Indiana station.

Many instances might be multiplied giving the advantages of silage feeding in the cost of beef production, but enough has been given to indicate the general results.

The more live stock grown per acre the greater the amount of manure available for enriching it. Since the silo makes it possible to raise two cows where one has been grown by other methods, so the silo makes it possible to get twice as much soil fertility for the same outlay—a matter well worth considering in these days when acquiring soil fertility is becoming more and more expensive.

Moreover, the silo is a means for returning to the soil the largest possible amount of the plant food contents which the crops have taken out. Each plant grown on the farm robs the soil of a certain amount of fertility. If it is corn that is grown and the grain is sold off of the farm, rather than fed on it, that much of soil fertility that has gone into the grain leaves and if its equal is to be obtained the farmer must go forth and buy it. If a part of the stalk of the corn is permitted to waste in the field, or is permitted to cure in a form that the cattle do not eat, so much of food content of the soil is thrown away. But when it is cut up and put in the silo, all of the plant is made palatable and available for food. Thus, the least possible amount of soil fertility taken up by plants is permitted to go to waste. After being fed, of course, it goes back to the soil to that extent which the animal has not converted into bone, blood, sinew and fat. It is estimated that about 75 per cent of the elements of the plant get back to the soil when fed through the silo and returned to the soil in the form of manure.

All sections of the United States have better appreciated and made use of the silo than the South. True, some sections of the South devoted to dairying and beef raising have been using silos with great profit for a number of years. One can ride half across some of the Southern States and never see a silo. It is the greatest need of the Southern dairyman. It is doubtful if beef production can be generally carried on with success in the South without the use of the silo.

A silo can be constructed cheaply; in fact, more cheaply in the South than elsewhere. A farmer can build one himself at little cost. Usually it pays to have one built according to some of the best designs and at greater expense than the cheapest and more temporary kind, because of the lasting qualities, as well as its better arrangement. A silo can be built at a cost anywhere from $50 to $250. In the South they should be built with less diameter than in the North, because of climatic conditions.

Any college of agriculture or experiment station will furnish plans and specifications for a silo. Some of the railroads will also do the same. It would seem that there is no excuse for the Southern farmer not having a silo.

An Attractive Bathing Suit

Fully Described by Olivette.

THE scalloped bathing suit is one of the summer's fancies. The little dress we portray has a foundation of gray satin, trimmed in plaid satin of gray and Geneva blue. The suit opens down the front, and is trimmed in self-buttons in a double row down its full length. The deep scallops at the bottom are bound in the plaid, and in turn the scalloped swallow-tailed redingote of the plaid and the upper sleeve is made kimono fashion, and is a continuation of the gray satin yoke which has little half-inch tucks in groups of three. The neck is cut in a modest V and is piped, yoke fashion, in the plaid.

Things Worth Remembering

Gout is rarely known among the working classes of Ireland. Their immunity from this complaint is thought to be due to the fact that their food consists largely of potatoes.

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

PATTERSON WAS DRUNK HE ADMITS

NASHVILLE, July 29.—Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, who was caught in a raid on a house in the restricted district last Thursday night, crushed and deeply mortified over the affair, has been joined by a faithful wife in a statement to the public, and in breaking the silence which he has steadfastly maintained admits that he was in a stupor from drink at the time of the arrest. He offers no apology for his transgression, but makes a public pledge that such an occurrence shall not be repeated. The statements follow:

I am leaving for home to-night with Mrs. Patterson, who has been with me for two days, and before going I wish to express the deepest appreciation of us both to the friends and those who were not my friends in the past for their kind and generous sympathy.

For my own part in this unfortunate affair I have no excuse to offer and have borne the condemnation of my own conscience.

My mission in Nashville was not political, as has been erroneously assumed, but purely legal, and while waiting the return of Mr. Nall, of Nashville, from Red Boiling Springs, who had in his possession certain papers which I was to examine, I began to drink, and continued until all sense of respsonbility was gone.

However gross my delinquency, I want the world to know that it is my last offense, and the weakness will never be repeated which brought upon me and mihe this deep humiliation and gave to my enemies an opportunity for revenge.

MALCOLM R. PATTERSON.

My heart and my sympathies are all with my husband, and I love him with all the strength of my soul. He has been shamefully, cruelly treated, and I stand with him in this hour of trouble.

MRS. M. R. PATTERSON.

Bitter Fight Certain Over Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A bitter fight on the question of prohibiting interlocking directorates in all banks under the proposed Federal reserve system, provided for by the Glass currency bill, is anticipated in the Democratic caucus of the House to be called August 11.

President Wilson is opposed to this proposal, although the Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee have accepted such a proposal by a vote of 6 to 5.

UNDERWOOD DENOUNCES MULHALL

House Leader Calls Lobbyist Blackmailer to His Face Before Inquiry Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

Calls Him Blackmailer.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

Underwood was angered because Mulhall had written in his letters that he had seen Underwood and obtained information from him about the make-up of the committees of the House.

Underwood declared that Mulhall was giving false information to his employers. This testimony that Underwood objected to was developed at the session of the committee yesterday.

While Underwood was making his statement to the lobby committee, Colonel Mulhall denounced him for making accusations against him (Mulhall) and said he would call on the country to decide "which is the cleaner of us."

Declares Mulhall Lied.

Mulhall wrote in a letter to J. P. Bird, previously read, that he had a long interview with Underwood respecting the chairmanship of the chairmanship of the House Labor Committee. This position was given to William B. Wilson, now Secretary of Labor.

Mulhall said in this letter that he had learned from Underwood that Wilson first was considered for chairman of the Census Committee.

"The whole statement is a lie out of whole cloth," said Underwood. "I was chairman of the committee which named Mr. Wilson as chairman of the House Labor Committee. There never was any question about Wilson being named chairman of the committee on Labor.

"I never talked to this man in my life. The only time he ever saw me, apparently, was when I was walking through a corridor of the House."

Senator Reed then asked Mulhall if he wished to say anything.

"To the statement of the gentleman that I lied, I want to say that I met him in the back hall near the stairway of the Capitol," replied Mulhall, "asked him questions and as I stated yesterday he answered them like a gentleman. I do not wish to contradict him and I do not want to cast any reflection upon him, but before the examination is over Mr. Underwood will take back part of what he said."

STATE TRIES TO SHOW GIRL WAS STRANGLED ON THE SECOND FLOOR

Here are Tuesday's important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory, Saturday, April 26.

Newt Lee, negro night watchman at the pencil factory, leaves the stand after four hours and forty minutes of examination and cross-examination with the essential points of his story unshaken.

Efforts to discredit the negro's story result only in showing several discrepancies in the story he told before the Coroner's jury and his testimony on the stand at the trial.

All attempts to confuse Lee by telling him that the stenographer's report of the inquest has him making slightly different statements met invariably with his declaration that "they didn't get it right down there."

L. S. Dobbs, police sergeant, testifies to the finding of the body of the Phagan girl and says that Lee had a ready interpretation of the two notes when they were found by the dead body.

City Detective Starnes testifies to finding bloodstains on second floor and says Frank was nervous the day after the crime. He says he found what he took to be fingerprints of blood on a door in the basement.

Starnes is closely cross-questioned by the defense in an effort to show the spots he thought blood might have been aniline dye. In a lawyers' clash over certain questions Solicitor Dorsey is told to "sit down" by the judge.

Court adjourned until 9 a. m., Wednesday.

City Detective J. M. Starnes told late Tuesday afternoon at the trial of Leo Frank of the finding of a number of red splotches resembling blood in the northeast corner of the women's dressing room in the National Pencil Factory, testimony on which the prosecution relies to support its theory that Mary Phagan was murdered on the second floor of the building.

Starnes said that the principal part of the largest splotch was about as big as the palm of his hand.

He also testified that he found blood about 40 or 50 feet from the dressing room toward the front of the building, and that he discovered what he took to be finger-prints of blood on the door of the basement. The finger-prints, he said, he chipped off and now has the chips of wood in his office.

Starnes asserted that there were indications that a white substance had been used with the evident purpose of eradicating what appeared to be bloodstains. The detective described Frank as nervous when he was brought down to the factory the morning after the crime.

Tells of Clock Tests.

He said in reply to Solicitor Dorsey's questions that he had witnessed the new night watchman make a complete series of punches in the time clock for an entire twelve hours within a space of five minutes, in an effort to support the theory the State is expected to advance that Frank doctored the time tape submitted to the police department which seemed to show that the neight watchman, Lee, had made three skips.

Attorneys Go After Lee.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the National Pencil Factory, was harassed and assailed by counsel for Frank in a vain effort to win from him admissions ading the theory that he was otherwise involved in the crime than as the man who found the body. Lee was on the stand from 9 o'clock to 11:40 a. m.

However, through Lee and Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers called to the factory the morning of Sunday, April 27, the attorneys for Frank laid the groundwork for the elaboration of their theory that Jim Conley was the murderer of Mary Phagan and that Lee assisted in writing the notes that were found by her body.

From Sergeant Dobbs, Luther Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, obtained these admissions:

Points in Dobbs' Story.

That Lee, ignorant and illiterate, was able to decipher and explain in a flash the mysterious notes over which the officers had puzzled for several minutes.

That Lee spoke up and said, referring to the words "night witch" in one of the notes: "That's me, boss; that means the night watchman.

That the condition of Mary Phagan's begrimed and bruised face gave the indication that the girl had been dragged along the dirt floor of the factory basement, although Jim Conley, in his story of his part in the crime, declared that he had carried the body to the trash heap in the rear of the basement.

That Dobbs, with the aid of an electric flashlight, was unable to tell whether the slain girl was white or colored until he had pulled down her stocking, although Lee had testified to being able to tell that the girl was white by the dim rays from his smoky lantern while he was standing at a distance or five or six feet.

Lee's Story at Variance.

That Dobbs at the Coroner's inquest testified that he had had a Mr. Williams lie down in the place where Mary Phagan's body was found and, taking the position Lee said he was in when he first saw the body, discovered that, as a matter of fact, the body could hardly be seen from this point unless one was looking especially for it.

Lee testified, under the cross-examination of Attorney Rosser:

That the time he found the body was the first time he had gone farther than 25 feet from the ladder in the front of the basement that night.

That he knew it was a white woman, although he did not approach nearer the body than five or six feet, and had no light except the dirty lantern.

That he recalled that the officers, with a flashlight, were unable to identify it as white or colored for some time.

That he did not say, "That's me, boss," referring to one of the notes, but something to the effect that "They are trying to put this on me."

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly

THE WEATHER.

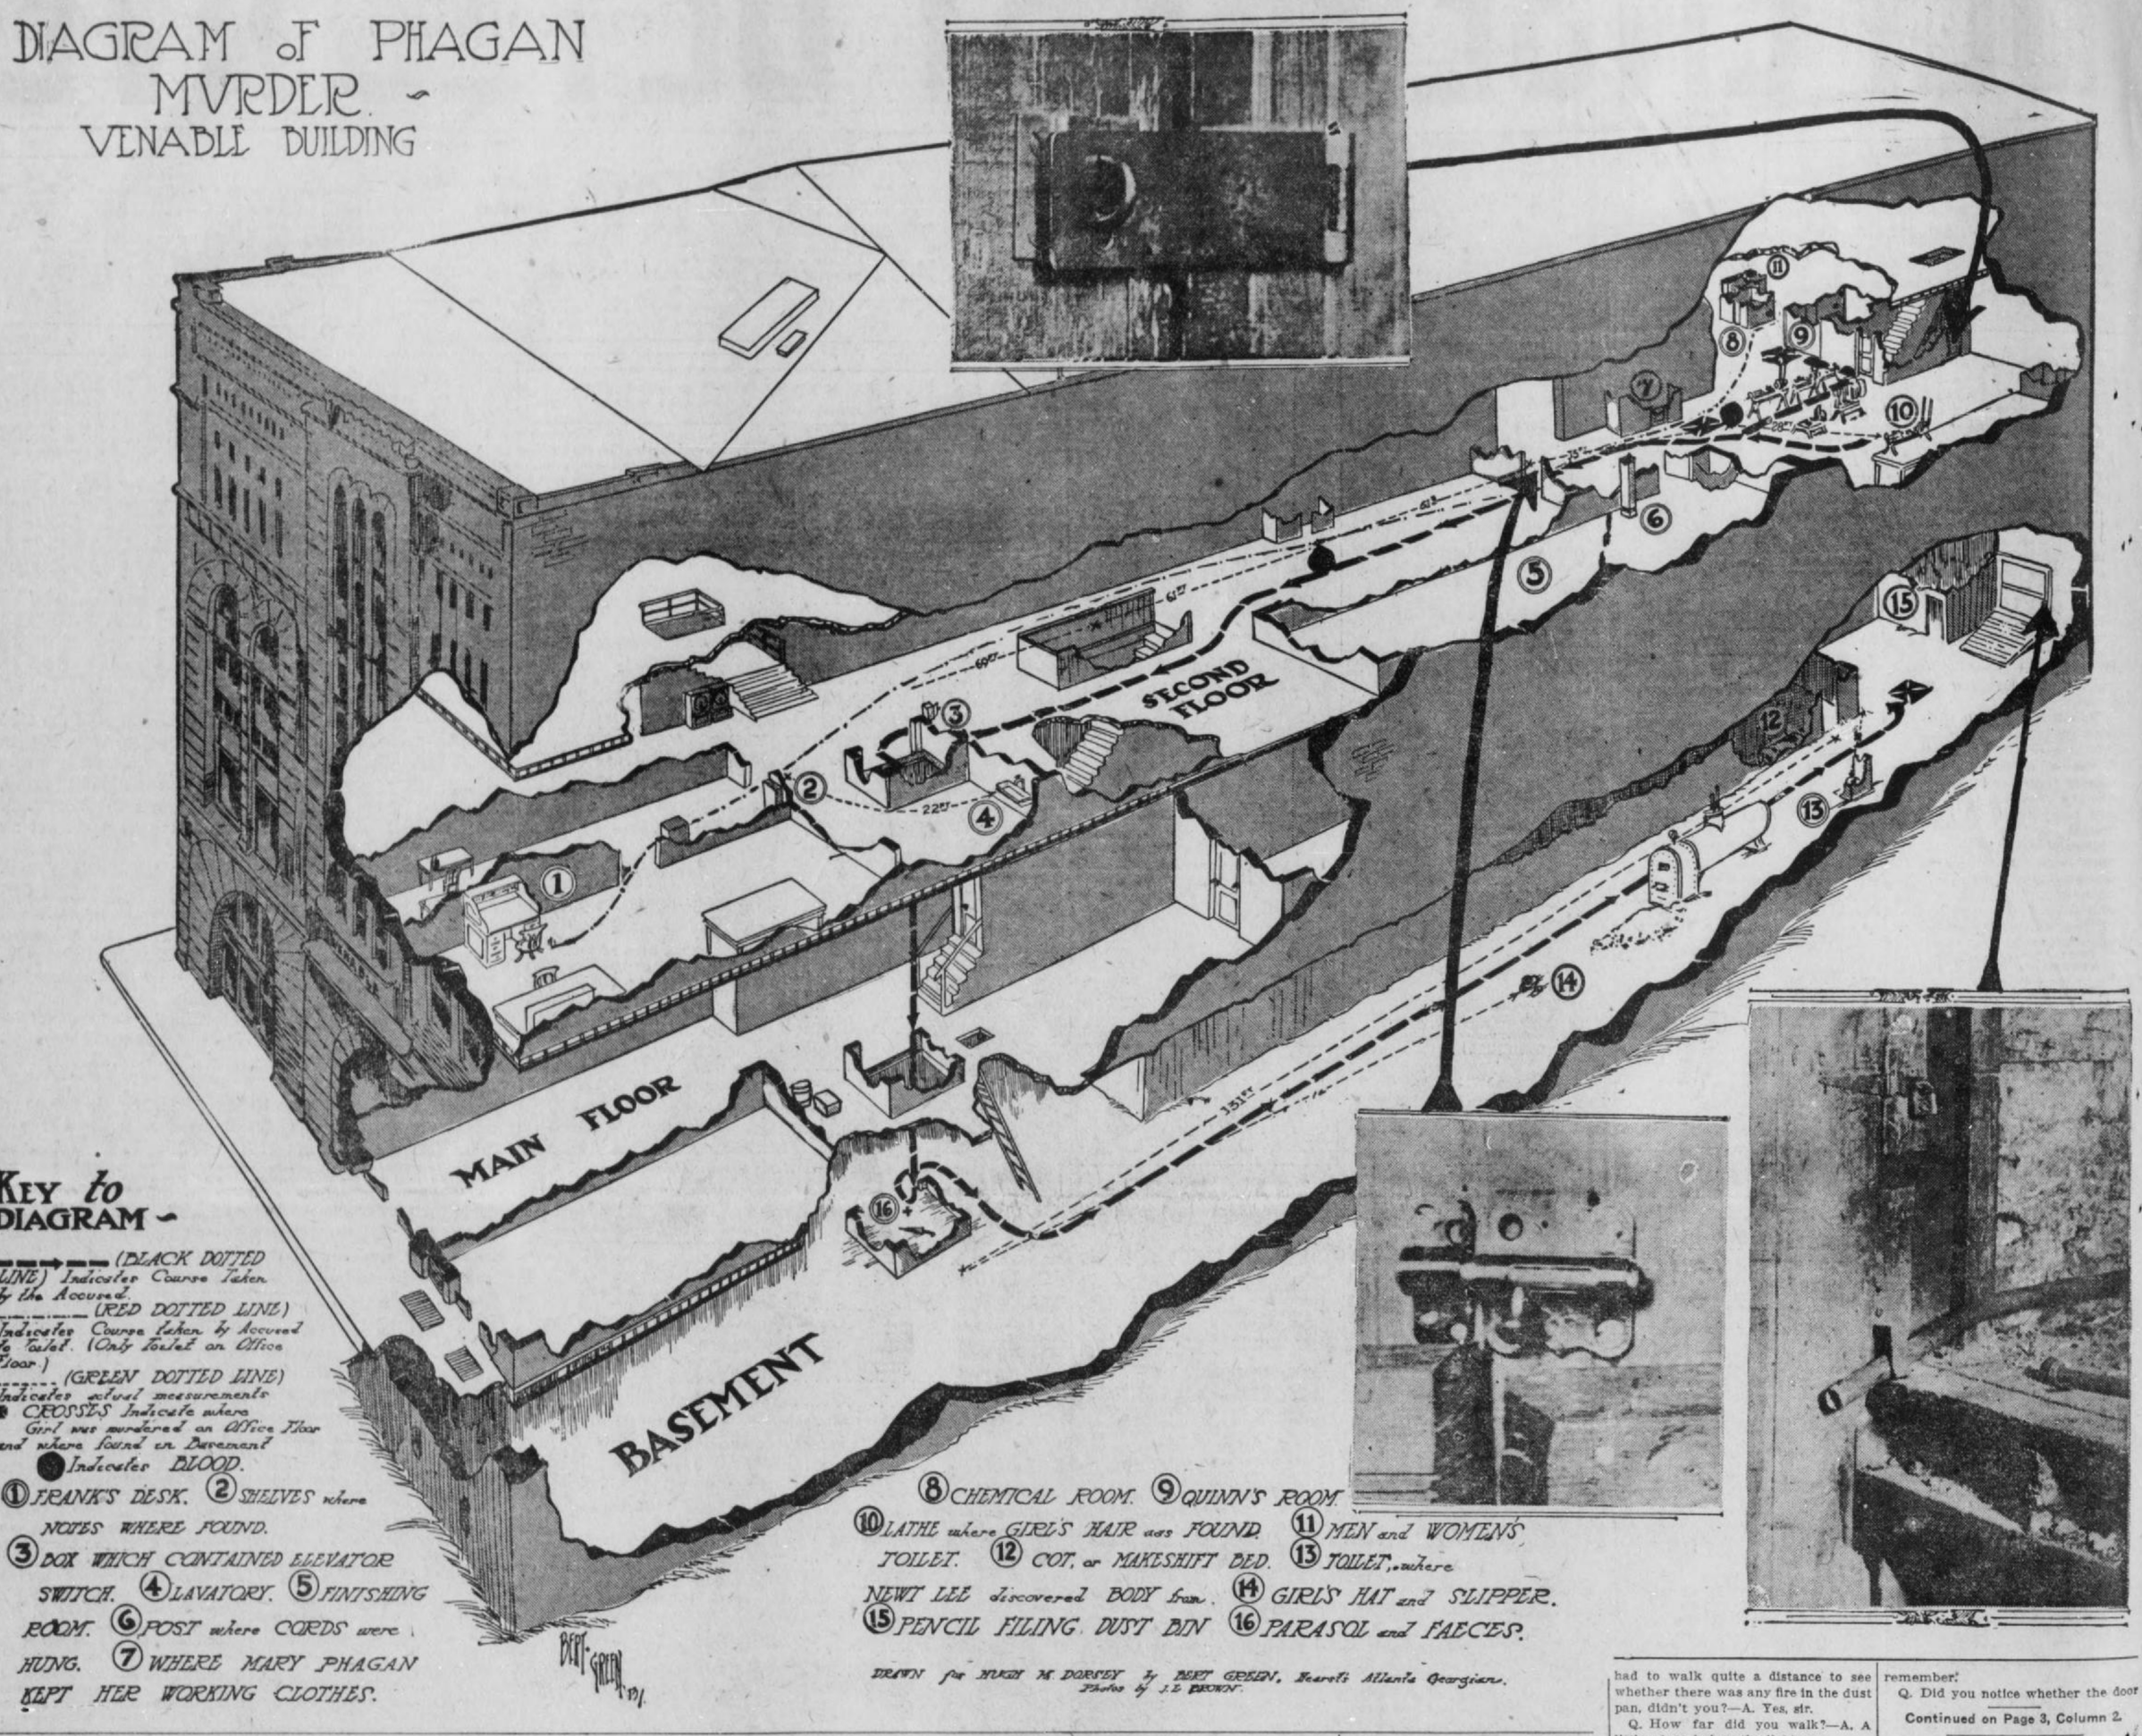
DIAGRAM USED BY DORSEY TO ILLUSTRATE STATE'S THEORY



DEFENSE FAILS TO OBTAIN CRIMINATIONS FROM LEE

indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was concerned in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

Jurors Sent From Room.

The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's, and the jurors were excused while Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall black negro did it by his-self.'

Cites Lee's Explanation.

"In an instant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me,'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions now and again interpreted thi mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note itself, there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

"Suspicion on Lee," Says Rosser.

"We expect to show that the notes were obscure and doubtful in meaning. We expect to show that the officers were endeavoring to read them. But they were of doubtful and strange meaning. In one of them we will show that the wording was something like this, so far as I can decipher it:

'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it but that long, tall, black negro did it by his-self.'

"We want to show," continued Arnold, "that Lee spoke up and said, 'That's me, boss. That means night watchman.'

"Isn't it strange that a negro so ignorant and dull that Mr. Rosser had to ask him a question ten times over could in a flash interpret this illegible scrawl?"

Rosser supplemented Arnold's argument by remarking that he regarded Lee's alleged remarks as highly suspicious, and that he considered he had the right to question a witness with a view of showing that a person or persons other than the defendant had a part in the crime.

Judge Roan ruled with the defense, and the jury was returned. The judge declared:

"The attorneys for Frank are privileged to bring out evidence showing anxiety or fear on the part of the negro."

Lee Makes Denial.

Lee denied when questioned that he had said, "That's me, Boss; that means night watchman." He testified that he told the officers that someone was trying to put the crime on him.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers who visited the factory after Lee called the police station, testified before the Coroner's jury in regard to Lee's ready explanation of the notes.

Rosser ended his cross-examination of Lee at 10:50 a. m. Tuesday, after the negro had been on the grill two hours Monday afternoon and nearly as long Tuesday.

The efforts to discredit Lee's story began the moment Rosser got him on the stand. He sought first to show that it was a very peculiar circumstance that Lee went clear to the rear of the factory basement, where he found the girl's body, when all through the earlier part of the night he had gone only a short distance from the foot of the ladder in the front of the basement.

Calls Lee's Excuse Flimsy.

"Every time you went down into the basement you went only about 25 feet from the ladder to see if there was fire in the dust pan," said Rosser, repeating Lee's testimony, "and yet at this time, when you say you found the girl's body, you assert that it was necessary to go clear to the rear to ascertain the same fact?"

Lee replied that he had gone to the rear of the basement for another purpose and Rosser attempted to show that this was only a flimsy excuse.

By his line of questioning Rosser endeavored to ridicule the idea that Lee could have identified Mary Phagan as a white girl by the dim light of his dirty lantern when, as he testified, he got no nearer than five or six feet to the body, and when the officers with electric searchlights were not able to determine whether the girl was white or a negro because of the grime and cinders on her body, until they had pulled down her stocking.

Session Full of Clashes.

The session was full of spirited clashes between Rosser and Dorsey. It was a favorable forenoon for the defense, Rosser almost invariably being permitted to continue the line of questioning which he was pursuing.

Rosser, while he succeeded in showing up discrepancies in Lee's present story with that before the Coroner's jury, was unable to force the negro to any admissions incriminating in themselves.

Dorsey questioned Lee in redirect examination and Rosser in recross-examination. Lee left the stand at 11:40 o'clock, after a total of four hours and forty minutes' grilling.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs followed Lee on the stand. He told the story of finding the body and identified the Phagan girl's clothes and the cord that was used to strangle her.

Frank, his face a mask, was brought into the courtroom just before the court was called to order by Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

After taking a cool survey of the courtroom, the factory superintendent conversed a moment with is counsel and then centered his attention on the night watchman. Frank took no notes of the negro's testimony, but he evidently was making a mental record of every word of it.

What he thought of the negro's statements could not be guessed from his features. Whether the negro was giving testimony which might be construed as favorable or as most damaging, there was not the shade of a change in the expression of the young factory superintendent.

He only took his eyes from the witness to speak a word to his wife or to answer an occasional question whispered to him by one of his counsel. He was brought to the courthouse from the Tower at 7:45 by Sheriff Mangum and Deputy Sheriff Miner. He was dressed in a blue mohair suit with a striped effect, and wore a fancy gray tie.

Eats Light Breakfast.

His breakfast was brought to him at the courthouse by a relative, and consisted only of two slices of toast and a bottle of milk.

"I am well pleased with the progress of the trial to this point, he said in his conversation with Essenbach. "Nothing has been developed which has not already been well known to the public and attorneys and which will be explained in the light of the defense's case.

"I am feeling well and confident. Nothing has taken place to disturb me in the least. I hope that the trial will move as rapidly toward its conclusion as the first day's session gave promise. I have nothing to conceal and nothing to fear."

Grilling of Lee Resumed.

The cross-examination of Lee was resumed as soon as court opened.

Q. Where you were sitting, you had to walk quite a distance to see whether there was any fire in the dust pan, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far did you walk?—A. A little piece below the light.

Q. Tell me exactly how far it was?—A. About as far as that man there. (About 25 feet.)

Q. You only went to the dustpan once that night?—A. Mr. Frank told me not to go near it with the lantern.

Shows How He Held Light.

Q. How close did you go to the body?—A. That wall there.

Q. How far is that?—A. About six feet.

Q. How did you hold the lantern to see it?—A. Like this. (Holding hand over head.)

Q. What did you see first?—A. The feet.

Q. How far was the body from the closet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it two feet, ten feet or twenty feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it fifty feet, forty feet or thirty feet?—A. Somewhere about thirty feet, maybe not that much.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. I looked to see whether it was a natural body.

Q. You didn't linger?

At this question Lee arose and pointed his finger at Rosser. "Just as soon as I saw what it was I want to tell you I lit a rag."

Saw It Was White Girl.

Q. You saw it was a white woman?—A. There were one or two white spots on the face and her hair was frizzled.

Q. How long did it take the police to find she was a white girl?—A. I don't know; they arrested me.

Q. What did they say?—A. One of them said this girl has been dead three or four days.

Q. When you came up did you go back down in the cellar?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you notice whether the door

LEE'S QUAINT ANSWERS ROB LEO FRANK'S TRIAL OF ALL SIGNS OF RANCOR

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

A page was ripped from a story of Harris Dickson. "Old Reliable" was paraded in the life in as somber a setting as was ever conceived, and the temper of the audience that is following the fortunes of Leo Frank through his struggle for life and liberty was revealed.

Some sinister things have been said of the spirit of Atlanta in reference to the trial of the pencil factory superintendent as the slayer of Mary Phagan. It was whispered once that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that those who believe Frank guilty would take vengeance as their own.

And, on the other hand, it has been said in sotto voce that the purses of Frank's friends would be opened to the last penny to see that he receives a verdict of acquittal.

Laugh Gives Lie to Rumor.

But right at the start the whisperings were given the lie, just as happens to most whisperings. A jury was selected and sworn in record time, and the story of a people torn by factional feeling by the case was crushed.

The first important witness looked and spoke like "Old Reliable." And his hearers laughed.

People inflamed by a passion so deadly that they are willing to defy the law to obtain their vengeance do not laugh when the issue is being fought.

People who are willing to spend their last dollar to see a man freed do not giggle when a witness relates circumstances which, the opposition maintains, add a strand to the cord of hemp which it is striving to weave about his neck.

Frank Getting Fair Trial.

Newt Lee, black, ignorant, cornfield pot-licker-fed darky, by the homeliness of his words proved beyond peradventure that Leo M. Frank is getting a fair and impartial trial as the law decrees, and that Atlanta is willing to abide by the verdict which the twelve men return when the historic case shall have passed to its final stage.

It took just such a character as Newt Lee to bring to light the true nature of the people who are listening to the trial, who are following the legal battle step by step, whose interest in the case is so intense that it has kept the slaying of Mary Phagan the big thing in the public mind for three long months.

Fortune favored both sides when the prosecution decided to place him on the stand among the first. Whether his story materially damaged Frank or his cross-examination materially aided the defense is of little moment. The reception of his testimony indicated to each side just what the public thought and enabled them to know that the case will be tried in the orderly manner which justice demands.

Newt Enjoys His Fame.

Let's have a look at Newt Lee. There's a lot to be learned from this homely negro. When his name was called and he entered the courtroom he had a joyful realization of his own importance. His face showed he was again enjoying the thrilling pleasure of "comin' thru" or going on a "scussion."

He is typical of the type that Judge Dickson so vividly depicts. His head is flat as a ballroom floor. His big frame is slightly bent, not from weakness, but from the natural laziness of his type.

Sympathy that has been spent on him for his months in jail, though admittedly innocent of any crime, has been spent in vain. Newt Lee has been having the time of his life.

"Ain't dat nigger had his picture took and put in de white folks' papers? Don't dem big lawyers pay him respecks? Ain't he jest sot dere in jail an' not 'have to wuk?"

That's the negro point of view and that's Newt Lee's. He has tasted all the popularity of a negro about to be hung, and escaped the only drawback to the final ceremony, the actual hanging.

Sang-froid Never Shaken.

His sang-froid never left him even during the cross-examination he underwent under the skilful questioning of Luther Rosser.

He enjoyed every minute of the experience.

He spoke in a dialect that Dockstader would pay thousands for and he spoke with a directness and an intelligence that showed that he had either been thoroughly rehearsed or that he was possessed of one of those quick, in-seeing mind, so rarely found among negroes of his type, but so typical of the class.

Lee is beyond doubt "a white man's nigger." He spread a feeling of kindliness over a courtroom where bitterness was supposed to prevail. Judge, jurors, spectators, all seemed in sympathy with him, and even Mr. Rosser did not prod him in the merciless manner that has made him one of the most famous, one of the most feared cross-examiners in the entire South.

Newt did not wish to let one sweet moment of his self-aggrandizement slip. Once during the testimony he was asked as to his faithfulness in performing his duties as night watchman.

"Light Jest Wuz Shinin'."

He "swelled visibly," as Sam Weller remarked, before he answered. "Folks say there never is been a nigger to punch that clock so prompt as me," and a stern objection from Mr. Rosser kept him from going on with his story of personal prowess, though his lips struggled to speak the forbidden words.

And his illustrations were apt. They were not strained. They fitted like a glove. He was asked to tell whether a light was burning dimly or brightly. Like a flash he replied:

"Has you ever seed a lightnin' bug? Has you ever seed one whut's jest been hit with a stick? Well, you knows how his light shines. Hit jest do shine. Well, dat was dat light. Hit just wuz shinin' and dat's all."

Racial horror of being alone in the presence of the dead was also displayed.

Lee was in a dramatic period of his story. He had just told of his grim discovery in the cellar of the pencil factory.

"What did you do when you saw the girl?" Solicitor Dorsey's question was spoken with rifle shot ring.

He "Went Right Back Up."

"I went right back up dat ladder," said Lee, as though he were repeating a confession of faith.

"How did you get up the ladder?" asked the Solicitor.

"I dunno how I got up dar, but I sho' wuz up dar. I sho' wuz," the negro replied fervently.

And on he went with his story, practically each reply being greeted by an outburst of laughter until a bailiff had to threaten to clear the courtroom.

He came down from the stand, smiling still, his glory gone, but realizing that for days he was sure to be a power on Decatur street, a person sought for socially, a man among men. And as he descended the audience smiled an applause as gracious as bowing prima donnar or stentorian tragedian ever received.

Mincey Adheres to Published Statement

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher, who says that Jim Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Company, confessed to him that he had killed a girl, declared Tuesday that he had conferred with attorneys for Leo Frank, and that he was ready to make his statement from the witness stand.

Mincey said his statement would be identical with the one recently published in The Georgian. He claims to have met Conley on the Saturday afternoon on which Mary Phagan was killed. He said that Conley was drunk and that Conley threatened to kill him, saying that he had already killed a girl that afternoon.

Mincey came to Atlanta from Ringgold Monday afternoon. He is accompanied by B. E. Neal, an attorney of Ringgold.

Tragedy, Ages Old, Lurks in Commonplace Court Setting

Outwardly Quiet and Singularly Lacking in Excitement, Frank Trial Is Enactment of Grim Drama.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

One of the most commonplace things in the world—crime—is riveting the attention of Atlanta and Georgia to-day.

Crime is almost as commonplace as death—and yet death, in a thousand ways, never is commonplace at all.

If I were a stranger in Atlanta and should walk into the courthouse where Leo Frank is being tried for the murder of Mary Phagan, doubtless I should be utterly astounded to discover what I had walked into.

That pale-faced, slight, boyish-looking party over there—the one sitting beside the massive frame of Luther Z. Rosser and the well-groomed person of Reuben Arnold—I should be shocked, I am sure, to learn that he stands charged with one of the blackest, most inhuman and most unspeakable crimes in all Georgia's somewhat long and varied catalogue of crime.

Yet that is the truth—Leo Frank is answering to the charge of the Grand Jury, and he has pleaded not guilty.

Crime and wrongdoing began, of course, when Mother Eve, through no motive other than curiosity, and without malice aforethought, either expressed or implied, bit a small and toothsome morsel from the first apple.

Cain performed the first murder not so very long afterward.

There were no newspapers in those days, but a well-authenticated story of those first infractions of the law have come down to us—and to-day crime runs riot throughout all the world!

Here in Atlanta, thousands of years after Cain committed the primary murder in history, Leo Frank is answering to the charge of killing Mary Phagan, some three months ago.

Frank Calm, Unagitated.

There sits the judge, and over yonder the jury. Pale of long confinement in jail, calm, unagitated, and even smiling, sits Leo Frank, the defendant.

Beside him are his devoted wife and his mother—his mother, who would as soon believe the stars had ceased to move in their orbits as to believe—even to suspect—that her boy was ever so remotely concerned in the death of Mary Phagan.

Over on the other side, however, sit the relatives of Mary Phagan—those who are not under the rule and debarred from the courtroom. They are grim and unsmiling—they are invoking the law's sternest displeasure upon whoever it was that took the life of their innocent little one!

Many and varied must be the emotions surging within the hearts and souls of these people, notwithstanding their outward poise—but I, who am theoretically a stranger in Atlanta's courtroom for the moment, still am wondering what it all can be about.

Gradually I realize a tenseness in the atmosphere, perhaps—and there may steal over me, as I grope mentally for something to fasten upon, a feeling that, after all, tragedy is in the air, and that its sinister shadow has fallen athwart this courtroom, the while I still recall that outside the sunshine is very bright, and is beaming upon the just and the unjust, impartially and alike.

One of the world's truly great physicians says "death is never uninteresting," and that no really great physician possibly can find it so.

He may become used to it, he may grow to view the mere physical fact of death itself as not a particularly astounding phenomenon, but never does he see in any one death the same sequenced things he has observed in others.

It is much the same way with crime, I think.

Murder is as old as the hills—as old as laughter, love, and the hate of hell—but it never loses its repugnant appeal—and so, all Atlanta and all Georgia to-day is watching the progress of the Frank trial, because Atlanta and Georgia are made up of human beings—that's all!

Few Women Present.

There are few women attending the trial of Frank. If there were thousands, however, one alone and above all other would stand forth and challenge the attention of the spectators. I mean, of course, Frank's wife.

There isn't anything the least bit "weepy" or downcast about her. She's a woman—the accused man's wife—but she plainly is a most extraordinary woman, nevertheless.

Whatever her thoughts, and whatever she expects of this trial, she gives no sign. She counsels freely with her husband's lawyers, but not frequently. She leans over and whispers something into Frank's ear now and then, but not often. She smiles upon him, and occasionally she runs her hand lightly along his shoulder, and maybe her arm is around his neck for the flitting fraction of a second, but if any of it is for effect or the least spectacular or theatrical, she is a consummate artist and surpassingly adroit.

Somehow she gave me the impression of the wife affectionate, but not demonstrative, of the wife unafraid but not obtrusive, of the wife deeply concerned, but too proud to let it be seen any more than it must be.

Perhaps there is a subtle motive in her quiet and repressed movements in the courtroom now and then—if so, I can but admire the complete perfectness of her methods and the dramatic excellence of her role as she enacts it.

Looking there at Leo Frank's wife and then at Leo Frank, one unconsciously finds himself asking himself this all-important question: What could have been Frank's motive when he killed Mary Phagan, if it be possible that he could have performed that monstrous deed?

Far and away the most frequent thing encountered in the unraveling of murder cases is the eternal triangle—the man, the wife, and the other woman!

That "other woman" may be an angel, she may be a devil; she may be a princess, she may be a pauper; she may be an innocent child, she may be a faded courtesan; she may be a willing third party, and she may be the most unwilling—but too often she is there, in some aspect, when murder has been done!

Could the motive behind the murder of Mary Phagan have been an unrighteous infatuation upon the part of Frank toward the dead girl—an unholy infatuation repelled to the extent of bringing about murder itself?

Was it that? And if it wasn't that, what was it?

Unless there was malicious motive and intent behind the slaying of Mary Phagan, there has been no murder done. The law says that malice is as essential to murder as oxygen is to the breath of life.

Frank? Of all the defendants I ever saw arraigned, Leo Frank, I think, looks the least the part of a murderer!

Not that that means anything whatever conclusively—but it is a thought that must obtrude itself upon all who view him there in the courthouse, battling in his own way for his life and liberty.

Frank never could be made to look the part of a hero, no more than he can be made to look the part of a villain—and yet he might be either, and deceive his looks no more than hundreds have done before his time and will do hereafter.

If someone should have told me that Frank is a bookworm, or a collector of postage stamps, or a person with a fad for pottering around in the garden at early morn, it never should have occurred to me to doubt it.

But Frank a murderer, a thing lost to every sense of decency and right, a traitor to his dearest and nearest, a—well, I should have asked explanations and enlightenment as to detail!

And yet, if Frank be the thing charged in that bill of indictment, he must be all of those sinister things combined.

Is he? Frankly, I have no fixed opinion, and I am of open mind.

The sweetest-tempered play-fellow otherwise I ever had when I was a boy had a marked passion fo sneaking off by himself and robbing birds' nests, particularly when he young birds were in the nests!

One Touch of the Dramatic.

There has been so far in the trial of Leo Frank but one touch of the genuinely dramatic—properly designated melodramatic, perhaps—and that was when the clothing little Mary Phagan wore when murdered was exhibited to the jury.

This, of course, was one of the tricks of the trade, and it was indulged in entirely for the jury's benefit.

It is not unusual—the same thing happens in all murder trials, and I have wondered why it could happen save for the doubtful effect of it desired.

To be sure, the sweet and innocent cause of this trial—the pathetic victim prerequisite to it—is, of all the parties to it, save one, absent.

She may be there in spirit, comforting and sustaining her grief-stricken mother, but her voice is not heard, and never will or can be heard.

She is not in the courtroom, and the one other extreme of the tragedy—omitting the yet undetermined status of Frank—is over yonder in the Tower—Conley.

In the grewsome exhibition of Mary Phagan's clothing, just as it was removed from her dead body, there was a power of appeal hardly to be described in words. The youthful garments spoke eloquently, if inconclusively, of the deceased—the unoffending, methodical, carefree little working girl, so suddenly and so frightfully thrust into public notice, never to know what it all was about.

If within the person of Mary Phagan dwelt the awful propelling force of motive that prompted Frank or someone else to murder, her simple clothing there in the courtroom suggested wonderfully clear the pathos of it and the inhumanity.

And there must have been a motive! What was it about Mary Phagan that gave rise to it in the heart and mind of—Frank?

The things that have happened so far in the trial of Frank are relatively inconsequential, as concerns the verdict.

Battle of Wits.

Two conclusions stand out unmistakably—the trial is to be a battle of legal wits, and it is to rage most fiercely about the negro Jim Conley—the big, black and all-meaning factor yet held jealously in the background.

Mr. Dorsey, the Solicitor General, evidently feels the strain of his position. He is plainly nervous at times, and unmistakably irritable now and then. He snaps his points to the court, and sometimes borders almost upon the rough and querelous in his language.

Undoubtedly Mr. Rosser disconcerts and irritates the Solicitor continuously. At times Mr. Dorsey's objections have seemed more like complaints—and when Mr. Rosser turns his massive head around and stage-whispers additional words not to Dorsey's liking, he resents it in every sentence and gesture he offers by way of comment or reply.

Reuben Arnold has had little to say so far, but he is forever whispering something into Rosser's ear—Rosser frowning like a thundercloud the while he listens.

Mr. Rosser is fighting his way along cautiously and carefully. He seemed upon the point almost of browbeating Newt Lee more than once, as that darky's examination proceeded, but generally, he quit just short of actual performance.

Lee, too, was unconsciously outspoken in his resentment of the Rosser treatment, and more than once scored well and powerful in reply to Mr. Rosser's questions—particularly when couching his replies in quaint and curious negro illustrations and phrases.

If at times Lee became more or less confused and contradictory, he proved in the main to be something of a Tartar under cross-examination, and while his testimony as a whole could not amount to much as an isolated proposition and is valuable only as one link in a long chain yet to be forged about Frank, it nevertheless went to the jury in pretty good shape, and will be hard to discount, whatever it may be worth.

Hooper Singularly Calm.

But if Dorsey is agitated and irritable, and if Rosser is imposing and pugnacious, and if Arnold is keyed to a high pitch and continuously prompting his associate counsel, the other big figure among the attorneys, Frank Hooper, is as calm as a May morning, smiling, dispassionate and altogether at his ease.

Hooper looks as if he had just stepped out of a cold-storage bandbox.

Handsome, as he certainly is, if not of particularly commanding presence, and well dressed, he moves about with all the unconscious grace and ease of a—panther?

Hardly that, and yet—Frank Hooper may loom larger than any attorney in this case before the final word is written in respect of it.

There is no doubt that the trial is to be long drawn out. Every inch is being disputed pro and con, and every possible point is being raised to keep the case strictly within its legal bounds.

The jury apparently is much above the average—it was plain enough all along that the defense was seeking a jury of high intelligence, and a city jury, moreover.

I think the jury trying Leo Frank may be expected to record the truth of the trial—it appears to be composed of level-headed, clean cut, sensible men, as it should be, if it is to give a fair play to all parties concerned.

The climax of the fight, of course, will be entirely within Jim Conley. The State will make every possible effort to sustain him, and the defense will make every possible effort to break him down.

Luther Rosser will exhaust his remarkable resourcefulness in this mighty effort, aided and abetted, to the very limit by the subtle and incisive art of Reuben Arnold.

Frank Hooper will strive as he never before has striven to hold Conley together—and Hugh Dorsey will back him with all the experience of his career at the criminal bar.

A happy and reassuring circumstance is that over and above all these contending forces sits Judge Roan—unruffled, unafraid, of unblemished and unquestioned integrity, upright and just—to hold all the stormy elements eventually in order and within the rules of the law.

The real trial of Leo Frank hardly yet has begun!

FRANK LAWYERS FAIL TO INCRIMINATE LEE

was open when you went back?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you tell the police it was a white girl or a white woman?—A. I think I told them it was a white woman.

Q. She was lying on her back, with her face up?—A. Yes, sir; she was lying on her side with her face up, with blood on her head.

Q. Which side was the blood on?—A. It was on the right side. It was dry.

Q. Are you sure it was the right side?—A. No, sir; her left side was turned up to me.

Grill Grows More Severe.

Q. You swear she was on her back?—A. Yes, sir; her face was turned up kind of to one side.

Q. When you went up to the office the first time, did Mr. Frank close his office door?—A. I don't know. I couldn't see his office.

Q. I mean the outside door?—A. It was open.

Mr. Rosser then read Lee's testimony about the time slip before the Coroner's jury.

Q. You helped him put the page in, didn't you, Newt? This is right, isn't it?—A. Read that again.

Mr. Rosser read it.

A. No, sir; you got me wrong. He didn't come out of his office.

Q. You said yesterday that Mr. Frank jumped back when he met Mr. Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Dorsey Objects to Methods.

Mr. Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's jury, which said nothing about Frank jumping back.

Lee—"Well, they got that wrong."

Q. That was a bad stenographer down there, wasn't he?

Solicitor Dorsey here objected to this method of questioning the witness. He declared the negro should first be questioned and then an effort to impeach him made.

To this Mr. Rosser replied: "Of course, this gentleman on account of his age is entitled to lecture me!"

"I am addressing his honor," retorted Dorsey.

"Are you through?" asked Rosser of Dorsey.

"I have stated my objection," said Dorsey.

"He misunderstood what I am trying to show," said Rosser.

Court Sustains Dorsey.

"This witness can't tell what his opinion is," said Judge Roan, for the first time speaking. "He can tell what he swore to before the Coroner's jury."

Following this ruling the cross-examination was resumed.

Rosser read from the stenographic report of the Coroner's inquest:

"Mr. Frank jumped when he met Mr. Gantt and I taken it this way."

Here Solicitor Dorsey interrupted: "I object to what he taken," the Solicitor said.

Judge Roan ruled that no opinion of a witness was admissible.

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper then asked that Mr. Rosser state what Coroner's inquest he was referring to.

Attorneys in Clash.

"I am always glad to accommodate these men whenever I can," said Rosser.

"You have got to accommodate me," retorted Hooper.

"No, I haven't. The man never was born whom I have got to accommodate."

Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Rosser must state what Coroner's jury he was referring to, as there were two, one in April and one in May.

Rosser resumed his questioning.

Q. I asked you if you were before the Coroner's jury at the police station?—A. Yes, sir.

State's Objection Overruled.

Q. Did you the first time say anything about Mr. Frank jumping back when he met Mr. Gantt?

Dorsey again objected, and was overruled.

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's first hearing, saying he was going to ask him if that was all he said. This testimony was to the effect that Frank looked as though he was frightened. It did not mention, however, that Frank jumped back when he met Gantt.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. No, sir; that wasn't all I said.

Negro Answers Warily.

Q. Newt, I ask you if you didn't leap right out of there and run and call the police when you saw that body?—A. Just as soon as I saw what it was.

Q. Didn't you say this before the Coroner's jury: "I thought some devilish boys had put something there to fool me. I got close enough to see it was a body and leaped right away?"—A. No, sir; I'll tell you what I said.

Mr. Rosser interrupted Lee.

Q. Mr. Frank told you if anything serious happened, to call the police, and if anything trivial, to call him?—A. Yes.

Q. When Frank told you to go off and have a good time, you lit right out, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that after two or three minutes you lit out?—A. Not exactly that way.

Says He Doesn't Recall.

Q. You said yesterday that when Frank put on the lock tape that Saturday it took twice as long as it did on the other times you saw him do it. When they asked you how long it took him to put it in before, did you not tell them you did not pay much attention to it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Why didn't you tell the Coroner it took twice as long the last time as it did before?—A. I did tell them it took longer.

Q. Who asked you?—A. He looked like a blind man.

Q. Then all this record here is wrong?—A. I can't help about those records.

Q. You never told it until yesterday?—A. Yes; I told the Coroner it took him longer.

Q. If you didn't pay attention to him the first time, how did you know it took longer the second time?—A. I held the lever for him.

Q. You couldn't say whether it took him a minute the first time?—A. Yes, it took over a minute.

Questioned About Notes.

Q. You could not say whether it took under a minute or over a minute?—A. No.

Q. Who did you live with?—A. No one.

Q. Who lived with you?—A. A woman. She just stayed there and cooked for me.

Q. You and her lived together?—A. No, she just cooked for me.

Q. Did you pay the rent for the last one?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the first one?—A. I just paid board.

Q. Were you down in the basement when the police found some notes?—A. They said something about a book.

Q. They read you something about the night watch doing it?

Dorsey here objected to anybody else said.

Rosser replied that his object was to get to the truth and show what Newt Lee did at the time, indicating a ready interpretation of the notes.

Mr. Arnold then addressed the court.

He began an argument and Solicitor Dorsey insisted that the jury be withdrawn.

"Of course, after he has discussed the case, he wants the jury withdrawn at our statements," said Mr. Rosser.

"I understood Mr. Rosser to say he would not introduce the contents, and I understand this ruling excludes the contents of one of the notes?" asked Dorsey.

"No, I didn't say we were not going to present the contents of the notes. I am going to introduce what I please," answered Rosser.

Judge Roan again sustained the defense and ordered the jury brought back. Attorney Rosser then resumed his cross-examination.

Q. When you were in the basement, didn't one of the policemen read a note which said something about a long, tall, black negro?

"I object," said Dorsey. "I understood his honor to rule that the attorneys for the defense could not go into the contents of the notes."

"Are we going on with this argument before the jury, after we just had them sent out?" asked Rosser.

"Let the question be put," said Judge Roan.

Lee Denies Saying "That's Me."

Q. When he said "the night witch," didn't you say "Boss, that's me?"—A. No, sir; I said, "Boss, it looks like they are trying to lay it on me."

Q. No, I want yes or no from this—"The tall, black, long negro?"

Here Dorsey interrupted with an objection.

"Now where did Lee swear that."

Going to bed in an upstairs room in the dark, as was their custom, they heard the buzzing of bees. It was discovered that a swarm of bees had settled in their bed.

FLASHLIGHT PHOTOGRAPH OF COURTROOM OF FRANK TRIAL

WATCHMAN STICKS TO HIS TALE OF FINDING OF BODY

he asked. "A section of the Code says that you can't question a man like that unless you first present some certain evidence of the statement having been made or written."

At this, Attorney Rosser sat down and Dorsey began questioning Lee on the redirect examination.

Q. You said something about somebody trying to put it off on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Jim Conley? A. I never saw him until that time last week.

Q. Have you talked to anybody about this?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk to this man (indicating Arnold)?—A. Yes, he was over to the jail after you were.

Lee Quizzed on Diagram.

Q. The first time Frank put that tape on the clock, did he say anything?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything the second time?—A. He made a remark about its taking longer.

Q. What was the reason he changed the tape?—A. It had been used.

Q. Was it as dark in the basement at night as it was in the daytime?—A. Mighty near.

Solicitor Dorsey started over the diagram drawn by Bert Green, Georgian staff artist, of the National Pencil Factory, and proceeded to ask Lee a question and pointed at the diagram.

"I object to that picture," said Attorney Arnold. "It is nothing but Mr. Dorsey's theory of the case. He's got all kinds of marks here."

"He's not asking about anything but the physical appearance of the building," replied Judge Roan.

Solicitor Dorsey then had Newt Lee point out the various parts of the building shown on the diagram; Dorsey used as a pointer Mary Phagan's parasol.

Q. Newt, say whether the body of Mary Phagan was lying the same way when you saw it with the officers as when you first saw it.—A. I don't know, officers were all around it, and I couldn't see very good.

Lawyers Clash Again.

Mr. Rosser took a stand directly behind Mr. Dorsey and objected to Dorsey leading the witness.

"Well, this negro is not as well educated as some of these lawyers," said Mr. Dorsey. "It takes a little patience to get him to understand."

"What lawyers are you referring to?" asked Mr. Rosser. "Do you mean yourself?"

"Of course, myself," answered Mr. Dorsey.

Q. Was the toilet west or east from the boiler in the basement?—A. West.

Q. Was the body west or east?—A. The body was kinder west.

Q. Could you see Frank from that desk up stairs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Rosser asked you how far it was from the steps leading up to the second floor to Mr. Frank's office. How far was it?—A. About as far as from here to that wall across the room.

Called Only Police.

Q. Did you call anybody on the phone that night but the police?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you call Mr. Haas?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the shutters on the north side of the second floor of that building closed on Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes, sir; they were closed.

Q. Were there apartments back there on the third floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they for?—A. White people.

Q. Did white people use the closet in the basement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who told you to use it?—A. Mr. Frank took me down there and told me to use it.

Q. What did he call it?—A. He called it a toilet.

Q. At night it is darker in the rear of that basement than it is outside?—A. You can't see inside there at all back where the body was found.

Tries to Discount Diagram.

This ended the redirect examination, and Mr. Rosser began the recross-examination. He took up the questioning in an effort to prove that Lee did not understand the diagram of the pencil factory.

"What is this?" he asked, pointing to some blue coloring representing the blank wall.

"I don't know, sir," the negro replied.

Q. It looks like a mill pond, doesn't it?—A. I don't know just what it is meant for.

Q. The policemen and detectives talked to you all the time, didn't they? They fired a pistol beside you; they cussed you and they praised you, didn't they?—A. No sir; they didn't praise me none.

Q. My friend, John Black, and those fellows talked to you day and night, didn't they?—A. Well, just let me tell you, I couldn't sleep even for two nights after I was put in jail. They just questioned me all the time, policemen and everybody.

Q. Is there any other way to get out of the basement except by the ladder?—A. Only the back door.

Q. Are there not some steps between the boiler and the back door up to the first floor?—A. If there are any there I don't know it.

Black Talked to Him More.

Solicitor Dorsey at this point took up the examination.

Q. Did Frank talk to you in jail?—Yes, sir.

Q. Who talked longer to you, Frank or John Black, the detective? Rosser objected, saying the Solicitor had gone over the interview between Frank and Lee and no one had referred to it since.

"We want to know if repetition is going to be allowed," Rosser asked Judge Roan. "It is simply to repeat. If we start a repeating contest we will be here forever."

Judge Roan overruled the objection. Lee replied: "Detective Black talked to me the most.

Q. Who talked to you longer, the detectives or Mr. Arnold, when he came to see you the other day?—A. Mr. Arnold.

Newt Lee was then called off the stand, after having been questioned for 4 hours and 15 minutes.

Sergeant Dobbs Testifies.

Q. Where were you at about 3 o'clock April 27?—A. At the station house.

Q. Did anything unusual happen?—A. At about 3:25 a call came to go to the pencil factory. When we got there the door was locked. Later a negro came and let us in. He said there was a woman murdered in the basement. The negro led the way down, and about fifteen feet back we found the body. She was lying with her face down. We couldn't tell whether she was white or black except that her hair was light. I told someone to turn her over. A cord was around her neck and sunk in her flesh. There was also a piece of cloth. I began to look around and found a couple of notes. One of them read——"

Mr. Dorsey interrupted. "Never mind about the notes," he said.

Identifies Cord and Cloth.

Q. I will first get you to identify this cord (taking the death loop from a suitcase).—A. That looks like it.

Q. And this (exhibiting a torn piece of cloth)?—A. It is.

Q. Was there much blood?—A. Very little.

Q. Was the hair bloody?—A. Very little; I had to almost reach the skin to feel blood.

Q. Was it moist?—A. Dry.

Q. Are these the notes you found near the body? (Exhibiting notes.)—A. Yes.

Q. And this pad?—A. Yes.

Q. How were they lying?—A. Near the head.

Q. Were they close together?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with Lee?—A. Took him to the station.

Q. What was his bearing?—A. Cool.

Q. Mr. Dobbs, look at this (pointing to diagram of factory); point where the body was found?—A. Right here. (Indicating spot.)

Rosser—"I object to that picture until the witness says it is a fair representation of the building."

Judge Roan—"I sustain the objection."

Dorsey—"Is it a fair representation of the building?"

A. It is.

Dorsey: "That's All."

Rosser After Details.

Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. The negro told you she was a white woman?—A. Yes.

Q. You had to look very closely to find out?—A. Yes.

Q. What kind of light did you have?—A. We lit some gas jets and had lanterns.

Q. You found the notes under the sawdust?—A. Yes.

Q. You were not able to see them until you raked in the sawdust?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the note attached to the pad?—A. No.

Q. How far from the child's head was the first note?—A. Not over eight or ten inches.

Q. What note did you find first. A. The white one.

Q. Did you find much trash in the building?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find other notes?—A. No.

Q. Did you search?—A. Yes, we were looking for the shoe, you know.

Q. Where was the shoe found?—A. Some one else found them.

Q. What was the condition of the child's face?—A. You mean about dust?

Q. No; was there any indication that she was dragged?—A. I thought there was.

Q. Lee did become excited become he left the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. From the place where Lee stood, could he have seen the body?—A. Yes; part of it.

Q. Didn't you make any experiment in the day time to see whether Lee could see the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you?—A. Yes, sir; the feet and part of the legs.

Q. I asked you if you said the evidences of dragging did not begin immediately in front of the elevator?—A. No, I said it appeared to me to begin immediately in front of the elevator.

Q. As a matter of fact, you didn't find the hat and the shoes close together?—A. The hat and the shoes were on the garbage pile.

Q. The floor was rough and one being dragged over it would be scarred up?—A. Yes.

Q. Captain, you are mistaken about the wound being on the right side of the head, aren't you?—A. I won't be positive. It was near the rear of the head.

Q. Was the blood wet or dry?—A. Dry.

Q. This little trail which you

THE $55 SHORTHAND COURSE AND $55 BOOKKEEPING COURSE, BOTH FOR THE PRICE OF ONE, THIS WEEK ONLY AT THE SOUTHERN BUSINESS COLLEGE

As the Southern's Great Offer Draws to a Close the Demand for Scholarships Becomes More Lively—Last Week in Which to Obtain Two $55.00 Courses for the Price of One.

Saved, $55!

Are you one of the fortunate ones?

The unusual midsummer offer of the Southern Shorthand and Business University, 10 West Mitchell street, this city, will close on Saturday, August 2.

Until then the $55 Shorthand Course and the $55 Bookkeeping Course, both combined, are offered for the price of one course—$55!

While this extraordinary offer is in effect, either of the $55 courses may be obtained at $40!

Since this special offer was announced just a few days ago, the demand for scholarships has been unprecedented.

"Find inclosed check for $55, for which please send me one of the combined scholarships, although I shall not enter school until October," writes a young man at Tallulah Falls.

Others are securing scholarships to be used in August, September and later, just to receive the benefit of the overwhelming reduction now made.

It is not a question of obtaining as low or even a lower rate at some other colleges, but the point of great interest is that you can now secure such a remarkably low rate in the long-established, old reliable, superbly equipped and well-known Southern Shorthand and Business University, "the school that gets results," and naturally the school you prefer to attend.

Remember, the two $55 Courses for the price of one, this week only.

Don't delay, enter now or else buy scholarship now for future entrance, and save this big discount.

HERMAN STRAUSS,
The Former Pupil who wrote 125 words a minute after 30 days' study at the S. S. & B. U., is now a leading reporter in South Georgia.

"This is the first time in three years that we have put on sale our scholarships at a reduced rate," said the managers, "and we are doing this merely as a midsummer advertising proposition to invade new territory, the plan being to secure a large list of names of prospective pupils from those who obtain this low-priced scholarship. From this list we hope to secure many pupils at the regular rates, which will be in effect by August 1, and thus be reimbursed for the loss we are now sustaining by this advertising offer."

thought showed where the body had been dragged extended to the body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took hold of the hands and worked them?—A. Yes, but she was stiff. Her joints worked a little.

Door Staples Pulled.

Q. What was the condition of the back door?—A. The staple had been pulled, but the lock was still locked.

Q. Was the door open or shut?—A. It was a slide door and shut.

Q. Was it a bar door?—A. Yes. The bar was down.

Q. Did it appear to be a recent withdrawal of the staple?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you either read or quote to the negro Lee a statement about who had committed the crime, and when you said "night" Lee interrupted with a statement that he was the one referred to?—A. Yes, before I read the word "witch" he said he was the one referred to.

Q. Did you examine her underclothes?—A. Not very closely.

Court was then adjourned until 2 o'clock when the redirect examination of Dobbs was taken up by Solicitor Dorsey.

Dobbs Recalled to Stand.

It was 5 minutes to 2 o'clock when Judge Roan walked to the bench and called order. He asked Solicitor Dorsey if he cared to question the last witness, Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, further. Mr. Dorsey replied that he did. Sergeant Dobbs was then returned to the stand, and the redirect examination began.

Solicitor Dorsey directed the questioning for the State:

Q. To what undertaker did you turn Mary Phagan's body over?—A. Bloomfield, I think.

Q. How far is it from the ladder to the point where you found the body?—A. 150 feet.

Q. What was lying on the trash pile?—A. A hat and this pump (displaying one of Mary Phagan's shoe).

Q. What else?—A. Nothing.

Q. What about the hat trimming?—A. I never saw it.

Q. The hair ribbon?—A. We took it from her head.

Experimented to Solve Crime.

Q. Did you make any experiments at night in the factory in an effort to ascertain just how and who committed the crime?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you become convinced that Newt Lee could have seen the body from where he sat?

Attorney Rosser objected to this question and the objection was sustained.

Q. Could more than one person at a time have gone down the ladder to the basement?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been possible for anyone to have taken the body down the ladder with them?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been necessary for anyone taking or dropping a body down the ladder to have gone around the elevator shaft?—A. No.

Q. Could you tell whether the evidence you saw of dragging was caused from the feet of some person carrying a heavy burden or actually dragging it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did the lock on the basement door? Was it pulled up or out? A. Out.

Q. Look at this lock and hasp. (Dorsey exhibited lock and hasp from back door of pencil factory). Were they the ones you found on the back door?—A. Yes.

Q. Was the body cold or warm? A. Cold.

Dorsey Concludes Queries.

Q. Was there any blood on the ground or sawdust where you found the girl?—A. No sir.

This concluded Dorsey's examination.

Rosser then took the witness on the re-cross-examination.

Q. You don't know ho wthis hasp wos taken?—A. No sir.

Q. Mr. Dobbs, is it not a fact that you know whether this hasp was taken from the outside or the inside?—A. Yes.

Mr. Dorsey then arose and put a question to the witness.

"Where was the elevator on the morning that you found the body of Mary Phagan?"

At the office floor," replied Dobbs.

Q. Couldn't you tell from her hair that she was white?—A. Yes, if you got close enough.

Mr. Rosser questioned the witness again.

"Didn't you say you had to make a careful examination to tell that she was white?"—Yes.

This concluded Sergeant Dobbs' testimony.

Starnes Put on Stand.

The next witness to be called to the stand was Detective J. M. Starnes, who has been one of the principal investigators of the case. Solicitor Dorsey questioned him for the prosecution.

Q. What time did you get to the pencil factory after this crime was reported?—A. Between 5 and 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

Q. What did you do?—A. I met Sergeant Dobbs and went into the basement.

Q. Can you identify this staple and lock?—A. I do not know.

Q. This looks like the staple and lock from the pencil factory's back basement door, doesn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you find the staple, was it pulled up, or out?—A. The staple was pulled out from the back door, the indication being that it was pulled straight out.

Q. Was there anything to show how it was removed?—A. There was an indentation in the wood and a piece of rusty pipe which fitted the indentation.

Q. How did this door open?—A. It slid South.

Frank Didn't Ask Reason.

Q. If the staple was in and the door was open from the outside, what would have been the effect on the staple if the door had been opened from the outside?—A. The staple would have been badly bent.

The attorneys for the defense were sustained on an objection to a question by Dorsey to Starnes about a talk with Newt Lee.

Q. What did you do next?—A. I went to the police station and discussed the case with Chief Lanford and John Black.

Q. What next?—A. We asked Lee who the superintendent was and then he told us, we called Frang over the phone.

Q. How long did it take to get him?—A. Only a few minutes. A man answered the phone, said he was superintendent of the National Pencil Factory. I told him that it was very necessary for him to come to the pencil factory. He replied that he had not eaten his breakfast and that he did not want to come down town until after breakfast. I told him that it would be very necessary for him to come and that an automobile would be sent for him.

Q. Did you tell him what the trouble was?—A. He did not ask me and I did not tell him.

Q. How long was it before Frank reached the factory?—A. Only a few minutes.

Scores "Trial on Looks."

Objections were made when Dorsey asked Detective Starnes as to Newt Lee's conduct at the factory when Starnes first arrived there.

"This case should not be tried on looks," said Attorney Arnold. "Every man looks guilty to an officer. That what he gets paid for."

"The defense has attacked Lee and the prosecution wants to show his attitude to reveal that the attack is unfounded," retorted Attorney Hooper for the prosecution.

"Suppose Lee was on trial for his life," asked Attorney Rosser, "would any attitude be construed in his favor?"

Judge Roan overruled the objection, but said that he had not let down the bars.

"Lee appeared composed," said Starnes.

Q. How did Frank appear?—A. He pulled off his coat and said to Mr. Darley: "You see I have got another suit."

Q. Where did that conversation occur?—A. In Mr. Frank's office.

Q. What else did he say?—A. I don't remember anything else. I had charge of Lee.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to observe whether Frank was nervous? —A. He appeared nervous.

"Frank Looked Rather Trembling."

Q. Tell what he did.—A. He just appeared nervous. I didn't know who he was at the time. He appeared rather trembling and uncomposed.

Q. What time was it that he had this appearance?—A. When they brought him in to the factory from home.

Q. Did you see any slips punched in that clock?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. About a week afterward.

Q. Tell the jury about it.—A. I went to the factory and the watchman named McKinzie punched the clock all the way around in about five minutes.

Q. Were you present when Frank said anything about Newt Lee's record?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see these cords before (displaying some cords)?—A. Yes. We took some from the girl's body.

Q. Did you ever find any more?—A. Yes, on the second floor of the pencil factory.

Q. Were there knots in them?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the knots similar?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find any anywhere else? —A. Yes, in the basement.

When Starnes started to identify similar cords, already identified by Sergeant Dobbs as having been found around Mary Phagan's neck, Attorney Rosser objected on the ground that Starnes had not written the notations on them. The objection was sustained.

Q. Did you see anything in the dressing room Monday morning?—A. Yes, I saw a splotch that looked like blood and several smaller splotches that looked like blood.

Q. What did you find in the dressing room Monday?—A. I found several splotches and I chipped them up.

Q. What was the size of the largest spots?—A. One of them looked to be as large as my hand.

Q. Were they just splotches?—A. No, that was the principal part. It spattered for a foot and a half.

Q. Was there anything on the floor but blood?—A. Yes, it looked like it had been swept over with some white substance.

Q. Do you know what it was?—A. No. Some one told me what it was, but I have forgotten.

Q. Was the stuff on the floor blood? —A. Yes, I think so.

Q. You are sure that it was not aniline dye?—A. Yes. I experimented with the dye and it left a much brighter stain.

Q. Where else did you find blood? —A. About 50 feet up, going from the middle of the department towards the office, I found a nail with blood on it.

Q. What area did this blood spatter cover?—A. I don't know, but not as much as in other places.

Q. Did you find any other spots that you thought to be blood?—A. I chipped off the back door two spots that I thought to be bloody finger prints.

Rosser Calls Dorsey "Son."

Q. How far is it from the folding door to the place where the blood spots were found?—A. Thirteen feet and about forty feet from where the nail was found.

Q. How long would it take to walk from Marietta street to the National Pencil Factory?—A. About three minutes.

Here Rosser interrupted and asked the witness:

"Did you ever time it?"

"No," answered Starnes.

Dorsey protested vehemently.

"Will you stand out of the way, Mr. Rosser, in order that I my see the witness?" said Dorsey.

"That's a good suggestion, son, kindly remind me of it," retorted Rosser.

The objection was overruled.

Q. Were Frank's remarks about his clothes made seriously or jokingly?—A. Well, he and Mr. Darley were having the conversation and the only part I heard was Frank's remark about having another suit.

Q. What are these? asked Solicitor Dorsey, handing him something. A.—They look like the chips I took from the factory floor.

Q. Is there any difference in them now and when you chipped them up? —A. They are a little cleaner.

Q. What did you do with them?—A. Gave them to Chief Lanford.

Cord Presented as Evidence.

Q. Mr. Rosser asked you something about an agreement at the police station with Frank?—A. I don't know anything more about it than from hearsay.

"Your Honor," said Dorsey, "I want to tender as evidence a cord identified by Sergeant Dobbs as having been found around the neck of Mary Phagan, her clothes, her hair ribbon, this rag and this hat.

Q. Mr. Starnes, look at these chips.—A. They look like te ones taken up at the rear door.

At this point Attorney Rosser took up the recross examination.

Q. Couldn't you swear these chips were the ones taken up at the rear door?—A. I couldn't swear it, but I am reasonably sure.

Q. Are there any other matters about this case that you know about?

Dorsey objected, but the objection was overruled.

A. So far as I recall, there is nothing else that I remember.

Attorney Rosser then sat down and Solicitor Dorsey then said:

Defense Objects to Diagram.

"I want to present this diagram as evidence," referring to the Bert Green diagram of the factory.

Attorney Rosser asked to look at it.

"No, it is not admissible," he declared. "Let the jury retire so that we may discuss it."

The jury retired.

"Black dotted lines indicate the course taken by the accused," read Mr. Rosser. "It is a Jim Dandy, but we object to it. I really did not think that my friend Dorsey and Mr. Hooper would try to put this over me."

"It has been hanging here where you could see it all day," said Mr Dorsey. "I understood you to say you accepted it. We are willing to cover up those words."

"I want to raise a further objection," said Mr. Arnold. "This is an argument for the theory of the prosecution. These dotted lines are too powerful an argument. I think the picture of the house is admissible, but anything that could be construed as an argument is not admissible."

"I withdraw the picture for the present," said Mr. Dorsey.

Court then adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The crowd gathered early in front of the courthouse Tuesday morning. By 9 o'clock both sides of South Pryor street near its junction with Hunter were filled with people drawn by curiosity and the hope that they might have the good fortune to get admission to the small courtroom.

Taking a lesson from the first day, many of Frank's relatives avoided the stares of the throng by entering through a side door.

Secrecy was preserved as to the State's plans concerning Jim Conley, and for a time there were rumors that the negro, whose affidavits have been the most sensational feature of the case, might not be called at all. His name was not on the witness list, but Solicitor Dorsey said the omission was an error.

One Crowd as Bad As the Other, Says Lee of His Quizzers

Newt Lee, after being grilled by attorneys for more than four hours, said he was not tired, and all he wanted was a chew of tobacco. He was asked who he would rather have question him—the lawyers of the detectives.

"Mr. Rosser certainly is terrible," he declared, "but I would just as soon have one crowd as the other."

Buffalo Organizer Located in Chicago

MACON, July 29.—S. S. Bak and W. S. Wells, Supreme Lodge representatives of the Benevolent Order of Buffaloes, have come to Macon to straighten out the affairs of the order which were put in such tangled shape here last week by Dr. Bernard C. Goldberg, of Atlanta, an organizer, who, it is alleged, absconded after obtaining cash payments from scores of Macon citizens and for whom there is a warrant now outstanding.

Bak and Wells state they have apprehended Dr. Goldberg in Chicago, and that they will bring him back to Macon for prosecution.

WHITEWASH FOR SOULE, CHARGE OF SENATOR

McGregor Scores Resolution Exonerating Farm School President and Urges Close Quiz.

The introduction in the Senate of the Foster-Hixon resolution, seeking to exonerate President Andrew M. Soule, of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, from charges made in the House, has precipitated a bitter fight in the Assembly.

Senator McGregor, of the Nineteenth, after reading the resolution, declared that the effort of his colleagues was an attempt to "whitewash" the whole thing without proper investigation, and that he proposed to fight its passage.

Charges Political Intrigue.

The resolution sets forth that President Soule is being made a victim of political intrigue; that he has rendered the State valuable service, which should be recognized.

Representative W. H. Connor, of Spalding, who introduced the resolution in the House calling for an investigation of the charges, holds a different view, however, and demands that the matter be thoroughly investigated and the defendant either declared guilty or not guilty.

In a statement Tuesday, Mr. Connor asks why Dr. Soule left for Canada immediately after his resolution was introduced in the House. He would be glad, he says, to see Dr Soule "come up like a man and explain the disposition of the $3,000 appropriated for several years for the manufacture of hog cholera serum."

Charges Sale of Serum.

He also asks what became of the $6,000 appropriated at the first time for the serum. In addition, he charges that Dr. Soule sells every bit of the serum he manufactures to-day for more than it costs him to manufacture it.

"When I was in Athens last time," said Mr. Connor, "I requested Dr. Soule to show me the poultry department. He referred me to Professor Jones, head of the department, who escorted me to the said department, contained not more than 25 fowls—representing an expenditure of $3,000 per year on that department. Does that sound reasonable?"

"The Mirthful Girls" company at the Bonita are real singers and dancers, and are about the prettiest bunch of feminine grace and beauty seen in Atlanta in many moons. Standing room only greeted the company Monday, and this will probably be the case the balance of the week.

Ex-Georgian, Held As Kidnaper, Wins First Tilt for Child

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A. T. Martin, a real estate dealer, formerly of Fulton County, Georgia, won the first round in his fight against his divorced wife, Lillie, for the custody of their child, Sarah, when Judge Wilbur allowed him to retain the custody of the child pending the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus.

The writ alleges that Martin kidnaped the child soon after a divorce decree was granted Mrs. Martin in Fulton County, Georgia, in 1911. The court gave the child to the mother.

According to McLoughlin, Martin alleges his former wife is unfit to care for the girl.

Crazed at Sight of Ex-Wife, Man Kills Her and Himself

BIRMINGHAM, July 29.—Frenzied at sight of his former wife, Henry J. Naff, son of one of the oldest families in Birmingham, to-day walked next door to his home, where Mrs. Marie Naff, from whom he was divorced six months ago, was sitting on the porch, pulled out a pistol and shot her, and then put a bullet into his own head.

The woman died on the way to the hospital. Naff died two hours later at an infirmary.

Naff was living with his parents, while his former wife resided next door with friends.

CREMATORY MUST STAND RIGID TEST

Penalty Clause To Be Enforced if Plant Is Not in Operation by August 15.

"If the crematory is not completed and in operation by August 15, as called for in the contract, the penalty of $25 per day will be paid by the Destructor Company," said Councilman Claude Ashley, chairman of the Committee on Sanitation.

"Tests under the supervision of a competent engineer will be made, and I will devote all the time I can to the tests, so if the plant is accepted by the committee it will do what the contract calls for.

"I have my doubts as to the ability to burn garbage composed of one pound of combustible material to 1.95 water, but the company claims this can be done. However, it will hardly be necessary to burn garbage in such proportions.

"Another thing is the fact that there is only one generator for the entire plant, and should this generator become disabled from any cause, the whole plant will be compelled to shut down. There should be another generator in place in case of accident."

That the test will be severe and complete is certain, for Councilman Ashley will personally supervise the tests, having a competent man there in his place during his absence.

DEEP CRACKS ON JOINTS

Of Toes and Fingers. Hands So Bad Had to Sleep With Gloves On. Suffered Agony. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Completely Cured.

P. O. Box 378, El Paso, Texas. — "My trouble began December, 1911. It commenced on me by causing a scurf-like skin and my toe joints, finger joints and lips commenced to crack and split open. My finger cracks would bleed all day long; the cracks were very deep and my thumbs seemed to be cracked to the bone. My hands were so bad that I had to sleep with gloves on. The cracks in my lips would bleed often during the day and I used to put adhesive plaster across them to try to keep them closed. My toes would bleed and I would find blood in my socks when the day's work was done. The skin around the cracks was red and inflamed. I wore shoes one size too large on account of my feet being so sore. I used to become frantic with pain at times. My hands and feet used to smart.

"I suffered agony for four months. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and as a last resort I answered and got samples immediately. After trying them one night the next morning I found relief. I went to town and got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. From the time I commenced with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment until completely cured was just nineteen days." (Signed) Jack Harrison, Nov. 19, 1912.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold throughout the world. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

HUERTA HASTENS TO OBEY ORDER OF PRESIDENT

Promises Punishment of Dixon's Assailants and Release of Two Americans.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—Spurred by President Wilson's demand for the punishment of the men who shot United States Immigration Agent Charles B. Dixon at Juarez, and the release of two other American prisoners, President Huerta to-day ordered an investigation of the case.

President Wilson's peremptory demand, presented to the Huerta Government by Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American Charge d'Affaires, demanded the immediate courtmartial and punishment of the Federal officers who shot Dixon, and the immediate release of McDonald and Bissell, United States citizens, who were condemned to death by Pasqual Orozco.

Huerta promised the release of the two prisoners and the punishment of those who shot Dixon. Dixon is now undergoing treatment in an El Paso hospital.

After O'Shaughnessy had left the President, Huerta called in his Foreign Minister and ordered him to comply with the demands of President Wilson. A most energetic campaign is now in progress at Juarez, according to word received to-day.

American residents are delighted with the firm stand taken by President Wilson and express the belief that if such a step had been taken long ago the present revolution would not have been started and Mexico would have been completely pacified.

NOGALES, ARIZ., July 29.—Mexican Federal gunboats being used in the shelling of Guaymas withdrew from their positions in the harbor today following the sinking of the gunboat Tampico.

President Thinks Mediation Is Solution.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—No Cabinet meeting was held to-day. This gave President Wilson time to study the reports and recommendations on the Mexican situation submitted to him by Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson.

The President, it was said at the White House to-day, believes mediation in some form is the logical solution of the Mexican tangle.

Notwithstanding expert opinion that mediation should not be considered and the views of Ambassador Wilson, who yesterday informed him that in his opinion conciliation of this kind should not be attempted, the President is determined, it is said, to try mediation first, either through a conciliating commission or by direct appeal to the warring factions in Mexico.

Foreigners in Mexico City Await Next Move in Fear.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—That Americans and other foreigners are in danger if the United States fails to recognize the Huerta administration in Mexico, is the opinion prevailing here. While high Government officials decline to discuss the impending crisis, Minister of Gubernacion Urrutia, who is generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the Huerta Government, has been predicting that President Wilson will recognize the administration by to-morrow.

It is believed the conflicting views of Ambassador Wilson and the President presage the announcement of the plan for mediation by the United States. The plan will not be accepted by Huerta, according to Government officials, as interference by the United States is unwelcome.

Disquieting rumors are being circulated freely. All foreigners are anxiously awaiting the first move by President Wilson.

Envoy Called Before Senate Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Ambassador Wilson will appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, to discuss with that body the situation in Mexico.

At a meeting to-day the committee authorized Chairman Bacon to request the State Department to direct the Ambassador to appear before the committee.

Report Hoke Smith Backed Negro U. S. Official Is False

The Georgian Monday printed a press dispatch from Washington which stated that Senator Hoke Smith had called on President Wilson to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, a negro, to be Register of the Treasury.

Being in doubt as to the accuracy of the dispatch, The Georgian wired Senator Smith for an expression of his attitude on the negro's appointment. Tuesday morning Senator Smith wired as follows:

Washington, D. C., July 28.
The Georgian, Atlanta:

The report is utterly false. I told the President I would oppose the confirmation and endeavor to defeat the appointment.

There Is Something Compelling About the New Suits

A charm that is irresistible in their rich, new color tones, their beautiful materials—the inimitable smartness of line and fashion.

Everyone Is Talking About Them

and we have never before at this season had so many early Fall Suits go out of the house—which is further proof of their appealing style.

"Good-Bye Fluffy Ruffles"

is the cry as women see themselves reflected in the tall mirrors and catch the true becomingness and real elegance in these smart suits and if they are going away or if staying at home the question of certain apparel needs is answered in a suit.

The materials are especially pleasing—all, or nearly all, are rough weaves, basket cloths, eponges, brocade effects; also many combined fabrics are used.

For instance:

An elegant Suit of rich coloring and material has a coat of matelasse in burgundy color with skirt of plaid storm serge in burgundy and blue. Long cutaway coat, draped skirt, button-trimmed. This suit is only $25.

The coats are much longer than last season, and are in cutaway style; some taper to a decided point in back.

Among the leading shades are: Browns—from light, leather tones through to very rich mahogany. Red tones are good, too—very dark, shading into wines and mulberry. Blues, of course, are in favor and many new shades are shown.

From $15 to $65

—the prices run; and there are suits for all tastes, all occasions, from the perfectly plain tailored model—to the very elegant, fur-trimmed, two-piece costume.

SLAIN ENGINEER CALLED VICTIM OF SLANDER

W. D. Porter Pleads Self-Defense for Killing Samuel Jackson in Georgia Road Roundhouse.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis, the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

Monday the tale came to the ears of the husband of the woman, and he asked Jackson about it. Jackson, it is said, denied the accusation, and suggested that both confront Partee and make him retract the statements.

Carried Coat Over Arm.

Jackson and the husband, according to the evidence secured by the detectives waited until Partee came in from his run, and then entered the roundhouse to ask him about the statements he is said to have made. Partee was standing in about the center of the roundhouse when Jackson entered. The latter had his coat thrown over his arm.

"Partee," said Jackson, "I——"

As Jackson spoke, according to the police, Pardee turned quickly, drew a revolver, and fired. The bullet struck Jackson in the neck and ranged upward, penetrating the brain. Jackson was hurried to Grady Hospital, where he died on the operating table fifteen minutes after the shot was fired. Partee surrendered to the police and is still locked up in police headquarters on a charge of murder. He probably will be given a preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Claims Self-Defense.

Partee declared, after his arrest, that he shot Jackson because he thought Jackson was going to shoot him. He admitted there had been bad blood between them for some time, but declined to give any cause for the trouble.

"Jackson has been gunning for me for some time," said Partee. "He has been making threats to kill me, and I have been told of these threats I have gone armed for the past week, and was determined to take no chances when he attacked me. When I alighted from my engine Monday afternoon and turned to walk into the roundhouse, I turned and saw Jackson walking toward me. He had his coat thrown over his arm, and I thought he had a revolver concealed in it. I called to him several times to halt, and when he refused to do so, I drew my gun and fired. I did it to save my own life."

No weapon was found on Jackson when his clothing was searched by the police.

Jackson and Partee boarded together at Mrs. J. R. Murden's, 896 DeKalb avenue, until about a month ago, when Jackson left. Partee formerly lived in Smyrna, while Partee came to Atlanta from Augusta.

PONY RIVALS IN SCRAMBLE FOR FREE VOTES

Final Offer About to End—Contest Man Again Warns Against Overconfidence.

Red Letter Ballots, the sort that yield 2,000 votes for $2, must be turned in by The Georgian and American pony contestants before Tuesday night. From indications close to the hour of closing, thousands upon thousands of votes will be earned in just this way by the boys and girls trying to win one of the beautiful Shetlands.

J. D. Tucker, Decatur, R. No. 1.

Thursday night the contest comes to a close. All the struggle and excitement will be over then, and nothing will remain but to count the votes and announce the winners.

Between now and Thursday night, though, the tale will be told. There is not a contestant who has his place "clinched"—not one who can not be beaten. Some of the contestants will dispute this. They believe themselves safe. They are not. Overconfidence is going to bring grief to many a youngster.

By way of diversion, however, there will be a parade of the 22 ponies Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, in which all the contestants are invited to participate. It will be a last glimpse of the ponies before they pass into the hands of new owners.

DENIES SHE PUT GLASS IN DRINK FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Blanche Sweat Declares the Relatives of Mate Incited Him to Make Charge.

Emphatic denial of her husband's charges that she tried to kill him by putting particles of broken glass in his coffee cup are made in the cross bill filed by Mrs. Blanch Sweat in answer to the petition for divorce filed recently by her husband, E. R. Sweat. The husband bases his plea for divorce on the assertion that his wife had tried to kill him by placing the glass in his cup.

In her cross bill Mrs. Sweat declares that Sweat himself had, through accident and while drunk, placed the broken glass in the cup. The incident occurred at supper time on July 15, 1913, Mrs. Sweat says. She asserts that Sweat had broken the covering of the sugar bowl of which he had sweetened his coffee, and that some of the glass had dropped into the cup. Mrs. Sweat declares that when she learned the glass was in the cup she had asked her husband to secure medical attention, which he refused to do.

Mrs. Sweat also charges her husband's parents with prejudicing him against her, and declares that they induced him to accuse her of placing the glass in the cup. At first, she says, her husband told her he had dropped the glass in the cup, but that later, after he had conferred with his parents, accused her of trying to kill him.

Mrs. Sweat asserts also that she has been assaulted and brutally treated by her husband's father, for which, she says, he is now under bond in the Superior Court. She also charges her husband with drunkenness and failure to support her.

T. N. Page Delays Arrival at Rome

Special Cable to The Georgian.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

West Virginia Gets Portia Who Couldn't Practice in Georgia

In a letter to friends she writes that she is doing splendidly, and berates Georgia for being so slow as to refuse to allow women to practice law.

"It is time Georgia was sitting up and taking notice in this regard," she writes. "Other States are progressing, so why can't the old Empire State? I notice the woman lawyer bill is again before the State of Georgia, and I hope the present Legislature will be fair enough to pass it."

GIRL IN CONTEST PROVES SELF LIVE WIRE

Keeps Her Eyes Open and Gets the Business—Opportunity Open for All Contestants.

There's at least one girl worker in The Georgian's Want Ad Contest who is going to be a real business woman some day. She is a live wire.

She walked up Oak street in West End, planning a call on a friend. As she passed Ashby street she saw a negro woman with a telescope grip in one hand and a bundle in the other, leaving a house. Miss Contestant walked in, rang the bell, and the mistress of the house came to the door.

"I want to find you a new cook to take the place of the one just quit," said Miss Contestant.

The housewife looked puzzled.

"A Georgian Want Ad will do it," explained Miss Contestant. "The cook will be here tomorrow."

And the next morning the housewife had a choice of four would-be servants, brought by one little ad which cost 20 cents.

A Want Ad in The Sunday American or The Georgian will find almost any want, as Atlanta readers have learned by experience. Contestants in the race for an automobile, a piano, a trip to California and other prizes are learning how to suggest want ads, and almost every person they approach finds a need he hadn't thought of before. And the Want Ad way is the quickest way on earth to get results.

Friends of the contestants may send their want ads direct to the office if they like, requesting that their votes be cast for any contestant they desire to name. Somebody is going to win a handsome prize, and your friend might as well be the winner.

Burglars Make Two Attempts to Break Into Home of Juror

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

When Officers Shumate and Cochran, who answered the call, arrived five minutes later, the burglars were gone.

ATLANTA NEW YORK PARIS

Hundreds of New Suits Have Arrived, That the Women of Atlanta May See and Know The Fashions for Fall.

The woman whose vacation will take her to the cool mountains or northern resorts will find in these new fall models the weight and style of suit that will serve her best. They are not too heavy, and yet they are, in line, in material, in trimming, the style that will be best for fall.

There are literally hundreds of new suits now lined up in the big crystal cases, bringing their message of new styles, new fabrics, new colors, new fashion-turns.

We emphasize the quantity merely to impress that the announcement of this display is based upon the fact that the display is indeed worthy of the attention of every woman who would off with the old and on with the new.

The suits are ready!

And they are novel and interesting.

Novel and interesting from many viewpoints.

There are draped cutaway coats; there are cutaway coats that button close up to the neck, and there are others that have the semblance of a blouse—all different from styles we have known.

And coats are to be longer this fall, they measure 38 to 42 inches.

Many of the skirts are slashed, many are draped in one way and another.

Materials show the new scheme of things. Soft finished fabrics are prominent, velour cloths self-striped, crepons, ratine striped fabrics, bayadere poplins, trimmings often take a contrasting shade, and again the use of embroidered velvet is pronounced on collars, on cuffs, on skirts.

What are the colors?

See with your own eyes! Naming the mahogany, cinnamon, prune, amethyst, Copenhagen and navy shades is but poor apology for their richness and beauty.

This is a worthy display of the new suit fashions, one that a woman may approach with the confidence that the suit she selects will be an authentic style.

AGED PAIR FLEE IN TERROR OF POORHOUSE

Illinois Couple Reach Atlanta After Wandering Aimlessly About Country for a Month.

Fleeing from an Illinois poorhouse, William Smith and his wife, both more than 80 years old, arrived in Atlanta Monday afternoon after a month of aimless drifting about the country, with no money and no idea of their ultimate destination.

They had eaten nothing for nearly twelve hours, their clothes were mere rags, and they were so feeble they had to be assisted to seats in the station by Train Caller Charles Griffin and the matron, Mrs. J. W. Payne.

A month ago they had a little home in Brown County, Ill., they said, a house and an acre or two on which they raised enough to keep them alive. One day the old man hurt his foot. Unable to work, they appealed to their neighbors for aid. The county officials took up the matter and decided to send them to the poorhouse.

The old man and his wife, once fairly well-to-do, were terror-stricken at the thought of living on the bounty of the county. When the poorhouse wagon came and took their furniture and their meager belongings they pleaded to be allowed to spend one more night in their own home. That night they gathered what little of their clothing was left, collected their few pennies and fled.

Their only idea of their destination is that they want to "go somewhere South." They have no relatives, but say they have a friend in the "South" who owns a plantation.

The old people were taken in charge by Mrs. Payne and Mr. Griffin and made as comfortable as possible for the night. They were still at the Terminal Station at an early hour Tuesday morning, and it has not yet been determined what will be done with them. They say they are willing to go anywhere except to a poorhouse.

John Garrity is likely to secure the Chief Deputy's position in the event Robert Sausey is elected.

Thousands Suffer For Food in Sofia

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BELGRADE, July 29.—Unless food can be rushed to Sofia thousands will die of starvation. The cutting of railroad communications due to the war between Bulgaria and the other Balkan states, has cut off all supplies. There is considerable suffering among all classes.

As a last resort, Bulgaria to-day appealed to Roumania to reopen the route between Varna and Sofia so that food can be rushed to the Bulgarian capital.

Ex-Georgia Rector Injured in Runaway

WYTHEVILLE, VA., July 29.—The Rev. Francis H. Craighill, rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, this city, formerly rector of charges at Macon and Darien, Ga., and also at Gainesville, Fla., was seriously hurt in a runaway accident to-day when a horse he was driving took fright at a drove of hogs in the roadway while he was coming down a mountain.

The Rev. Mr. Craighill was ordained by Bishop Nelson, of Atlanta, in 1898.

MISSING HEIRESS WAS ON A VISIT, SAYS FATHER

Orlando Awtrey, of Acworth, Ga., whose daughter, Miss Lynette Awtrey, vanished while en route from New York to Atlanta, has issued a statement in which he declares that his daughter's disappearance from home was the result of a change in her plans by which she decided to visit friends in the West.

He declares that in all probability she failed to notify him of her change of plans because, having been away for several months, she didn't realize that any additional delay in reaching home would cause uneasiness. His statement follows:

"My daughter left home in May on a tour of Europe with a party of Georgians, conducted by Miss Olive Faw, a teacher of Marietta.

"Before leaving home she purchased a ticket for an extensive tour of Europe and was provided with funds for a much longer tour, if she desired to take it.

"On completing the first tour that the party was making, she consulted me about the second one, and decided to return home. Leaving the party in London, she sailed from Southampton and reached New York City with ample funds, probably about $200. She reached there last week.

"On reaching New York she wired me of her safe arrival, and, as she had plenty of funds, she seems to have changed her plans for coming directly home and to have gone on a trip into the West. She had, however, sent a portion of her baggage home, and when it reached Acworth without her, the family naturally began to feel uneasy and started an investigation as to her whereabouts.

"Having been away for several months, she probably didn't realize that a few days of additional delay would cause any special uneasiness.

"On reaching her destination she wired me and is now en route home. She has made several former visits to the West and has friends there."

Miss Awtrey went to Ogden, Utah, from which place she sent a telegram last Sunday asking for aid. She probably will arrive within a week.

ACCUSED DOCTOR CALLED BANKRUPT

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed Tuesday against Dr. M. W. Lewis, of Carrollton, Ga. The petitioners named are S. H. Burns and C. E. Root, both of Carrollton. Dr. Lewis figured prominently in police records recently when arrested for registering at a hotel with a girl.

The girl's father took her home, warning Lewis that if he returned to Carrollton he would be in danger.

Lewis' creditors assert that he owes debts which exceed $1,000 and that he has not been seen in Carrollton for some time.

Fifty acres of land valued at $1,500, two horses, one automobile, two wagons, two buggies and miscellaneous household effects and office fixtures are named as assets.

The Sheriff of Carroll County threatens to sell the effects at the expiration of ten days.

CHAINS FOR WIFE DESERTERS URGED

Probation Officer Coogler is preparing a bill which he will present to the Legislature, providing for the punishment of the man who deserts his wife and children. The bill will be sent to a member of the Fulton County delegation with the request that it be introduced in the House.

The bill provides that a man refusing to support his wife or child shall first be brought before the probation officer, and if such office does not exist in the county, then to be taken before the Ordinary and placed on probation to support them. In the event of his failure to do this, after being placed on probation, he will be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a heavy fine or one year's sentence at hard labor on the chain-gang.

In the event of the payment of a fine by the defendant on a charge like this, the bill provides that the fine, either in whole or part, shall be turned over to the probation officer or Ordinary for the support of the deserted wife or child.

CHAINGANGS IN GEORGIA

You Will Write "Hope" Into Our Laws

"The way of a man with a maid."
---Proverbs 30-19.

"Judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor."
---Proverbs 31:9.

"For we are saved by hope."
---Romans 8:24.

It is not a doll in her arms.

The child-mother is nursing her fatherless baby.

What have we done to her?

You said in your laws:

"She can sell herself if she is ten years old."

But she must be twenty-one before she can trade a cow or hog.

You appropriated thousands of dollars to save cattle from the tick—

Thousands to make hog cholera serum—

And thousands to study hogs that are sick.

You gave nothing for these pitiable girls.

Georgia has no place for them.

For the want of it, seventy-five known to us—they are only children—they are being lost to-day.

Only God knows how many more!

Forty-four other States have reformatories for such as these.

The bill introduced by Jones of Coweta, and Mills of Butts, provides a reformatory for girls in Georgia.

The Prison Commission approves it.

The Penitentiary Committee has unanimously recommended that it pass.

The Committee on Appropriations referred it to a subcommittee of Judge W. H. Griffin, Chairman; S. E. Berry, C. F. Holberg, A. B. Greene and J. L. Lane.

They have recommended that thirty thousand dollars be appropriated and the bill be made the law.

Father, grant that this be done.

No man in Georgia values a cow or hog more than he does a girl.

We had not seen the bitter need.

You can and will provide for these.

A boy of seventeen stole a ride on a train.

You arrested him for this.

He did not have the money to pay his fine.

For this lack of funds, we clothed him in stripes and put him in our chaingang for eight months.

If our laws had provided for probation, our Judge could have released the boy on good behavior.

He could have given the boy a chance.

By writing Probation into our laws, you would not compel—

But you would give your Judge the right to save a boy or girl.

A bill introduced by Senator Tarver and Representatives Myrick and Gower making this the law is pending in the Legislature.

Judges and the Prison Commission—

And the Judiciary Committees of both Houses have approved it.

You will.

If the Indeterminate Sentence were the law in Georgia, a Judge in sentencing a man would say:

"Not less than ——— not more than ——— years."

Within the limits named, the man's stay in the penitentiary would depend upon himself.

Hope of liberty instead of fear of the lash would make him obey.

He would win release by showing himself fit to be free.

His incentive for not committing crime again would be this: caught a second time, he might be sentenced as an habitual criminal for the greatest number of years prescribed for that particular crime.

In Illinois, in the twelve years before the indeterminate sentence became the law, one judge sentenced either three or four different times the same one hundred criminals.

In the twelve years since it was made the law, only four have had to be re-sentenced by him.

Commitments to the penitentiary have been forty per cent less despite the great increase in population in that State in the ten years since the indeterminate sentence became part of its law.

Twenty-two States have adopted it.

The Prison Commission and the Penitentiary Committees of the House and Senate approve the bill of Senator Foster and Representative Loyd that will make it the law of Georgia.

You, like them, would rather save than destroy the fallen.

You will help make this the aim of Georgia.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return.

It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

If you are blessed with a good memory, don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.
375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,
Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him. "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runabout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and leggins.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidden among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. At the same instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can, when you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that Mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habits and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keeping no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases, it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

"Gordon Kelly batting in place of Leonard."

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" yells the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon foule the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor.'

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will require it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it, the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued.

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying. I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Why don't you come on up to Hot Springs Arkansas, and enjoy a game of golf in the cool fresh breezes of these beautiful mountain heights?

Did you think Hot Springs was merely a famous health resort?

Not at all! Thousands come here for the summer pleasures alone. The golf grounds and tennis courts are unsurpassed, the hill drives and paths invite you to ride, drive and ramble along; and for those who just must fish, wherever they go, the picturesque Ouchita River is nearby.

You would be surprised what little is asked for good board and how low the bath prices are fixed by the U. S. Government.

The Rock Island is the direct line to Hot Springs from Memphis. Four modernly equipped trains daily, leaving Memphis at 7:00 a. m., 9:45 a. m., 11:00 a. m. and 12:01 midnight. Trains from the southeast make direct connection in Memphis with these Rock Island trains to Hot Springs, Ark.

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

The young man reached for a fan. "Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again.

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

The young man took a piece of ice out of a lemonade glass and pressed it to his brow.

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt so happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

And now she smiled, a tender, happy smile and, trembling with delight, her lips whispered: "Yes, I understand you."

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

WOMAN'S ILLS DISAPPEARED

Like Magic After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

NORTH BANGOR, N. Y.—"As I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with great benefit I feel it my duty to write and tell you about it. I was ailing from female weakness and had headache and backache nearly all the time. I was later every month than I should have been and so sick that I had to go to bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and these troubles have disappeared like magic. I have recommended the Compound to many women who have used it successfully."—Mrs. James J. Stacy, R. F. D. No. 3, North Bangor, N. Y.

Another Made Well

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done wonders for me. For years I suffered terribly with hemorrhages and had pains so intense that sometimes I would faint away. I had female weakness so bad that I had to doctor all the time and never found relief until I took your remedies to please my husband. I recommend your wonderful medicine to all sufferers as I think it is a blessing for all women."—Mrs. L. E. Wyckoff, 112 S. Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

There need be no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to remedy woman's diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical. Why don't you try it?

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says, "they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

Salesman—Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age!

Passer-by (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Salesman—A magnetized keyhole plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary steel key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole at night is to take out your key and hang on to it.

(Three men were injured in the crowd that rushed to buy.)

Do You Know That—

Gout is rarely known among the working classes of Ireland. Their immunity from this complaint is thought to be due to the fact that their food consists largely of potatoes.

There were 20,000 people in England and Wales without a birthday this year owing to the fact that February contained only twenty-eight days.

Spain has more sunshine than any other country in Europe. The yearly average is 3,000 hours. In England its is 1,400.

Germany is the greatest beer-producing country in the world. Of 51,000 breweries in the world, 25,000 are in Germany.

A lock of hair from the head of George Washington was bought at an auction sale in New York for $480.

On an average no fewer than two hundred people are killed by lightning every year.

More matches are used in the United Kingdom than in any other country in the world.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me, how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physican said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 99-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles on hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-Away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

LEACH CROSS AND BALDWIN MIX TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A small army of riding celebrities will be on hand at Vernon arena to-night to see Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin scheduled twenty-round bout. The affair appears to be one that the boxers themselves have long been wanting to see, as it is known that considerable bad blood exists between Leach and Matty.

Seat reservations have been made by Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast, Joe Rivers, Bud Anderson, Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard, "Bull" Young and Harry Trendall, the latter having come all the way from St. Louis to challenge the winner of to-night's go.

Cross has faced Matty twice, and each time came away with second money and a sore jaw. Matty holds a twenty-round decision over Willie Ritchie, the present champion. But this victory was earned before Ritchie was considered to be of championship caliber.

Here Is a Player With $4,000,000

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

Thirty-Minute Race On To-night

Glenn Says He'll Beat Luther

FOR 30 minutes to-night at the Motordrome five two-men teams will whirl around the wooden saucer at an 85-mile-an-hour clip. Barring accidents, this will be by far the most exciting event that has ever been staged here.

All ten of the riders spent the day tuning up their motors and each predicts a victory for their team. They also practiced relieving their partners. The man riding has to come off the track onto the flat space in front of the paddock and touch his partner on the shoulder before the latter can take up the sprinting.

The early arrivals to-night will grab the seats in front of the paddock as this will enable them to witness the "relieving."

Here is how the teams are made up: Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

* * *

BUT the 30-minute race is not the only event carded that is attracting attention. The Motordrome Sweepstakes ought to be a corker. There will be two qualifying heats. In the first the riders will be Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel and Lewis. In the second Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil and Glenn will start.

The final heat is almost sure to bring together Richards and McNeil.

McNeil and Richards are bitter enemies once they get hooked up in a race. Richards holds a couple of decisions over the little Scotchman, but Jock's machine is O. K. now and he is confident that to-night he will lead Tex to the wire.

Harry Glenn and Luther are going to battle in a two-mile match race, two best heats out of three. Glenn beat Schwartz the other night, and says he will surely down Luther. But the latter's motor is going immense these days and he predicts the local boy will have to be satisfied with second place.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the program for to-night:

First Event.
First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (1 mile to qualify and 2-mile final). Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.
First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance, 2 miles.

Third Event.
Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.
Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.
Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.
Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.
Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over 20 consecutive minutes.)

MARTY O'TOOLE TO DON A UNIFORM ON FRIDAY

PITTSBURG July 29.—Marty O'Toole, pitcher of the Pittsburg National league team, who recently had to undergo an operation for appendicitis, is able to be out, although not yet fully recovered. He said to-day that in all probability he would don a uniform on Friday and begin a gradual course of exercise.

PIRATES PAY $3,000 FOR HARD-HITTING FIELDER

SPOKANE, WASH., July 29.—Jules Papa, a hard-hitting right-fielder on the Spokane, Northwestern League, baseball team, has been sold to the Pittsburg Nationals for $3,000. This is Pappa's first year in professional company. He will finish the season here.

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League, and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL., July 29.—Bloomington (Three-I) owners have refused Sacramento's offer of $1,000 for Shortstop Bruce Hartford.

AMOS RUSIE IN HOSPITAL; INJURED BY IRON BAR

SEATTLE, WASH., July 29.—Amos Rusie, once famous pitcher of the New York Giants, is in a local hospital today suffering from an injury to his arm. Rusie is now a plumber. A heavy iron bar fell and struck him on the arm while at work here yesterday.

LEAGUE HEAD TO DECIDE PROTESTED BALL GAMES

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 29.—To straighten out a tangle over protested games which Waterloo won and Keokuk and Burlington protested, alleging the player limit had been violated, President Justice, of the Central Association, has gone to Waterloo.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

DROPSY TREATED. Quick relief, swelling, short breath soon removed, often entire relief in 15 to 25 days. Trial treatment sent FREE. Write Dr. H. H. Greens Sons, Box O, Atlanta, Ga.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time than an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest sift down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARSATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Haban, the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

CLARKE WILL TRY TO STOP GULLS TODAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—The Gulls seemed to have such a liking for right-hand dealing that Manager Smith decided last night to flip from the other side of the deck, so he turned up George Clarke, who will work this afternoon. Dunn will catch the game out, provided he can control his conversation.

The jinx still pursues us. Whitey Alperman's operation for appendicitis yesterday was said to have been just in time, and, at that, Whitey had about as close a call as possible. We hear he is resting well to-day, and that the chances are in his favor. But, of course, he won't be able to play ball any more this season.

The Crackers held a little meeting yesterday and Billy Smith appointed Wally Smith to be field captain in Whitey's place. Wally also will play second base, and Frank Manush will go to third. Bill Bailey's injury leaves an outfield job vacant, and Smith is going to try out a recruit from Selma in the Cotton States League; a big chap named Holz, who came along with Pitcher Love.

Holz pegs right handed and hits from the port side of the platter. He is said to be a good batter and a fast fielder, and we are hoping he will help to brace our crippled lineup.

There isn't much to say about the game yesterday. The Gulls got to Thompson for a big lead, and then we got to Pug Cavet and made it all square, only to lose out, 6 to 5, in the ninth inning. We did manage to deliver a kick or two, which is encouraging. Maybe we will win a ball game by one run some day, the way we have been losing them all lately.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Leach Cross is to have his final test for a bout with Willie Ritchie when he takes on Matty Baldwin in a twenty-round battle at Los Angeles to-night. Promoter Tom McCarey has promised the winner a match with the champion and Tom's word is usually as good as gold.

* * *

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 3.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Co'o., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 23. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to bet Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 23. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

* * *

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Crackers Slip Into Fourth Place

Don't Count G. Molesworth Out Yet

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE gleam penetrates the Stygian gloom of the situation.

The Crackers finally delivered a kick.

It may have been a dying kick. But a kick's a kick, for a' that.

With a shot-to-pieces line-up, with Alperman in the hospital minus an appendix, Bill Bailey carrying a couple of ribs in a sling, Wally Smith at second base, Manush at third and Chapman playing right field without his mitt, the disheveled Smithies collected themselves yesterday afternoon and landed a solid punch on the revered Pug Cavet.

The trouble was that the Gulls kicked Thompson first—and last.

And now the Town Boys are crouching on the rim of Lower Four, wondering how soon the porter will turn out the lights.

* * *

LITERARY TIP FROM WHITEY.

Believe me, boys, this is no nonsense:
When your tummy again and again kicks,
Don't fool with the Table of Contents—
Look it up in the blamed old Appendix!

* * *

Whitey's wise old noodle and timely bat are bound to be sadly missed in the final drive. Not that Wally Smith isn't a good, heady player and a man who, as field captain, will keep his mates well on their toes. Wally is all of that.

But the combination, of necessity, will be unsettled for a bit. Bill Bailey also is out of the game and a Cotton States rookie, Holz, will appear in right field this afternoon. Manush will play third and Wally Smith second.

On the other hand, the shakeup may shift the breaks, which certainly haven't been coming our way lately.

Anyway, we're in for it. And instead of blubbering over the latest handicap for the Crackers, let's just cheer up over the report that good old Whitey, in a tough sprint against the Old Boy with the Sickle, is pulling ahead to-day

* * *

TURNING the burglar-finder on the little club that has supplanted the Town Boys at the dizzy elevation of third place, we discern without much difficulty that odd equine anomaly, the Dark Horse.

Gladys Molesworth is up, and how d. h. can run at all is by us. Gladys' managerial worries seem to sit lightly on his embonpoint.

The real point, however, is that the Barons have bludgeoned their way upward from seventh place since June 8. That achievement was largely at the expense of Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans and Memphis. The latter pair are thrown in merely as lagniappe, because any club that can trim the Billikens and the Gulls this year would find a pleasant relaxation playing the rest of the bunch.

* * *

THE Baronial collection is one that might be expected to speed up toward the shank of the season. No fewer than eleven of Molesworth's hands have worn the spangles of the big show at one time or another. Of these, Foxen, Mayer, Moley, McDonald and Kniseley moved for very respectable periods in select company.

And with the advent of the real hotness in weather circles, and the time of year when the old strain begins to turn the edge of the younger generation's dash and daring, the old boys are rounding to.

We decline to count Gladys out yet.

* * *

SWITCHING to politics, it seems Colonel Robert Lee Hedges—sometimes known as the Sick Man of Baseball because he is unfortunate enough to be responsible for the St. Louis Browns—it seems Colonel Hedges is hedging.

The report persists that the Colonel is going to finance the Montgomery club of the Southern League. He is even accused of intending to buy the Billikens' franchise outright.

That is carrying things rather far. But the Billies need help, and Colonel Hedges can afford it, in spite of the Browns.

On the whole, intimate diplomatic relations between Montgomery and the Browns mightn't be a bad idea at all.

If the Browns continue to evince a disposition to travel farther south than eighth place in the American League, Colonel Hedges might swap them for the Billikens.

* * *

NOW some statistician is trying to show that because New York bugs persist in packing the Polo Grounds to see the Giants clean up on the pop-eyed Cardinals, St. Louis is enabled by the cut in the "gate" to stick in the league with a club that is totally unable to give any pangs of joy to the wretched fans on the home lot.

It is said the Cardinals carried away $12,500 as their share of a recent series at the Polo Grounds.

McGraw should worry.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

* * *

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

* * *

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

* * *

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

* * *

The Pirates, outside of Carey, who cornered half of the hits, could do nothing with Seaton, and the Phillies scored another easy victory.

* * *

Earl Moore, released by the Phillies to St. Louis, and who refused to report to the Cardinals, is now the property of the Chicago Cubs, according to an announcement of Charles W. Murphy.

* * *

* * *

William Lathrop, the Notre Dame University pitcher, will be seen in the uniform of the White Sox, having been signed up by Comiskey.

* * *

Rain prevented the Yankee-Naps, Tigers-Athletic and White Sox-Red Sox games yesterday.

ALPERMAN REPORTED ON ROAD TO RECOVERY

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—A report from the Inge Bondurant Sanitarium to-day, where Captain Alperman, of the Atlanta Club, lies ill from an operation for appendicitis, was to the effect that he spent a restful night and was on the road to recovery. The request of Manager Smith for his technical suspension will be granted by the League in order to let Holtz get in he game. Pitcher Love worked out yesterday and looked like a real pitcher.

PRESSMEN AFTER GAME.

The Pressmen's baseball team would like to arrange a series of games with the Exposition team to be played at Ponce DeLeon or on the Fort McPherson diamond. The two teams played last Saturday with Exposition winning, 5 to 4. The Pressmen are now out after revenge, and will give their rivals a neat side bet.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29. Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and, as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $300 a month.

WHY NOT?

They are sending auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell.
They inject them in the hoose gow for a long and dreary spell.
Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would, I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark.
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

We have given up all hope that Ad Wolgast will come back. Jones has quit him, and Tom never gave up a meal ticket until the meals were all punched.

Ty Cobb is dissatisfied again, leading one to suspect that he aims to be the Bob LaFollette of baseball.

If Tyrus were an up-to-date young man he would augment his meager salary by busting into the chautauqua circuit.

CHAUTALKING.

"I am starving," said the athlete,
"On my miserable pay."
So he beat it from the ball yard
And chautalked the livelong day.

It is said that the dead do not return, and yet Bombardier Wells is mached with Gunner Moir.

We note that Jess Willard is going to fight in Los Angeles. That is, he will enter the ring in Los Angeles. Even his bitterest enemies never would accuse him of fighting.

The report that Pal Brown is going to Australia leads us to hope that he is a good swimmer.

It is rumored that since Ad Wolgast took up the job of managing himself he has had the worst manager in pugilism.

One can hardly blame those English tennis experts if they chuckle when they see their American brethren kicking in with a flock of alibis.

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games

Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant, and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fail to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outlucked us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

TIGERS BUY PITCHER.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 29.—Russell Betsill, of Enoree, S. C., a member of the pitching staff of the Asheville club, of the North Carolina League, was sold to-day to the Detroit club, of the American League. The price paid for the player has not been given out.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Atlanta Man Plans $200,000 Building

Award to Thornton Mayre—Contractors Seek $1,000,000 Job. $40,000 Cash for Lot.

Local contractors and architects continue to be successful bidders on jobs outside of Atlanta. Recently announcement was made of a considerable architectural job in Spartanburg, S. C., landed by A. Ten Eyck Brown, and now comes the announcement that a fellow architect, P. Thornton Marye, is to draw plans for the new $200,000 courthouse of Wake County, North Carolina. Frank P. Simpson, of North Carolina, is associate architect.

Contractors have been invited to bid on the new twenty-one-story building of the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Memphis, and inasmuch as several are in the competition, the chances of an award to a local concern are considered good. One of the largest contracting firms in the country is bidding on this job through its Atlanta office, and there are others. The cost will be $1,000,000, or more.

Refuses $40,000 Cash.

That many people are in the real estate market with cash to pay for good property is borne out in an offer on West Peachtree street which has just been declined. E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, carried on offer of $40,000 cash to Mrs. J. A. Finley for her home at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and Simpson streets, but the offer was refused. This was at the rate of $800 a foot, since the Finley lot fronts 50 feet.

Subdivision Sales.

W. H. Allen, of the Edwin P. Ansley Agency, and H. N. Van Devander have sold to George L. Morris six residence lots in their City View Park, corner of Ashby street and Mayson and Turners Ferry road, for a total of $3,000, or $500 a lot. The lots are mostly 40 feet wide by 112 to 165 feet deep. They have been on the market only a week and Mr. Allen expects to close up sales for eight more in a few days.

Record of Deeds.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale Saturday of No. 532 Ponce DeLeon avenue from R. C. Taylor to Dr. William Asher, for $9,500. The lot is 55 by 231 feet and is 234 feet west of Bonaventure street.

Durant Place Dwelling.

Edward M. Durant will soon start another house on Durant Place, just a few rods north of Ponce DeLeon avenue. Permit for a $2,500 structure of two stories has been sought at the office of Building Inspector Ed R. Hayes. Durant Place contains some of the most attractive medium-priced houses in the city. It is a neighborhood very much like West Peachtree Park, which A. B. Buehl has developed with attractive houses.

Peachtree Store Leased.

The Goodyear Raincoat Company has leased for a short term the store at No. 35 Peachtree, which was formerly a part of the Nunnally establishment at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue. The price is not given. The Nunnally Company obtained control of this property through the Clarke estate, owners.

County Board Meeting.

When Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, returns Friday from his vacation, several things of interest will be brought before the board. The regular monthly meeting will be held on August 6, at which time much accumulated business will be taken up.

Off for New York.

J. H. Ewing and Shorter Rankin, of the Smith and Ewing Real Estate Agency, will leave for New York Friday to make loan connections for their firm and to bring home some money for substantial improvements in Atlanta. Mr. Rankin is interested in the loans and Mr. Ewing in the other item, a more definite announcement of which is expected soon.

To Remodel Plaza Hotel.

Work is expected to start in a few days on the renovation of the old Plaza Hotel, at the southern junction of the Peachtrees, plans for the same having been completed some time ago for Colonel Willis E. Ragan, the owner of this valuable triangle. The architect is A. F. N. Everett, who has designed a store for the point of the triangle at the south. A drug concern will probably locate in the latter space and the main building is expected to be leased as a hotel or large boarding house.

Copper Mines Open; Guarded by Troops

CALUMET, MICH., July 29.—Twenty-one of the 30 copper mines in the Calumet district were in operation today and plans were being made to resume work in the others to-night.

The 18,000 striking miners made no demonstrations to-day at any of the mines. State troops on duty at the shafts kept the strikers from congregating about the mines.

Connecticut Bars Runaway Weddings

NEW HAVEN, CONN., July 29.—No more hair trigger marriage licenses will be issued in this State after August 1.

Five days' notice will be required before a marriage license will be issued, according to the Secretary of State, who says that for several years runaway couples have been swarming into Connecticut.

HARD FIGHT NEAR OVER MILITIA BILL

Opponents Draw Measures to Offset Plan to Restrict Calling Out of Troops.

A contest over the question of calling out the State militia in case of riot probably will be precipitated in the General Assembly following the introduction of Senator McGregor's bill providing for the making of affidavits by the civil authorities before the Governor orders out troops.

According to information Tuesday two bills are being prepared to be put before the House seeking to revive the old law, repealed last year, giving to a judge, a Mayor, a Sheriff or other civil authority, the power to call out a company of militia in cas- of riot.

Under the present law the militia can be called out only by the Governor, who has the right to investigate before taking action.

Senator McGregor's bill has the support of the Governor and the military authorities, including Adjutant General Van Holt Nash. Every effort will be made to have it passed in the Senate before the allegeda reactionary House bills are acted on.

Gallinger Resents Tillman's Attack On Suffragettes

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, rose to the defense of the high-minded Southern women who favor equal suffrage to-day when he protested against the appearance in The Congressional Record this morning of an article by the late Albert Taylor Bledsoe.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, yesterday secured the consent of the Senate to have the article printed in The Record. To-day when a dozen Senators had protested indignantly against the article word was sent to Senator Tillman and he hurried to the chamber and asked to have it withdrawn.

The article was written several years ago. It warned the women of the South not to follow the pace set by the strong-minded women of the North, who "would fain enter the lists with pothouse politicians and become the rivals of negroes."

Heat Wave Sneaks Back; Showers to Bring Some Relief

People who believe in mental suggestion are trying to keep cool by looking at the scenes in the Frozen North, which are being shown at a local theater this week, while nonbelievers are wearing just as few clothes as possible. The customary breezes were not on duty Tuesday and the heat was unusually oppressive downtown.

Monday night was cool enough for comfort, with the mercury at 72 at daybreak. As the hands of the clock climbed, the mercury climbed, too, and at 1 o'clock it stood at 90.

Relief is promised by thundershowers Tuesday night and Wednesday.

Essig Co. to Furnish Uniforms to Police

For the third consecutive time, Essig Bros. Co. has been awarded the contract to furnish uniforms for the Atlanta police.

A departure was made in the summer uniforms, a light weight serge being substituted for the heavy doeskin formerly used. This uniform has given great satisfaction, it being not only a great deal lighter, but has worn so well that very few officers will be forced to purchase new ones next summer.

The material selected for winter is a 28-ounce doeskin, every garment made to measure.

Asks Funds to Study Tariff Bill's Effect

WASHINGTON, July 29.—It was ported to-day that Secretary of Commerce Redfield will appear before the House Appropriations Committee to ask for $100,000 to investigate the effect of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill upon business.

While he has not yet made his plans public, it is known that he desires the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to undertake the inquiry should the appropriations be allowed.

Family Feud in Crisp Results in Stabbing

CORDELE, July 29.—Because it is alleged he made remarks reflecting on Mrs. John Warren, Ambrose Powell, a Crisp County farmer, was stabbed several times in the back by his brother-in-law, Harry Blanchard, a brother of Mrs. Warren. Powell says he was waylaid by Blanchard and Warren.

It is said that a family feud has existed for years. Powell is at a local hospital in a serious condition. Warrants have been obtained for Warren and Blanchard, but no arrests have been made.

GAG FOR POLICE IS PROVIDED IN HOUSE BILL

Measure Bars Them From Making Public Evidence Against Criminals Except Under Oath.

An echo of the charges made during the early stages of the Phagan case, that the investigation of the mystery was hampered by too much publicity given the evidence and the movements of the detectives, is heard in a bill introduced in the House Tuesday morning by Representative D. P. Methvin, of Clayton County.

Mr. Methvin's bill prohibits detectives, sheriffs and all other officers from giving out evidence obtained against criminals or supposed criminals, except under oath. The bill permits the giving of such evidence to the prosecuting attorney or the leading counsel for the defense, but expressly prohibits detectives and other officers from giving any evidence to the general public.

The bill provides a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment, for violation of the law.

The introduction of the bill aroused considerable discussion in the lobbies of the House. The general impression appears to be that the bill will meet with opposition, and it is not considered likely to pass. Friends of the measure declare it is designed to remedy such conditions as arose during the Phagan case, when evidence obtained by the detectives was often published before it was reported to their superiors.

Other important bills introduced in the House Tuesday morning follow:

By Smith, of Fulton—Relative to the custody and control of minor children, and to provide under what circumstances they shall be awarded to the mother, and under what circumstances to the father.

By Slaten, of Bryan—To provide for the employment of a limited number of convicts upon trunk line public roads.

By Slater, of Bryan, and Methvin, of Dodge—A bill to enjoin and restrain the keepers of lewd houses, and to declare such houses a nuisance.

By Greene, of Houston—To provide for the establishing of a school of agriculture.

By Crawley and Cooper—To amend Section 123, Vol 1, of the Code, to provide early primary elections, not later than June 15.

By Clarke and Pierce—To repeal Sections 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433 and 424 of the Code of 1910, relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

By Toole, of Tattnall—A bill to require by grand juries semi-annual inspection of private sanitariums, orphan asylums, convents, Houses of the Good Shepherd, convent schools, monasteries, etc.

State Medical Board Bill Passes Senate

The Longino-Richardson medical practice bill, providing for the establishment of a State board of medical examiners to supervise and regulate the practice of medicine throughout the State so as to eliminate quacks and fakers, was passed in the Senate Tuesday morning by the vote of 36 to 4. The bill as adopted includes the amendment of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-second, providing for trial by jury and right of appeal to the Supreme Court by physicians whose licenses are revoked by the State board.

The bill is revolutionary in its scope for it not only gives to the State board, consisting of eight members appointed by the Governor, the right to grant and revoke the licenses of practitioners of medicine, but the right also to define the standing of medical colleges of the State as specified by the provisions of the bill itself.

Senate Head Urges Speed on Budget Bill

President Anderson in the Senate Tuesday called for the reading of the house general appropriations bill, which reached the Senate for the first time Tuesday. He urged the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill was referred, to consider the matter with all possible speed.

Among the new bills introduced Tuesday morning was the bill of Senator DuBose, providing for the regulation of the business of fire, marine and inland insurance by companies chartered by other States or foreign Governments.

A bill of President Anderson, providing for the decreasing of the minimum and the increase of the maximum limits of the number of directors of navigation companies, also was introduced.

Sunday Schools of DeKalb County Meet

The DeKalb County Sunday School convention and the Mills District Association convened jointly at Clifton Church in DeKalb County Tuesday. The convention will last two days. The usual contest singing will take place Wednesday afternoon.

Arrangements have been made to carry all who desire to attend from the junction of the East Lake and South Decatur car lines for 10 cents each way per person. Conveyances will leave the junction at from 7:45 to 8:15 and from 9:45 to 10 o'clock in the morning, returning will leave the grounds at a time to suit the crowd. Dinner will be for sale on the grounds for those who do not desire to bring baskets.

Fraser Boys' School To Begin New Career

The Donald Fraser School for Boys, in Decatur, which suspended last year, will reopen in September with Professor Paul J. King, formerly of the University School at Stone Mountain, as its official head. Professor King will have an efficient faculty associated with him and a new life is predicted for the famous school.

Donald Fraser will take a leading part in athletics during the coming year, for Mr. King has stated that he is in favor of all varieties of sport. He is now negotiating with one of the best athletic directors in Southern "prep" circles. The limit of the school will be about 60 boys for the first year.

WILSON SCORED IN WHITE SLAVE ROW

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In a speech bristling with criticism of the actions of the administration in the Caminetti-Diggs white slave cases, Representative Julius Kahn, a California Republican, to-day in the House called on the Attorney General for information regarding the postponed trial of these cases.

"The administration has not come out of this controversy with honor and credit," said Kahn. He declared there was abundant evidence of "pull" in both the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

Kahn concluded his speech saying: "Instead of having been blamed and condemned, McNab should have been commended by the President. The President has done just what McNab wanted done, but how is it to be done? By special counsel, who will be paid large fees for doing the very thing that the United States Attorney would have performed as a matter of duty.

"The Department of Justice above all others must be above suspicion. It has long been believed by the masses that there is one kind of law for the rich and the politically powerful in this country and another kind of law for the poor and weak. The action of the Department of Justice in the Caminetti-Diggs cases and the Western Fuel cases would seem to stamp this charge as true."

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Joe Welch at Forsyth.

Joe Welch, the Hebrew comedian, who has made Atlanta laugh many a time, is doing it again this week. His turn is the headliner of the new bill of vaudeville at the Forsyth. He springs many of his old jokes and many new ones, and sings a few new parodies.

Elsa Ward, a pretty young woman, who sings splendidly, takes second honors. Her gown attracts more attention from a certain part of the audience than does her singing, but she has an excellent voice, nevertheless. Other acts are Karl Cress, a painter of oils and watercolors; Robert L. Dailey and company in a sketch; Cunningham and Marion, acrobats; the Leffel Trio, gymnasts; a tiresome lot of nonsense by a company of three persons and the Patheplay.

Alaska Pictures Winners.

Educational pictures of the Alaska-Siberia hunt of the Carnegie museum tour, which, starting from Seattle, covered hitherto unexplored lands in the frozen North, are being shown for the first time in Atlanta at the Grand this week. The pictures are extremely interesting and held the breathless attention of a large audience.

The hunt was made in the interest of science, and to obtain specimens and pictures of wild animal life for the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburg. Scenes that have been visited by few white men are shown and the vast snow fields and mountains of ice shown on the screen are specially suited for the summer season.

65 Sing Sing Rioters Transferred in Irons

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

BATTLE FOR TAX REFORM BEGUN IN HOUSE

Lipscombe Measure Is Taken Up in Sections as the Special Order of Business.

The first active steps toward tax reform in Georgia were taken by the House Tuesday morning, when the consideration of the Lipscombe bill, which creates a State and County Boards of Tax Equalizers was begun. The bill, together with amendments offered by the Ways and Means Committee and by members from the floor of the House, was made a special order of the day, and was taken up by sections.

The work of perfecting the bill probably will not be completed for several days. Though there were several lively skirmishes to-day, in one of which Speaker Burwell saved a section of the bill, as amended by the committee, by voting aye, opponents of the measure will reserve their heavy fire until the bill comes up for passage. This is not expected until the latter part of the week.

Three Members on Board.

The Lipscombe bill, as amended by the Ways and Means Committee, provides that the State board shall consist of three members appointed by the Governor for two, four and six-year terms. An amendment offered by Moon, of Troup, that the Governor appoint one members from North Georgia, one from South Georgia and one from Central Georgia, was adopted. The county board shall consist of three members appointed by the judge of the Superior Court of the county, upon recommendation of the Board of County Commissioners.

The only fight of any consequence that developed during the consideration of the bill came when section 12, providing for a secretary for the board, was read. The Ways and Means Committee amended the original bill, which provided for a secretary at $2,000 a year by striking the entire section and substituting a provision that the Comptroller General should be secretary of the board at no salary at all. Half a dozen amendments were offered by members from the floor.

Secretary Given $500 Salary.

After much discussion, amendments offered by Representatives Fullbright, Miller and Wimberly were adopted. Mr. Fullbright's amendment provided for the employment of secretary at a salary of $500 a year; Mr. Wimberly's and Mrs. Miller's amendment made the Comptroller General an ex-officio member of the board, to act in an advisory capacity without a vote.

Fifteen sections of the bill were adopted Tuesday. The remaining seven will be considered Wednesday, after which the bill will be placed upon its passage.

Trains Collide in Fog; Brakeman Dead

VALDOSTA, July 29.—In a head-on collision between freight trains on the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, 21 miles north of here, to-day Henry Castello, a negro brakeman, was instantly killed. The other members of the crews jumped and none was seriously hurt, except Engineer Mann, who had an ankle broken.

The collision took place during a fog and, it is said, was caused by the operator at Adel misunderstanding orders and failing to hold the south-bound train. The two locomotives and thirteen loaded cars were demolished.

Army Paymaster Liable for $86,510

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Captain R. C. Williams, U. S. A. paymaster at Olongapo, P. I., personally is liable to the Government for $86,510.84 until he presents receipts and evidences that he paid out this amount.

Captain Williams says he paid the money to contractors, soldiers and others to whom payment was due from the Government and that the receipts were lost in the wreck of the collier Brutus at sea.

England May Call On Boers in Mine Strife

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

JOHANNESBURG, July 29.—Business is at a complete standstill here. The miners, angry over the refusal of the Government to meet their demands are in an ugly mood. Threats to burn the mining property have been made.

The men also resent the report that the Government intends to bring commands of armed Boers to quell any possible rioting.

Eugenic Bride of A Month Deserts

BOSTON, July 29.—"Eugenic marriage may be all right as a health proposition, but it isn't a guarantee of future happiness," declared Edwin Perron, of Lynn, the first eugenic husband in Massachusetts.

His wife, he says, ran away a month after the wedding.

Highwaymen Slug Guest of Waldorf

NEW YORK, July 29.—Evidently the victim of a highwayman's assault, Frederick B. Wells, millionaire merchant of Minneapolis, was found to-day lying on the sidewalk at a corner of the lower West Side. He was hatless and coatless.

Wells was hurried to a hospital. He had been stopping at the Waldorf Astoria.

JULY AND AUGUST TAKE AEROPLANE

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 3 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

During the afternoon session part of the early advance was wiped out through active selling, believed to be profit-taking by early buyers. Old crop positions, however, held firm. Losses were attributed mainly to new crops. At the close the market was steady with prices 1 to 2 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Apart from the absence of rain in the southern half of Texas, the map shows favorable conditions. The most favorable developments were the let-up in the heavy rainfall in the Central and Eastern States, where a spell of comparatively dry weather is desired in order to produce the best results. There were only a few light showers overnight in Oklahoma and the Atlantics, generally fair weather is shown in Texas and Oklahoma. Northwest Texas, Amarillo, had .72 inch of rain.

Indications are for generally fair weather in the West, except possibly some cloudiness over Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma. Part cloudy in the Central and Eastern States, with a few scattered showers.

Houston, Texas, to-day officially recorded the receipt of six new bales of cotton, making receipts to date 31 new, against 13 last year. This supports the contention that, owing to the uniformity of crop development, the movement of new cotton will increase much more rapidly this year when once started.

Our markets showed indecision, opinions varying as to whether to act on the bullish weather conditions in the West, or to expect a bearish effect from the increase in the new movement reflected by the Houston receipts. First trades were at an advance of 3 to 5 points, which was soon lost.

COTTON GOSSIP

The market has ruled very steady all day on buying from the some sources as yesterday. Brokers representing spot interests have been principal buyers. Selling has come from the uptown crowd and Wall street apparently. The market is narrow, with transactions small. Until further weather developments prevail a narrow market is looked for with an upward tendency.—Anderson.

Pell interests were credited with buying considerable cotton yesterday on the decline, covering shorts and probably going long on the belief that a large portion of Texas is in a bad way. Riordan purchases supposedly for the above firm were in the neighborhood of 35,000 bales. Liverpool was a large seller.

* * *

Nell Bros., of London, in their latest circular maintain their estimate of 14,750,000 bales as the actual consumption of American cotton for the present season. This estimate was made public the latter part of October, 1912.

* * *

The market is extremely sensitive to all reports and did a lot of nervous flopping around.

* * *

The change is the attitude of the Exchange Place house yesterday did not seem to attract outside buying of consequence, probably because crop conditions as a whole are considered excellent.

* * *

An increased trade demand for contracts is reported on a scale down.

* * *

Further rains in the Western section would undoubtedly bring out heavy sales from Wall Street and the South. It seems purely a weather market now and will be influenced accordingly.

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crops in Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas:

"Tennessee—Prospects for cotton are better than for many years. The plant is strong and well fruited, with a good stand and free from insects. Fields are clean and well cultivated. A few localities are needing rain, but as a rule precipitation has been ample. Percentage condition is considerably higher than a month ago, when it was 82.7. The season is about normal, though some correspondents report it earlier than usual.

"Louisiana—Owing to drouth and the almost universal presence of the boll weevil, percentage condition appears to have lost a few points from last month, when it was 80.6, but the prospects are better than a year ago, when condition was 74.7. Otherwise, prospects for a large crop are excellent and the outturn depends largely upon the success of the fight against the boll weevil. The plant is strong and healthy, with a fair stand and good fruitage.

"Arkansas—Cotton has maintained its rather high percentage condition of a month ago, when it was 85.4 and 77.7 a year ago. The plant is of good size, with fair stands and fruiting rather heavily. Cultivation and condition of the fields are unusually fine and a number of correspondents look for the biggest crop in years. The only drawback has been the hot dry weather, which has checked growth and fruiting. Damage from boll weevil is very slight and the crop is very free from other insect pests."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market had digested reports showing continued dry weather in Central Texas, which produces the bulk of the crop of the Lone Star State. It also had to discount the market effect of probable higher temperatures in that section. Hence the steady tone and higher range in values. The talent is fully aware of the fact that rain relief did not reach North and West Texas in time to figure in the data gathered on July 25 for the government crop condition report, which will be promulgated on August 1. It is also convinced that the official instructions to government agents to watch out for weevil damage will result in some Bureau utterances that will aid the bulls rather than the bears.

"Under the circumstances the rings were inclined to think the decline had gone far enough for the present, and that a moderate upward reaction was in order. Meanwhile, optimistic opinion is as to the crop ultimate reach the rings in numbers every day. On the other hand, Texas is not offering new crop cotton in anything like the volume usual at this time of year, and exporters are beginning to believe that Texas contribution to the new crop during August will be comparatively small, probably very much smaller than that of last year, according to one of them. In normal seasons this is the time when consumers and importers in America sell specific grades and weights in volume for delivery in October, December, January and March. Such business, of course, generally trading in contracts, with the speculator supplying the difference between the long and the short hedges required by the trade."

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say: "The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The state crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among reailers generally."

DAMAGE TO CORN WORRIES STREET

By CHARLES W. STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—An irregular tone was shown in the early trading on the Stock Exchange, there being complete absence of vigor which characterized the dealings for the two preceding weeks. In some quarters it was thought that enough long stock was sold to make the market again susceptible to their influence.

Union Pacific yielded ½ and losses of around ½ point were also sustained in Amalgamated, American Can and Canadian Pacific. Steel rose ¼, but later reacted the same amount. Americans were well above parity in London, where the trading was of an irregular character.

The curb was steady.

The market continued irregular with considerable losses and small trading except the buying at the start from London. Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Steel and Chesapeake and Ohio were the most active although they recorded losses. Reading sold ex-dividend of 2 per cent at 160¼, a decline of ⅝. Missouri Pacific and Steel common were both off ⅝. Union Pacific lost ½ at 149¾. Northern Pacific and Lehigh Valley both declined ¾. Southern Pacific was off ⅛ to 93. The tone continued weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

After a listless, lagging market for a good part of the afternoon strength developed with a more active demand and many of the important issues made substantial gains.

The market closed steady. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

STOCK GOSSIP

T. D. Potter says: "The market has every appearance of going higher and stocks like Union Pacific, Reading, Steel and Copper should be bought on every recession.

"I believe another effort to secure higher freight rates will be successful. Steel earnings for quarter published to-day will probably show $38,250,000. This will be bullish and should have a stimulating effect on prices."

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Speculative sentiment is better in the foreign markets. Information channels favor purchase of Standard stocks on reactions for turns. We would not climb for stocks, but would buy conservatively on fair reactions for moderate profits."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends entirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and looks lower.

"Corn—The map shows no rain in the corn belt and very high temperatures prevailed yesterday in all territories west of the river. As long as present weather conditions prevail higher prices seem inevitable.

"Oats—We believe the market will gradually work higher.

"Provisions—Foreigners buyers of lard. The continued strength in corn adds to the general firmness."

Omaha reports no rain in Nebraska. Generally clear over the State. Winnipeg clear, 66; Duluth clear, 40; Glenwood clear; Bismark clear, 70; Kansas City says corn and wheat bulletin shows no rain.

* * *

Provisional Department of Agriculture of Manitoba estimates wheat crop of 85,000,000 bushels, against 58,000,000 last year.

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "My returns to date, covering almost one-half of the corn producing counties, are showing some sensational losses in corn prospect. Kansas returns as far as tabulated and covering nearly half of the State, show a drop approaching 50 per cent since July 1, and working lower as later reports come in. Nebraska is off nearly 20 points and Oklahoma 40 points; Missouri to date shows 10 points off, and both Illinois and Indiana have lost ground. Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are also showing heavy losses. If the latter reports prove in line with those already received, the general average condition will fall several points under 80, and the official indication on August 1 may not be for a crop over 2,700,000 bushels."

* * *

B. W. Snow has the following from Edgar County, Ill.: "From April 10, we had nine weeks of dry weather, which ruined oats and hay, then we had some rain, which gave corn a fair start, but for the last five weeks we had hot weather and no rain. Unless we get rain in a few days corn will be the worst failure we have had in the 60 years that I have been in this country."

* * *

The Weekly Iowa Weather and Crop Report says: "In some localities in the southeastern counties, where there has been only .05 inch rain during the last 30 days, corn is firing and is at a standstill. Pastures are brown."

* * *

Selling in corn to-day was very scattered and sellers really scarce. That's why the market went up so easy, as nobody dares to take the short side.

Highest Government Officials

Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime

President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them only enough to pay for the transaction."

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child," "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

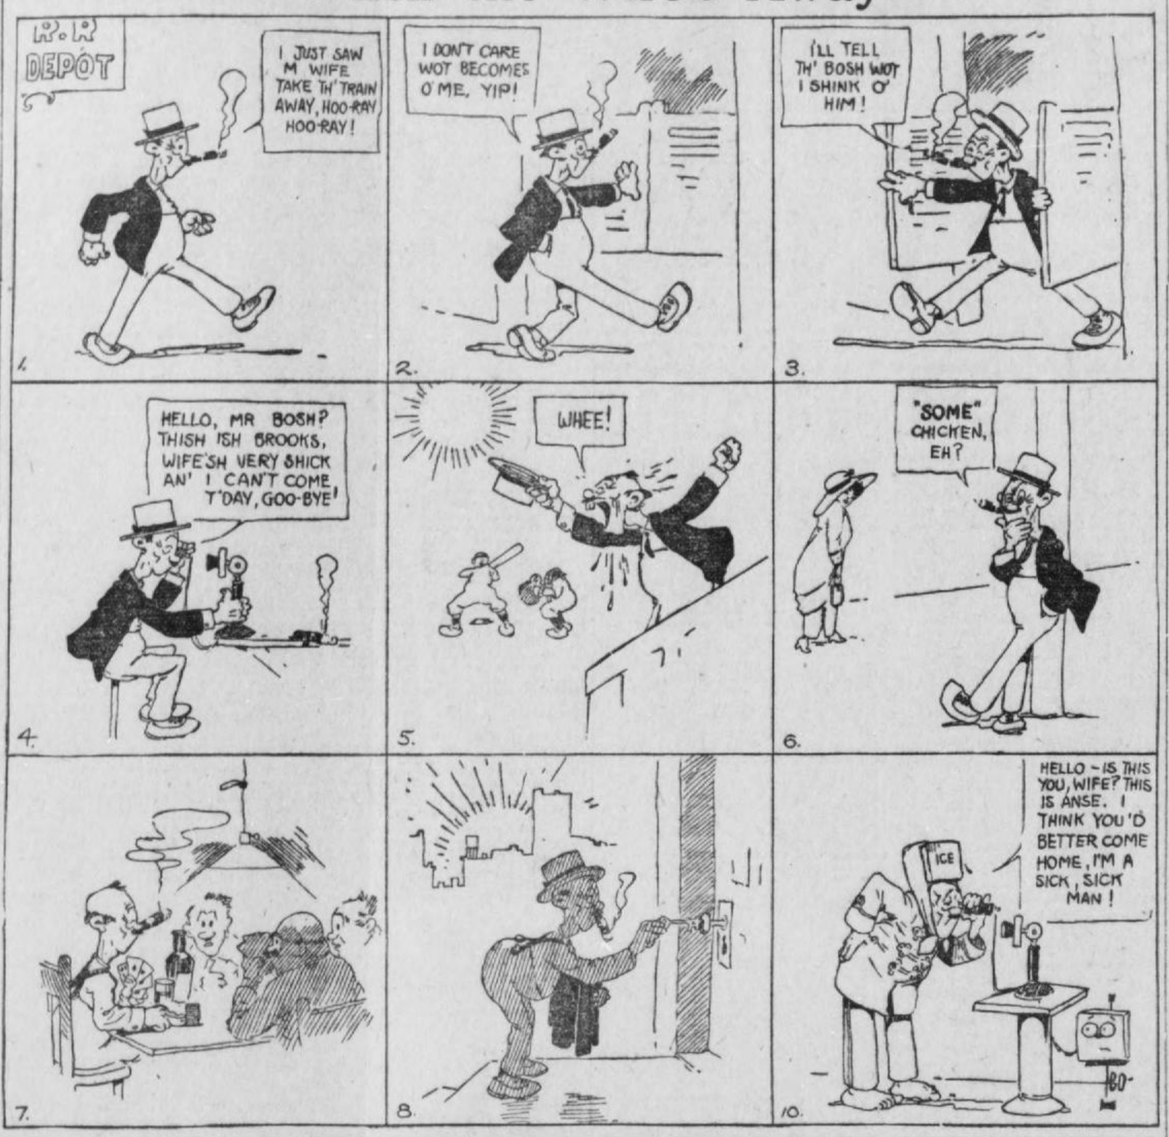
When the Wife's Away



Courtesy a Virtue All Should Cultivate

It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information as his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

The Song of Joy and Pain

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

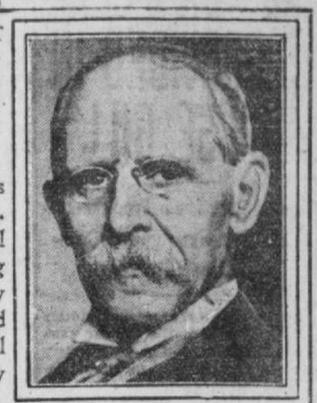
OH, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, known to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, which has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

PATTERSON WAS DRUNK HE ADMITS

Former Tennessee Governor Assumes Blame for Arrest in Raid—Wife Is Loyal.

NASHVILLE, July 29.—Ex-Governor M. R. Patterson, who was caught in a raid on a house in the restricted district last Thursday night, crushed and deeply mortified over the affair, has been joined by a faithful wife in a statement to the public, and in breaking the silence which he has steadfastly maintained admits that he was in a stupor from drink at the time of the arrest. He offers no apology for his transgression, but makes a public pledge that such an occurrence shall not be repeated. The statements follow:

I am leaving for home to-night with Mrs. Patterson, who has been with me for two days, and before going I wish to express the deepest appreciation of us both to the friends and those who were not my friends in the past for their kind and generous sympathy.

For my own part in this unfortunate affair I have no excuse to offer and have borne the condemnation of my own conscience.

My mission in Nashville was not political, as has been erroneously assumed, but purely legal, and while waiting the return of Mr. Nall, of Nashville, from Red Boiling Springs, who had in his possession certain papers which I was to examine, I began to drink, and continued until all sense of respsonbility was gone.

However gross my delinquency, I want the world to know that it is my last offense, and the weakness will never be repeated which brought upon me and mine this deep humiliation and gave to my enemies an opportunity for revenge.

MALCOLM R. PATTERSON.

My heart and my sympathies are all with my husband, and I love him with all the strength of my soul. He has been shamefully, cruelly treated, and I stand with him in this hour of trouble.

MRS. M. R. PATTERSON.

Bitter Fight Certain Over Currency Bill

WASHINGTON, July 29.—A bitter fight on the question of prohibiting interlocking directorates in all banks under the proposed Federal reserve system, provided for by the Glass currency bill, is anticipated in the Democratic caucus of the House to be called August 11.

President Wilson is opposed to this proposal, although the Democrats of the House Banking and Currency Committee have accepted such a proposal by a vote of 6 to 5.

UNDERWOOD DENOUNCES MULHALL

House Leader Calls Lobbyist Blackmailer to His Face Before Inquiry Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Representative Underwood, Democratic leader of the House, appeared before the House Lobby Investigation Committee to-day and charged that Colonel M. M. Mulhall, the lobbyist, was a blackmailer.

The appearance of Underwood was an event not on the program. He came unexpectedly, and his usual bland smile was not on his face. Instead his eyes flashed fire and he was clearly angry through and through.

Underwood was not sworn, having become involved in an argument with Senator Reed before Chairman Overman of the committee had an opportunity to place the House leader under oath.

"Is this Mulhall?" inquired Underwood, pointing his finger at the lobbyist, who was sitting in the witness chair in an apparently disinterested attitude.

Calls Him Blackmailer.

"In the public interest," declared Underwood, "I think men who take liberties with the names of public men should be confronted and made to prove their charges.

"I regard this man as a blackmailer. He has even blackmailed the men who employed him."

Underwood was angered because Mulhall had written in his letters that he had seen Underwood and obtained information from him about the make-up of the committees of the House.

Underwood declared that Mulhall was giving false information to his employers. This testimony that Underwood objected to was developed at the session of the committee yesterday.

While Underwood was making his statement to the lobby committee, Colonel Mulhall denounced him for making accusations against him (Mulhall) and said he would call on the country to decide "which is the cleaner of us."

Declares Mulhall Lied.

Mulhall wrote in a letter to J. P. Bird, previously read, that he had a long interview with Underwood respecting the chairmanship of the chairmanship of the House Labor Committee. This position was given to William B. Wilson, now Secretary of Labor.

Mulhall said in this letter that he had learned from Underwood that Wilson first was considered for chairman of the Census Committee.

"The whole statement is a lie out of whole cloth," said Underwood. "I was chairman of the committee which named Mr. Wilson as chairman of the House Labor Committee. There never was any question about Wilson being named chairman of the committee on Labor.

"I never talked to this man in my life. The only time he ever saw me, apparently, was when I was walking through a corridor of the House."

Senator Reed then asked Mulhall if he wished to say anything.

"To the statement of the gentleman that I lied, I want to say that I met him in the back hall near the stairway of the Capitol," replied Mulhall, "asked him questions and as I stated yesterday he answered them like a gentleman. I do not wish to contradict him and I do not want to cast any reflection upon him, but before the examination is over Mr. Underwood will take back part of what he said."

If the weather permits, a double-header will be played to-morrow afternoon. In any event, the Crackers will return to Atlanta to open against the Volunteers, five games in three days (weather bermitting), beginning Thursday.

STATE TRIES TO SHOW GIRL WAS STRANGLED ON THE SECOND FLOOR

Here are Tuesday's important developments in the trial of Leo M. Frank on the charge of murdering Mary Phagan in the National Pencil Factory, Saturday, April 26.

Newt Lee, negro night watchman at the pencil factory, leaves the stand after four hours and forty minutes of examination and cross-examination with the essential points of his story unshaken.

Efforts to discredit the negro's story result only in showing several discrepancies in the story he told before the Coroner's jury and his testimony on the stand at the trial.

All attempts to confuse Lee by telling him that the stenographer's report of the inquest has him making slightly different statements met invariably with his declaration that "they didn't get it right down there."

L. S. Dobbs, police sergeant, testifies to the finding of the body of the Phagan girl and says that Lee had a ready interpretation of the two notes when they were found by the dead body.

City Detective Starnes testifies to finding bloodstains on second floor and says Frank was nervous the day after the crime. He says he found what he took to be fingerprints of blood on a door in the basement.

Starnes is closely cross-questioned by the defense in an effort to show the spots he thought blood might have been aniline dye. In a lawyers' clash over certain questions Solicitor Dorsey is told to "sit down" by the judge.

City Detective J. M. Starnes told late Tuesday afternoon at the trial of Leo Frank of the finding of a number of red splotches resembling blood in the northeast corner of the women's dressing room in the National Pencil Factory, testimony on which the prosecution relies to support its theory that Mary Phagan was murdered on the second floor of the building.

Starnes said that the principal part of the largest splotch was about as big as the palm of his hand.

He also testified that he found blood about 40 or 50 feet from the dressing room toward the front of the building, and that he discovered what he took to be finger-prints of blood on the door of the basement. The fingerprints, he said, he chipped off and now has the chips of wood in his office.

Starnes asserted that there were indications that a white substance had been used with the evident purpose of eradicating what appeared to be bloodstains. The detective described Frank as nervous when he was brought down to the factory the morning after the crime.

Tells of Clock Tests.

He said in reply to Solicitor Dorsey's questions that he had witnessed the new night watchman make a complete series of punches in the time clock for an entire twelve hours within a space of five minutes, in an effort to support the theory the State is expected to advance that Frank doctored the time tape submitted to the police department which seemed to show that the neight watchman, Lee, had made three skips.

Attorneys Go After Lee.

Newt Lee, night watchman at the National Pencil Factory, was harassed and assailed by counsel for Frank in a vain effort to win from him admissions ading the theory that he was otherwise involved in the crime than as the man who found the body. Lee was on the stand from 9 o'clock to 11:40 a. m.

However, through Lee and Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers called to the factory the morning of Sunday, April 27, the attorneys for Frank laid the groundwork for the elaboration of their theory that Jim Conley was the murderer of Mary Phagan and that Lee assisted in writing the notes that were found by her body.

From Sergeant Dobbs, Luther Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, obtained these admissions:

Points in Dobbs' Story.

That Lee, ignorant and illiterate, was able to decipher and explain in a flash the mysterious notes over which the officers had puzzled for several minutes.

That Lee spoke up and said, referring to the words "night witch" in one of the notes: "That's me, boss; that means the night watchman.

That the condition of Mary Phagan's begrimed and bruised face gave the indication that the girl had been dragged along the dirt floor of the factory basement, although Jim Conley, in his story of his part in the crime, declared that he had carried the body to the trash heap in the rear of the basement.

That Dobbs, with the aid of an electric flashlight, was unable to tell whether the slain girl was white or colored until he had pulled down her stocking, although Lee had testified to being able to tell that the girl was white by the dim rays from his smoky lantern while he was standing at a distance or five or six feet.

Lee's Story at Variance.

That Dobbs at the Coroner's inquest testified that he had had a Mr. Williams lie down in the place where Mary Phagan's body was found and, taking the position Lee said he was in when he first saw the body, discovered that, as a matter of fact, the body could hardly be seen from this point unless one was looking especially for it.

Lee testified, under the cross-examination of Attorney Rosser:

That the time he found the body was the first time he had gone farther than 25 feet from the ladder in the front of the basement that night.

That he knew it was a white woman, although he did not approach nearer the body than five or six feet, and had no light except the dirty lantern.

That he recalled that the officers, with a flashlight, were unable to identify it as white or colored for some time.

That he did not say, "That's me, boss," referring to one of the notes, but something to the effect that "They are trying to put this on me."

After a short battle of words between Rosser and Solicitor Dorsey, Reuben R. Arnold, associated with Rosser, asked for the first time during the day to be heard, and plainly indicated that it was the intention to prove that Newt Lee was concerned in the writing of the two mysterious notes found by the mutilated body of Mary Phagan.

DEFENSE FAILS TO OBTAIN CRIMINATIONS FROM LEE

Jurors Sent From Room.

The Solicitor objected strongly to arguing before the jury the admissibility of this testimony of Lee's, and the jurors were excused while Arnold outlined the purpose of the defense.

"We expect to show that two notes were found by the body of Mary Phagan," said Arnold.

Solicitor Dorsey had just given Mr. Arnold the two notes found in the basement and Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire. Mr. Arnold said:

"The defense expects to show that the two notes found in the basement of the National Pencil Factory were very obscure notes and the police were trying to read them in the presence of Lee.

"They read this one: 'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it, but that long tall black negro did it by his-self.'

Gives Lee's Explanation.

"The defendant, Lee said, 'That night-witch means me,'" said Arnold. "It showed familiarity with the notes. This negro who is so dull that Mr. Rosser has to repeat his questions now and again interpreted thi mysterious note in a second and a half."

Here Dorsey interrupted.

"Since Attorney Arnold has the note itself, there is no reason to ask what somebody else said about it."

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper here joined in:

"Unless it was intended to try to connect Lee with the crime, what someone else said about the notes to Lee is wholly inadmissible. The charge first must be made against him."

"We don't have to photograph a criminal. We have got to begin somewhere," retorted Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the defense, saying that it might produce evidence to show anxiety on the part of the negro, or a lucid interpretation of the notes.

"Suspicion on Lee," Says Rosser.

"We expect to show that the notes were obscure and doubtful in meaning. We expect to show that the officers were endeavoring to read them. But then more of doubtful and sinister meaning. In one of them we will show that the wording was something like this, so far as I can decipher it:

'He said he would love me, laid down, played like the night-witch did it but that long, tall, black negro did it by his-self.'

"We want to show," continued Arnold, "that Lee spoke up and said, 'That's me, boss. That means night watchman.'

"Isn't it strange that a negro so ignorant and dull that Mr. Rosser had to ask him a question ten times over could in a flash interpret this illegible scrawl?"

Rosser supplemented Arnold's argument by remarking that he regarded Lee's alleged remarks as highly suspicious, and that he considered he had the right to question a witness with a view of showing that a person or persons other than the defendant had a part in the crime.

Judge Roan ruled with the defense, and the jury was returned. The judge declared:

"The attorneys for Frank are privileged to bring out evidence showing anxiety or fear on the part of the negro."

Lee Makes Denial.

Lee denied when questioned that he had said, "That's me, Boss; that means night watchman." He testified that he told the officers that someone was trying to put the crime on him.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, one of the officers who visited the factory after Lee called the police station, testified before the Coroner's jury in regard to Lee's ready explanation of the notes.

Rosser ended his cross-examination of Lee at 10:45 a. m. Tuesday after the negro had been on the grill two hours Monday afternoon and nearly as long Tuesday.

The efforts to discredit Lee's story began the moment Rosser got him on the stand. He sought first to show that it was a very peculiar circumstance that Lee went clear to the rear of the factory basement, where he found the girl's body, when all through the earlier part of the night he had gone only a short distance from the foot of the ladder in the front of the basement.

Calls Lee's Excuse Flimsy.

"Every time you went down into the basement you went only about 25 feet from the ladder to see if there was fire in the dust pan," said Rosser, repeating Lee's testimony, "and yet at this time, when you say you found the girl's body, you assert that it was necessary to go clear to the rear to ascertain the same fact?"

Lee replied that he had gone to the rear of the basement for another purpose and Rosser attempted to show that this was only a flimsy excuse.

By his line of questioning Rosser endeavored to ridicule the idea that Lee could have identified Mary Phagan as a white girl by the dim light of his dirty lantern when, as he testified, he got no nearer than five or six feet to the body, and when the officers with electric searchlights were not able to determine whether the girl was white or a negro because of the grime and cinders on her body, until they had pulled down her stocking.

Session Full of Clashes.

The session was full of spirited clashes between Rosser and Dorsey. It was a favorable forenoon for the defense, Rosser almost invariably being permitted to continue the line of questioning which he was pursuing.

Rosser, while he succeeded in showing up discrepancies in Lee's present story with that before the Coroner's jury, was unable to force the negro to any admissions incriminating in themselves.

Dorsey questioned Lee in redirect examination and Rosser in recross-examination. Lee left the stand at 11:40 o'clock, after a total of four hours and forty minutes' grilling.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs followed Lee on the stand. He told the story of finding the body and identified the Phagan girl's clothes and the cord that was used to strangle her.

Frank, his face a mask, was brought into the courtroom just before the court was called to order by Deputy Sheriff Plennie Miner.

After taking a cool survey of the courtroom, the factory superintendent conversed a moment with is counsel and then centered his attention on the night watchman. Frank took no notes of the negro's testimony, but he evidently was making a mental record of every word of it.

What he thought of the negro's statements could not be guessed from his features. Whether the negro was giving testimony which might be construed as favorable or as most damaging, there was not the shade of a change in the expression of the young factory superintendent.

He only took his eyes from the witness to speak a word to his wife or to answer an occasional question addressed to him by one of his counsel. He was brought to the courthouse from the Tower at 7:45 by Sheriff Mangum and Deputy Sheriff Miner. He was dressed in a blue mohair suit with a striped effect, and wore a fancy gray tie.

Eats Light Breakfast.

His breakfast was brought to him at the courthouse by a relative, and consisted only of two slices of toast and a bottle of milk.

"I am well pleased with the progress of the trial to this point, he said in his conversation with Essenbach. "Nothing has been developed which has not already been well known to the public and attorneys and which will be explained in the light of the defense's case.

"I am feeling well and confident. Nothing has taken place to disturb me in the least. I hope that the trial will move as rapidly toward its conclusion as the first day's session gave promise. I have nothing to conceal and nothing to fear."

Grilling of Lee Resumed.

The cross-examination of Lee was resumed as soon as court opened.

Q. How far were you from the body when you first saw it?—A. About ten feet.

Q. Could you see to either side?—A. No. I stood up, picked up lantern and went toward the dust pan.

Q. Why didn't you go to the pan earlier in night?—A. I just happened to take a notion to go this time.

Q. When you were in closet, which way did you look?—A. Toward the wall.

Q. What do you call the right?—A. This (indicating right hand).

Q. Well, the dust pan was on your right, wasn't it?—A. Not exactly.

Q. Where was your attention directed when you went to the dust pan?—A. I had to walk quite a distance to see whether there was any fire in the dust pan, didn't you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How far did you walk?—A. A little piece below the light.

Q. Tell me exactly how far it was?—A. About as far as that man there. (About 25 feet.)

Q. You only went to the dustpan once that night?—A. Mr. Frank told me not to go near it with the lantern.

Shows How He Held Light.

Q. How close did you go to the body?—A. That wall there.

Q. How far is that?—A. About six feet.

Q. How did you hold the lantern to see it?—A. Like this. (Holding hand over head.)

Q. What did you see first?—A. The feet.

Q. How far was the body from the closet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it two feet, ten feet or twenty feet?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it fifty feet, forty feet or thirty feet?—A. Somewhere about thirty feet, maybe not that much.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. I looked to see whether it was a natural body.

Q. You didn't linger?

At this question Lee arose and pointed his finger at Rosser. "Just as soon as I saw what it was I want to tell you I lit a rag."

Saw It Was White Girl.

Q. You saw it was a white woman?—A. There were one or two white spots on the face and her hair was frizzled.

Q. How long did it take the police to find she was a white girl?—A. I don't know; they arrested me.

Q. What did they say?—A. One of them said this girl has been dead three or four days.

Q. When you came up did you go back down in the cellar?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you notice whether the door

LEE'S QUAINT ANSWERS ROB LEO FRANK'S TRIAL OF ALL SIGNS OF RANCOR

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

A page was ripped from a story of Harris Dickson. "Old Reliable" was paraded in the life in as somber a setting as was ever conceived, and the temper of the audience that is following the fortunes of Leo Frank through his struggle for life and liberty was revealed.

Some sinister things have been said of the spirit of Atlanta in reference to the trial of the pencil factory superintendent as the slayer of Mary Phagan. It was whispered once that the law would not be allowed to take its course, but that those who believe Frank guilty would take vengeance as their own.

And, on the other hand, it has been said in sotto voce that the purses of Frank's friends would be opened to the last penny to see that he receives a verdict of acquittal.

Laugh Gives Lie to Rumor.

But right at the start the whisperings were given the lie, just as happens to most whisperings. A jury was selected and sworn in record time, and the story of a people torn by factional feeling by the case was crushed.

The first important witness looked and spoke like "Old Reliable." And his hearers laughed.

People inflamed by a passion so deadly that they are willing to defy the law to obtain their vengeance do not laugh when the issue is being fought.

People who are willing to spend their last dollar to see a man freed do not giggle when a witness relates circumstances which the opposition maintains, adds a strand to the cord of hemp which it is striving to weave about his neck.

Frank Getting Fair Trial.

Newt Lee, black, ignorant, cornfield, pot-liker-fed darky, by the homeliness of his words proved beyond peradventure that Leo M. Frank is getting a fair and impartial trial as the law decrees, and that Atlanta is willing to abide by the verdict which the twelve men return when the historic case shall have passed to its final stage.

It took just such a character as Newt Lee to bring to light the true nature of the people who are listening to the trial, who are following the legal battle step by step, whose interest in the case is so intense that it has kept the slaying of Mary Phagan the big thing in the public mind for three long months.

Fortune favored both sides when the prosecution decided to place him on the stand among the first. Whatever his story materially damaged Frank or his cross-examination materially aided the defense is of little moment. The reception of his testimony indicated to each side just what the public thought and enabled them to know that the case will be tried in the orderly manner which justice demands.

Newt Enjoys His Fame.

Let's have a look at Newt Lee. There's a lot to be learned from this homely negro. When his name was called and he entered the courtroom, he had a joyful realization of his own importance. His face showed he was again enjoying the thrilling pleasure of "comin' thru" or going on a "secussion."

He is typical of the type that Judge Dickson so vividly depicts. His head is flat as a ballroom floor. His big frame is slightly bent, not from weakness, but from the natural laziness of his type.

Sympathy that has been spent on him for his months in jail, though admittedly innocent of any crime, has been spent in vain. Newt Lee has been having the time of his life.

"Ain't dat nigger had his picture took and put in de white folks' papers? Don't dem big lawyers pay him respecks? Ain't he jest sot dere in jail an' not have to wuk?"

That's the negro point of view and that's Newt Lee's. He has tasted all the popularity of a negro about to be hung and escaped the only drawback to the final ceremony, the actual hanging.

Sang-froid Never Shaken.

His sang-froid never left him even during the cross-examination he underwent under the skillful questioning of Luther Rosser.

He enjoyed every minute of the experience.

He spoke in a dialect that Dockstader would pay thousands for and he spoke with a directness and an intelligence that showed that he had either been thoroughly rehearsed or that he was possessed of one of those quick, in-seeing mind, so rarely found among negroes of his type, but so typical of the class.

Lee is beyond doubt "a white man's nigger." He spread a feeling of kindliness over a courtroom where bitterness was supposed to prevail. Judge, jurors, spectators, all seemed in sympathy with him, and even Mr. Rosser did not prod him in the merciless manner that has made him one of the most famous, one of the most feared cross-examiners in the entire South.

Newt did not wish to let one sweet moment of his self-aggrandizement slip. Once during the testimony he was asked as to his faithfulness in performing his duties as night watchman.

"Light Jest Wuz Shinin'."

He "swelled visibly," as Sam Weller remarked, before he answered. "Folks say there never is been a nigger to punch that clock so prompt as me," and a stern objection from Mr. Rosser kept him from going on with his story of personal prowess, though his lips struggled to speak the forbidden words.

And his illustrations were apt. They were not strained. They fitted like a glove. He was asked to tell whether a light was burning dimly or brightly. Like a flash he replied:

"Has you ever seed a lightnin' bug? Has you ever seed one whut's jest been hit with a stick? Well, you knows how his light shines. Hit jest do shine. Well, dat was dat light. Hit just wuz shinin' and dat's all."

Racial horror of being alone in the presence of the dead was also displayed.

Lee was in a dramatic period of his story. He had just told of his grim discovery in the cellar of the pencil factory.

"What did you do when you saw the girl?" Solicitor Dorsey's question was spoken with rifle shot ring.

He "Went Right Back Up."

"I went right back up dat ladder," said Lee, as though he were repeating a confession of faith.

"How did you get up the ladder?" asked the Solicitor.

"I dunno how I got up dar, but I sho' wuz up dar. I sho' wuz," the negro replied fervently.

And on he went with his story, practically each reply being greeted by an outburst of laughter until a bailiff had to threaten to clear the courtroom.

He came down from the stand, smiling still, his glory gone, but realizing that for days he was sure to be a power on Decatur street, a person sought for socially, a man among men. And as he descended the audience smiled an applause as gracious as bowing prima donnas or stentorian tragedian ever received.

Mincey Adheres to Published Statement

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher, who says that Jim Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Company, confessed to him that he had killed a girl, declared Tuesday that he had conferred with attorneys for Leo Frank, and that he was ready to make his statement from the witness stand.

Mincey said his statement would be identical with the one recently published in The Georgian. He claims to have met Conley on the Saturday afternoon on which Mary Phagan was killed. He said that Conley was drunk and that Conley threatened to kill him, saying that he had already killed a girl that afternoon.

Mincey came to Atlanta from Ringgold Monday afternoon. He is accompanied by B. E. Neal, an attorney of Ringgold.

Tragedy, Ages Old, Lurks in Commonplace Court Setting

Outwardly Quiet and Singularly Lacking in Excitement, Frank Trial Is Enactment of Grim Drama.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

One of the most commonplace things in the world—crime—is riveting the attention of Atlanta and Georgia to-day.

Crime is almost as commonplace as death—and yet death, in a thousand ways, never is commonplace at all.

If I were a stranger in Atlanta and should walk into the courthouse where Leo Frank is being tried for the murder of Mary Phagan, doubtless I should be utterly astounded to discover what I had walked into.

That pale-faced, slight, boyish-looking party over there—the one sitting beside the massive frame of Luther Z. Rosser and the well-groomed person of Reuben Arnold—I should be shocked, I am sure, to learn that he stands charged with one of the blackest, most inhuman and most unspeakable crimes in all Georgia's somewhat long and varied catalogue of crime.

Yet that is the truth—Leo Frank is answering to the charge of the Grand Jury, and he has pleaded not guilty.

Crime and wrongdoing began, of course, when Mother Eve, through no motive other than curiosity, and without malice aforethought, either expressed or implied, bit a small and toothsome morsel from the first apple.

Cain performed the first murder not so very long afterward.

There were no newspapers in those days, but a well-authenticated story of those first infractions of the law have come down to us—and to-day crime runs riot throughout all the world!

Here in Atlanta, thousands of years after Cain committed the primary murder in history, Leo Frank is answering to the charge of killing Mary Phagan, some three months ago.

Frank Calm, Unagitated.

There sits the judge, and over yonder the jury. Pale of long confinement in jail, calm, unagitated, and even smiling, sits Leo Frank, the defendant.

Beside him are his devoted wife and his mother—his mother, who would as soon believe the stars had ceased to move in their orbits as to believe—even to suspect—that her boy was ever so remotely concerned in the death of Mary Phagan.

Over on the other side, however, sit the relatives of Mary Phagan—those who are not under the rule and debarred from the courtroom. They are grim and unsmiling—they are invoking the law's sternest displeasure upon whoever it was that took the life of their innocent little one!

Many and varied must be the emotions surging within the hearts and souls of these people, notwithstanding their outward poise—but I, who am theoretically a stranger in Atlanta's courtroom for the moment, still am wondering what it all can be about.

Gradually I realize a tenseness in the atmosphere, perhaps—and there may steal over me, as I grope mentally for something to fasten upon, a feeling that, after all, tragedy is in the air, and that its sinister shadow has fallen athwart this courtroom, the while I still recall that outside the sunshine is very bright, and is beaming upon the just and the unjust, impartially and alike.

One of the world's truly great physicians says "death is never uninteresting," and that no really great physician possibly can find it so.

He may become used to it, he may grow to view the mere physical fact of death itself as not a particularly astounding phenomenon, but never does he see in any one death the same sequenced things he has observed in others.

It is much the same way with crime, I think.

Murder is as old as the hills—as old as laughter, love, and the hate of hell—but it never loses its repugnant appeal—and so, all Atlanta and all Georgia to-day is watching the progress of the Frank trial, because Atlanta and Georgia are made up of human beings—that's all!

Few Women Present.

There are few women attending the trial of Frank. If there were thousands, however, one alone and above all other would stand forth and challenge the attention of the spectators. I mean, of course, Frank's wife.

There isn't anything the least bit "weepy" or downcast about her. She's a woman—the accused man's wife—but she plainly is a most extraordinary woman, nevertheless.

Whatever her thoughts, and whatever she expects of this trial, she gives no sign. She counsels freely with her husband's lawyers, but not frequently. She leans over and whispers something into Frank's ear now and then, but not often. She smiles upon him, and occasionally she runs her hand lightly along his shoulder, and maybe her arm is around his neck for the flitting fraction of a second, but if any of it is for effect or the least spectacular or theatrical, she is a consummate artist and surpassingly adroit.

Somehow she gave me the impression of the wife affectionate, but not demonstrative, of the wife unafraid but not obtrusive, of the wife deeply concerned, but too proud to let it be seen any more than it must be.

Perhaps there is a subtle motive in her quiet and repressed movements in the courtroom now and then—if so, I can but admire the complete perfectness of her methods and the dramatic excellence of her role as she enacts it.

Looking there at Leo Frank's wife and then at Leo Frank, one unconsciously finds himself asking himself this all-important question: What could have been Frank's motive when he killed Mary Phagan, if it be possible that he could have performed that monstrous deed?

Far and away the most frequent thing encountered in the unraveling of murder cases is the eternal triangle—the man, the wife, and the other woman!

That "other woman" may be an angel, she may be a devil; she may be a princess, she may be a pauper; she may be an innocent child, she may be a faded courtesan; she may be a willing third party, and she may be the most unwilling—but too often she is there, in some aspect, when murder has been done!

Could the motive behind the murder of Mary Phagan have been an unrighteous infatuation upon the part of Frank toward the dead girl—an unholy infatuation repelled to the extent of bringing about murder itself?

Was it that? And if it wasn't that, what was it?

Unless there was malicious motive and intent behind the slaying of Mary Phagan, there has been no murder done. The law says that malice is as essential to murder as oxygen is to the breath of life.

Frank? Of all the defendants I ever saw arraigned, Leo Frank, I think, looks the least the part of a murderer!

Not that that means anything whatever conclusively—but it is a thought that must obtrude itself upon all who view him there in the courthouse, battling in his own way for his life and liberty.

Frank never could be made to look the part of a hero, no more than he can be made to look the part of a villain—and yet he might be either, and deceive his looks no more than hundreds have done before his time and will do hereafter.

If someone should have told me that Frank is a bookworm, or a collector of postage stamps, or a person with a fad for potttering around in the garden at early morn, it never should have occurred to me to doubt it.

But Frank a murderer, a thing lost to every sense of decency and right, a traitor to his dearest and nearest, a —well, I should have asked explanations and enlightenment as to detail!

And yet, if Frank be the thing charged in that bill of indictment, he must be all of those sinister things combined.

Is he? Frankly, I have no fixed opinion, and I am of open mind.

The sweetest-tempered play-fellow otherwise I ever had when I was a boy had a marked passion to sneaking off by himself and robbing birds' nests, particularly when he young birds were in the nests!

One Touch of the Dramatic.

There has been so far in the trial of Leo Frank but one touch of the genuinely dramatic—properly designated melodramatic, perhaps—and that was when the clothing little Mary Phagan wore when murdered was exhibited to the jury.

This, of course, was one of the tricks of the trade, and it was indulged in entirely for the jury's benefit.

It is not unusual—the same thing happens in all murder trials, and I have wondered why it could happen save for the doubtful effect of it desired.

To be sure, the sweet and innocent cause of this trial—the pathetic victim prerequisite to it—is, of all the parties to it, save one, absent.

She may be there in spirit, comforting and sustaining her grief-stricken mother, but her voice is not heard, and never will or can be heard.

She is not in the courtroom, and the one other extreme of the tragedy—omitting the yet undetermined status of Frank—is over yonder in the Tower—Conley.

In the grewsome exhibition of Mary Phagan's clothing, just as it was removed from her dead body, there was a power of appeal hardly to be described in words. The youthful garments spoke eloquently, if inconclusively, of the deceased—the unoffending, methodical, carefree little working girl, so suddenly and so frightfully thrust into public notice, never to know what it all was about.

If within the person of Mary Phagan dwelt the awful propelling force of motive that prompted Frank or someone else to murder, her simple clothing there in the courtroom suggested wonderfully clear the pathos of it and the inhumanity.

And there must have been a motive! What was it about Mary Phagan that gave rise to it in the heart and mind of—Frank?

The things that have happened so far in the trial of Frank are relatively inconsequential, as concerns the verdict.

Battle of Wits.

Two conclusions stand out unmistakably—the trial is to be a battle of legal wits, and it is to rage most fiercely about the negro Jim Conley—the big, black and all-meaning factor yet held jealously in the background.

Mr. Dorsey, the Solicitor General, evidently feels the strain of his position. He is plainly nervous at times, and unmistakably irritable now and then. He snaps his points to the court, and sometimes borders almost upon the rough and querelous in his language.

Undoubtedly Mr. Rosser disconcerts and irritates the Solicitor continuously. At times Mr. Dorsey's objections have seemed more like complaints—and when Mr. Rosser turns his massive head around and stage-whispers additional words not to Dorsey's liking, he resents it in every sentence and gesture he offers by way of comment or reply.

Reuben Arnold has had little to say so far, but he is forever whispering something into Rosser's ear—Rosser frowning like a thundercloud the while he listens.

Mr. Rosser is fighting his way along cautiously and carefully. He seemed upon the point almost of browbeating Newt Lee more than once, as that darky's examination proceeded, but generally he quit just short of actual performance.

Lee, too, was unconsciously outspoken in his resentment of the Rosser treatment, and more than once scored well and powerful in reply to Mr. Rosser's questions—particularly when couching his replies in quaint and curious negro illustrations and phrases.

If at times Lee became more or less confused and contradictory, he proved in the main to be something of a Tartar under cross-examination, and while his testimony as a whole could not amount to much as an isolated proposition and is valuable only as one link in a long chain yet to be forged about Frank, it nevertheless went to the jury in pretty good shape, and will be hard to discount, whatever it may be worth.

Hooper Singularly Calm.

But if Dorsey is agitated and irritable, and if Rosser is imposing and pugnacious, and if Arnold is keyed to a high pitch and continuously prompting his associate counsel, the other big figure among the attorneys, Frank Hooper, is as calm as a May morning, smiling, dispassionate and altogether at his ease.

Hooper looks as if he had just stepped out of a cold-storage bandbox.

Handsome, as he certainly is, if not of particularly commanding presence, and well dressed, he moves about with all the unconscious grace and ease of a—panther?

Hardly that, and yet—Frank Hooper may loom larger than any attorney in this case before the final word is written in respect of it.

There is no doubt that the trial is to be long drawn out. Every inch is being disputed pro and con, and every possible point is being raised to keep the case strictly within its legal bounds.

The jury apparently is much above the average—it was plain enough all along that the defense was seeking a jury of high intelligence, and a city jury, moreover.

I think the jury trying Leo Frank may be expected to record the truth of the trial—it appears to be composed of level-headed, clean cut, sensible men, as it should be, if it is to give a fair play to all parties concerned.

The climax of the fight, of course, will be entirely within Jim Conley. The State will make every possible effort to sustain him, and the defense will make every possible effort to break him down.

Luther Rosser will exhaust his remarkable resourcefulness in this mighty effort, aided and abetted to the very limit by the subtle and incisive art of Reuben Arnold.

Frank Hooper will strive as he never before has striven to hold Conley together—and Hugh Dorsey will back him with all the experience of his career at the criminal bar.

A happy and reassuring circumstance is that over and above all these contending forces sits Judge Roan—unruffled, unafraid, of unblemished and unquestioned integrity, upright and just—to hold all the stormy elements eventually in order and within the rules of the law.

The real trial of Leo Frank hardly yet has begun!

Q. You swear she was on her back?—A. Yes, sir; her face was turned up kind of to one side.

Q. When you went up to the office the first time, did Mr. Frank close his office door?—A. I don't know. I couldn't see his office.

Q. I mean the outside door?—A. It was open.

Mr. Rosser then read Lee's testimony about the time slip before the Coroner's jury.

Q. You helped him put the page in, didn't you, Newt? This is right, isn't it?—A. Read that again.

Mr. Rosser read it.

A. No, sir; you got me wrong. He didn't come out of his office.

Q. You said yesterday that Mr. Frank jumped back when he met Mr. Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Dorsey Objects to Methods.

Mr. Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's jury, which said nothing about Frank jumping back.

Lee—"Well, they got that wrong."

Q. That was a bad stenographer down there, wasn't he?

Solicitor Dorsey here objected to this method of questioning the witness. He declared the negro should first be questioned and then an effort to impeach him made.

To this Mr. Rosser replied: "Of course, this gentleman on account of his age is entitled to lecture me!"

"I am addressing his honor," retorted Dorsey.

"Are you through?" asked Rosser of Dorsey.

"I have stated my objection," said Dorsey.

"He misunderstood what I am trying to show," said Rosser.

Court Sustains Dorsey.

"This witness can't tell what his opinion is," said Judge Roan, for the first time speaking. "He can tell what he swore to before the Coroner's jury."

Following this ruling the cross-examination was resumed.

Rosser read from the stenographic report of the Coroner's inquest:

"Mr. Frank jumped when he met Mr. Gantt and I taken it this way."

Here Solicitor Dorsey interrupted:

"I object to what he taken," the Solicitor said.

Judge Roan ruled that no opinion of a witness was admissible.

Assistant Prosecutor Hooper then asked that Mr. Rosser state what Coroner's inquest he was referring to.

Attorneys in Clash.

"I am always glad to accommodate these men whenever I can," said Rosser.

"You have got to accommodate me," retorted Hooper.

"No, I haven't. The man never was born whom I have got to accommodate."

Judge Roan ruled that Mr. Rosser must state what Coroner's jury he was referring to, as there were two, one in April and one in May.

Rosser resumed his questioning.

Q. I asked you if you were before the Coroner's jury at the police station?—A. Yes, sir.

State's Objection Overruled.

Q. Did you the first time say anything about Mr. Frank jumping back when he met Mr. Gantt?

Dorsey again objected, and was overruled.

A. Yes, sir; I did.

Rosser read Lee's testimony before the Coroner's first hearing, saying he was going to ask him if that was all he said. This testimony was to the effect that Frank looked as though he was frightened. It did not mention, however, that Frank jumped back when he met Gantt.

Q. Is that all you said?—A. No, sir; that wasn't all I said.

Negro Answers Warily.

Q. Newt, I ask you if you didn't leap right out of there and run and call the police when you saw that body?—A. Just as soon as I saw what it was.

Q. Didn't you say this before the Coroner's jury: "I thought some devilish boys had put something there to fool me. I got close enough to see it was a body and leaped right away?"—A. No, sir; I'll tell you what I said.

Mr. Rosser interrupted Lee.

Q. Mr. Frank told you if anything serious happened, to call the police, and if anything trivial, to call him?—A. Yes.

Q. When Frank told you to go off and have a good time, you lit right out, didn't you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say that after two or three minutes you lit out?—A. Not exactly that way.

Says He Doesn't Recall.

Q. You said yesterday that when Frank put on the lock tape that Saturday it took twice as long as it did on the other times you saw him do it. When they asked you how long it took him to put it in before, did you not tell them you did not pay much attention to it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Why didn't you tell the Coroner it took twice as long the last time as it did before?—A. I did tell them it took longer.

Q. Who asked you?—A. He looked like a blind man.

Q. Then all this record here is wrong?—A. I can't help about those records.

Q. You never told it until yesterday?—A. Yes; I told the Coroner it took him longer.

Q. If you didn't pay attention to him the first time, how did you know it took longer the second time?—A. I held the lever for him.

Q. You couldn't say whether it took him a minute the first time?—A. Yes, it took over a minute.

Questioned About Notes.

Q. You could not say whether it took under a minute or over a minute?—A. No.

Q. Who did you live with?—A. No one.

Q. Who lived with you?—A. A woman. She just stayed there and cooked for me.

Q. You and her lived together?—A. No, she just cooked for me.

Q. Did you pay the rent for the last one?—A. Yes.

Q. How about the first one?—A. I just paid board.

Q. Were you down in the basement when the police found some notes?—A. They said something about a book.

Q. They read you something about the night watch doing it?

Dorsey here objected to anything anybody else said.

Rosser replied that his object was to get to the truth and show what Newt Lee did at the time, indicating a ready interpretation of the notes.

Mr. Arnold then addressed the court.

He began an argument and Solicitor Dorsey insisted that the jury be withdrawn.

"Of course, after he has discussed the case, he wants the jury withdrawn at our statements," said Mr. Rosser.

"I understood Mr. Rosser to say he would not introduce the contents, and I understand this ruling excludes the contents of one of the notes?" asked Dorsey.

"No, I didn't say we were not going to present the contents of the notes. I am going to introduce what I please," answered Rosser.

Judge Roan again sustained the defense and ordered the jury brought back. Attorney Rosser then resumed his cross-examination.

Q. When you were in the basement, didn't one of the policemen read a note which said something about a long, tall, black negro?

"I object," said Dorsey. "I understood his honor to rule that the attorneys for the defense could not go into the contents of the notes."

"Are we going on with this argument before the jury, after we just had them sent out?" asked Rosser.

"Let the question be put," said Judge Roan.

Lee Denies Saying "That's Me."

Q. When he said "the night witch," didn't you say "Boss, that's me?"—A. No, sir; I said, "Boss, it looks like they are trying to lay it on me."

Q. No, I want yes or no from this—"The tall, black, long negro?"

Here Dorsey interrupted with an objection.

"Now where did Lee swear that."

Kills His Sister by Mistake for Burglar

ELBERTON, July 29.—Mack Guest shot and instantly killed his 17-year-old sister last night, mistaking her for a burglar. She was visiting from the country.

Guest told his sister to leave a window open when she retired. About 10:30 o'clock Miss Guest decided to close the window. Mrs. Guest awoke, telling her husband someone was breaking into his sister's room. Guest secured a shotgun and shot his sister in the back. No arrest has been made. Guest is prostrated.

Bees Usurp Bed and Couple Can't Sleep

BUCK GROVE, IOWA, July 29.—A swarm of bees does not form as easy as a resting place as a feather bed, as Mr. and Mrs. Nels Wingrove discovered. Going to bed in an upstairs room in the dark, as was their custom, they heard the buzzing of bees. It was discovered that a swarm of bees had settled in their bed.

WATCHMAN STICKS TO HIS TALE OF FINDING OF BODY

he asked, "A section of the Code says that you can't question a man like that unless you first present some certain evidence of the statement having been made or written."

At this, Attorney Rosser sat down and Dorsey began questioning Lee on the redirect examination.

Q. You said something about somebody trying to put it off on you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know Jim Conley? A. I never saw him until that time last week.

Q. Have you talked to anybody about this?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever talk to this man (indicating Arnold)?—A. Yes, he was over to the jail after you were.

Lee Quizzed on Diagram.

Q. The first time Frank put that tape on the clock, did he say anything?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything the second time?—A. He made a remark about its taking longer.

Q. What was the reason he changed the tape?—A. It had been used.

Q. Was it as dark in the basement at night as it was in the daytime?—A. Mighty near.

Solicitor Dorsey started over the diagram drawn by Bert Green, Georgian staff artist, of the National Pencil Factory, and proceeded to ask Lee a question and pointed at the diagram.

"I object to that picture," said Attorney Arnold. "It is nothing but Mr. Dorsey's theory of the case. He's got all kinds of marks here."

"He's not asking about anything but the physical appearance of the building," replied Judge Roan.

Solicitor Dorsey then had Newt Lee point out the various parts of the building shown on the diagram; Dorsey used as a pointer Mary Phagan's parasol.

Q. Newt, say whether the body of Mary Phagan was lying the same way when you saw it with the officers as when you first saw it.—A. I don't know, officers were all around it, and I couldn't see very good.

Lawyers Clash Again.

Mr. Rosser took a stand directly behind Mr. Dorsey and objected to Dorsey leading the witness.

"Well, this negro is not as well educated as some of these lawyers," said Mr. Dorsey. "It takes a little patience to get him to understand."

"What lawyers are you referring to?" asked Mr. Rosser. "Do you mean yourself?"

"Of course, myself," answered Mr. Dorsey.

Q. Was the toilet west or east from the boiler in the basement?—A. West.

Q. Was the body west or east?—A. The body was kinder west.

Q. Could you see Frank from that desk up stairs?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Rosser asked you how far it was from the steps leading up to the second floor to Mr. Frank's office. How far was it?—A. About as far as from here to that wall across the room.

Called Only Police.

Q. Did you call anybody on the phone that night but the police?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you call Mr. Haas?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were the shutters on the north side of the second floor of that building closed on Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes, sir; they were closed.

Q. Were there apartments back there on the third floor?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were they for?—A. White people.

Q. Did white people use the closet in the basement?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who told you to use it?—A. Mr. Frank took me down there and told me to use it.

Q. What did he call it?—A. He called it a toilet.

Q. At night it is darker in the rear of that basement than it is outside?—A. You can't see inside there at all back where the body was found.

Tries to Discount Diagram.

This ended the redirect examination, and Mr. Rosser began the recross-examination. He took up the questioning in an effort to prove that Lee did not understand the diagram of the pencil factory.

"What is this?" he asked, pointing to some blue coloring representing the blank wall.

"I don't know, sir," the negro replied.

Q. It looks like a mill pond, doesn't it?—A. I don't know just what it is meant for.

Q. The policemen and detectives talked to you all the time, didn't they? They fired a pistol beside you; they cussed you and they praised you, didn't they?—A. No sir; they didn't praise me none.

Q. My friend, John Black, and those fellows talked to you day and night, didn't they?—A. Well, just let me tell you, I couldn't sleep even for two nights after I was put in jail. They just questioned me all the time, policemen and everybody.

Q. Is there any other way to get out of the basement except by the ladder?—A. Only the back door.

Q. Are there not some steps between the boiler and the back door up to the first floor?—A. If there are any there I don't know it.

Black Talked to Him More.

Solicitor Dorsey at this point took up the examination.

Q. Did Frank talk to you in jail?—Yes, sir.

Q. Who talked longer to you, Frank or John Black, the detective? Rosser objected, saying the Solicitor had gone over the interview between Frank and Lee and no one had referred to it since.

"We want to know if repetition is going to be allowed," Rosser asked Judge Roan. "It is simply to repeat. If we start a repeating contest we will be here forever."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

Lee replied: "Detective Black talked to me the most.

Q. Who talked to you longer, the detectives or Mr. Arnold, when he came to see you the other day?—A. Mr. Arnold.

Newt Lee was then called off the stand, after having been questioned for 4 hours and 15 minutes.

Sergeant Dobbs Testifies.

Q. Where were you at about 3 o'clock April 27?—A. At the station house.

Q. Did anything unusual happen?—A. At about 3:25 a call came to go to the pencil factory. When we got there the door was locked. Later a negro came and let us in. He said there was a woman murdered in the basement. The negro led the way down, and about fifteen feet back we found the body. She was lying with her face down. We couldn't tell whether she was white or black except that her hair was light. I told someone to turn her over. A cord was around her neck and sunk in her flesh. There was also a piece of cloth. I began to look around and found a couple of notes. One of them read——"

Mr. Dorsey interrupted. "Never mind about the notes," he said.

Identifies Cord and Cloth.

Q. I will first get you to identify this cord (taking the death loop from a suitcase).—A. That looks like it.

Q. And this (exhibiting a torn piece of cloth)?—A. It is.

Q. Was there much blood?—A. Very little.

Q. Was the hair bloody?—A. Very little; I had to almost reach the skin to feel blood.

Q. Was it moist?—A. Dry.

Q. Are these the notes you found near the body? (Exhibiting notes.)—A. Yes.

Q. And this pad?—A. Yes.

Q. How were they lying?—A. Near the head.

Q. Were they close together?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do with Lee?—A. Took him to the station.

Q. What was his bearing?—A. Cool.

Q. Mr. Dobbs, look at this (pointing to diagram of factory); point where the body was found?—A. Right here. (Indicating spot.)

Rosser—"I object to that picture until the witness says it is a fair representation of the building."

Judge Roan—"I sustain the objection."

Dorsey—"Is it a fair representation of the building?"

A. It is.

Dorsey: "That's All."

Rosser After Details.

Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. The negro told you she was a white woman?—A. Yes.

Q. You had to look very closely to find out?—A. Yes.

Q. What kind of light did you have?—A. We lit some gas jets and had lanterns.

Q. You found the notes under the sawdust?—A. Yes.

Q. You were not able to see them until you raked in the sawdust?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was the note attached to the pad?—A. No.

Q. How far from the child's head was the first note?—A. Not over eight or ten inches.

Q. What note did you find first. A. The white one.

Q. Did you find much trash in the building?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find other notes?—A. No.

Q. Did you search?—A. Yes, we were looking for the shoe, you know.

Q. Where was the shoe found?—A. Some one else found them.

Q. What was the condition of the child's face?—A. You mean about dust?

Q. No; was there any indication that she was dragged?—A. I thought there was.

Q. Lee did become excited become he left the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. From the place where Lee stood, could he have seen the body?—A. Yes; part of it.

Q. Didn't you make any experiment in the day time to see whether Lee could see the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you?—A. Yes, sir; the feet and part of the legs.

Q. I asked you if you said the evidences of dragging did not begin immediately in front of the elevator?—A. No, I said it appeared to me to begin immediately in front of the elevator.

Q. As a matter of fact, you didn't find the hat and the shoes close together?—A. The hat and the shoes were on the garbage pile.

Q. The floor was rough and one being dragged over it would be scarred up?—A. Yes.

Q. Captain, you are mistaken about the wound being on the right side of the head, aren't you?—A. I won't be positive. It was near the rear of the head.

Q. Was the blood wet or dry?—A. Dry.

Q. This little trail which you

THE $55 SHORTHAND COURSE AND $55 BOOKKEEPING COURSE, BOTH FOR THE PRICE OF ONE, THIS WEEK ONLY AT THE SOUTHERN BUSINESS COLLEGE

As the Southern's Great Offer Draws to a Close the Demand for Scholarships Becomes More Lively—Last Week in Which to Obtain Two $55.00 Courses for the Price of One.

Saved, $55!

Are you one of the fortunate ones?

The unusual midsummer offer of the Southern Shorthand and Business University, 10 West Mitchell street, this city, will close on Saturday, August 2.

Until then the $55 Shorthand Course and the $55 Bookkeeping Course, both combined, are offered for the price of one course—$55!

While this extraordinary offer is in effect, either of the $55 courses may be obtained at $40!

Since this special offer was announced just a few days ago, the demand for scholarships has been unprecedented.

"Find inclosed check for $55, for which please send me one of the combined scholarships, although I shall not enter school until October," writes a young man at Tallulah Falls.

Others are securing scholarships to be used in August, September and later, just to receive the benefit of the overwhelming reduction now made.

It is not a question of obtaining as low or even a lower rate at some other colleges, but the point of great interest is that you can now secure such a remarkably low rate in the long-established, old reliable, superbly equipped and well-known Southern Shorthand and Business University, "the school that gets results," and naturally the school you prefer to attend.

Remember, the two $55 Courses for the price of one, this week only.

Don't delay, enter now or else buy scholarship now for future entrance, and save this big discount.

HERMAN STRAUSS,
The Former Pupil who wrote 125 words a minute after 30 days' study at the S. S. & B. U., is now a leading reporter in South Georgia.

"This is the first time in three years that we have put on sale our scholarships at a reduced rate," said the managers, "and we are doing this merely as a midsummer advertising proposition to invade new territory, the plan being to secure a large list of names of prospective pupils from those who obtain this low-priced scholarship. From this list we hope to secure many pupils at the regular rates, which will be in effect by August 1, and thus be reimbursed for the loss we are now sustaining by this advertising offer."

thought showed where the body had been dragged extended to the body?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You took hold of the hands and worked them?—A. Yes, but she was stiff. Her joints worked a little.

Door Staples Pulled.

Q. What was the condition of the back door?—A.The staple had been pulled, but the lock was still locked.

Q. Was the door open or shut?—A. It was a slide door and shut.

Q. Was it a bar door?—A. Yes. The bar was down.

Q. Did it appear to be a recent withdrawal of the staple?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you either read or quote to the negro Lee a statement about who had committed the crime, and when you said "night" Lee interrupted with a statement that he was the one referred to?—A. Yes, before I read the word "witch" he said he was the one referred to.

Q. Did you examine her underclothes?—A. Not very closely.

Court was then adjourned until 2 o'clock when the redirect examination of Dobbs was taken up by Solicitor Dorsey.

Dobbs Recalled to Stand.

It was 5 minutes to 2 o'clock when Judge Roan walked to the bench and called order. He asked Solicitor Dorsey if he cared to question the last witness, Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, further. Mr. Dorsey replied that he did. Sergeant Dobbs was then returned to the stand, and the redirect examination began.

Solicitor Dorsey directed the questioning for the State:

Q. To what undertaker did you turn Mary Phagan's body over?—A. Bloomfield, I think.

Q. How far is it from the ladder to the spot where you found the body?—A. 150 feet.

Q. What was lying on the trash pile?—A. A hat and this pump (displaying one of Mary Phagan's shoe).

Q. What else?—A. Nothing.

Q. What about the hat trimming?—A. I never saw it.

Q. The hair ribbon?—A. We took it from her head.

Experimented to Solve Crime.

Q. Did you make any experiments at night in the factory in an effort to ascertain just how and who committed the crime?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you become convinced that Newt Lee could have seen the body from where he sat?

Attorney Rosser objected to this question and the objection was sustained.

Q. Could more than one person at a time have gone down the ladder to the basement?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been possible for anyone to have taken the body down the ladder with them?—A. No.

Q. Would it have been necessary for anyone taking or dropping a body down the ladder to have gone around the elevator shaft?—A. No.

Q. Could you tell whether the evidence you saw of dragging was caused from the feet of some person carrying a heavy burden or actually dragging it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did the lock on the basement door? Was it pulled up or out? A. Out.

Q. Look at this lock and hasp. (Dorsey exhibited lock and hasp from back door of pencil factory). Were they the ones you found on the back door?—A. Yes.

Q. Was the body cold or warm? A. Cold.

Dorsey Concludes Queries.

Q. Was there any blood on the ground or sawdust where you found the girl?—A. No sir.

This concluded Dorsey's examination.

Rosser then took the witness on the re-cross-examination.

Q. You don't know ho wthis hasp wos taken?—A. No sir.

Q. Mr. Dobbs, is it not a fact that you know whether this hasp was taken from the outside or the inside? —A. Yes.

Mr. Dorsey then arose and put a question to the witness.

"Where was the elevator on the morning that you found the body of Mary Phagan?"

At the office floor," replied Dobbs.

Q. Couldn't you tell from her hair that she was white?—A. Yes, if you got close enough.

Mr. Rosser questioned the witness again.

"Didn't you say you had to make a careful examination to tell that she was white?"—Yes.

This concluded Sergeant Dobbs' testimony.

Starnes Put on Stand.

The next witness to be called to the stand was Detective J. M. Starnes, who has been one of the principal investigators of the case. Solicitor Dorsey questioned him for the prosecution.

Q. What time did you get to the pencil factory after this crime was reported?—A. Between 5 and 6 o'clock Sunday morning.

Q. What did you do?—A. I met Sergeant Dobbs and went into the basement.

Q. Can you identify this staple and lock?—A. I do not know.

Q. This looks like the staple and lock from the pencil factory's back basement door, doesn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you find the staple, was it pulled up, or out?—A. The staple was pulled out from the back door, the indication being that it was pulled straight out.

Q. Was there anything to show how it was removed?—A. There was an indentation in the wood and a piece of rusty pipe which fitted the indentation.

Q. How did this door open?—A. It slid South.

Frank Didn't Ask Reason.

Q. If the staple was in and the door was open from the outside, what woul have been the effect on the staple if the door had been opened from the outside?—A. The staple would have been badly bent.

The attorneys for the defense were sustained on an objection to a question by Dorsey to Starnes about a talk with Newt Lee.

Q. What did you do next?—A. I went to the police station and discussed the case with Chief Lanford and John Black.

Q. What next?—A. We asked Lee who the superintendent was and when he told us, we called Frang over the phone.

Q. How long did it take to get him?—A. Only a few minutes. A man answered the phone, said he was superintendent of the National Pencil Factory. I told him that it was very necessary for him to come to the pencil factory. He replied that he had not eaten his breakfast and that he did not want to come down town until after breakfast. I told him that it would be very necessary for him to come and that an automobile would be sent for him.

Q. Did you tell him what the trouble was?—A. He did not ask me and I did not tell him.

Q. How long was it before Frank reached the factory?—A. Only a few minutes.

Scores "Trial on Looks."

Objections were made when Dorsey asked Detective Starnes as to Newt Lee's conduct at the factory when Starnes first arrived there.

"This case should not be tried on looks," said Attorney Arnold. "Every man looks guilty to an officer. That what he gets paid for."

"The defense has attacked Lee and the prosecution wants to show his attitude to reveal that the attack is unfounded," retorted Attorney Hooper for the prosecution.

"Suppose Lee was on trial for his life," asked Attorney Rosser, "would any attitude be construed in his favor?"

Judge Roan overruled the objection, but said that he had not let down the bars.

"Lee appeared composed," said Starnes.

Q. How did Frank appear?—A. He pulled off his coat and said to Mr. Darley: "You see I have got another suit."

Q. Where did that conversation occur?—A. In Mr. Frank's office.

Q. What else did he say?—A. I don't remember anything else. I had charge of Lee.

Q. Did you have an opportunity to observe whether Frank was nervous? —A. He appeared nervous.

"Frank Looked Rather Trembling."

Q. Tell what he did.—A. He just appeared nervous. I didn't know who he was at the time. He appeared rather trembling and uncomposed.

Q. What time was it that he had this appearance?—A. When they brought him in to the factory from home.

Q. Did you see any slips punched in that clock?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. About a week afterward.

Q. Tell the jury about it.—A. I went to the factory and the watchman named McKinzie punched the clock all the way around in about five minutes.

Q. Were you present when Frank said anything about Newt Lee's record?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see these cords before (displaying some cords)?—A. Yes. We took some from the girl's body.

Q. Did you ever find any more?—A. Yes, on the second floor of the pencil factory.

Q. Were there knots in them?—A. Yes.

Q. Were the knots similar?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find any anywhere else? —A. Yes, in the basement.

When Starnes started to identify similar cords, already identified by Sergeant Dobbs as having been found around Mary Phagan's neck, Attorney Rosser objected on the ground that Starnes had not written the notations on them. The objection was sustained.

Q. Did you see anything in the dressing room Monday morning?—A. Yes, I saw a splotch that looked like blood and several smaller splotches that looked like blood.

Q. What did you find in the dressing room Monday?—A. I found several splotches and I chipped them up.

Q. What was the size of the largest spots?—A. One of them looked to be as large as my hand.

Q. Were they just splotches?—A. No, that was the principal part. It spattered for a foot and a half.

Q. Was there anything on the floor but blood?—A. Yes, it looked like it had been swept over with some white substance.

Q. Do you know what it was?—A. No. Some one told me what it was, but I have forgotten.

Q. Was the stuff on the floor blood? —A. Yes, I think so.

Q. You are sure that it was not aniline dye?—A. Yes. I experimented with the dye and it left a much brighter stain.

Q. Where else did you find blood? —A. About 50 feet up going from the middle of the department towards the office, I found a nail with blood on it.

Q. What area did this blood spatter cover?—A. I don't know, but not as much as in other places.

Q. Did you find any other spots that you thought to be blood?—A. I chipped off the back door two spots that I thought to be bloody finger prints.

Rosser Calls Dorsey "Son."

Q. How far is it from the folding door to the place where the blood spots were found?—A. Thirteen feet and about forty feet from where the nail was found.

Q. How long would it take to walk from Marietta street to the National Pencil Factory?—A. About three minutes.

Here Rosser interrupted and asked the witness:

"Did you ever time it?"

"No," answered Starnes.

Dorsey protested vehemently.

"Will you stand out of the way, Mr. Rosser, in order that I my see the witness?" said Dorsey.

"That's a good suggestion, son, kindly remind me of it," retorted Rosser.

The objection was overruled.

Q. Were Frank's remarks about his clothes made seriously or jokingly?—A. Well, he and Mr. Darley were having the conversation and the only part I heard was Frank's remark about having another suit.

Q. What are these? asked Solicitor Dorsey, handing him something. A.—They look like the chips I took from the factory floor.

Q. Is there any difference in them now and when you chipped them up? —A. They are a little cleaner.

Q. What did you do with them?—A. Gave them to Chief Lanford.

Cord Presented as Evidence.

Q. Mr. Rosser asked you something about an agreement at the police station with Frank?—A. I don't know anything more about it than from hearsay.

"Your Honor," said Dorsey, "I want to tender as evidence a cord identified by Sergeant Dobbs as having been found around the neck of Mary Phagan, her clothes, her hair ribbon, this rag and this hat.

Q. Mr. Starnes, look at these chips.—A. They look like te ones taken up at the rear door.

At this point Attorney Rosser took up the recross examination.

Q. Couldn't you swear these chips were the ones taken up at the rear door?—A. I couldn't swear it, but I am reasonably sure.

Q. Are there any other matters about this case that you know about?

Dorsey objected, but the objection was overruled.

A. So far as I recall, there is nothing else that I remember.

Attorney Rosser then sat down and Solicitor Dorsey then said:

Defense Objects to Diagram.

"I want to present this diagram as evidence," referring to the Bert Green diagram of the factory.

Attorney Rosser asked to look at it.

"No, it is not admissible," he declared. "Let the jury retire so that we may discuss it."

The jury retired.

"Black dotted lines indicate the course taken by the accused," read Mr. Rosser. "It is a Jim Dandy, but we object to it. I really did not think that my friend Dorsey and Mr. Hooper would try to put this over me."

"It has been hanging here where you could see it all day," said Mr Dorsey. "I understood you to say you accepted it. We are willing to cover up those words."

"I want to raise a further objection," said Mr. Arnold. "This is an argument for the theory of the prosecution. These dotted lines are too powerful an argument. I think the picture of the house is admissible, but anything that could be construed as an argument is not admissible."

"I withdraw the picture for the present," said Mr. Dorsey.

Court then adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

The crowd gathered early in front of the courthouse Tuesday morning. By 9 o'clock both sides of South Pryor street near its junction with Hunter were filled with people drawn by curiosity and the hope that they might have the good fortune to get admission to the small courtroom.

Taking a lesson from the first day, many of Frank's relatives avoided the stares of the throng by entering through a side door.

Secrecy was preserved as to the State's plans concerning Jim Conley, and for a time there were rumors that the negro, whose affidavits have been the most sensational feature of the case, might not be called at all. His name was not on the witness list, but Solicitor Dorsey said the omission was an error.

One Crowd as Bad As the Other, Says Lee of His Quizzers

Newt Lee, after being grilled by attorneys for more than four hours, said he was not tired, and all he wanted was a chew of tobacco. He was asked who he would rather have question him—the lawyers of the detectives.

"Mr. Rosser certainly is terrible," he declared, "but I would just as soon have one crowd as the other."

Buffalo Organizer Located in Chicago

MACON, July 29.—S. S. Bak and W. S. Wells, Supreme Lodge representatives of the Benevolent Order of Buffaloes, have come to Macon to straighten out the affairs of the order which were put in such tangled shape here last week by Dr. Bernard C. Goldberg, of Atlanta, an organizer, who, it is alleged, absconded after obtaining cash payments from scores of Macon citizens and for whom there is a warrant now outstanding.

Bak and Wells state they have apprehended Dr. Goldberg in Chicago, and that they will bring him back to Macon for prosecution.

WHITEWASH FOR SOULE, CHARGE OF SENATOR

McGregor Scores Resolution Exonerating Farm School President and Urges Close Quiz.

The introduction in the Senate of the Foster-Hixon resolution, seeking to exonerate President Andrew M. Soule, of the State Agricultural and Mechanical College, from charges made in the House, has precipitated a bitter fight in the Assembly.

Senator McGregor, of the Nineteenth, after reading the resolution, declared that the effort of his colleagues was an attempt to "whitewash" the whole thing without proper investigation, and that he proposed to fight its passage.

Charges Political Intrigue.

The resolution sets forth that President Soule is being made a victim of political intrigue; that he has rendered the State valuable service, which should be recognized.

Representative W. H. Connor, of Spalding, who introduced the resolution in the House calling for an investigation of the charges, holds a different view, however, and demands that the matter be thoroughly investigated and the defendant either declared guilty or not guilty.

In a statement Tuesday, Mr. Connor asks why Dr. Soule left for Canada immediately after his resolution was introduced in the House. He would be glad, he says, to see Dr Soule "come up like a man and explain the disposition of the $3,000 appropriated for several years for the manufacture of hog cholera serum."

Charges Sale of Serum.

He also asks what became of the $6,000 appropriated at the first time for the serum. In addition, he charges that Dr. Soule sells every bit of the serum he manufactures to-day for more than it costs him to manufacture it.

"When I was in Athens last time," said Mr. Connor, "I requested Dr. Soule to show me the poultry department. He referred me to Professor Jones, head of the department, who escorted me to the said department, contained not more than 25 fowls, representing an expenditure of $3,000 per year on that department. Does that sound reasonable?"

Ex-Georgian, Held As Kidnaper, Wins First Tilt for Child

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A. T. Martin, a real estate dealer, formerly of Fulton County, Georgia, won the first round in his fight against his divorced wife, Lillie, for the custody of their child, Sarah, when Judge Wilbur allowed him to retain the custody of the child pending the hearing of the writ of habeas corpus.

The writ alleges that Martin kidnaped the child soon after a divorce decree was granted Mrs. Martin in Fulton County, Georgia, in 1911. The court gave the child to the mother.

According to McLoughlin, Martin alleges his former wife is unfit to care for the girl.

Crazed at Sight of Ex-Wife, Man Kills Her and Himself

BIRMINGHAM, July 29.—Frenzied at sight of his former wife, Henry J. Naff, son of one of the oldest families in Birmingham, to-day walked next door to his home, where Mrs. Marie Naff, from whom he was divorced six months ago, was sitting on the porch, pulled out a pistol and shot her, and then put a bullet into his own head.

The woman died on the way to the hospital. Naff died two hours later at an infirmary.

Naff was living with his parents, while his former wife resided next door with friends.

Stricken in Theater, Dies in Ambulance

Mrs. W. T. Walton, No. 38 English avenue, died from a pulmonary hemorrhage while being rushed to the Grady Hospital in an automobile ambulance shortly after noon Tuesday.

Mrs. Walton, accompanied by her sister, Miss Ruby Orr, and J. H. Echols, was coming out of a movie theater, on Peachtree street, when she was overcome.

Mrs. Walton was about 26 years of age. She was the wife of W. T. Walton, a plumber.

CREMATORY MUST STAND RIGID TEST

Penalty Clause To Be Enforced if Plant Is Not in Operation by August 15.

"If the crematory is not completed and in operation by August 15, as called for in the contract, the penalty of $25 per day will be paid by the Destructor Company," said Councilman Claude Ashley, chairman of the Committee on Sanitation.

"Tests under the supervision of a competent engineer will be made, and I will devote all the time I can to the tests, so if the plant is accepted by the committee it will do what the contract calls for.

"I have my doubts as to the ability to burn garbage composed of one pound of combustible material to 1.95 water, but the company claims this can be done. However, it will hardly be necessary to burn garbage in such proportions.

"Another thing is the fact that there is only one generator for the entire plant, and should this generator become disabled from any cause, the whole plant will be compelled to shut down. There should be another generator in place in case of accident."

That the test will be severe and complete is certain, for Councilman Ashley will personally supervise the tests, having a competent man there in his place during his absence.

DEEP CRACKS ON JOINTS

Of Toes and Fingers. Hands So Bad Had to Sleep With Gloves On. Suffered Agony. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Completely Cured.

P. O. Box 378, El Paso, Texas. — "My trouble began December, 1911. It commenced on me by causing a scurf-like skin and my toe joints, finger joints and lips commenced to crack and split open. My finger cracks would bleed all day long; the cracks were very deep and my thumbs seemed to be cracked to the bone. My hands were so bad that I had to sleep with gloves on. The cracks in my lips would bleed often during the day and I used to put adhesive plaster across them to try to keep them closed. My toes would bleed and I would find blood in my socks when the day's work was done. The skin around the cracks was red and inflamed. I wore shoes one size too large on account of my feet being so sore. I used to become frantic with pain at times. My hands and feet used to smart.

"I suffered agony for four months. I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and as a last resort I answered and got samples immediately. After trying them one night the next morning I found relief. I went to town and got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment. From the time I commenced with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment until completely cured was just nineteen days." (Signed) Jack Harrison, Nov. 19, 1912.

Cuticura Soap 25c. and Cuticura Ointment 50c. are sold throughout the world. A single set is often sufficient. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

HUERTA HASTENS TO OBEY ORDER OF PRESIDENT

Promises Punishment of Dixon's Assailants and Release of Two Americans.

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—Spurred by President Wilson's demand for the punishment of the men who shot United States Immigration Agent Charles B. Dixon at Juarez, and the release of two other American prisoners, President Huerta to-day ordered an investigation of the case.

President Wilson's peremptory demand, presented to the Huerta Government by Nelson O'Shaughnessy, American Charge d'Affaires, demanded the immediate courtmartial and punishment of the Federal officers who shot Dixon, and the immediate release of McDonald and Bissell, United States citizens, who were condemned to death by Pasqual Orozco.

Huerta promised the release of the two prisoners and the punishment of those who shot Dixon. Dixon is now undergoing treatment in an El Paso hospital.

After O'Shaughnessy had left the President, Huerta called in his Foreign Minister and ordered him to comply with the demands of President Wilson. A most energetic campaign is now in progress at Juarez, according to word received to-day.

American residents are delighted with the firm stand taken by President Wilson and express the belief that if such a step had been taken long ago the present revolution would not have been started and Mexico would have been completely pacified.

President Thinks Mediation Is Solution.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—No Cabinet meeting was held to-day. This gave President Wilson time to study the reports and recommendations on the Mexican situation submitted to him by Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson.

The President, it was said at the White House to-day, believes mediation in some form is the logical solution of the Mexican tangle.

Notwithstanding expert opinion that mediation should not be considered and the views of Ambassador Wilson, who yesterday informed him that in his opinion conciliation of this kind should not be attempted, the President is determined, it is said, to try mediation first, either through a conciliating commission or by direct appeal to the warring factions in Mexico.

Foreigners in Mexico City Await Next Move in Fear.

MEXICO CITY, July 29.—That Americans and other foreigners are in danger if the United States fails to recognize the Huerta administration in Mexico, is the opinion prevailing here. While high Government officials decline to discuss the impending crisis, Minister of Gubernacion Urrutia, who is generally regarded as the mouthpiece of the Huerta Government, has been predicting that President Wilson will recognize the administration by to-morrow.

It is believed the conflicting views of Ambassador Wilson and the President presage the announcement of the plan for mediation by the United States. The plan will not be accepted by Huerta, according to Government officials, as interference by the United States is unwelcome.

Disquieting rumors are being circulated freely. All foreigners are anxiously awaiting the first move by President Wilson.

Envoy Called Before Senate Committee.

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Ambassador Wilson will appear before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock, to discuss with that body the situation in Mexico.

At a meeting to-day the committee authorized Chairman Bacon to request the State Department to direct the Ambassador to appear before the committee.

Report Hoke Smith Backed Negro U. S. Official Is False

The Georgian Monday printed a press dispatch from Washington which stated that Senator Hoke Smith had called on President Wilson to urge him to stand by his appointment of A. E. Patterson, a negro, to be Register of the Treasury.

Being in doubt as to the accuracy of the dispatch, The Georgian wired Senator Smith for an expression of his attitude on the negro's appointment. Tuesday morning Senator Smith wired as follows:

Washington, D. C., July 28.
The Georgian, Atlanta:

The report is utterly false. I told the President I would oppose the confirmation and endeavor to defeat the appointment.

I.W.W. Protest Buried By President's Aide

WASHINGTON, July 29.—The protest from the Industrial Workers of the World against what they termed the "incendiary tactics" of Secretary of the Navy Daniels at Seattle, about ten days ago, reached the White House to-day.

Receipt of the protest was acknowledged by Joseph Tumulty, secretary to the President, who placed the paper in a pigeonhole without bringing it to the attention of the President.

There Is Something Compelling About the New Suits

A charm that is irresistible in their rich, new color tones, their beautiful materials—the inimitable smartness of line and fashion.

Everyone Is Talking About Them

and we have never before at this season had so many early Fall Suits go out of the house—which is further proof of their appealing style.

"Good-Bye Fluffy Ruffles"

is the cry as women see themselves reflected in the tall mirrors and catch the true becomingness and real elegance in these smart suits and if they are going away or if staying at home the question of certain apparel needs is answered in a suit.

The materials are especially pleasing—all, or nearly all, are rough weaves, basket cloths, eponges, brocade effects; also many combined fabrics are used.

For instance:

An elegant Suit of rich coloring and material has a coat of matelasse in burgundy color with skirt of plaid storm serge in burgundy and blue. Long cutaway coat, draped skirt, button-trimmed. This suit is only $25.

The coats are much longer than last season, and are in cutaway style; some taper to a decided point in back.

Among the leading shades are: Browns—from light, leather tones through to very rich mahogany. Red tones are good, too—very dark, shading into wines and mulberry. Blues, of course, are in favor and many new shades are shown.

From $15 to $65

—the prices run; and there are suits for all tastes, all occasions, from the perfectly plain tailored model—to the very elegant, fur-trimmed, two-piece costume.

SLAIN ENGINEER CALLED VICTIM OF SLANDER

W. D. Porter Pleads Self-Defense for Killing Samuel Jackson in Georgia Road Roundhouse.

Investigation by detectives Tuesday morning bared a sensational story of the alleged cause of the killing of Samuel Jackson, 40 years old, an engineer in the employ of the Georgia Railroad, who was shot by W. D. Partee, a fellow engineer, in the roundhouse of the road late Monday afternoon.

According to information obtained by Detectives Sturdivant and Davis the shooting of Jackson was the direct result of charges made by Partee that Jackson had been intimate with the wife of another engineer on the same road. Partee and Jackson both ran engines on the main line of the Georgia.

Monday the tale came to the ears of the husband of the woman, and he asked Jackson about it. Jackson, it is said, denied the accusation, and suggested that both confront Partee and make him retract the statements.

Carried Coat Over Arm.

Jackson and the husband, according to the evidence secured by the detectives waited until Partee came in from his run, and then entered the roundhouse to ask him about the statements he is said to have made. Partee was standing in about the center of the roundhouse when Jackson entered. The latter had his coat thrown over his arm.

"Partee," said Jackson, "I——"

As Jackson spoke, according to the police, Pardee turned quickly, drew a revolver, and fired. The bullet struck Jackson in the neck and ranged upward, penetrating the brain. Jackson was hurried to Grady Hospital, where he died on the operating table fifteen minutes after the shot was fired. Partee surrendered to the police and is still locked up in police headquarters on a charge of murder. He probably will be given a preliminary hearing Tuesday.

Claims Self-Defense.

Partee declared, after his arrest, that he shot Jackson because he thought Jackson was going to shoot him. He admitted there had been bad blood between them for some time, but declined to give any cause for the trouble.

"Jackson has been gunning for me for some time," said Partee. "He has been making threats to kill me, and I have been told of these threats I have gone armed for the past week, and was determined to take no chances when he attacked me. When I alighted from my engine Monday afternoon and turned to walk into the roundhouse, I turned and saw Jackson walking toward me. He had his coat thrown over his arm, and I thought he had a revolver concealed in it. I called to him several times to halt, and when he refused to do so, I drew my gun and fired. I did it to save my own life."

No weapon was found on Jackson when his clothing was searched by the police.

Jackson and Partee boarded together at Mrs. J. R. Murden's, 896 DeKalb avenue, until about a month ago, when Jackson left. Partee formerly lived in Smyrna, while Partee came to Atlanta from Augusta.

PONY RIVALS IN SCRAMBLE FOR FREE VOTES

Final Offer About to End—Contest Man Again Warns Against Overconfidence.

Red Letter Ballots, the sort that yield 2,000 votes for 22, must be turned in by The Georgian and American pony contestants before Tuesday night. From indications close to the hour of closing, thousands upon thousands of votes will be earned in just this way by the boys and girls trying to win one of the beautiful Shetlands.

J. D. Tucker, Decatur, R. No. 1.

Thursday night the contest comes to a close. All the struggle and excitement will be over then, and nothing will remain but to count the votes and announce the winners.

Between now and Thursday night, though, the tale will be told. There is not a contestant who has his place "clinched"—not one who can not be beaten. Some of the contestants will dispute this. They believe themselves safe. They are not. Overconfidence is going to bring grief to many a youngster.

By way of diversion, however, there will be a parade of the 22 ponies Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, in which all the contestants are invited to participate. It will be a last glimpse of the ponies before they pass into the hands of new owners.

DENIES SHE PUT GLASS IN DRINK FOR HUSBAND

Mrs. Blanche Sweat Declares the Relatives of Mate Incited Him to Make Charge.

Emphatic denial of her husband's charges that she tried to kill him by putting particles of broken glass in his coffee cup are made in the cross bill filed by Mrs. Blanch Sweat in answer to the petition for divorce filed recently by her husband, E. R. Sweat. The husband bases his plea for divorce on the assertion that his wife had tried to kill him by placing the glass in his cup.

In her cross bill Mrs. Sweat declares that Sweat himself had, through accident and while drunk, placed the broken glass in the cup. The incident occurred at supper time on July 15, 1913, Mrs. Sweat says. She asserts that Sweat had broken the covering of the sugar bowl of which he had sweetened his coffee, and that some of the glass had dropped into the cup. Mrs. Sweat declares that when she learned the glass was in the cup she had asked her husband to secure medical attention, which he refused to do.

Mrs. Sweat also charges her husband's parents with prejudicing him against her, and declares that they induced him to accuse her of placing the glass in the cup. At first, she says, her husband told her he had dropped the glass in the cup, but that later, after he had conferred with his parents, accused her of trying to kill him.

Mrs. Sweat asserts also that she has been assaulted and brutally treated by her husband's father, for which, she says, he is now under bond in the Superior Court. She also charges her husband with drunkenness and failure to support her.

T. N. Page Delays Arrival at Rome

Special Cable to The Georgian.

ROME, July 29.—Although Thomas Nelson Page, the new Ambassador to Italy, will leave the United States on September 3, he will not be at his post by the middle of the month, as he has decided to go first to England and stay some time there. By so doing he will avoid arriving in Italy long before the time when he can present his credentials to the King, who generally does not return to the Capital until the reopening of Parliament, usually the second fortnight in November.

Mr. Page, even more than his predecessors, will be confronted by the difficulty of finding a suitable residence, as nearly all the apartments in the Roman palaces are occupied by tenants who have no desire to vacate.

GIRL IN CONTEST PROVES SELF LIVE WIRE

Keeps Her Eyes Open and Gets the Business—Opportunity Open for All Contestants.

There's at least one girl worker in The Georgian's Want Ad Contest who is going to be a real business woman some day. She is a live wire.

She walked up Oak street in West End, planning a call on a friend. As she passed Ashby street she saw a negro woman with a telescope grip in one hand and a bundle in the other, leaving a house. Miss Contestant walked in, rang the bell, and the mistress of the house came to the door.

"I want to find you a new cook to take the place of the one just quit," said Miss Contestant.

The housewife looked puzzled.

"A Georgian Want Ad will do it," explained Miss Contestant. "The cook will be here -tomorrow."

And the next morning the housewife had a choice of four would-be servants, brought by one little ad which cost 20 cents.

A Want Ad in The Sunday American or The Georgian will find almost any want, as Atlanta readers have learned by experience. Contestants in the race for an automobile, a piano, a trip to Callafornia and other prizes are learning how to suggest want ads, and almost every person they approach finds a need he hadn't thought of before. And the Want Ad way is the quickest way on earth to get results.

Friends of the contestants may send their want ads direct to the office if they like, requesting that their votes be cast for any contestant they desire to name. Somebody is going to win a handsome prize, and your friend might as well be the winner.

Burglars Make Two Attempts to Break Into Home of Juror

Two negro burglars made two attempts Monday night to enter the home of F. V. L. Smith, No. 481 Cherokee avenue, one of the jurors in the Frank trial. They were frightened away by Mrs. Smith, who was alone in the house with her 4-week-old child.

Mrs. Smith saw the negroes on the porch the first time and succeeded in frightening them away by making a noise in the house. She had hardly taken her seat, however, when the would-be burglars returned. Mrs. Smith calmly walked to the phone and telephoned the police.

When Officers Shumate and Cochran, who answered the call, arrived five minutes later, the burglars were gone.

Hundreds of New Suits Have Arrived, That the Women of Atlanta May See and Know The Fashions for Fall.

The woman whose vacation will take her to the cool mountains or northern resorts will find in these new fall models the weight and style of suit that will serve her best. They are not too heavy, and yet they are, in line, in material, in trimming, the style that will be best for fall.

There are literally hundreds of new suits now lined up in the big crystal cases, bringing their message of new styles, new fabrics, new colors, new fashion-turns.

We emphasize the quantity merely to impress that the announcement of this display is based upon the fact that the display is indeed worthy of the attention of every woman who would off with the old and on with the new.

The suits are ready!

And they are novel and interesting.

Novel and interesting from many viewpoints.

There are draped cutaway coats; there are cutaway coats that button close up to the neck, and there are others that have the semblance of a blouse—all different from styles we have known.

And coats are to be longer this fall, they measure 38 to 42 inches.

Many of the skirts are slashed, many are draped in one way and another.

Materials show the new scheme of things. Soft finished fabrics are prominent, velour cloths self-striped, crepons, ratine striped fabrics, bayadere poplins, trimmings often take a contrasting shade, and again the use of embroidered velvet is pronounced on collars, on cuffs, on skirts.

What are the colors?

See with your own eyes! Naming the mahogany, cinnamon, prune, amethyst, Copenhagen and navy shades is but poor apology for their richness and beauty.

This is a worthy display of the new suit fashions, one that a woman may approach with the confidence that the suit she selects will be an authentic style.

AGED PAIR FLEE IN TERROR OF POORHOUSE

Illinois Couple Reach Atlanta After Wandering Aimlessly About Country for a Month.

Fleeing from an Illinois poorhouse, William Smith and his wife, both more than 80 years old, arrived in Atlanta Monday afternoon after a month of aimless drifting about the country, with no money and no idea of their ultimate destination.

They had eaten nothing for nearly twelve hours, their clothes were mere rags, and they were so feeble they had to be assisted to seats in the station by Train Caller Charles Griffin and the matron, Mrs. J. W. Payne.

A month ago they had a little home in Brown County, Ill., they said, a house and an acre or two on which they raised enough to keep them alive. One day the old man hurt his foot. Unable to work, they appealed to their neighbors for aid. The county officials took up the matter and decided to send them to the poorhouse.

The old man and his wife, once fairly well-to-do, were terror-stricken at the thought of living on the bounty of the county. When the poorhouse wagon came and took their furniture and their meager belongings they pleaded to be allowed to spend one more night in their own home. That night they gathered what little of their clothing was left, collected their few pennies and fled.

Their only idea of their destination is that they want to "go somewhere South." They have no relatives, but say they have a friend in the "South" who owns a plantation.

The old people were taken in charge by Mrs. Payne and Mr. Griffin and made as comfortable as possible for the night. They were still at the Terminal Station at an early hour Tuesday morning, and it has not yet been determined what will be done with them. They say they are willing to go anywhere except to a poorhouse.

John Garrity is likely to secure the Chief Deputy's position in the event Robert Saussy is elected.

Thousands Suffer For Food in Sofia

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BELGRADE, July 29.—Unless food can be rushed to Sofia thousands will die of starvation. The cutting of railroad communications due to the war between Bulgaria and the other Balkan states, has cut off all supplies. There is considerable suffering among all classes.

As a last resort, Bulgaria to-day appealed to Roumania to reopen the route between Varna and Sofia so that food can be rushed to the Bulgarian capital.

Ex-Georgia Rector Injured in Runaway

WYTHEVILLE, VA., July 29.—The Rev. Francis H. The Rev. Mr. Craighill was ordained by Bishop Nelson, of Atlanta, in 1898.

MISSING HEIRESS WAS ON A VISIT, SAYS FATHER

Orlando Awtrey, of Acworth, Ga., whose daughter, Miss Lynette Awtrey, vanished while en route from New York to Atlanta, has issued a statement in which he declares that his daughter's disappearance from home was the result of a change in her plans by which she decided to visit friends in the West.

He declares that in all probability she failed to notify him of her change of plans because, having been away for several months, she didn't realize that any additional delay in reaching home would cause uneasiness. His statement follows:

"My daughter left home in May on a tour of Europe with a party of Georgians, conducted by Miss Olive Faw, a teacher of Marietta.

"Before leaving home she purchased a ticket for an extensive tour of Europe and was provided with funds for a much longer tour, if she desired to take it.

"On completing the first tour that the party was making, she consulted me about the second one, and decided to return home. Leaving the party in London, she sailed from Southampton and reached New York City with ample funds, probably about $200. She reached there last week.

"On reaching New York she wired me of her safe arrival, and, as she had plenty of funds, she seems to have changed her plans for coming directly home and to have gone on a trip into the West. She had, however, sent a portion of her baggage home, and when it reached Acworth without her, the family naturally began to feel uneasy and started an investigation as to her whereabouts.

"Having been away for several months, she probably didn't realize that a few days of additional delay would cause any special uneasiness.

"On reaching her destination she wired me and is now en route home. She has made several former visits to the West and has friends there."

Miss Awtrey went to Ogden, Utah, from which place she sent a telegram last Sunday asking for aid. She probably will arrive within a week.

ACCUSED DOCTOR CALLED BANKRUPT

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed Tuesday against Dr. M. W. Lewis, of Carrollton, Ga. The petitioners named are S. H. Burns and C. E. Root, both of Carrollton. Dr. Lewis figured prominently in police records recently when arrested for registering at a hotel with a girl.

The girl's father took her home, warning Lewis that if he returned to Carrollton he would be in danger.

Lewis' creditors assert that he owes debts which exceed $1,000 and that he has not been seen in Carrollton for some time.

Fifty acres of land valued at $1,500, two horses, one automobile, two wagons, two buggies and miscellaneous household effects and office fixtures are named as assets.

CHAINS FOR WIFE DESERTERS URGED

Probation Officer Coogler is preparing a bill which he will present to the Legislature, providing for the punishment of the man who deserts his wife and children. The bill will be sent to a member of the Fulton County delegation with the request that it be introduced in the House.

The bill provides that a man refusing to support his wife or child shall first be brought before the probation officer, and if such office does not exist in the county, then to be taken before the Ordinary and placed on probation to support them. In the event of his failure to do this, after being placed on probation, he will be guilty of a misdemeanor and subject to a heavy fine or one year's sentence at hard labor on the chaingang.

In the event of the payment of a fine by the defendant on a charge like this, the bill provides that the fine, either in whole or part, shall be turned over to the probation officer or Ordinary for the support of the deserted wife or child.

CHAINGANGS IN GEORGIA

You Will Write "Hope" Into Our Laws

"The way of a man with a maid."
---Proverbs 30-19.

"Judge righteously and plead the cause of the poor."
---Proverbs 31:9.

"For we are saved by hope."
---Romans 8:24.

It is not a doll in her arms.

The child-mother is nursing her fatherless baby.

What have we done to her?

You said in your laws:

"She can sell herself if she is ten years old."

But she must be twenty-one before she can trade a cow or hog.

You appropriated thousands of dollars to save cattle from the tick—

Thousands to make hog cholera serum—

And thousands to study hogs that are sick.

You gave nothing for these pitiable girls.

Georgia has no place for them.

For the want of it, seventy-five known to us—they are only children—they are being lost to-day.

Only God knows how many more!

Forty-four other States have reformatories for such as these.

The bill introduced by Jones of Coweta, and Mills of Butts, provides a reformatory for girls in Georgia.

The Prison Commission approves it.

The Penitentiary Committee has unanimously recommended that it pass.

The Committee on Appropriations referred it to a subcommittee of Judge W. H. Griffin, Chairman; S. E. Berry, C. F. Holberg, A. B. Greene and J. L. Lane.

They have recommended that thirty thousand dollars be appropriated and the bill be made the law.

Father, grant that this be done.

No man in Georgia values a cow or hog more than he does a girl.

We had not seen the bitter need.

You can and will provide for these.

A boy of seventeen stole a ride on a train.

You arrested him for this.

He did not have the money to pay his fine.

For this lack of funds, we clothed him in stripes and put him in our chaingang for eight months.

If our laws had provided for probation, our Judge could have released the boy on good behavior.

He could have given the boy a chance.

By writing Probation into our laws, you would not compel—

But you would give your Judge the right to save a boy or girl.

A bill introduced by Senator Tarver and Representatives Myrick and Gower making this the law is pending in the Legislature.

Judges and the Prison Commission—

And the Judiciary Committees of both Houses have approved it.

You will.

If the Indeterminate Sentence were the law in Georgia, a Judge in sentencing a man would say:

"Not less than ——— not more than ——— years."

Within the limits named, the man's stay in the penitentiary would depend upon himself.

Hope of liberty instead of fear of the lash would make him obey.

He would win release by showing himself fit to be free.

His incentive for not committing crime again would be this: caught a second time, he might be sentenced as an habitual criminal for the greatest number of years prescribed for that particular crime.

In Illinois, in the twelve years before the indeterminate sentence became the law, one judge sentenced either three or four different times the same one hundred criminals.

In the twelve years since it was made the law, only four have had to be re-sentenced by him.

Commitments to the penitentiary have been forty per cent less despite the great increase in population in that State in the ten years since the indeterminate sentence became part of its law.

Twenty-two States have adopted it.

The Prison Commission and the Penitentiary Committees of the House and Senate approve the bill of Senator Foster and Representative Loyd that will make it the law of Georgia.

You, like them, would rather save than destroy the fallen.

You will help make this the aim of Georgia.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IT WERE BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

For the past year I have known a young lady three years my junior. As we live on the same street, we meet and converse very frequently. Now, I care very much for her and have tried to show this fact through my actions. As I am a student, much of my time is taken up by my studies, and so I have decided that unless she cares for me I would only be wasting time by meeting her whatsoever. Since her actions did not show whether or not she loves me, I wrote her a letter explaining my circumstances, including the fact that it would be five or six years before I would be through with my studies and asked that she write me a letter telling me whether or not she cares for me. Do you think that I was correct in taking that measure to find out her affection for me? "ME LIBERA."

You asked her to reveal her heart to you, at the same time telling her that you could offer nothing in return.

It was a little selfish in you, and I hope she refused to answer. Wait till in position to marry her before asking her if she loves you.

DON'T BE UNFAIR TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young man 20 years of age, and I am in business for myself and make out very good. I am in love with my friend's sister, whom I have known for over two years, and who is probably one year older than myself. Her people are of a very low class, and I am puzzled whether they will be agreeable to my parents. Her people think a great deal of me.

I have only taken her out twice, and I have not informed her of my love, for the reason that I know her people are very anxious to have her married. I do not intend to get married before the age of 25. I love her very much, and I am afraid that I might lose her.

YOUNG LOVER.

A five-year engageemnt is most unfair to the girl, and for her sake you must not consider it a moment.

Your problem lies with yourself. Unless you are sure her family is as good as yours, and her entry into it would cause her neither pain nor humiliation, you must let her alone, to be wooed and won by someone who has no such opinions.

THAT IS NOT ENOUGH.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 21 and am keeping company with a girl three years my junior. I am deeply in love with this girl, and no matter how I try to show her how much I love her I don't seem able to win her. My salary is $16 a week and good chances for advancement. S. B. C.

Sixteen a week is not enough to marry on, and prospects for more do not always materialize. I want you to win the girl's love, but I am glad it is not won under the present conditions. Wait, my boy; for you are only a boy, you know.

DON'T

DON'T forget when the trouble you fear most comes to you, it will be much easier to bear than you imagine.

If you have a strong point in your character, don't make it a weakness by admiring it too much.

Don't sit in idleness waiting for your ship to come in. You will be luckier than most people if, when it finally comes in, the Silent Boatman isn't in charge.

Don't keep a diary. Someone might produce it when your enemies are trying to prove you are insane.

Don't forget that every task you neglect that you may take a vacation will meet you at the station with all its relatives and friends when you get back.

If you are blessed with a good memory, don't weaken it by cherishing things against people.

Don't put so much hope on the New Thought that you slight the importance of the good old Second Thought.

Don't forget that if a little fairy should appear and make visible the burdens all are carrying on their backs, yours would seem small and trivial in comparison with most.

Don't put a barbed wire fence around your own sensitive spots and insist that others have bars down.

Don't tell little lies. If you must be untruthful, tell big ones and become known as a statistician.

Don't forget that next week you may be looking back with regret because you didn't show greater appreciation of to-day.

THIS STORY WON PRIZE OF $100.00

How "The Triple Tie" Was Broken

By MRS. LUCIE G. THURMAN.
375 S. Boulevard, Atlanta,
Winner of First Prize—$100.

In Mr. Mitchell's story of "The Triple Tie" interest in the hero, Gordon Kelly, was at a keen pitch when Chapter XLIII was printed in The Georgian on June 28. Readers had been informed of Kelly's capture by mountaineers. Then the scene shifted quickly to the Polo Grounds in New York where the Red Sox and White Sox were to play off the triple tie. Every reader was startled by the announcement that, with two men out and three on bases, Gordon Kelly would bat in place of Leonard for the Red Sox.

How did Kelly escape from the mountaineers, what happened to Mildred Deery, how did Gordon acquit himself in the famous game, how did he know baseball without ever having seen a game and what happened after the game were the problems which the contestants had to solve.

The judges awarded first prize of $100 to Mrs. Lucie G. Thurman, No. 375 South Boulevard, Atlanta.

"STEVE, this is Miss Mildred at the phone. I want you to get out the big car and meet Elmer and myself at the bridge, near the entrance of Mr. Gordon's place, where you have sometimes met us. Can you be there in an hour from now?"

"Yes, ma'am," said Steve quickly, remembering his master's injunction to do whater Miss Mildred told him, "I'll shore be there."

Mildred hung up the receiver and quickly got into her tan walking suit, with short skirt and leggins. Then she called Elmer to bring out the runabout and take her for a ride.

Delighted at the prospect of an outing with Mildred, Elmer hurried to do her bidding. In a few moments, after saying good-by to Mrs. Sheperd, telling her not to expect them back too early, they were off.

On the way to the bridge, Mildred confided to Elmer her plan, which was to try to see Gordon, and in some way communicate with him—at least to locate him, and if possible see him, if only for an instant. This plan filled the heart of the adventurous boy with delight, and had not his hands been busily engaged at the wheel at that moment, he would have hugged Mildred for sheer joy.

Steve met them at the bridge, and leaving the runabout inside the grounds, they got into the big car with Steve. Again on the main road they drove rapidly in the direction given by Gordon in his letters to Mildred.

It was now growing late in the afternoon; the October sunshine was bright and golden on the autumn leaves. The air was cool and crisp, bringing out most charmingly the roses in Mildred's cheeks. Her eyes sparkled brightly and her heart was happy with anticipation of again seeing Gordon.

Arriving at the bridge, where the road crosses Few Creek, about a mile from where Gordon was held a prisoner, Mildred and Elmer left the car, instructing Steve to be ready for the return trip at a moment's notice from them. They were now about fifteen miles from the Deery bungalow, as far as they could go on the main road. They must now follow the stream for a mile, where they would come into the clearing at the bottom of the hill spoken of by Gordon. The path was narrow and rough, and Mildred was glad she had worn her short skirt and legging.

They Find Kelly.

The distance was soon covered by the two young people. They came to the clearing, and saw the hill which they must climb and then descend into the valley, where they felt sure the cabin must be hidden among the trees.

Silently they climbed the hill, more silently descended the other side, their hearts thumping hard all the while. At the same instant they saw the curling smoke issuing from the tree tops. Although the cabin could not be seen, they knew they were near the spot they sought. Not a sound reached their straining ears. Cautiously they advanced through the dense undergrowth, near the clearing about the cabin, getting down on all-fours in order to keep themselves hidden. With every nerve tense, they looked and listened, but no sound of human beings reached their ears. Whispering to Elmer to remain quiet, Mildred slowly arose. The sight which now greeted her eyes almost overwhelmed her. About 50 feet in front of her sat Gordon, his back against a tree, reading a newspaper. He seemed intensely interested, and did not stir. His left side and part of his back were turned toward her.

Her quick glance informed her that he was not alone. About fifteen feet in front of him, between Gordon and the cabin, sat a man on guard. His back was also toward Mildred, and she could not see his face, but the gun in his right hand pointed in Gordon's direction. The end of the cabin was toward the man, and there was no opening which she could see. With a stifled gasp Mildred sank down beside Elmer and whispered in his ear what she had seen. The tears flowed down her cheeks, and for a moment blinded her. In whispers they discussed how to attract Gordon's attention. Suddenly the bright sunshine fell full on something suspended on a slender chain from Mildred's neck. It was her vanity box. An inspiration she thought, and whispering to Elmer to be still, she again rose, opened the box, exposing a small mirror full in the sunshine. It cast a reflection on Gordon's paper, he moved slightly and raised his eyes to the man in front of him, who still sat with his eyes fixed on vacancy. At this moment another gleam fell across the paper.

Gordon lifted his paper to conceal his face and turned toward the place from whence came the gleam. A glad smile spread over his features as he saw Mildred's face peering from among the bushes so near him. Elmer too, stood by her side, for, boy-like, he could not be kept down. Instantly, and with the utmost caution, Gordon motioned them to lie down, then slowly rising and dropping his paper, he stretched himself and yawned lazily.

Going into the cabin he brought out his ball and bat and began practice. After batting the ball several times in other directions than the spot he was anxious to approach (all the while talking to himself, as he had formed this habit since these mountaineers were averse to talking to him), he finally batted the ball high into the air to fall near Mildred. Timing himself to the instant he was under the ball catching it easily about three feet from Mildred.

"Is the car at the bridge?" he softly asked. She nodded an emphatic "Yes," and Mildred and Elmer sat down.

Gordon Escapes.

Glancing in the direction of his guard, Gordon saw the black-bearded man turn his face toward him. Without again looking toward Mildred, he said, as if speaking to the ball, "Get back to the car as fast as you can, when you get there I'll be there too," at the same time throwing the ball and running and making considerable noise to hold the attention of the guard.

Gordon kept to the far side of the clearing until he knew Mildred and Elmer had had time to climb the hill and descend to the creek on the other side. Then passing the cabin door, he saw one of the men bending over the fire, his back to the door, busy preparing supper. The other two were not to be seen.

Again the ball sped upward—this time toward the spot so lately occupied by Mildred and Elmer. The eyes of the guard followed the ball. After the ball went Gordon. As he neared the stump on which sat the guard with the gun, Gordon's arm suddenly was raised and the bat in his hand descended upon the man's head with such force that without a groan he fell to the ground, a helpless and inanimate mass.

Snatching up the guard's gun as it fell from his nerveless grasp, Gordon, without a backward glance, began a sprint, which had it been witnessed by his baseball friends, would have won him a pennant for life.

Ten minutes later the black-bearded guard slowly and painfully rose to a sitting posture. Rubbing the dust from his eyes at the same time the cobwebs from his addled brain, and gingerly feeling the side of his sore and swollen head, remarked to himself with characteristic brevity, "I reckon he's gone," and made no further move or comment until called in to supper.

As Mildred and Elmer were nearing the bridge, they heard someone crashing through the underbrush behind them; instinctively they hid themselves in the bushes at the side of the path. An instant later, Gordon's form loomed up big and black, and Mildred, with a glad cry, sprang into his outstretched arms, and Elmer was wholly forgotten in that blissful moment.

The Wedding.

The return trip to Gordon's home was quickly made. Steve was sent to Gordon's home to inform those there that he was safe and sound, and after seeing Mildred home would catch the first train for New York. Gordon had reached this decision after reading the baseball news that his services were needed by the Red Sox. Steve was instructed to pack his suit case and return with it to the bungalow.

When the big car reached its destination great was the surprise of its occupants to find that Mildred's parents had arrived during her absence. For a time everything was excitement, everybody talked at once, and it was difficult to make explanations.

Finally, Mildred and Gordon found themselves alone in a quiet corner of the porch, and after some necessary preliminaries they decided to ask the consent of Mr. and Mrs. Deery for a quiet home wedding at 10 o'clock next morning in Atlanta.

Mr. and Mrs. Deery had talked the matter over and were prepared to hear of an engagement before Gordon left for his train that night, but consternation reigned when the happy pair coolly announced their intention to be married next day.

After a hasty conversation over long distance telephone, there was a more hasty departure for Atlanta. A happy, although somewhat weary party alighted from the train at a very late hour at the Terminal Station where they were met by a big touring car and taken to the home of the Deerys.

At 10 o'clock next morning the parlors of the Deery home were thrown open to a few hastily invited friends to witness the marriage of Mildred and Gordon. At 11 o'clock the Southern train pulled out of Atlanta, and from a window in the private car of Mr. Deery could be seen the rosy, smiling faces of two young people waving "au revoir" to those left behind. They were the happy faces of Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Kelly.

How Kelly Learned.

Gordon Kelly was reared in the mountains, away from city temptations, and loving the outdoor and athletic life, was almost physically perfect. His father, fearing the old adage "like father, like son," kept Gordon in the mountains, and had tutors to instruct him at home. Great love existed between the parents and the boy, and the mother so exercised her loving influence over him that he was now formed in habits and character. He always was ready to reverently acknowledge that his rearing and progress was due to the influence of his mother.

Gordon Kelly had always been intensely interested in the national game, as was evidenced by his intimate knowledge of baseball players. Most men at Gordon's age prefer athletics to literature, so he used his knowledge and constructive ability to contrive and invent appliances that would furnish pleasure and excitement.

The gymnasium was complete in all its appointments. The idea of an electrical apparatus for timing speed on the track was also used between the bases. We have no evidence that Gordon engaged in pitching but that he did in batting, running bases and fielding.

In throwing an "out" curve, the pitcher in throwing the ball passes his fingers to the left and under the ball with a quick jerk just before it leaves his hand. The ball travels a certain distance in a straight line, then "breaks" to the left—from the batter. An "in" curve is made by letting the ball escape from the ends of the fingers—the hand being on the right side of the ball and the thumb on the left.

In the pitcher's box was a breech-loading mechanism for projecting the ball to a mechanical catcher. On the outside of the muzzle of the pitcher was a movable "curver," circular in form, and in size a little less than a fourth of the circumference of a baseball. Flanges—circular in form—held the curver in position, and when an "out" curve was desired, the "curver" was moved around to the left side of muzzle of the pitcher; for an "in" curve, to the right side, etc. With this device, and degree of curve "down and out," "down and in," etc., could be produced. This "curver" caused the necessary quickened revolution which caused the "break" before the plate was reached by the ball.

The mechanical catcher was an elliptically-shaped receptacle, the back of which was closed with loosely-hung canvas. This loose canvas did not break the speed of the ball too suddenly, and allowed the ball to drop into a large funnel, which deflected the ball into a tube, the ball now rolled down this declined tube to below and just back of the mechanical pitcher. Here the ball was raised and dropped into a hopper.

In the bottom of this hopper was a tube which deflected all the balls to a point just above the loading place in the breech. The breech was now projected forward, and four fingers of flexible steel, slightly bent outward, clutched and held the ball. The bore was of proper size to admit the steel fingers. The projection of the breech into the mechanism caused the powerful spring in same just back of the ball to be closed. This spring was spiral, and the ball end of it was closed over. Inside the spring was a small steel rod, with a trigger at its end—when the breech had entered the mechanism the proper distance, the jaws of the trigger automatically opened, holding the spring until it was released, thus again pitching the ball. Several balls might be used in this device so that too much time might not be consumed.

Mechanical Pitcher.

Electric signs are constructed to flash single letters, words, lines and then the whole sign. This might be termed loading. The mechanical pitcher was so constructed that its delivery could be "loaded," and Gordon would load it with curves and balls, of course, keenly no memory record of same. The mechanism could be stopped at any moment by Gordon. Steve was there to retrieve balls batted to the field.

In the running of bases, it must be remembered that Gordon was very fleet of foot. However, in sliding to bases, he had a mechanical arm constructed with a trigger, over which trigger he was compelled to slide. The body coming in contact with the trigger caused the arm to descend upon the slider. In this way Gordon became expert in the "fall-away" slide.

In fielding, a mechanical thrower would throw fly or ground balls, and Gordon being at a given distance would endeavor to field the ball. If the ball was fielded, Gordon would make the test harder. Practice brought proficiency. Thus Kelly LEARNED to bat, field, and run bases.

About the beginning of the ninth inning of the last game, which was to end the "triple tie," a beautiful Southern girl, handsomely gowned, smiling happily, and accompanied only by her maid, was seen to enter a box in the grand stand. Instantly her eyes were riveted upon the form of a tall, lithe man, who walked briskly and with the air of a victor to the batter's box.

"Gordon Kelly batting in place of Leonard."

Boston crowd goes wild—flags wave, rooters cheer, and the band plays "Dixie" as Gordon steps to the plate. He doffs his cap and bows toward the box where Mildred is seated. Silence prevails over the multitude, except for the coaching of Stahl. The runners are worrying Walsh as much as possible. Manager Callahan and Captain Lord shout encouragement to the White Sox. On the first pitch to Gordon Connelly calls loudly "one ball." Gordon fouls the second over the grandstand. Walsh tries to fool Gordon with an "out-shoot." "Two balls!" yells the umpire.

Kelly Slides Home.

Gordon fouls the fourth ball pitched over the scoreboard. "Strike two," calls Connelly. Chicago contingent now cheering wildly and throwing hats in the air. Walsh now presents Gordon with another ball.

"Three balls," says Connelly.

Two strikes and three balls.

Not a sound is to be heard.

"All the way around now, Gordon!" yells Stahl.

Walsh decides that he can fool Gordon with an "in" curve. CRACK! and the ball begins to soar and the runners are off at the sound of the bat and are racing for the plate. The great crowd is cheering, flags are waving, hats are thrown in the air. Three of the runners have crossed the plate—the White Sox rightfielder has recovered the ball and the players are ready to relay the ball to the plate, for if Gordon can be caught there the game will be tied. At the moment that the second baseman receives the ball Gordon is about twenty feet from the plate and going like the wind. The ball is snapped to the White Sox catcher at which moment Stahl, who has been coaching Gordon, roars, "slide, Kelly, slide"—down goes Gordon and under and outward from the catcher. Connelly spreads both hands palms downward signifying "safe." Red Sox win, four to three.

After the close of the wonderful game the beautiful Southern girl was joined by the man of the bat. Together they entered a waiting taxi which conveyed them to their hotel, from where began a wedding tour, which included a trip around the world, with the time unlimited.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

The Newly Wed Mrs. Cameron Bids Her Mother Farewell.

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.
(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gryce has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Dr. Cameron is greatly distressed. Gryce is continuing his story concerning his interview with Mrs. Gretorex.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I felt troubled. I looked at the mother to ascertain what her real fears were. But they did not seem to be any worse than those she had expressed. Was she blind to the possibilities? I felt it my duty to repeat a former question.

"'Mrs. A.,' said I, 'I will try to find your child. The fact that she had too little money to go far from home will facilitate matters. But first I must be sure that there is no third party mixed up in this case and that party a gentleman. You are certain she was not secretly interested in some unknown person?'

"'I can only repeat her words,' replied the poor mother. 'The very last time I saw her (it was day before yesterday evening) she looked so feverish and acted so unlike herself that I ventured to ask her if she were sure she would not fall sick before her wedding day. She said with an unnatural laugh I hear ringing yet, "I have no idea of falling ill and I shall certainly not do so till after I have married the doctor.'

"Did I say," inquired the detective, pausing, "that Miss A.'s lover was a doctor?"

This was too much for his uneasy auditor. Leaping to his feet, Dr. Cameron confronted the speaker and exclaimed hotly:

No Mood to Talk.

"You ar playing with me. It is of my intended wife you are speaking, and you are amusing yourself with a long-drawn-out tale, when all I want to know is, whether I am to find my bride at the altar when I go there, or whether I am to be made the victim of an outrageous scandal that will affect my whole future career. Don't you know that it is now half-past four and that at eight——"

"Softly," interrupted the other, "I am Ebenezer Gryce and I seldom go slow when I ought to go fast. If I take up your time by telling you a long-drawn-out tale it is because——"

But the doctor was in no mood for talk.

"Tell me," said he, "if Miss Gretorex has returned to her father's house."

"She has not."

"And they have not heard from her?"

The detective shook his head.

Dr. Cameron's mouth took a grim curve. "There is to be no wedding then, I see." Then as the other did not answer he broke out into a harsh laugh, and turned toward the window. "I will send and countermand the order for my carriage," he now dryly remarked.

Mr. Gryce advanced and touched him softly on the shoulder.

"On the contrary," said he, "you will send for it to come at once; there is use for it."

"I do not understand you."

"You have not heard my story out."

"Speak, then. If nothing but slow torture will answer, why I must summon up my courage and submit."

"Good! Meanwhile you will send for your carriage?"

"If you say I will require it."

"I have already said so."

"Wait," cried the other, stopping him as he reached out his hand toward the electric bell. "Where am I expected to go?"

"To the C—— Hotel."

"A fine ride on my wedding day."

"A necessary one."

"And whom am I expected to see there?"

"A young woman who has registered herself as Mildred Farley, but who I think looks precisely like the original of that picture I see hanging over your fireplace."

Dr. Cameron shuddered.

A Resemblance.

"Don't you know whether it is the original or not?"

"No; if I did I should not need you. I should take Mrs. Gretorex with me instead."

"And why don't you do so as it is?"

"For two reasons: First, she is a woman and I wish to save her all the suffering I can; secondly, she is a marked person, and her appearance in a crowded hotel on the day of her daughter's anticipated wedding might awaken comment."

"And mine?"

"You are a doctor. You can go everywhere, at any time, without causing the least scandal."

"And the young lady? Have you thought how very agreeable to her my presence will probably be, if she is as you surmise the woman I am expected to marry in four hours?"

"I have thought of everything. The young lady shall not see you. You shall only see her."

"And if I find her the stranger her name implies?"

"You shall drive to Mr. Gretorex's house as fast as you can, confident that your bride will be there to welcome you."

Dr. Cameron no longer hesitated. The carriage was ordered. While they were waiting for it, the doctor asked for the remainder of the story he had before disdained to hear.

"I can listen now," he said. "I already know the worst."

With an enigmatical bend of the brows the detective continued.

Unlimited Confidence.

"Mrs. Gretorex has an unlimited confidence in the police. When she had told me that her daughter was missing, and that she had gone out of the house without baggage, and showed me the letter she had received, she evidently thought she had given me all the information necessary. But I thought differently. Having but three days in which to accomplish this task, it was necessary that no time should be lost in pursuing false clews; so, after asking for Miss A.'s—Miss Gretorex's—photograph, I put a few further questions, and, finding that she could really give me no added information, I followed out my usual course in these matters and asked leave to interrogate the servants.

"'But,' she exclaimed, 'they have no notion but that she has gone away with our full knowledge and consent. It would ruin everything to take them into our confidence; girls of that class can never keep a secret.'

"'I understand,' I replied, 'and I have no notion of taking them into our confidence. We have fifty ways of getting what we wish out of servants without their suspecting us or our motives.'

"I thought the lady looked peculiar.

"'Well,' said she, 'the only one who could give you any information has lately left the house. My daughter took a dislike to her and begged that she be dismissed. Not liking to cross Miss Gretorex in her present condition, I complied, though I knew nothing against the girl and liked her work well.'

Another Clew.

"This had the look of a clew. At all events, it was worth another question.

"'And what excuse did your daughter give for her dislike?'

"'Oh, none; thought the girl prying. I believe, meddled too much with her new things, I suppose.'

"I asked for the girl's address. That word prying gave me hope; it was the open sesame, perhaps, to the mystery before us. The mother gave it without hesitation, but also without any enthusiasm. That a servant should have picked up any information in regard to her proud daughter, of which she herself was ignorant, seemed absolutely incredible to her. But I know my business," asserted Mr. Gryce, "and after taking such measures as are usual with the police when a person like Miss Gretorex is missing, I went to see this girl.

"I will not try your patience by relating the interview. It was like a thousand others I have had, and ended very much as I expected it would. She talked, but was not conscious she talked. She told me all she knew about Miss Gretorex, and considerable that she did not. There was evidently reason for her mistress calling her prying, for she had a great deal to say about a girl who used to come there with sewing; trash which I was obliged to listen to in order to get at the one thing I wanted, which was that she had once surprised the young lady writing a letter she evidently did not wish seen, for she blushed with anger at the intrusion, calling the girl names and threatening her with the dismissal she afterward received."

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS listening to a fat gent coming down in the car this morning," said the Manicure Lady. "He was talking about how he had worked for years and years, and now he was rich and happy. He was telling how he had his fine country home and his city home and his automobiles and all the rest of the things that wealth brings, and how happy he was, and what a good world this is."

"He had a right to feel that way when everything was so easy for him," said the Head Barber.

"That ain't the way I figure it at all, George," declared the Manicure Lady. "I may be wrong, but it seems to me that if I was rich and fat, that would be just the time I would feel the saddest for all the millions of people that ain't rich and fat, and them that is fat and poor. I don't see how that man could be altogether happy when he knows that in the big cities there are thousands of hungry folks every day, folks that ain't able to buy nothing good to ratify or deplease their hunger.

"If I Had a Million."

"If I had a million dollars I would try to limit myself to just enough for a nice, comfortable living the rest of my life and scatter the rest of it where it would do the most good. I would care for all the needy I could, and every time I heard of a poor little shop girl trying to live right on $4 a week I would be one of them there Lady Bountifuls, and from that time on she would live happily until she was married. I often like to lie awake and dream of all the good things that I would do if I had money. I suppose I'm a kind of nut for wasting my time that way, but it makes me feel almost as happy sometimes as if I really had the money and was doing all them good deeds."

"I think you are a mighty good girl to have them dreams," said the Head Barber, "but, of course, dreaming don't do no good. You have to have the millions first before you can help the poor. There is so many of the poor, too many. Things ain't the way they ought to be in this world, kiddo. It makes me kind of sad a lot of times when I am on the way to the country and look at some of them little hovels not far from some of the handsome homes. In them hovels there must be misery and discomfort that you and me could never stand one week, and yet them people have to go along that way, not for a week or a month, but for all their lives. The trouble with you and me is that, like a lot of other good-hearted folks, we never have enough at one time to help the really poor. All I had this morning was carfare and lunch money, and the guy that just went out paid me $10 that I never expected to get in this world."

"Ain't That Queer?"

"Ain't that queer?" exclaimed the Manicure Lady. "Brother Wilfred paid me back ten dollars this morning that I had kissed good-bye to long ago. I felt so good about it that I went and bought me a new summer lid, which makes three bonnets I have all at one time. What are you going to do with your ten, George—give it to the poor?"

"It wouldn't go far enough," said the Head Barber, sheepishly. "I just sent out this minute to cover a bet on Cruel Cora in the fourth race. She's due to win, and I got three to one for my sawbuck. But just the same, kiddo, if there was more good-hearted folks like us, the poor would be happier."

Children and Their Influence

By JERE K. COOKE.

(It may be asked why I, of all men, should write upon questions affecting marriage and other relations. In reply, I would say that one who has gone through what I have, suffered as much as I have, and seen so much of the world and it's hard side, may possibly have something to say that will be of use to others. I hope so, at least.—JERE K. COOKE.)

AN elevator apartment, a poodle dog and a married couple. The man is a grouch—the woman unhappy and the poodle dog is the recipient of their affection, caresses and consideration. But this is not a home! The home is an elevatorless flat.

It has no dog, but the companions of the man and the woman are a group of happy, curly-headed children whose ages suggest a pair of stairs. These are the joys of living. The happy voices, the running feet and the childish play, literally fill a home with sunshine and content.

It is said that most men of the criminal class are single men. The home life and love are so firmly gripped upon a married man's heart that he will hesitate long before he will bring his trustful wife and innocent children into the disgrace of his misconduct.

The curly-haired baby that lifts its chubby hands to be taken into his father's arms is a strong deterrent to wrongdoing. No happier welcome can come to a hard-working man than to be met at the gate at the end of the day by a smiling, home-loving wife with a squad of children clinging to her skirts. It takes the tiredness all out of his bones.

A Life Story.

Children hold a man and wife together. I once knew a man who had apparently everything that heart could desire—a beautiful home, a charming wife, a fine position, and was well-liked by a host of friends.

Only one thing was lacking.

Of their union there was no offspring.

He seemed happy, but there were times when the evening hour approached he had an undefined longing for something. After a while the twilight hour, or in other homes "the children's hour," became a lonesome void to him.

He would go down the street to the club, or anywhere to get away from himself. Little by little the husband and wife drifted apart.

She was angry at first that he sought pleasure away from her society, and then she got so she did not care. Had she only had one dear little curly headed toddler at her side to hold out chubby arms in unison with hers, how different it might have been.

Another came into her life who did not go to the club. The husband had an opportunity to make a lot of money by speculation. It was very risky, but he took the chance.

If the dear little baby eyes had looked into his that morning, would he have risked his all?

He lost! His wife, who had grown not to care, turned from him. They separated, and he, poor fellow, is working alone to win back something of all he had lost.

Two Stars.

There are two bright stars in the crown of womanhood—one is to be a wife of absolute fidelity, the other is to become the mother of a contented family.

Men seldom complain of the size of their households. Each little stranger brings its own welcome, no matter how undesirable they were thought to be. The children, too, seem to thrive just as well wearing the older children's outgrown clothes and are as robust under the limitations of a large family as though the mouths to feed were few. The "only sons" are generally spoiled, and in after life go wrong.

I once heard a fine specimen of a man remark: "I was one of a family of nine and was 11 years old before I knew a chicken had anything but a gizzard and a neck!"

If a man is naturally morally weak, his family do more to keep him straight than all else combined. It also goes a long way in making his penalty merciful rather than harsh if he does not keep within the law.

One of the most pathetic sights I ever saw was a young husband up for sentence in San Francisco and headed for San Quentin. Just before his doom was pronounced his wife, fragile and wan, came into the courtroom with her cooing infant in her arms.

She went right up to the manacled prisoner and kissed him. The child reached out for its father and the picture that little family presented was enough to turn the heart of any judge. Did his honor have mercy on him? No! But he had mercy on the faithful wife, who "for worse" rather than "for better" was yoked up to her mate.

He had mercy, too, on their innocent, helpless, crooning baby, whose after life would be so conditioned by the shackles on its father's wrists and by the stripes its father wore.

Women's Boons.

Marriage and maternity are the boons of women. Being a benedict is the boon for man, and children bring the benediction. "A little child shall lead them," so the Bible says, and is the "blessed tie that binds." Woe to the wife who has had her chance to have her baby and missed it. The ghost of that unborn child will toddle into her heart on lonely nights, and the feeble cry for its mother will bring anguish to her soul.

I know a woman in such a plight—I know nothing more desolate than a lonely woman who has not known the joy of motherhood. It would be better, infinitely better, for a mother to place the flowers that represent her affection on the grave of her little lost loved one than as a lonely wife to hear the ghostly voice of an unborn child calling her when it is too late, in her desolation and despair.

The Baseball Fan-nie

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

This is me and I'm with Him—and didn't he have to answer a lot of foolish questions, oh! But he never peeped once.

Here is a fat, pretty woman I saw at the game. Her hankie-hat looked like a postage stamp.

These two were at the game, too, but why I don't know—they hardly ever noticed it.

WHAT strikes you most about her is that she makes herself so "at home." Hat off—so the air can keep the top of her pretty head cool; her parasol leaned against the railing; her own self slouched down in the middle of her back, which health-preachers say is bad for us, but which is mighty comfortable; in one hand a fan fluttering hard like a butterfly—the only thing about her that works; in the other hand a tall, frosty glass, or a tall, cool bottle—the prickly liquid inside it going via a double straw to her lips that only stop drinking long enough to gurgle, "Good boy, Dent!"

Precociousness in Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"Precociousness in love-making is a great mistake. It prevents the enjoyment of youthful years, which should be free from anxiety, and leads to entanglements and hasty attachments, which cause much distress."
E. J. HARDY.

WHEN a girl is between 12 and 16 she looks so much like a large-sized doll that those of the other sex treat her as such, taking into no account that in her little body there is a heart with a capacity for suffering greater than any woman's, and a soul that is like an untried instrument, waiting for the master's hand to strike the chords.

If he strikes it gently, evoking a melody that is sweet and pure, that melody becomes the keynote of her existence. If, thinking only of his own brutal passions, he strikes chords that should lie dormant, he wrecks the instrument and ruins her life.

If all the men, young and old, would only Stop, Look and Listen, what a tale of tragedies might remain untold! If they confined their love-making to women grown; if they observed in love the Golden Rule in sport, to fight only with those their own size, there would not be so many mothers and fathers weeping over premature graves to-day!

A Chance for Evil.

"The heart of a girl is the home of dreams." In her dreams the man who comes to her with a story of love is brave and noble and good and true. Her father has never deceived her; her mother is the spirit of truth; her friends are loyal; she doesn't know what deceit means. She is trusted, and she trusts. She has always believed what others tell her; how natural that she continues to believe when some dream hero assumes reality!

The trust and innocence of youth, which should be a bulwark of defence, becomes the drawbridge by which the enemy enters and takes possession.

An effort is making all over the civilized world to protect young girls with the armor of Knowledge. A good thing, but not enough. So long as there are young girls in the world there will be hearts with a woman's longing for love, accompanied by brains with only a child's capacity for reasoning. It is not enough to appeal to the girl; an appeal should be made to the man.

No Excuse.

Let him Stop, Look and Listen. Somewhere in the world every day some young girl who has made the discovery that her lover has been playing with her as if she were in reality the doll she resembles writes a tragic little note of good-bye to mother and lover, and ends her life.

He was amusing himself. She wasn't. To girls of this age love is real and awful.

Perhaps he meant no harm. Perhaps he committed no greater sin against the girl than to make love to her. But this will not lighten the weight on his conscience when she is driven to a desperate deed.

Youth is hopeful, but not as hopeful as it is morbid. Her little heart is broken, and since she can not touch his heart living, she finds consolation in the thought that her death will. It is a period of insanity that comes to all girls whose hearts are awakened before their brains are matured, a most dangerous period, and one which all men, young and old, should be warned against.

If they must make love, let them observe the golden rule of all sport, and select someone their own size and age.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE never was a man who did not think he could throw eloquence into his voice as readily as a woman throws salt into a stew. This is such a pronounced weakness that to the two rules for catching a husband, "Feed the Brute" and "Laugh at His Jokes," there should be this addition, "Ask Him to Read Out Loud."

The sound of his voice is music in his ears when employed in ordinary conversation, and infinitely more like unto a grand, sweet song when engaged in reading the heroic sentiments of others.

Daysey Mayme Appleton had tucked eleven sofa cushions back of her caller, every cushion being an additional proof of his eligibility. She had fed him, she had laughed at his jokes. Getting a book from the table, she attacked his third vulnerable spot.

It was titled, "The Hunger of Her Soul," and Daysey Mayme had bought it that day.

"Read to me," she pleaded. "Your voice vibrates like the strings of a heavenly harp."

He had never heard a heavenly harp, but that made no difference. No man ever inspects the compliments paid him. This man didn't, and opening the book at random he began:

"The silence, so often intense it fairly pulsated, was broken by a sigh. Then his lips met hers. Warm, soft and fraught as the dew, his lips lingered and lingered till their two souls were as one."

The young man blushed. He felt as if he were approaching nearer and nearer a consuming fire.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He gathered her closer to him; his nostrils were filled with the cloying sweetness of her hair; he——"

The young man reached for a fan. "Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He——" The young man got up and threw open a window. Then he began again.

"He felt her warm breath on his neck. He could resist, he would resist, no longer——"

The young man took a piece of ice out of a lemonade glass and pressed it to his brow.

"He——"

The young man looked doubtfully at Daysey Mayme. He was country bred and had been brought up by a mother who wouldn't wear anything peek-a-boo, not even a porous plaster.

"Read on," murmured Daysey Mayme.

"He lifted——"

There was a sudden flash of flame, an odor of burning flesh and bones and woolen, and Daysey Mayme was alone!

The country-bred young man's blushes had consumed him.

All But—

"Dear Mabel," he began, "do you love me?"

"O-h, George!"

"Don't you, Mabel? Just a little tiny bit?"

"Well, y-e-s, George."

"And if I married you would your father give us a separate establishment?"

"Yes, George."

"And take me into partnership?"

"Yes, George."

"And would your mother keep away from us except when I invited her?"

"She would, George."

"And your brothers and sisters, too?"

"Why, certainly, George."

"And, of course, the old gent would settle my debts?"

"Of course, George."

"And buy us an automobile and provide you with a handsome dowry?"

"Yes, George."

"Darling, will you marry me?"

"No, George!"

MAULL BROS.,
St. Louis, Mo.

.:. I Understand You .:.

HE felt so happy that he wanted to take the whole world into his arms. Last night happiness had come to him, wonderful, indescribable happiness, surpassing all belief, showering upon him all its blessings, wrapping him in such a splendor of light that he was almost dazzled by its brightness.

He had met with his first success as a poet and playwright. For the first time he had felt the intoxicating charm of the storming, roaring applause of the hundred-headed audience. Yes, life is beautiful, especially when you are young and strong and full of passionate longings and desires. Then it is quite impossible to stay inside the close, stuffy rooms; then you must rush out into the streets and look into the eyes and souls of other people.

So he took his young fame out for a walk, confident that his new friend, Fortune, would give him a new proof of her benevolence, a proof which, of course, should be connected with some young and lovely maiden.

And there were maidens enough in the streets, for it was the month of May, the month of longings and desires for love.

But, strangely enough, he was not attracted by any of these fair, straight, slender beauties, though yesterday he admired them one and all. But to-day it must be something quite different, nothing less than a fairy princess, a woman who perhaps exists only in the dreams of a poet and not in reality. If he could only find a woman like that he knew that he had it in him to become the greatest poet the world had ever known.

Suddenly the young poet stopped as if hypnotized, for on the other side of the street she was coming toward him—the fairy princess of his fairest dreams, a vision of feminine beauty, grace and strength. The blood began to rush through his veins and he remained where he stood, rooted to the spot.

Then he picked up all his courage, and a moment later he was at her side. "Forgive my audacity, but——"

The young girl looked at him, not encouragingly, and still not reproachfully, with a strange, helpless expression in her eyes and an embarrassed movement of her hands. The young man still mumbled a few commonplace compliments, but no sign of understanding came into the young lady's eyes.

Her very features and figure ought to have told him that she was no German, but undoubtedly a Parisienne, charming, chic and graceful as she was. It was too stupid that he had not seen that at first glance. Thank God, he knew her language. He addressed her in French.

She smiled, a faint, pitiful smile, and shrugged her shoulders to indicate that she had not understood him.

The young man did not know what to do. Then she was no Frenchwoman either. What might she be, then? Perhaps an Englishwoman. But he ridiculed the thought when he remembered the lanky, angular daughters of Albion that he had seen. The idea was absurd. Should she be a Russian? If so, he was lost, for he did not know a single word of Russian.

But suddenly he heard her address him in his own native tongue:

"Don't try to find any more subjects of conversation, for I should not understand you. If you want anything, you will have to say it very loudly into my ear, for I am almost deaf."

So that was why. The young man was dumfounded. All his confidence of victory had left him and he felt something he had never known before.

Then he collected his wits. What was he to do? Should he shout his wish into her ear? No; that would never do. What he had to tell her could be told only in the softest whisper, and, silent and discouraged, he walked along at her side.

The streets with their crowds and noises lay far behind them and the mighty trees of the Tiergarten formed a green dome over their heads. Then he looked at her deeply and tenderly, with eyes so full of fervent, passionate adoration that it ran like red-hot lava through her young body.

And now she smiled, a tender, happy smile and, trembling with delight, her lips whispered: "Yes, I understand you."

Hand in hand they walked back to the city.

WOMAN'S ILLS DISAPPEARED

Like Magic After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

NORTH BANGOR, N. Y.—"As I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with great benefit I feel it my duty to write and tell you about it. I was ailing from female weakness and had headache and backache nearly all the time. I was later every month than I should have been and so sick that I had to go to bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and these troubles have disappeared like magic. I have recommended the Compound to many women who have used it successfully."—Mrs. James J. Starr, R. F. D. No. 3, North Bangor, N. Y.

Another Made Well

ANN ARBOR, MICH.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done wonders for me. For years I suffered terribly with hemorrhages and had pains so intense that sometimes I would faint away. I had female weakness so bad that I had to doctor all the time and never found relief until I took your remedies to please my husband. I recommend your wonderful medicine to all sufferers as I think it is a blessing for all women."—Mrs. L. E. Wyckoff, 112 S. Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

There need be no doubt about the ability of this grand old remedy, made from the roots and herbs of our fields, to remedy woman's diseases. We possess volumes of proof of this fact, enough to convince the most skeptical. Why don't you try it?

.:. A Woman Builder .:.

THE astonishing manner in which women of to-day are invading the fields of employment which a few years ago were considered the sole prerogatives of man is once more strikingly illustrated by the remarkable achievements of Miss Alice Durkin, New York's only master builder, who employs over 700 men, and who competes with the contractors of this city for skyscraping contracts.

For four years Miss Durkin has been numbered among the master builders of the city, and in that time she has erected buildings to the value of $2,000,000. She is the first and only woman member of the Building Trades Association of New York.

Her career is a veritable romance of industry. The daughter of a wealthy man who lost his money, she took a post when quite a young girl in the office of a leading New York builder fourteen years ago.

Business Qualities.

"I took a keen interest in the work," said Miss Durkin to a newspaper interviewer, "and I seized every opportunity of talking to carpenters, masons and plumbers, and learned a lot from them about materials, labor, construction and other things which have to be considered by the contractor. I attended classes at night and studied continually, and after I had been in the office a year I asked permission to figure on some alterations in a school contract. Afterward my employer began to secure contracts on figures I had prepared. Of course, it has been hard work, and there have been many details to overcome; but it has been very enjoyable. A knowledge of mathematics, a clear head and a great deal of tact are needed in this business."

It might have been thought that the contractors of New York would have looked with disfavor on Miss Durkin's invasion of their trade; but, as a matter of fact, they have acted in a most kindly and friendly way toward her. "In fact," she says, "they have been particularly courteous to me, because I am a woman competing with them on equal grounds."

A Remarkable Sight.

Public schools, nurses' homes and institutes are among the buildings which Miss Durkin has constructed, and it is a notable fact that shortly after she started business for herself she competed against eleven leading contractors for the New York Public Library, in which over $10,000,000 was represented, and she only lost by a hair's breadth. She has also built one or two Broadway skyscrapers.

Miss Durkin superintends every detail of her business, and it is a remarkable sight to see this dainty, charming member of the fair sex threading her way through scaffolding and piles of bricks and mortar, directing gangs of men during building operations.

Huge Demand for Them.

Salesman—Here you are, gentlemen; the greatest invention of the age!

Passer-by (stopping to listen)—What is it?

Salesman—A magnetized keyhole plate for front doors. It will attract an ordinary steel key from a distance of two feet. All you have to do to find the keyhole at night is to take out your key and hang on to it.

Do You Know That—

Gout is rarely known among the working classes of Ireland. Their immunity from this complaint is thought to be due to the fact that their food consists largely of potatoes.

There were 20,000 people in England and Wales without a birthday this year owing to the fact that February contained only twenty-eight days.

SMITH A DANE; IRISH MANAGER A PEEVED MAN

By W. W. Naughton.

IT would require considerable advertising to draw attention to a glove contest between white hopes Eckblad and Chiariglion, would it? But if you announced a bout between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn it would be different.

A glance at the record book will show that Andrew Chiariglion is Jim Flynn's rightful name, and according to reports from New York it has been discovered that Gunboat Smith is a Dane, and that he was christened Edward Eckblad.

They say Manager Jim Buckley is mad clear through over the disclosure. Jim has been parading Gunboat as a second crop Irishman, and he continues to insist that the blood of the ancient kings of Munster flows through Gunboat's veins.

But Dame Rumor is giving Jim the laugh. She says that Smith—or rather Eckblad—was born in Milica, Minn., and that his forbears hailed from Copenhagen.

Now that the secret is out, the average fan will have it that Gunboat looks more like a Dane than an Irishman, but the subject is a dangerous one to broach in Buckley's presence. He brands the report as a cruel canard, and asserts that the fellows who had the temerity to attack Smith's nationality will try to prove that Tommy Murphy is a Polish Jew before they are done.

Murphy, however, is better equipped with an alibi than Gunboat. Tommy's photograph would fit into its surroundings if published as a frontispiece to the song, "Where the River Shannon Flows."

* * *

IF Flynn is in fairly good shape, he is likely to make things interesting for Gunboat. The Flynn of a couple of years ago was one of the most dangerous of all the heavies over a short distance. He always fought under a full head of steam, and at the same time kept so close to his man that he was hard to reach with full arm swings.

It was by piling in and forcing his opponent to fight at short range that Flynn defeated Al Kaufman, Carl Morris and other men much bigger than himself. Gunboat, like Kaufman and Morris, is at his best when permitted to stand away and measure his man. It may be that Smith will catch Flynn with one of his knockout blows while Flynn boxes in his old-time style. Smith is in for as merry a quarter of an hour as he has ever had on a fighting platform.

The chances are, however, that Flynn is slower than he used to be. His defeat by Luther McCarty at Los Angeles tamed his stubborn pride and took much of the starch out of him. It was noticed in the affair referred to that Pueblo Jim did not assimilate punishment as in former fights, and the suspicion formed that long service had deprived him of his dash.

Four Hitters of 'Bull' Will Get Check Aug. 3

August the third, quite mild of the skies, has been duly immortalized by Mr. B. Harte, but the chances are that a certain four ball players in the Southern League will look forward to that day next month for reasons quite apart from the remarkable poem of the Heathen Chinee.

Four hitters of the well-known "Bull" signs in Southern League parks will be awarded their prizes on that day.

Here are the lucky riflemen:

Joe Ward, of the Memphis club, who hit the "Bull" in his home town April 26, thereby proving a swatsman is not without honor even in his own precinct; and Ernest Walker, Rudy Baerwald and R. H. Shanley, all of the Billikens. Walker hit the big sign at Memphis June 15, while the other two selected their home lot as the proper setting for their display of prowess, June 20 and 21, respectively.

Each batsman will receive a check for $50.

She Couldn't See Pa Anywhere Around

Joe Mandot Out for New Start

Believes He Has Chance at Title

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 29.—There may yet be a lightweight champion of the world hailing from south of the Mason and Dixon line. Joe Mandot, champion of the South, hasn't given up hope by a long way of yet attaining the coveted title and, if serious endeavor and some sparkling mills next winter will get what endeavor and seriousness are said in the story books to get, then Mandot has a grand chance. Joe doesn't believe so much in what is contained in story books, but he has pored over a lot of record books, and knows pretty well what they contain. That's why he knows it's going to be a mighty serious task ahead of him.

* * *

JOE wandered into town last evening. He had his pretty little wife and a huge smile with him, and had not been in the city more than a few minutes before he was joined by the indefatigable Tommy Walsh, and they began to lay plans for the fall campaign. Joe came through from Los Angeles by way of San Francisco and Denver, stopping off at San Francisco to see the Ritchie-Rivers battle, and making a halt at Denver to look over the situation there. He will remain in the city until to-night, and then intends to journey on to New Orleans and go to the Mandot ranch, but a short distance from that city, and rest there for a good many weeks. In addition, Joe's father, the big baker of the French Market in New Orleans, is not in good health, and Joe wants to see him.

* * *

ALONG in the fall some time Joe will be ready to start out on an entirely new campaign, the ultimate aim of which will be to land a crack at the lightweight title. Joe says his first battles in this campaign will be decided within easy reaching distance of Chicago and that he will take on several of the best men attainable. Long has he wanted to box around here and believes that not only can he make many friends here, but can pick up the change as well, which, after all, is the main thing in most businesses or professions. Joe has a lot of friends here now and expects to make more.

* * *

JOE doesn't think that Willie Ritchie is a great champion, because he has demonstrated that he can not, or will not, make the weight which has been recognized for a long time now as the real limit of the class. Listen to what the bright young Frenchman has to say of his impressions of the champion: "While Willie was training for the Rivers fight I paid him a visit, and he looked anything but good to me. He was terribly drawn and thin, and it was then but three days from fighting time. They asked me how he looked to me, and I told them he was all right if he didn't have to reduce any more. I certainly didn't like his chances after I saw him and figured that Rivers had a royal chance of whipping him. But it didn't turn out that way.

* * *

"WOULDN'T I like to have had the chance that Rivers did! He'll never get a better one of winning a title. No, I don't guess he quit. He was hit hard enough in the chin. It looked all right to me. Ritchie can hit, there isn't any question about that. I happen to be in a position to know, because he hit me once in New Orleans. That's why I don't think Rivers quit. But Willie is a big fellow and can not make 133 pounds at the ringside. Therefore he isn't a legitimate lightweight."

VITT IN BAD SHAPE.

DETROIT, MICH., July 29.—Oscar Vitt, second baseman of the Detroit league baseball club, is seriously ill with la grippe here. His physican said today his condition had not reached the critical stage and recovery is expected, but the player will probably be out of the game until fall at least.

GADSDEN TO RETAIN TEAM.

GADSDEN, ALA., July 29.—Gadsden's baseball team will not be transferred to Newnan, Ga., to play the remaining games scheduled. Local fans have secured contributions of $500 for the support of the team for the remainder of the season.

DISBROW IS WINNER.

GALVESTON, TEXAS, July 29.—The 200-mile sweepstake race, a free-for-all for a purse of $5,000, will be continued at the Galveston beach automobile course this afternoon. Louis Disbrow, driving a Simplex, won the first leg of the race yesterday, averaging 71.28 miles an hour for 100 miles.

POLO MATCH.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., July 29.—In one of the closest and hardest fought polo games played this year, the Cooperstown team defeated Rock-Away 6 1-2 goals to 5 1-4 in the first round of the senior championship matches game at the Point Judith polo field yesterday.

LEACH CROSS AND BALDWIN MIX TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—A small army of riding celebrities will be on hand at Vernon arena to-night to see Leach Cross-Matty Baldwin scheduled twenty-round bout. The affair appears to be one that the boxers themselves have long been wanting to see, as it is known that considerable bad blood exists between Leach and Matty.

Seat reservations have been made by Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, Ad Wolgast, Joe Rivers, Bud Anderson, Johnny Dundee, Jack White, Jess Willard, "Bull" Young and Harry Trendall, the latter having come all the way from St. Louis to challenge the winner of to-night's go.

Cross has faced Matty twice, and each time came away with second money and a sore jaw. Matty holds a twenty-round decision over Willie Ritchie, the present champion. But this victory was earned before Ritchie was considered to be of championship caliber.

The betting remains at 10 to 7, with Cross favorite. Charley Eyton will referee.

Here Is a Player With $4,000,000

SACRAMENTO, CAL., July 29.—Since Bill Kenworthy, the second-sacker of the Sacramento club, has been notified that he is heir to $4,000,00, there has been considerable speculation as to what his plans for the future will be.

There is really not much of a limit to what Kenny could do with such an amount of money, providing he desires to remain in baseball.

If he wished to play the game for an ordinary salary, he could be sure of reporting in condition by hiring an entire major league club to go South and train with him, or he could buy any franchise in organized baseball and be club owner, player and manager at the same time.

One thing is certain, he can have many run-ins with the umpires and not be broke on pay day.

Special trains for the trips around the circuit would easily be within his means, and he could buy a newspaper and publish his own press notices.

At any rate, it's a pretty good bet that the $4,000,00 ball player will lead Artie Shafer, of the Giants, when it comes to receiving perfumed notes from the fair fans.

COBB BATTLES CHENEY.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 29—Ty Cobb, the Philadelphia featherweight, is in Baltimore to-day and declares he is in condition to give George Cheney the time of his life in the ring at the Palace Theater here this evening, when they battle in the star bout carded for fifteen rounds.

Thirty-Minute Race On To-night

Glenn Says He'll Beat Luther

FOR 30 minutes to-night at the Motordrome five two-men teams will whirl around the wooden saucer at an 85-mile-an-hour clip. Barring accidents, this will be by far the most exciting event that has ever been staged here.

All ten of the riders spent the day tuning up their motors and each predicts a victory for their team. They also practiced relieving their partners. The man riding has to come off the track onto the flat space in front of the paddock and touch his partner on the shoulder before the latter can take up the sprinting.

The early arrivals to-night will grab the seats in front of the paddock as this will enable them to witness the "relieving."

Here is how the teams are made up: Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn.

* * *

BUT the 30-minute race is not the only event carded that is attracting attention. The Motordrome Sweepstakes ought to be a corker. There will be two qualifying heats. In the first the riders will be Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel and Lewis. In the second Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil and Glenn will start.

The final heat is almost sure to bring together Richards and McNeil. McNeil and Richards are bitter enemies once they get hooked up in a race. Richards holds a couple of decisions over the little Scotchman, but Jock's machine is O. K. now and he is confident that to-night he will lead Tex to the wire.

Harry Glenn and Luther are going to battle in a two-mile match race, two best heats out of three. Glenn beat Schwartz the other night, and says he will surely down Luther. But the latter's motor is going immense these days and he predicts the local boy will have to be satisfied with second place.

* * *

FOLLOWING is the program for to-night:

First Event.

First heat Motordrome Sweepstakes (1 mile to qualify and 2-mile final). Starters—Graves, Shields, Richards, Renel, Lewis.

Second Event.

First heat of a match race between Glenn and Luther. (Race to be two best heats in three.) Distance, 2 miles.

Third Event.

Second heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. Starters—Schwartz, Lockner, Luther, McNeil, Glenn.

Fourth Event.

Second heat of match race between Glenn and Luther.

Fifth Event.

Final heat of Motordrome Sweepstakes. (Winners of first and second heats and second man in fastest heat to start.)

Sixth Event.

Third heat of match race between Glenn and Luther, if necessary.

Seventh Event.

Half-hour team race. Teams—Graves and McNeil, Schwartz and Lockner, Shields and Richards, Luther and Lewis, Renel and Glenn. (No rider can remain on track over 20 consecutive minutes.)

YANKEES GET PLAYERS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—It was announced to-day that Manager Chance, of the New York Americans, had purchased Outfielder Cook, of the Austin club of the Texas League, and Pitcher Cooney, of the Butte, Mont., club of the Union Association. Cooney will join the New Yorks at once, but Cook will not report until fall.

AMOS RUSIE IN HOSPITAL; INJURED BY IRON BAR

LEAGUE HEAD TO DECIDE PROTESTED BALL GAMES

KEOKUK, IOWA, July 29.—To straighten out a tangle over protested games which Waterloo won and Keokuk and Burlington protested, alleging the player limit had been violated, President Justice, of the Central Association, has gone to Waterloo.

ED LEACH, OLD ATLANTA PITCHER, IN A HOSPITAL

RICHMOND, VA., July 29.—Ed Leach, who pitched for Atlanta several seasons back in the 90's, is in a hospital here with his right foot cut off. Tuberculosis of the bone rendered amputation necessary.

Leach also pitched two seasons for New Orleans, having been a contemporary and boon companion of "Cholly" Frank, present manager of the Pelicans. His last work in baseball was in the spring of 1912, when he helped Molesworth whip the Barons into shape at Birmingham.

AMATEUR TEAMS TO PLAY FOR TITLE IN MACON

MACON, July 29.—The amateur baseball championship of Georgia will be settled in Macon this year, the first time than an elimination series of that nature ever has been arranged.

The Bibb Mills team of Macon, which claims the championship, will meet the Haddock, Ga., team the last three days of the week. The other claimants for the title are East Point, Wrightsville and Hawkinsville. Should the contest sift down to Macon and East Point, a series will be played in Atlanta.

BAT NELSON MAY FIGHT.

SARSATOGA, N. Y., July 29.—Local promoters are trying to arrange a number of boxing matches to be held under the auspices of the Saratoga Athletic Club during the racing season next month, and a bout between Battling Nelson, former lightweight champion, and Jimmy O'Hahan, the Albany blacksmith, is practically assured.

CLARKE WILL TRY TO STOP GULLS TODAY

By Joe Agler.

MOBILE, ALA., July 29.—The Gulls seemed to have such a liking for right-hand dealing that Manager Smith decided last night to flip from the other side of the deck, so he turned up George Clarke, who will work this afternoon. Dunn will catch the game out, provided he can control his conversation.

The jinx still pursues us. Whitey Alperman's operation for appendicitis yesterday was said to have been just in time, and, at that, Whitey had about as close a call as possible. We hear he is resting well to-day, and that the chances are in his favor. But, of course, he won't be able to play ball any more this season.

The Crackers held a little meeting yesterday and Billy Smith appointed Wally Smith to be field captain in Whitey's place. Wally also will play second base, and Frank Manush will go to third. Bill Bailey's injury leaves an outfield job vacant, and Smith is going to try out a recruit from Selma in the Cotton States League; a big chap named Holz, who came along with Pitcher Love.

Holz pegs right handed and hits from the port side of the platter. He is said to be a good batter and a fast fielder, and we are hoping he will help to brace our crippled lineup.

There isn't much to say about the game yesterday. The Gulls got to Thompson for a big lead, and then we got to Pug Cavet and made it all square, only to lose out, 6 to 5, in the ninth inning. We did manage to deliver a kick or two, which is encouraging. Maybe we will win a ball game by one run some day, the way we have been losing them all lately.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Leach Cross is to have his final test for a bout with Willie Ritchie when he takes on Matty Baldwin in a twenty-round battle at Los Angeles to-night. Promoter Tom McCarey has promised the winner a match with the champion and Tom's word is usually as good as gold.

* * *

Abe Attell's pugilistic star has set. His recent defeat at the hands of Willie Beecher has killed him as a title contender.

* * *

Gotham fans are said to be warming up to the coming Jim Flynn-Gunboat Smith bout. The heavyweights are scheduled to meet in a ten-round go on August 3.

* * *

Once again Packy McFarland and Willie Ritchie are nearly matched. All this advance stuff leads up to the inevitable.

* * *

Jimmy Johnston, former manager of Owen Moran, and who at present is looking after George Rodel, plans to open a new boxing club in New York. He expects to put on his first show next week.

* * *

Patsy Brannigan, the tough Pittsburg featherweight, has been matched to box Benny Chavez, in a twenty-round set-to at Trinidad, Co'o., on Labor Day. Both boys have been going good of late and should put up an interesting mill.

* * *

Jimmy Britt, ex-lightweight champion of the world, is in Denver at the present time to fill a theatrical engagement. Britt is of the opinion that Willie Ritchie is one of the greatest champions the game has had in years.

* * *

Young Abe Attell, local bantamweight, is anxious to meet some boy of his division. Attell is will to get a return engagement with Tim Callahan.

* * *

Tom Jones, manager of Jess Willard, has signed his protege to meet Bull Young in a twenty-round go at Vernon, Cal., on August 22. The winner will probably meet Arthur Pelky or Gunboat Smith.

* * *

Ad Wolgast has offered to bet Willie Ritchie $25,000 he can defeat him in a return scrap. Reports from the coast state that the champion has decided to make Ad put up or shut up.

* * *

Before Joe Jeannette and Sam Langford travel to the coast to clash in a twenty-round contest, they will probably meet in a ten-round affair at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, on September 22. The McMahon brothers, matchmakers of the club, are awaiting Langford's arrival from Los Angeles.

* * *

"Special Delivery" Hirsch is another Chicago boxer who is anxious to show his wares here. Harry Thomas, manager of Hirsch, says he will let his boy box any one from 130 pounds to 133 at 3 o'clock.

How to Get Rid of Eczema

If you bruise your hand, you will notice that a scab forms, and when it falls off, new skin has formed. Did salve do it? No! Skin is the same as muscle, bone, sinew, ligament. All are made from the blood, from the materials that your stomach and intestines convert from food into what we call blood. And this blood circulates in the myriad of tiny blood vessels in the skin. Start from your stomach, where blood materials begin, and it won't be long before you are free of eczema. Use S. S. S. for a short time, and not only will eczema disappear, but the entire blood will be renewed.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy, judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples and all skin afflictions.

Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 189 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Beware of any attempt to sell you something "just as good."

Crackers Slip Into Fourth Place

Don't Count G. Molesworth Out Yet

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE gleam penetrates the Stygian gloom of the situation.

The Crackers finally delivered a kick.

It may have been a dying kick. But a kick's a kick, for a' that.

With a shot-to-pieces line-up, with Alperman in the hospital minus an appendix, Bill Bailey carrying a couple of ribs in a sling, Wally Smith at second base, Manush at third and Chapman playing right field without his mitt, the disheveled Smithies collected themselves yesterday afternoon and landed a solid punch on the revered Pug Cavet.

The trouble was that the Gulls kicked Thompson first—and last.

And now the Town Boys are crouching on the rim of Lower Four, wondering how soon the porter will turn out the lights.

* * *

LITERARY TIP FROM WHITEY.

Believe me, boys, this is no nonsense:
When your tummy ails and again kicks,
Don't fool with the Table of Contents—
Look it up in the blamed old Appendix!

* * *

Whitey's wise old noodle and timely bat are bound to be sadly missed in the final drive. Not that Wally Smith isn't a good, heady player and a man who, as field captain, will keep his mates well on their toes. Wally is all of that.

But the combination, of necessity, will be unsettled for a bit. Bill Bailey also is out of the game and a Cotton States rookie, Holz, will appear in right field this afternoon. Manush will play third and Wally Smith second.

On the other hand, the shakeup may shift the breaks, which certainly haven't been coming our way lately.

Anyway, we're in for it. And instead of blubbering over the latest handicap for the Crackers, let's just cheer up over the report that good old Whitey, in a tough sprint against the Old Boy with the Sickle, is pulling ahead to-day.

* * *

TURNING the burglar-finder on the little club that has supplanted the Town Boys at the dizzy elevation of third place, we discern without much difficulty that odd equine anomaly, the Dark Horse.

Gladys Molesworth is up, and how d. h. can run at all is by us. Gladys' managerial worries seem to sit lightly on his embonpoint.

The real point, however, is that the Barons have bludgeoned their way upward from seventh place since June 8. That achievement was largely at the expense of Montgomery, Mobile, New Orleans and Memphis. The latter pair are thrown in merely as lagniappe, because any club that can trim the Billikens and the Gulls this year would find a pleasant relaxation playing the rest of the bunch.

* * *

THE Baronial collection is one that might be expected to speed up toward the shank of the season. No fewer than eleven of Molesworth's hands have worn the spangles of the big show at one time or another. Of these, Foxen, Mayer, Moley, McDonald and Kniseley moved for very respectable periods in select company.

And with the advent of the real hotness in weather circles, and the time of year when the old strain begins to turn the edge of the younger generation's dash and daring, the old boys are rounding to.

We decline to count Gladys out yet.

* * *

SWITCHING to politics, it seems Colonel Robert Lee Hedges—sometimes known as the Sick Man of Baseball because he is unfortunate enough to be responsible for the St. Louis Browns—it seems Colonel Hedges is hedging.

The report persists that the Colonel is going to finance the Montgomery club of the Southern League. He is even accused of intending to buy the Billikens' franchise outright.

That is carrying things rather far.

On the whole, intimate diplomatic relations between Montgomery and the Browns mightn't be a bad idea at all.

If the Browns continue to evince a disposition to travel farther south than eighth place in the American League, Colonel Hedges might swap them for the Billikens.

* * *

NOW some statistician is trying to show that because New York bugs persist in packing the Polo Grounds to see the Giants clean up on the pop-eyed Cardinals, St. Louis is enabled by the cut in the "gate" to stick in the league with a club that is totally unable to give any pangs of joy to the wretched fans on the home lot.

It is said the Cardinals carried away $12,500 as their share of a recent series at the Polo Grounds.

McGraw should worry.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Another record-breaking performance was nipped when Joe Boehling lost his first game of the season after winning eleven straight. A base on balls, a single and a home run gave the Browns three runs in the first inning. After that Joe held them to two hits, but the Senators could not overcome the lead.

* * *

Not many teams have knocked out Cy Falkenberg, but the Cleveland pitcher was driven from the mound in the first inning by the Yankees. Then the rain came down in torrents and the efforts of Chance's men went for naught.

* * *

The Dodgers had a chance to work up in the first division, but Yingling, Allen and Stack could not stop the hard-hitting of the Reds.

* * *

Only one St. Louis player reached third base in the game with the Giants and he went there on a wild throw. Matty was at his best and smeared the whitewash.

GABBY STREET WON'T REMAIN IN SOUTHERN

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 29. Fans in this burg just at present are considerably worried over the possibility of Gabby Street not being with the Lookouts next season. The apparent removal of the Lookouts from the ranks of the 1913 pennant contenders has centered practically all local baseball interest on the prospects for the 1914 season.

Just at present there is no deal closed for Gabby's services for next season, nor are there any which are on the verge of consummation. This is encouraging in a way, and would remove to a great extent all qualms of the local fanatics, were it not for the fact that Gabby has stated repeatedly that he will not play another season for the sum of $300 per.

The present season has been an experimental one for the star receiver of the league, as he agreed to the stipend which he is receiving solely for the purpose of settling in his own mind the question of whether or not he was passed, so far as big league baseball is concerned.

Gabby's answer to the question is that he is not through with the big ring; that is, if ability can secure him a berth; and, as a result, he is practically decided to appear in the big show next season or not at all.

The one cause of Street's drop from the majors was the rheumatism in his system, and during the last few weeks he was with Washington he was forced to go to Nova Scotia for treatment. The malady stiffened his joints to a great degree.

One year in the Southern, however, beneath the direct and beneficial rays of the sun, has completely routed Street's arch enemy, and to-day he is as capable a receiver as ever he was in his career. Realizing this, Gabby is practically decided that it is the majors or nothing for him. A permanent minor league berth does not appear attractive to Charles where the maximum stipend is but $500 a month.

WHY NOT?

They are sending auto speeders to a cold and clammy cell.
They inject them in the hoose gow for a long and dreary spell.
Though a man deserves a sentence when he makes his motor whizz,
There are others who deserve a fate as cold and dark as his.

O, I would I were a jurist, and before the bar there stood
A gent who peddles crackerjack to earn his livelihood—
A loud and heartless merchant who infests the baseball park
And walks upon your aching corns from 3 o'clock till dark.
I would burn him with my eagle eye in spite of all his tears
And insert him in the hoose gow for a hundred thousand years.

Colonel Hedges, who perpetrates the Browns on an innocent public, avers that he has three of the greatest southpaws in captivity. All the Colonel needs now is a baseball team.

We have given up all hope that Ad Wolgast will come back. Jones has quit him, and Tom never gave up a meal ticket until the meals were all punched.

Ty Cobb is dissatisfied again, leading one to suspect that he aims to be the Bob LaFollette of baseball.

If Tyrus were an up-to-date young man he would augment his meager salary by busting into the chautauqua circuit.

CHAUTALKING.

"I am starving," said the athlete,
"On my miserable pay."
So he beat it from the ball yard
And chautalked the livelong day.

It is said that the dead do not return, and yet Bombardier Wells is mached with Gunner Moir.

We note that Jess Willard is going to fight in Los Angeles. That is, he will enter the ring in Los Angeles. Even his bitterest enemies never would accuse him of fighting.

The report that Pal Brown is going to Australia leads us to hope that he is a good swimmer.

It is rumored that since Ad Wolgast took up the job of managing himself he has had the worst manager in pugilism.

One can hardly blame those English tennis experts if they chuckle when they see their American brethren kicking in with a flock of alibis.

Giants Want Stiffer Ball Games

Must Be on Edge for Athletics

By Rube Marquard.

ST. LOUIS, July 29.—As I write these lines a feeling of exultation is upon me. I feel like shouting for very joy. I know deep down in my heart that the Giants are assured a third straight pennant, and I am not so well fortified financially that the spoils of a world's series fail to interest me.

I realize that the fight is not yet won. New York has a very advantageous lead, and should increase rather than lose this fine advantage as the season progresses. Yet there is nothing so uncertain as baseball, and until the title is won beyond possibility of refutation, I shall stand always ready to pitch my arm off, figuratively, for McGraw and our cause.

Personally, I am imbued with a desire to win as many games as possible while the enemy presents some form of rebuttal to our challenge. I think I reflect the sentiments of my teammates when I say that I would welcome even stiffer opposition than our club has encountered within the past six weeks.

Victories easily earned are not of a nature to develop the very best form for the classic struggle in October. And it is to the world's series, rather than a league championship, that McGraw and my fellows are bending every energy.

Some people may try to tell you that there is no sentiment in professional sport. I do not believe that this applies to baseball, at any rate. We all like to do well in our chosen profession. But I am certain as can be that the great majority of the Giants think more of the opportunity for a world's championship pennant than of the money entailed in the struggle for such.

Third Try at Title.

We just naturally feel that we owe it to McGraw and to our most enthusiastic supporters. The past two years we have been disappointments, even to ourselves. And the prospect of a third trial this fall has been one of the chief spurs to our ambition from the start of the season.

My club is so determined to annex the greatest honors of baseball this fall that the boys will be scarcely able to hold up their heads for shame if we are disappointed the third straight time. And, believe me, there is some consolation, in dollars and cents, for the losing end.

It might sound like braggadocio were I at this time to make any predictions as to the outcome of the world's series, especially as the Giants have not yet cinched their claim to the National League title. Yet I believe I may be pardoned a guess as to the ultimate winner in our set.

For six weeks we have set as rapid a pace as any major league club has shown within the past decade. And we have done this without the accustomed deadly hitting of our gallant captain, Larry Doyle. It strikes me as only a question of time before our sterling second baseman will come out of his slump, and then the team should be possessed of such additional power as to guarantee against any eleventh hour slip-up.

Have Score With Athletics.

New York, at least, has as good a chance to figure in the world's series as have the Athletics, and few at this moment are prepared to deny Connie Mack's claim to such distinction. From a financial aspect there might be more affable opposition, so far as we are concerned.

A New York-Chicago or a New York-Cleveland tilt would undoubtedly attract more gate money because Quaker Town has not only been pretty well glutted with Athletic triumphs, but is in addition at heart a 25-cent patronage. If the question were merely one of a straight pennant, and I had the selection of an opponent in the world's series, I should choose none other than Mack's Athletics.

All we Giants feel that we have a score to settle for our disappointment of the past two seasons. The sporting world conceded last fall that the Red Sox outclassed us. Circuit wallops by "Home Run" Baker turned the tide against us in 1911. We are curious to see if the Trappe, Md., slugger can cheat us out of our reward again.

I see that Jack Coombs expects to be back in harness about Labor Day. I sincerely hope that he may, though his presence might reasonably be supposed to work to our disadvantage if we happen to be lucky enough to tilt with Philadelphia in the great classic this fall.

Coombs is one of the finest pitchers in the business. If the Giants are to meet the Athletics, every one of us wishes Mack's men to be possessed of every possible strength. We have never offered an alibi, and if we win we wish to win against the very best that the foe can present.

TIGERS BUY PITCHER.

ASHEVILLE, N. C., July 29.—Russell Betsill, of Enoree, S. C., a member of the pitching staff of the Asheville club, of the North Carolina League, was sold to-day to the Detroit club, of the American League. The price paid for the player has not been given out.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Atlanta Man Plans $200,000 Building

Award to Thornton Mayre—Contractors Seek $1,000,000 Job. $40,000 Cash for Lot.

Local contractors and architects continue to be successful bidders on jobs outside of Atlanta. Recently announcement was made of a considerable architectural job in Spartanburg, S. C., landed by A. Ten Eyck Brown, and now comes the announcement that a fellow architect, P. Thornton Marye, is to draw plans for the new $200,000 courthouse of Wake County, North Carolina. Frank P. Simpson, of North Carolina, is associate architect.

Contractors have been invited to bid on the new twenty-one-story building of the Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, of Memphis, and inasmuch as several are in the competition, the chances of an award to a local concern are considered good. One of the largest contracting firms in the country is bidding on this job through its Atlanta office, and there are others. The cost will be $1,000,000, or more.

Refuses $40,000 Cash.

That many people are in the real estate market with cash to pay for good property is borne out in an offer on West Peachtree street which has just been declined. E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, carried on offer of $40,000 cash to Mrs. J. A. Finley for her home at the northwest corner of West Peachtree and Simpson streets, but the offer was refused. This was at the rate of $800 a foot, since the Finley lot fronts 50 feet.

Subdivision Sales.

W. H. Allen, of the Edwin P. Ansley Agency, and H. N. Van Devander have sold to George L. Morris six residence lots in their City View Park, corner of Ashby street and Mayson and Turners Ferry road, for a total of $3,000, or $500 a lot. The lots are mostly 40 feet wide by 112 to 165 feet deep. They have been on the market only a week and Mr. Allen expects to close up sales for eight more in a few days.

Record of Deeds.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale Saturday of No. 532 Ponce DeLeon avenue from R. C. Taylor to Dr. William Asher, for $9,500. The lot is 55 by 231 feet and is 234 feet west of Bonaventure street.

Durant Place Dwelling.

Edward M. Durant will soon start another house on Durant Place, just a few rods north of Ponce DeLeon avenue. Permit for a $2,500 structure of two stories has been sought at the office of Building Inspector Ed R. Hayes. Durant Place contains some of the most attractive medium-priced houses in the city. It is a neighborhood very much like West Peachtree Park, which A. B. Buehl has developed with attractive houses.

Peachtree Store Leased.

The Goodyear Raincoat Company has leased for a short term the store at No. 35 Peachtree, which was formerly a part of the Nunnally establishment at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue. The price is not given. The Nunnally Company obtained control of this property through the Clarke estate, owners.

County Board Meeting.

When Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners, returns Friday from his vacation, several things of interest will be brought before the board. The regular monthly meeting will be held on August 6, at which time much accumulated business will be taken up.

Off for New York.

J. H. Ewing and Shorter Rankin, of the Smith and Ewing Real Estate Agency, will leave for New York Friday to make loan connections for their firm and to bring home some money for substantial improvements in Atlanta. Mr. Rankin is interested in the loans and Mr. Ewing in the other item, a more definite announcement of which is expected soon.

To Remodel Plaza Hotel.

Work is expected to start in a few days on the renovation of the old Plaza Hotel, at the southern junction of the Peachtrees, plans for the same having been completed some time ago for Colonel Willis E. Ragan, the owner of this valuable triangle. The architect is A. F. N. Everett, who has designed a store for the point of the triangle at the south. A drug concern will probably locate in the latter space and the main building is expected to be leased as a hotel or large boarding house.

Copper Mines Open; Guarded by Troops

CALUMET, MICH., July 29.—Twenty-one of the 30 copper mines in the Calumet district were in operation today and plans were being made to resume work in the others to-night.

The 18,000 striking miners made no demonstrations to-day at any of the mines. State troops on duty at the shafts kept the strikers from congregating about the mines.

Connecticut Bars Runaway Weddings

NEW HAVEN, CONN., July 29.—No more hair trigger marriage licenses will be issued in this State after August 1.

Five days' notice will be required before a marriage license will be issued, according to the Secretary of State, who says that for several years runaway couples have been swarming into Connecticut.

HARD FIGHT NEAR OVER MILITIA BILL

Opponents Draw Measures to Offset Plan to Restrict Calling Out of Troops.

A contest over the question of calling out the State militia in case of riot probably will be precipitated in the General Assembly following the introduction of Senator McGregor's bill providing for the making of affidavits by the civil authorities before the Governor orders out troops.

According to information Tuesday two bills are being prepared to be put before the House seeking to revive the old law, repealed last year, giving to a judge, a Mayor, a Sheriff or other civil authority, the power to call out a company of militia in cases of riot.

Under the present law the militia can be called out only by the Governor, who has the right to investigate before taking action.

Senator McGregor's bill has the support of the Governor and the military authorities, including Adjutant General Van Holt Nash. Every effort will be made to have it passed in the Senate before the allegeda reactionary House bills are acted on.

Gallinger Resents Tillman's Attack On Suffragettes

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, rose to the defense of the high-minded Southern women who favor equal suffrage to-day when he protested against the appearance in The Congressional Record this morning of an article by the late Albert Taylor Bledsoe.

Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, yesterday secured the consent of the Senate to have the article printed in The Record. To-day when a dozen Senators had protested indignantly against the article word was sent to Senator Tillman and he hurried to the chamber and asked to have it withdrawn.

The article was written several years ago. It warned the women of the South not to follow the pace set by the strong-minded women of the North, who "would fain enter the lists with pothouse politicians and become the rivals of negroes."

Heat Wave Sneaks Back; Showers to Bring Some Relief

People who believe in mental suggestion are trying to keep cool by looking at the scenes in the Frozen North, which are being shown at a local theater this week, while nonbelievers are wearing just as few clothes as possible. The customary breezes were not on duty Tuesday and the heat was unusually oppressive downtown.

Monday night was cool enough for comfort, with the mercury at 72 at daybreak. As the hands of the clock climbed, the mercury climbed, too, and at 1 o'clock it stood at 90.

Relief is promised by thundershowers Tuesday night and Wednesday.

Essig Co. to Furnish Uniforms to Police

For the third consecutive time, Essig Bros. Co. has been awarded the contract to furnish uniforms for the Atlanta police.

A departure was made in the summer uniforms, a light weight serge being substituted for the heavy doeskin formerly used. This uniform has given great satisfaction, it being not only a great deal lighter, but has worn so well that very few officers will be forced to purchase new ones next summer.

The material selected for winter is a 28-ounce doeskin, every garment made to measure.

Asks Funds to Study Tariff Bill's Effect

WASHINGTON, July 29.—It was ported to-day that Secretary of Commerce Redfield will appear before the House Appropriations Committee to ask for $100,000 to investigate the effect of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill upon business.

While he has not yet made his plans public, it is known that he desires the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce to undertake the inquiry should the appropriations be allowed.

Family Feud in Crisp Results in Stabbing

CORDELE, July 29.—Because it is alleged he made remarks reflecting on Mrs. John Warren, Ambrose Powell, a Crisp County farmer, was stabbed several times in the back by his brother-in-law, Harry Blanchard, a brother of Mrs. Warren. Powell says he was waylaid by Blanchard and Warren.

It is said that a family feud has existed for years. Powell is at a local hospital in a serious condition. Warrants have been obtained for Warren and Blanchard, but no arrests have been made.

GAG FOR POLICE IS PROVIDED IN HOUSE BILL

An echo of the charges made during the early stages of the Phagan case, that the investigation of the mystery was hampered by too much publicity given the evidence and the movements of the detectives, is heard in a bill introduced in the House Tuesday morning by Representative D. P. Methvin, of Clayton County.

Mr. Methvin's bill prohibits detectives, sheriffs and all other officers from giving out evidence obtained against criminals or supposed criminals, except under oath. The bill permits the giving of such evidence to the prosecuting attorney or the leading counsel for the defense, but expressly prohibits detectives and other officers from giving any evidence to the general public.

The bill provides a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $1,000, or imprisonment, for violation of the law.

The introduction of the bill aroused considerable discussion in the lobbies of the House. The general impression appears to be that the bill will meet with opposition, and it is not considered likely to pass. Friends of the measure declare it is designed to remedy such conditions as arose during the Phagan case, when evidence obtained by the detectives was often published before it was reported to their superiors.

Other important bills introduced in the House Tuesday morning follow:

By Smith, of Fulton—Relative to the custody and control of minor children, and to provide under what circumstances they shall be awarded to the mother, and under what circumstances to the father.

By Slaten, of Bryan—To provide for the employment of a limited number of convicts upon trunk line public roads.

By Slater, of Bryan, and Methvin, of Dodge—A bill to enjoin and restrain the keepers of lewd houses, and to declare such houses a nuisance.

By Greene, of Houston—To provide for the establishing of a school of agriculture.

By Crawley and Cooper—To amend Section 129, Vol 1, of the Code, to provide early primary elections, not later than June 15.

By Clarke and Pierce—To repeal Sections 426, 427, 428, 429, 430, 431, 432, 433 and 434 of the Code of 1910, relating to the manufacture and sale of intoxicants.

By Toole, of Tattnall—A bill to require by grand juries semi-annual inspection of private sanitariums, orphan asylums, convents, Houses of the Good Shepherd, convent schools, monasteries, etc.

State Medical Board Bill Passes Senate

The Longino-Richardson medical practice bill, providing for the establishment of a State board of medical examiners to supervise and regulate the practice of medicine throughout the State so as to eliminate quacks and fakers, was passed in the Senate Tuesday morning by the vote of 36 to 4. The bill as adopted includes the amendment of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-second, providing for trial by jury and right of appeal to the Supreme Court by physicians whose licenses are revoked by the State board.

The bill is revolutionary in its scope for it not only gives to the State board, consisting of eight members appointed by the Governor, the right to grant and revoke the licenses of practitioners of medicine, but the right also to define the standing of medical colleges of the State as specified by the provisions of the bill itself.

Senate Head Urges Speed on Budget Bill

President Anderson in the Senate Tuesday called for the reading of the house general appropriations bill, which reached the Senate for the first time Tuesday. He urged the Appropriations Committee, to which the bill was referred, to consider the matter with all possible speed.

Among the new bills introduced Tuesday morning was the bill of Senator DuBose, providing for the regulation of the business of fire, marine and inland insurance by companies chartered by other States or foreign Governments.

A bill of President Anderson, providing for the decreasing of the minimum and the increase of the maximum limits of the number of directors of navigation companies, also was introduced.

Sunday Schools of DeKalb County Meet

The DeKalb County Sunday School convention and the Mills District Association convened jointly at Clifton Church in DeKalb County Tuesday. The convention will last two days. The usual contest singing will take place Wednesday afternoon.

Arrangements have been made to carry all who desire to attend from the junction of the East Lake and South Decatur car lines for 10 cents each way per person. Conveyances will leave the junction at from 7:45 to 8:15 and from 9:45 to 10 o'clock in the morning, returning will leave the grounds at a time to suit the crowd. Dinner will be for sale on the grounds for those who do not desire to bring baskets.

Fraser Boys' School To Begin New Career

The Donald Fraser School for Boys, in Decatur, which suspended last year, will reopen in September with Professor Paul J. King, formerly of the University School at Stone Mountain, as its official head. Professor King will have an efficient faculty associated with him and a new life is predicted for the famous school.

Donald Fraser will take a leading part in athletics during the coming year, for Mr. King has stated that he is in favor of all varieties of sport. He is now negotiating with one of the best athletic directors in Southern "prep" circles. The limit of the school will be about 60 boys for the first year.

WILSON SCORED IN WHITE SLAVE ROW

WASHINGTON, July 29.—In a speech bristling with criticism of the actions of the administration in the Caminetti-Diggs white slave cases, Representative Julius Kahn, a California Republican, to-day in the House called on the Attorney General for information regarding the postponed trial of these cases.

"The administration has not come out of this controversy with honor and credit," said Kahn. He declared there was abundant evidence of "pull" in both the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

Kahn concluded his speech saying: "Instead of having been blamed and condemned, McNab should have been commended by the President. The President has done just what McNab wanted done, but how is it to be done? By special counsel, who will be paid large fees for doing the very thing that the United States Attorney would have performed as a matter of duty.

"The Department of Justice above all others must be above suspicion. It has long been believed by the masses that there is one kind of law for the rich and the politically powerful in this country and another kind of law for the poor and weak. The action of the Department of Justice in the Caminetti-Diggs cases and the Western Fuel cases would seem to stamp this charge as true."

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Joe Welch at Forsyth.

Joe Welch, the Hebrew comedian, who has made Atlanta laugh many a time, is doing it again this week. His turn is the headliner of the new bill of vaudeville at the Forsyth. He springs many of his old jokes and many new ones, and sings a few new parodies.

Elsa Ward, a pretty young woman, who sings splendidly, takes second honors. Her gown attracts more attention from a certain part of the audience than does her singing, but she has an excellent voice, nevertheless. Other acts are Karl Cress, a painter of oils and water-colors; Robert L. Dailey and company in a sketch; Cunningham and Marion, acrobats; the Lefel Trio, gymnasts; a tiresome lot of nonsense by a company of three persons and the Patheplay.

Alaska Pictures Winners.

Educational pictures of the Alaska-Siberia hunt of the Carnegie museum tour, which, starting from Seattle, covered hitherto unexplored lands in the frozen North, are being shown for the first time in Atlanta at the Grand this week. The pictures are extremely interesting and held the breathless attention of a large audience.

The hunt was made in the interest of science, and to obtain specimens and pictures of wild animal life for the Carnegie Museum in Pittsburg. Scenes that have been visited by few white men are shown and the vast snow fields and mountains of ice shown on the screen are specially suited for the summer season.

65 Sing Sing Rioters Transferred in Irons

OSSINING, N. Y., July 29.—Sixty-five of the Sing Sing prison "bad men," who have been holding the prison in a state of terror, were taken, heavily shackled, to Auburn prison to-day.

It became known to-day that the new administration has been using the "cooler," a dark retreat in the cellar under the deathhouse, for the safe holding of some of the worst characters. It was for using this means of correction that former Warden John S. Kennedy was indicted in one of the counts found by the Winchester County Grand Jury.

BATTLE FOR TAX REFORM BEGUN IN HOUSE

Lipscombe Measure Is Taken Up in Sections as the Special Order of Business.

The first active steps toward tax reform in Georgia were taken by the House Tuesday morning, when the consideration of the Lipscombe bill, which creates a State and County Boards of Tax Equalizers was begun. The bill, together with amendments offered by the Ways and Means Committee and by members from the floor of the House, was made a special order of the day, and was taken up by sections.

The work of perfecting the bill probably will not be completed for several days. Though there were several lively skirmishes to-day, in one of which Speaker Burwell saved a section of the bill, as amended by the committee, by voting aye, opponents of the measure will reserve their heavy fire until the bill comes up for passage. This is not expected until the latter part of the week.

Three Members on Board.

The Lipscombe bill, as amended by the Ways and Means Committee, provides that the State board shall consist of three members appointed by the Governor for two, four and six-year terms. An amendment offered by Moon, of Troup, that the Governor appoint one members from North Georgia, one from South Georgia and one from Central Georgia, was adopted. The county board shall consist of three members appointed by the judge of the Superior Court of the county, upon recommendation of the Board of County Commissioners.

The only fight of any consequence that developed during the consideration of the bill came when section 12, providing for a secretary for the board, was read. The Ways and Means Committee amended the original bill, which provided for a secretary at $2,000 a year by striking the entire section and substituting a provision that the Comptroller General should be secretary of the board at no salary at all. Half a dozen amendments were offered by members from the floor.

Secretary Given $500 Salary.

After much discussion, amendments offered by Representatives Fullbright, Miller and Wimberly were adopted. Mr. Fullbright's amendment provided for the employment of secretary at a salary of $500 a year; Mr. Wimberly's and Mrs. Miller's amendment made the Comptroller General an ex-officio member of the board, to act in an advisory capacity without a vote.

FFifteen sections of the bill were adopted Tuesday. The remaining seven will be considered Wednesday, after which the bill will be placed upon its passage.

Trains Collide in Fog; Brakeman Dead

VALDOSTA, July 29.—In a head-on collision between freight trains on the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, 21 miles north of here, today Henry Castello, a negro brakeman, was instantly killed. The other members of the crews jumped and none was seriously hurt, except Engineer Mann, who had an ankle broken.

The collision took place during a fog and, it is said, was caused by the operator at Adel misunderstanding orders and failing to hold the southbound train. The two locomotives and thirteen loaded cars were demolished.

Army Paymaster Liable for $86,510

WASHINGTON, July 29.—Captain R. C. Williams, U. S. A. paymaster at Olongapo, P. I., personally is liable to the Government for $86,510.84 until he presents receipts and evidences that he paid out this amount.

Captain Williams says he paid the money to contractors, soldiers and others to whom payment was due from the Government and that the receipts were lost in the wreck of the collier Brutus at sea.

England May Call On Boers in Mine Strife

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

JOHANNESBURG, July 29.—Business is at a complete standstill here. The miners, angry over the refusal of the Government to meet their demands are in an ugly mood. Threats to burn the mining property have been made.

The men also resent the report that the Government intends to bring commands of armed Boers to quell any possible rioting.

Eugenic Bride of A Month Deserts

BOSTON, July 29.—"Eugenic marriage may be all right as a health proposition, but it isn't a guarantee of future happiness," declared Edwin Perron, of Lynn, the first eugenic husband in Massachusetts.

His wife, he says, ran away a month after the wedding.

Highwaymen Slug Guest of Waldorf

NEW YORK, July 29.—Evidently the victim of a highwayman's assault, Frederick B. Wells, millionaire merchant of Minneapolis, was found to-day lying on the sidewalk at a corner of the lower West Side. He was hatless and coatless.

Wells was hurried to a hospital. He had been stopping at the Waldorf-Astoria.

JULY AND AUGUST TAKE AEROPLANE

NEW YORK, July 29.—Because the weather map failed to show any moisture in Texas or indications that any would be expected in the near future, cotton this morning opened steady, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 6 points higher than Monday's final. Sentiment was less bearish, and quite an active covering movement developed at the start. Later the market eased off sharply in response to active selling by the uptown crowd and Wall Street brokers. Declines aggregated 3 to 5 points from the initial level, or practically unchanged from the previous close.

The trade witnessed a repetition of the sensational flurry in July during the forenoon, when sudden liquidation prevailed. This option dropped from 11.85 to 11.71, "nothing between," and immediately jumped back to the former quotation, "nothing between," and increased its gain to 11.94. The phenomenal strength and activity in that option, as well as other positions, was attributed chiefly to heavy absorption by large spot houses, and covering short commitments by recent sellers, coupled with a Liverpool cable saying offerings were light and sohrts running to cover. Advances in other positions aggregated 2 to 9 points over the previous close within the first two hours.

During the afternoon session part of the early advance was wiped out through active selling, believed to be profit-taking by early buyers. Old crop positions, however, held firm. Losses were attributed mainly to new crops. At the close the market was steady with prices 1 to 2 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 29.—Apart from the absence of rain in the southern half of Texas, the map shows favorable conditions. The most favorable developments were the let-up in the heavy rainfall in the Central and Eastern States, where a spell of comparatively dry weather is desired in order to produce the best results. There were only a few light showers overnight in Oklahoma and the Atlantics, generally fair weather is shown in Texas and Oklahoma. Northwest Texas, Amarillo, had .72 inch of rain.

Indications are for generally fair weather in the West, except possibly some cloudiness over Northwest Texas and Western Oklahoma. Part cloudy in the Central and Eastern States, with a few scattered showers.

Houston, Texas, to-day officially recorded the receipt of six new bales of cotton, making receipts to date 31 new, against 13 last year. This supports the contention that owing to the uniformity of crop development, the movement of new cotton will increase much more rapidly this year when once started.

Our markets showed indecision, opinions varying as to whether to act on the bullish weather conditions in the West, or to expect a bearish effect from the increase in the new movement reflected by the Houston receipts. First trades were at an advance of 3 to 5 points, which was soon lost.

COTTON GOSSIP

The market has ruled very steady all day on buying from the some sources as yesterday. Brokers representing spot interests have been principal buyers. Selling has come from the uptown crowd and Wall street apparently. The market is narrow, with transactions small. Until further weather developments prevail a narrow market is looked for with an upward tendency.—Anderson.

Pell Interests were credited with buying considerable cotton yesterday on the decline, covering shorts and probably going long on the belief that a large portion of Texas is in a bad way. Riordan purchases supposedly for the above firm were in the neighborhood of 35,000 bales. Liverpool was a large seller.

* * *

Nell Bros., of London, in their latest circular maintain their estimate of 14,750,000 bales as the actual consumption of American cotton for the present season. This estimate was made public the latter part of October, 1912.

* * *

The market is extremely sensitive to all reports and did a lot of nervous flopping around.

* * *

The change is the attitude of the Exchange Place house yesterday did not seem to attract outside buying of consequence, probably because crop conditions as a whole are considered excellent.

* * *

An increased trade demand for contracts is reported on a scale down.

* * *

Further rains in the Western section would undoubtedly bring out heavy sales from Wall Street and the South. It seems purely a weather market now and will be influenced accordingly.

* * *

The New York Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crops in Tennessee, Louisiana and Arkansas:

"Tennessee—Prospects for cotton are better than for many years. The plant is strong and well fruited, with a good stand and free from insects. Fields are clean and well cultivated. A few localities are needing rain, but as a rule precipitation has been ample. Percentage condition is considerably higher than a month ago, when it was 82.7. The season is about normal, though some correspondents report it earlier than usual.

"Louisiana—Owing to drouth and the almost universal presence of the boll weevil, percentage condition appears to have lost a few points from last month, when it was 80.6, but the prospects are better than a year ago, when condition was 74.7. Otherwise, prospects for a large crop are excellent and the outturn depends largely upon the success of the fight against the boll weevil. The plant is strong and healthy, with a fair stand and good fruitage.

"Arkansas—Cotton has maintained its rather high percentage condition of a month ago, when it was 85.4 and 77.7 a year ago. The plant is of good size, with fair stands and fruiting rather heavily. Cultivation and condition of the fields are unusually fine and a number of correspondents look for the biggest crop in years. The only drawback has been the hot dry weather, which has checked growth and fruiting. Damage from boll weevil is very slight and the crop is very free from other insect pests."

* * *

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market had digested reports showing continued dry weather in Central Texas, which produces the bulk of the crop of the Lone Star State. It also had to discount the market effect of probable higher temperatures in that section. Hence the steady tone and higher range in prices. The talent is fully aware of the fact that rain relief did not reach North and West Texas in time to figure in the data gathered on July 25 for the government crop condition report, which will be promulgated on August 1. It is also convinced that the official instructions to government agents to watch out for weevil damage will result in some Bureau utterances that will aid the bulls rather than the bears.

"Under the circumstances the rings were inclined to think the decline had gone far enough for the present, and that a moderate upward reaction was in order. Meanwhile, optimistic opinions as to the crop promise reach the rings in numbers every day. On the other hand, Texas is not offering new crop cotton in anything like the volume usual at this time of year, and exporters are beginning to believe that Texas contribution of new cotton during August will be comparatively small, probably very much smaller than that of last year, according to one of them. In normal seasons this is the time when consumers and importers in America sell specific grades and weights in volume for delivery in October, December, January and March. Such business, of course, generally trading in contracts, with the speculator supplying the difference between the long and the short hedges required by the trade."

MERCHANTS BUYING COTTON GOODS FOR SPRING DELIVERY

Marshall Field & Co., in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"The dry goods business of the week has held about even with that of the same period a year ago. Our representatives again on the road after their vacations are finding buyers ready to consider lines for spring delivery in a conservative way.

"Crop conditions inspire confidence in mercantile operations, especially throughout the principal corn growing States. Exceptionally good reports are received from the State of Iowa. The oats crop has benefited by timely rains in some sections.

"Collections continue about normal.

"A healthful tendency is noted in that there is an increasing demand for the better grades of merchandise.

"The steady, normal volume of daily shipments indicates low stocks and a 'hand-to-mouth' policy of buying among realiers generally."

DAMAGE TO CORN WORRIES STREET

By CHARLES W. STORMS.

NEW YORK, July 29.—An irregular tone was shown in the early trading on the Stock Exchange, there being complete absence of vigor which characterized the dealings for the two preceding weeks. In some quarters it was thought that enough long stock was sold to make the market again susceptible to their influence.

Union Pacific yielded ½ and losses of around ½ point were also sustained in Amalgamated, American Can and Canadian Pacific. Steel rose ¼, but later reacted the same amount. Americans were well above parity in London, where the trading was of an irregular character.

The curb was steady.

The market continued irregular with considerable losses and small trading except the buying at the start from London. Union Pacific, Amalgamated, Steel and Chesapeake and Ohio were the most active although they recorded losses. Reading sold ex-dividend of 2 per cent at 160½, a decline of ⅝. Missouri Pacific and Steel common were both off ⅝. Union Pacific lost ½ at 149¾. Northern Pacific and Lehigh Valley both declined ¾. Southern Pacific was off ⅛ to 93. The tone continued weak.

Call money loaning at 2½.

After a listless, lagging market for a good part of the afternoon strength developed with a more active demand and many of the important issues made substantial gains.

The market closed steady. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

STOCK GOSSIP

T. D. Potter says: "The market has every appearance of going higher and stocks like Union Pacific, Reading, Steel and Copper should be bought on every recession.

"I believe another effort to secure higher freight rates will be successful. Steel earnings for quarter published to-day will probably show $38,250,000. This will be bullish and should have a stimulating effect on prices."

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Speculative sentiment is better in the foreign markets. Information channels favor purchase of Standard stocks on reactions for turns. We would not climb for stocks, but would buy conservatively on fair reactions for moderate profits."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "The situation in wheat as viewed by most traders is regarded as discouraging to holders, the movement being large, and the speculative and export demand yesterday being light. Corn specialists say that the next three weeks will tell the story of the crop. It is the general belief that the brilliant prospects of thirty days ago have disappeared. A large part of the crop is at the critical stage, and it depends extirely upon the weather, as to how the crop will come through."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—Weather in the Northwest generally clear with seasonable temperatures. The tone of the market is heavy and looks lower.

"Corn—The map shows no rain in the corn belt and very high temperatures prevailed yesterday in all territories west of the river. As long as present weather conditions prevail higher prices seem inevitable.

"Oats—We believe the market will gradually work higher.

"Provisions—Foreigners buyers of lard. The continued strength in corn adds to the general firmness."

Omaha reports no rain in Nebraska. Generally clear over the State. Winnipeg clear, 60; Duluth clear, 40; Glenwood clear; Bismarck clear, 70; Kansas City says corn and wheat bulletin shows no rain.

* * *

Provisional Department of Agriculture of Manitoba estimates wheat crop of 65,000,000 bushels, against 58,000,000 last year.

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "My returns to date, covering almost one-half of the corn producing counties, are showing some sensational losses in corn prospect. Kansas returns as far as tabulated and covering nearly half of the State, show a drop approaching 50 per cent since July 1, and working lower as later reports come in. Nebraska is off nearly 20 points and Oklahoma 40 points; Missouri to date shows 10 points off, and both Illinois and Indiana have lost ground. Arkansas, Tennessee and Kentucky are also showing heavy losses. If the latter reports prove in line with those already received, the general average condition will fall several points under 80, and the official indication on August 1 may not be for a crop over 2,700,000 bushels."

* * *

B. W. Snow has the following from Edgar County, Ill.: "From April 10, we had nine weeks of dry weather, which ruined oats and hay, then we had some rain, which gave corn a fair start, but for the last five weeks we had hot weather and no rain. Unless we get rain in a few days corn will be the worst failure we have had in the 60 years that I have been in this country."

* * *

The Weekly Iowa Weather and Crop Report says: "In some localities in the southeastern counties, where there has been only .05 inch rain during the last 30 days, corn is firing and is at a standstill. Pastures are brown."

* * *

Selling in corn to-day was very scattered and sellers really scarce. That's why the market went up so easy, as nobody dares to take the short side.

Highest Government Officials
Protecting the Vilest Form of Crime
President Wilson and Mr. Bryan May Permit This—BUT THEY CAN'T EXCUSE IT.

(Copyright, 1913.)

This is "The Caminetti Story":

A man in California was accused of a serious crime against a young woman. There was no apparent hope of his escaping if properly and promptly tried. His chief hope was in delay, subterfuge and waning public interest, and, above all, DISHONEST OR INDIFFERENT PROSECUTION.

The man accused and guilty, Caminetti, happened to have a father who held public office under the Federal Government.

And this father was a friend of the Attorney General, McReynolds, appointed by Mr. Wilson TO ENFORCE THE LAWS THAT CAMINETTI WAS SEEKING TO EVADE, AND TO PUNISH THE CRIME OF WHICH CAMINETTI WAS ACCUSED.

There was delay in the Caminetti matter, and McNab, representing the Government as a prosecutor in California, resented the delay and denounced it.

He showed that the Attorney General, McReynolds, sworn to enforce the law and punish violators of law, had, at the request of the criminal's father, ACTUALLY DIRECTED THAT THE PROSECUTION BE PUT OFF. That is to say, that every opportunity be given to the criminal to escape the consequences of his crime.

If a man, to oblige a friend whose son is accused of a serious crime, interferes with justice, what will that man do when bigger and other crimes are committed, not by individuals against individuals, but by corporations against the entire people?

If McReynolds, to oblige the father of Caminetti, interferes with justice, what will he do to oblige the father of some trust when the time comes?

Is such a man fit for office?

The amazing thing is that Mr. Wilson, instead of praising and thanking McNab, an honest official, who denounced the infamous delay and favoritism, actually rebuked that man and accepted his resignation from office.

And now, as Senator Ashurst earnestly and justly points out, comes the culminating outrage—THE APPOINTMENT OF HAYDEN, A FRIEND OF CAMINETTI'S TO ACT AS PROSECUTOR IN THE PLACE OF M'NAB, THE CONSCIENTIOUS OFFICIAL.

Senator Ashurst is to be thanked for his timely and vigorous protest against a shameful miscarriage of justice.

In the first place, we have Caminetti, who should long since have been tried, gaining delay, at the request of his father, who is a friend of McReynolds.

And now, when McNab, an honest man, is removed from the case, we have another friend of Caminetti, Hayden, put in as prosecutor.

No collection of fine words or platitudes from McReynolds, President Wilson or anybody else will explain away an action such as this.

It is not a matter of politics, as Senator Ashurst proves. He is a Democrat, but he knows that there is nothing to be gained for any party by leaving such an outrageous state of affairs untouched. As well talk of helping a living body by leaving a cancer free from molestation in that body as to talk of helping a political party by leaving unrebuked such a shameful Government crime in the Caminetti case.

It is bad enough when "friends in the Government" are used by men of the Archbold type, with the aid of their checkbooks, to permit extortion and robbery of the public.

It is inconceivable and infamous that Government pull, the friendship of a papa Caminetti for an Attorney General McReynolds, should be used to delay and perhaps frustrate the prosecution of a man accused of an infamous crime against a young woman.

Such conduct by McReynolds and Caminetti, condoned apparently by President Wilson, does not fit in very well with the protestations that preceded the recent election.

It Is a Valuable Asset, No Matter What Position One Occupies in Life, and It Is One of the Greatest Factors in Success

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

A YOUNG man employed in one of the many places which contribute to the welfare of the public, in one of the greatest new railroad stations in the United States, was asked by a patron of his department whether certain trains went from the upper or lower level.

He answered brusquely that he did not know; that she could find out by going to the inquiry bureau on the floor above.

His department was separate from that, he said.

The patron turned and found an official within a few feet of the young man, who indicated the way.

"If I answered all the questions asked me in a day," the young man said, "I would have no time to attend to my own business."

But the man had taken more time and breath and energy in being disagreeable than he would have required in obtaining information about all the trains in the station.

There are two levels in that station, the upper and the lower.

A Correct Reply.

The train inquired about are an important line, and almost any youth of ordinary intellect, or less than ordinary, would naturally learn in a few days' time from which level they started, especially if his business was in sight of these trains.

Not to possess such information in his position betokened a lack of observation and interest in occurrences continually taking place about him that bespeaks failure for the young man in anything he undertakes; and if he knew and refused the information because he did not like to be questioned on subjects not pertaining to his business, then his disposition is one to attract failure, not success.

It took many words for him to tell the lady that he did not know and that it was not his business to know what she wished to know. It would have required just two words to answer her question, had he known, "upper level" or "lower level," and, with a smile added, the lady would have gone her way, thinking what a pleasant youth he was, instead of thinking what she did think about him.

In ten years' time this youth will be a man in his full prime—somewhere in his thirties—and he will be wondering why he has not got on in the world; and he will say he has had no "influence," no "pull," and that others have been advanced over him through "favoritism," and he will make a hundred excuses for his failure to arrive, when the real fault will lie entirely with himself.

He Had No Excuse.

The work this youth was doing required no great concentration. He was not absorbed in some difficult mathematical problem, and he had many moments when he was doing nothing at all save waiting for people to serve. Therefore he had no excuse for not using his eyes and ears to learn a small yet important fact about the big station; and he had no excuse for not imparting the information asked save a lack of development of kindnes and courtesy.

Courtesy a Great Factor.

No matter what may be one's position in life, from the most menial to the most lofty place, kindness and courtesy are most valuable assets for human beings to possess. They are great factors in success.

Observation is another factor; and the habit of using odd, unoccupied moments in learning something that will be of value to one's self or others later—that, too, is a habit which leads to the road of success.

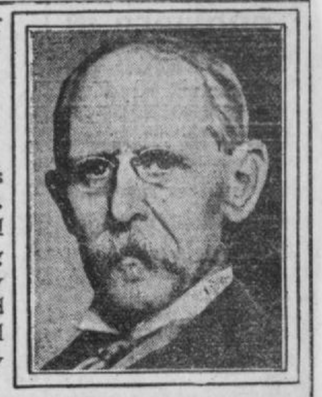
It is a better habit than that of watching the clock for fear of working five minutes overtime.

And still another habit is of vast value on that road—the habit of smiling and speaking in an agreeable tone of voice in the small daily occurrences of life.

Each one of us is subject to annoyance by having people ask questions which it is not our province to answer; but when we fail to give the information desired we can give something better oftimes by the bestowal of a pleasant look and manner.

Mysteries of Science and Nature

The Mysterious Properties of Steel, Tin and Glass. If Cooled Slowly Steel Will Not Take a Cutting Edge; Cooled Suddenly It Becomes Hard and Tempered—Tin Will Crumble in Severely Cold Weather.



By GARRETT P. SERVISS

HERE is a fact, known to everybody, which is as mysterious as would be the actual appearance of a ghost, by which I mean that the fundamental explanation of the phenomenon is about as far beyond our reach in the one case as in the other.

The fact to which I refer is the production of tempered steel by quenching in cold water. If hot steel is cooled very slowly it becomes soft and can not take a cutting edge, but if it is cooled suddenly it becomes very hard and can be ground into keen swords, knives and cutting tools.

Now why the difference? Have you ever thought about that question? If you have not, many a man of science has, and has been greatly puzzled over it.

Here is another related mystery. If you heat an old Japanese sword, which for centuries has retained its capacity to slice off a head at a blow, or to open a swift passage for the soul of the victim of the hari-kari mania, to the temperature of boiling water it gradually softens and loses the keenness that once made it so formidable.

It Is the Same Steel.

It is the same steel, but it, too, seems to have lost its soul. At a temperature of 150 degrees Centigrade the hardened steel commits hari-kari in a few minutes. Surely there is something strange in that.

Then consider this: At zero temperature water changes from a liquid and suddenly becomes solid. But if you put the water in a vase and carefully protect it from dust, you may cool it as much as twenty degrees below zero, and yet it will not freeze! But now shake the vase or drop in a bit of ice, and the water immediately solidifies!

I owe the collection of these facts to a paper by Professor James H. Walton, Jr., of Wisconsin University. The explanation which he gives is that substances like the hardened steel and the unfreezing water are in a state of "suspended change." That accounts for the phenomena, but, in a certain sense, they remain mysterious, just as life is mysterious.

Many substances possess the same curious characteristics. Professor Walton says that if a flask containing sodium acetate, which has been cooled below its natural freezing point without solidifying, is opened in a room containing dust of the solid acetate, the fine particles of the latter dropping into the flask will cause the whole contents to solidify.

Tin is a very strange metal with regard to this state of suspended change or "metastability." A severe winter cold will sometimes cause it to lose its hardness and crumble.

Suffer From "Tin Discore."

Objects made of tin often undergo such change and are then said to be suffering from "the tin disease." The contact of "diseased" tin with bright, hard tin is capable of setting up the transformation.

Glass, Professor Walton informs us, is "an under-cooled substance"—that is, it is in a metastable condition. If old glass tubes through which water has frequently passed are heated, the glass crystallizes and loses its transparency.

All substances in this state are liable to change, and the change, under proper conditions, may be sudden. Hardened steel is in a similar category. If it were as perishable as tin, it could not be safely used for many purposes for which it is habitually employed. Fortunately, steel exhibits great resistance to change of state after it has been tempered. Transformation is retarded or arrested.

"Does steel slowly return to the stable form and thus grow softer?" asks Professor Walton, and then answers: "That we do not know; we can only say that if such a change does take place, hundreds of years are necessary to bring it about."

Heated Japanese Swords.

The same ancient Japanese swords, which, when heated, as before described, become soft, retain all their hardness if carefully preserved.

It is evidently of the highest importance to the practical world that science is investigating these things and discovering the way and the circumstances in which the changes come about, even if it has not unveiled the underlying mystery of their cause.

Peter the Great's Widow

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

TWO hundred and ten years ago Peter the Great began building the city of St. Petersburg, a piece of work that perhaps stands second to none as an illustration of what can be accomplished by indomitable Will Power.

The building of a city upon the miry delta of the Neva involved the overcoming of tremendous natural difficulties. Peter's engineers said it could not be done, but Peter said it could, and with characteristic grit the Czar went to work building his city, which, he said, should be the "Window from which he could look out upon Europe."

Thousands of peasants were ordered to the field of operations, and great piles were driven down into the marsh for a foundation. Masons were scarce, but Peter met the difficulty by an order forbidding the erection of stone buildings throughout the Empire. The imperial strong box ran low, but the indefatigable man taxed everything he could think of for the raising of the requisite funds. The men died like sheep at the shambles, but with a determination remorseless as fate the Czar kept at the task. Dividing the supervision of the work between himself and his lieutenants, he toiled away with the energy of a demon, and by 1712 sufficient advance had been made to permit of the transfer of the Court from Moscow.

But an imperial capital and a royal court required a considerable amount of polish in its setting, and so Peter issued a decree that all Russian proprietors who owned five hundred serfs or over should build residences in the new capital and spend at least the winters there. By 1800 the population was 220,000; by 1864, 500,000; by 1900, 1,200,000; and today it is 2,000,000—a wonderful monument to the will power and dogged resolution of one man—a man who never in his life took "no" for an answer. A giant in stature and in intellect, the founder of St. Petersburg and of modern Russia must always rank among the very greatest of the sons of men, a miracle of will power, one of the most amazing instances we have of the energy that does things.

LABOR INDORSES EDITORIAL.

Editor The Georgian: The accompanying resolutions regarding a recent editorial appearing in your paper were unanimously adopted at the last session of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, and I was instructed to forward this copy to you. With best wishes, I am, respectfully,

J. F. BRADFIELD,
Secretary Atlanta Federation of Trades.

"Whereas there appeared on the editorial page of The Atlanta Georgian of July 22, 1913, an editorial making suggestions upon how to get the American who saves and the American who borrows closer together, without being robbed by the middleman with his interest, and

"Whereas this editorial voices sentiments and ideas long advocated and felt by the laboring people of the United States, be it

"Resolved, That the Atlanta Federation of Trades do go on record as indorsing said editorial and what it advocates, congratulates The Atlanta Georgian upon this masterful editorial, and be it further

"Resolved, That it is the hope of this organization that the people will soon find (as per the editorial) a leader big enough and able enough to hand the savings of the frugal workman in the shape of a loan to the equally frugal and valuable farmer and take from both of them only enough to pay for the transaction."

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Editor The Georgian: Our thoughtful statesman introduces a bill to require or allow the Bible to be read in the public schools. Some have suggested that there are six different "Bibles," or six different versions of the Bible, and the law would have to specify the one to be read in the schools. This being the case we might expect differences of opinion. I for one think best of King James' version. "The State legislating righteousness into the child." "The parent giving over his duty of teaching his children the Scriptures" and other such expressions we see given as reasons against enacting such a law. We naturally expected opposition to such a law, but not from orthodox ministers of any church, and I am very much inclined to believe that their opposition to such a law will greatly weaken their claim before their church and the world of mankind that the Bible is the Book of Books and its teachings of the greatest moment. It is no use to say to the world, the church and to your children that the Bible is the greatest book, its teachings the most important of all, that it should be first in importance to all other books and then say it should not be read to the children in the schools. That is simply contradicting yourself. This very spirit of dissension and disagreement among Christian ministers and laymen is the greatest hindrance to the success of Christianity.

The Song of Joy and Pain

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

OH, I tasted of pleasure—and liked it,
For the flavor was sweet to my lip.
"Life is joy," then I cried, "and my sea's at full tide;
Life's a garden—each flower I'll sip."
But a sting lurked in every bright flower,
And the waves of Joy's sea broke in foam,
While the lure of gay Pleasure's fleet hour
Bore me wandering—far from my home.

Then I tasted of sorrow—'twas bitter,
And the talons of pain tore my heart.
"Life is torture," I cried. "Must I linger and bide
All my losses in Cruelty's mart?"
But a message was hid in the tangle
Of these noisome and bitter dark weeds;
From the sound of harsh bells all a-jangle
Pealed a chime for the doer of deeds.

"There's pleasure to taste, and there's sorrow—
Take from one, from the other you borrow;
Sun to-day may mean storm-clouds to-morrow;
All your life you must mark the measure
Of sorrow attuned unto pleasure—
The heart that is wise still will treasure
Its joys the more dear, for its sorrow,
Its pain as a wonderful measure
When joy brighter radiance shall borrow."
