Lawyers Wrangle Over Frank's Nervousness

SENATE CUTS BUDGET TO MEET TAX

Appropriations Committee Slashes $280,325 From House Measure After Anderson's Plea.

Following a conference with Governor John M. Slaton, the Senae Appropriations Committee Friday morning slashed $280,325 from the House general appropriations bill, making the disbursements balance with the estimated revenues.

The cut was made in the fourth-class service on a basis of 7 per cent, including pensions, public schools and the higher schools and colleges, including Tech and the University of Georgia.

Following the meeting of the committee, which was executive, members declared that the action of the committee was unanimous, and that it would stand behind the report like a rock wall. Under the ruling of the committee, it will now be up to the House to provide means for raising more revenue if appropriations are to be raised.

The action of the Senate committee followed an address in the Senate of President Randolph Anderson, who called upon the Appropriations Committee to further consider the House bill calling for an excess of $280,000 in disbursements over revenues.

Later during the session the committee went into executive session, and shortly before noon a conference was held with Governor Slaton. The Governor, it is understood, lined up with the Senate committee and President Anderson in putting it squarely up to the House to provide more revenues before appropriations are raised.

The cuts are as follows:

Pensions service class, $75,900; public schools, $178,500; Tech, $5,600; State Normal at Athens, $3,325; Normal at Milledgeville, $3,775; Normal at Valdosta, $1,750; University, $3,375, extension of agricultural schools, $7,000; Medical College at Augusta, $2,100.

Hasty Resignation Of Postmaster at Cordele Demanded

CORDELE, Aug. 1.—Postmaster General Burleson has called for the resignation of F. G. Boatright, postmaster at Cordele, charging failure to give sufficient personal attention to the office, his successor to be appointed in 30 days. Boatright was appointed by President Roosevelt and reappointed by President Taft, his present term expiring on February 16, 1914. He refused to make a statement to-day.

Congressman Charles R. Crisp, of the Third District, has asked each of the applicants for postmaster here to submit their indorsements, promising to give all due consideration before making a recommendation. Applicants for the office are S. L. Felder, assistant postmaster; O. S. Bazemore, J. R. Kelly, Dr. A. L. McArthur, J. W. Bivins and J. D. Pate.

Mayor's Heart Too Tender; He Won't Serve as Recorder

Mayor Woodward absolutely and persistently refuses to act as Recorder.

Judge Broyles leaves on his vacation Monday, and Judge Preston asked the Mayor Friday morning if he would preside over the court Monday.

"I most positively will not act as Recorder!" he thundered. "I have never acted and never will. In the first place, the Mayor has no business to act as Recorder. He might pass sentence where an appeal to the Mayor would ordinarily be made.

"A member of Council should not serve in the capacity of Recorder, but that is their business.

"No passing of sentence on the poor unfortunates for me."

Youths To Be Tried On Slaying Charge

DOTHAN, Aug. 1.—Jason Robinson, who was implicated in the murder of James Lloyd, a 16-year-old boy, in this county in March, has been jailed again on a charge of carrying concealed weapons. Robinson is to be tried in September for the murder of Lloyd.

Charles Brackin, a youth, has been acquitted on the charge of the murder. Three other prominent youths are to have trial in September. All cases have attracted considerable attention.

X-Ray Skirt Breaks Up Baseball Game

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN.—A girl with a diaphanous skirt ended a baseball game here between the Nationals and the Westports. The manager of the Westport team called the game off in the ninth inning when his outfielders turned all their attention to the maid with the gauze-like skirt, who stood between the sun and the fielders.

Three flies were bated to the fence without the players making a move to intercept them.

Widow Will Inspect Harriman Railways

NEW YORK, August 1.—Mrs. L. H. Harriman, acompanied by her daughter, Miss Carol Harriman, will leave early in August to visit her ranch in Idaho.

There was a report which C. C. Tegethoff, of the Harriman estate, refused to deny or confirm, that Mrs. Harriman will be accompanied by railroad officials and engineers for the purpose of making an official inspection of the Harriman railroad properties in the West.

Massacre and Pillage Continued by Turks

Special Cable to The Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 1.—The Turks are continuing their campaign of massacre and pillage in the country near Dedeagatch. All the men in the villages of Tartarlare, Selilu, Saryta and Lachman, were killed when the Turkish troops entered those places.

The torch was applied to all public buildings and looting began. All who opposed the Turks were tortured before being killed.

Policewomen Must Be Single and Large

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The City Civil Service Commission has decided that unmarried women of generous proportions are the most desirable policewomen.

Widows are not barred, but they must be young and vigorous. Examination for ten policewomen will be held soon.

Woman Is Named to Supervise 'Spooning'

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—Mayor R. S. Bennett has appointed Mrs. Nanette, a social worker of Baltimore, as a special boardwalk policewoman.

She will watch the "spooners" and "mashers" and act as a censor of the bathing costumes.

50 MILLIONS FOR BANKS IN DIXIE

Government to Minimize Money Stringency During Crop Moving.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—To facilitate the movement of crops, the Administration, through Secretary McAdoo, announces that $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of Government funds will be deposited in the national banks of the South and West at once. Federal, State and municipal bonds and prime commercial paper will be accepted as security for the money, upon which the banks will pay 2 per cent interest.

Unusual Amount Needed.

The motive of the Administration in establishing this new policy is to anticipate the money stringency in the late summer and fall, which accompanies the marketing and movement of crops, especially when the crops are unusually large, as the harvest now beginning forecasts. He intends to prevent or minimize the usual tightness of money.

The Secretary announces that Government bonds will be accepted at par as security for the new deposits, and that the additional money would be placed only with banks which have taken out at least 40 per cent of their authorized circulation.

United States 2 per cent bonds, serving as security for most of the national bank circulation, have been depressed recently to new low market records, dropping to 95 3-4 during the past few days. The Secretary's willingness to accept these bonds at par as security for the $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of promised deposits and the inducement to the national banks to increase their circulation up to the 40 per cent limit are expected to help in restoring the parity of the depressed 2s by creating a new market for them.

To Accept Commercial Paper.

For the first time in history the Government will accept prime commercial paper as security for deposits. This privilege will be granted, announced the Secretary, in order to make these special deposits available to the banks on securities readily within their reach.

"The commercial paper submitted," added Mr. McAdoo, "shall first be passed upon and approved by the clearing house committees of the cities in which the banks offering such paper may be located. All commercial paper and bonds must finally be passed upon and accepted by the Secretary."

'Sleep Strike' Frees Sylvia Pankhurst

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 1.—Sylvia Pankhurst, daughter of Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, leader of the militant suffragettes, who was arrested when she led a crowd to storm Premier Asquith's home, was released from jail to-day.

She had inaugurated a hunger and sleep strike while imprisoned, refusing to eat or lie down.

Heat Kills 901 Babies In Chicago in Month

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The heat wave that gripped Chicago for three days was broken today by a strong breeze off Lake Michigan. Figures made public to-day by the Health Department showed that heat had contributed to the death of 901 babies in Chicago between June 14 and July 12.

During the same period last year 509 deaths occurred among children under two years.

Mystery in Blaze That Does $2,000 Damage to Store

Fire of mysterious origin early Friday morning damaged the building occupied by the G. A. and F. Grocery Company, at No. 23 Piedmont avenue. The loss is $2,000. Firemen conquered the blaze in a hard fight.

The fire was discovered soon after 3 o'clock by Call Officers McHugh, Arnold and McWilliams, who thought they heard a pistol shot in the neighborhood of the store. They found the second floor of the store in flames. They think now what they supposed was a shot was an explosion.

MRS. FRANK SMILING AS SHE LEAVES COURT

Mrs. Leo Frank, wife of defendant in Phagan case, and Julian Boehm, a friend of the family, snapped as they were leaving the courtroom. Mrs. Frank evidently is well pleased with the course the case is running.

Meridian to Enforce 'Blue Law' on Sunday

MERIDIAN, MISS., Aug. 1.—The city authorities announced to-day that they would refuse to permit the newspapers to be issued here next Sunday and the Sunday sale of out-of-town papers, magazines, etc., would be stopped. Nothing but medicines will be allowed to be sold by drug stores. There is much excitement over the blue law order, which officials say will be enforced to the letter.

Needle and Thread Caused Pain in Knee

EUFAULA, Aug. 1.—After suffering several weeks with a severe pain about the knee, Mrs. C. M. Thompson had it lanced to-day and a threaded needle was taken out by the surgeon.

Mrs. Thompson is unable to account for the needle, which evidently had been imbedded in the fleshy part of the leg for many months.

Seizes 100 Gallons Of Whisky on Boat

GADSDEN, Aug. 1.—Sheriff Sparks, of Marshall County, Alabama, has seized 100 gallons of whisky and eight barrels of beer being transported on the steamer John Ross, and is holding it under the prohibition laws of Alabama. The liquor was consigned to Decatur, Ala., to be delivered secretly after a court injunction restraining railroads and steamboats from delivering liquor to alleged blind tiger operators had been issued

Lad Injured by Auto Is Taken to Hospital

Raymond Roddy, 12 years old, who lives at No. 56 Williams street, was run down by an automobile driven by H. Hooten, No. 70 Broyles street, Friday morning at Hunter and Pryor, in front of the building in which the Frank trial is being held.

The boy apparently was badly injured and was carried to Grady Hospital.

Preacher to Run for Alabama Senate Seat

COLUMBUS, Aug. 1.—Considerable interest is being shown throughout East Alabama by the announcement of the probable entry of the Rev. W. J. Price, of Phenix City, for Senator from the Eighth Alabama District. In addition to being a minister, he is a prominent banker, being the cashier of the Phenix-Girard Bank.

Mr. Price has had much legislative experience, as he has represented Russell County in the lower house of the Alabama Legislature, where he made an enviable reputation. He is the only man mentioned in connection with the senatorial race thus far.

DORSEY WINS POINT AS ROSSER BATTLES TO DEFEND ACCUSED

Jim Conley, accuser of Leo Frank, will take the stand Saturday morning, according to all indications Friday, to repeat the remarkable story he told concerning his part in the disposition of the body of Mary Phagan and undergo the merciless grilling of the defense.

Solicitor General Dorsey said that he expected to have his case completed by Saturday night and police, believing he will call the negro to-morrow, had him shaved and cleaned up and in readiness for his appearance.

Regardless of statements by defense and State, it is generally conceded that the Frank trial will reach its crux in Conley's appearance, and that on his story and whether it stands up or not under the fire of the defense, will rest the outcome of the trial.

Objections by Attorney Hooper, assistant to Solicitor Dorsey, to questions put to N. V. Darley by Attorney Arnold about the contents of the financial sheet made out by Leo Frank developed the fact that the defense would introduce evidence in rebuttal.

Defense to Introduce Evidence.

"We will introduce this sheet and plenty of other evidence," said Mr. Arnold. "You need not worry about that."

"That is just what I was after," remarked Mr. Hooper, aside. "I wanted to find out whether the defense intended to introduce evidence."

It had been rumored around the courthouse that the defense might rest its case at the completion of the submission of evidence by the State. Mr. Arnold's statement is taken to mean that Leo Frank himself will be placed on the stand.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, declared Friday that the ruling of Judge Roan against the admissibility of the evidence that persons other than Frank were nervous and excited the Sunday morning after the crime might vitiate the entire trial.

He intimated strongly after Judge Roan refused to change his ruling that a new trial would be asked on a writ of error in the event of Frank's conviction.

Arnold, in arguing for the admission of Darley's testimony that other persons at the factory, as well as Frank, were nervous and distrait, got before the jury that it was hardly to be wondered at that Frank, aroused from his bed and told of a shocking crime at his factory, should be agitated, pale and nervous.

Calls Barrett Monomaniac.

Referring to the discoveries of R. P. Barrett, Arnold came out boldly and declared that it was his purpose to show Barrett a monomaniac who continually was turning up evidence, and who very likely was hunting for the rewards offered.

Darley testified that scores of pay envelopes like the one found by Mary Phagan's machine were scattered about the factory every week, and that it was most common to find them in any part of the factory. He said that he looked over the time tape with Leo Frank Sunday morning and made the same error that Frank did, believing at the time that the punches had been made correctly. The tape was shown to the jury to prove how the mistake might have been made.

Judge Roan ruled out testimony as to the conduct and appearance of other persons than Frank at the factory Sunday morning.

The defense played one of its strong cards in behalf of Leo M. Frank when it secured from Darley, manufacturing head of the plant and State's witness, evidence that the prisoner performed three hours of the most intricate mathematical work just after the time the prosecution claims Mary Phagan was slain.

This, the defense brought out, required an exceedingly clear mind.

Frank Nervous After Crime.

Darley also gave startling testimony as to Frank's nervous and upset condition on the two days following the murder of Mary Phagan.

The statements of Darley came as a complete surprise. The nature of the testimony had been carefully guarded by the Solicitor.

Darley declared that he and Frank arrived at the factory at about the same time Sunday morning, April 27, and that he first noticed Frank's nervousness when he saw the factory superintendent's hand tremble violently when he grasped the elevator rope to run the elevator down into the basement.

"When we got down to the basement," continued Darley, "and Frank started to nail up the back door, I saw that his hands were trembling and I took the hammer and nailed up the door myself, because I thought I could do it better than he could."

Darley also told that when he rode with Frank to the police station Monday, Frank sat on his knee.

"I could perceive that his whole body was trembling and shaking," said Darley. "I noticed it all of the way to the station house."

Club Not Found in Clean-Up.

Solicitor Dorsey asked Darley about a general clean-up ordered by a general insurance inspector who visited the factory April 28. Darley replied that the factory had been cleaned on the first and second floors on or before May 3.

Dorsey then called for the bloody club that was said to have been found on the first floor May 15 near where Jim Conley was sitting. Dorsey threw it down with a clatter by the chair of the witness.

"Was any club of this sort turned up during the cleaning process?" shouted Dorsey.

"No," the witness replied.

"And was not this a thorough cleaning?" the Solicitor asked.

"It was a general cleaning," replied Darley.

Frank Explains Nervousness.

Darley said that Frank later explained his nervousness of Sunday by saying that he had not had any breakfast and that he had just looked upon the body of the dead girl at the morgue. The witness added that Frank did not appear completely upset Monday, as he was able to transact a number of business affairs.

Darley, in spite of his testimony, which will be interpreted by the State as incriminating against Frank, probably was as valuable a witness for the defense as he was for the prosecution. It was under the skillful questioning of Attorney Reuben Arnold, who had begun to take a more active part in the cross-examinations than he had at first, that Darley told of the intricate work that Frank did on the afternoon of April 26 after the time the State claims that Frank murdered the Phagan girl.

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees of the National Pencil Factory, who declared she saw a negro hiding behind some boxes on the first floor of the plant on the day Mary Phagan was killed, was the first witness called Friday.

The State with her testimony les to pave the way for the appearance of Conley, who, it is believed, would be the last witness to be called by Solicitor Dorsey, as he would be the most spectacular.

The first witness said her husband had been working at the National Pencil plant about two years.

Tells of Going to Factory.

Q. What is your husband's name?—A. John Arthur White.

Q. Where does he work?—A. At the National Pencil Factory. He has worked there about two years.

Q. Where was he April 26?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Did you go to the pencil factory that day?—A. Yes; about 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Frank?—A. Yes; he was in his outside office.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. I told him I wanted to see Mr. White.

Q. What did he say?—A. He asked me if I was his wife. He said he thought so, as I looked like the Campbells.

Q. Did you see your husband?—A. Yes; he sent for him.

Q. Did you go upstairs at 11:30 a. m.?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About ten minutes to 12.

Says Frank Jumped.

Q. What time did you come back?—A. About 12:30.

Q. Whom did you see?—A. I saw Mr. Frank standing at the safe in his office.

Q. What happened then?—A. I asked him if I could see Mr. White. As I spoke to him he jumped.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I went upstairs to see Mr. White.

Q. Did you see anybody else in the office except Denham, White and Mr. Frank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anyone else as you came down?—A. I saw a negro.

Q. Where?—A. He was sitting on a box near the stairway that leads up to the second floor.

Q. Where did you see Frank the last time?—A. In his outside office.

Q. Where was your husband and Denham at work?—A. On the fourth floor.

Said She Had Better Go.

Q. What were they doing?—A. Working on a machine with a hammer.

Q. When did you first hear the hammer?—A. When I got on the fourth floor.

Q. Did you see Frank again before you left?—A. He came up on the fourth floor.

Q. Did anybody say anything about your going up to the fourth floor?—A. Yes; Frank told me to go up there.

Q. What time did Frank come to the fourth floor?—A. Some time before 1 o'clock.

Q. Where were you at 1 o'clock?—A. At McDonald's furniture store.

Q. Why did you leave before 1 o'clock?—A. Mr. Frank said, "Arthur, if your wife wants to get out before 3 o'clock she had better leave now. I will go as soon as I get my hat and coat."

Frank in Office as She Left.

Q. When you came down, did you see Mr. Frank?—A. Yes; when I went down he was sitting in his office.

Q. Did he have on his hat and coat as if he were going out?—A. No.

Q. What was he doing?—A. Writing.

Q. Could your husband and Denham see the stairway from upstairs where they were working?—A. No.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Mrs. White, you talked about this matter to Mr. Arnold and myself, didn't you? You told us you left the factory about 1 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. You don't mean to change your statement by saying it was ten minutes to 1 when you left, do you?—A. I can't say exactly what time it was, but I know it was about 1 o'clock.

Q. You left there the first time about 11:30 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. Who were there?—A. Two men, Mr. Frank and a stenographer.

Q. Your father and your brother are old employees there, aren't they?—A. Yes.

Q. By whom did he send word to your husband that you were there?—A. Miss Emma Freeman.

Q. How long was it before your husband came?—A. About five minutes.

Q. Who else was there?—A. Miss Hall, Miss Freeman, Mrs. May Barrett and her daughter.

Q. You came back to the factory about 12:30, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. How accurate are you about that?—A. I looked at the clock.

Q. How close were you to Mr. Frank before you spoke?—A. I was in the office door just behind him.

Q. He jumped and you thought he was surprised?—A. Yes; that's what I thought then.

Q. When he told your husband he was going to leave, he said you had better go pretty soon?—A. He said I had better go now.

Q. You did wait a few minutes?—A. Yes.

Q. Just where did you see the darky as you went out?—A. Between the stairway?—A. Five or six feet.

Q. What do you mean—between the foot of the stairway and the door?—A. Yes.

Q. How far from the foot of the stairway?—A. Five or six feet.

Mr. Rosser took a blueprint to explain the position in which she saw the negro.

Q. How long after this was it that you talked with Mr. Dorsey about seeing this negro? Wasn't it four or five days?—A. No, sir; about two weeks.

Mrs. White left the stand. Arthur White, her husband, was called, but failed to answer his name. M. V. Darley, assistant superintendent at the National Pencil Factory, was called.

Darley on Stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. Assistant superintendent at the National Pencil Factory. I have charge of the manufacturing plant.

Q. Who is your superior?—A. I considered Sig Montag.

Q. You and Frank worked together didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you at the factory Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 9:49.

Q. When were you there again?—A. Sunday morning about 8:10 or 8:20.

Q. Why did you go there?—A. Mrs. Frank called me.

Rosser objected.

"I object to anything Mrs. Frank said. She can't be used as a witness," he said.

"Your honor, we have already shown that Frank told his wife to call this man," said Solicitor Dorsey.

"If that's all you want to show, I withdraw my objection," said Rosser.

Q. What time did Frank call at the factory?—A. Shortly after 1 did.

Q. Did you notice anything unusual about Frank?—A. When he reached out his hand to start the elevator, it was trembling. And again when he went to nail up the back door, he was so nervous he couldn't do it, and I did it for him.

Said Body Made Him Nervous.

Q. What, if anything, did Frank say?—A. I don't remember. He said something about having on a new suit of clothes, or something.

Q. Did he say anything about not having breakfast?—A. He said he hadn't had his breakfast and wanted a cup of coffee.

Q. Did he say anything about being nervous?—A. Yes; he said they took him by Bloomfield's and into a dark room, where they turned on the light suddenly and he saw the girl. He said it made him nervous.

Q. Were you there when Newt Lee was?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Lee nervous?—A. No; he was composed.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the murder?—A. He was under the impression the murder occurred in the basement.

Q. Did he say anything about the lock and staple?—A. Yes; he said it looked like it was mighty easily pulled.

Staple Easily Pulled.

Q. Did you observe anything about the staple?—A. Yes; it looked as if it had been taken out easily.

Q. Did you see Frank again?—A. Yes, the following day.

Q. Did he say anything about his nervousness of the day before?—A. Yes; he said something, but I have forgotten.

"Your honor," said Dorsey, "I would like to refresh the witness' memory by reading his previous statement."

"You can only show it to him," answered Judge Roan.

Dorsey showed Darley the affidavit.

Q. Just tell everything you heard Frank say about the murder—A. I don't remember.

"Your honor, I would like to read this," said Dorsey.

Forgets Vital Evidence.

Rosser and Arnold objected.

"He will have to make the usual showing that he was entrapped, your honor," said Arnold.

"He is trying to bring in evidence from the outside," said Rosser.

"You can't read it, Mr. Dorsey," said Judge Roan.

"My friend Dorsey would show anything, your honor," said Rosser. "Nothing's too good for him."

Q. State to the jury how much of Frank's body was nervous?—A. That is a pretty hard question.

"Look at this," said Dorsey, showing him an affidavit.

"I said there he was shaking all over," said the witness.

Rosser objected.

Judge Roan ruled the witness if he was making that statement now.

Darley's Replies Guarded.

"Judge, that's a very hard question for me," answered Darley. "He reached up to get the ropes, and his hands were shaking very much."

Darley appeared very reluctant to answer any question that might incriminate Frank.

Q. Who nailed up the back door of the basement?—A. I did.

Q. Was Frank able to do it?—A. He was able to do it, I think, but he was nervous.

Q. How did Frank's face appear on the second floor?—A. It was very pale.

Q. Was he upset when you got to the factory?

Rosser objected, but was overruled.

A. I can't say he was completely upset.

"Now, look here," said Dorsey, walking toward the witness with his affidavit.

"Your honor," interrupted Rosser, "he can't speak to the witness in that nasal tone. It is his witness. He can't cross-question him."

"That's right," ruled the judge.

"But," said Mr. Rosser, "your Honor has not been enforcing that ruling."

"I am going to enforce it," replied Judge Roan.

"That's why [illegible] you to not completely.

Q. Why do you say that?—A. He did some things he could not have done if he had been wholly done up.

Q. Who was with you on the way to the police station?—A. I got in an automobile. I afterward learned that it was run by "Boots" Rogers. Mr. Frank sat on my knee.

Q. What was his condition?—A. He was trembling all over.

Q. To what extent?—A. He was sitting on my knee and I could feel his body shaking.

Q. What was the condition of Newt Lee?

"I object," said Rosser. "I have been objecting to this line of testimony all along. If your Honor permits this question to be asked, I want to be recorded as protesting."

"Do you insist on the question?" asked Judge Roan of Solicitor Dorsey.

Dorsey and Hooper conferred.

"I am willing to strike out all reference to Newt Lee's condition," said Dorsey.

Attorneys Exchange Courtesies.

"I am glad it has finally dawned on my brothers that these questions are illegal," said Rosser. "I have been trying to get them to see and I am glad to say the light finally has dawned upon them."

"Your Honor," interrupted Hooper, "I object to Mr. Rosser's statement about how long it takes anything to soak into my head. A reference to Newt Lee's attitude was made the other day. We see the object of these objections is to lead into a large field of investigation. We want to strike it all out."

Dorsey continued questioning the witness.

Q. Did you attend to any business Monday?—A. There wasn't much work to do.

Q. Did you see the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes, Mr. Frank called my attention to it.

Q. What did he say, and at what time?—A. I dont' recall the conversation, but it was about 9 o'clock.

Q. Did Gantt ever come to the factory after he was discharged?—A. Yes.

Ordered Factory Cleaned.

Q. Did Frank say anything about it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Did Mr. Haas, the insurance man, come to the factory Monday or Tuesday?—A. He did.

Q. What did he do?—A. He ordered us to clean up the factory in a general way.

Q. What time did you clean up the main floor?—A. May 3.

Q. Did you know anything about the finding of this club? (The witness was handed a heavy stick.)—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether it was found before or after the cleaning up?—A. Afterward—about May 15.

Arnold here took up the cross-examination.

Q. Did you see any spots on the floor?—Yes, in the dressing room.

Q. Who showed them to you?—A. Quinn.

Calls Barrett a "Columbus."

Q. Where was the hair found?—A. On the handle of the lathe.

Q. How was it?—A. Wound around the lathe.

Q. Did Mr. Barrett find it?—A. Yes.

Q. How many strands of hair were there?—A. Not over six.

Q. Barrett has been doing most of the discovering around there, hasn't he?

"I object," said Dorsey. "The question is immaterial."

"I want to show that this man Barrett was a monomaniac," said Arnold.

Judge Roan ruled: "You can show that this man was more than ordinarily interested."

Q. Do you recall Barrett stating he was working for a reward?—I don't recall.

Dorsey: "I object."

Judge Roan ruled: "I have ruled that he can show that to prove interest."

"I want to show that this man was a regular Christopher Columbus."

Q. Do you know who Barrett made this statement to?—A. No.

Q. Is this a pay envelope?—A. Yes.

Pay Envelopes Common.

Q. Are they thrown all over the factory?—A. Yes. We have a rule that if there is any mistake in the pay roll it had to be reported before the employee left.

Q. They are very common in the metal room?—Yes.

Q. Were you present Sunday morning when Frank took out the time slip?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see him run his finger down the time slip?—A. Yes. He ran his finger down the number side. I was looking over his shoulder.

Q. Is there a row of figures down the number side?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything?—A. Yes. He said they were all punched and I verified it.

Q. How did you do it?—A. Just loking at the numbers. We would not have noticed a skip in the time.

Juror Asks Question.

Attorney Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor, a juror wants to ask a question, but Mr. Hooper objects."

"I don't object to his asking the question, but I do object to Mr. Arnold giving the answer," said Mr. Hooper.

Juror Marcellus Johemming asked Darley to explain the time clock system, which Darley did.

Arnold took up the financial sheet.

Q. What did Frank say about the financial sheet?

"I object," said Hooper. "He can ask him about the sheet, provided it is later put in evidence."

"We will put it in all right," said Arnold, "and plenty of other evidence. You need not worry about that."

Q. When was the financial sheet made up?—A. Saturday afternoon.

Q. You were interested?—A. Yes, it was my duty to see it. It dealt with the cost of production.

Q. What time was it made up—that is, what day of the week did it show last?—A. Thursday.

Financial Sheet Introduced.

Q. Who makes it up now?—A. One has not been made out since Mr. Frank left?

Q. How long did it usually take him to make it out?—A. Always from about 2:30 or 3 until 5 o'clock.

Q. Look at this and tell me if this is the sheet you found on his desk Sunday morning?—A. Yes.

Q. How does it compare with his regular handwriting?

Dorsey objected.

"I object, your honor," he said. "The writing is the best evidnce."

Q. I want to ask you are you familiar with Mr. Frank's writing?—A. Yes, I have been seeing it about five years.

Q. Now, I want to ask you one question, but don't answer until we get a ruling. Does this compare favorably with all of Mr. Frank's writing?

Dorsey objected.

Ruling on Handwriting Reserved.

"The code says, your Honor, that we are entitled to the very best evidence," the Solicitor said. "This section holds that in any question of handwriting that an expert must testify, and the papers or specimen of handwriting on the day in question and on other days should be introduced. The jury might not agree with the witness that the sheet in question and other sheets, are similar. They can be produced, and they should be."

"I will withhold my ruling until I look up some authorities," replied Judge Roan.

"I will ask the witness something else," said Arnold.

Q. What process did Frank have to go into to get at these results?—A. He had to get reports from every department, figure averages, costs, sales, profits, expense.

Figures Required Clear Head.

Q. It took a man with a good clear head to figure it?—A. Yes.

Q. What calculation was necessary to arrive at the net result?—A. The amount of rubber tips, labels, and every other little detail must be calculated.

Q. It required a large amount of calculation?—A. Yes.

Q. Sunday, were you in the factory with Frank and Detective Starnes? A. Yes.

Q. There were forty or fifty people in the factory Sunday, were there not?—No, not over six or eight.

Q. Did you go into the cellar?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get to the factory?—A. 8:20.

Q. There was a great deal of excitement there?

Dorsey objected. "I think your Honor has already ruled on this question," said he.

Calls Nervousness Natural.

Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor, it is eminently unfair," he said. "I want to show that this young man was whisked from his home before he had his coffee, and it was nothing unusual if he was excited. Why, I lived at a boarding house with some old bachelors, and they wouldn't even talk before breakfast. When Newt Lee first saw this girl in the basement he ran like a turkey. That was one way of showing his excitement. Some men are naturally nervous; some show nervousness in reading a paper or making a speech; some men go into battle without even flinching."

Judge Roan ruled: "I think you can show the occasion."

Rosser interrupted. "Let me give you a little illustration, your honor," he said. "I was on the streets during the time of the Atlanta riots. Crowds were everywhere and everyone was excited."

Dorsey then spoke: "Only a few minutes ago, your honor, you ruled out, or we considered that you ruled out, the question of Newt Lee being nervous or composed. The only question before this jury is: Was Leo M. Frank nervous?"

Dorsey Wins Ruling.

"You can't show that anyone else was nervous," said Judge Roan.

Rosser: "If you have ruled that way, it will vitiate this trial. This jury will never know that that crowd was nervous and excited. It will never know that Starnes, sleuth that he is, trembled and was excited when he saw that lifeless corpse. That Pat Campbell, son of the Emerald Isle, started back aghast when he touched that icy chest. And if there is one mistake at this time it will vitiate this trial."

"If there is any doubt on your honor's mind, I want to refer you to the $1 and $5 Georgia," said Dorsey. "This proposition is simply a dragnet to go out and bring in everyone when Leo Frank is the only one we are concerned with here."

The objection was sustained.

Attorney Arnold declared that he only wanted those around Frank in the factory described. Dorsey objected, and the objection was sustained.

Attorney Arnold then asked that the objection of the defense be recorded.

Blood Spots Common.

Q. How long have you been working at the factory where there were women, Mr Darley?—A. 24 years.

Q. Isn't it a common thing to find bloodspots around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see any blood spots around the dressing room in this factory?—A. (Darley hesitated). Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What color was the suit Mr. Frank had on Saturday?—A. Brown.

Q. What color suit did he wear on Sunday?—A. Blue.

Q. What color on Monday?—A. The same one he wore on Saturday.

Q. Did you see any splotches on it?—A. No.

Q. Did you see any scratches on Frank's face or hands when he came to the factory Sunday?—A. No, I did not.

Q. What time [illegible] leave the factory Saturday morning?—A. About 9:40 o'clock. He started toward Montag's.

Q. You never saw him any more until Sunday?—A. No.

Elevator Found Unlocked.

Q. In what condition did you find the elevator Sunday?—A. The lock was in place but it was unlocked.

Q. Could anybody else have gone in and run it?—A. Anybody who knows how.

Q. That elevator and motor made a good deal of noise when in operation, didn't it?—A. The saw made more noise than the motor and the elevator When the elevator was running, the saw also was running.

Q. These cords that have been referred to; they were scattered all over the building, were they not?—A. Yes sir. Scattered all around.

Q. Mr. Dorsey asked you something about this building being cleaned?—A. Yes, after the girl was killed.

Q. It was very dirty on the floor of the metal room, wasn't it, the dirt being about an inch thick?—A. I don't know whether it would average that thick or not, but it was very dirty.

Q. The building also was very dark, especially on dark days, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of a day was it on which the little girl was killed?—A. Drizzling rain.

Q. Is anybody supposed to be in the factory on Sunday?—A. No, sir It is supposed to be locked up on Sunday.

Q. The rope on the elevator has some slack in it, hasn't it?—A. A little.

Q. Did Frank catch it with both hands, or with one hand?—A. With both hands.

Q. Frank only weighs about 125 or 130 pounds, doesn't he? He is what you would call a little fellow isn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he fatter now than he was then?—A. He is about the same.

Q. How did you happen to go to Mr. Dorsey's office?—A. He 'phoned for me.

Q. He served a subpena on you, didn't he?

Dorsey objected, but Judge Roan overruled the objection.

A. He served two subpenas on me and 'phoned me once.

Frank Nervous Every Day.

Q. Didn't you know those subpenas were not worth the paper they were written on?—A. I didn't then. I have heard so since.

Q. Who was at Dorsey's office?—A. Dorsey, Chief Lanford, Detectives Starnes and Campbell and a stenographer.

Q. They asked you questions, except the stenographer?—A. Yes, sometimes. One would interrupt before I could answer the question of the other.

Q. They asked you whether Mr. Frank was a nervous man, didn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't he a hard working man who easily got nervous when things went wrong?—A. Yes, sir. If your honor will allow me, I will say that there never was a day passed that Mr. Frank didn't get nervous over something. I have seen him run his hands through his hair in an agitated way a thousand times.

Q. Mr. Frank didn't know many of the help, did he?

"I object," said Dorsey. Arnold withdrew the question.

"Did he know Mary Phagan?

"I object to that," continued Dorsey still on his feet.

Objection was overruled.

A. Not to my knowledge, he didn't.

Q. Did you know her?—A. If I had seen her on the street I would have known she was a factory girl; but I didn't know her name.

Q. I believe you said all sorts of papers get down into that boiler room, don't they?—A. Yes.

"Give me those notes and that pay envelope," said Arnold.

Q. It was nothing unusual to find papers like these in the basement, was it?—A. I have seen such papers there.

Q. Any man who had the run of the factory, would have no trouble in getting hold of them, would he?—A. No.

Q. Was the watchman accustomed to locking the clock door?—A. Yes, but at that time the key was lost.

Q. Frank didn't unlock it Sunday morning, did he?—A. He couldn't have. The key was gone.

Q. You say you and Frank both made the mistake of thinking all the punches had been made?—A. Yes.

At this point, which was 12:15, the court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

DEFENSE NOT HELPED BY WITNESSES ACCUSED OF ENTRAPPING THE STATE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Has the State succeeded in thoroughly establishing the fact that little Mary Phagan's tragic death was effected on the second floor of the National Pencil Factory, in Forsyth street?

It has not, of course—but it has set up by competent evidence a number of suspicious circumstances, which, if properly sustained later along, will prove damaging in the extreme to Leo Frank.

Unless these circumstances, trivial in some aspects, are braced up and backed up, however, by other much stronger circumstances, they will give the jury, in all probability, little concern in arriving at a verdict.

Thursday was not a sensationally good day for the State, although it was much better than the day before.

Twice Thursday the Solicitor General claimed that he had been "entrapped" by witnesses—and this, with the lamentable fall down of John Black the day before—served to give rise in the minds of some spectators to a faint suspicion that the State didn't have its case very well in hand.

No Help to Defense.

There is something terribly significant and actually sinister in that little word "entrapped," however, when hurled at a witness in the presence of a jury, and it would be a mistake to believe that a witness, actually convicted, even in the mere opinion of the jury, of having deliberately misled the prosecution thereby helps the defense.

The witness who entraps, or who is thrown under suspicion of having entrapped, frequently does the party he seems primarily to have hurt a wonderful amount of good.

I believe, for instance, that Witness E. F. Holloway was speaking the truth when, on oath, he reversed his former affidavit to the Solicitor, and said that he left the elevator unlocked on Saturday, whereas he before had sworn that he locked it Friday and did not unlock it Saturday—the last inferentially, at least.

This point will mean a good deal later, when it is reached in developing the defense's case, and if Holloway's last story, apparently satisfactorily explained, holds together, well and good—but who can tell what the jury thinks about that contradiction upon the part of Holloway, particularly when he has been so deliberately accused by the Solicitor of entrapping him?

Holloway is an employee of the pencil factory—was before and has been since the murder. If the jury gathers the impression that he has been tampered with since his first statement, and by friends of Frank, to clear up seemingly damaging circumstances against Frank, it likely will be an aggravating thing, when the jury comes to make up its findings.

Will Hurt Frank's Case.

Just as I thought, and still think, that Dorsey made a tactical mistake—for which he paid the full price, moreover—when on Wednesday he exclaimed "plant," thereby accusing the defense of unfair and grossly indecent methods of bolstering up its cause, so I think the constant suggestion of witnesses changed in opinion and testimony, and in favor of Frank, will hurt Frank's case, rather than help it, if sustained.

Mr. Dorsey failed utterly to bolster up his charge of "planted" evidence, but he didn't fail, in anything like the same degree, to say the least of it, in attacking Holloway.

Or, anyway, there is a grave probability that he didn't fail in the minds of the jury.

In short, my idea is this, as it has been all along: The public, and presumably even more the jury, will resent anything that savors of unfair methods employed either by the State or the defense.

Steadily, though slowly, the defense seems to be pulling away from the prosecution in the Frank trial, and the impression apparently is gaining ground gradually that the State likely is fighting a losing battle.

All of this may be changed in a moment—one witness on behalf of the State may serve to win back all the ground it may have lost.

Nothing More Uncertain Than Verdict

And, of all things, there is nothing to speculate upon quite so uncertain as the verdict a jury will hand in.

The jury is sitting there, its attention confined to the development of the evidence. It reads no newspapers; it converses with no outsiders.

It can not get up, run across the street and swap ideas with somebody in the corner drug store.

It took charge of the case, under its deliberately assumed oath that it was "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," and it is seeing things in its own way—and that way may not be the way outsiders are seeing it.

So far, however, the State's witnesses alone have been introduced. Whatever advantage the defense has obtained of them has come in two ways—either in their failure to testify directly to the State's benefit or through circumstances and admissions brought out in favor of the defense, under the merciless cross-examination of Luther Rosser.

It is a good deal to say, nevertheless, that at this stage of the trial the defense apparently has scored heaviest, for such points as it has won necessarily have been wrung from the State's own witnesses, and not the witnesses of the defense. In other words, wherever the State fails to score, the defense scores.

How Points Have Been Scored.

If the defense made little, if anything, of Lee, it lost little, if anything, because of him.

It almost, if not quite, broke even on Rogers—and it most certainly scored tremendously on Black.

Scott, if damaging in a way, was also helpful in a way, in that he practically admitted suspicion of the negro Conley quite as strong as suspicion of Frank.

Monteen Stover swore that Frank was not in his office for, at least, a period of some five minutes immediately after 12 o'clock on the day of the murder; at least, if he was, he was where she could not or did not see him. Grace Hix undoubtedly helped Frank. Dr. Smith helped the State.

R. P. Barrett swore he found a piece of a pay envelope under Mary Phagan's machine three or four days after the murder, and that he found blood spots near the dressing room door three or four days after the murder.

Mell Stanford swore that the spots near the dressing room were not there Friday, and were there Monday, but he could not swear the spots were blood. Holloway helped the defense, probably.

There is nothing new in most of this testimony, however, save that of Barrett concerning the piece of envelope, and the defense presumably is ready, therefore, to meet it.

State Faces Hard Task.

The mere finding of a piece of pay envelope somewhere even near Mary Phagan's machine, is not, of itself, highly important; but it might serve as a link in an otherwise strong chain forged to connect Frank directly with the killing.

But if the State has succeeded in setting forth the fact that Frank may possibly have committed the crime, it yet has a long road to travel before it proves "beyond a reasonable doubt" that he DID do it.

Indeed, Frank's attorneys have never combated the idea that he was in the factory at a moment when the killing of Mary Phagan MIGHT have been effected—and beyond that fact the State has been unable to proceed very far to date.

It must be remembered, too, that while the State now is engaged in weaving a web, real or imaginary, about Frank, the defense expects to weave a much more terrible and substantial web about Conley.

But even at that, mere suspicion alone will serve to convict neither.

Much Depends on Conley.

After all is said and done, and it generally gets back to this, the preliminary chain of circumstances against Frank likely will hold together tightly or fall apart hopelessly, according to the fate of James Conley on the witness stand.

If Conley stands the test of exhaustive cross-examination, then the circumstances leading up to and away from Conley's connection with the case will stand or fall.

He is, and has been, at all times both the hope and the despair of the State, no less than the hope and despair of the defense.

He is the star witness about whom the entire Frank case revolves, about whom it has revolved for weeks, and about whom it must revolve to its end.

Of course, there ever is the chance that the State has something sensational, new and significant up its sleeve—and there is the remoter chance that the defense has some big surprises in store.

As the fifth day of the trial drags on, however, the impression has deepened almost into a conviction in the mind of the public that neither the State nor the defense has much to let out that already hasn't been let out, in whole or in substantial parts.

Spirit of Fairness Everywhere.

And the public is waiting for Conley's evidence before making up its mind.

More and more I notice in the casual comment of people about town a spirit of fairness and an inclination to await the full developments of both the State and the defense.

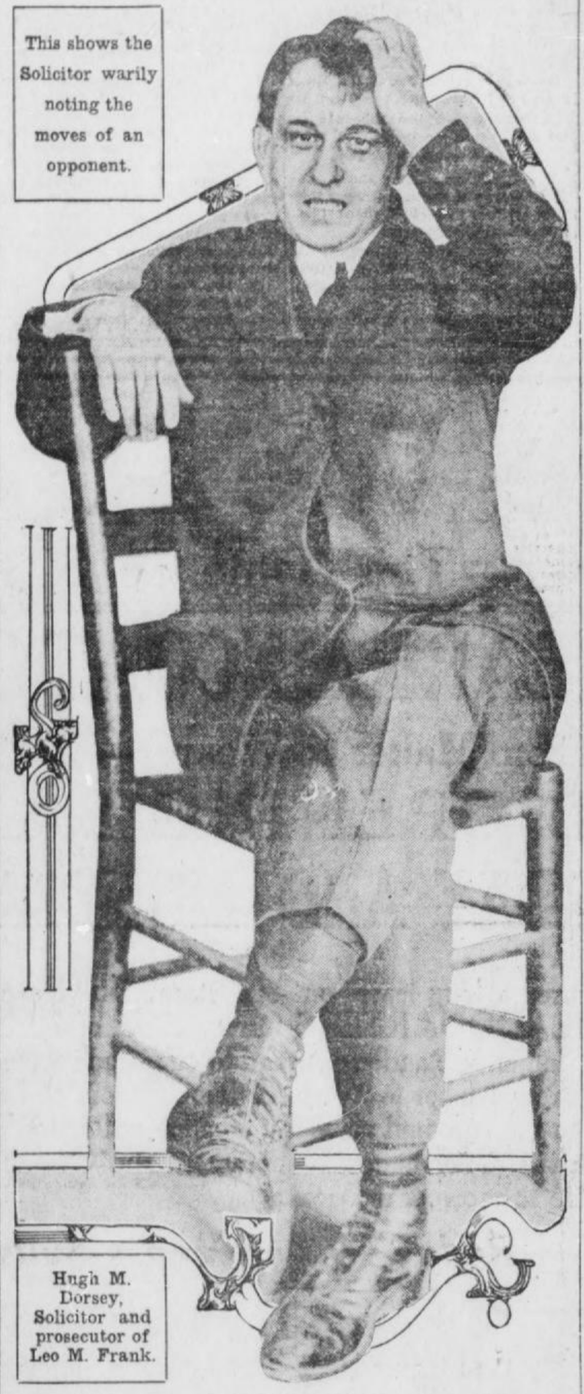

The public largely still is open-minded. It is "from Missouri"—and, after all, that is the way the public mind should be in this matter, for it is a very grave matter, and its final effect will be far-reaching and full of significance, no matter which way the verdict comes finally.

There is one point that Undertaker Gheesling cleared up on oath, and the public should take careful note of it. He swore that Mary Phagan's body was NOT mutilated in the way street rumor and gossip had it mutilated, just after the crime was committed.

That ugly story undoubtedly was accountable for some of the primary prejudice against Frank—but it was an untrue rumor, and in all fairness, now that it has been exploded, it should be borne in mind.

DORSEY UNAFRAID AS HE FACES CHAMPIONS OF THE ATLANTA BAR

This shows the Solicitor warily noting the moves of an opponent.

Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor and prosecutor of Leo M. Frank.

Up Against a Hard Proposition Youthful Solicitor Is Fighting Valiantly to Win Case.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Georgia's law's most supreme penalty faces Leo Frank.

A reputation that they can not be beaten must be sustained by Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold.

Atlanta's detective department's future is swaying on the issue of the Frank trial.

But there is a man with probably as much at stake as any of the hundreds who crowd Judge Roan's courtroom, with the exception of Frank, and he is accepting the ordeal, though he realizes it, as calmly as a person who has nothing more serious to decide than whether he will order his steak rare or well done at breakfast time.

Hugh Dorsey is hereby introduced. He is known pretty well in Atlanta without introduction, but as chairmen on political meetings insists on telling the audience that the President of the United States is about to speak or that the Secretary of State is endeavoring to earn an additional amount to his yearly $12,000, Mr. Dorsey can be placed before the public without fear of violating precedent.

Consider Hugh Dorsey.

Consider Dorsey's job. His position as public prosecutor places on him the duty of sending someone to the gallows, and this time it is Leo M. Frank, against whom he must direct his efforts.

The proposition of convicting a man is as common in the life of a Solicitor as paying his car fare home. But here's a different proposition. Dorsey is confronted with the task of getting a conviction over the efforts of Luther Rosser and Rueben Arnold to obtain an acquittal.

And anyone who knows Atlanta, who knows Fulton County, who knows Rosser, who knows Arnold, realizes that this is a task from which Hercules might sidestep, a labor that is more tremendous than the building of the Panama Canal or the successful storming of the fortress of Gibraltar.

And still Dorsey has gone into the fight unafraid; not only that, he is aggressive.

Atlanta's record for big crime trials has not been altogether healthy in the past twelve months. In that time Dorsey has prosecuted Mrs. Daisy Grace on a charge of attempting to slay her husband. Atlanta was intensely interested in this issue. Mrs. Grace was acquitted. Dorsey lost.

He prosecuted Callie Scott Applebaum on a charge of ending the life of her husband. Again the public was deeply interested. Again Dorsey lost.

And then came the Phagan killing.

Atlanta, Georgia and the South demanded that her slayer be brought before the bar of justice and be given law's severest penalty.

Frank was fixed upon by the police as the man.

The grand jury indicted him, and Dorsey staked his all on his conviction.

Luther Rosser had been retained by Frank's chief counsel.

Dorsey smiled.

Again there was a flash. Reuben Arnold had been added to the list of legal array to clear the name of the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory of the charge that the had taken the life of a little girl.

Reputation is a big thing. No prize fighter faces a champion without doubts as to his ability to cope with him. The greatest financial genius probably trembled in his boots when he first met the foremost captain of industry. A violin virtuoso bows before Kubelik. There is no pianist who would approach Paderewski without a sensation of awe.

And here in Atlanta, Arnold and Rosser are champions. They are Kubeliks, they are Paderewskis.

Hugh Dorsey hasn't quailed.

Throughout the trial he has been desperately earnest. He realizes the work that is before him. If he has any enemies, they will admit that he has handled his case well.

The Solicitor General is a great deal younger than his opponents. His hair is tinged with gray, and there will probably be more of those strands there before he is through with his clashes with the dynamic Rosser and the erudite Arnold.

He is taking the case with intense seriousness. So far, Rosser's efforts to rattle him by calling him "Hugh," "my young friend," "son" and "bud" have been unavailing.

The practical collapse of his detective testimony was enough to stun any man, but Dorsey stuck it out gamely. There is plenty of fight still in his eyes. It will be there if the case goes against him.

His appearance would indicate that he is holding something back, something with which he expects to surprise his eminent opponents.

Then, There Is Hooper.

There is one thing that every spectator knows is being held back. He is a quiet little man, with a scholarly face, a man who has already won his spurs in Georgia politics, but who has not figured extensively in the bigger criminal cases tried before Atlanta courts.

The man is Frank Hooper. He has been on his feet but once. He made an impression then. And when the case comes to its crucial stages, it will be well to watch these two young lawyers arrayed against the admitted masters of their craft.

She lithe and unknown Corbett sent the invincible John L. Sullivan to oblivion. Brian du Bois Gilbert was unhorsed by Wilfred of Ivanhoe. Theodore Roosevelt ran second in a Presidential race.

Who knows?

Sherlocks, Lupins and Lecoqs See Frank Trial

There are enough "hists," aha's" and those other exclamations that mark a true detective besides the badge on his left suspender to fill a whole volume of Gaboriau thrillers at the Frank trial.

A stranger whirled from the Terminal Station to Judge Roan's courtroom would be convinced before he had been in that temple of justice five minutes that all Atlanta earns its living following clews, and that if Sherlock Holmes was made a material being he could beat Jim Woodward for Mayor by 8,000 votes.

Ever since the body of Mary Phagan was found, practically every man of voting age and a lot of those who just think they are, have evolved a theory as to the crime they regard as incontrovertible as two plus two makes four, and have a system of ratiocination (beg pardon, Mr. Poe), that either proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that Leo M. Frank is guilty, or that he is innocent, or that Jim Conley did it, or he didn't, or that somebody did, but they'll be hanged if they know who.

Theorists There for Vindication.

The census of 1910 gave Atlanta a population of 154,839, and it is safe to say that 154,839 sure-fire theories have been evolved.

And everyone of the theorists wants to go to the courtroom to see his theory upheld and see the theory of the other fellow smashed to smithereens.

Atlanta's deductive and inductive powers were never even dimly realized until this week.

Chat with the throng around the courthouse. Mingle with the Lupins, the Lecoqs, the Anna Katherine Greens in the room where the issue is being fought.

Clerk Turns Detective.

Your surprise will be suddenly converted into admiration and then into awe. A person, whom you had mistaken for a clerk with a brain capable of knowing nothing more complex than a suit will sell for $19.98 quicker than it will for $20, you discover has a reasoning power as infallible as that of Socrates and a knowledge of things criminal that makes him the most deadly foe to crime since Bertillon.

He can take an envelope, locate it on a second floor and in a flash conceive just how a deed of murder was committed.

He can watch a man's hand tremble and immediately conceive him a perjurer and a villain of the deepest dye, although he doesn't ask him if he had taken on too much the night before.

"Signs Air Hopeful," Says Uncle Ben.

He can point out the fatal weakness in the attack of a lawyer who makes more money in a minute than he himself makes in a week. A man selected by a sovereign people to represent the majority of their law becomes a mere novice under his merciless criticism.

"But the signs air hopeful," remarked Uncle Ben Green, from out Hapeville way, as he listened to the findings of the amateur sleuths and chewed tobacco.

"The signs air hopeful," he repeated. "I've been a-sittin' here since the trial begun, and from what I hev seed of these deteckertive fellers we've got right now, it's a pretty good thing that a new crop is a-comin' up."

MEASURE TO BAR NEGRO VOTERS IS FAVORED

Slade's Interpretation of Constitution's "Good Character" To Be Recommended to House.

The disfranchisement bill of Representative Slade of Muscogee, which its author says is an interpretation of the "good character" clause in the State Constitution, will be favorably recommended by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments at Friday's session of the House. The vote was unanimous in favor of so reporting the bill at the committee meeting Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Slade's bill interprets the good character clause to mean that "no man, white or black, whom a virtuous woman will not trust in a place of seclusion without fear of physical assault, shall be allowed to vote."

The right to strike off names of voters is vested in the ordinaries of the counties. If a voter objects, women shall not be called in, but the question shall be decided by men who are familiar with the voter's life and habits.

Mr. Slade declared that the bill is not directed against white men, but by its passage he hopes to disfranchise every negro in the State.

"I have been trying to get this bill through for the past two or three years, and am very hopeful that the members of this Legislature may see fit to pass it at the present session," Mr. Slade said.

Vote Buttons Sold By Suffrage League

Atlanta suffragists busied themselves Thursday in the sale of suffrage buttons and distribution of suffrage literature just to be doing something while their suffrage sisters were parading in Washington. The button sale was held at the entrance of Mrs. Lillian Smith's millinery store, No. 115 Peachtree street, and a neat sum secured. This fund will be expended in the holding of meetings to further the cause.

The sale was held under the auspices of the Woman's Suffrage League of Atlanta, which was the Woman's Civic League until two weeks ago.

Diplomats in Revolt Against Grape Juice

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—"Grape juice diplomacy" has been banished by the dinner given by Senator Lefevre, Charge d'Affaires of the Panama Legation, in honor of Richard L. Metcalf, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, at which Secretary Bryan was present.

The dinner was distinguished by the choice selection of wines and other liquids served. Grape juice had no place on the menu.

This is the first of a series of revolts said to be hatching among the diplomats.

LOAN SHARK KING FINED; PUT ON PROBATION

Prison Sentence If Daniel Tolman Re-enters Business—Made $500,000 a Year.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 1.—The loan shark business of the country received a death blow to-day when Daniel H. Tolman, alleged to be the head of practically the entire business of the country, was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and was placed under probation for three years.

Should Tolman be detected in operating a loan agency in any part of the United States, his probation will be revoked and he will be brought back to Trenton to serve a prison term.

Tolman was arrested in a raid on his offices here on July 30, 1912, and was one of the first caught in the dragnet to clean up the loan sharks. When arrested he resisted the officers and had to be carried and dragged to the patrol.

He is said to have operated 69 loan shark agencies throughout the country. The business netted him $500,000 profits a year.

He fought the case at every step through the courts, but when forced to go to trial, changed his attitude and pleaded guilty.

Dr. O'Kelley Chosen As New Mercer Head

MACON, Aug. 1.—It is definitely announced that the presidency of Mercer University has been offered to Dr. T. W. O'Kelley, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Raleigh, N. C. It is believed that he will accept.

Dr. O'Kelley graduated at Mercer in 1890 with first honors, and subsequently he taught Greek and Latin at Mercer. Afterward he became principal of Hiawassee High School, in North Georgia. He is 50 years of age and a man of family. He is regarded as one of the ablest Baptist ministers of the south.

Dr. O'Kelley was chosen from a list of sixteen prominent clergymen and educators.

$900 Tip by Gates Is Returned by Waiter

MINNEAPOLIS, August 1.—Charles G. Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, nearly caused the collapse of a negro waiter in a hotel cafe here.

His dinner check amounted to almost $100, it is said. Gates called the waiter to him, pulled out a roll of $1,000 bills, slipped off the top one and said: "Here, boy, keep the change."

Gates then left. The waiter turned the $900 over to the manager of the cafe, who mailed Mr. Gates a check for the amount.

GIRL SLAIN AFTER FRANK LEFT FACTORY, BELIEVED TO BE DEFENSE THEORY

Was Mary Phagan killed at or very near the time she entered the National Pencil Factory April 26 to get her pay envelope or was she merely attacked at this time and murdered later?

The line of questioning pursued by Luther Rosser in his cross-examination of two of the State's witnesses Thursday afternoon indicated this will be one of the questions the jurors will have to settle before they will be able to determine the innocence or guilt of Leo M. Frank.

Rosser was most persistent in his interrogation both of William A. Gheesling embalmer, and Dr. Claude A. Smith, physician and bacteriologist. Gheesling went to the pencil factory at about 4 o'clock the morning of the crime and took charge of the Phagan girl's body. He told Solicitor Dorsey in the direct examination Thursday that the girl had been dead ten or fifteen hours and that rigor mortis was well established.

Gets Admission Before Jury.

Rosser at once began an attempt to break down this portion of the embalmer's testimony, and succeeded in getting before the jury the witness' admission that rigor mortis is extremely variable in the time it takes to set in and become well established in a body. Gheesling admitted that the surroundings in respect to dampness and temperature had their effect, as did the cause of the person's death, and that the degree of rigor mortis could not be taken as an invariable indication of the time that a person had been dead.

Frank's attorney made similar inquiries of Dr. Smith and from him obtained similar statements. The presumption is he will use the testimony of the State's witnesses to supplement that of the defense, combining them to support the theory that the Phagan girl was attacked on the first floor by Conley and by him was thrown down the elevator shaft or carried down the ladder into the basement, but was not actually slain until after Frank had left the factory in the evening.

Two other points will be established by the defense before the State rests if Rosser is able to wring the information he wants from the witnesses called by Dorsey.

Says Frank Returned Alone.

One of them is that Jim Conley did not walk to the factory with or just behind Leo Frank Saturday morning, April 26, as Conley swore in his last affidavit that he did. E. F. Holloway, one of the State's witnesses, testified Thursday afternoon that no one was with Frank when he returned from Montag Brothers that morning.

Rosser also displayed an unmistakable intention of making the detectives and officers admit that Frank was under virtual arrest when he was questioned Monday by the authorities, and that there was no reason why he should not have been aware of his status.

He succeeded in getting B. B. Haslett to make just this admission and undoubtedly will use it to explain the measures that were taken at once for the protection of Frank's interests, measures on which the State has looked with suspicion because, the attorneys state, Frank was not placed under arrest until 11:30 the Thursday forenoon after the crime.

State Fares Better Thursday.

The State fared better Thursday than any other day during the trial. Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, submitted considerable damaging evidence in respect to Frank's appearance and actions during the first days of the investigation, although nothing that was startling or direct or even new.

He told that Frank was extremely nervous when the superintendent and Newt Lee were placed in the same room at the police station and that Frank squirmed about in his chair, rubbed his chin and lips in agitated manner, grew pale and trembling and in every way comported himself as one might who was guilty of a crime.

Scott said that he and John Black entered the room as Frank and Lee were finishing their conversation and that he overheard the latter part of Frank's remarks.

Rosser immediately caught the detective up on this statement, referring him to his testimony before the Coroner's Jury, where he testified that he had not entered the room until the conversation between Lee and Frank was completed and that he overheard nothing. Scott explained that he must have been mistaken when he testified before the Coroner.

Scott testified that Herbert Haas, one of Frank's attorneys, early in the case had tried to persuade him to turn his evidence over to the defense before submitting it to the police, but this already had been aired at the inquest and was without particular effect, as Scott added, under the cross-examination of Rosser, that there was no attempt to have it suppressed or kept from the police authorities, but only to have it given first to the defense.

What had the appearance of being the most sensational testimony of the day was that given by R. P. Barrett, a machinist on the second floor of the factory, when he declared that he had found a pay envelope under the machine used by Mary Phagan. The pay envelope, however, when it was shown to the jury, was discovered to have on it no date, no amount, no name, with the exception of a loop of one letter, no number nor any other mark to identify it as the pay envelope that the Phagan girl received Saturday, April 26. Nor was any explanation suggested as to how she may have happened to be at her machine when there was no work being done that day and the machines were not in operation.

Barrett testified to the finding of the alleged blood spots on the second floor near the women's dressing room and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. No more was developed out of the testimony then was already known to the public when Barrett announced his discovery a few days after the murder. Barrett also declared that a white substance had been used with the apparent intention of removing the splotches of red.

Sweeper Tells of Splotches.

Mel Stanford, a factory sweeper, corroborated Barrett in his story of the finding of the spots and the white substance that was spread over them. He said the spots were not there when he swept the factory Friday and that the first time he noticed them was when they were pointed out to him the Monday morning after the murder.

Monteen Stover, the 14-year-old factory girl, gave exactly the testimony that had been expected. She said she had entered the factory at 12:05 the day of the tragedy, and that Frank was not in his office. She said that she looked about in his office for him and on failing to find him left the building. She testified that she looked at the clock as she departed, and it was 12:10. Her story contradicts the statement of Frank that he was in his office all the time after he came from Montag Brothers at about 11 o'clock until he went to the fourth floor to see Harry Denham and Arthur White at about 12:50.

Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, testified that he found four or five blood corpuscles on one of the chips of wood that were brought to him. He could not tell whether or not it was human blood. These chips were the ones taken from the floor where the alleged spots were found. He said that in his opinion the blood-stained shirt found at the home of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman, never had been worn and that the blood on it was put on the inside of the garment and seeped through to the outside.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE, IN CONVICT LIFE ALLEGORY, FORESEES IDEAL PRISONS

Four men sat around a table at one of the western windows of the great dining hall; one of them was a recent arrival at the prison. * * * The last course of dinner had been served and the 400 friends were enjoying their coffee; a few were smoking cigarettes, for this was Sunday and tobacco was allowed to all who cared for it, on that day. The band was playing Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata;" the music vibrated softly and remotely on the air. The hall had marked architectural beauty, and the colors and decorations were quiet but effective. The tables were arranged with aisles between, at the intersection of which stood immense orange trees and standard roses alternately.

That is the setting that Julian Hawthorne, in what is probably his last article for "Good Words," the magazine of the Atlanta Federal prison, provides for a remarkable dialogue between the four men on "Jails of the Future," forecasting prison reforms.

It appears in the August number, and is without doubt one of the best that the noted writer has produced since his incarceration in prison. One of the four men is a newcomer, both to the prison and to the country, and to him is explained the workings of a system that has revolutionized the treatment of crime and changed jails from "hells to a kind of antechamber to Paradise."

The dialogue is fanciful, but it undoubtedly depicts conditions that Hawthorne believes must exist when humanity has come to recognize crime as a disease and treat it as such. That portion of the article that describes the workings of the jails of the future is as follows:

"No More Lawyers."

"When we found we were jailing about a million men a year, and that the faster the lawyers made laws, the greater was the number of lawbreakers, some of the sane ones got together to talk it over.

"They fixed it so that there should be no more lawyers admitted to the bar for 50 years, and those already practicing should be charged 75 per cent of their incomes in taxes. No lawyer was eligible for election to any Legislature or office of public trust.

"A body of 500 experts was set to work revising the statutes, and they reduced the number of them 90 per cent. All artificial crimes—those created by laws—were cut out; only killing, stealing and lying were left in.

"If these were committed owing to congenital defects, or under abnormal conditions, the perpetrators were put under medical care; if otherwise, the culprits were tried and sentenced, but were given their choice of going to jail, or carrying round their necks, by a small steel chain, a pewter disk, on which was engraved the crime and the penalty. At first, nearly everybody took the disk, but after a few years the majority preferred the jail. The jails, meanwhile, had been undergoing strange transformations, both actual and theoretical.

"It began to be realized that the handling of crime was the most important function of the State and problem of society. If even justice were done, everybody would be in prison, and so-called officers of justice were often the worst of the lot.

Best Men as Wardens.

"Accordingly, the very best men of the community were appointed wardens and guards of jails. Upon election, these men were given a free hand and all the funds they wanted to carry out their plans. All the old jails were torn down and new ones built upon different principles, both of construction and administration.

"In a few years jails had become a kind of universities for training men who were found to be below the average in intelligence, character or habits in the obligations and responsibilities of the best citizenship. All kinds of trades and professions were taught theoretically and practically, and the men were put to work as soon as possible at such employment as they selected or as were chosen as most suitable for them.

"Along with all this was established a system of hygiene and bodily exercise and diet somewhat resembling the old Spartan rules instituted by Lycurgus; and a general discipline of mind, manners and conduct as strict as that of West Point but more enlightened. What had been a stigma became a certificate of merit, and by and by, instead of being sent to jail by sentence of court, men who had failed in life or felt themselves weak and incompetent voluntarily applied for admission. For what they produced they were paid good wages; their families were supported by the Government until the men's earnings could care for them."

Denounces Present Method.

In another article in the same number, on "Self-Respect," Hawthorne brands the dress and branding of prisoners, under present-day prison rules, and the substitution of numbers for names as a crude anachronism, as are also, he says, the titles of "convict," "felon" and "jailbird."

"Their effect," he writes, "is to produce in the prisoner a feeling of radical and permanent separation from his fellow men. It is an attempt on the part of finite human beings to inflict eternal damnation on some of their fellow creatures."

Hawthorne declares that most prisoners mean to be good when their term is up.

"Whether or not their resolution holds firm," he writes, "depends partly upon their native strength of character, but in a larger part upon the treatment they get in jail. Shooting and clubbing prisoners and subjecting them to torture has proved unsuccessful in leading them toward sweetness and light. Need for the actual club and gun may arise in an emergency, but the more firm and uniform the discipline, founded, as all discipline should be, on enlightened principles of order and efficiency, the less likely is such emergency to occur."

POET PAYS TRIBUTE TO 'ANGEL OF U.S. PRISON'

AN APPRECIATION

TO MRS. EMMA NEAL DOUGLAS

Beautiful, gracious Spirit of human pity and kindness,
You, from your tranquil retreat, remember our need and our blindness;
You speak not, but stretch your hands, full of plenty and healing,
Not cold and disdainful, but gentle and tender with sisterly feeling;
From your height serene you step down to comfort our gloom, and remind us
To hope and be strong, and to leave our evil and error behind us,
Our void is filled with your bounty, we bless your name, though unspoken,
We hail you the herald of God, whose mercy your mercies betoken.

20-YEAR FUGITIVE RETURNS; CAUGHT

James Hogg Will Be Tried for Death of South Georgia Man in 1893.

BUENA VISTA, Aug. 1.—James Hogg, who with his brother, Floyd Hogg, is charged with the murder of Dave Shippy, 20 years ago, has just been arrested and placed in jail here.

The brothers, with their father, Lewis Hogg, were indicted in April, 1893. The father was captured, tried and freed. The two boys escaped for a score of years, being fugitives from justice. Some weeks ago it was learned that James Hogg had returned to this section and a reward was offered for his capture. Officers crowded him so close that he surrendered.

The killing took place about five miles from Buena Vista, and was the result of a drunken fight. Most of the witnesses in the case are dead. Hogg's wife, after his escape, married again and is now living in Macon.

The prisoner talks interestingly of his experience. Time after time the officers were upon him, on two occasions shooting holes through his clothes. During the Spanish-American war he joined the army, went to Cuba, and remained until the close. He claims to have been in twenty-eight States.

Hogg will be tried at the October term of court.

PLAN WAR ON 34 MACON SALOONS

Campaign of Law Enforcement Advocates Hinges on Pending Injunctions.

MACON, Aug. 1.—If Judge Mathews to-day sustains the injunctions against the four saloons and social clubs that are charged by the Law Enforcement League with being public nuisances in that they are blind tigers, a campaign will be undertaken to close every saloon in the city. Petitions for injunctions against every one of the saloons and clubs have been prepared in anticipation of Judge Mathews making the present restraining orders permanent.

In addition to having to answer the petition for injunction the four saloon men must show cause to-day why they should not be punished for contempt of court. They are charged withhaving sold intoxicating liquors after being enjoined not to make such sales. The question of whether beer containing 5½ per cent of alcohol is intoxicating is an issue in the case. However, the Law Enforcement League officials claim to have evidence of whisky sales against thirty-four saloons.

Fire Alarm System Nearing Completion

Work on the new fire and police alarm signal system is being rushed by the Okenite Company, despite the fact that an injunction restraining the city from paying for the work has been sought on the ground that the contract is a moral obligation, and therefore not legal.

Fire Chief Cummings speaks favorably of the new system, believing it will mean the saving of many thousands of dollars. The total cost of the new system will be $106,000.

Rich Business Man Slain by Burglar

TOLEDO, OHIO, Aug. 1.—F. V. Wilder, aged 73, a wealthy business man, was shot to death in his home here early to-day by a burglar he discovered in the act of robbing the house.

Wilder's daughter heard the shot and rushed into the dining room just as the aged man fell to the floor dead. The robber escaped.

Try a 3-Year Egg; Ten Tons on Sale

TRENTON, N. J., August 1.—The State Board of Health has released ten tons of cold storage eggs, worth $4,000, which had been held by the Government for the last three and a half years in a warehouse in Jersey City.

Doctors and reporters had eaten cake, custards and ice cream made from the eggs, and not one of those daring persons had died, so the board decided the eggs were fit for other stomachs.

Blacksmith Gives a Social in His Shop

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The custom of using the churches and school houses of a community as social centers was upset in Oak Park, a suburb, when M. M. McMahon, a blacksmith, held an ice cream social where the guests sat among piles of horseshoes, and the decorations were tongs, hammers and bellows.

A lecturer from Chicago gave a talk on the "Rocky Mountains," after McMahon called the folks to order by pounding on the anvil.

Slaying of Rooney Another Chapter in Feud of Gamblers

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 1.—Ed Ellis, who late last night shot and killed Pat Rooney, of Montgomery, when the two met in the heart of the city, was to-day transferred to the Jefferson County jail. He still contends that while he was sorry for the killing, he could not help it, self-defense being claimed. W. B. Rooney, brother of the slain man, declares the killing was a chapter in a feud among gamblers and that Ellis had envy and malice for Rooney.

Though a Birmingham man, Ellis has been residing in Montgomery for a year or two. In that city Rooney killed Louis Smith, a gambler, and was acquitted. Smith prior to that was acquitted of the assassination of Brooks Fuller, another gambler. Ellis and Smith were great friends.

Pat Rooney came here two weeks ago from Atlanta and worked for a Northern publishing house. He and Ellis met near the entrance to the hotel where Ellis is stopping. As Rooney's body was being placed in an ambulance a pistol fell to the ground. W. B. Rooney denies his brother had a pistol with him. Ellis' mother and brother live in Birmingham. Rooney's body was taken to Montgomery.

President to Receive Mobile Business Men

MOBILE, Aug. 1.—A telegram received by General Director Irvine from Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, president of the Southern Commercial Congress, announced that President Woodrow Wilson would on Wednesday, August 6, receive a delegation of Mobile citizens bearing a personal invitation to attend the sessions of the congress in this city in October.

At a joint meeting of the boards of directors of the Chamber of Commerce and the Business League the committee was named. This committee will leave Mobile on Monday. At Montgomery the delegation will be joined by Governor O'Neal, who will be its spokesman.

Bank Cashier Faints In Court Over $400

GADSDEN, Aug. 1.—A judgment in the sum of $400 has been awarded in the Circuit Court of Cherokee County, Alabama, at Center, in the case of the J. A. Arnold Cotton Company against the Bank of Menlo, Ga., to recover that amount which had been lost by the bank. J. S. Chamblee, cashier of the bank, testified he had been ordered to deliver $400 to a cotton buyer for the company. He claimed to have given the money to a flagman named Drake, employed on the Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad. The flagman denied receiving the money. In giving his testimony, Chamblee fainted and created a panic in the crowded courtroom. A score of witnesses testified that the flagman is a man of irreproachable character.

Move Made to Quell Castro's Revolution

CARACAS, VENEZUELA, Aug. 1. To repel an invasion of Venezuela by the forces of ex-President Cipriano Castro and crush the revolution the ultimate end of which is to place the former President into power, the Federal Council to-day authorized President Gomez to assume dictatorial powers until the movement is crushed.

The action of the Council followed an address by Gomez to the Governors of the States, who, in their replies, promised unqualified support to the Government.

Georgian, Arrested In Alabama, Freed

HUNTSVILLE, ALA., Aug. 1.—R. C. Rylee, of Colbert, Ga., was arrested here by Chief of Police Kirby on a charge of larceny, but after other persons interested in the case had been consulted, the matter was adjusted satisfactorily and the case was withdrawn.

Rylee sold an automobile to Mrs. Ida Colbert, at Colbert, and several notes were given. It seems that there was one too many and Rylee banked it and left town. He was located here, and after being arrested, paid the amount he obtained on the extra note.

C. J. BLANCHARD RETURNS.

BLALOCK SWORN IN AND NAMES 11 DEPUTIES

Retiring Revenue Collector Jackson Given Two Loving Cups. Thompson Takes Oath.

A. O. Blalock, of Fayette, recently appointed Internal Revenue Inspector to succeed Henry S. Jackson, took the oath of office Friday morning and appointed the following deputies: James L. Patrick, Roy Harrell, Tobe Moye, J. R. Britton, J. F. Camp, Miller Harrison, John W. Martin, J. A. Henderson, O. C. Cole, O. H. Pendley and R. M. Blount. Other appointments will be made later.

Revenue Inspector Shawhan, of Washington, effected the transfer of the office and has checked over the books of the outgoing Inspector, Henry S. Jackson. He stated that he found everything in excellent condition and that the books balanced to a cent.

When Mr. Jackson appeared at the office Friday morning he was met by the entire forces of the Revenue Service and the Custodian Department. Following a speech by U. S. Seal, Assistant Custodian, he was presented with a handsome loving cup as a token of the esteem of the Custodian Department.

O. H. Pendley, of the Revenue Service, presented a loving cup as a token from the Revenue Department. Mr. Jackson was deeply affected.

Howard Thompson, appointed United States Marshal to succeed Colonel Walter Johnson, took the oath at 10 o'clock Friday morning and appointed the following deputies: B. B. Landers, Gainesville; Frank Godfrey, Jr., Clayton; J. H. Penland, Ellijay; W. B. Lovingood, Blue Ridge, and L. B. Greer, Atlanta.

Mr. Thompson is well known throughout the State, especially in the Northeastern Circuit, where he served twelve years as Solicitor General. Since that time Mr. Thompson has confined himself to the practice of law in Gainesville, Ga.

LIFE TERMS FOR TWO DALTON SLAYERS

Judge Fite Sentences Dan Hatfield and Clem Poole—Quick Justice Meted.

DALTON, Aug. 1.—Judge Fite today sentenced Dan Hatfield, convicted of the murder of Will Parish, and Clem Poole, convicted of murdering Policeman Harry Cook to the penitentiary for life.

In the Hatfield case he held there was doubt as to the existence of a conspiracy, and exercising the right where conviction comes from circumstantial evidence alone did not pass the death sentence, as was expected from the jury's refusal to recommend mercy.

John and Tom Nicodemus, indicted with Hatfield, were released on their own recognizance, the outcome of the Hatfield case not showing enough evidence to convict them.

Convicted in Four Days.

Poole was found guilty Thursday night, the jury making a recommendation for mercy. The verdict was returned twelve hours after the trial began. The evidence was completed at 2:30 o'clock.

Poole shot and killed Policeman Cook Sunday near midnight. Monday afternoon he was captured in Chattanooga, and Tuesday afternoon was indicted for murder. He was convicted four days after the killing.

The case attracted approximately 1,000 people, the courtroom being filled to its capacity.

Defense Claims Insanity.

The defense stood on a plea of insanity, relatives of the prisoner swearing that for the past few months, since his marriage, Poole had changed greatly, and was at times not mentally responsible for his actions. The defense also contended that Cook, being without a warrant for Poole's arrest on the charge of shooting at his wife, had no right to seize him.

The State put witnesses on the stand who testified that they had known Poole for years and believed him capable of distinguishing right from wrong.

Girl Wife in Court.

Witnesses testified that Poole shot Cooke while the officer was only attempting to arrest him. In his statement, Poole said Cook was clubbing him, but this was not borne out by other testimony. The prisoner also said that he was attempting to get rid of his pistol and it was accidentally discharged.

Cook while the officer was only at with him throughout the trial, weeping at times. His aged father and mother were also present.

At 5:15 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Judge Fite had completed his charge and the case had been given to the jury.

Spain Loses Heavily In Moroccan Battle

Special Cable to The Georgian.

TANGIER, Aug. 1.—Spanish troops are suffering enormous losses in the campaign against the Arabs in Morrocco.

A terrific battle is raging near Tetuan. Hordes of natives are reinforcing their comrades and inflicting terrific slaughter on King Alfonso's men. It is believed unless fresh troops arrive that the Spaniards will be annihilated.

WAR ON COTTON PESTS STARTED BY SENATE

Bill Passed Looking to Eradication of Weevil Through Regulation of Cotton Traffic.

The State Senate Friday morning passed House Bill No. 443 providing for an additional judge of the Superior Court of the Atlanta Circuit.

The Senate also passed, unanimously, Senator Ford's bill to eradicate the boll weevil by giving the State Board of Entomology the power to prescribe rules for the shipment of cotton and cotton articles.

Mansion Question Up.

The proposed disposition of the Governor's Mansion provoked much discussion in the Senate when the bill of Senator Watts, providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate, was reported unfavorably by the Committee on Public Property.

Senator Burtz, chairman, declared the proposal to appoint a special commission was contrary to the spirit for which the Public Property Committee was created. He, therefore, opposed this measure and others of similar charatcer.

Senator Harrell of the Twelfth raised the question as to the advisability of disposing of the property. In reply, Senator Miller, who also proposed a bill providing for a commission to be appointed by the Governor, replied that it was absolutely necessary.

Adjourns Until Monday.

To this Sentor McNeill of Macon objected on the grounds that the capital would soon be removed to Macon.

The matter finally was sent back to the Committee on Public Property.

Senator Harrell's bill requiring paint manufacturers to label their goods, which was reported unfavorably by the committee, was re-committed by unanimous vote of the Senate.

The Senate passed a number of local bills and adjourned until 11 o'clock Monday.

JOHNSON IS PICKED TO WIN N. Y. TENNIS TITLE

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—William M. Johnson, the youthful tennis player from the Pacific Coast, was the center of attraction at the opening of the New York State Tennis Championship Tournament on the courts of the Crescent Athletic Club, at Bay Ridge, yesterday. Of the ninety-seven aspirants to the honors held by Maurice E. McLoughlin, present holder of the championship, Johnson is to-day picked to finish at the top of the heap.

Johnson gave a good account of himself in his debut upon the local court by defeating G. S. Nankivel, a racquet expert from Hackensack, N. J., in straight sets at 6-1, 7-5.

NEW LAW IS VITAL TO INSURANCE COMPANIES

Bickerstaff Says Present Statutes Discriminate in Favor of Foreign Competitors.

"If the Legislature fails to pass the Meaders bill allowing Georgia fire insurance companies the statutory right to invest in stocks it will have the effect of forcing several Georgia companies out of existence," said Charles A. Bickerstaff, of the Atlanta Home Insurance Company, Friday in commenting on some of the objections raised against the proposed measure.

Mr. Bickerstaff declared several of the companies would be unable to pay dividends if their investments were hampered and restricted to an extent that would prevent them from purchasing securities that would yield them a sufficient income.

"The bill introduced by Mr. Meaders," he asserted, "is copied practically verbatim after the New York law, and is intended to restore to the Georgia companies the right which they had until the bill of 1912.

"No such restrictions are thrown about any foreign company operating in Georgia, and the companies of this State have been placed at a decided disadvantage. The foreign companies have built up their tremendous assets and surpluses by making investments in staple stocks which yield a much larger percentage of income than the investment in bonds.

"The insurance business in Georgia is in its infancy, although this State has some of the oldest companies in the union. If the present law is not amended so that these companies will be fostered and encouraged, it will force them to take up their charters in this State and go to other fields.

Moose Officers To Be Called in Probe Of Fatal Initiation

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 1.—When the probe into the deaths of Christopher Gustin and Donald Kenny, the two men killed during initiation into the local lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose last week, is resumed next Tuesday it is proposed to place on the stand officers of the lodge to ascertain what they know of the work put on that night.

The witnesses examined so far who were present at the fatal meeting told practically the same story as to the accident. Emil Feast, who was a candidate the same evening, told of receiving the "branding" stunt. He said he felt the shock, but was not afraid. While for a few minutes he left the sensation, he got over it.

Relatives of the deceased are getting copies of the testimony being taken before the Coroner.

Zachry Child Torn From Mother's Arms

COLUMBIA, Aug. 1.—When Judge Gary to-day awarded the elder Zachry child, Frances, aged 3 years, to Julian J. Zachry, the father, it required four deputies to overpower Mrs. Mary W. Zachry, the weeping mother who refused to give up her child.

The scene in the courtroom was pathetic as the child was torn from the mother's arms.

Mrs. Zachry fled from Augusta to South Carolina with the children after Judge Hammond had ruled that under the Georgia law the children belonged to the father.

COMFORT BEFORE DIGNITY, SAYS COATLESS PREACHER

CARMEL, IND., Aug. 2.—The Rev. Arthur Hammond, pastor of the Friends' Church, says he believes comfort should come before dignity or style, and recently appeared before an audience in his shirt sleeves. Men in the audience made themselves comfortable, and in a few minutes there were only five men wearing coats. One man removed his collar and tie. Since then the men have been attending in shirt sleeves, and appear to be enjoying the services more than formerly.

FOUR WOMEN ON BODY TO FIX MINIMUM WAGE

OLYMPIA, WASH., Aug. 1.—Four of the five members of the State Industrial Welfare Commission, created by the State Legislature to carry into effect the minimum wage law for women and children, will be women.

Under the new law the commission will hold hearings and set a fair minimum for women and children employed in each industry in regard to which complaint is made.

Accuses Husband, In Jail, of Frauds

ANNISTON, Aug. 1.—Mrs. W. C. Sites, chief witness against her husband, who is in jail in Gadsden, under a charge of getting money under false pretenses and using mails to defraud, has come here for seclusion pending the trial.

Mrs. Sites alleges that Sites would send out letters to theatrical people with the ostensible purpose of securing employment for her and when he would receive a favorable reply, would call for advance money, pocket the change and then address another manager under a different name.

Atlanta Expects to Land Textile Meet

Alonzo Iler, of Greenville, S. C., has arrived in Atlanta and will confer with the committee on meetings of the Southern Textile Association, of which he is chairman, to determine the date for the annual meeting this year.

It is expected that the meeting will be held in Atlanta and that fully 300 delegates will attend.

New Month Picks Hot Day for Debut

August picked a hot day to make its 1913 debut, the mercury standing at 75 at daybreak. Light breezes afforded the downtown section very little relief, for at 1 o'clock the Government thermometer showed 90 degrees, while the heat mark on the streets was about 94.

Relief is promised Friday night or Saturday by thundershowers.

Dynamite Plots Stir Copper Strike Zone

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 1.—General Abbey, commanding the State troops in the Calumet copper district, where 18,000 miners are on strike, today issued a warning that three counties in the district will be declared under martial law is additional dynamite plots are discovered.

The announcement followed the arrest of three men accused of threatening to blow up mine property unless the operators quickly come to terms with the strikers.

"LET WILLARD GET A REP," WIRES BURNS TO JONES

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 1.—Tommy Burns, manager of Arthur Pelky, and Tom Jones, who looks after the interests of Jess Willard, are booked to hook up in an interesting battle of invectives and near-blows within a day or two.

Jones wants to match Willard against Pelky, but Burns in a telegram to-day says that Willard must go get a reputation before presuming to challenge a champion.

"Gunboat Smith is the man Pelky wants to meet," said Burns. "Smith beat Willard, and then again, Charley Miller shaded the Kansas scrapper. Let him get a 'rep' for himself."

This sort of language is the sort that makes Jones glad he is alive, for he thrives on argument.

"When did Pelky whip Willard or anybody of consequence until he landed a lucky punch on Luther McCarty?" asks Jones. "Willard can whip Pelky, and Burns can name his own terms. Pelky took one beating from Willard and wants no more."

Interest in the polo match to be played at Fort McPherson next Wednesday, has caused a number of expert horsemen and women to go out to the Fort for practice and to learn something of the game, for future play. It is probable that the next match after this initial one will feature a ladies team. Friday afternoon, Mrs. John Hill, Miss Josephine Windle, Miss Margaret McKee and Miss Louise Windle were out playing a bit and learning points of the game from some of the young officers who are to play in the polo match of next week. A large audience, composed of representative Atlantans will witness the match. The players will include several out-of-town experts, and the officers' team of Fort McPherson.

Society is much interested in the polo match, which is the talk of the town just now.

Stork and Cupid Cunning Plotters

Many a New Home Will Have a Little Sunbeam to Brighten It.

There is usually a certain degree of dread in every woman's mind as to the probable pain, distress and danger of child-birth. But, thanks to a most remarkable remedy known as Mother's Friend, all fear is banished and the period is one of unbounded, joyful anticipation.

Mother's Friend is used externally. It is a most penetrating application, makes the muscles of the stomach and abdomen pliant so they expand easily and naturally without pain, without distress and with none of that peculiar nausea, nervousness and other symptoms that tend to weaken the prospective mother. Thus Cupid and the stork are held up to veneration; they are raised as cunning plotters to herald the coming of a little sunbeam to gladden the hearts and brighten the homes of a host of happy families.

There are thousands of women who have used Mother's Friend, and thus know from experience that it is one of our greatest contributions to healthy, happy motherhood. It is sold by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle, and is especially recommended as a preventive of caking breasts and all other such distresses.

GRIZZLY AND CUBS COMING FOR ZOO

Fine Bear Specimens Reward Carey's Efforts—Captured in Yellowstone Reserve.

A big, wild grizzly bear and two cubs will be added to the Grant Park Zoo next week. They were shipped from the Government reservation in Yellowstone Park Friday and should reach Atlanta not later than next Wednesday.

Manager Dan Carey received a telegram Friday morning that the bear and cubs had been shipped. He said that their cost to the city of Atlanta, in addition to the express, would be just $62.

When Manager Carey visited Washington in May, 1911, to attend the playgrounds convention, he took up with the Government the matter of getting a grizzly bear for Grant Park, and has kept steadily at it. More than 50 letters have been exchanged between Manager Carey and the Government officials, it appearing at times that there would be no chance of getting this prize specimen, but Manager Carey kept steadily at it and the telegram stating that they had been shipped was the culmination.

Yellowstone Park is the only place where it is possible to obtain a real grizzly bear, and the expense was incurred in the capture, no charge being made by the Government.

In the open market a specimen of this kind—the weight of the bear and cubs being 1,400 pounds—would cost several hundred dollars.

U. S. Makes Railway Pact With Mexico

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The Interstate Commerce Commission to-day rescinded its action in denying the interchange of free transportation between Mexican railroad officials and officials of lines in the United States.

Shipments from the United States to Mexico which are held on the border because of inability to transport them farther on account of disturbed conditions will be turned either to the original shippers or disposed of by the railroads upon one day's notice. Such authority was granted to the carriers to-day by the commission.

Another Line Added To Southern System

MACON, Aug. 1.—J. H. Palmer, former chief clerk of the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, will be general manager of the combined Hawkinsville and Southern and Gulf Line Railroads. The Gulf Line was yesterday purchased by the Hawkinsville and Southern for $261,000.

The entire system, extending from Grovania, through Hawkinsville, Ashburn and Sylvester to Camilla, is a subsidiary of the G. S. and F., which is in turn controlled by the Southern Railway.

CHARLESTON OFFICIAL DEAD.

CHARLESTON, Aug. 1.—Clerk of Council R. G. O'Neale died to-day of heart failure. He was the Mayor's secretary 20 years and Council Clerk seven years. He was president of the Fellowship Society and prominent in fraternal and club circles.

Money Bill Blocks Midsummer Vacation

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—With the certainty that the Glass currency bill cannot pass the House before September 10 and that the Senate will consume at least two months considering it if it be considered at all, Congress faced the alternative to-day of remaining on the job here continuously or upsetting the President's program by blocking the bill.

Society Women in Pajamas Dance at Narragansett Ball

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 1.—Stories of a gay party at the Point Judith Country Club, at which several of the women guests are declared to have danced in pajamas until sunrise, are being circulated here and are almost as much of a sensation as the hunt for the jewel thieves.

Some of the best known young matrons and maids of New York and New England society were among the guests. Turkish costumes are said to have vied with the pajamas.

One observer says fifteen of the women wore ankle watches. Detectives guarding the country club, it is said, to learn something of the jewel thefts, were ordered off by Malcolm Stevenson, who was giving the party.

3 Held as Frauds on Georgia Complaint

ARCADIA, FLA., Aug. 1.—Sheriff J. L. Dishong has arrested G. W. Bishop, D. E. Moorefield and a third person on a telegram from Atlanta telling him to hold these men for Greene County, Georgia, authorities.

The men, it is alleged, were doing business under assumed names, G. W. Bishop, alias G. Baker; D. E. Moorefield, alias M. E. Dorsey, alias D. E. Ennis; and G. Moorefield, alias E. Moore. The latter escaped. It is said they claimed to be organizing a stock company to manufacture soft drings, the plant to be erected in Tampa. The promoters, it is alleged, cashed about $2,000 in notes received for stock, at Arcadia. They had $1,325 on them when arersted. Mrs. Bishop and two children were with the party.

Parents Steal Bride From Young Eloper

MOBILE, Aug. 1.—Reese Brantley, of Atomre, Ala., is reported to have eloped with Miss Ethel Cornell, daughter of an Atmore mill superintendent, and married her at Cause, Ala., Thursday. On returning to Atmore last night the young bride, it is said, went to break the news to her parents, who promptly locked her up in her room and refused to let her communicate with her husband.

The young husband threatens to make trouble.

'Society Girls Not as Modest as Actresses'

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—A report submitted to Mayor Harrison to-day by his legal adviser on the subject of cabaret shows said:

"The dancers in the cabarets I visited were modest when compared to some women—society ladies—who were sitting in the audience. Some of the women who were there to be amused were in greater danger of catching cold in the chest than any of the cabaret performers."

Negro 'Peeping Tom' Threatened by Mob

GADSDEN, ALA., Aug. 1.—To save him from a mob the police of Attalla at 2 o'clock this morning brought Frank Martin, a negro "Peeping Tom," to Gadsden and delivered him to the county authorities.

The negro was caught at midnight peeping into a window where society women were retiring.

SLATON TO GREET METAL WORKERS

Mayor Woodward Also Will Welcome Delegates to National Convention Monday.

Governor Slaton and Mayor Woodward are expected to welcome the delegates of the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers of America at the opening of the convention at the Piedmont Hotel next Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Delegates are arriving in Atlanta on almost every train, the executive board being present and in session. There will probably be five hundred delegates and visitors.

C. H. Barnes, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades and the Atlanta Building Trades Council, is being urged to enter the race for national president.

President O'Sullivan has held the office for several years, but there has developed considerable opposition, and, in case Mr. Barnes enters the race, there may be a hot contest.

Mystery in Suicide Of Postmaster's Aide

BRADENTOWN, FLA., Aug. 1.—Lewis Lawrence, for years assistant postmaster of this city, committed suicide this morning. No cause is apparent. He was in good financial circumstances and his home life was ideal.

He opened the postoffice and then went to breakfast while his wife was at the office. Going to the river bank near his home, he shot himself through the head.

Memphis Business Man Kills Himself

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 1.—Edward L. Wright, of the brokerage firm of Sayle & Wright, killed himself today by firing a rifle bullet into his brain.

Ill health was given as the reason for his act. He was well known in Eastern business circles.

WOMAN DENIES PLOT TO KILL HUSBAND

Mrs. Silva Hawkins Takes Stand in Own Defense in Gainesville Court.

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 1.—Mrs. Silva Hawkins, on trial under a triple indictment with James and Bartow Cantrell for the murder of her husband, Arthur Hawkins, at Belton, to-day took the witness stand and denied that she had anything whatever to do with a plot to kill her husband.

She declared that the Cantrell boys murdered him because he was opposed to their operating a still, and that there had been trouble before the killing between the Cantrell boys and her husband.

All testimony has been heard and arguments of counsel have begun.

It is the general belief that the State has built up a strong case against Mrs. Hawkins, evidence showing that she had tried to get strychnine and had threatened her husband's life because of her affection for James Cantrell. Letters were introduced purporting to be from her to Cantrell, and in them were many endearing words.

Colonel W. M. Johnson, for the defense, claimed the Sheriff had no right to force a confession from Mrs. Hawkins.

Exhibits Her Limb To a Blushing Judge

DENVER, Aug. 1.—Mrs. Alma Dittman will get $10 to-day because after much hesitation and several blushes had played tag over his judicial countenance, Judge Benjamin F. Stapleton personally inspected her silken shod nether limb.

Counsel for Mrs. Dittman, in a damage suit for injuries to her knee, alleged to have been inflicted by Michael Dittman, insisted that the court determine the extent of his client's injuries by a personal examination.

The examination was conducted in chambers, and, on his return to the bench, the court ordered Dittman to pay $10 damages and court costs.

No More Spasmodic Corns

Got a corn that you have had for years? Tried every imaginable way to get rid of it, yet there it sticks like a fiend grinning and torturing you at regular intervals? Away with it! Here's Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid, a new scientific preparation, which will kill it instantly. The first application stops all pain. There is no possibility of danger from blood poisoning, as there is from cutting, paring, peeling, gouging, picking and other barbarously brutal methods.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid will remove any corn, hard or soft; even a stubborn corn of many years' growth will come out clean, whole and positively without pain. Simplest treatment in the world, a scientific formula from our own laboratory, always successful, no pain, no danger. It will positively stop your suffering to-night. 20c, by mail 22c.—(Advt.)

What's T. R. Up To? Hist! Enlisting Men To Conquer Mexico

Editor's Note.—The riddle is solved. "What is Roosevelt doing?" the public has asked. Here is an answer by an ingenious and enterprising Texas correspondent. Whatever its merits or demerits, it is worth reading.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, August 1.—Governor O. B. Colquitt was to-day provided with what purports to be reliable and inside information to the effect that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has quietly organized four regiments of volunteer cavalry of the Rough Rider type, composed of trained riders and marksmen of Arizona, New Mexico and Western Texas.

It is alleged that the real purpose of Colonel Roosevelt's present visit to the Southwest is to direct the selection of men for the military division and that he will soon have it in readiness to enter Mexico in event of hostilities with that country.

The circumstantial report says further that Colonel Roosevelt is carrying on this work with the knowledge and sanction of the United States War Department. He will be placed in command of the brigade if war should come, it is said.

Mulhall Admits He Used His Imagination

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Colonel Martin M. Mulhall, under vigorous cross-examination before the Senate Lobby Committee to-day, was forced to confess that some of the statements he made in his letters asserting his ability to get inside information about legislative matters here and his ability to manipulate committees merely were products of his imagination.

FLOOD OF VOTES MARKS CLOSE OF CONTEST

Names of Victors in Georgian and American Pony Race To Be Announced Sunday.

The pony contest is over.

Winners in the exciting races conducted by The Georgian and American will be announced Sunday, if it is possible to complete the necessary clerical work in time.

Until midnight Thursday votes were received. Wednesday night the contest manager and his assistants worked almost as late. Friday finds them exhausted with the late hours and the strain, for the excitement of the contestants proved contagious, infecting the whole office.

Thousands upon thousands of votes, so many that the aggregate seems incredible, were received Thursday and up to the very last minute.

Most of the boys and girls took to heart the repeated warnings that over-confidence was fatal, and put copious quantities of "ginger" into their final efforts.

This was as true in the country as in the city. The mail brought hundreds of letters for the contest department.

From every point of view, it has been a thoroughly successful contest, and, conducted in the most strictly impartial manner, there has not been a word of complaint.

Nothing remains but to count the votes and announce the eleven winners of ponies and carts; the eleven saddle ponies and the twenty-two watches.

In the very first announcement of the pony contest the time of closing was set for midnight of July 31. In almost every mention of the contest since that time emphasis has been laid on the same fact.

Despite this, two contestants appeared Friday morning with almost $100 each for subscriptions. They were too late. One of them had been given warning Thursday night.

The votes this contestant brought in Friday would have changed the result in thatd istrict. But there was nothing to do but "turn down" the money.

Puts Steam Shovel Above Court; Jailed

PITTSBURG, August 1.—When Judge R. A. Kennedy, in Common Pleas Court, was annoyed by the puffing of a steam shovel excavating a street near the courthouse, he ordered the shovel stopped. When the noise continued, he issued a warrant and had the crew brought into court.

The superintendent was asked whether it would be better to stop the shovel or stop the court. The superintendent replied that the court should stop, and was promptly sentenced to jail for contempt.

Bryan Denies U. S. Is Told to Intervene

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Secretary of State Bryan after a conference with President Wilson to-day issued a statement denying published reports regarding foreign intervention in Mexico. The statement follows:

"The statement which appeared in some of the morning newspapers to the effect that foreign governments are bringing pressure to bear on the United States to compel aggressive action in Mexico is entirely without foundation."

Bedell Slaying Puzzles Police Of Chattanooga

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 1.—At noon to-day no arrests had been made in connection with the murder of Squire C. A. Bedell, upon the porch of his home in East Chattanooga last night. Every available officer, however, has been detailed upon the case and arrests are expected within the next twelve hours. The officers are almost positive that the two assailants were white men.

The murder and robbery of Bedell shortly after 11 o'clock upon the front porch of his home and before the eyes of his wife has greatly excited this city. While robbery is considered the primary motive of the killing, as Bedell had the entire receipts of his day's business at his store upon his person, it is also considered by the officers that there were other contributory motives.

'Walk With My Wife, Then Buy Her Shoes'

SACO, ME., August 1.—Irving L. Meserve, an expressman, attempted to take a new pair of tan shoes from the feet of his young wife when he met her walking in Main street with a young man he did not know.

"You're not goin~ to parade in my shoes," he cried. "I bought these and paid for them. If that man is going to walk with you, he can buy your shoes."

With that he pulled off one of the shoes and was about to take off the other when the young man attacked him. They were fighting, it is alleged, when Special Officer Whiteworth placed them under arrest.

Wife's Lips Too Red; Won't Pay Alimony

NEW YORK, August 1.—Emil Kopstein, a wine salesman, told Supreme Court Justice Donnelly yesterday that his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Kopstein, is not entitled to alimony pending the trial of her suit for separation because she painted her lips and penciled her eyebrows.

He said that on July 4, when they were at Arverne, L. I., his wife's cheeks were so red that he wouldn't be seen on the street with her, and he told her that if any other man had been her husband he "would have broken her bones long ago."

Steals Coat in Auto On Downtown Street

Caught stealing an automobile coat from the car of J. A. Merrill, in front of the Empire Life building, Jim Berry, a negro, Friday morning was held to the State courts by Recorder Broyles on the charge of larceny.

Policeman Bostwick caught Berry just after he had taken the coat from the car and was rifling the pockets. Merrill in court declared that the interests of auto owners demanded that Berry be given the limit.

Dies Trying to Save Chicken From Storm

NORTHFIELD, MASS., August 1.—Richard Stratton, 11 years old, was killed instantly in an electrical storm to-day while attempting to release a chicken which was caught in a wire fence.

Lightning struck the fence 100 yards distant from the boy and, following the wire, passed through his body.

NASH PROTESTS AGAINST SLADE MILITIA BILL

Declares Negligence of Civil Officials Is All That Makes State Troops Necessary.

Declaring that if the civil officers of the State could be made to do their duty, there would be no need of the military, Adjutant General Van Holt Nash, before the House Committee on Military Affairs Thursday afternoon, protested against the passage of the military bill offered by Representative Slade, of Muscogee.

The bill repeals the military act of 1912 and re-enacts the law of 1910, making the militia subservient to the civil authorities.

"The militia is entitled to some consideration," declared General Nash. "We offer our lives to the State with practically no remuneration, and are sworn to uphold the honor of the State and its laws. The only reason there is any need for the militia is because the civil officers do not do their duty. If you will make the civil authorities perform their work, there will be no necessity for calling out the militia.

Says Present Laws Protect Them.

"The present law should stand. It protects us from being overridden by the civil authorities, and prevents us from being made the scapegoats of incompetent civil officers."

Mr. Slade declared the present military law is unconstitutional because it means the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. He likened conditions that arose in Augusta last year, under military rule, to the Reconstruction period, when "blood flowed as freely as water."

Representative Ennis, of Baldwin County, spoke against the bill. He declared if the State were under military rule there would be fewer lawbreakers.

Because of the absence of a quorum the committee did not take any action on the bill. Mr. Slade declared he has small hopes of the passage of his bill, but seeks to effect a compromise with the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator McGregor, which curtails the powers of the military.

It is probable that the committee will not report on the Slade bill until next week.

Vincent Astor Bitten By Monkey on Yacht

NEW YORK, August 1.—Vincent Astor has sailed on the Noma to meet the Olympic, aboard of which is his mother, Mrs. John Astor. He will probably pick up the Olympic about 100 miles out.

Mr. Astor's friends to-day learned for the first time of an encounter he had last week with his pet monkey, Jocko, on the Noma. In his attempt to return him to his cage, Mr. Astor was severely bitten on the hand.

Fines Both Twins To Get Right One

PHILADELPHIA, August 1.—It makes $8.50 difference to-day to either Frank or Harry Swartz, 19 years old, was that one of them wore white socks and the other lavender, because the are twins. Magistrate Morris fined them both that amount because he couldn't tell which had been guilty of flirting in the park.

Mitchell Named by Anti-Tammany Men For New York Mayor

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—After a stormy all night session of the anti-Tammany allies, John Purroy Mitchell, collector of the port of New York, was named as the fusion candidate for Mayor of Greater New York. Mitchell was named on the ninth ballot, with 45 votes, to 42 for District Attorney Whitman.

The rest of the ticket follows:

Weds Fiance, Georgia Man, on His Deathbed

LEBANON, PA., August 1.—The death of Wallace Van Sickle, of Macon, Ga., in a hospital here to-day revealed the devotion of a young woman member of a prominent Lebanon family, Miss Miriam Bowman, to whom Van Sickle became engaged. Shortly after the announcement was made he was stricken with typhoid fever.

The date of the wedding had been fixed, but it was postponed in the hope of Van Sickle's speedy recovery. There was no change in his condition, however, so it was decided that the marriage ceremony should be performed in the hospital. The ceremony was performed, and the bride remained at the bedside of her husband until he died.

Girl Fights Turks as Man; Weds In U. S.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 1.—A romance that began in the Balkans resulted in the marriage of Vida Radak and Barbara Coganic, Bulgarians, in Farrell, Pa.

When Radak was obliged to join the army and go to the front, Barbara dressed as a man and entered the fighting against Turkey. After many hardships, she found her lover and fought by his side.

In a battle, she was slightly wounded, her sex was discovered and she was sent back home. Later Radak left the army and came to this country. He sent for his sweetheart.

Grocer Dumping Bad Eggs in Street Fined

Recorder Broyles Friday morning held that an Atlanta street is not a proper dumping ground for spoiled eggs, when he imposed a fine of $5.75 on C. Kalich, a merchant at Williams and Parker streets.

Inspector Rice, of the sanitary department, was passing through Williams street Thursday afternoon when he noticed eggs being pitched from the store into the street. Investigating he found that Kalich was testing his stock of eggs and eliminating the bad ones.

Had Serious Lung Trouble---Now Well

It is surprising that there exists much skepticism as to the possibility of a person recovering from severe Lung Trouble when there are so many reports of complete recoveries brought about through the use of Eckman's Alterative. This is a remedy for the throat and lungs, which should be investigated by every sufferer. Read of this case:

1618 Susquehanna Ave., Phila., Pa.

"My Dear Sir: For two years I was afflicted with hemorrhages of the lungs, and in February of 1902 I was taken with a severe attack of pneumonia. When I recovered sufficiently to walk about the house I was left with a frightful hacking cough, which no medicine I had taken could alleviate. It was at this time, March, 1902, that I started taking Eckman's Alterative. In a short time my cough was gone and I was pronounced well. Since that time I have had two slight attacks of pneumonia, and I have resorted to no other medicine to effect a recovery. I can not speak too highly for the good it has done."

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

APPROPRIATIONS IN GEORGIA

"By their fruits ye shall know them." ---Matt. vii:20.

"Now we pray to God---

"Not that we may appear approved,

"BUT THAT YOU MAY DO THAT WHICH IS HONORABLE,

"Though we be as reprobate."

---2nd Cor. xiii:7.

Not attacks.

Facts.

Some appropriations in Georgia:

$10,000.00 agriculture.

$10,000.00 carrying out pure food and drug act.

$ 5,000.00 for cattle tick eradication and protection of live stock.

$15,000.00 to developing live stock and exterminating the cattle tick.

$ 6,000.00 to manufacture and distribute hog cholera serum.

$20,000.00 horticulture and entomology.

Nothing for wayward and delinquent girls—for their protection, development and culture—

Later, if—

Maybe, next year—

God pity them!

THEY CAN NOT WAIT.

These are girls—not hogs, nor cows, nor fields which may be replaced.

Once lost, these—?

And crime claws—

Hell reaches out for them, even while you talk.

Seventy-five girls—

Only those under sixteen known to us—others—scores are in the State sinking because there is no place.

Care for prisoners is required by the laws of Georgia and of God, as as well as appropriations for sick cattle and hogs. And if the State's Wards—we will not call them prisoners—be as they are, these girls, what will you do with them?

In the chaingang?

With the hardened prisoners of the prison farm?

You could not put them in your reformatory for boys.

WHAT OF THESE GIRLS?

The Prison Commission says:

"No place for them in Georgia."

Agriculture.

Pure food.

Tickless cattle.

Choleraless hogs.

These are much to be desired. They should be cultivated and sought.

But you know these girls. You would take care of them. They are more valuable than our cows and hogs.

Georgia's shame! Other States take care of girls. Why not Georgia?

Of the JONES-MILLS bill providing a reformatory for girls, CHAIRMAN WHEATLEY said:

"It was referred to a subcommittee to plan for the creation of a home and to make such changes in the measure for an appropriation that could be granted."

Cutting $45,000.00 from the $75,000.00 appropriation asked, the subcommittee reported back the bill carrying an appropriation of $30,000.00, for action by the whole committee.

The Penitentiary Committee had previously recommended the bill without a dissenting vote. All recognize the need.

And if money can be obtained for the cultivation of hogs, cattle and fields, surely it can be found for this—the saving of girls.

NOT AN ATTACK.

A fact:

We believe that the Committee on Appropriations will find a way.

While taking care of beasts and spraying bugs, you will not neglect and destroy our girls.

You can protect both.

You will.

HIGH WAGES AND SHORT HOURS INEVITABLE

Incompetent Employers Doomed to Certain Failure—Workingman's Rights Paramount.

By B. C. FORBES.

"It can't be done" is the favorite argument of many employers when urged to treat their employes more liberally in the way of wages or hours or rest days or conditions of service. And they flatter themselves that their obiter dictum—their say-so—settles it, leaves no room for argument, closes the case finally and irrevocably.

Skinflint employers are going to learn a few things before the world is very much older. They are going to learn that few things "can't be done" when the public makes up its mind that they ought to be done. Not many things that are right and just are impossible.

The eight-hour day, you remember, was socialistic, anarchistic and absurd when first advocated. Nothing could be more impossible, all but a few far-seeing, broad-guaged, large-hearted, humane employers argued. Well, the eight-hour day was ushered in without any tremendous upheaval in the industries concerned.

"It can't be done" was once the pet reply to please for the abolition of seven-day work in the steel industry. To-day not five per cent of the United States Steel Corporation's employes work seven days a week.

* * *

Sunday labor in certain industries used to be considered absolutely unavoidable. To-day it has been radically reduced, almost eliminated in most directions.

* * *

The railroads at first vowed that rebating simply could not be stopped. To-day they are infinitely grateful that the law stepped in and annihilated it.

* * *

Political parties could not be held together, it was urged, without bosses. To-day the bossus are being driven out to the advantage of all.

* * *

"Can't" is an overworked word. It is too often the refuge of the unfit, the lazy and the coward. Sometimes it expresses a fact; more often it is an unconvincing excuse.

* * *

What is here written is for the edification and exhortation of certain corporations and other large employers who glibly declare that sorely-needed reforms for the benefit of their workers "can't be done." These employers are ready to admit that they would like to do certain things, that justice is on the side of the reforms and that they hope at some distant date conditions—especially among their competitors—will so change that it will be possible to mix a little more humanity with their money-making.

They would like to let their workers off one day every week, or every month. But "it can't be done."

* * *

They would like to pay all their helpers a living wage. But "it can't be done."

They would like to better working conditions. But, again, "it can't be done."

Gentlemen, it CAN be done. And it WILL be done.

Any man who can't pay his workers a living wage has no right to own a business. If he can not supply the brains necessary so to manage a concern that it can pay decent wages, then stop him from being an employer and let him become an employe. If capital can not be handled in one industry so as to afford reasonable wages, then let it seek other employment. Not only is it an economic sin to continue the use of capital in an unprofitable business, in one that does not pay for the things necessary for the sustenance of the workers engaged in it, but it is a crime against humanity, a crime against society, a crime against the State, for if an employe receives less wages than is absolutely needful to maintain life, then others—the butcher, the baker, the dry goods merchant, the landlord, etc., etc.—have to make up the difference, since men and women can not allow themselves to starve to death.

The employer who persists in replying "it can't be done" to requests for reasonable treatment of workers writes himself down incompetent, unfit to enjoy the services of others. Capital and labor are not sufficient to insure business success; MANAGEMENT is the third and indispensable requisite. And any employer who can not supply it intelligently enough to enable him to deal fairly and decently with workers has no claim to be allowed to remain an employer. That inexorable law which decrees the survival of the fittest marks such an one for destruction, as he ought to be marked.

CHARTER FACING SURE DEFEAT IN SENATE

Corporations Committee Dooms Bill Curbing Recorder and Providing Referendum and Recall.

The proposed new charter for Atlanta, providing, among other things, for the limitation of the city recorder's power and the application of the initiative, referendum and recall to heads of city departments, is doomed to defeat at the hands of the Senate corperation committee.

The committee held an executive session Friday morning following an open meeting in which the matter was discussed by Representatives Blackton, of Fulton, Alderman Nutting and Mason, City Attorney Mason and Judge Hillyer also addressed the committee.

Immediately following the executive session Senator Burtz, chairman of the Senate corporation committee, declared that the proposed charter has objectionable features and probably would never not get the support of the committee.

He also intimated that the Senate committee might never take any action on the charter.

Later the charter bill was recommitted in the Senate for the further consideration by the commitee on corporations. The charter bill has been passed by the House and recommended to the Senate with the initiative, referendum and recall feature omitted.

Representative Blackbon, in urging a favorable report Friday morning, declared in favor of the provision limiting the City Recorder's power. Under this provision the Recorder may not have jurisdiction in cases where the fine exceeds $200 or the sentence is more than 30 days.

Senator Burtz opposes this, he says, on the grounds that it does not leave the Recorder the power of discretion in cases where one man should receive a heavier fine than another for similar offenses. The provision, he says, would be a boon to violators of the prohibition law.

Blackmon, nowever, opposed the initiative, referendum and recall feature, upheld by the City Council delegation including the City Attorney and the two aldermen. Senator Burts joined Mr. Blackmon in this on the grounds that under the provision it would be too easy to get the required 20 per cent of the voters to sign the petition for the recall.

Senator Burtz declared this proposed amendment was a slap at the Mayor and would be opposed by the Senate Committee.

Invents a Device to Serve Quick Lunches

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 1.—A miniature luncheon wagonette, a device by which many steps will be saved for the housewife who has a few friends drop in on her unexpectedly, is the invention of Mrs. James J. Brown, of Denver, the heroine of the Titanic disaster.

It is a small combination of pantry, refrigerator, sideboard and electric cooker.

Girls! Want a King? Cable Siam's Ruler

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—The young King of Siam, according to Mrs. Clara Williams, wife of a wealthy plantation owner of Bankok here today, is an automaniac, writer of poetry and admirer of American women. He declares he will marry only an American girl.

This feeling for American women, according to Mrs. Williams, was stirred when the young King met and was fascinated by Mabel C. Gilman, now the wife of William E. Corey. The King still indites bits of verse to the former actress, and it is well known in Siam that he refused to wed his cousin because he was waiting for an American girl to enter his life.

Passenger Club to Dine Two Members

The Atlanta Passenger Club will entertain W. H. Leahy and C. F. Stewart in the Georgia pine room in Hotel Ansley Saturday evening at 8 o'clock.

W. H. Leahy, formerly with the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad, has accepted a position with the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. C. F. Stewart, formerly superintendent of the tariff bureau of the Southern Passenger Association, has accepted a position as general passenger agent for the Western Maryland Railroad and will go to Baltimore August 15 to assume his duties.

Capt. 'Bill' McDonald Hunts Dallas Slayer

DALLAS, TEXAS, Aug. 1.—Captain "Bill" McDonald, United States Marshal and famous in Texas as a "bad man" catcher, left Dallas to-day after announcing that he had taken up an investigation of the mysterious murder of Miss Florence Brown in a local real estate office last Monday.

A. M. Vaughan, whose office is a few doors from the real estate office in which Miss Brown was killed, has given the police a description of a well-dressed man he saw standing beside Miss Brown's desk a few minutes before her body was found.

Woman Is Punished By Own Sex on Jury

EAST ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—The first jury of women ever chosen in East St. Louis tried and convicted another woman in Justice Ziegelmeyer's court.

Mrs. Blanch Thomas was tried for disturbing the peace of Mrs. Edward McKinney, found guilty and fined $5. Four of the women jurors were under age and another lived in an adjoining county.

'Jack the Clipper' Gets Girl's Braids

JOLIET, ILL., Aug. 1.—A "Jack the Clipper" cut two long black braids from 12-year-old Goldie Book last night while the girl was sleeping.

Her bed is close to a window and a cut screen this morning explained how the hair thief obtained the tresses.

Here's How Leiters Escape From Heat

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Leiter, of Chicago, who have become the leaders of "sensible society," proved their claim to that title again to-day when it was learned that they had devised a unique plan to fight the heat.

During the day they spend cool hours in the big glass palace on the Virginia hills, and then when nightfall comes on, they move down into the houseboat moored just below and enjoy restful sleep there.

WARM SPRINGS, GA., MORE POPULAR THAN EVER.

Mr. Slade, the new proprietor of Warm Springs, is adding daily to the popularity of this well-known bathing resort. He has this week added a new orchestra of brass instruments and drums, and the dancing is one of the popular amusements. The ballroom can not be excelled by any in the State, and with Lilly's Band from Columbus the dancing is all that can be wished.

The Warm Springs is the pleasantest place in the State, and the swimming pool the finest bathing in the country. The mountain breezes and healthy clime, free from gnats and mosquitoes, make it an ideal spot for a summer outing. The Warm Springs wants to see its old friends again.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Jose Collins

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

ABOUT the hardest work I know is just being a beauty. For there is the ever-present dread that if you relax eternal vigilance, your greatest stock in trade will diminish and dwindle to nothingness! On the other hand, if you are merely on the way to the acquisition of beauty, any little trace of loveliness you acquire is net gain.

However, queenly Jose Collins, of the Ziegfeld Follies of 1913, in New York, refuses to worry about the ravages of time or avoirdupois. "If I get fat, I get fat," said she with complacent conviction; "I refuse to worry about it, and to lay in a supply of wrinkles and gray hair and insomnia dulled eyes. The women in New York have gone mad on the subject and they would probably look far better fat and cheerful than with the haunted-by-the-fear-of-another-pound look they all wear.

Eat Sparingly.

"I eat sparingly in hot weather, because then I don't feel warm and logy. I breakfast on hot water and figs, and I eat fruit and salads without oil in great quantities. That keeps my system clear and in good working order. I never eat hot foods in summer, for that would mean putting in some internal heat when we are sufficiently bathed in the warm atmosphere. I keep a watch on by system—if it grows tired or poisoned by some food that was not all it should have been, why, I live on some soft of fermented milk product—some of the lactic acid drinks that put me in sweet, healthy trim soon again. Every one ought to be her own diet expert.

"I've another notion, if you care to hear it: Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert, too. Beautiful hands are improved by pink, smooth, shell-like nails with neat half-moons and white tips. Lay in a supply of rounded orange wood sticks, some cuticle remover, a cuticle food, a buffer, a flexible file, one of the standard polishing pastes, and a nail bleach for removing stains from the nails. Spend five minutes with the nails night and morning, training them into shapely, smooth cleanliness, and see what splendid results you get—this would be my advice to all girls.

"Cold cream to make the hands smooth; careful drying to keep them so, and a little stretching and pulling and patting into long, graceful lines will make the ugliest hand more attractive. And if a fairly pretty hand is scrupulously smooth and clean, and is tipped by smoothly rounded pink nails with no soil or jagged cuticle to mar their outlines, it will be sure to give the impression of being very pretty indeed."

"Every woman her own diet expert and manicurist," I mused. "Then, Miss Collins, you may think also that every woman should be her own hair dresser and an expert on the care of the hair, too."

Care of the Hair.

"Indeed I do," agreed the dark-eyed beauty whose wonderful voice and delightful acting are two of the charms she adds to merely appearing in glowing radiance on the stage. "I think every girl can train her hair in the way it should go—I think it well worth time and patience to learn how to take care of your hair.

"And I think a girl should find a simple, pretty and becoming style of hairdressing and stick to it. It is not fair to train the hair in one direction and then go yanking it off into some other way. A water wave can be put in and even straight, lanky hair taught to look fluffy and pretty.

"Just after your next shampoo press your still damp hair into waves with your fingers and pin the waves into place, and, with the waves still pinned, allow the hair to get perfectly dry; pinch these same waves into place morning and evening with a bit of hot water to add stability to the hair as it dries. Of course, this won't make naturally curly hair—but it will give a pretty fluffy look to locks that might otherwise be an imitation of seaweed.

"If your hair is too long or too thick to manage, cut out a bit of it—if it be too thin, go to an expert for a tonic and apply it faithfully with a loosening, circular motion that is splendid for the scalp—and then you will probably have a crowning glory—instead of just hair!"

So, Little Miss Would-Be-Pretty, just work away at being your own sane little diet expert, and manicure artist and hair specialist, and see if you do not fall heir to some of beautiful, stately Jose Collins' healthful magnetic charm.

"If you are getting fat don't worry about it. Worry will add wrinkles and gray hair.

"Eat sparingly in hot weather.

"Never eat hot foods in summer.

"Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert.

"Girls should find a simple, becoming style of hair dressing."

Miss Jose Collins.

THE MAID WE LOVE.

"QUEEN of her realm!" uncertain name that puzzles and enchants your.
For the "Realm" and what it is the name no knowledge grants you.
Behold! She is a maiden fair who splendidly can cook,
And I would warn you one and all, there's danger in her look.

Her salads are a dear delight—likewise the cherry pies;
All folk must cater to this maid as in their power lies.
Ah, maid! how trembles all your realm when one like you departs,
For you are queen of rolling pins and of policemen's hearts.

HAVE YOU NOTICED THAT—

It is much easier to live because we won't have to go on doing it forever?

Pleasures and troubles are alike in one respect—they are both greatest in anticipation?

When the average man "plays to the gallery" the only observer in that gallery is his own self-esteem?

Yesterday's triumphs, defeats and sorrows all belong to yesterday for tears or smiles?

The chap who lives only to enjoy life never enjoys anything?

The Greatest of All

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"WHOM," is one of the first questions asked a child, "do you love?"

There is a sudden clasping of little arms around the mother's neck, childish lips are pressed against her cheek and there comes the whispered response, "You."

It is the first word childhood hears—"love." It has been a life that was misspent if it is not the last.

The journey through life is only a few hours as compared with eternity, but it is long and weary as we measure it with our short-sighted eyes. To amuse ourselves we invent many diversions, hoping to find happiness in fame, wealth, pleasure, ambition, and when these fail we ask forgetfulness in work.

But nothing is worth while, nothing satisfies, though we gain all that we longed for, unless we also have love.

It lightens the burdens. It illumines the dark places. It gives purpose to the purposeless. It is the source and the sustenance of faith, courage, hope, ambition, patience and every ennobling quality.

It Gives Courage.

Without Love, wealth is poverty. With Love, poverty is wealth. It puts courage in the veins of the coward. It makes a man rise above himself. It is the transforming wand of the only good fairy the times have left us.

Love youthifies. Though one be old and wrinkled and bowed with the years, one is not old so long as there remains in the heart a reverence for Love. The young woman who scoffs at it is older than her grandmother who trusts and believes.

It beautifies. The plainest woman becomes beautiful when she loves and is loved.

Love strengthens. The mother never tires, though she works every hour, because she is strengthened by Love. The husband and father is persistent in the face of discouragement and defeat and spends his life in toil for those he loves.

It enthuses. No man is a good workman if he has only himself to provide for. The best workman is the man who loves.

It is the universal gift, and one which depends not upon the whim or caprice of some fickle goddess that presided at our births, but upon ourselves. We were born for love, and those who do not love.

If there were no such thing as love the churches and theaters would close and the printing presses would stop, all we need do is to beleive and it is ours.

It is independent of social position, age, color or wealth. The love that comes to the maid is just as sweet as that which comes to her mistress, and just as true. There is more of it in the home of the poor than in the home of the wealthy.

It is about the only thing in life that defies a bank account. One is never defeated so long as one loves. The failures, the loafers, the drunkards are It is not only the greatest thing in life; it is life itself, and the world revolves around it.

It is the hope of youth and the comfort of old age. All along the way there is nothing that will take love's place.

The young woman is stretching out her arms to welcome it. The older woman owes it to her younger sister to forget love's bitterness and disappointments, and meet her with sympathy and understanding in the greatest experience life holds.

The old owe it to themselves to have faith in it. They owe it to their juniors to express that faith often. The mother or father who holds that a marriage for wealth or social position is more desirable than one for love is not fit to be a parent.

It is an injustice to the son and daughter more tragic in its results than beating a child.

One Against Higgins

Higgins is troubled with an overweening curiosity about other people's affairs. Occasionally he gets taken down, however. He met Smithers in an omnibus; he does not know Smithers very well, but he "my boys" him as if he were a lifelong friend.

"Been buying, eh?" he inquired at once.

"Yes," said Smithers, deliberately. "I've been looking after a horse for my wife."

"Have, eh? Well, let me look him over for you."

"Oh, I've bought him!"

"Not without trying him? Was he sound?"

"He appeared to be."

"Doesn't shy?"

"No; certainly not."

"Good mouth?"

"Y-e-s; I think so."

"Good manners?"

But here Smithers arrived at his crossing. When he reached the door of the 'bus, he called back to Higgins:

"I neglected to mention the kind of horse my wife wanted. It was a clothes-horse."

One Woman's :-: Story :-:

By Virginia T. Van de Water.

CHAPTER XI.

THE taxicab bearing Mary Danforth and her escort drew up in line with other vehicles before the great opera house, which rose huge and somber above the flare of white lights upon the street. While Craig conferred for a moment with the chauffeur, the girl looked about her, noting the hurry and clamor of Broadway at theater-time. The rattle and snort of automobiles, the clang of passing cars, the gleaming and flashing electric signs—seemingly pasted high against the dark sky—the shuffle of thousands of feet, the light laughter of passing couples and the smiling faces which surged past her into the broad lobby of the opera house, thrilled her and almost intoxicated her with a strange sense of gayety and light-heartedness. She laughed spontaneously when Craig returned to her and, laying a light hand on her arm, guided her through the crowd, of which they became immediately a part.

"It was very nice of you to ask me to come with you this evening," she said ingenuously, looking up brightly into the eyes of the man at her side.

"I'm very glad now that I asked you," he returned bluntly. "But I was not so very glad at first, for you did not seem at all keen at the thought of going with me."

The boyish frankness of the speech astonished the girl.

"Why, what a ridiculous thing for you to imagine, Mr. Craig!" she exclaimed. "What made you fancy that?"

"I didn't fancy it, I knew it," Craig declared, handing his checks to a supercilious usher who guided the young couple down the aisle. "I know there was some reason why you thought you would not go with me at first. Was I not right?"

They were seated now, and Mary, although she flushed hotly, answered him with a frankness that matched his own.

"Yes," she murmured, "there was a reason."

"I knew it," he said triumphantly, and droped the subject.

Whether the thought of her former reluctance acted as a spur to Craig's endeavors to appear well, or whether he was merely at his ease and happy, Mary did not know, but when the overture had begun she looked covertly at her escort and told herself that she found him charming. He was not particularly brilliant, she admitted, but she always thought that brilliant men were conceited anyhow. Yet she considered this man inttnsely interesting and amusing in a boyish, unaffected way, while his attitude of defrence and respect toward herself touched and pleased her. She smiled with happiness as the great orchestra played. If she had known what a tender, satisfied smile hers was at this time she would have been amazed.

When the curtain rose she forgot Craig and allowed herself to be swept along on the waves of harmony. When the curtain fell, she turned to her companion, her eyes shining.

"Oh, don't you just love it?" she asked impulsively.

"Yes," he answered, smiling significantly down at the hand she had unconsciously laid on his sleeve.

"I was talking about the opera, Mr. Craig," she reminded him with an effort at severity, withdrawing her hand quickly.

"Oh, the opera?" he queried, unabashed. His face was grave, but there was a light of quiet amusement in his gaze, a gleam that made Mary laugh, in spite of herself. "Yes, I like the music right well, too," he went on, "but I reckon the opera isn't a very good one, is it?"

"Indeed it is," exclaimed Mary vigorously.

"Well, I didn't think it could be," explained the young man, "because I like it, and from what my sister has always told me about my musical taste, I have naturally supposed that anything I liked along that line must be rather poor stuff."

"Then why do you come to the opera, if you don't care for music?" queried Mary.

"The answer to that question in this case is so obvious that I refuse to be drawn into another effort to pay a compliment," he declared. "I really believe, Miss Danforth, that you are blushing again."

"If I am," she returned, with a shrug, "it is because I am ashamed of a man who will not give a frank and truthful reply to a simple question."

His manner changed quickly, and his bantering tone became suddenly grave.

"I wonder if you would really care whether I was speaking the truth to you about some things or not," he said, slowly and softly.

But this time the girl did not answer him.

When the opera was over they were caught in the crowd moving up the aisles and at last found themselves upon the sidewalk.

"If you are not too tired," pleaded Craig, "won't you go with me to Rector's and have a bite of something before we go home?"

The girl shook her head.

"I'd like to," she answered regretfully, "but you must remember that I am a working person and need some sleep. I think that we would best go right home, but I thank you, just the same."

He did not urge her further, a fact for which she was secretly grateful. A sleepy elevator boy took them up to the door of her apartment, then went down again with his car, without waiting for Craig to make his adieus. Mary held out her hand frankly to her escort.

"It was kind of you to give me this delightful evening, Mr. Craig," she said, "and I have enjoyed every minute of it."

He looked down into her eyes as he returned her handclasp. "Will you believe me," he said huskily, "if I say that being with you for three hours this evening has made me very happy?"

"Yes," replied Mary, gently.

He started to speak again, checked himself, and lifted her hand quickly to his lips.

"Good night!" he said abruptly, and turning ran downstairs without waiting to signal for the elevator.

The girl, left alone, raised the hand that he had kissed and pressed it to her own lips. Her eyes were shining, her heart beating fast. Then she let herself softly into the quiet apartment.

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Good! To the side door then." And dashing through a crowd of small urchins that blocked the road, they made their way around the house to the entrance mentioned, catching glimpses through the windows, as they did so, of blazing chandeliers and towering plants, and hearing with feelings that may well be imagined, the bewildering tones of an orchestra, mingling with the hum of many voices.

They opened the door. A festive scene burst upon them, but they paid it little heed. The tall figure of the family butler bowing before them, absorbed all their attention, for he wore a look of expectancy and cheerful welcome that added to the mystery of the moment and made it difficult for the doctor to stammer out:

"Where is Mrs. Gretorex? I must see her at once."

The butler, surprised, stared at the doctor an instant, and seeing something in his face that he did not understand, faltered helplessly and turned his eyes upon the detective.

"That Will Do!"

"Mrs. Gretorex," repeated Dr. Cameron. "I want to see her. Tell her——"

"Wait!" whispered Mr. Gryce. "I had better send her my name." And he took a card out of his pocket.

But the butler, more and more surprised, shook his head, and while he did not refuse to take the card, muttered:

"Pardon, monsieur!—Madame Gretorex make her toilet, but if Dr. Cameron will go to his room, I will tell her?"

"That will do," broke in the detective. "Take us upstairs at once." And ignoring with his usual imperturbability the glances of astonished inquiry that followed his rather burly figure, clad in its common business coat, he pushed his way to the stairway without waiting to see if the doctor was behind him.

This gave the butler an opportunity to whisper:

"The bride is a little late, Monsieur, and Mrs. Gretorex asked me to say——"

"I can not wait," broke in the doctor, exasperated that they should still attempt to keep him in ignorance of the real state of affairs. "I will go up, and you see that Mrs. Gretorex comes to me immediately." And he followed in the wake of the detective, conscious from the expression of the faces he passed that he wore anything but the aspect appropriate to his supposed position of bridegroom.

No Excuse.

Mr. Gryce was waiting in the hall above. "I have inquired for the room set apart for your use," whispered he, "and they point out the one at the end of the hall. Isn't it a shame?" he added. "And what pluck on the part of the mother. I declare I had no idea she would carry it as far as this. But I suppose she could not help herself. She kept hoping and hoping from minute to minute that her daughter would come, and has not yet found courage nor opportunity perhaps to explain the situation and dismiss her guests. If it were not for what we have still to do," he added as they stepped into the room which had been pointed out to them, "I would wait and hear what excuses she would frame to meet the emergency; for you may be sure they would be entirely in accordance with the demands of the occasion."

"There is no excuse possible. The truth will have to be told," declared the doctor.

But Mr. Gryce shook his head, and pointing to the clock, replied, "There is yet an hour before us. If she will come at once, Mr. Gretorex may safely be left to announce to the throng that his daughter has been suddenly taken so violently ill that her marriage to-night is impossible. Not one in a dozen will believe him, but the talk that will follow will not hurt you, and to-morrow any turn can be given to the story which the facts will bear out."

"Yes, yes," began the doctor, but he went no further, for at that moment there was a rustle heard on the threshold and Mrs. Gretorex, magnificent in velvet and diamonds, slowly pushed open the door and stood in a dignified attitude before them. Both gentlemen started forward and both gentlemen paused confused, for her air was one of courteous protest, and the glance she allowed to travel from one to the other had nothing but a haughty inquiry in it, which to them, knowing as they did all that was hid behind it, showed a power of dissimulation that for the moment was almost disconcerting. Nor were her first words calculated to better the impression she had made.

"My Daughter Is Here."

"You have sent for me?" said she with a glance at the doctor which completely ignored the detective. "May I ask what I can do for you?" The as the doctor hesitated in his agitation, she added politely. "It is 8 o'clock and my daughter is almost ready. I hope these few minutes of delay have not inconvenienced you."

"Your daughter!" gasped Dr. Cameron. "She is here?" While Mr. Gryce, in no wise disturbed by the coldness with which his presence had been received, took up a silver paperweight from off a table near by and began to weigh it in his hand while his lips moved with what might be called the ghost of a whistle.

"My daughter is here, of course, sir," declared the mother in tones that were almost icy in their pride and indignation. "Where else should she be on her wedding night?" And she cast a furious glance at the detective, which that person was of course much too absorbed to meet.

"Here!" again repeated the physician, absolutely confounded at her audacity. "I beg pardon, but I thought——"

Her smooth smile stopped him.

"Shall I inform my child that her bridegroom is ready?" she asked, with a polite but doubtful glance at the overcoat he still wore.

Dr. Cameron stared, felt himself inadequate to grapple with the situation, and glanced at Mr. Gryce, who softly laid the paperweight down and advanced.

"Madam," said the latter, "excuse me, but moments are of inestimable value just now, and I must go straight to facts. Your daughter—"

But this woman was not one to brook interference.

"I don't know you, sir," she affirmed, and turned again to the doctor. "When my daughter's toilet is quite complete you will receive a summons from her maid. Would you like any assistance yourself?"

This aroused Dr. Cameron. Advancing he took the lady's hand and respectfully bowed over it.

"Mrs. Gretorex," said he, "you ignore the man you have employed, but you will not ignore me. If your daughter is in this house she must have returned in the last few minutes. In that case—"

But here he was again interrupted.

"You mistake. My daughter—concerning whose movements you seem to have formed the most unaccountable conclusions—has been in this house since noon. She came back with a cousin of hers from Montclair, just as we were beginning to feel anxious about her. Her present delay is owing to an entirely different source. Some trouble about her veil, I believe."

Tantalizing Words.

For the second time the doctor showed intense astonishment. "Mrs. Gretorex, do you speak the truth?" he asked, "Miss Gretorex here and since noon, when I myself saw her at the C—— Hotel an hour ago? You are deceiving me and I as your intended son-in-law will not endure it. Though I pity your daughter from the bottom of my heart, I can not marry her, for her conduct has shown a duplicity to which this tardy return to fulfil her engagement only gives an emphasis."

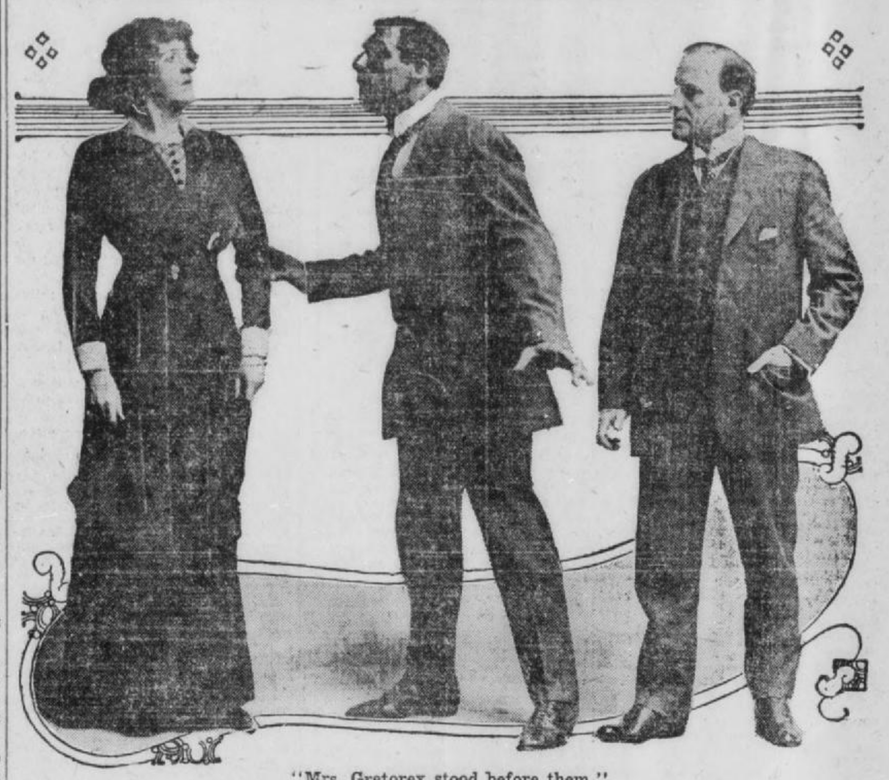

It was now Mrs. Gretorex's turn to look dumbfounded. She gazed at the doctor as if to see whether he were in his proper senses, then she stepped up to the detective.

"This is your work," she cried. "You have gone beyond your orders. Did you not receive my telegram?"

"No, madam."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

PREMATURE GRAYNESS CAN BE AVERTED

THE hair turns gray because it has lost vitality, due to sickness, nervous strain, deficient nutrition and sometimes inherited causes. To pull out the hairs when they begin to turn white is simply to enlarge the cells, coarseh the hair and cause it to whiten more quickly than if left alone.

The best and only satisfactory treatment for premature grayness is a pure, reliable hair restorative, such as Robinnaire Hair Dye. This restorative is prepared in our own laboratory, a scientific formula, and we guarantee it to be non-injurious. It is not to bleach or change the original color, but is to restore faded or gray hair to its natural color and lost vitality. Its tonic effect makes the hair soft, lustrous and beautiful, and keeps it in a healthy condition. Does not stain the scalp and its use cannot be detected.

Don't let gray hair stand in your way either in the social or business world, for thousands of others are using this splendid restorative with best results. We have sold it for over a quarter of a century without even one complaint against it. It is a pure, beneficial restorative and cannot harm you. For light, medium and dark brown and black hair. At druggists and toilet goods departments, 75c; by parcel post, 85c.

Send us the name of your druggist if he cannot supply you, and we will send you FREE samples of Robinnaire Face Powder and Cold Cream of Roses. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Atlanta, Ga.

An Unappreciative Man

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"EVERY time my wife and I go out walking," a distressed husband writes me," she insists upon me pushing the baby carriage.

"When any of my friends see me they laugh and make fun of me. Kindly let me know if it is a married man's duty to push the baby carriage."

No, it is not his duty. It never, since he began, was his duty.

It is his PRIVILEGE!

Whose baby is it, you narrow-souled representative of your sex? Isn't it yours? And isn't pushing the baby carriage on the streets the lightest of the many thousand tasks that attend it?

Did your wife complain during the long weeks and months she carried it before it was born? Did she fear that her girl friends would laugh at her, or taunt her?

Did she feel that she had a grievance when she went down into the shadow of the Valley of Death, and returned, spent with pain, with your child in her arms?

Has she ever reproached you for the martyrdom motherhood has brought her?

She doesn't ask that you sit by its sickbed through the long hours of the night when every one in the household is asleep. She has never expected you to be always patient, tender, merciful, and forgetful of self, denying yourself every comfort if that denial made life happier for your child.

You Go To Sleep.

When you lay your head on your pillow, it is to sink into a sound sleep. When she goes to bed it is to hover so near the border of consciousness that the faintest sigh from the little bed near her own awakens her.

When you sit down to a meal it is to gratify your own appetite. With her, her own appetite is an afterthought. She attends to you and the child first.

When you take your pleasures it is with the thought only of what pleases YOU. From the hour her baby comes her amusements are those that are her child's.

You are stronger than your burdens are heavy, and she has tasks before her every hour that are greater than her strength.

You know only your own aches and pains. She suffers both her own and every ill to which childhood is heir.

Your apprehensions are centered around self. She fears nothing for herself and all that life threatens for her child.

When asked to push the baby carriage, you were ashamed. Ashamed to proclaim by this little act that you are the child's father!

She not only bore all the pain alone, she is not only alone in the wearying care of your child, but she stands alone in the pride that glorifies parenthood.

The Miracle.

If you were more a man and less an empty-headed peacock, you would forget yourself in the miracle that Love has brought you, and would be so overcome with pride that it would make you almost maudlin.

The father monkey in his cage will chatter with pride when visitors inspect the little misshapen image of himself in the mother monkey's arms. Every form of life, no matter how low, is proud of its offspring.

You call yourself a MAN, and you are ashamed of your own child! You are not a man. You are not of as high an order of intelligence as a monkey. You haven't as much heart as the lowest form of creation.

Push that baby carriage, and push it with pride and gratitude! I warn you that if you persist in your present attitude of shame for your own offspring, some day you will find the baby carriage has grown into a car of Juggernaut.

Couldn't Eat It.

After being kept waiting for the usual five or ten minutes, the new arrival at the restaurant was duly served with the first course of the table d'hote dinner—soup.

Hesitating a moment, he glanced at his plate, then said:

"Waiter, I can't eat this soup."

"Then I'll bring you another kind, sir," said the waiter, and hastened away.

The guest sighed as the second plate was placed in front of him.

"Nor can I eat this soup," he said, a trifle more emphatically than before.

And the waiter, silent, but angry, brought yet another plate of soup. Whereupon the guest once more remarked in a low, emphatic tone:

"Really, I can not eat this stuff!"

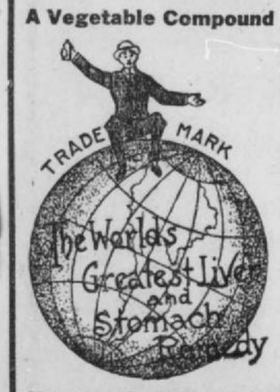

But the waiter, now really angry, summoned the manager, and, to the interest of the other guests in the restaurant, explained what had happened.

"Really, sir, this is most unusual, sir," said the manager. "May I ask why you can't eat any of our soups?"

"Because," replied the guest, with a sad, wan smile, "I have no spoon!"

THIRD PRIZE-WINNING STORY IN "THE TRIPLE TIE" CONTEST

By LILLIAN LUCILE HARDEN,
Oak Street, Decatur, Ga.
WINNER OF THIRD PRIZE, $25

Miss Lillian Lucile Harden, of Decatur Ga.

She is 15 years of age and won third prize in "The Triple Tie" contest.

CHAPTER XLV.

"IS that you, Steve?" asked Mildred, at the phone.

Yas, sum, Miss Mildred."

"Well, just as soon as Mr. Gray returns, don't fail to call me up," she said.

"Yas, mum, Miss Mildred."

"And have everything ready to start immediately after his return."

"Yas, mum, I is," said the faithful Steve.

Mr. Gray returned early on the following morning and they started on the search for Gordon Kelly.

Mildred was allowed to go on the condition that she remain out of view until all danger was over. Indeed, you could not have forced her to remain at home, so anxious was she to see her lover.

One of Gordon's hints was to flash a light from a mirror so he would know to expect them, so he was not surprised at the two flashes of light, and turned smiling to his friends.

The Guard Surrenders.

Not more than 10 yards away, carefully concealed from the guard but fully revealed to Gordon, crouched five figures. Mr. Gray was in the lead, armed to his teeth. Cautiously they drew around to get the drop on Gordon's guard. Then they sprang forth and stated they had come for the prisoner, and the "prisoner" was prisoner no longer.

The guard gave up his weapon and Gordon Kelly greeted his friends. Doing so, he spied Mildred behind the bush, and ran to her with the speed that marked him such a marvelous base-runner. Amid her squeaks of delight, she managed to say:

"Sweetheart!"

And he returned softly:

"Honeybunch!"

Then Gordon told them about his weeks in captivity, but impressed it on their minds how considerate his captors had been. That spoke much for the mountaineers and they were turned loose on the promise not to capture Mr. Kelly again, but to help him out in the future. No one suspected that those same mountaineers would lay in wait for Forrest Cain and the awful tragedy that happened would happen.

Gordon and his friends returned to the two automobiles which were stationed about a quarter of a mile farther back. Gordon and Mildred sat in the one driven by Steve, with Elmer in front.

Hears of Triple Tie.

"Say, Gordon, do you know that the triple tie is to be played off to-morrow?" asked enthusiastic Elmer.

"Yes, I read all my papers," replied Gordon.

They discussed it a while, and Elmer turned again to Gordon:

"Hey, Gordon, let's go to New York, and you play and I'll be your mascot."

"Suppose I should go?" questioned Gordon of Mildred, with a twinkle in his eye.

Elmer's enthusiasm was contagious, or Mildred would never have replied:

"Yes, do, Gordon; arrive at the last minute and snatch the Red Sox out of trouble with a home run and be a baseball hero!"

"Well, I'm coming to see you this evening, and if I leave to-morrow I will get to New York in time to see the last game," returned Gordon.

Just then the unsuspecting Steve set the "buzzer" going and the two lovers took the opportunity for a kiss.

When they reached the mansion Elmer said:

"Gee, Gordon, wouldn't that be dramatic to arrive and play in the last game?"

"It sure would. Mildred, when can I come?"

"This afternoon at 5 o'clock. It's 4 now. Report on time."

"I will, Boss," laughed Gordon.

Mildred and Elmer reached home about 4:30. Elmer's excitement was over the trip to New York and Mildred's over the reception of Gordon.

Gordon arrived promptly on time. Mildred decided she could spare Gordon a little while if he would play if his manager would let him. Elmer was to go with him and he departed from them to get ready his things. Then they told each other what they had been aching to tell for many weeks.

"Gordon, sweetheart," murmured Mildred going close to him.

"Honeysuckle," was all he could whisper as he took her in his arms.

Gordon and Elmer left early the following morning for New York and Mildred returned home from the mountains.

The day after she arrived home, as the family were sitting at the breakfast table they were startled out of their wits to hear the newsboys shout:

"Wuxtra! Wuxtra! All about the murder of Forrest Cain in the mountains! Wuxtra! Wuxtra!"

Farnsworth, who had seen Forrest Cain murdered, returned to Atlanta on a train two hours later. This is the story he told to a policeman, a detective and The Georgian reporter.

Farnsworth's Story.

"I thought Forrest Cain had something to do with the disappearance of Gordon Kelly, so the next time he left town I determined to trail him. I had my chance this morning. We got off at a little station in the Blue Ridge about 30 miles from Pew Creek. A cracker was holding a horse for him and as that was the only horse in the community I couldn't follow him. I got out of cigarettes and suffered hour after hour until about 8 o'clock I heard a freight train coming and at the same time I heard the pounding of horses' hoofs. Just as the train was pulling by the man jumped from his horse and seized a grab-handle. At that instant a pistol was fired from behind and the man with a terrible screech fell under the moving cars. I went to him and struck a match. It was the lifeless and mangled form of Forrest Cain. I looked toward his assassin. He blew out the light before I saw his face and the inky darkness thoroughly concealed him.

"Why did you shoot him?" I asked.

"'None uv your damned business,' he drawled in smooth, even tones. 'You walk down the track and don't yer come back here in less than fifteen minutes, or you will be lying by that damned cur. Then you all kin do what yer damned wanter,' he added.

"When I went back he and the horses were gone and I took the next train to Atlanta."

The Deery family were shocked to say the least, but Mildred felt strangely relieved, somehow.

A posse of men were put on the mountaineer's trail. He was caught distilling whisky, but not until he was fatally wounded. In the few remaining hours of his life he told his story of the past few weeks.

CHAPTER XLV.

GORDON KELLY, the baseball idol, at bat, and the bases full.

The White Sox "fans" let out a groan that almost drowned the wild cheers. Bill Smith thought he could distinguish Whisky's shout above all the din. Whisky was certainly doing his duty to Kelly, and as the noise died down a little he began to speak:

"Dat's him! Dat's him! Sho as I'm a libbin, dat's him! Marse Gordon goin' ter win dat game fer de Red Sox! He kin do hit! He gwine do hit!"

At the conclusion of this oration the people cheered again, at least, all but the White Sox. Bill Smith was proud of Whisky.

Kelly, having selected his bat, stepped to the plate in his Ansonlike pose.

Big Ed Walsh bent double, determined to put every ounce of his strength in the speed of that ball.

"Would Kelly hit it?" was the question on every tongue.

He Did Hit It!

Yes! He did hit it! When his bat crashed into that ball it sounded like a cannon.

Never had such a hit been made! The ball soared away out of reach of all hands. By the time the right fielder picked it up Kelly and the three men before him had scored.

The previous cheers seemed trivial to the one that now shook the Polo Grounds.

"He done hit! He done hit! But he show am a mysterioso!" shouted Whisky.

The next man was retired, but the Red Sox had won! The crowd demanded an explanation of how he learned to play ball in such a marvelous manner when he stoutly declared he never had seen a ball game nor played in one before his arrival in Atlanta.

Stahl shoved him out in the center and said: "Now, tell us all about it!"

Gordon, seeing no way out of it, began speaking:

"Well, ladies and gentlemen, it's very simple. I lived in my mountain home, surrounded by every luxury. I desired to play baseball, but had no comrades. My diamond was laid off according to the regulations. A correspondence school taught me what a curve, drop, strike, foul, etc., was, and I made a machine that would hurl balls of all kinds to me. I learned to bat that way. One of my servants chased the ball. I had another machine that I could touch as I left the home plate, that started it; as I returned I touched it again, that stoped it, and I could tell how long I had been. I could bat my balls straight up in the air or use my pitching machine to learn to catch. All my other knowledge I gained from the correspondence school and from the newspapers."

Gordon Back Home.

The cameras and reporters sure were busy that afternoon! And when one snapped Gordon with Elmer, Elmer's joy was complete.

They remained in New York several days. Gordon went to see his uncle and he showed Gordon and Elmer all around.

Mildred wrote them about the death of Forrest Cain and she wrote something else to Gordon that made him go into an ecstacy of delight. She had told her parents of their engagement and neither disapproved. Mildred knew her mother had something to do with bringing her father around. She told him he could tell Elmer about it and that young man was happier than Gordon, if it were possible.

Gordon soon came to Atlanta; their happiness was complete.

In his sweet musical voice Gordon sang "Lips o' Poppy" to Mildred with her arms wreathed around his neck.

"Gordon, sweetheart," she murmured.

"Honeybunch," he whispered.

By F. L. S.

THERE'S a charming little maiden
With eyes so wondrous brown—
Her cheeks with roses ladened,
The talk of all the town.
This winsome little lassie,
Who to-day is seventeen,
The idol of her daddy
And a mother's love supreme.
Years of sunshine have you brought us,
And our hearts with joy o'erflows
To the great and all-wise giver
For the gift He thus bestows.
Happy years they have been to us;
Years of joy and sweet content,
And in the years before us—
Where'er they may be spent—
We'll think of these blest hours,
Which time can ne'er efface;
So if there comes a little cupid,
And his fiercest dart be hurled,
To take from us our treasure,
The greatest in the world;
When comes this bold usurper,
Whoever he may be,
May this love through him continue
Through all eternity.

I AM HUNGRY

TO-DAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY

AS we came out of the fashionable restaurant a pale, thin man came toward us. He tottered with faintness as he held out his hand and said:

"I am hungry."

Verdier put his hand into his pocket, took out a large silver coin and gave it to the beggar.

"You are very liberal," I remarked.

"Do you know what it means to be hungry?" he asked.

"No. Do you, perhaps?"

"Yes, I do, and I will tell you about it. You know I was poor when I first came to Paris, and had a hard struggle to get on. How hard neither you nor anybody else ever knew. I woke up one morning in August depressed and hungry, more hungry than I can describe. I had tasted no food since the morning before. I did not have a single cent, and everything that I could pawn was gone. I did not know a single person who might assist me. I rummaged through all my pockets and found nothing but a cigarette.

"I lit it and went out. I walked through the streets, full of despair, seeing no way out of the misery. As the day passed my hunger grew and I grew more and more faint and full of bitterness. Should I really decide to beg? Yes. Why not? My ideals of morals were darkened by the shadow which dimmed my eyes.

"I caught sight of an elderly gentleman, tottered toward him, raised my hat and in a low voice confided my secret to him:

"'I am hungry.'

"He looked at me for two seconds. Then he shrugged his shoulders and said:

His Answer.

"'Then you had better drink no more to-day.'

"I felt as if I had been struck by lightning.

"Close by was a restaurant, from which came an appetizing smell of cooking. How it happened I do not know, but a moment later I was sitting at a table inside. Shortly afterward an omelette stood before me, but only two minutes, then it was gone. Then the waiter served a steak. I realized what was happening and I was seized with fear. I had no money to pay, and I thought the waiters and guests were staring at me with suspecting eyes.

"Just then somebody slapped my shoulder.

"'How are you?'

"I turned around and saw a pretty young woman, stylishly, perhaps too stylishly, dressed.

"'What can I do for you, mademoiselle?' I asked.

"'You don't seem to remember me.'

"I searched my memory and suddenly I knew. She was a young woman I had met once before at Maxime's in gay company.

"'Lili,' I exclaimed.

"She sat down next to me.

His Dilemma.

"'How kind of you to invite me for dinner,' she said.

"The waiter suddenly became very polite. He stood patiently, smiling, waiting for my orders. All confused I ordered what Lili asked for. Then the fear returned.

"'You don't look happy to-night,' Lili remarked.

"I was too nervous to answer.

"'Are you sick?'

"'Yes, it feels very close in here.'

"What was I to do? Should I pretend to have lost my pocketbook? The trick was too old—nobody would believe me. Should I tell Lili that I had not got a single cent to pay with?

"Just then Lili got up and took a powder box from her bag.

"'I will be back in a moment,' she said. 'Keep an eye on my bag, please.'

"She went out.

"Looking around to make sure nobody was observing me, I opened her bag with trembling fingers and took a five dollar bill.

"Yes, my friend, I really took it. Then I paid and we left. Lili took my arm.

"'Will you please see me home?' she asked.

"When I entered her apartment everything turned black around me, but mastering all my energy I overcame my faintness and said:

"'Lili, I was dying with hunger. I could not have paid and they would have had me arrested——'

"She stared at me coldly. I went on:

"'Then I took $5 from your bag.'

"'What do you say?'

"I saw the terrible change in her—the cruel expression in her eyes. Trembling with fury she searched her bag.

"'My money! My money!' she screamed. 'I will send for the police.'

"I tried in vain to quiet her. She screamed louder still. I wanted to run away, but she opened the window and screamed: 'Police!'

"I jumped at her, threw her down on the floor and squeezed her throat together with my hands. She turned purple in the face; her eyes bulged. Thirty seconds more and neither she nor I would have been alive to-day.

"And that might all have been avoided if the elderly gentleman had given me a few pennies.

"Now perhaps you will understand my generosity toward a man who says that he is hungry."

The Difference.

Fred—There seems to be a lot more fuss made of Miss A——'s singing than Miss K——'s, and I am sure Miss K—— has by far the richer voice.

Jack—Ah, yes; but Miss A—— has by far the richer father.

Household Suggestions

The best method of keeping small screws, brads and tacks from rusting is to place them in small, wide-mouthed bottles, tightly corked. The bottle should be perfectly dry before using. Sandpaper can be kept dry and in good working condition by rolling it and keeping it in a wide-mouthed jar and screwing down the lid.

When cream is only slightly sour it may be made delicious to serve with puddings, etc., in the following way. Put it into a basin with the juice of a lemon and tablespoonful of sugar, and whip until quite stiff. This treatment makes it excellent, and increases the quantity at the same time.

Despise Not the Fat Man.

WHEN thou farest forth for thy Summer vacation direct thy footsteps wisely, for what shall it profit thee to fish ever so cunningly in the waters in which no fish abide? Verily, I say unto thee, that, though there be mountains that touch the skies, or sapphire seas, or swelling hills, or dimpling vales, yet is all scenery an abomination and a desolation, and a Summer resort becomes as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, if so be no eligible man abides thereat.

2—Consider thy apparel, for fine feathers make fine birds, and no maiden with the glad rags is as homely as the Lord made her. Yet be not extravagant in thy dress, lest some youth shall flee from thee, saying: "Wherewithal shall I get the scads to doll such a one up in the similitude of a fashion plate to which she is accustomed?"

3—Before thou disporteth thyself in the ocean, consider what manner of figure and of hair nature hath bestowed upon thee, and whether thou lookest when thou art wet like a mermaid or a drowned cat, for what shall it profit a maiden to dry her locks on the sands if so be she hath only three hairs on her head and looketh like Winter underwear after it hath shrunk in the wash?

Look Before You Bathe.

4—Propitiate with fair words the old cats that knit pink sweaters on the hotel gallery lest they arise and rend thy reputation and tear it limb from limb, for lo, the wagging of their tongues is even as a perpetual motion machine, and the things that they do to a character are a-plenty.

5—Also slight not the homely girl who art a wall flower, for many such are possessed of handsome brothers, and eke of male relatives with 1913 cars, who shall arrive in due season, and to whom she shall present thee, and so shalt thou reap thy reward.

Fish Cunningly.

6—When the musicians smite upon the band of an evening in the ballroom, dance not at all unless some man asketh thee, for, behold, there are many sad sights in the world, but none so woesome as the spectacle of two maidens turkey trotting together and attempting to wear on their countenance the look of one who rejoiceth.

7—When a youth treateth thee to ice cream soda boast not to him of some other man who fed thee on champagne and terrapin, for by so doing thou makest him feel like a cheap skate, and he will pass thee up when he geteth up the hay ride or the trolley excursion.

8—As thou art strong, be merciful. Consider that at a Summer hotel there are seven times seven women to one man, and that the poor youth that thou nailest hath already flagged seventeen mountains, and gathered four bushels of wild flowers and visited Lovers' Leap, and read poetry and rowed boats, and played golf, and danced millions of miles with other maidens before thou camest, and he is a-weary and fain would rest.

9—Despise not the fat man whose architecture is built after the manner of a bay window. Say not unto him, "Go up, thou bald head," for verily he may be a widower, with houses and lands, and automobiles, and jewels wherewith to endow a wife.

10—Avoid the snapshot fiend who taketh amateur pictures as thou wouldst pestilence or sudden death, for such a one shall take thee unaware with thy head on a manly breast, or a strange arm about thee, and, although it causeth the merry ha-ha at the time, peradventure thy fiance, to whom thou showeth it at home, lacketh in a sense of humor.

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-Face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from Jacobs' Pharmacy and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine, as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

THOMPSON AND CLARK WILL PITCH TO-DAY

REVIVED somewhat by the cheering influence of yesterday's victory over the Volunteers, the Crackers will tackle the enemy in a dauble-header this afternoon, the first game to start at 2:15 o'clock.

Manager Smith announced this morning that Thompson and Clarke would pitch the twin bill, with Chapman and Dunn doing the catching. Manager Schwartz was not certain of his battery.

SWARTZ'S BROTHER HURT; MAY CALL HARRY AWAY

Harry Swartz, the popular motor rider who has been thrilling local fans at Jack Prince's saucer, may have to leave for Denver within the next 24 hours. His brother, Eddie Swartz, was badly injured in a motorcycle race there last Saturday afternoon, and is not expected to live.

Harry is ready to leave the minute he receives a wire. All the local riders and fans are pulling hard for Eddie to pull through. He is the most popular rider in the Middle West, and had expected to come here to ride in the fall.

$2,000 RAISED BY FANS IN AMERICUS FOR TEAM

AMERICUS, Aug. 1.—Two thousand dollars subscribed by enthusiastic Americus fans in mass meeting insures the maintenance of the Americus baseball team throughout the season. When the situation was thoroughly explained baseball enthusiasts went into their pockets and the amount required was forthcoming, several citizens subscribing $100 each.

The amount raised in mass meeting cancels all outstanding indebtedness and insures the expense account throughout August. Americus fans never fail to respond to such calls.

PELS GET TWO PLAYERS IN THREE-CORNERED DEAL

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Aug. 1.—Pitcher Stevenson and Outfielder McKillen, purchased from the South Michigan League, were released to the Pelicans to-day. The players come as part of a three-cornered trade for Pitcher Brenton, who is slated to join Toledo via the Naps after working in Friday's game against Memphis. Stevenson and McKillen join the Pels at Memphis.

Crackers Loosed a Flood of Runs

Holland and Holtz Looked Good

By O. B. Keeler.

ALL the tallies that had backed up in the Crackers' systems while they were losing one-run margins on the late excursion burst forth in wild and exatic profusion in the first home engagement, the Volunteers the sufferers, 10 to 2.

Specifically, the explosion took place in a single inning. Books could be written about that inning. Poets might make odes and epics on it. Oscar Strauss might set it to music. Sousa's band might play it—but it is doubtful if even the "March King's" interpretation would equal that of the Crackers.

Returning to the date of the outburst, we find it to be located in the eighth round, domestic portion. Also, it was shortly before six bells, while the shades of night were falling at about the same rate of speed set forth in the well-known biographical sketch entitled, "Excelsior," or "A New Breakfast Food."

The contest had worked itself around to a 2-to-2 tie, which sounds like the midnight choo-choo if you say it fast. Dent and Beck, long pitchers with short monickers, were having what is commonly known as a slab duel, with both sides wasting a good many hits on comparatively few runs.

A detailed recital of the eighth inning would be piling it on. Gently summarizing results, the following appears:

Every Cracker in the game scored a run except Harry Holland, who was sent up to sacrifice before Bill Smith had any idea to what extremity Beck and the Vols were planning to blow.

Six hits were compiled by the Crackers, Welchonce opening the trouble with a Texas League single and closing the scoring with a ringing double down the right field foul line, unloading the towpath of three mates.

Beck contributed two bases on balls, a hit batsman and a two-base throw to the general merriment in the first one-third of the inning. After Welchonce got his second hit, Manager Schwartz got the derrick in working order and removed Mr. Beck from the field of battle.

But Mr. Schwartz did not calculate spoiling another regular pitcher, or even Fleharty, who had been in the bullpen most of the afternoon. He sent in a Mr. Young, who habitually plays right field. And Mr. Young smiled at the wild applause—and retired the side. Smith fouling to Gibson and Bisland flying to Daley.

BARRING a desperate attempt on the part of J. Pluvius to smear the doings, the other part of the game was reasonably conventional, interest centering in the performance of Harry Holland, the former Tech star, who played third base, and Holtz, the new outfielder. The Volunteers had had their first turn at bat, and one Cracker was salted in the same round, when the bottom fell out of a black cloud, which had been sneaking up behind the stands. For five minutes it rained in the proverbial sheets. Then the downpour slackened, the sun came out, and after twenty minutes' delay, Umps Stockdale came out, walking on his heels, and the combat was renewed.

HARRY HOLLAND looked like a regular ball player. He stood well at the plate, crowding it close, and while he did not get a hit, he looked over the pitching coolly and did not hit at any bad ones. He did not miss a single swing, either, and he laid his sacrifice down in classy style. In the field, he handled his single chance accurately and with speed, making a perfect throw to first from a rather difficult position.

One bit of fielding won't go to Holland's credit in the records, but he showed well in it, just the same. In the first inning, with two gone, Hofman got on by Bisland's wild peg. "Circus Solly" kept right on legging it, and Agler whipped the ball to third, Holland putting it on the sliding big leaguer in clever style. But Kerin ruled that Artie should have stopped at second under ground rules, the ball having got mixed up with the boxes. So the effort went for nothing.

HOLTZ made a becoming bow to the noble twelve hundred at the game. He got two hits and a base on balls out of four appearances. One of the wallops scored a run, and both were made with somebody on. In the field, the big fellow made a couple of nice running catches, the last one, a Texas Leaguer from Gibson's bat, that looked good for a hit. He did not show any amazing speed on the towpath, but used judgment in one particular instance, when he took advantage of a wild pitch that Gibson stopped to sneak down to second. He did not look at all like the typical bush leaguer.

ONE of the most complicated double plays ever presented on any stage came off in the sixth inning, and it deserves a chapter all to itself.

A base on balls and a two-base throw by Beck had put Bisland on third, with one down. Holland hit sharply to Jack Spratt at third, and Bisland was trapped. While he was being chased to death, Holland worked around past second, and after Spratt had put the ball on the dodging Bisland, a snap throw nipped Harry. The two-ply killing read this way:

Spratt to Gibson to Spratt to Beck to Spratt to Perry.

VANDERBERRY MAKES NEW 4-MILE MOTOR RECORD

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—The thousands who saw the final heat in the four-mile Pennsylvania Sweepstakes at the East End Motordrome last night witnessed the greatest speed contest ever run in Pittsburg. It was not alone because a new world's record for four miles was made that the race was unusual, but the spectacular manner in which the racers performed. Twenty times around the big wooden saucer Russell Smiley, Billy Vanderberry and Jack Harding raced at the average speed of 81 miles an hour, with their elbows touching frequently.

"Speedy Van" was a few inches ahead at the finish. The riders were so close the crowd did not know that Harding was second until the result was announced. The time for the four miles, 2 minutes 58 seconds, is two seconds under the former world's record.

Vedder Sitton Hurls No-Hit, No-Run Game

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 1.—P. Vedder Sitton, former Atlanta pitcher, now with the Troy club, of the New York State League, shut Wilkesbarre out without a run or hit yesterday afternoon. Not one of the visiting players reached second base, and only three reached first, each on a base on balls.

Sitton received brilliant support.

Sitton is one of those ball players whom the finger of fate seems to touch at widely separated intervals, and with something like a caress.

He is remembered around the Southern League as the chap who helped to win two pennants in a single year, and came within a game of making it three.

In 1908, Sitton's work on the slab was responsible for the pennant in the Sally League. Then he went to Nashville, and pitched the final game of the season, on which the pennant depended, beating Breitenstein of New Orleans, 1 to 0. Then the youngster went to Cleveland, making its best attempt to win an American League pennant. But Cleveland lost out in the last pair of games.

Since then Sitton has been drifting about the country, pitching grand ball in flashes and streaks.

MEETING TO-NIGHT TO FORM ANGLERS' CLUB

The first meeting of the prospective Atlanta Anglers' Club is to be held at 8 o'clock to-night at the Yancey Hardware Company, 134 Peachtree street. Dr. Allan Fogle and C. P. Watson have made the arrangements for the meeting and request all who are interested in the promotion of angling in this vicinity to attend.

Mr. Fogle says that either Piedmont or Lakewood would would make an ideal place for fly-casting tournaments, which are among the prettiest sporting events to be seen anywher to-day. The ultimate object of the club would be affilliation with the national organization. Mr. Watson, of the Yancey Hardware Company, is answering all inquiries concerning the prospective club.

CARDINAL OWNER WILL TRADE ALL HIS PLAYERS

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—President Schuyler P. Britton, of the Cardinals, is on the warpath and in an endeavor to strengthen that club to-day declared he would trade every member of the club except Manager Miller Huggins. It means the Ed Konetchy, Harry Sallee, Bob Harmon, Charley O'Leary and recruits, will be swapped if there is a chance to strengthen the club.

Whether any trade will be made is not known, but President Britton announced that negotiations have been opened with the Giants, Reds and other clubs. The tumble in to eighth place for the first time in years is too much for President Britton and Manager Huggins.

MAY INCREASE FEDERAL LEAGUE TO SIXTEEN CLUBS

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—Directors of the Federal League go into an important session here to-day. Two propositions, one to make the Federal Baseball League an eight-club affair, and another to make it a twelve or sixteen-club league, a sort of tandem league, with an Eastern and Western division, will be discussed.

Baseball men in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Detroit, Milwaukee and Cincinnati, who have petitioned for admission, are anxious to get action, it is said. Many other cities seek admission, and magnates have announced they will deposit the $10,000 necessary to insure their finishing the season.

DETROIT BUYS PITCHERS NORTH AND REYNOLDS

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 1.—President Navin, of Detroit, announces the purchase of Pitcher North, of Jackson, of the Southern Michigan League, and Pitcher Reynolds, of Topeka.

North is expected to report next month, but Reynolds may complete the playing season with Topeka.

FOILED.

A bandit placed a gatling gun against a stranger's bone.
The stranger merely smiled at him
and said: "Pooh, Pooh, for thou!
Pooh, Pooh for thou, and likewise
Fudge and also Pish and Tush!
I do not fear the gatling gun that
stares me in the mush,
For I have been in baseball parks
where peanut merchants ply,
And I have sat there unafraid and
looked them in the eye,
And though they poked me in the slats and gave me bitter pain,
And though they walked upon my corns, they tortured me in vain.
What chance have you, an amateur
to make me tremble now?
Again I say Pooh, Pooh, and Tush
and likewise Fudge for thou!"
The bandit slowly went his way, and sore at heart was he.
"What chance is there," he sadly said
"for bush league guys like me?"

Quoth the London Daily Express: "The monotony of defeat becomes depressing." This sounds as if it were written by a baseball scribe in St. Louis.

Frank Navin is one of the few magnates who have the interests of the public at heart. Realizing that the good citizens of Detroit wanted some regular baseball, he staged a game between Buffalo and Providence.

It is said that Bill Carrigan will be given a free hand in Boston. In other words, he may do as he pleases, as long as he pleases J. McAleer.

A baseball manager these days is almost as sure of his job as a President of Mexico.

Ever and anon a scout unearths what he calls a slugging outfielder, but he fails to inform us whether said outfielder slugs the ball, the umpire or his fellow athletes.

OUR BLUE LAWS.

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter,
But wear a skirt and an overcoat
When you go in the water.

It is hoped that none of the Giant pitchers will attempt to bean the Great Zim. If Mr. Zim were hit on the head with sufficient force, it would sprain his ankle.

"Boxers Seek Work," quoth a headline, but it fails to tell us whom they seek to work.

As a wise old gent once remarked, a man is known by the guys he hangs out with. After consorting with Tom Jones for a few years, Ad Wolgast bets $25,000 a throw as if he really meant it.

Just to show that he is a versatile manager, Joe Tinker occasionally loses two games a day instead of one.

Even if Horace Fogel's new league does not pan out, he can make a good living by hiring out as a model in a phonograph factory.

Sitting in his Morris chair in New York, Jim Corbett hands us a vivid description of the Williams-Ledoux conflict in Los Angeles, thereby demonstrating that he is the greatest long distance eyewitness in captivity.

HUMAN NATURE.

Were I a baseball magnate
And owned a team or two,
I'd hunt the golden kale, I fear,
And walk upon the public's ear
The same as magnates do.

No, Rudolph; there is no truth in the report that Roger Bresnahan and John Evers will double up in a vaudeville stunt next winter.

White and Whitney to Mix Here

Castro Starts "Regular" Club

By Left Hook.

CIPRIANO CASTRO, an exiled personage, was a rank bush leaguer compared to his nephew, Count Lou Castro, when it came to promoting. Cipriano tried to promote matters down in Venezuela, but he couldn't get away with it. Not so with Count Lou.

Count Lou got it into his bonnet that boxing could be made to pay in this hustling burg. The Count believes in high-class affairs, high-class clubhouse, high-class mixers and a high-class location.

Result:

Charley White will meet Frank Whitney in a ten-round bout here on the evening of August 13.

On the same program will be two other high-class battles. In one, Mike Saul will endeavor to show Eddie Hanlon where he gets off. In the other, Kid Young will try to avenge a recent beating by turning the tables on Charley Lee.

The bouts will be staged at the Ponce DeLeon skating rink.

The ring will be adorned with plush ropes and highly-polished brass posts.

The Count will referee himself, and will be decorated in a Tuxedo.

ALL of which proves our assertion that the Count is going to show his uncle up. Cipriano never got away with anything as big as this.

And on Labor Day the Count plans to send the winner of the White-Whitney scrap right back at Jack Britton. Within two or three months he believes he will have a championship battle here.

AS for the main bout, let us whisper that it is by far the classiest ever offered Atlanta fans. White is a near champion. He made a tremendous hit here when he stopped Jake Abel in less than two rounds.

Whitney is the most popular boxer who ever displayed wares here. He is tough and rugged, and will give the Chicagoan a merry time of it for ten rounds.

Both boys will be here within a few days. They want to become acclimated, and realize that they must have at least ten days within the portals of the city to get right.

THE skating rink is a mammoth place. Castro, therefore, will put on all of his shows at popular prices.

And it is an ideal spot for bouts, especially during the hot months. The building is situated on a knoll, and a breeze always blows through it. It is a semi-open affair of a place. In the winter the Count will board up the sides and put in a steam-heating outfit.

Milt Saul, of the street railway company, has promised the Count perfect car service to and from the club. As soon as the last bout is over, a string of cars will be lined up in front of the club ready to take the fans home.

THREE cheers for Count Castro. He is going to put Atlanta on the boxing map.

MATTY OUT TO BAG 30 GAMES THIS SEASON

By Sam Crane.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 1.—Christy Mathewson, who was quite an old fellow in baseball as players go several years before Charlie Ebbets declared that the game was only in its infancy, finds it necessary to step out and give a real exhibition of the art of pitching every now and then to convince some folks that he has not gone into decay.

Matty is not usually prone to amassing records. He discovered some time back in the dark ages of the game that a well-preserved arm, protected from the strain of getting records, paid dividends longer than one that flashed all its best stuff in a short time and then went out like a flame on a wet stick. But if these records persist in forcing themselves upon him, he will not purposely step aside to avoid them.

The Old Master is out to bag 30 victories this season. This is not a record by any means, for Matty himself has done better several times in the years gone by, but for a man pitching in his thirteenth year in the big league, it is strong evidence that he is still there or thereabouts.

Ten-Mile Race Carded To-night

Graves Has Speedy New 'Boat'

TEN corking events are carded at the Motordrome to-night. The fans will get the longest list of races carded so far this season, and every one of them ought to be a thriller.

The feature event will be the Atlanta Sweepstakes. There will be trial heats of one mile and a ten-mile final. In the first trial heat, the starters will be Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis and Lockner. The second will bring together Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther and McNeil.

The first man in each heat and the third man in the fastest heat will battle in the final.

Richards and McNeil had been having things pretty well to themselves until Wednesday night. Then a new speed merchant popped up on the horizon in Morty Graves. Morty has always been considered a top-notch rider, but he has not had as fast a machine as those ridden by Richards and McNeil.

However, Morty is "there" now with a new Excelsior, and it is a bearcat. He hasn't got it tuned up just right yet, although he traveled two miles in 1:22 Wednesday night. This is at the rate of 87 miles per hour. To-night Morty says he will have the "boat" hitting better than 90 per.

The Motordrome Purse should prove almost as interesting as the feature event. This race will consist of three one-mile qualifying heats and a final of two miles. The first heat will find Graves, Swartz and Shields starters. The second heat will have Lockner, Richards and Luther battling, while the third will find Renel, McNeil, Lewis and Glenn fighting it out.

Harry Glenn is still after scalps. He has beaten Luther and Lockner in special match races. To-night he will try to show Billy Shields how to ride. This event is carded for two miles, and is for the best two heats in three.

Glenn is popular with the fans, and they will be cheering him from start to finish to-night.

Following is the complete program:

First Event—Motordrome Purse. Three 1-mile qualifying heats; final, 2 miles. First heat—Graves, Swartz, Shields.

Second Event—Second heat Motordrome Purse; Lockner, Richards, Luther.

Third Event—Third heat Moterdrome Purse; Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

Fourth Event—Special match race, first heat, between Glenn and Shields. Distance, 2 miles. Best two heats in three.

Fifth Event—Final of Motordrome Purse, 2 miles. First in each heat and second man in fastest heat to start.

Sixth Event—Special match race, second heat, between Glenn and Shields.

Seventh Event—Atlanta Sweepstakes, two 1-mile trial heats and 10-mile final. First heat, Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis, Lockner.

Eigath Event—Second heat Atlanta Sweepstakes; Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther, McNeil.

Ninth Event—Third heat of match race between Glenn and Shields, if necessary.

Tenth Event—Final heat of Atlanta Sweepstakes, 10 miles. First and second men in each trial heat and third man in fastest trial heat to start.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jim Flynn, who meets Gunboat Smith in a 10-round bout at the Garden A. C., New York, on August 8, is training harder for this battle than for any bout in which he has taken part for several years. "I realize that a win for me over Smith will place me in line for a title match," said Flynn, "and on that account I want to be in tip-top shape when I meet him."

* * *

Jack Britton will make his next fight against Frankie Burns at New York on August 11. This information comes to us in a letter from Danny Morgan, manager of the Chicago lightweight.

* * *

Jim Coffroth is trying his hardest to match Tommy Murphy with Willie Ritchie on Admission Day. The coast promoter has already secured Murphy's signature, but Ritchie refuses to sign until he hears from Tom McCarey regarding a match with Wolgast or Leach Cross.

Los Angeles fans are giving Jack White a good chance to defeat Johnny Dundee when the pair clash at Tom McCarey's arena on August 12. Dundee and White met about two months ago, and although Dundee was given the verdict after 20 rounds of hard milling, Jack claims he was not in the best of shape for the fray, as he took the match on five days' notice.

Jimmy Johnson, who sent Harry Stone, the New York lightweight, and Harry Thomas, the English welterweight, to Australia for fights several months ago, received word yesterday that Thomas knocked out Billy Elliott in nine rounds, and that Stone lost a decision to Billy Russell in twenty rounds. Both scraps took place on July 19.

When Kid Williams reaches New York en route from Los Angeles, it is expected that he will be called upon to meet Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight. Ever since Frankie held Coulon to a draw at Kenosha, Wis., about a month ago, he has been after a match with the Baltimore boy.

Terry Nelson, the Greek lightweight, is in good shape for his ten-round mill with Young Seymour at Marietta on Saturday night. Terry says he will go after bouts with some of the tough 133-pounders if he succeeds in defeating Seymour.

Charlie White is certainly one popular fighter around local sporting circles. Fans are still talking about the clean-cut fighting tactics he used against Abel. Charlie had a good chance to hit Abel when he had his back turned in the second round of their recent go, but waited until Jake turned completely around before dealing out the final wallop.

* * *

Ad Wolgast continues to chase Willie Ritchie in an effort to drag the champion into the ring with him again. Ritchie left yesterday morning for Frisco, but Wolgast left two hours later, hoping to corner Willie and force him to sign articles for a return scrap.

* * *

Kid Duke showed the white feather last night when he refused to go on with Kid Brooks in their scheduled finish bout. Brooks was willing to meet Duke and settle for once and all time who is the better of the two, but Duke claimed they could not get any place to stage the go. It looked like a case of cold feet on Duke's part.

CHESS TOURNEY RESULTS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Duras, of Prague; Black, of Brooklyn, and Kupchik, of the Progressive Chess Club, were the winners in the ninth round of the masters' chess tournament.

The leaders to date are: Capablanca, won 13, lost 0; Duras, won 6, lost 1; Black, won 7 1-2, lost 1 1-2; Kupchik, won 7 1-2, lost 2 1-2; Marder, won 5 1-2, lost 3 1-2; Tenenwurzel, won 6, lost 4.

BASEBALL

Diamond News and Gossip

Rube Marquard carries a horseshoe. Knocked out of the box by the Cubs, he still keeps intact his record of nine straight games, because Fromme went in with the score a tie and then was beaten out in the ninth.

* * *

Both the Giants and the Athletics lost all around yesterday in the pennant race, but leads of eight and one-half and eight games, respectively, look very good with only two months to play.

Although Joe Jackson could not help his team to send runs across the plate, the Naps showed they did not need his batting powers when they walloped the Red Sox in both games of a double-header.

* * *

Miller's drive for three bases with two men on turned the tide in favor of the Pirates in the game with the Dodgers. The Dodgers still could do nothing with Robinson, who has beaten them regularly for two years.

* * *

The Braves jumped on Geyer early in the game. It was well they did, because Sallee, who relieved his team-mate, held Boston safe. St. Louis plugged away, but fell one run short.

* * *

"Chink" Yingling is not with the Dodgers. The pitcher is suffering from poison ivy, with which he came in contact when he visited his home in Lebanon while the team was playing the Reds.

* * *

Frank Chance is not going to quit the Yankees. The report that the Peerless Leader would give up baseball, emanating in Los Angeles, was denied. Chance says he is far from being discouraged.

* * *

No, the Yankees are not claiming any pennants, but two straight victories over the White Sox has inspired Chance's men to try and get out of the rathskeller.

* * *

The Athletics ran bases like a bush league team while the Browns made six of their eight hits count. The result was that the leaders were trailing at the wind-up.

Joe Boehling was a broken-hearted youngster to-day. One thousand fans came from his home town in Richmond to watch the star perform. But the Tigers squelched any enthusiasm by beating the Senators.

* * *

"Three-Fingered" Brown could not stop the heavy hitting Phillies and was driven from the box. Bixey eased up after the Reds were trailing hopelessly behind.

Ty Cobb put a few over on "Shoeless Joe" Jackson in the race for the batting honors. The Georgia Peach had a percentage of .500 while the Cleveland star went to bat six times and got nary a hit.

* * *

The Pirates have bought Joe Leonard, third baseman of the Des Moines team, of the Western League, and have also claimed Pitcher Kent, whom the Dodgers sent to Toronto, under the waiver rule.

* * *

The Reds have sold Pitcher Harter to the Kansas City team, of the American Association.

JAP CUE CHAMP HERE.

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 1.—Ikujar Tamura, champion billiard player of Japan, is here from Yokohama en route to Chicago and New York to play with Hoppe and others. Yamada, the young Japanese player who made a tour of the United States last winter, is said to have been beaten by Tamura.

Bill Bailey Placed On Ineligible List

Bill Bailey, plucky Cracker outfielder, has been placed on the ineligible list by the management, for the next ten days, and at the expiration of that time it is probable he will be released, if waivers have been obtained. This move was made necessary by the signing of Harry Holland, the Tech third baseman.

Bailey had been unfortunate all season. He has suffered from pains in his side, and a pitched ball, striking him in the same place during the New Orleans series, tore loose a couple of ribs and practically disabled him.

Bailey expects to return to his home in a few days and will play no more ball this season.

LEOPARDS AND ARMY POLO TEAMS IN FINAL GAME

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 1.—The Cooperstown Leopards and the army polo teams will meet tomorrow in the final game for the army and navy cups by virtue of their victory in the semi-final games at the point Judith Country Clubs field here yesterday.

LARGEST RESIDENCE

The largest private residence in the world is the winter palace of the Czar of Russia at St. Petersburg.

The enormous proportions of the palace are made evident from the fact that in one room alone the entire Atlanta courthouse could be sheltered without inconvenience.

There are seven hundred rooms in the greatest of all Russian palaces. It is said that at one time 7,000 soldiers were quartered under its roof.

Neither the present occupant nor any of the former rulers of Russia have ever seen all the rooms of this edifice. Yet, despite its tremendous size, the palace contains treasures of architectural beauty.

OUR NORTH AND SOUTH SIDE DELIVERIES LEAVE THE STORE AT 9 O'CLOCK, INMAN PARK AND WEST END DELIVERIES AT 2 P. M. ORDERS PLACED BEFORE THESE HOURS WILL BE DELIVERED SAME DAY.

IT'S TIME to feed Pratt's Poultry Regulator. It hastens laying maturity, insures quick and complete moult. That means fall and winter eggs which bring the big prices. Your money back if it fails—25c, 50c and $1 package.

12 CENTS PER HEN per year is all it costs to keep your hens in profit-paying condition on Pratt's Poultry Regulator. Worth trying, don't you think?

WON'T HURT HENS or chicks or even taint eggs in nests, but it does get the lice. That's our money-back guarantee on every package of Conkey's Lice Powder, 25c, 50c and $1.00 boxes.

THERE'S PROFIT in poultry, when you keep them free from lice and disease. Conkey's Nox-i-cide is an all-around dip disinfectant, spray and lice liquid; easy to use and cheap, as it mixes with 50 to 100 parts of water, 35c pt., 60c qt., 90c half-gallon, $1.50 gallon.

SOREHEAD is about the worst disease that Southern chickens are heir to, and it is just about time for it to appear. Get a box of Conkey's or Pratt's Sorehead Remedy, it is guaranteed to cure this dreaded disease.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Business Houses Due Soon for Peachtree

Huntley Subdivision on McBurney Lot—$500,000 Concern Organizes and Is Seeking Location.

Stores will soon go up at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets on property bought some months ago by Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley. This is the old E. P. McBurney place, and it has been cut into 25-foot store lots for the erection of business houses. The present tenant, Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, it was reported Friday, had been given notice that the house would not be rented after the fall.

This neighborhood is due to have more improvements later on. The owners of the northeast corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets—John G. and B. Frank Bell and Wallace Boyd—have had separate bonds for title executed on the M. L. Bates place, and are expected either to subdivide or improve. Four business lots will be 25 by 100 on Peachtree and two will be 45 by 100 on Sixth street.

The Raoul homestead across the street will probably be torn down before a great while. Mrs. Mary W. Raoul, the owner and present occupant, has bought a large lot in Druid Hills and will build there.

The old Ryan place at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Seventh streets passed into the hands of Clyde L. King and others last December, and this is also said to be marked for subdivision. This lot is 100 by 200 feet.

There has been considerable trading on the place of Dr. J. Scott Todd on the east side of Peachtree between the Bates and Ryan homes, and the home of Dr. Joseph Jacobs was put up for sale, but later withdrawn from the market.

Announcement that John D. Little anticipates encroachments on his handsome place at the northwest corner of Peachtree and Eighth streets and will build on Pace's Ferry road emphasises the anxiety which pioneer residents feel over the advance of business. Among the residents in the neighborhood of the proposed Huntley improvement are Christopher L. Stoney, General R. K. Evans, Junius G. Oglesby, Jr., Frank Hawkins, Mrs. Louise Calhoun, Joseph Cooper and others.

Organizing $500,000 Concern.

A new $500,000 concern for the manufacture of farming implements is being organized in Atlanta, and real estate men are looking for a desirable site for it with railroad frontage.

This is the Barwick Implement company, which has applied to the Superior Court for a charter throug Smith & Hastings, attorneys. The incorporators are J. P. Armstrong, of Richmond County, and J. W. Barwick and Garnett McMillan, of Fulton.

Install Renting Department.

Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents, will soon install a renting department in connection with their sales and loan business and publish a weekly rent bulletin.

Realty Men on Move.

Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners and a leading realty man, returned to Atlanta Thursday and was in his office Friday after a vacation of two weeks. He will presid at the meeting of the commissioners at the courthouse Saturday morning, when some important business is to be transacted. The monthly meeting of the board is due Wednesday, August 6.

Frank Adair, of the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency, has returned from Europe. J. H. Ewings and E. S. Rankin, of the Smith & Ewing Agency, are leaving Friday for New York, where they will go to bring capital to Atlanta.

Harris G. White, Charles P. Glover and S. B. Turman are expected to return Monday from the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges at Winnipeg.

Ornamental Work Rushed.

Workmen are busy completing the ornamental terra cotta job on the Healey Building, and should be able to go ahead in a week with the exterior walls above the second floor. The Healy Building is shaping up nicely and in a month very little of the steel work will be seen.

Tuesday Sales Day.

Tuesday is legal sales day at the county courthouse, and there will be several interesting offerings, starting at 10 o'clock. Forrest & George Adair will sell No. 111 Whitehall Terrace, a two-story, 7-room frame dwelling on a 42 by 108 foot lot. This property is to be sold to wind up the estate of Mrs. Victoria A. Foster. It rents for $25 a month. There is a $1,000 mortgage at 7 per cent maturing September 1, 1918, which must be assumed by the purchaser, the balance to be in cash.

The Greene Realty Company will sell for the estate of the late Dominico Gussi the southwest corner of East Fair and Fraser streets, 67 by 90 feet, on terms of half cash and the balance in one and two years, at 7 per cent. There are three houses and a store on the lot.

Setting Back Dwellings.

Several small houses which have been close to the sidewalk on the Roswell Road at Buckhead are being rolled back some distance from the thoroughfare. This move has been made by the owners of the property to improve the looks of the neighborhood and also in anticipation of the proposed widening of the road.

Interesting Deeds Filed.

Among warranty deeds filed Thursday was a paper from A. W. Van Hoose, president of Shorter College, Rome, to C. J. Sheehan, on Arthur avenue, 94 feet west of Courtland street, 50 by 90 feet, for $18,000, and from Harry K. Dunning to J. L. Womack the northwest corner of Oakland avenue and Moseley street, fronting 126 feet on the latter street, for $29,850.

Roxborough Road Underpass.

E. Rivers, J. Lee Barnes, John Aldredge, Harris Jobson and others owning property on the Roxborough road are seeking to have the county build an underpass under the Southern Railway where the Roxborough road now crosses at grade. The Southern is double tracking at this point and the idea is to make the other improvement while the railroad is making his own.

There is an underpass of this character on Piedmont avenue near Dr. J. W. Mayson's place, and the Roxborough citizens want one at their crossing for safety and convenience.

Effect of Glover Election.

Real estate men heard discussing the election of Charles P. Glover to the vice-presidency of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges were of the opinion Friday that Mr. Glover's elevation was a providential thing in that it would probably result in bringing the realty men to Atlanta in 1916.

It has been pointed out that Mr. Glover will be in line for the presidency next year and that he will be complimented by the delegates in the above manner. Several loyal real estate men believe that Memphis will now withdraw in favor of Atlanta.

BULLISH REPORT BOOSTS COTTON

U. S. Figures Were Very Surprising and Drives Shorts to Cover Despite Texas Rains.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—On the strength of cables, the cotton market opened steady to-day, with first prices at a net advance of 2 to 5 points from last night's close, and was sustained in the early trading by scattered covering ahead of the Government report, due at noon.

From many sections of Texas showers were reported and it was colder, with indications pointing for more rains within the next forty-eight hours. However, the market remained very steady, with trading very light. There was no feature of importance.

During the forenoon shorts became heavy buyers; also some of the larger spot interests, resulting in August advancing 10 points to 11.65, while other positions increased their early gain 1 to 3 points.

The Government flashed its July condition report promptly at noon, giving percentage of the condition of the growing crop at 79.6 per cent, as compared with 81.8 a month ago, and 76.5 per cent for July in 1912. The report was construed as bullish, being considerably under expectations, which indicates that the people have been fooled on account of the cleanness of this crop, and it will require perfect seasons from now on to make the large yield required. New crop positions were under heavy demand from strong sources. October, December and January were the strongest options on the list. New crop advanced 10 to 12 points from the opening within fifteen minutes after the report was published. August held steady around 11.80. Offerings were light and scattered.

Following are 1 p. m. bids in New York: August, 11.78; October, 11.31; January, 11.29; December, 11.29; March, 11.29.

Following are 12 p. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.60; October, 11.36; January, 11.33; December, 11.33; March, 11.42.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—There will be showers during this afternoon in the lower Lake region and upper Ohio Valley, and during this afternoon and to-night in the North Atlantic States, probably followed by clearing weather in the last named States on Saturday.

Occasional showers will continue to-night and Saturday in the South Atlantic and East Gulf States, while fair weather will prevail in the upper Lake region and the Ohio Valley.

The temperatures will fall somewhat to-night in the lower Lake region and the Ohio Valley and the weather will not be quite so warm Saturday in the North Atlantic States.

General Forecast.

General forecast until 7 p. m. Saturday:

Georgia—Local showers this afternoon and Saturday.

Virginia, North Carolina and South Carolina—Showers to-night and Saturday.

Florida, Alabama, Tennessee and Mississippi—Local showers this afternoon and Saturday.

Kentucky—Generally fair to-night; Saturday fair and not so warm.

Louisiana—Scattered showers to-night or Sunday.

East Texas—Fair in west, scattered showers in east portion to-night or Saturday.

West Texas—Fair to-night and Saturday.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Atwood, Violett & Co.: Anything under 80 for the report would be an incentive to higher prices temporarily.

Miller & Co.: We think prices will continue to be controlled by climatic conditions in the southwest.

Josephthal, Lauchheam & Co.: We advise sales on all strong spots.

Cotton Condition Slightly Behind June

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The cotton crop on July 25, was 79.6 per cent of a normal, as compared with 81.8 on June 25, 1913; 76.5 on July 25, 1912; 89 on July 25, 1911, and 80, the average on July 25 of the past ten years, according to an estimate issued to-day by the crop reporting board of the Department of Agriculture.

COTTON GOSSIP

Browne, Drakeford & Co., Liverpool, cable: "Advance caused by reason of covering by shorts who are nervous and Continental buying."

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 1.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally cloudy over the entire belt; some rain in Northwest Texas and in Houston section; few light showers over the central States; nice rains over the Atlantics. Indications are for favorable to more general rains in western States, particularly southern half of Texas. Considerably cooler over entire western half; cloudy and showery in central and eastern States.

Western Union reports that Texas and Oklahoma weather is delayed on account of wire trouble.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Professional belief that to-day's Bureau will show a crop condition deterioration of about one full point under last month's figure held the general market steady, but unofficial weather map readings, indicating near future rains over the long dry area in the West, impelled some desire to sell fall deliveries. However, an official forecast of fair weather in Texas checked bearish impulses. The July option passed into history at New York. The New Orleans position was well liquidated long before the end. Two or three trailers remained in at New York and the death throes of the position there were rather exciting, the price ranging as low as 11.90 and as high as 12.25, with swings of 25 points between final trades."

ENORMOUS TRADE IN CORN; BIG GIN

Burgess Takes Profits, But Offerings Are Quickly Absorbed. Bad Crop News Factor.

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The wheat market at Chicago enjoyed upturns of ½@⅝ at the opening this morning. Reports from our own Northwest were of a favorable character, but these were lost sight of by the trade, who seemed to have oversold the market and were endeavoring to veer matters around into healthier channels. Futures at Liverpool were reported as higher, while spot wheat in that market was ½d@1d higher. Yesterday's easier American cables and favorable crop reports were offset in the Liverpool market by expected lighter world's shipments and a better call from the Continent. While harvesting on the Continent is well under way, offerings of new wheat were reported as light. Northwestern receipts were light, but exceeded those of the same day last year.

Further and pronounced strength was displayed by corn at the opening to-day on a good demand for this cereal. While light rains were reported in a few sections they were in all cases inadequate and in unimportant corn territory.

Oats followed corn, but poor threshing returns also proved a factor of strength in this market.

Provisions ruled higher in the pit with the strength in corn and the higher hog market.

Funds for Southern Banks Promotes Early Buying—Damage to Corn Causes Hesitancy.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—The response to the news that the Government is prepared to supply funds for crop moving purposes was not as vigorous at the opening of the stock market to-day as had been expected. Gains ranging from ¼ to ½ were made in nearly all the important issues, but part of these advances were lost later on moderate selling. Canadian Pacific was exceptionally weak, declining 4 points.

With the exception of Southern Pacific shares, which were unsettled, American Railways ruled firm on the London market.

The curb market was steady.

Demand for Wool Not Much Increased

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Recent offerings of light men's wear goods have not yet induced any marked increase in the demand for wool. Conditions in the local wool market are not yet normal, though the volume of business is slowly increasing as the new clips arrive and are opened. Montana soon will be well cleaned up. Buyers already are coming home. In Ohio buyers and sellers remain apart as to prices. Manufacturers appear to have realized that prevailing prices locally are reasonable and they show a disposition to cover sales of goods promptly by purchases of raw material. Sales of the week are estimated at 1,500,000 to 2,000,000 pounds.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	10,228,312	14,945,722
Foreign	205,265	2,271,550
Total	10,433,577	17,667,272

Total receipts of 10,433,577 pounds compare with 7,528,400 the preceding week, of which 7,497,879 were domestic wools.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period in 1912 were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	81,085,384	134,151,265
Foreign	42,181,145	79,841,790

STOCK GOSSIP

G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co., says: "I think we will have a good trading market for the next week with an upward tendency in prices. Would buy stocks on any fair recession, preferring active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Hear rumor that there may be a decision handed down against Redding within the next few days, but would buy this issue on any break, as a decision against the company would mean segregation and ultimately higher prices."

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Information channels favor profit-taking. Sentiment in well informed quarters continues conservatively hopeful, and under all the circumstances would look for buying opportunities in the stocks well protected by earnings, with the intention to secure moderate profits."

United States Steel unfilled tonnage for July is expected to show a decrease of about 400,000 tons.

Dispatches from Montreal say that Canadian Pacific directors have practically decided on 1 per cent additional dividend for common stock in August.

Pennsylvania system's June earnings net $1,252,000 less than June, 1912. Six months net aggregate $4,026,000 decrease from the same period during 1912.

The market is inclined to be quiet with a sagging tendency, due more to dullness than other causes. The reports of damage to the corn crop are making many people hesitate about making new commitments, but believe we will find these have been largely exaggerated. The short interest is being encouraged and has been increased this week. On any decided weakness we are of the opinion that stocks are a purchase.—G. D. Potter.

Reciprocity Is the Saving Grace of Free Trade

Absolute Free Trade Is Impossible to Commercial Prosperity Without Reciprocity Agreements in Reserve.

A Republican newspaper up East sounds an alarm on the tariff question which is not one whit less an alarm to the entire commercial and consuming republic.

The Republican paper concedes, as all concede, that the Wilson-Underwood tariff bill will be passed and become a law by the vote of a strict partisan Democratic majority. The Republican Senators are not making exhaustive speeches with the idea of converting anybody, but just to go on the record with a vague hope of future reactions toward the protective idea.

But the honest belief of the thinking economist is that this comparatively free trade tariff, if passed, will steadily move toward a full free trade policy in the near future.

It would be difficult to conceive a more definite commercial calamity.

Free trade would be just as distinct an evil in our national policy as a high protective tariff. One is as bad as the other. If protection builds a wall against our importations, free trade gives away our markets without getting anything in return.

Absolute free trade is impossible to commercial prosperity without reciprocity agreements in reserve.

Absolute free trade is as impossible and as impractical at this time as disarmament and universal peace. Everybody would like to see peace universal and the disbanding of armies. But no nation can afford to disband its armies and strip its navies so long as other nations increase armies and build new battleships, which leaves our country at their mercy.

Everybody likes the sound of free trade, but this country can not afford to batter down its tariff walls to universal trade so long as other nations hide behind tariff walls to prevent our products having free passage to their trade.

There is no universal peace until the greater nations all agree to disarm and arbitrate. There can be no free trade until the greater commercial nations all adopt free trade.

It is only by tariff bars held in discretion that we can secure the same trade advantages with other nations that they enjoy with us. It is only by RECIPROCITY that the tariff bars of other nations can be lowered to our trade. As Mr. Hearst declared:

> "If we maintain our protective fence we can say to foreign countries: We will lower our bars to your products if you will lower your bars to our products.
> "But if we have no tariff fence we can make no such beneficial bargain."

The common sense and the commercial judgment of this country will make a mighty fight before it surrenders the golden principle of reciprocity in any tariff we may make.

The Georgian has demonstrated how free trade on the seas has destroyed our merchant marine.

It is just as easy to see how free trade on the land will destroy the equality and prosperity of our markets.

The tariff is not a sentimental question. It is a common-sense commercial question.

THE TARIFF IS THE PRICE OF ADMISSION TO A MARKET! Congress has no right to make our people pay a higher price to foreign markets than foreign people pay to our markets.

The threat of free trade is alarming. But it is not likely. The common sense of the people will protect the country.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF FREE TRADE.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF PROTECTION.

It is impossible to construct a more just tariff without the reciprocity principle.

Too Late for Archbold

Mr. John D. Archbold must view with regret the plan for Congressmen to vote by pressing an electric button instead of shouting "aye" or "no" when the roll is called. For Mr. Archbold this ingenious invention came too late.

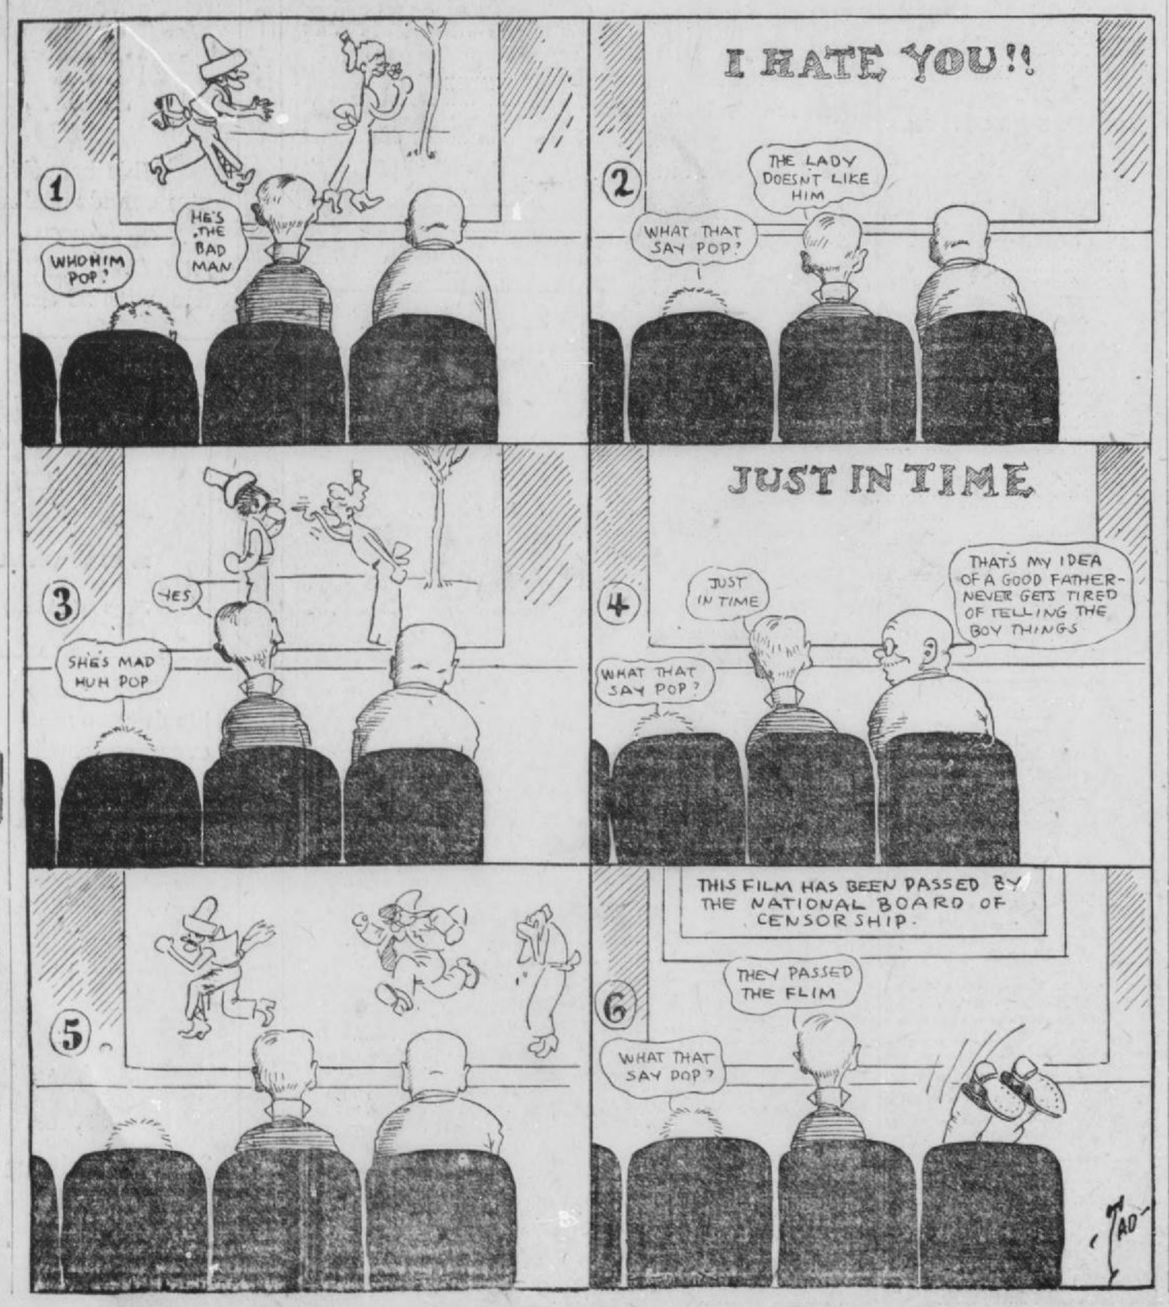

Before the Hearst newspapers ended his control of Senators and Representatives through the judicious use of certificates of deposit, the new scheme wuold have saved Mr. Archbold much time and trouble. It would have been easy to install a switchboard in his offices at No. 26 Broadway, with a telephone connecting with the halls of Congress. And when the roll was called the present master of Standard Oil could have pushed enough buttons to insure a safe majority for all the bills about which he had been writing letters to his private Congressmen and Senators.

But to-day the Archbold grip is broken, and it is doubtful if any member of either House would venture to permit his particular voting key to be operated from the offices of the Standard Oil Company.

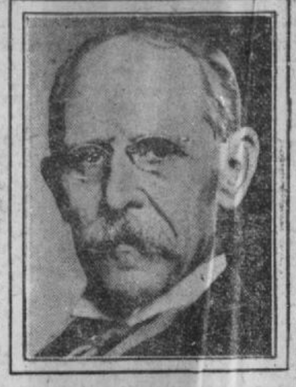

The Bubble Reputation

An Education at the Movies

Child Toil of Present Age Worst Ever

History Has Never Known a Slavery So Blighting as That of the Young Victims of Modern Commercialism—Money Spent in Pure Extravagance Would Soon Relieve These Children from the Grasp of Despair.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

IF one-half the energy that is wasted upon impracticable schemes of social reform and one-tenth of the money that is thrown away in pure extravagance were concentrated upon the solution of the problem of enfranchising the children of the so-called civilized nations from their bondage to Giant Despair, whose dungeons echo to the pitiless grinding of the money-making machines, there would go up, within a year's time, such a paean of rejoicing childhood as would warm the cockles of the world's great heart—for the world has a heart, if you can but reach it!

I have just been reading an article on "Children in Boudage," in the Good Housekeeping Magazine, which ought, in itself, to start a revolution. And it has recalled an experience of my own bearing upon this great question of child slavery.

Some years ago I went on a lecturing tour in the South. I stopped one night in one of the busiest of those industrial cities which have sprung up within a couple of decades in that wonderful part of our country.

Chief Promoter of Lecture Showed Writer Thro' His Mill.

The next morning the owner of a great mill, who was one of the chief promoters of the local lecture course, and who took great satisfaction in his connection with so commendable an enterprise, and gladly spent money to keep it going, invited me to visit his mill.

It was near noon when I approached its formidable walls, and was admitted within its guarded gates, and I stopped amazed at the first sight of human life that my eyes fell upon there.

It was a long row of little boys and girls, pale-faced and haggard, and clothed in the flimsiest and poorest garments, with tin pails on their arms—waiting in line to carry their dinners to their brothers and sisters who were haltered to the treadmills within. Some of them glanced quickly about, at the least sound, with a scared expression, as if they expected a lash! Evidently there was no time in that busy place for human beings to stop to eat, otherwise than as the overworked dray horse stops at the edge of the pavement to have a bag of meal hung over his neck, with his nose thrust into it!

My interest in the sights that the mill might have to offer was already chilled, but, nevertheless, I went in. I remembered how delighted the owner had been to see so many of "his people" listening to a lecture on astronomy the night before!

I shall not try to describe what I saw. No doubt it was a sight that ought to have made me thrill with admiration for the practical application of the great principle of "efficiency" which I saw before me, but in fact it only made me sad and depressed.

Pale Faces Obliterated Thought of Marvels of Machinery.

I could not admire the marvelous machinery, could pay no attention to the wonderful statistics that were poured into my ears about the incredible number of this, that or the other things that could be turned out in a single minute, for I really saw nothing but pale, drawn faces, bent over the machines, not daring to look up for a moment, and white, bony fingers doing perilous feats with the darting shuttles, and I heard only the inhuman hum of the mechanical monsters that were devouring those young lives!

I have always regretted that there was an occasion when I had not the courage to say what I thought. But we all meet many such occasions. One reason why the world does not improve more rapidly is because we are too often moral cowards. However, I never think pleasantly of the name of that town, although it had listened very flatteringly to what I did say—but that was about the stars and when you talk about them you can hurt no man's "business."

Such Conditions Prevail Throughout the Entire Country.

Of course such things are not confined to the South. In fact it is to be feared that New England taught the lesson. Read the article to which I have referred if you want a host of other facts about this nefarious business of killing off the young of the race, killing them soul and body, in order to swell the bloated carcass of Mammon! Then think seriously about what you have read, and, having thought, act; for modern civilization is doomed unless this unholy thing be destroyed!

The Toss of a Stone

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and eighty-one years ago a young man threw a stone at a tree. If the stone had missed its mark the most thrilling page of human history might never have been written.

Jean Jacques Rousseau was at the time loafing around the country estate of a rich French woman who had taken a fancy to him, and on the day in question he was strolling through the woods feeling greatly depressed. He made up his mind that he was worthless, and that the best thing he could do would be to commit suicide. However, he would gamble a little on it. So picking up a stone and fixing his eye on a tree some little distance away he resolved that should he hit the tree he would brace up and live. He hit it and lived—and the result of his living was the social, political and economic revolution of France and, indirectly, of the whole world.

In 1762—thirty years after he threw the stone at the tree in the park at Chambery—Rousseau gave the world the Contrat Sociale (Social Contract), and the Contrat Sociale made the French Revolution. For the political student Rousseau's book is one of the most curious in the world. "Historically it is null; logically it is full of gaps and flaws;" as a piece of reasoning it is a wretched failure; but it did the work. It carried the multitude. It made the revolution that made a new France, a new Europe and a new humanity.

It was Rousseau, as John Morley well put it, who first in our modern time sounded a new trumpet note for one more of the great battles of humanity. He makes the poor very proud. It was truly said: "It was in Rousseau that polite Europe first harkened to strange voices and faint reverberations from out of the vague and cavernous shadow in which the common people move. The race owes something to one who helped to state the problem, writing up in letters of flame at the brutal feasts of kings and the rich that civilization is as yet only a mockery, and did furthermore inspire a generation of men and women with the stern resolve that they would rather perish than live on in a world where such things can be."

If Hamlet is right when he declared that "there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow," then surely we are mightily tempted to feel that all the providences were directing the stone that Rousseau threw at the tree in Madame Warren's park at Chambery.

Dorsey Clears Way for Jim Conley's Story

HAWTHORNE SEES IDEAL PRISONS

Noted Author-Convict Pictures in Strange Allegory What Penal Reforms Would Do.

Four men sat around a table at one of the western windows of the great dining hall; one of them was a recent arrival at the prison. * * * The last course of dinner had been served and the 400 friends were enjoying their coffee; a few were smoking cigarettes, for this was Sunday and tobacco was allowed to all who cared for it, on that day. The band was playing Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata;" the music vibrated softly and remotely on the air. The hall had marked architectural beauty, and the colors and decorations were quiet but effective. The tables were arranged with aisles between, at the intersection of which stood immense orange trees and standard roses alternately.

That is the setting that Julian Hawthorne, in what is probably his last article for "Good Words," the magazine of the Atlanta Federal prison, provides for a remarkable dialogue between the four men on "Jails of the Future," forecasting prison reforms.

It appears in the August number, and is without doubt one of the best that the noted writer has produced since his incarceration in prison. One of the four men is a newcomer, both to the prison and to the country, and to him is explained the workings of a system that has revolutionized the treatment of crime and changed jails from "hells to a kind of antechamber to Paradise."

The dialogue is fanciful, but it undoubtedly depicts conditions that Hawthorne believes must exist when humanity has come to recognize crime as a disease and treat it as such. That portion of the article that describes the workings of the jails of the future is as follows:

"No More Lawyers."

"When we found we were jailing about a million men a year, and that the faster the lawyers made laws, the greater was the number of lawbreakers, some of the sane ones got together to talk it over.

"They fixed it so that there should be no more lawyers admitted to the bar for 50 years, and those already practicing should be charged 75 per cent of their incomes in taxes. No lawyer was eligible for election to any Legislature or office of public trust.

"A body of 500 experts was set to work revising the statutes, and they reduced the number of them 90 per cent. All artificial crimes—those created by laws—were cut out; only killing, stealing and lying were left in.

"If these were committed owing to congenial defects, or under abnormal conditions, the perpetrators were put under medical care; if otherwise, the culprits were tried and sentenced, but were given their choice of going to jail, or carrying round their necks, by a small steel chain, a pewter disk, on which was engraved the crime and the penalty. At first, nearly everybody took the disk, but after a few years the majority preferred the jail. The jails, meanwhile, had been undergoing strange transformations, both actual and theoretical.

"It began to be realized that the handling of crime was the most important function of the State and problem of society. If even justice were done, everybody would be in prison, and so-called officers of justice were often the worst of the lot.

Best Men as Wardens.

"Accordingly, the very best men of the community were appointed wardens and guards of jails. Upon election, these men were given a free hand and all the funds they wanted to carry out their plans. All the old jails were torn down and new ones built upon different principles, both of construction and administration.

"In a few years jails had become a kind of universities for training men who were found to be below the average in intelligence, character or habits in the obligations and responsibilities of the best citizenship. All kinds of trades and professions were taught theoretically and practically, and the men were put to work as soon as possible at such employment as they selected or as were chosen as most suitable for them.

"Along with all this was established

POET PAYS TRIBUTE TO 'ANGEL OF U.S. PRISON'

AN APPRECIATION

TO MRS. EMMA NEAL DOUGLAS

Beautiful, gracious Spirit of human pity and kindness,
You, from your tranquil retreat, remember our need and our blindness;
You speak not, but stretch your hands, full of plenty and healing,
Not cold and disdainful, but gentle and tender with sisterly feeling;
From your height serene you step down to comfort our gloom, and remind us
To hope and be strong, and to leave our evil and error behind us,
Our void is filled with your bounty, we bless your name, though unspoken,
We hail you the herald of God, whose mercy your mercies betoken.
—By REGISTER NO. 4435.

This inspiring verse is by Julian Hawthorne, dedicated to the "Angel of the Federal Prison" in "Good Words," the Federal Penitentiary publication.

Mystery in Blaze That Does $2,000 Damage to Store

Fire of mysterious origin early Friday morning damaged the building occupied by the G. A. and F. Grocery Company, at No. 23 Piedmont avenue. The loss is $2,000. Firemen conquered the blaze in a hard fight.

The fire was discovered soon after 3 o'clock by Call Officers McHugh, Arnold and McWilliams, who thought they heard a pistol shot in the neighborhood of the store. They found the second floor of the store in flames. They think now what they supposed was a shot was an explosion.

Policewomen Must Be Single and Large

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The City Civil Service Commission has decided that unmarried women of generous proportions are the most desirable policewomen.

Widows are not barred, but they must be young and vigorous. Examination for ten policewomen will be held soon.

X-Ray Skirt Breaks Up Baseball Game

SOUTH NORWALK, CONN.—A girl with a diaphanous skirt ended a baseball game here between the Nationals and the Westports. The manager of the Westport team called the game off in the ninth inning when his outfielders turned all their attention to the maid with the gauze-like skirt, who stood between the sun and the fielders.

Three flies were bated to the fence without the players making a move to intercept them.

Heat Kills 901 Babies In Chicago in Month

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The heat wave that gripped Chicago for three days was broken today by a strong breeze off Lake Michigan. Figures made public to-day by the Health Department showed that heat had contributed to the death of 901 babies in Chicago between June 14 and July 12.

During the same period last year 809 deaths occurred among children under two years.

Woman Is Named to Supervise 'Spooning'

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—Mayor R. S. Bennett has appointed Mrs. Nanette, a social worker of Baltimore, as a special boardwalk policewoman.

She will watch the "spooners" and "mashers" and act as a censor of the bathing costumes.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Occasional thundershowers Friday and probably Saturday.

Society Women in Pajamas Dance at Narragansett Ball

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 1.—Stories of a gay party at the Point Judith Country Club, at which several of the women guests are declared to have danced in pajamas until sunrise, are being circulated here and are almost as much of a sensation as the hunt for the jewel thieves.

Some of the best known young matrons and maids of New York and New England society were among the guests. Turkish costumes are said to have vied with the pajamas.

One observer says fifteen of the women wore ankle watches. Detectives guarding the country club, it is said, to learn something of the jewel thefts, were ordered off by Malcolm Stevenson, who was giving the party.

Widow Will Inspect Harriman Railways

NEW YORK, August 1.—Mrs. L. H. Harriman, acompanied by her daughter, Miss Carol Harriman, will leave early in August to visit her ranch in Idaho.

There was a report which C. C. Tegethoff, of the Harriman estate, refused to deny or confirm, that Mrs. Harriman will be accompanied by railroad officials and engineers for the purpose of making an official inspection of the Harriman railroad properties in the West.

Massacre and Pillage Continued by Turks

Special Cable to The Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 1.—The Turks are continuing their campaign of massacre and pillage in the country near Dedeagatch. All the men in the villages of Tartarlare, Seliiu, Saryta and Lachman, were killed when the Turkish troops entered those places.

The torch was applied to all public buildings and looting began. All who opposed the Turks were tortured before being killed.

Fire Alarm System Nearing Completion

Work on the new fire and police alarm signal system is being rushed by the Okenite Company, despite the fact that an injunction restraining the city from paying for the work has been sought on the ground that the contract is a moral obligation, and therefore not legal.

Fire Chief Cummings speaks favorably of the new system, believing it will mean the saving of many thousands of dollars. The total cost of the new system will be $106,000.

DECATUR, ILL., Aug. 1.—The will of Mrs. Anna B. Milliken, widow of the founder of Milliken University, just made public here, gives the family estate of nearly $1,000,000 to charitable and educational institutions.

The will provides that the Milliken mansion here shall become a museum of art.

50 MILLIONS FOR BANKS IN DIXIE

Government to Minimize Money Stringency During Crop Moving.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—To facilitate the movement of crops, the Administration, through Secretary McAdoo, announces that $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of Government funds will be deposited in the national banks of the South and West at once. Federal, State and municipal bonds and prime commercial paper will be accepted as security for the money, upon which the banks will pay 2 per cent interest.

Unusual Amount Needed.

The motive of the Administration in establishing this new policy is to anticipate the money stringency in the late summer and fall, which accompanies the marketing and movement of crops, especially when the crops are unusually large, as the harvest now beginning forecasts. He intends to prevent or minimize the usual tightness of money.

The Secretary announces that Government bonds will be accepted at par as security for the new deposits, and that the additional money would be placed only with banks which have taken out at least 40 per cent of their authorized circulation.

United States 2 per cent bonds, serving as security for most of the national bank circulation, have been depressed recently to new low market records, dropping to 95 3-4 during the past few days. The Secretary's willingness to accept these bonds at par as security for the $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of promised deposits and the inducement to the national banks to increase their circulation up to the 40 per cent limit are expected to help in restoring the parity of the depressed 2s by creating a new market for them.

To Accept Commercial Paper.

For the first time in history the Government will accept prime commercial paper as security for deposits. This privilege will be granted, announced the Secretary, in order to make these special deposits available to the banks on securities readily within their reach.

"The commercial paper submitted," added Mr. McAdoo, "shall first be passed upon and approved by the clearing house committees of the cities in which the banks offering such paper may be located. All commercial paper and bonds must finally be passed upon and accepted by the Secretary."

Try a 3-Year Egg; Ten Tons on Sale

TRENTON, N. J., August 1.—The State Board of Health has released ten tons of cold storage eggs, worth $4,000, which had been held by the Government for the last three and a half years in a warehouse in Jersey City.

Doctors and reporters had eaten cake, custards and ice cream made from the eggs, and not one of those daring persons had died, so the board decided the eggs were fit for other stomachs.

DORSEY UNAFRAID AS HE FACES CHAMPIONS OF THE ATLANTA BAR

This shows the Solicitor warily noting the moves of an opponent.

Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor and prosecutor of Leo M. Frank.

Up Against a Hard Proposition Youthful Solicitor Is Fighting Valiantly to Win Case.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Georgia's law's most supreme penalty faces Leo Frank.

A reputation that they can not be beaten must be sustained by Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold.

Atlanta's detective department's future is swaying on the issue of the Frank trial.

But there is a man with probably as much at stake as any of the hundreds who crowd Judge Roan's courtroom, with the exception of Frank, and he is accepting the ordeal, though he realizes it, as calmly as a person who has nothing more serious to decide than whether he will order his steak rare or well done at breakfast time.

Hugh Dorsey is hereby introduced. He is known pretty well in Atlanta without introduction, but as chairmen on political meetings insists on telling the audience that the President of the United States is about to speak or that the Secretary of State is endeavoring to earn an additional amount to his yearly $12,000, Mr. Dorsey can be placed before the public without fear of violating precedent.

Consider Hugh Dorsey.

Consider Dorsey's job. His position as public prosecutor places on him the duty of sending someone to the gallows, and this time it is Leo M. Frank, against whom he must direct his efforts.

The proposition of convicting a man is as common in the life of a Solicitor as paying his car fare home. But here's a different proposition. Dorsey is confronted with the task of getting a conviction over the efforts of Luther Rosser and Rueben Arnold to obtain an acquittal.

And anyone who knows Atlanta, who knows Fulton County, who knows Rosser, who knows Arnold, realizes that this is a task from which Hercules might sidestep, a labor that is more tremendous than the building of the Panama Canal or the successful storming of the fortress of Gibraltar.

And still Dorsey has gone into the

ACCUSED EXTREMELY NERVOUS FOLLOWING SLAYING, SAYS DARLEY

The defense played one of its strong cards in behalf of Leo M. Frank Friday when it secured from N. V. Darley, manufacturing head of the plant and State's witness, evidence that the prisoner performed three hours of the most intricate mathematical work just after the time the prosecution claims Mary Phagan was slain.

This, the defense brought out, required an exceedingly clear mind.

Darley also gave testimony as to Frank's nervous and upset condition on the two days following the murder of Mary Phagan.

The statements of Darley came as a complete surprise. The nature of the testimony had been carefully guarded by the Solicitor.

Darley declared that he and Frank arrived at the factory at about the same time Sunday morning, April 27, and that he first noticed Frank's nervousness when he saw the factory superintendent's hand tremble violently when he grasped the elevator rope to run the elevator down into the basement.

"When we got down to the basement," continued Darley, "and Frank started to nail up the back door, I saw that his hands were trembling and I took the hammer and nailed up the door myself, because I thought I could do it better than he could."

Darley also told that when he rode with Frank to the police station Monday, Frank sat on his knee.

"I could perceive that his whole body was trembling and shaking," said Darley. "I noticed it all of the way to the station house."

Club Not Found in Clean-Up.

Solicitor Dorsey asked Darley about a general clean-up ordered by a general insurance inspector who visited the factory April 28. Darley replied that the factory had been cleaned on the first and second floors on or before May 3.

Dorsey then called for the bloody club that was said to have been found on the first floor May 15 near where Jim Conley was sitting. Dorsey threw it down with a clatter by the chair of the witness.

"Was any club of this sort turned up during the cleaning process?" shouted Dorsey.

"No," the witness replied.

"And was not this a thorough cleaning?" the Solicitor asked.

"It was a general cleaning," replied Darley.

Frank Explains Nervousness.

Darley said that Frank later explained his nervousness of Sunday by saying that he had not had any breakfast and that he had just looked upon the body of the dead girl at the morgue. The witness added that Frank did not appear completely upset Monday, as he was able to transact a number of business affairs.

Darley, in spite of his testimony, which will be interpreted by the State as incriminating against Frank, probably was as valuable a witness for the defense as he was for the prosecution. It was under the skillful questioning of Attorney Reuben Arnold, who had begun to take a more active part in the cross-examinations than he had at first, that Darley told of the intricate work that Frank did on the afternoon of April 26 after the time the State claims that Frank murdered the Phagan girl.

Mrs Arthur White, wife of one of the employees of the National Pencil Factory, who declared she saw a negro hiding behind some boxes on the first floor of the plant on the day Mary Phagan was killed, was the first witness called Friday.

The State with her testimony began to pave the way for the appearance of Conley, who, it is believed, would be the last witness to be called by Solicitor Dorsey, as he would be the most spectacular.

The first witness said her husband had been working at the National Pencil plant about two years.

Tells of Going to Factory.

Q. What is your husband's name?—A. John Arthur White.

Q. Where does he work?—A. At the National Pencil Factory. He has worked there about two years.

Q. Where was he April 26?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Did you go to the pencil factory that day?—A. Yes; about 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Frank?—A. Yes; he was in his outside office.

Q. What did you say to him?—A. I told him I wanted to see Mr. White.

Q. What did he say?—A. He asked me if I was his wife. He said he thought so, as I looked like Mrs. Campbell.

Q. Did you see your husband?—A. Yes; he sent for him.

Q. Did you go upstairs at 11:30 a. m.?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About ten minutes to 12.

Says Frank Jumped.

Q. What time did you come back?—A. About 12:30.

Q. Whom did you see?—A. I saw Mr. Frank standing at the safe in his office.

Q. What happened then?—A. I asked him if I could see Mr. White. As I spoke to him he jumped.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I went upstairs to see Mr. White.

Q. Did you see anybody else in the office except Denham, White and Mr. Frank?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see anyone else as you came down?—A. I saw a negro.

Q. Where?—A. He was sitting on a box near the stairway that leads up to the second floor.

Q. Where did you see Frank the last time?—A. In his outside office.

Q. Where was your husband and Denham at work?—A. On the fourth floor.

Said She Had Better Go.

Q. What were they doing?—A. Working on a machine with a hammer.

Q. When did you first hear the hammer?—A. When I got on the fourth floor.

Q. Did you see Frank again before you left?—A. He came up on the fourth floor.

Q. Did anybody say anything about your going up to the fourth floor?—A. Yes; Frank told me to go up there.

Q. What time did Frank come to the fourth floor?—A. Some time before 1 o'clock.

Q. Where were you at 1 o'clock?—A. At McDonald's furniture store.

Q. Why did you leave before 1 o'clock?—A. Mr. Frank said, "Arthur, if your wife wants to get out before 3 o'clock she had better leave now. I will go as soon as I get my hat and coat."

Frank in Office as She Left.

Q. When you came down, did you see Mr. Frank?—A. Yes; when I went down he was sitting in his office.

Q. Did he have on his hat and coat as if he were going out?—A. No.

Q. What was he doing?—A. Writing.

Q. Could your husband and Denham see the stairway from upstairs where they were working?—A. No.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Mrs. White, you talked about this matter to Mr. Arnold and myself, didn't you? You told us you left the factory about 1 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. You don't mean to change your statement by saying it was ten minutes to 1 when you left, do you?—A. I can't say exactly what time it was.

but I know it was about 1 o'clock.

Q. You left there the first time about 11:30 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. Who were there?—A. Two men, Mr. Frank and a stenographer.

Q. Your father and your brother are old employees there, aren't they?—A. Yes.

Q. By whom did he send word to your husband that you were there?—A. Miss Emma Freeman.

Q. How long was it before your husband came?—A. About five minutes.

Q. Who else was there?—A. Miss Hall, Miss Freeman, Mrs. May Barrett and her daughter.

Q. You came back to the factory about 12:30, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. How accurate are you about that?—A. I looked at the clock.

Q. How close were you to Mr. Frank before you spoke?—A. I was in the office door just behind him.

Q. He jumped and you thought he was surprised?—A. Yes; that's what I thought then.

Saw Negro Downstairs.

Q. When he told your husband he was going to leave, he said you had better go pretty soon?—A. He said I had better go now.

Q. You did wait a few minutes?—A. Yes.

Q. Just where did you see the darky as you went out?—A. Between the stairway?—A. Five or six feet.

Q. What do you mean—between the foot of the stairway and the door?—A. Yes.

Q. How far from the foot of the stairway?—A. Five or six feet.

Mr. Rosser took a blueprint to explain the position in which she saw the negro.

Q. How long after this was it that you talked with Mr. Dorsey about seeing this negro? Wasn't it four or five days?—A. No, sir; about two weeks.

Mrs. White left the stand. Arthur White, her husband, was called, but failed to answer his name. M. V. Darley, assistant superintendent at the National Pencil Factory, was called.

Darley on Stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. Assistant superintendent at the National Pencil Factory. I have charge of the manufacturing plant.

Q. Who is your superior?—A. I considered Sig Montag.

Q. You and Frank worked together, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you at the factory Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 9:40.

Q. When were you there again?—A. Sunday morning about 8:10 or 8:20.

Q. Why did you go there?—A. Mrs. Frank called me.

Rosser objected.

"I object to anything Mrs. Frank said. She can't be used as a witness," he said.

"Your honor, we have already shown that Frank told his wife to call this man," said Solicitor Dorsey.

"If that's all you want to show, I withdraw my objection," said Rosser.

Q. What time did Frank call at the factory?—A. Shortly after I did.

Q. Did you notice anything unusual about Frank?—A. When he reached out his hand to start the elevator, it was trembling. And again when he went to nail up the back door, he was so nervous he couldn't do it, and I did it for him.

Said Body Made Him Nervous.

Q. What, if anything, did Frank say?—A. I don't remember. He said something about having on a new suit of clothes, or something.

Q. Did he say anything about not having breakfast?—A. He said he hadn't had his breakfast and wanted a cup of coffee.

Q. Did he say anything about being nervous?—A. Yes; he said they took him by Bloomfield's and into a dark room, where they turned on the light suddenly and he saw the girl. He said it made him nervous.

Q. Were you there when Newt Lee was?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Lee nervous?—A. No; he was composed.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the murder?—A. He was under the impression the murder occurred in the basement.

Q. Did he say anything about the lock and staple?—A. Yes; he said it looked like it was mighty easily pulled.

Staple Easily Pulled.

Q. Did you observe anything about the staple?—A. Yes; it looked as if it had been taken out easily.

Q. Did you see Frank again?—A. Yes, the following day.

Q. Did he say anything about his nervousness of the day before?—A. Yes; he said something, but I have forgotten.

"Your honor," said Dorsey, "I would like to refresh the witness' memory by reading his previous statement."

"You can only show it to him," answered Judge Roan.

Dorsey showed Darley the affidavit.

Q. Just tell everything you heard Frank say about the murder—A. I don't remember.

"Your honor, I would like to read this," said Dorsey.

Forgets Vital Evidence.

Rosser and Arnold objected.

"He will have to make the usual showing that he was entrapped, your honor," said Arnold.

"He is trying ot bring in evidence from the outside," said Rosser.

"You can't read it, Mr. Dorsey," said Judge Roan.

"My friend Dorsey would show anything, your honor," said Rosser. "Nothing's too good for him."

Q. State to the jury how much of Frank's body was nervous?—A. That is a pretty hard question.

"Look at this," said Dorsey, showing him an affidavit.

"I said there he was shaking all over," said the witness.

Rosser objected.

Judge Roan asked the witness if he was making that statement now.

Darley's Replies Guarded.

"Judge, that's a very hard question for me," answered Darley. "He reached up to get the ropes, and his hands were shaking very much."

Darley appeared very reluctant to answer any question that might incriminate Frank.

Q. Who nailed up the back door of the basement?—A. I did.

Q. Was Frank able to do it?—A. He was able to do it, I think, but he was nervous.

Q. How did Frank's face appear on the second floor?—A. It was very pale.

Q. Was he upset when you got to the factory?

Rosser objected, but was overruled.

A. I can't say he was completely upset.

"Now, look here," said Dorsey, walking toward the witness with his affidavit.

"Your honor," interrupted Rosser, "he can't speak to the witness in that nasal tone. It is his witness. He can't cross-question him."

"That's right," ruled the judge.

"But," said Mr. Rosser, "your Honor has not been enforcing that ruling."

"I am going to enforce it," replied Judge Roan.

"That's what I am asking you to do now," returned Mr. Rosser.

Mr. Dorsey put his question again.

A. He was somewhat upset, but did some things around the factory that he could not have done if he had been completely upset.

State Wins Clash.

Q. Was he done up?

"I object," broke in Mr. Arnold. "He may mean that he was dead by 'done up'."

"Leave it to the jury to decide what is meant by 'done up,'" said Dorsey.

"It isn't for you to decide what is to go before the jury," retorted Rosser. "That is for the judge."

Judge Roan ruled the question was admissible.

A. He was partially done up but not completely.

Q. Why do you say that?—A. He did some things he could not have done if he had been wholly done up.

Q. Who was with you on the way to the police station?—A. I got in an automobile. I afterward learned that it was run by "Boots" Rogers. Mr. Frank sat on my knee.

Q. What was his condition?—A. He was trembling all over.

Q. To what extent?—A. He was sitting on my knee and I could feel his body shaking.

Q. What was the condition of Newt Lee?

"I object," said Rosser. "I have been objecting to this line of testimony all along. If your Honor permits this question to be asked, I want to be recorded as protesting."

"Do you insist on the question?" asked Judge Roan of Solicitor Dorsey.

Dorsey and Hooper conferred.

"I am willing to strike out all reference to Newt Lee's condition," said Dorsey.

Attorneys Exchange Courtesies.

"I am glad it has finally dawned on my brothers that these questions are illegal," said Rosser. "I have been trying to get them to see and I am glad to say the light finally has dawned upon them."

"Your Honor," interrupted Hooper, "I object to Mr. Rosser's statement about how long it takes anything to soak into my head. A reference to Newt Lee's attitude was made the other day. We see the object of these objections is to lead into a large field of invesigation. We want to strike it all out."

Dorsey continued questioning the witness.

Q. Did you attend to any business Monday?—A. There wasn't much work to do.

Q. Did you see the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes, Mr. Frank called my attention to it.

Q. What did he say, and at what time?—A. I dont' recall the conversation, but it was about 9 o'clock.

Q. Did Gantt ever come to the factory after he was discharged?—A. Yes.

Ordered Factory Cleaned.

Q. Did Frank say anything about it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Did Mr. Haas, the insurance man, come to the factory Monday or Tuesday?—A. He did.

Q. What did he do?—A. He ordered us to clean up the factory in a general way.

Q. What time did you clean up the main floor?—A. May 3.

Q. Did you know anything about the finding of this club? (The witness was handed a heavy stick.)—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether it was found before or after the cleaning up?—A. Afterward—about May 15.

Arnold here took up the cross-examination.

Q. Did you see any spots on the floor?—Yes, in the dressing room.

Q. Who showed them to you?—A. Quinn.

Calls Barrett a "Columbus."

Q. Where was the hair found?—A. On the handle of the lathe.

Q. How was it?—A. Wound around the lathe.

Q. Did Mr. Barrett find it?—A. Yes.

Q. How many strands of hair were there?—A. Not over six.

Q. Barrett has been doing most of the discovering around there, hasn't he?

"I object," said Dorsey. "The question is immaterial."

"I want to show that this man Barrett was a monomaniac," said Arnold.

Judge Roan ruled: "You can show that this man was more than ordinarily interested."

Q. Do you recall Barrett stating he was working for a reward?—I don't recall.

Dorsey: "I object."

Judge Roan ruled: "I have ruled that he can show that to prove interest."

"I want to show that this man was a regular Christopher Columbus."

Q. Do you know who Barrett made this statement to?—A. No.

Q. Is this a pay envelope?—A. Yes.

Pay Envelopes Common.

Q. Are they thrown all over the factory?—A. Yes. We have a rule that if there is any mistake in the pay roll it had to be reported before the employee left.

Q. They are very common in the metal room?—Yes.

Q. Were you present Sunday morning when Frank took out the time slip?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see him run his finger down the time slip?—A. Yes. He ran his finger down the number side. I was looking over his shoulder.

Q. Is there a row of figures down the number side?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything?—A. Yes. He said they were all punched and I verified it.

Q. How did you do it?—A. Just loking at the numbers. We would not have noticed a skip in the time.

Juror Asks Question.

Attorney Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor, a juror wants to ask a question, but Mr. Hooper objects."

"I don't object to his asking the question, but I do object to Mr. Arnold giving the answer," said Mr. Hooper.

Juror Marcellus Johemming asked Darley to explain the time clock system, which Darley did.

Arnold took up the financial sheet.

Q. What did Frank say about the financial sheet?

"I object," said Hooper. "He can ask him about the sheet, provided it is later put in evidence."

"We will put it in all right," said Arnold, "and plenty of other evidence. You need not worry about that."

Q. When was the financial sheet made up?—A. Saturday afternoon.

Q. You were interested?—A. Yes, it was my duty to see it. It dealt with the cost of production.

Q. What time was it made up—that is, what day of the week did it show last?—A. Thursday.

Financial Sheet Introduced.

Q. Who makes it up now?—A. One has not been made out since Mr. Frank left?

Q. How long did it usually take him to make it out?—A. Always from about 2:30 or 3 until 5 o'clock.

Q. Look at this and tell me if this is the sheet you found on his desk Sunday morning?—A. Yes.

Q. How does it compare with his regular handwriting?

Dorsey objected.

"I object, your honor," he said. "The writing is the best evidnce."

Q. I want to ask you are you familiar with Mr. Frank's writing?—A. Yes, I have been seeing it about five years.

Q. Now, I want to ask you one question, but don't answer until we get a ruling. Does this compare favorably with all of Mr. Frank's writing?

Dorsey objected.

Ruling on Handwriting Reserved.

"The code says, your Honor, that we are entitled to the very best evidence," the Solicitor said. "This section holds that in any question of handwriting that an expert must testify, and the papers or specimen of handwriting on the day in question and on other days should be introduced. The jury might not agree with the witness that the sheet in question and other sheets, are similar. They can be produced, and they should be."

"I will withhold my ruling until I look up some authorities," replied Judge Roan.

"I will ask the witness something else," said Arnold.

Q. What process did Frank have to go into to get at these results?—A. He had to get reports from every department, figure averages, costs, sales, profits, expense.

Figures Required Clear Head.

Q. It took a man with a good clear head to figure it?—A. Yes.

Q. What calculation was necessary to arrive at the net result?—A. The amount of rubber tips, labels, and every other little detail must be calculated.

Q. It required a large amount of calculation?—A. Yes.

Q. Sunday, were you in the factory with Frank and Detective Starnes? A. Yes.

Q. There were forty or fifty people in the factory Sunday, were there not?—No, not over six or eight.

Q. Did you go into the cellar?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get to the factory?—A. 8:20.

Q. There was a great deal of excitement there?

Dorsey objected. "I think your Honor has already ruled on this question," said he.

U. S. Makes Railway Pact With Mexico

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The Interstate Commerce Commission today rescinded its action in denying the interchange of free transportation between Mexican railroad officials and officials of lines in the United States.

Shipments from the United States to Mexico which are held on the border because of inability to transport them farther on account of disturbed conditions will be turned either to the original shippers or disposed of by the railroads upon one day's notice. Such authority was granted to the carriers to-day by the commission.

Another Line Added To Southern System

MACON, Aug. 1.—J. H. Palmer, former chief clerk of the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, will be general manager of the combined Hawkinsville and Southern and Gulf Line Railroads. The Gulf Line was yesterday purchased by the Hawkinsville and Southern for $261,000.

The entire system, extending from Grovania, through Hawkinsville, Ashburn and Sylvester to Camilla, is a subsidiary of the G. S. and F., which is in turn controlled by the Southern Railway.

Son Held as Slayer Of Kentucky Pastor

LEXINGTON, Aug. 1.—Vernon Embry, 16 years old, was arrested at his home, at Waco, Ky., to-day for the murder of his father, the Rev. Charles Embry, a Methodist preacher.

Rev. Mr. Embry and his wife engaged in a difficulty, scuffling over the possession of a butcher knife when the boy fired a shotgun, the charge taking effect in the back of his father's head, tearing it almost from the shoulders and causing instant death.

Vincent Astor Bitten By Monkey on Yacht

NEW YORK, August 1.—Vincent Astor has sailed on the Noma to meet the Olympic, aboard of which is his mother, Mrs. John Astor. He will probably pick up the Olympic about 100 miles out.

Mr. Astor's friends to-day learned for the first time of an encounter he had last week with his pet monkey, Jocko, on the Noma. In his attempt to return him to his cage, Mr. Astor was severely bitten on the hand.

Steals Coat in Auto On Downtown Street

Caught stealing an automobile coat from the car of J. A. Merrill, in front of the Empire Life building, Jim Berry, a negro, Friday morning was held to the State courts by Recorder Broyles on the charge of larceny.

Policeman Bostwick caught Berry just after he had taken the coat from the car and was rifling the pockets. Merrill in court declared that the interests of auto owners demanded that Berry be given the limit.

Bedell Slaying Puzzles Police Of Chattanooga

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 1.—At noon to-day no arrests had been made in connection with the murder of Squire C. A. Bedell, upon the porch of his home in East Chattanooga last night. Every available officer, however, has been detailed upon the case and arrests are expected within the next twelve hours. The officers are almost positive that the two assailants were white men.

The murder and robbery of Bedell shortly after 11 o'clock upon the front porch of his home and before the eyes of his wife has greatly excited this city. While robbery is considered the primary motive of the killing, as Bedell had the entire receitps of his day's business at his store upon his person, it is also considered by the officers that there were other contributory motives.

Preacher Prays for Wife; Gets Twins, Too

PHIDADELPHIA, Aug. 1.—The Rev. Gustav Alf, pastor of the First Polish Church, is a firm believer in the efficacy of prayer. Whenever Mr. Alf wants anything he prays for it and his prayers are answered.

Several years ago the Rev. Alf wanted a wife. One young woman had jilted him, so he asked the Lord to give him another. The wife was forthcoming and to-day the Rev. Mr. Alf is the proud father of two children.

The Rev. Mr. Alf has been praying for a church to house his congregation. This prayer also will be answered.

Grocer Dumping Bad Eggs in Street Fined

Recorder Broyles Friday morning held that an Atlanta street is not a proper dumping ground for spoiled eggs, when he imposed a fine of $5.75 on C. Kalich, a merchant at Williams and Parker streets.

Inspector Rice, of the sanitary department, was passing through Williams street Thursday afternoon when he noticed eggs being pitched from the store into the street. Investigating he found that Kalich was testing his stock of eggs and eliminating the bad ones.

James Hogg Will Be Tried for Death of South Georgia Man in 1893.

BUENA VISTA, Aug. 1.—James Hogg, who with his brother, Floyd Hogg, is charged with the murder of Dave Shippy, 20 years ago, has just been arrested and placed in jail here.

The brothers, with their father, Lewis Hogg, were indicted in April, 1893. The father was captured, tried and freed. The two boys escaped for a score of years, being fugitives from justice. Some weeks ago it was learned that James Hogg had returned to this section and a reward was offered for his capture. Officers crowded him so close that he surrendered.

The killing took place about five miles from Buena Vista, and was the result of a drunken fight. Most of the witnesses in the case are dead. Hogg's wife, after his escape, married again and is now living in Macon.

The prisoner talks interestingly of his experience. Time after time the officers were upon him, on two occasions shooting holes through his clothes. During the Spanish-American war he joined the army, went to Cuba, and remained until the close. He claims to have been in twenty-eight States.

Hogg will be tried at the October term of court.

No More Spasmodic Corns

Got a corn that you have had for years? Tried every imaginable way to get rid of it, yet there it sticks like a fiend grinning and torturing you at regular intervals? Away with it! Here's Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid, a new scientific preparation, which will kill it instantly. The first application stops all pain. There is no possibility of danger from blood poisoning, as there is from cutting, paring, peeling, gouging, picking and other barbarously brutal methods.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid will remove any corn, hard or soft; even a stubborn corn of many years' growth will come out clean, whole and positively without pain. Simplest treatment in the world, a scientific formula from our own laboratory, always successful, no pain, no danger. It will positively stop your suffering to-night. 20c, by mail 22c.—(Advt.)

WARM SPRINGS, GA., MORE POPULAR THAN EVER.

Mr. Slade, the new proprietor of Warm Springs, is adding daily to the popularity of this well-known bathing resort. He has this week added a new orchestra of brass instruments and drums, and the dancing is one of the popular amusements. The ballroom can not be excelled by any in the State, and with Lilly's Band from Columbus the dancing is all that can be wished.

The Warm Springs is the pleasantest place in the State, and the swimming pool the finest bathing in the country. The mountain breezes and healthy clime, free from gnats and mosquitoes, make it an ideal spot for a summer outing. The Warm Springs wants to see its old friends again.

DEFENSE NOT HELPED BY WITNESSES ACCUSED OF ENTRAPPING THE STATE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Has the State succeeded in thoroughly establishing the fact that little Mary Phagan's tragic death was effected on the second floor of the National Pencil Factory, in Forsyth street?

It has not, of course—but it has set up by competent evidence a number of suspicious circumstances, which, if properly sustained later along, will prove damaging in the extreme to Leo Frank.

Unless these circumstances, trivial in some aspects, are braced up and backed up, however, by other much stronger circumstances, they will give the jury, in all probability, little concern in arriving at a verdict.

Thursday was not a sensationally good day for the State, although it was much better than the day before.

Twice Thursday the Solicitor General claimed that he had been "entrapped" by witnesses—and this, with the lamentable fall down of John Black the day before—served to give rise in the minds of some spectators to a faint suspicion that the State didn't have its case very well in hand.

No Help to Defense.

There is something terribly significant and actually sinister in that little word "entrapped," however, when hurled at a witness in the presence of a jury, and it would be a mistake to believe that a witness, actually convicted, even in the mere opinion of the jury, of having deliberately misled the prosecution thereby helps the defense.

The witness who entraps, or who is thrown under suspicion of having entrapped, frequently does the party he seems primarily to have hurt a wonderful amount of good.

I believe, for instance, that Witness E. F. Holloway was speaking the truth when, on oath, he reversed his former affidavit to the Solicitor, and said that he left the elevator unlocked on Saturday, whereas he before had sworn that he locked it Friday and did not unlock it Saturday—the last inferentially, at least.

This point will mean a good deal later, when it is reached in developing the defense's case, and if Holloway's last story, apparently satisfactorily explained, holds together, well and good—but who can tell what the jury thinks about that contradiction upon the part of Holloway, particularly when he has been so deliberately accused by the Solicitor of entrapping him?

Holloway is an employee of the pencil factory—was before and has been since the murder. If the jury gathers the impression that he has been tampered with since his first statement, and by friends of Frank, to clear up seemingly damaging circumstances against Frank, it likely will be an aggravating thing, when the jury comes to make up its findings.

Will Hurt Frank's Case.

Just as I thought, and still think, that Dorsey made a tactical mistake—for which he paid the full price, moreover—when on Wednesday he exclaimed "plant," thereby accusing the defense of unfair and grossly indecent methods of bolstering up its cause, so I think the constant suggestion of witnesses changed in opinion and testimony, and in favor of Frank, will hurt Frank's case, rather than help it, if sustained.

Mr. Dorsey failed utterly to bolster up his charge of "planted" evidence, but he didn't fail, in anything like the same degree, to say the least of it, in attacking Holloway.

Or, anyway, there is a grave probability that he didn't fail in the minds of the jury.

In short, my idea is this, as it has been all along: The public, and presumably even more the jury, will resent anything that savors of unfair methods employed either by the State or the defense.

Steadily, though slowly, the defense seems to be pulling away from the prosecution in the Frank trial, and the impression apparently is gaining ground gradually that the State likely is fighting a losing battle.

All of this may be changed in a moment—one witness on behalf of the State may serve to win back all the ground it may have lost.

Nothing More Uncertain Than Verdict

And, of all things, there is nothing to speculate upon quite so uncertain as the verdict a jury will hand in.

The jury is sitting there, its attention confined to the development of the evidence. It reads no newspapers; it converses with no outsiders.

It can not get up, run across the street and swap ideas with somebody in the corner drug store.

It took charge of the case, under its deliberately assumed oath that it was "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," and it is seeing things in its own way—and that way may not be the way outsiders are seeing it.

So far, however, the State's witnesses alone have been introduced. Whatever advantage the defense has gained of them has come in two ways—either in their failure to testify directly to the State's benefit or through circumstances and admissions brought out in favor of the defense, under the merciless cross-examination of Luther Rosser.

It is a good deal to say, nevertheless, that at this stage of the trial the defense apparently has scored heaviest, for such points as it has won necessarily have been wrung from the State's own witnesses, and not the witnesses of the defense. In other words, wherever the State fails to score, the defense scores.

How Points Have Been Scored.

If the defense made little, if anything, of Lee, it lost little, if anything, because of him.

It almost, if not quite, broke even on Rogers—and it most certainly scored tremendously on Black.

Scott, if damaging in a way, was also helpful in a way, in that he practically admitted suspicion of the negro Conley quite as strong as suspicion of Frank.

Monteen Stover swore that Frank was not in his office for, at least, a period of some five minutes immediately after 12 o'clock on the day of the murder; at least, if he was, he was where she could not or did not see him. Grace Hix undoubtedly helped Frank. Dr. Smith helped the State.

R. P. Barrett swore he found a piece of a pay envelope under Mary Phagan's machine three or four days after the murder, and that he found blood spots near the dressing room door three or four days after the murder.

Mell Stanford swore that the spots near the dressing room were not there Friday, and were there Monday, but he could not swear the spots were blood. Holloway helped the defense, probably.

There is nothing new in most of this testimony, however, save that of Barrett concerning the piece of envelope, and the defense presumably is ready, therefore, to meet it.

State Facer Hard Task.

The mere finding of a piece of pay envelope somewhere even near Mary Phagan's machine, is not, of itself, highly important; but it might serve as a link in an otherwise strong chain forged to connect Frank directly with the killing.

But if the State has succeeded in setting forth the fact that Frank may possibly have committed the crime, it yet has a long road to travel before it proves "beyond a reasonable doubt" that he DID do it.

Indeed, Frank's attorneys have never combated the idea that he was in the factory at a moment when the killing of Mary Phagan MIGHT have been effected—and beyond that fact the State has been unable to proceed very far to date.

It must be remembered, too, that while the State now is engaged in weaving a web, real or imaginary, about Frank, the defense expects to weave a much more terrible and substantial web about Conley.

But even at that, mere suspicion alone will serve to convict neither.

Much Depends on Conley.

After all is said and done, and it generally gets back to this, the preliminary chain of circumstances against Frank likely will hold together tightly or fall apart hopelessly, according to the fate of James Conley on the witness stand.

If Conley stands the test of exhaustive cross-examination, then the circumstances leading up to and away from Conley's connection with the case will stand or fall.

He is, and has been, at all times both the hope and the despair of the State, no less than the hope and despair of the defense.

He is the star witness about whom the entire Frank case revolves, about whom it has revolved for weeks, and about whom it must revolve to its end.

Of course, there ever is the chance that the State has something sensational, new and significant up its sleeve—and there is the remoter chance that the defense has some big surprises in store.

As the fifth day of the trial drags on, however, the impression has deepened almost into a conviction in the mind of the public that neither the State nor the defense has much to let out that already hasn't been let out, in whole or in substantial parts.

Spirit of Fairness Everywhere.

And the public is waiting for Conley's evidence before making up its mind.

More and more I notice in the casual comment of people about town a spirit of fairness and an inclination to await the full developments of both the State and the defense.

The public largely still is open-minded. It is "from Missouri"—and, after all, that is the way the public mind should be in this matter, for it is a very grave matter, and its final effect will be far-reaching and full of significance, no matter which way the verdict comes finally.

There is one point that Undertaker Gheesling cleared up, on oath, and the public should take careful note of it. He swore that Mary Phagan's body was NOT mutilated in the way street rumor and gossip had it mutilated, just after the crime was committed.

That ugly story undoubtedly was accountable for some of the primary prejudice against Frank—but it was an untrue rumor, and in all fairness, now that it has been exploded, it should be borne in mind.

Sherlocks, Lupins and Lecoqs See Frank Trial

There are enough "hists," aha's" and those other exclamations that mark a true detective besides the badge on his left suspender to fill a whole volume of Gaboriau thrillers at the Frank trial.

A stranger whirled from the Terminal Station to Judge Roan's courtroom would be convinced before he had been in that temple of justice five minutes that all Atlanta earns its living following clews, and that if Sherlock Holmes was made a material being he could beat Jim Woodward for Mayor by 8,000 votes.

Ever since the body of Mary Phagan was found, practically every man of voting age and a lot of those who just think they are, have evolved a theory as to the crime they regard as incontrovertible as two plus two makes four, and have a system of ratiocination (beg pardon, Mr. Poe), that either proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that Leo M. Frank is guilty, or that he is innocent, or that Jim Conley did it, or he didn't, or that somebody did, but they'll be hanged if they know who.

Theorists There for Vindication.

The census of 1910 gave Atlanta a population of 154,839, and it is safe to say that 154,839 sure-fire theories have been evolved.

And everyone of the theorists wants to go to the courtroom to see his theory upheld and see the theory of the other fellow smashed to smithereens.

Atlanta's deductive and inductive powers were never even dimly realized until this week.

Chat with the throng around the courthouse. Mingle with the Lupins, the Lacoqs, the Anna Katherine Greens in the room where the issue is being fought.

Clerk Turns Detective.

Your surprise will be suddenly converted into admiration and then into awe. A person, whom you had mistaken for a clerk with a brain capable of knowing nothing more complex than a suit will sell for $19.99 quicker than it will for $20, you discover has a reasoning power as infallible as that of Socrates and a knowledge of things criminal that makes him the most deadly foe to crime since Bertillon.

He can take an envelope, locate it on a second floor and in a flash conceive just how a deed of murder was committed.

He can watch a man's hand tremble and immediately conceive him a perjurer and a villain of the deepest dye, although he doesn't ask him if he had taken on too much the night before.

"Signs Air Hopeful," Says Uncle Ben.

He can point out the fatal weakness in the attack of a lawyer who makes more money in a minute than he himself makes in a week. A man selected by a sovereign people to represent the majority of their law becomes a mere novice under his merciless criticism.

"But the signs air hopeful," remarked Uncle Ben Green, from out Hapeville way, as he listened to the findings of the amateur sleuths and chewed tobacco.

"The signs air hopeful," he repeated. "I've been a-sittin' here since the trial begun, and from what I hev seed of these deteckertive fellers we've got right now, it's a pretty good thing that a new crop is a-comin' up."

MACON, Aug. 1.—It is definitely announced that the presidency of Mercer University has been offered to Dr. T. W. O'Kelley, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Raleigh, N. C. It is believed that he will accept.

Dr. O'Kelley graduated at Mercer in 1890 with first honors, and subsequently he taught Greek and Latin at Mercer. Afterward he became principal of Hiawassee High School, in North Georgia. He is 50 years of age and a man of family. He is regarded as one of the ablest Baptist ministers of the south.

Dr. O'Kelley was chosen from a list of sixteen prominent clergymen and educators.

Was Mary Phagan killed at or very near the time she entered the National Pencil Factory April 26 to get her pay envelope or was she merely attacked at this time and murdered later?

The line of questioning pursued by Luther Rosser in his cross-examination of two of the State's witnesses Thursday afternoon indicated this will be one of the questions the jurors will have to settle before they will be able to determine the innocence or guilt of Leo M. Frank.

Rosser was most persistent in his interrogation both of William A. Gheesling embalmer, and Dr. Claude A. Smith, physician and bacteriologist. Gheesling went to the pencil factory at about 4 o'clock the morning of the crime and took charge of the Phagan girl's body. He told Solicitor Dorsey in the direct examination Thursday that the girl had been dead ten or fifteen hours and that rigor mortis was well established.

Gets Admission Before Jury.

Rosser at once began an attempt to break down this portion of the embalmer's testimony, and succeeded in getting before the jury the witness' admission that rigor mortis is extremely variable in the time it takes to set in and become well established in a body. Gheesling admitted that the surroundings in respect to dampness and temperature had their effect, as did the cause of the person's death, and that the degree of rigor mortis could not be taken as an invariable indication of the time that a person had been dead.

Frank's attorney made similar inquiries of Dr. Smith and from him obtained similar statements. The presumption is he will use the testimony of the State's witnesses to supplement that of the defense, combining them to support the theory that the Phagan girl was attacked on the first floor by Conley and by him was thrown down the elevator shaft or carried down the ladder into the basement, but was not actually slain until after Frank had left the factory in the evening.

Two other points will be established by the defense before the State rests if Rosser is able to wring the information he wants from the witnesses called by Dorsey.

Says Frank Returned Alone.

One of them is that Jim Conley did not walk to the factory with or just behind Leo Frank Saturday morning, April 26, as Conley swore in his last affidavit that he did. E. F. Holloway, one of the State's witnesses, testified Thursday afternoon that no one was with Frank when he returned from Montag Brothers that morning.

Rosser also displayed an unmistakable intention of making the detectives and officers admit that Frank was under virtual arrest when he was questioned Monday by the authorities, and that there was no reason why he should not have been aware of his status.

He succeeded in getting B. B. Haslett to make just this admission and undoubtedly will use it to explain the measures that were taken at once for the protection of Frank's interests, measures on which the State has looked with suspicion because, the attorneys state, Frank was not placed under arrest until 11:30 the Thursday forenoon after the crime.

State Fares Better Thursday.

The State fared better Thursday than any other day during the trial. Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, submitted considerable damaging evidence in respect to Frank's appearance and actions during the first days of the investigation, although nothing that was startling or direct or even new.

He told that Frank was extremely nervous when the superintendent and Newt Lee were placed in the same room at the police station and that Frank squirmed about in his chair, rubbed his chin and lips in agitated manner, grew pale and trembling and in every way comported himself as one might who was guilty of a crime.

Scott said that he and John Black entered the room as Frank and Lee were finishing their conversation and that he overheard the latter part of Frank's remarks.

Rosser immediately caught the detective up on this statement, referring him to his testimony before the Coroner's Jury, where he testified that he had not entered the room until the conversation between Lee and Frank was completed and that he overheard nothing. Scott explained that he must have been mistaken when he testified before the Coroner.

Scott testified that Herbert Haas, one of Frank's attorneys, early in the case had tried to persuade him to turn his evidence over to the defense before submitting it to the police, but this already had been aired at the inquest and was without particular effect, as Scott added, under the cross-examination of Rosser, that there was no attempt to have it suppressed or kept from the police authorities, but only to have it given first to the defense.

What had the appearance of being the most sensational testimony of the day was that given by R. P. Barrett, a machinist on the second floor of the factory, when he declared that he had found a pay envelope under the machine used by Mary Phagan. The pay envelope, however, when it was shown to the jury, was discovered to have on it no date, no amount, no name, with the exception of a loop of one letter, no number nor any other mark to identify it as the pay envelope that the Phagan girl received Saturday, April 26. Nor was any explanation suggested as to how she may have happened to be at her machine when there was no work being done that day and the machines were not in operation.

Barrett testified to the finding of the alleged blood spots on the second floor near the women's dressing room and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. No more was developed out of the testimony then was already known to the public when Barrett anounced his discovery a few days after the murder. Barrett also declared that a white substance had been used with the apparent intention of removing the splotches of red.

Sweeper Tells of Splotches.

Mel Stanford, a factory sweeper, corroborated Barrett in his story of the finding of the spots and the white substance that was spread over them. He said the spots were not there when he swept the factory Friday and that the first time he noticed them was when they were pointed out to him the Monday morning after the murder.

Mrs. George W. Jefferson, who works in the polishing room, gave testimony of the same sort. She also testified that cords like the one found around the neck of Mary Phagan hung on a post in the polishing room. She said that this was the only place on the second floor where they were kept, but admitted that they might drop on the floor and be swept to any part of the factory. She said that three shades of red paint were used in the polishing room, but that all of them were distinguishable from blood and that the spots she saw near the women's dressing room were none of the paints she had described.

Monteen Stover, the 14-year-old factory girl, gave exactly the testimony that had been expected. She said she had entered the factory at 12:05 the day of the tragedy, and that Frank was not in his office. She said that she looked about in his office for him and on failing to find him left the building. She testified that she looked at the clock as she departed, and it was 12:10. Her story contradicts the statement of Frank that he was in his office all the time after he came from Montag Brothers at about 11 o'clock until he went to the fourth floor to see Harry Denham and Arthur White at about 12:50.

Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, testified that he found four or five blood corpuscles on one of the chips of wood that were brought to him. He could not tell whether or not it was human blood. These chips were the ones taken from the floor where the alleged spots were found. He said that in his opinion the blood-stained shirt found at the home of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman, never had been worn and that the blood on it was put on the inside of the garment and seeped through to the outside.

HIGH WAGES AND SHORT HOURS INEVITABLE

Incompetent Employers Doomed to Certain Failure—Workingman's Rights Paramount.

By B. C. FORBES.

"It can't be done" is the favorite argument of many employers when urged to treat their employes more liberally in the way of wages or hours or rest days or conditions of service. And they flatter themselves that their obiter dictum—their say-so—settles it, leaves no room for argument, closes the case finally and irrevocably.

Skinflint employers are going to learn a few things before the world is very much older. They are going to learn that few things "can't be done" when the public makes up its mind that they ought to be done. Not many things that are right and just are impossible.

The eight-hour day, you remember, was socialistic, anarchistic and absurd when first advocated. Nothing could be more impossible, all but a few far-seeing, broad-guaged, large-hearted, humane employers argued. Well, the eight-hour day was ushered in without any tremendous upheaval in the industries concerned.

"It can't be done" was once the pet reply to please for the abolition of seven-day work in the steel industry. To-day not five per cent of the United States Steel Corporation's employes work seven days a week.

* * *

Sunday labor in certain industries used to be considered absolutely unavoidable. To-day it has been radically reduced, almost eliminated in most directions.

* * *

The railroads at first vowed that rebating simply could not be stopped. To-day they are infinitely grateful that the law stepped in and annihilated it.

* * *

Political parties could not be held together, it was urged, without bosses. To-day the bosses are being driven out to the advantage of all.

* * *

"Can't" is an overworked word. It is too often the refuge of the unfit, the lazy and the coward. Sometimes it expresses a fact; more often it is an unconvincing excuse.

* * *

What is here written is for the edification and exhortation of certain corporations and other large employers who glibly declare that sorely-needed reforms for the benefit of their workers "can't be done." These employers are ready to admit that they would like to do certain things, that justice is on the side of the reforms and that they hope at some distant date conditions—especially among their competitors—will so change that it will be possible to mix a little more humanity with their money-making.

They would like to let their workers off one day every week, or every month. But "it can't be done."

* * *

They would like to pay all their helpers a living wage. But "it can't be done."

They would like to better working conditions.. But, again, "it can't be done."

Gentlemen, it CAN be done. And it WILL be done.

Any man who can't pay his workers a living wage has no right to own a business. If he can not supply the brains necessary so to manage a concern that it can pay decent wages, then stop him from being an employer and let him become an employe. If capital can not be handled in one industry so as to afford reasonable wages, then let it seek other employment. Not only is it an economic sin to continue the use of capital in an unprofitable business, in one that does not pay for the things necessary for the sustenance of the workers engaged in it, but it is a crime against humanity, a crime against society, a crime against the State, for if an employe receives less wages than is absolutely needful to maintain life, then others—the butcher, the baker, the dry goods merchant, the landlord, etc., etc.—have to make up the difference, since men and women can not allow themselves to starve to death.

The employer who persists in replying "it can't be done" to requests for reasonable treatment of workers writes himself down incompetent, unfit to enjoy the services of others. Capital and labor are not sufficient to insure business success; MANAGEMENT is the third and indispensable requisite. And any employer who can not supply it intelligently enough to enable him to deal fairly and decently with workers has no claim to be allowed to remain an employer. That inexorable law which decrees the survival of the fittest marks such an one for destruction, as he ought to be marked.

It may be necessary to be more specific in a subsequent article.

NASH PROTESTS AGAINST SLADE MILITIA BILL

Declares Negligence of Civil Officials Is All That Makes State Troops Necessary.

Declaring that if the civil officers of the State could be made to do their duty, there would be no need of the military, Adjutant General Van Holt Nash, before the House Committee on Military Affairs Thursday afternoon, protested against the passage of the military bill offered by Representative Slade, of Muscogee.

The bill repeals the military act of 1912 and re-enacts the law of 1910, making the militia subservient to the civil authorities.

"The militia is entitled to some consideration," declared General Nash. "We offer our lives to the State with practically no remuneration, and are sworn to uphold the honor of the State and its laws. The only reason there is any need for the militia is because the civil officers do not do their duty. If you will make the civil authorities perform their work, there will be no necessity for calling out the militia.

Says Present Laws Protect Them.

"The present law should stand. It protects us from being overridden by the civil authorities, and prevents us from being made the scapegoats of incompetent civil officers."

Mr. Slade declared the present military law is unconstitutional because it means the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. He likened conditions that arose in Augusta last year, under military rule, to the Reconstruction period, when "blood flowed as freely as water."

Representative Ennis, of Baldwin County, spoke against the bill. He declared if the State were under military rule there would be fewer lawbreakers.

Because of the absence of a quorum the committee did not take any action on the bill. Mr. Slade declared he has small hopes of the passage of his bill, but seeks to effect a compromise with the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator McGregor, which curtails the powers of the military.

It is probable that the committee will not report on the Slade bill until next week.

Girl Fights Turks as Man; Weds In U. S.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 1.—A romance that began in the Balkans resulted in the marriage of Vida Radak and Barbara Coganic, Bulgarians, in Farrell, Pa.

When Radak was obliged to join the army and go to the front, Barbara dressed as a man and entered the fighting against Turkey. After many hardships, she found her lover and fought by his side.

In a battle, she was slightly wounded, her sex was discovered and she was sent back home. Later Radak left the army and came to this country. He sent for his sweetheart.

Puts Steam Shovel Above Court; Jailed

PITTSBURG, August 1.—When Judge R. A. Kennedy, in Common Pleas Court, was annoyed by the puffing of a steam shovel excavating a street near the courthouse, he ordered the shovel stopped. When the noise continued, he issued a warrant and had the crew brought into court.

The superintendent was asked whether it would be better to stop the shovel or stop the court. The superintendent replied that the court should stop, and was promptly sentenced to jail for contempt.

Blacksmith Gives a Social in His Shop

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The custom of using the churches and school houses of a community as social centers was upset in Oak Park, a suburb, when M. M. McMahon, a blacksmith, held an ice cream social where the guests sat among piles of horseshoes, and the decorations were tongs, hammers and bellows.

A lecturer from Chicago gave a talk on the "Rocky Mountains," after McMahon called the folks to order by pounding on the anvil.

Textile Industry in Spain Hit by Strike

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MADRID, Aug. 1.—The textile industry in Spain is practically at a standstill today. Twenty thousand men are on strike for higher wages and better working conditions, and 195 factories have been closed.

The strike is spreading hourly, the workers at Sabadell, Tarrasa and Villa Nueva joining the men who are out. Troops are being rushed to the strike zone.

MEASURE TO BAR NEGRO VOTERS IS FAVORED

Slade's Interpretation of Constitution's "Good Character" To Be Recommended to House.

The disfranchisement bill of Representative Slade of Muscogee, which its author, says is an interpretation of the "good character" clause in the State Constitution, will be favorably recommended by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments at Friday's session of the House. The vote was unanimous in favor of so reporting the bill at the committee meeting Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Slade's bill interprets the good character clause to mean that "no man, white or black, whom a virtuous woman will not trust in a place of seclusion without fear of physical assault, shall be allowed to vote."

The right to strike off names of voters is vested in the ordinaries of the counties. If a voter objects, women shall not be called in, but the question shall be decided by men who are familiar with the voter's life and habits.

Mr. Slade declared that the bill is not directed against white men, but by its passage he hopes to disfranchise every negro in the State.

"I have been trying to get this bill through for the past two or three years, and am very hopeful that the members of this Legislature may see fit to pass it at the present session," Mr. Slade said.

Weds Fiance, Georgia Man, on His Deathbed

LEBANON, PA., August 1.—The death of Wallace Van Sickle, of Macon, Ga., in a hospital here to-day revealed the devotion of a young woman member of a prominent Lebanon family, Miss Miriam Bowman, to whom Van Sickle became engaged. Shortly after the announcement was made he was stricken with typhoid fever.

The date of the wedding had been fixed, but it was postponed in the hope of Van Sickle's speedy recovery. There was no change in his condition, however, so it was decided that the marriage ceremony should be performed in the hospital. The ceremony was performed, and the bride remained at the bedside of her husband until he died.

FLOOD OF VOTES MARKS CLOSE OF CONTEST

Names of Victors in Georgian and American Pony Race To Be Announced Sunday.

The pony contest is over.

Winners in the exciting races conducted by The Georgian and American will be announced Sunday, if it is possible to complete the necessary clerical work in time.

Until midnight Thursday votes were received. Wednesday night the contest manager and his assistants worked almost as late. Friday finds them exhausted with the late hours and the strain, for the excitement of the contestants proved contagious, infecting the whole office.

Thousands upon thousands of votes, so many that the aggregate seems incredible, were received Thursday and up to the very last minute.

Most of the boys and girls took to heart the repeated warnings that over-confidence was fatal, and put copious quantities of "ginger" into their final efforts.

This was as true in the country as in the city. The mail brought hundreds of letters for the contest department.

From every point of view, it has been a thoroughly successful contest, and, conducted in the most strictly impartial manner, there has not been a word of complaint.

Nothing remains but to count the votes and announce the eleven winners of ponies and carts; the eleven saddle ponies and the twenty-two watches.

'Walk With My Wife, Then Buy Her Shoes'

SACO, ME., August 1.—Irving L. Meserve, an expressman, attempted to take a new pair of tan shoes from the feet of his young wife when he met her walking in Main street with a young man he did not know.

"You're not going to parade in my shoes," he cried. "I bought these and paid for them. If that man is going to walk with you, he can buy your shoes."

With that he pulled off one of the shoes and was about to take off the other when the young man attacked him. They were fighting, it is alleged, when Special Officer Whiteworth placed them under arrest.

Wife's Lips Too Red: Won't Pay Alimony

NEW YORK, August 1.—Emil Kopstein, a wine salesman, told Supreme Court Justice Donnelly yesterday that his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Kopstein, is not entitled to alimony pending the trial of her suit for separation because she painted her lips and penciled her eyebrows.

He said that on July 4, when they were at Arverne, L. I., his wife's cheeks were so red that he wouldn't be seen on the street with her, and he told her that if any other man had been her husband he "would have broken her bones long ago."

Mitchell Named by Anti-Tammany Men For New York Mayor

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—After a stormy all night session of the anti-Tammany allies, John Purroy Mitchell, collector of the port of New York, was named as the fusion candidate for Mayor of Greater New York. Mitchell was named on the ninth ballot, with 45 votes, to 43 for District Attorney Whitman.

The rest of the ticket follows:

Vote Buttons Sold By Suffrage League

Atlanta suffragists busied themselves Thursday in the sale of suffrage buttons and distribution of suffrage literature just to be doing something while their suffrage sisters were parading in Washington. The button sale was held at the entrance of Mrs. Lillian Smith's millinery store, No. 115 Peachtree street, and a neat sum secured. This fund will be expended in the holding of meetings to further the cause.

The sale was held under the auspices of the Woman's Suffrage League of Atlanta, which was the Woman's Civic League until two weeks ago.

$900 Tip by Gates Is Returned by Waiter

MINNEAPOLIS, August 1.—Charles G. Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, nearly caused the collapse of a negro waiter in a hotel cafe here.

His dinner check amounted to almost $100, it is said. Gates called the waiter to him, pulled out a roll of $1,000 bills, slipped off the top one and said: "Here, boy, keep the change."

Gates then left. The waiter turned the $900 over to the manager of the cafe, who mailed Mr. Gates a check for the amount.

ARE YOU MIXER? THEN YOU CAN WIN PRIZE

Want Ad Contest Offers You an Opportunity to Use Your Wide Acquaintance.

How many people do you know? How long is your list of acquaintances, friends, fellow club members, folks who know you, personally or through business connections?

Well, the more people you know the better your chance to win first prize in The Georgian Want Ad Contest.

But they can not help you unless they know you're in the game. Be sure to tell them you're a contestant, out to win, and want their votes.

The Want Ad man will help you reach every friend in the city if you'll ask him.

Everybody in Atlanta needs a Want Ad sooner or later. They're going to advertise for something, that's certain. Everybody does.

Tell your friends to use Georgian Want Ads and vote for you. They can cast ten votes for every cent they spend in Want Ads. All they need do when they send in the ad is to ask that the votes be credited to your name.

The contest promises to be the one big event of the season. It isn't too late to get in and win. If you want an automobile or a piano or any of the big prizes, see the Want Ad man at the office of The Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian, 7 Edgewood avenue. He will tell you all about the conditions and help you get a start.

Fines Both Twins To Get Right One

PHILADELPHIA, August 1.—It makes $8.50 difference to-day to either Frank or Harry Swartz, 19 years old, because the are twins. Magistrate Morris fined them both that amount because he couldn't tell which had been guilty of flirting in the park.

The only difference between the pair was that one of them wore white socks and the other lavender.

LIFE TERMS FOR TWO DALTON SLAYERS

Judge Fite Sentences Dan Hatfield and Clem Poole—Quick Justice Meted.

DALTON, Aug. 1.—Judge Fits today sentenced Dan Hatfield, convicted of the murder of Will Parish, and Clem Poole, convicted of murdering Policeman Harry Cook to the penitentiary for life.

In the Hatfield case he held there was doubt as to the existence of a conspiracy, and exercising the right where conviction comes from circumstantial evidence alone did not pass the death sentence, as was expected from the jury's refusal to recommend mercy.

John and Tom Nicodemus, indicted with Hatfield, were released on their own recognizance, the outcome of the Hatfield case not showing enough evidence to convict them.

Convicted in Four Days.

Poole was found guilty Thursday night, the jury making a recommendation for mercy. The verdict was returned twelve hours after the trial began. The evidence was completed at 2:30 o'clock.

Poole shot and killed Policeman Cook Sunday near midnight. Monday afternoon he was captured in Chattanooga, and Tuesday afternoon was indicted for murder. He was convicted four days after the killing.

The case attracted approximately 1,000 people, the courtroom being filled to its capacity.

Defense Claims Insanity.

The defense stood on a plea of insanity, relatives of the prisoner swearing that for the past few months, since his marriage, Poole had changed greatly, and was at times not mentally responsible for his actions. The defense also contended that Cook, being without a warrant for Poole's arrest on the charge of shooting at his wife, had no right to seize him.

The State put witnesses on the stand who testified that they had known Poole for years and believed him capable of distinguishing right from wrong.

Girl Wife in Court.

Witnesses testified that Poole shot Cooke while the officer was only attempting to arrest him. In his statement, Poole said Cook was clubbing him, but this was not borne out by other testimony. The prisoner also said that he was attempting to get rid of his pistol and it was accidentally discharged.

Cook while the officer was only at with him throughout the trial, weeping at times. His aged father and mother were also present.

At 5:15 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Judge Fite had completed his charge and the case had been given to the jury.

Cabaret Singers Do Not Dare Pneumonia

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—A report submitted to Mayor Harrison to-day by his legal adviser on the subject of cabaret shows said:

"The dancers in the cabarets I visited were modest when compared to some women—society ladies—who were sitting in the audience. Some of the women who were there to be amused were in greater danger of catching cold in the chest than any of the cabaret performers."

CONVICT AUTHOR WRITES NOVEL ALLEGORY

Julian Hawthorne in Perhaps His Last Work in Prison Foresees Wonderful Reforms.

a system of hygiene and bodily exercise and diet somewhat resembling the old Spartan rules instituted by Lycurgus; and a general discipline of mind, manners and conduct as strict as that of West Point, but more enlightened. What had been a stigma became a certificate of merit, and by and by, instead of being sent to jail by sentence of court, men who had failed in life or felt themselves weak and incompetent voluntarily applied for admission. For what they produced they were paid good wages; their families were supported by the Government until the men's earnings could care for them."

Denounces Present Method.

In another article in the same number, on "Self-Respect," Hawthorne brands the dress and branding of prisoners, under present-day prison rules, and the substitution of numbers for names as a crude anachronism, as are also, he says, the titles of "convict," "felon" and "jailbird."

"Their effect," he writes, "is to produce in the prisoner a feeling of radical and permanent separation from his fellow men. It is an attempt on the part of finite human beings to inflict eternal damnation on some of their fellow creatures."

Hawthorne declares that most prisoners mean to be good when their term is up.

"Whether or not their resolution holds firm," he writes," depends partly upon their native strength of character, but in a larger part upon the treatment they get in jail. Shooting and clubbing prisoners and subjecting them to torture has proved unsuccessful in leading them toward sweetness and light. Need for the actual club and gun may arise in an emergency, but the more firm and uniform the discipline, founded, as all discipline should be, on enlightened principles of order and efficiency, the less likely is such emergency to occur."

What's T. R. Up To? Hist! Enlisting Men To Conquer Mexico

Editor's Note.—The riddle is solved. "What is Roosevelt doing?" the public has asked. Here is an answer by an ingenious and enterprising Texas correspondent. Whatever its merits or demerits, it is worth reading.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, August 1.—Governor O. B. Colquitt was to-day provided with what purports to be reliable and inside information to the effect that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has quietly organized four regiments of volunteer cavalry of the Rough Rider type, composed of trained riders and marksmen of Arizona, New Mexico and Western Texas.

It is alleged that the real purpose of Colonel Roosevelt's present visit to the Southwest is to direct the selection of men for the military division and that he will soon have it in readiness to enter Mexico in event of hostilities with that country.

The circumstantial report says further that Colonel Roosevelt is carrying on this work with the knowledge and sanction of the United States War Department. He will be placed in command of the brigade if war should come, it is said.

The Social World

Interest in the polo match to be played at Fort McPherson next Wednesday, has caused a number of expert horsemen and women to go out to the Fort for practice and to learn something of the game, for future play. It is probable that the next match after this initial one will feature a ladies team. Friday afternoon, Mrs. John Hill, Miss Josephine Windle, Miss Margaret McKee and Miss Louise Windle were out playing a bit and learning points of the game from some of the young officers who are to play in the polo match of next week. A large audience, composed of representative Atlantans will witness the match. The players will include several out-of-town experts, and the officers' team of Fort McPherson.

Society is much interested in the polo match, which is the talk of the town just now.

Stork and Cupid Cunning Plotters

Many a New Home Will Have a Little Sunbeam to Brighten It.

There is usually a certain degree of dread in every woman's mind as to the probable pain, distress and danger of child-birth. But, thanks to a most remarkable remedy known as Mother's Friend, all fear is banished and the period is one of unbounded, joyful anticipation.

Mother's Friend is used externally. It is a most penetrating application, makes the muscles of the stomach and abdomen pliant so they expand easily and naturally without pain, without distress and with none of that peculiar nausea, nervousness and other symptoms that tend to weaken the prospective mother. Thus Cupid and the stork are held up to veneration; they are rated as cunning plotters to herald the coming of a little sunbeam to gladden the hearts and brighten the homes of a host of happy families.

There are thousands of women who have used Mother's Friend, and thus know from experience that it is one of our greatest contributions to healthy, happy motherhood. It is sold by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle, and is especially recommended as a preventive of caking breasts and all other such distresses.

Write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 131 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their very valuable book to expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

DORSEY UNAWED BY GREAT TASK

Young Solicitor Doesn't Quail as He Battles Champions of Atlanta Bar.

fight unafraid; not only that, he is aggressive.

Atlanta's record for big crime trials has not been altogether healthy in the past twelve months. In that time Dorsey has prosecuted Mrs. Daisy Grace on a charge of attempting to slay her husband. Atlanta was intensely interested in this issue. Mrs. Grace was acquitted. Dorsey lost.

He prosecuted Callie Scott Applebaum on a charge of ending the life of her husband. Again the public was deeply interested. Again Dorsey lost.

And then came the Phagan killing. Atlanta, Georgia and the South demanded that her slayer be brought before the bar of justice and be given law's severest penalty.

Frank was fixed upon by the police as the man.

The grand jury indicted him, and Dorsey staked his all on his conviction.

Luther Rosser had been retained as Frank's chief counsel.

Dorsey smiled.

Again there was a flash. Reuben Arnold had been added to the list of legal array to clear the name of the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory of the charge that the had taken the life of a little girl.

Reputation is a big thing. No prize fighter faces a champion without doubts as to his ability to cope with him. The greatest financial genius probably trembled in his boots when he first met the foremost captain of industry. A violin virtuoso bows before Kubelik. There is no pianist who would approach Paderewski without a sensation of awe.

And here in Atlanta, Arnold and Rosser are champions. They are Kubeliks, they are Paderewskis.

Hugh Dorsey hasn't quailed.

Throughout the trial he has been desperately earnest. He realizes the work that is before him. If he has any enemies, they will admit that he has handled his case well.

The Solicitor General is a great deal younger than his opponents. His hair is tinged with gray, and there will probably be more of those strands there before he is through with his clashes with the dynamic Rosser and the erudite Arnold.

He is taking the case with intense seriousness. So far, Rosser's efforts to rattle him by calling him "Hugh," "my young friend," "son" and "bud" have been unavailing.

The practical collapse of his detective testimony was enough to stun any man, but Dorsey stuck it out gamely. There is plenty of fight still in his eyes. It will be there if the case goes against him.

His appearance would indicate that he is holding something back, something with which he expects to surprise his eminent opponents.

Then, There Is Hooper.

There is one thing that every spectator knows is ebing held back. He is a quiet little man, with a scholarly face, a man who has already won his spurs in Georgia politics, but who has not figured extensively in the bigger criminal cases tried before Atlanta courts.

The man is Frank Hooper. He has been on his feet but once. He made an impression then. And when the case comes to its crucial stages, it will be well to watch these two young lawyers arrayed against the admitted masters of their craft.

She lithe and unknown Corbett sent the invincible John L. Sullivan to oblivion. Brian du Bois Gilbert was unhorsed by Wilfred of Ivanhoe. Theodore Roosevelt ran second in a Presidential race.

PLAN WAR ON 34 MACON SALOONS

Campaign of Law Enforcement Advocates Hinges on Pending Injunctions.

MACON, Aug. 1.—If Judge Mathews to-day sustains the injunctions against the four saloons and social clubs that are charged by the Law Enforcement League with being public nuisances in that they are blind tigers, a campaign will be undertaken to close every saloon in the city. Petitions for injunctions against every one of the saloons and clubs have been prepared in anticipation of Judge Mathews making the present restraining orders permanent.

In addition to having to answer the petition for injunction the four saloon men must show cause to-day why they should not be punished for contempt of court. They are charged withhaving sold intoxicating liquors after being enjoined not to make such sales. The question of whether beer containing 5½ per cent of alcohol is intoxicating is an issue in the case. However, the Law Enforcement League officials claim to have evidence of whisky sales against thirty-four saloons.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Jose Collins

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

ABOUT the hardest work I know is just being a beauty. For there is the ever-present dread that if you relax eternal vigilance, your greatest stock in trade will diminish and dwindle to nothingness! On the other hand, if you are merely on the way to the acquisition of beauty, any little trace of loveliness you acquire is net gain.

However, queenly Jose Collins, of the Ziegfeld Follies of 1913, in New York, refuses to worry about the ravages of time or avoirdupois. "If I get fat, I get fat," said she with complacent conviction; "I refuse to worry about it, and to lay in a supply of wrinkles and gray hair and insomnia dulled eyes. The women in New York have gone mad on the subject and they would probably look far better fat and cheerful than with the haunted-by-the-fear-of-another-pound look they all wear.

Eat Sparingly.

"I eat sparingly in hot weather, because then I don't feel warm and loggy. I breakfast on hot water and figs, and I eat fruit and salads without oil in great quantities. That keeps my system clear and in good working order. I never eat hot foods in summer, for that would mean putting in some internal heat when we are sufficiently bathed in the warm atmosphere. I keep a watch on by system—if it grows tired or poisoned by some food that was not all it should have been, why, I live on some soft of fermented milk product—some of the lactic acid drinks that put me in sweet, healthy trim soon again. Every one ought to be her own diet expert.

"I've another notion, if you care to hear it: Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert, too. Beautiful hands are improved by pink, smooth, shell-like nails with neat half-moons and white tips. Lay in a supply of rounded orange wood sticks, some cuticle remover, a cuticle food, a buffer, a flexible file, one of the standard polishing pastes, and a nail bleach for removing stains from the nails. Spend five minutes with the nails night and morning, training them into shapely, smooth cleanliness, and see what splendid results you get—this would be my advice to all girls.

"Cold cream to make the hands smooth; careful drying to keep them so, and a little stretching and pulling and patting into long, graceful lines will make the ugliest hand more attractive. And if a fairly pretty hand is scrupulously smooth and clean, and is tipped by smoothly rounded pink nails with no soil or jagged cuticle to mar their outlines, it will be sure to give the impression of being very pretty indeed."

"Every woman her own diet expert and manicurist," I mused. "Then, Miss Collins, you may think also that every woman should be her own hair dresser and an expert on the care of the hair, too."

Care of the Hair.

"Indeed I do," agreed the dark-eyed beauty whose wonderful voice and delightful acting are two of the charms she adds to merely appearing in glowing radiance on the stage. "I think every girl can train her hair in the way it should go—I think it well worth time and patience to learn how to take care of your hair.

"And I think a girl should find a simple, pretty and becoming style of hairdressing and stick to it. It is not fair to train the hair in one direction and then go yanking it off into some other way. A water wave can be put in and even straight, lanky hair taught to look fluffy and pretty.

"Just after your next shampoo press your still damp hair into waves with your fingers and pin the waves into place, and, with the waves still pinned, allow the hair to get perfectly dry; pinch these same waves into place morning and evening with a bit of hot water to add stability to the hair as it dries. Of course, this won't make naturally curly hair—but it will give a pretty fluffy look to locks that might otherwise be an imitation of seaweed.

"If your hair is too long or too thick to manage, cut out a bit of it—if it be too thin, go to an expert for a tonic and apply it faithfully with a loosening, circular motion that is splendid for the scalp—and then you will probably have a crowning glory—instead of just 'hair'!"

So, Little Miss Would-Be-Pretty, just work away at being your own sane little diet expert, and manicure artist and hair specialist, and see if you do not fall heir to some of beautiful, stately Jose Collins' healthful magnetic charm.

"If you are getting fat don't worry about it. Worry will add wrinkles and gray hair.

"Eat sparingly in hot weather.

"Never eat hot foods in summer.

"Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert.

"Girls should find a simple, becoming style of hair dressing."

THE MAID WE LOVE.

"QUEEN of her realm!" uncertain name that puzzles and enchants your.
For the "Realm" and what it is the name no knowledge grants you.
Behold! She is a maiden fair who splendidly can cook,
And I would warn you one and all, there's danger in her look.

Her salads are a dear delight—likewise the cherry pies;
All folk must cater to this maid as in their power lies.
Ah, maid! how trembles all your realm when one like you departs,
For you are queen of rolling pins and of policemen's hearts.

HAVE YOU NOTICED THAT—

It is much easier to live because we won't have to go on doing it forever?

Pleasures and troubles are alike in one respect—they are both greatest in anticipation!

When the average man "plays to the gallery" the only observer in that gallery is his own self-esteem?

Yesterday's triumphs, defeats and sorrows all belong to yesterday for tears or smiles?

The chap who lives only to enjoy life never enjoys anything?

The Greatest of All

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"WHOM," is one of the first questions asked a child, "do you love?"

There is a sudden clasping of little arms around the mother's neck, childish lips are pressed against her cheek and there comes the whispered response, "You."

It is the first word childhood hears—"love." It has been a life that was misspent if it is not the last.

The journey through life is only a few hours as compared with eternity, but it is long and weary as we measure it with our short-sighted eyes. To amuse ourselves we invent many diversions, hoping to find happiness in fame, wealth, pleasure, ambition, and when these fail we ask forgetfulness in work.

But nothing is worth while, nothing satisfies, though we gain all that we longed for, unless we also have love.

It lightens the burdens. It illumines the dark places. It gives purpose to the purposeless. It is the source and the sustenance of faith, courage, hope, ambition, patience and every ennobling quality.

It Gives Courage.

Without Love, wealth is poverty. With Love, poverty is wealth. It puts courage in the veins of the coward. It makes a man rise above himself. It is the transforming wand of the only good fairy the times have left us.

Love youthifies. Though one be old and wrinkled and bowed with the years, one is not old so long as there remains in the heart a reverence for Love. The young woman who scoffs at it is older than her grandmother who trusts and believes.

It beautifies. The plainest woman becomes beautiful when she loves and is loved.

Love strengthens. The mother never tires, though she works every hour, because she is strengthened by Love. The husband and father is persistent in the face of discouragement and defeat and spends his life in toil for those he loves.

It enthuses. No man is a good workman if he has only himself to provide for. The best workman is the man who loves.

It is the universal gift, and one which depends not upon the whim or caprice of some fickle goddess that presided at our births, but upon ourselves. We were born for love, and those who do not love.

If there were no such thing as love, the churches and theaters would close and the printing presses would stop. all we need do is to beleive and it is ours.

It is independent of social position, age, color or wealth. The love that comes to the maid is just as sweet as that which comes to her mistress, and just as true. There is more of it in the home of the poor than in the home of the wealthy.

It is about the only thing in life that defies a bank account. One is never defeated so long as one loves. The failures, the loafers, the drunkards are. It is not only the greatest thing in life; it is life itself, and the world revolves around it.

It is the hope of youth and the comfort of old age. All along the way there is nothing that will take love's place.

The young woman is stretching out her arms to welcome it. The older woman owes it to her younger sister to forget love's bitterness and disappointments, and meet her with sympathy and understanding in the greatest experience life holds.

The old owe it to themselves to have faith in it. They owe it to their juniors to express that faith often. The mother or father who holds that a marriage for wealth or social position is more desirable than one for love is not fit to be a parent.

It is an injustice to the son and daughter more tragic in its results than beating a child.

One Against Higgins

Higgins is troubled with an overweening curiosity about other people's affairs. Occasionally he gets taken down, however. He met Smithers in an omnibus; he does not know Smithers very well, but he "my boys" him as if he were a lifelong friend.

"Been buying, eh?" he inquired at once.

"Yes," said Smithers, deliberately. "I've been looking after a horse for my wife."

"Have, eh? Well, let me look him over for you."

"Oh, I've bought him!"

"Not without trying him? Was he sound?"

"He appeared to be."

"Doesn't shy?"

"No; certainly not."

"Good mouth?"

"Y-e-s; I think so."

"Good manners?"

But here Smithers arrived at his crossing. When he reached the door of the 'bus, he called back to Higgins:

"I neglected to mention the kind of horse my wife wanted. It was a clothes-horse."

CHAPTER XI.

THE taxicab bearing Mary Danforth and her escort drew up in line with other vehicles before the great opera house, which rose huge and somber above the flare of white lights upon the street. While Craig conferred for a moment with the chauffeur, the girl looked about her, noting the hurry and clamor of Broadway at theater-time. The rattle and snort of automobiles, the clang of passing cars, the gleaming and flashing electric signs—seemingly pasted high against the dark sky—the shuffle of thousands of feet, the light laughter of passing couples and the smiling faces which surged past her into the broad lobby of the opera house, thrilled her and almost intoxicated her with a strange sense of gayety and light-heartedness. She laughed spontaneously when Craig returned to her and, laying a light hand on her arm, guided her through the crowd, of which they became immediately a part.

"It was very nice of you to ask me to come with you this evening," she said ingenuously, looking up brightly into the eyes of the man at her side.

"I'm very glad now that I asked you," he returned bluntly. "But I was not so very glad at first, for you did not seem at all keen at the thought of going with me."

The boyish frankness of the speech astonished the girl.

"Why, what a ridiculous thing for you to imagine, Mr. Craig!" she exclaimed. "What made you fancy that?"

"I didn't fancy it, I knew it," Craig declared, handing his checks to a supercilious usher who guided the young couple down the aisle. "I know there was some reason why you thought you would not go with me at first. Was I not right?"

They were seated now, and Mary, althought she flushed hotly, answered him with a frankness that matched his own.

"Yes," she murmured, "there was a reason."

"I knew it," he said triumphantly, and droped the subject.

Whether the thought of her former reluctance acted as a spur to Craig's endeavors to appear well, or whether he was merely at his ease and happy, Mary did not know, but when the overture had begun she looked covertly at her escort and told herself that she found him charming. He was not particularly brilliant, she admitted, but she always bought that brilliant men were conceited anyhow. Yet she considered this man intinsely interesting and amusing in a boyish, unaffected way, while his attitude of defrence and respect toward herself touched and pleased her. She smiled with happiness as the great orchestra played. If she had known what a tender, satisfied smile hers was at this time she would have been amazed.

When the curtain rose she forgot Craig and allowed herself to be swept along on the waves of harmony. When the curtain fell, she turned to her companion, her eyes shining.

"Oh, don't you just love it?" she asked impulsively.

"Yes," he answered, smiling significantly down at the hand she had unconsciously laid on his sleeve.

"I was talking about the opera, Mr. Craig," she reminded him with an effort at severity, withdrawing her hand quickly.

"Oh, the opera?" he queried, unabashed. His face was grave, but there was a light of quiet amusement in his gaze, a gleam that made Mary laugh, in spite of herself. "Yes, I like the music right well, too," he went on, "but I reckon the opera isn't a very good one, is it?"

"Indeed it is," exclaimed Mary vigorously.

"Well, I didn't think it could be," explained the young man, "because I like it, and from what my sister has always told me about my musical taste, I have naturally supposed that anything I liked along that line must be rather poor stuff."

"Then why do you come to the opera, if you don't care for music?" queried Mary.

"The answer to that question in this case is so obvious that I refuse to be drawn into another effort to pay a compliment," he declared. "I really believe, Miss Danforth, that you are blushing again."

"If I am," she returned, with a shrug, "it is because I am ashamed of a man who will not give a frank and truthful reply to a simple question."

His manner changed quickly, and his bantering tone became suddenly grave.

"I wonder if you would really care whether I was speaking the truth to you about some things or not," he said, slowly and softly.

But this time the girl did not answer him.

When the opera was over they were caught in the crowd moving up the aisles and at last found themselves upon the sidewalk.

"If you are not too tired," pleaded Craig, "won't you go with me to Rector's and have a bite of something before we go home?"

The girl shook her head.

"I'd like to," she answered regretfully, "but you must remember that I am a working person and need some sleep. I think that we would best go right home, but I thank you, just the same."

He did not urge her further, a fact for which she was secretly grateful. A sleepy elevator boy took them up to the door of her apartment, then went down again with his car, without waiting for Craig to make his adieus. Mary held out her hand frankly to her escort.

"It was kind of you to give me this delightful evening, Mr. Craig," she said, "and I have enjoyed every minute of it."

He looked down into her eyes as he returned her handclasp. "Will you believe me," he said huskily, "if I say that being with you for three hours this evening has made me very happy?"

"Yes," replied Mary, gently.

He started to speak again, checked himself, and lifted her hand quickly to his lips.

"Good night!" he said abruptly, and turning ran downstairs without waiting to signal for the elevator.

The girl, left alone, raised the hand that he had kissed and pressed it to her own lips. Her eyes were shining, her heart beating fast. Then she let herself softly into the quiet apartment.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Good! To the side door then." And dashing through a crowd of small urchins that blocked the road, they made their way around the house to the entrance mentioned, catching glimpses through the windows, as they did so, of blazing chandeliers and towering plants, and hearing with feelings that may well be imagined, the bewildering tones of an orchestra, mingling with the hum of many voices.

They opened the door. A festive scene burst upon them, but they paid it little heed. The tall figure of the family butler bowing before them, absorbed all their attention, for he wore a look of expectancy and cheerful welcome that added to the mystery of the moment and made it difficult for the doctor to stammer out:

"Where is Mrs. Gretorex? I must see her at once."

The butler, surprised, stared at the doctor an instant, and seeing something in his face that he did not understand, faltered helplessly and turned his eyes upon the detective.

"That Will Do!"

"Mrs. Gretorex," repeated Dr. Cameron. "I want to see her. Tell her——"

"Wait!" whispered Mr. Gryce. "I had better send her my name." And he took a card out of his pocket.

But the butler, more and more surprised, shook his head, and while he did not refuse to take the card, muttered:

"Pardon, monsieur!—Madame Gretorex make her toilet, but if Dr. Cameron will go to his room, I will tell her?"

"That will do," broke in the detective. "Take us upstairs at once." And ignoring with his usual imperturbability the glances of astonished inquiry that followed his rather burly figure, clad in its common business coat, he pushed his way to the stairway without waiting to see if the doctor was behind him.

This gave the butler an opportunity to whisper:

"The bride is a little late, Monsieur, and Mrs. Gretorex asked me to say——"

"I can not wait," broke in the doctor, exasperated that they should still attempt to keep him in ignorance of the real state of affairs. "I will go up, and you see that Mrs. Gretorex comes to me immediately." And he followed in the wake of the detective, conscious from the expression of the faces he passed that he wore anything but the aspect appropriate to his supposed position of bridegroom.

No Excuse.

Mr. Gryce was waiting in the hall above. "I have inquired for the room set apart for your use," whispered he, "and they point out the one at the end of the hall. Isn't it a shame?" he added. "And what pluck on the part of the mother. I declare I had no idea she would carry it as far as this. But I suppose she could not help herself. She kept hoping and hoping from minute to minute that her daughter would come, and has not yet found courage nor opportunity perhaps to explain the situation and dismiss her guests. If it were not for what we have still to do," he added as they stepped into the room which had been pointed out to them, "I would wait and hear what excuses she would frame to meet the emergency; for you may be sure they would be entirely in accordance with the demands of the occasion."

"There is no excuse possible. The truth will have to be told," declared the doctor.

But Mr. Gryce shook his head, and pointing to the clock, replied, "There is yet an hour before us. If she will come at once, Mr. Gretorex may safely be left to announce to the throng that his daughter has been suddenly taken so violently ill that her marriage to-night is impossible. Not one in a dozen will believe him, but the talk that will follow will not hurt you, and to-morrow any turn can be given to the story which the facts will bear out."

"Yes, yes," began the doctor, but he went no further, for at that moment there was a rustle heard on the threshold and Mrs. Gretorex, magnificent in velvet and diamonds, slowly pushed open the door and stood in a dignified attitude before them. Both gentlemen started forward and both gentlemen paused confused, for her air was one of courteous protest, and the glance she allowed to travel from one to the other had nothing but a haughty inquiry in it, which to them, knowing as they did all that was hid behind it, showed a power of dissimulation that for the moment was almost disconcerting. Nor were her first words calculated to better the impression she had made.

"My Daughter Is Here."

"You have sent for me?" said she with a glance at the doctor which completely ignored the detective. "May I ask what I can do for you?" Then as the doctor hesitated in his agitation, she added politely, "It is 8 o'clock and my daughter is almost ready. I hope these few minutes of delay have not inconvenienced you."

"Your daughter!" gasped Dr. Cameron. "She is here?" While Mr. Gryce, in no wise disturbed by the coldness with which his presence had been received, took up a silver paperweight from off a table near by and began to weigh it in his hand while his lips moved with what might be called the ghost of a whistle.

"My daughter is here, of course, sir," declared the mother in tones that were almost icy in their pride and indignation. "Where else should she be on her wedding night?" And she cast a furious glance at the detective, which that person was of course much too absorbed to meet.

"Here!" again repeated the physician, absolutely confounded at her audacity. "I beg pardon, but I thought—"

Her smooth smile stopped him.

"Shall I inform my child that her bridegroom is ready?" she asked, with a polite but doubtful glance at the overcoat he still wore.

Dr. Cameron stared, felt himself inadequate to grapple with the situation, and glanced at Mr. Gryce, who softly laid the paperweight down and advanced.

"Madam," said the latter, "excuse me, but moments are of inestimable value just now, and I must go straight to facts. Your daughter—"

But this woman was not one to brook interference.

"I don't know you, sir," she affirmed, and turned again to the doctor. "When my daughter's toilet is quite complete you will receive a summons from her maid. Would you like any assistance yourself?"

This aroused Dr. Cameron. Advancing he took the lady's hand and respectfully bowed over it.

"Mrs. Gretorex," said he, "you ignore the man you have employed, but you will not ignore me. If your daughter is in this house she must have returned in the last few minutes. In that case—"

But here he was again interrupted.

"You mistake. My daughter—concerning whose movements you seem to have formed the most unaccountable conclusions—has been in this house since noon. She came back with a cousin of hers from Montclair, just as we were beginning to feel anxious about her. Her present delay is owing to an entirely different source. Some trouble about her veil, I believe."

Tantalizing Words.

For the second time the doctor showed intense astonishment. "Mrs. Gretorex, do you speak the truth?" he asked, "Miss Gretorex here and since noon, when I myself saw her at the C—— Hotel an hour ago? You are deceiving me and I as your intended son-in-law will not endure it. Though I pity your daughter from the bottom of my heart, I can not marry her, for her conduct has shown a duplicity to which this tardy return to fulfil her engagement only gives an emphasis."

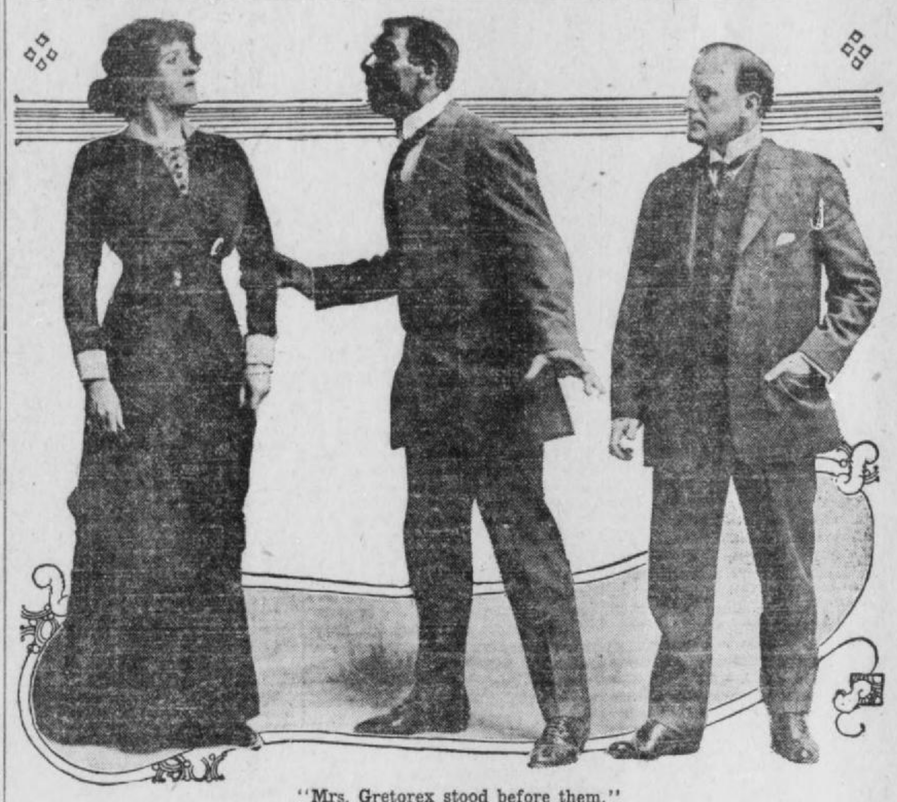

It was now Mrs. Gretorex's turn to look dumbfounded. She gazed at the doctor as if to see whether he were in his proper senses, then she stepped up to the detective.

"This is your work," she cried. "You have gone beyond your orders. Did you not receive my telegram?"

"No, madam."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

DR. CAMERON LEARNS HIS BRIDE IS FOUND

"Mrs. Gretorex stood before them."

PREMATURE GRAYNESS CAN BE AVERTED

THE hair turns gray because it has lost vitality, due to sickness, nervous strain, deficient nutrition and sometimes inherited causes. To pull out the hairs when they begin to turn white is simply to enlarge the cells, coarsen the hair and cause it to whiten more quickly than if left alone.

The best and only satisfactory treatment for premature grayness is a pure, reliable hair restorative, such as Robinnaire Hair Dye. This restorative is prepared in our own laboratory, a scientific formula, and we guarantee it to be non-injurious. It is not to bleach or change the original color, but is to restore faded or gray hair to its natural color and lost vitality. Its tonic effect makes the hair soft, lustrous and beautiful, and keeps it in a healthy condition. Does not stain the scalp and its use cannot be detected.

Don't let gray hair stand in your way either in the social or business world, for thousands of others are using this splendid restorative with best results. We have sold it for over a quarter of a century without even one complaint against it. It is a pure, beneficial restorative and cannot harm you. For light, medium and dark brown and black hair. An Unappreciative Man

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"EVERY time my wife and I go out walking," a distressed husband writes me," she insists upon me pushing the baby carriage.

"When any of my friends see me they laugh and make fun of me. Kindly let me know if it is a married man's duty to push the baby carriage."

No, it is not his duty. It never, since life began, was his duty.

It is his PRIVILEGE!

Whose baby is it, you narrow-souled representative of your sex? Isn't it yours? And isn't pushing the baby carriage on the streets the lightest of the many thousand tasks that attend it?

Did your wife complain during the long weeks and months she carried it before it was born? Did she fear that her girl friends would laugh at her, or taunt her?

Did she feel that she had a grievance when she went down into the shadow of the Valley of Death, and returned, spent with pain, with your child in her arms?

Has she ever reproached you for the martyrdom motherhood has brought her?

She doesn't ask that you sit by its sickbed through the long hours of the night when every one in the household is asleep. She has never expected you to be always patient, tender, merciful, and forgetful of self, denying yourself every comfort if that denial made life happier for your child.

You Go To Sleep.

When you lay your head on your pillow, it is to sink into a sound sleep. When she goes to bed it is to hover so near the border of consciousness that the faintest sigh from the little bed near her own awakens her.

When you sit down to a meal it is to gratify your own appetite. With her, her own appetite is an afterthought. She attends to you and the child first.

When you take your pleasures it is with the thought only of what pleases YOU. From the hour her baby comes her amusements are those that are her child's.

You are stronger than your burdens are heavy, and she has tasks before her every hour that are greater than her strength.

You know only your own aches and pains. She suffers both her own and every ill to which childhood is heir.

Your apprehensions are centered around self. She fears nothing for herself and all that life threatens for her child.

When asked to push the baby carriage, you were ashamed. Ashamed to proclaim by this little act that you are the child's father!

She not only bore all the pain alone, she is not only alone in the wearying care of your child, but she stands alone in the pride that glorifies parenthood.

The Miracle.

If you were more a man and less an empty-headed peacock, you would forget yourself in the miracle that Love has brought you, and would be so overcome with pride that it would make you almost maudlin.

The father monkey in his cage will chatter with pride when visitors inspect the little mishapen image of himself in the mother monkey's arms. Every form of life, no matter how low, is proud of its offspring.

You call yourself a MAN, and you are ashamed of your own child! You are not a man. You are not of as high an order of intelligence as a monkey. You haven't as much heart as the lowest form of creation.

Push that baby carriage, and push it with pride and gratitude! I warn you that if you persist in your present attitude of shame for your own offspring some day you will find the baby carriage has grown into a car of Juggernaut.

Couldn't Eat It.

After being kept waiting for the usual five or ten minutes, the new arrival at the restaurant was duly served with the first course of the table d'hote dinner—soup.

Hesitating a moment, he glanced at his plate, then said:

"Waiter, I can't eat this soup."

"Then I'll bring you another kind, sir," said the waiter, and hastened away.

The guest sighed as the second plate was placed in front of him.

"Nor can I eat this soup," he said, a trifle more emphatically than before.

And the waiter, silent, but angry, brought yet another plate of soup. Whereupon the guest once more remarked in a low, emphatic tone:

"Really, I can not eat this stuff!"

But the waiter, now really angry, summoned the manager, and, to the interest of the other guests in the restaurant, explained what had happened.

"Really, sir, this is most unusual, sir," said the manager. "May I ask why you can't eat any of our soups?"

"Because," replied the guest, with a sad, wan smile, "I have no spoon!"

THIRD PRIZE-WINNING STORY IN "THE TRIPLE TIE" CONTEST

By LILLIAN LUCILE HARDEN,
Oak Street, Decatur, Ga.
WINNER OF THIRD PRIZE, $25

Miss Lillian Lucile Harden, of Decatur Ga.

She is 15 years of age and won third prize in "The Triple Tie" contest.

CHAPTER XLIV.

"IS that you, Steve?" asked Mildred, at the phone.

Yas, sum, Miss Mildred."

"Well, just as soon as Mr. Gray returns, don't fail to call me up," she said.

"Yas, mum, Miss Mildred."

"And have everything ready to start immediately after his return."

"Yas, mum, I is," said the faithful Steve.

Mr. Gray returned early on the following morning and they started on the search for Gordon Kelly.

Mildred was allowed to go on the condition that she remain out of view until all danger was over. Indeed, you could not have forced her to remain at home, so anxious was she to see her lover.

One of Gordon's hints was to flash a light from a mirror so he would know to expect them, so he was not surprised at the two flashes of light, and turned smiling to his friends.

The Guard Surrenders.

Not more than 10 yards away, carefully concealed from the guard but fully revealed to Gordon, crouched five figures. Mr. Gray was in the lead, armed to his teeth. Cautiously they drew around to get the drop on Gordon's guard. Then they sprang forth and stated they had come for the prisoner, and the "prisoner" was prisoner no longer.

The guard gave up his weapon and Gordon Kelly greeted his friends. Doing so, he spied Mildred behind the bush, and ran to her with the speed that marked him such a marvelous base-runner. Amid her squeaks of delight, she managed to say:

"Sweetheart!"

And he returned softly:

"Honeybunch!"

Then Gordon told them about his weeks in captivity, but impressed it on their minds how considerate his captors had been. That spoke much for the mountaineers and they were turned loose on the promise not to capture Mr. Kelly again, but to help him out in the future. No one suspected that those same mountaineers would lay in wait for Forrest Cain and the awful tragedy that happened would happen.

Gordon and his friends returned to the two automobiles which were stationed about a quarter of a mile farther back. Gordon and Mildred sat in the one driven by Steve, with Elmer in front.

Hears of Triple Tie.

"Say, Gordon, do you know that the triple tie is to be played off to-morrow?" asked enthusiastic Elmer.

"Yes, I read all my papers," replied Gordon.

They discussed it a while, and Elmer turned again to Gordon:

"Hey, Gordon, let's go to New York, and you play and I'll be your mascot."

"Suppose I should go?" questioned Gordon of Mildred, with a twinkle in his eye.

Elmer's enthusiasm was contagious, or Mildred would never have replied:

"Yes, do, Gordon; arrive at the last minute and snatch the Red Sox out of trouble with a home run and be a baseball hero!"

"Well, I'm coming to see you this evening, and if I leave to-morrow I will get to New York in time to see the last game," returned Gordon.

Just then the unsuspecting Steve set the "buzzer" going and the two lovers took the opportunity for a kiss.

When they reached the mansion Elmer said:

"Gee, Gordon, wouldn't that be dramatic to arrive and play in the last game?"

"It sure would, Mildred, when can I come?"

"This afternoon at 5 o'clock. It's 4 now. Report on time."

"I will, Boss," laughed Gordon.

Mildred and Elmer reached home about 4:30. Elmer's excitement was over the trip to New York and Mildred's over the reception of Gordon.

Gordon arrived promptly on time. Mildred decided she could spare Gordon a little while if he would play if his manager would let him. Elmer was to go with him and he departed from them to get ready his things. Then they told each other what they had been aching to tell for many weeks.

"Gordon, sweetheart," murmured Mildred going close to him.

"Honeysuckle," was all he could whisper as he took her in his arms.

Gordon and Elmer left early the following morning for New York and Mildred returned home from the mountains.

The day after she arrived home, as the family were sitting at the breakfast table they were startled out of their wits to hear the newsboys shout:

"Wuxtra! Wuxtra! All about the murder of Forrest Cain in the mountains! Wuxtra! Wuxtra!"

Farnsworth, who had seen Forrest Cain murdered, returned to Atlanta on a train two hours later. This is the story he told to a policeman, a detective and The Georgian reporter.

Farnsworth's Story.

"I thought Forrest Cain had something to do with the disappearance of Gordon Kelly, so the next time he left town I determined to trail him. I had my chance this morning. We got off at a little station in the Blue Ridge about 30 miles from Pew Creek. A cracker was holding a horse for him and as that was the only horse in the community I couldn't follow him. I got out of cigarettes and suffered hour after hour until about 8 o'clock I heard a freight train coming and at the same time I heard the pounding of horses' hoofs. Just as the train was pulling by the man jumped from his horse and seized a grab-handle. At that instant a pistol was fired from behind and the man with a terrible screech fell under the moving cars. I went to him and struck a match. It was the lifeless and mangled form of Forrest Cain. I looked toward his assassin. He blew out the light before I saw his face and the inky darkness thoroughly concealed him.

"Why did you shoot him?" I asked.

"'None uv your damned business,' he drawled in smooth, even tones. 'You walk down the track and don't yer come back here in less than fifteen minutes, or you will be lying by that damned cur. Then, you all kin do what yer damned wanter,' he added.

"When I went back he and the horses were gone and I took the next train to Atlanta."

The Deery family were shocked to say the least, but Mildred felt strangely relieved, somehow.

A posse of men were put on the mountaineer's trail. He was caught distilling whisky, but not until he was fatally wounded. In the few remaining hours of his life he told his story of the past few weeks.

CHAPTER XLV.

GORDON KELLY, the baseball idol, at bat, and the bases full.

The White Sox "fans" let out a groan that almost drowned the wild cheers. Bill Smith thought he could distinguish Whisky's shout above all the din. Whisky was certainly doing his duty to Kelly, and as the noise died down a little he began to speak:

"Dat's him! Dat's him! Sho as I'm a libbin, dat's him! Marse Gordon goin' ter win dat game fer de Red Sox! He kin do hit! He gwine do hit!"

At the conclusion of this oration the people cheered again, at least, all but the White Sox. Bill Smith was proud of Whisky.

Kelly, having selected his bat, stepped to the plate in his Ansonlike pose.

Big Ed Walsh bent double, determined to put every ounce of his strength in the speed of that ball.

"Would Kelly hit it?" was the question on every tongue.

He Did Hit It!

Yes! He did hit it! When his bat crashed into that ball it sounded like a cannon.

Never had such a hit been made! The ball soared away out of reach of all hands. By the time the right fielder picked it up Kelly and the three men before him had scored.

The previous cheers seemed trivial to the one that now shook the Polo Grounds.

"He done hit! He done hit! But he show am a mysterioso!" shouted Whisky.

The next man was retired, but the Red Sox had won! The crowd demanded an explanation of how he learned to play ball in such a marvelous manner when he stoutly declared he never had seen a ball game nor played in one before his arrival in Atlanta.

Stahl shoved him out in the center and said: "Now, tell us all about it!"

Gordon, seeing no way out of it, began speaking:

"Well, ladies and gentlemen, it's very simple. I lived in my mountain home, surrounded by every luxury. I desired to play baseball, but had no comrades. My diamond was laid off according to the regulations. A correspondence school taught me what a curve, drop, strike, foul, etc., was, and I made a machine that would hurl balls of all kinds to me. I learned to bat that way. One of my servants chased the ball. I had another machine that I could touch as I left the home plate, that started it; as I returned I touched it again, that stoped it, and I could tell how long I had been. I could bat my balls straight up in the air or use my pitching machine to learn to catch. All my other knowledge I gained from the correspondence school and from the newspapers."

Gordon Back Home.

The cameras and reporters sure were busy that afternoon! And when one snapped Gordon with Elmer, Elmer's joy was complete.

They remained in New York several days. Gordon went to see his uncle and he showed Gordon and Elmer all around.

Mildred wrote them about the death of Forrest Cain and she wrote something else to Gordon that made him go into an ecstacy of delight. She had told her parents of their engagement and neither disapproved. Mildred knew her mother had something to do with bringing her father around. She told him he could tell Elmer about it and that young man was happier than Gordon, if it were possible.

Gordon soon came to Atlanta; their happiness was complete.

In his sweet musical voice Gordon sang "Lips o' Poppy" to Mildred with her arms wreathed around his neck.

"Gordon, sweetheart," she murmured.

"Honeybunch," he whispered.

Ten Commandments for the Summer Girl

By DOROTHY DIX

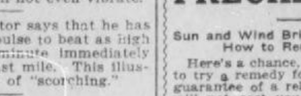

Despise Not the Fat Man.

WHEN thou farest forth for thy Summer vacation direct thy footsteps wisely, for what shall it profit thee to fish ever so cunningly in the waters in which no fish abide? Verily, I say unto thee, that, though there be mountains that touch the skies, or sapphire seas, or swelling hills, or dimpling vales, yet is all scenery an abomination and a desolation, and a Summer resort becomes as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, if so be no eligible man abides thereat.

2—Consider thy apparel, for fine feathers make fine birds, and no maiden with the glad rags is as homely as the Lord made her. Yet be not extravagant in thy dress, lest some youth shall flee from thee, saying: "Wherewithal shall I get the scads to doll such a one up in the similitude of a fashion plate to which she is accustomed?"

3—Before thou disporteth thyself in the ocean, consider what manner of figure and of hair nature hath bestowed upon thee, and whether thou lookest when thou art wet like a mermaid or a drowned cat, for what shall it profit a maiden to dry her locks on the sands if so be she hath only three hairs on her head and looketh like Winter underwear after it hath shrunk in the wash?

Look Before You Bathe.

4—Propitiate with fair words the old cats that knit pink sweaters on the hotel gallery lest they arise and rend thy reputation and tear it limb from limb, for lo, the wagging of their tongues is even as a perpetual motion machine, and the things that they do to a character are a-plenty.

5—Also slight not the homely girl who art a wall flower, for many such are possessed of handsome brothers, and eke of male relatives with 1913 cars, who shall arrive in due season, and to whom she shall present thee, and so shalt thou reap thy reward.

Fish Cunningly.

6—When the musicians smite upon the band of an evening in the ballroom, dance not at all unless some man asketh thee, for, behold, there are many sad sights in the world, but none so woesome as the spectacle of two maidens turkey trotting together and attempting to wear on their countenance the look of one who rejoiceth.

7—When a youth treateth thee to ice cream soda boast not to him of some other man who fed thee on champagne and terrapin, for by so doing thou makest him feel like a cheap skate, and he will pass thee up when he geteth up the hay ride or the trolley excursion.

8—As thou art strong, be merciful. Consider that at a Summer hotel there are seven times seven women to one man, and that the poor youth that thou nallest hath already flagged seventeen mountains, and gathered four bushels of wild flowers and visited Lovers' Leap, and read poetry and rowed boats, and played golf, and danced millions of miles with other maidens before thou earnest, and he is a-weary and fain would rest.

9—Despise not the fat man whose architecture is built after the manner of a bay window. Say not unto him, "Go up, thou bald head," for verily he may be a widower, with houses and lands, and automobiles, and jewels wherewith to endow a wife.

10—Avoid the snapshot fiend who taketh amateur pictures as thou wouldst pestilence or sudden death, for such a one shall take thee unaware with thy head on a manly breast, or a strange arm about thee, and, although it causeth the merry ha-ha at the time, peradventure thy fiance, to whom thou showeth it at home, lacketh in a sense of humor.

Up-to-Date Jokes

Servant (from the floor above)—Ms mistress says as will ye let your daughter sing this afternoon?

Lady (much pleased)—Why, certainly. Tell your mistress that I am glad she enjoys it.

Servant—Yes, mum, she expects a visit from the landlord this afternoon an' she wants some excuse for askin' a reduction in rent.

Gibbs—I admire a man who says the right thing at the right moment.

Dibbs—So do I, particularly when I'm thirsty.

THERE'S a charming little maiden
With eyes so wondrous brown—
Her cheeks with roses ladened,
The talk of all the town.
This winsome little lassie,
Who to-day is seventeen,
The idol of her daddy
And a mother's love supreme.
Years of sunshine have you brought us,
And our hearts with joy o'erflows
To the great and all-wise giver
For the gift He thus bestows.
Happy years they have been to us;
Years of joy and sweet content,
And in the years before us—
Where'er they may be spent—
We'll think of these blest hours,
Which time can ne'er efface;
So if there comes a little cupid,
And his fiercest dart be hurled,
To take from us our treasure,
The greatest in the world;
When comes this bold usurper,
Whoever he may be,
May this love through him continue
Through all eternity.

Household Suggestions

The best method of keeping small screws, brads and tacks from rusting is to place them in small, wide-mouthed bottles, tightly corked. The bottle should be perfectly dry before using. Sandpaper can be kept dry and in good working condition by rolling it and keeping it in a wide-mouthed jar and screwing down the lid.

When cream is only slightly sour it may be made delicious to serve with puddings, etc., in the following way. Put it into a basin with the juice of a lemon and tablespoonful of sugar, and whip until quite stiff. This treatment makes it excellent, and increases the quantity at the same time.

I AM HUNGRY

TO-DAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY

AS we came out of the fashionable restaurant a pale, thin man came toward us. He tottered with faintness as he held out his hand and said:

"I am hungry."

Verdier put his hand into his pocket, took out a large silver coin and gave it to the beggar.

"You are very liberal," I remarked.

"Do you know what it means to be hungry?" he asked.

"No. Do you, perhaps?"

"Yes, I do, and I will tell you about it. You know I was poor when I first came to Paris, and had a hard struggle to get on. How hard neither you nor anybody else ever knew. I woke up one morning in August depressed and hungry, more hungry than I can describe. I had tasted no food since the morning before. I did not have a single cent, and everything that I could pawn was gone. I did not know a single person who might assist me. I rummaged through all my pockets and found nothing but a cigarette.

"I lit it and went out. I walked through the streets, full of despair, seeing no way out of the misery. As the day passed my hunger grew and I grew more and more faint and full of bitterness. Should I really decide to beg? Yes. Why not? My ideals of morals were darkened by the shadow which dimmed my eyes.

"I caught sight of an elderly gentleman, tottered toward him, raised my hat and in a low voice confided my secret to him:

"'I am hungry.'

"He looked at me for two seconds. Then he shrugged his shoulders and said:

His Answer.

"'Then you had better drink no more to-day.'

"I felt as if I had been struck by lightning.

"Close by was a restaurant, from which came an appetizing smell of cooking. How it happened I do not know, but a moment later I was sitting at a table inside. Shortly afterward an omelette stood before me, but only two minutes, then it was gone. Then the waiter served a steak. I realized what was happening and I was seized with fear. I had no money to pay, and I thought the waiters and guests were staring at me with suspecting eyes.

"Just then somebody slapped my shoulder.

"'How are you?'

"I turned around and saw a pretty young woman, stylishly, perhaps too stylishly, dressed.

"'What can I do for you, mademoiselle?' I asked.

"'You don't seem to remember me.'

"I searched my memory and suddenly I knew. She was a young woman I had met once before at Maxime's in gay company.

"'Lili,' I exclaimed.

"She sat down next to me.

His Dilemma.

"'How kind of you to invite me for dinner,' she said.

"The waiter suddenly became very polite. He stood patiently, smiling, waiting for my orders. All confused I ordered what Lili asked for. Then the fear returned.

"'You don't look happy to-night,' Lili remarked.

"I was too nervous to answer.

"'Are you sick?'

"'Yes, it feels very close in here.'

"What was I to do? Should I pretend to have lost my pocketbook? The trick was too old—nobody would believe me. Should I tell Lili that I had not got a single cent to pay with?

"Just then Lili got up and took a powder box from her bag.

"'I will be back in a moment,' she said. 'Keep an eye on my bag, please.'

"She went out.

"Looking around to make sure nobody was observing me, I opened her bag with trembling fingers and took a five dollar bill.

"Yes, my friend, I really took it. Then I paid and we left. Lili took my arm.

"'Will you please see me home?' she asked.

"When I entered her apartment everything turned black around me, but mastering all my energy I overcame my faintness and said:

"'Lili, I was dying with hunger. I could not have paid and they would have had me arrested——'

"She stared at me coldly. I went on:

"'Then I took $5 from your bag.'

"'What do you say?'

"I saw the terrible change in her—the cruel expression in her eyes. Trembling with fury she searched her bag.

"'My money! My money!' she screamed. 'I will send for the police.'

"I tried in vain to quiet her. She screamed louder still. I wanted to run away, but she opened the window and screamed: 'Police!'

"I jumped at her, threw her down on the floor and squeezed her throat together with my hands. She turned purple in the face; her eyes bulged. Thirty seconds more and neither she nor I would have been alive to-day.

"And that might all have been avoided if the elderly gentleman had given me a few pennies.

"Now perhaps you will understand my generosity toward a man who says that he is hungry."

Crackers Loosed a Flood of Runs

Holland and Holtz Looked Good

By O. B. Keeler.

ALL the tallies that had backed up in the Crackers' systems while they were losing one-run margins on the late excursion burst forth in wild and exatic profusion in the first home engagement, the Volunteers the sufferers, 10 to 2.

Specifically, the explosion took place in a single inning. Books could be written about that inning. Poets might make odes and epics on it. Oscar Strauss might set it to music. Sousa's band might play it—but it is doubtful if even the "March King's" interpretation would equal that of the Crackers.

Returning to the date of the outburst, we find it to be located in the eighth round, domestic portion. Also, it was shortly before six bells, while the shades of night were falling at about the same rate of speed set forth in the well-known biographical sketch entitled, "Excelsior," or "A New Breakfast Food."

The contest had worked itself around to a 2-to-2 tie, which sounds like the midnight choo-choo if you say it fast. Dent and Beck, long pitchers with short moniekers, were having what is commonly known as a slab duel, with both sides wasting a good many hits on comparatively few runs.

A detailed recital of the eighth inning would be piling it on. Gently summarizing results, the following appears:

Every Cracker in the game scored a run except Harry Holland, who was sent up to sacrifice before Bill Smith had any idea to what extremity Beck and the Vols were planning to blow.

Six hits were compiled by the Crackers, Welchonce opening the trouble with a Texas League single and closing the scoring with a ringing double down the right field foul line, unloading the towpath of three mates.

Beck contributed two bases on balls, a hit batsman and a two-base throw to the general merriment in the first one-third of the inning. After Welchonce got his second hit, Manager Schwartz got the derrick in working order and removed Mr. Beck from the field of battle.

But Mr. Schwartz did not calculate spoiling another regular pitcher, or even Fleharty, who had been in the bullpen most of the afternoon. He sent in a Mr. Young, who habitually plays right field. And Mr. Young smiled at the wild applause—and retired the side. Smith fouling to Gibson and Bisland flying to Daley.

BARRING a desperate attempt on the part of J. Pluvius to smear the doings, the other part of the game was reasonably conventional, interest centering in the performance of Harry Holland, the former Tech star, who played third base, and Holtz, the new outfielder. The Volunteers had had their first turn at bat, and one Cracker was salted in the same round, when the bottom fell out of a black cloud, which had been sneaking up behind the stands. For five minutes it rained in the proverbial sheets. Then the downpour slackened, the sun came out, and after twenty minutes' delay, Umps Stockdale came out, walking on his heels, and the combat was renewed.

HARRY HOLLAND looked like a regular ball player. He stood well at the plate, crowding it close, and while he did not get a hit, he looked over the pitching coolly and did not hit at any bad ones. He did not miss a single swing, either, and he laid his sacrifice down in classy style. In the field, he handled his single chance accurately and with speed, making a perfect throw to first from a rather difficult position.

One bit of fielding won't go to Holland's credit in the records, but he showed well in it, just the same. In the first inning, with two gone, Hofman got on by Bisland's wild peg. "Circus Solly" kept right on legging it, and Agler whipped the ball to third. Holland putting it on the sliding big leaguer in clever style. But Kerin ruled that Artie should have stopped at second under ground rules, the ball having got mixed up with the boxes. So the effort went for nothing.

HOLTZ made a becoming bow to the noble twelve hundred at the game. He got two hits and a base on balls out of four appearances. One of the wallops scored a run, and both were made with somebody on. In the field, the big fellow made a couple of nice running catches, the last one, a Texas Leaguer from Gibson's bat, that looked good for a hit. He did not show any amazing speed on the towpath, but used judgment in one particular instance, when he took advantage of a wild pitch that Gibson stopped to sneak down to second. He did not look at all like the typical bush leaguer.

ONE of the most complicated double plays ever presented on any stage came off in the sixth inning, and it deserves a chapter all to itself.

A base on balls and a two-base throw by Beck had put Bisland on third, with one down. Holland hit sharply to Jack Spratt at third, and Bisland was trapped. While he was being chased to death, Holland worked around past second, and after Spratt had put the ball on the dodging Bisland, a snap throw nipped Harry. The two-ply killing read this way:

Spratt to Gibson to Spratt to Beck to Spratt to Perry.

VANDERBERRY MAKES NEW 4-MILE MOTOR RECORD

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—The thousands who saw the final heat in the four-mile Pennsylvania Sweepstakes at the East End Motordrome last night witnessed the greatest speed contest ever run in Pittsburg. It was not alone because a new world's record for four miles was made that the race was unusual, but the spectacular manner in which the racers performed. Twenty times around the big wooden saucer Russell Smiley, Billy Vanderberry and Jack Harding raced at the average speed of 81 miles an hour, with their elbows touching frequently.

"Speedy Van" was a few inches ahead at the finish. The riders were so close the crowd did not know that Harding was second until the result was announced. The time for the four miles, 2 minutes 58 seconds, is two seconds under the former world's record.

Vedder Sitton Hurls No-Hit, No-Run Game

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 1.—P. Vedder Sitton, former Atlanta pitcher, now with the Troy club, of the New York State League, shut Wilkesbarre out without a run or hit yesterday afternoon. Not one of the visiting players reached second base, and only three reached first, each on a base on balls.

Sitton received brilliant support.

Sitton is one of those ball players whom the finger of fate seems to touch at widely separated intervals, and with something like a caress.

He is remembered around the SouthernLeague as the chap who helped to win two pennants in a single year, and came within a game of making it three.

In 1908, Sitton's work on the slab was responsible for the pennant in the Sally League. Then he went to Nashville, and pitched the final game of the season, on which the pennant depended, beating Breitenstein of New Orleans, 1 to 0. Then the youngster went to Cleveland, making its best attempt to win an American League pennant. But Cleveland lost out in the last pair of games.

Since then Sitton has been drifting about the country, pitching grand ball in flashes and streaks.

MEETING TO-NIGHT TO FORM ANGLERS' CLUB

The first meeting of the prospective Atlanta Anglers' Club is to be held at 8 o'clock to-night at the Yancey Hardware Company, 134 Peachtree street. Dr. Allan Fogle and C. P. Watson have made the arrangements for the meeting and request all who are interested in the promotion of angling in this vicinity to attend.

Mr. Fogle says that either Piedmont or Lakewood would would make an ideal place for fly-casting tournaments, which are among the prettiest sporting events to be seen anywher to-day. The ultimate object of the club would be affiliation with the national organization. Mr. Watson, of the Yancey Hardware Company, is answering all inquiries concerning the prospective club.

CARDINAL OWNER WILL TRADE ALL HIS PLAYERS

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—President Schuyler P. Britton, of the Cardinals, is on the warpath and in an endeavor to strengthen that club to-day declared he would trade every member of the club except Manager Miller Huggins. It means the Ed Konetchy, Harry Sallee, Bob Harmon, Charley O'Leary and recruits, will be swapped if there is a chance to strengthen the club.

Whether any trade will be made is not known, but President Britton announced that negotiations have been opened with the Giants, Reds and other clubs. The tumble in to eighth place for the first time in years is too much for President Britton and Manager Huggins.

MAY INCREASE FEDERAL LEAGUE TO SIXTEEN CLUBS

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—Directors of the Federal League go into an important session here to-day. Two propositions, one to make the Federal Baseball League an eight-club affair, and another to make it a twelve or sixteen-club league, a sort of tandem league, with an Eastern and Western division, will be discussed.

Baseball men in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Detroit, Milwaukee and Cincinnati, who have petitioned for admission, are anxious to get action, it is said. Many other cities seek admission, and magnates have announced they will deposit the $10,000 necessary to insure their finishing the season.

DETROIT BUYS PITCHERS NORTH AND REYNOLDS

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 1.—President Navin, of Detroit, announces the purchase of Pitcher North, of Jackson, of the Southern Michigan League, and Pitcher Reynolds, of Topeka.

North is expected to report next month, but Reynolds may complete the playing season with Topeka.

FOILED.

A bandit placed a gatling gun against a stranger's brow.
The stranger merely smiled at him
and said: "Pooh, Pooh, for thou!
Pooh, Pooh for thou, and likewise
Fudge and also Pish and Tush!
I do not fear the gatling gun that
stares me in the mush,
For I have been in baseball parks
where peanut merchants ply,
And I have sat there unafraid and
looked them in the eye,
And though they poked me in the sluts and gave me bitter pain,
And though they walked upon my
corns, they tortured me in vain.
What chance have you, an amateur
to make me tremble now?
Again I say Pooh, Pooh, and Tush
and likewise Fudge for thou!"
The bandit slowly went his way, and
sore at heart was he.
"What chance is there," he sadly said,
"for bush league guys like me?"

Quoth the London Daily Express: "The monotony of defeat becomes depressing." This sounds as if it were written by a baseball scribe in St. Louis.

Frank Navin is one of the few magnates who have the interests of the public at heart. Realizing that the good citizens of Detroit wanted some regular baseball, he staged a game between Buffalo and Providence.

It is said that Bill Carrigan will be given a free hand in Boston. In other words, he may do as he pleases, as long as he pleases J. McAleer.

A baseball manager these days is almost as sure of his job as a President of Mexico.

Ever and anon a scout unearths what he calls a slugging outfielder, but he fails to inform us whether said outfielder slugs the ball, the umpire or his fellow athletes.

OUR BLUE LAWS.

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter,
But wear a skirt and an overcoat
When you go in the water.

It is hoped that none of the Giant pitchers will attempt to bean the Great Zim. If Mr. Zim were hit on the head with sufficient force, it would sprain his ankle.

"Boxers Seek Work," quoth a headline, but it fails to tell us whom they seek to work.

As a wise old gent once remarked, a man is known by the guys he hangs out with. After consorting with Tom Jones for a few years, Ad Wolgast bets $25,000 a throw as if he really meant it.

Just to show that he is a versatile manager, Joe Tinker occasionally loses two games a day instead of one.

Even if Horace Fogel's new league does not pan out, he can make a good living by hiring out as a model in a phonograph factory.

Sitting in his Morris chair in New York, Jim Corbett hands us a vivid description of the Williams-Ledoux conflict in Los Angeles, thereby demonstrating that he is the greatest long distance eyewitness in captivity.

HUMAN NATURE.

Were I a baseball magnate
And owned a team or two,
I'd hunt the golden kale, I fear,
And walk upon the public's ear
The same as magnates do.

No, Rudolph; there is no truth in the report that Roger Breanahan and John Evers will double up in a vaudeville stunt next winter.

White and Whitney to Mix Here

Castro Starts "Regular" Club

By Left Hook.

CIPRIANO CASTRO, an exiled personage, was a rank bush leaguer compared to his nephew, Count Lou Castro, when it came to promoting. Cipriano tried to promote matters down in Venezuela, but he couldn't get away with it. Not so with Count Lou.

Count Lou got it into his bonnet that boxing could be made to pay in this hustling burg. The Count believes in high-class affairs, high-class clubhouse, high-class mixers and a high-class location.

Result:

Charley White will meet Frank Whitney in a ten-round bout here on the evening of August 13.

On the same program will be two other high-class battles. In one, Mike Saul will endeavor to show Eddie Hanlon where he gets off. In the other, Kid Young will try to avenge a recent beating by turning the tables on Charley Lee.

The bouts will be staged at the Ponce DeLeon skating rink.

The ring will be adorned with plush ropes and highly-polished brass posts.

The Count will referee himself, and will be decorated in a Tuxedo.

ALL of which proves our assertion that the Count is going to show his uncle up. Cipriano never got away with anything as big as this.

And on Labor Day the Count plans to send the winner of the White-Whitney scrap right back at Jack Britton. Within two or three months he believes he will have a championship battle here.

AS for the main bout, let us whisper that it is by far the classiest ever offered Atlanta fans. White is a near champion. He made a tremendous hit here when he stopped Jake Abel in less than two rounds.

Whitney is the most popular boxer who ever displayed wares here. He is tough and rugged, and will give the Chicagoan a merry time of it for ten rounds.

Both boys will be here within a few days. They want to become acclimated, and realize that they must have at least ten days within the portals of the city to get right.

THE skating rink is a mammoth place. Castro, therefore, will put on all of his shows at popular prices.

And it is an ideal spot for bouts, especially during the hot months. The building is situated on a knoll, and a breeze always blows through it. It is a semi-open affair of a place. In the winter the Count will board up the sides and put in a steam-heating outfit.

Milt Saul, of the street railway company, has promised the Count perfect car service to and from the club. As soon as the last bout is over, a string of cars will be lined up in front of the club ready to take the fans home.

* * *

THREE cheers for Count Castro. He is going to put Atlanta on the boxing map.

MATTY OUT TO BAG 30 GAMES THIS SEASON

By Sam Crane.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 1.—Christy Mathewson, who was quite an old fellow in baseball as players go several years before Charlie Ebbets declared that the game was only in its infancy, finds it necessary to step out and give a real exhibition of the art of pitching every now and then to convince some folks that he has not gone into decay.

Matty is not usually prone to amassing records. He discovered some time back in the dark ages of the game that a well-preserved arm, protected from the strain of getting records, paid dividends longer than one that flashed all its best stuff in a short time and then went out like a flame on a wet stick. But if these records persist in forcing themselves upon him, he will not purposely step aside to avoid them.

The Old Master is out to bag 30 victories this season. This is not a record by any means, for Matty himself has done better several times in the years gone by, but for a man pitching in his thirteenth year in the big league, it is strong evidence that he is still there or thereabouts.

Ten-Mile Race Carded To-night

Graves Has Speedy New 'Boat'

TEN corking events are carded at the Motordrome to-night. The fans will get the longest list of races carded so far this season, and every one of them ought to be a thriller.

The feature event will be the Atlanta Sweepstakes. There will be trial heats of one mile and a ten-mile final. In the first trial heat, the starters will be Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis and Lockner. The second will bring together Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther and McNeil.

The first man in each heat and the third man in the fastest heat will battle in the final.

Richards and McNeil had been having things pretty well to themselves until Wednesday night. Then a new speed merchant popped up on the horizon in Morty Graves. Morty has always been considered a top-notch rider, but he has not had as fast a machine as those ridden by Richards and McNeil.

However, Morty is "there" now with a new Excelsior, and it is a bearcat. He hasn't got it tuned up just right yet, although he traveled two miles in 1:22 Wednesday night. This is at the rate of 87 miles per hour. To-night Morty says he will have the "boat" hitting better than 90 per.

The Motordrome Purse should prove almost as interesting as the feature event. This race will consist of three one-mile qualifying heats and a final of two miles. The first heat will find Graves, Swartz and Shields starters. The second heat will have Lockner, Richards and Luther battling, while the third will find Renel, McNeil, Lewis and Glenn fighting it out.

Harry Glenn is still after scalps. He has beaten Luther and Lockner in special match races. To-night he will try to show Billy Shields how to ride. This event is carded for two miles, and is for the best two heats in three.

Glenn is popular with the fans, and they will be cheering him from start to finish to-night.

Following is the complete program:

First Event—Motordrome Purse. Three 1-mile qualifying heats; final, 2 miles. First heat—Graves, Swartz, Shields.

Second Event—Second heat Motordrome Purse; Lockner, Richards, Luther.

Third Event—Third heat Motordrome Purse; Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

Fourth Event—Special match race, first heat, between Glenn and Shields. Distance, 2 miles. Best two heats in three.

Fifth Event—Final of Motordrome Purse, 2 miles. First in each heat and second man in fastest heat to start.

Sixth Event—Special match race, second heat, between Glenn and Shields.

Seventh Event—Atlanta Sweepstakes, two 1-mile trial heats and 10-mile final. First heat, Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis, Lockner.

Eighth Event—Second heat Atlanta Sweepstakes; Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther, McNeil.

Ninth Event—Third heat of match race between Glenn and Shields, if necessary.

Tenth Event—Final heat of Atlanta Sweepstakes, 10 miles. First and second men in each trial heat and third man in fastest trial heat to start.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jim Flynn, who meets Gunboat Smith in a 10-round bout at the Garden A. C., New York, on August 8, is training harder for this battle than for any bout in which he has taken part for several years. "I realize that a win for me over Smith will place me in line for a title match," said Flynn, "and on that account I want to be in tip-top shape when I meet him."

Jack Britton will make his next fight against Frankie Burns at New York on August 11. This information comes to us in a letter from Danny Morgan, manager of the Chicago lightweight.

Jim Coffroth is trying his hardest to match Tommy Murphy with Willie Ritchie on Admission Day. The coast promoter has already secured Murphy's signature, but Ritchie refuses to sign until he hears from Tom McCarey regarding a match with Wolgast or Leach Cross.

Los Angeles fans are giving Jack White a good chance to defeat Johnny Dundee when the pair clash at Tom McCarey's arena on August 12. Dundee and White met about two months ago, and although Dundee was given the verdict after 20 rounds of hard milling, Jack claims he was not in the best of shape for the fray, as he took the match on five days' notice.

* * *

Jimmy Johnson, who sent Harry Stone, the New York lightweight, and Harry Thomas, the English welterweight, to Australia for fights several months ago, received word yesterday that Thomas knocked out Billy Elliott in nine rounds, and that Stone lost a decision to Billy Russell in twenty rounds. Both scraps took place on July 19.

When Kid Williams reaches New York en route from Los Angeles, it is expected that he will be called upon to meet Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight. Ever since Frankie held Coulon to a draw at Kenosha, Wis., about a month ago, he has been after a match with the Baltimore boy.

Terry Nelson, the Greek lightweight, is in good shape for his ten-round mill with Young Seymour at Marietta on Saturday night. Terry says he will go after bouts with some of the tough 133-pounders if he succeeds in defeating Seymour.

Charlie White is certainly one popular fighter around local sporting circles. Fans are still talking about the clean-cut fighting tactics he used against Abel. Charlie had a good chance to hit Abel when he had his back turned in the second round of their recent go, but waited until Jake turned completely around before dealing out the final wallop.

* * *

Ad Wolgast continues to chase Willie Ritchie in an effort to drag the champion into the ring with him again. Ritchie left yesterday morning for Frisco, but Wolgast left two hours later, hoping to corner Willie and force him to sign articles for a return scrap.

* * *

Kid Duke showed the white feather last night when he refused to go on with Kid Brooks in their scheduled finish bout. Brooks was willing to meet Duke and settle for once and all time who is the better of the two, but Duke claimed they could not get any place to stage the go. It looked like a case of cold feet on Duke's part.

CHESS TOURNEY RESULTS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Duras, of Prague; Black, of Brooklyn, and Kupchik, of the Progressive Chess Club, were the winners in the ninth round of the masters' chess tournament.

The leaders to date are: Capablanca, won 13, lost 0; Duras, won 6, lost 1; Black, won 7 1-2, lost 1 1-2; Kupchik, won 7 1-2, lost 2 1-2; Marder, won 5 1-2, lost 3 1-2; Tenenwurzel, won 6, lost 4.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Rube Marquard carries a horseshoe. Knocked out of the box by the Cubs, he still keeps intact his record of nine straight games, because Fromme went in with the score a tie and then was beaten out in the ninth.

* * *

Both the Giants and the Athletics lost all around yesterday in the pennant race, but leads of eight and one-half and eight games, respectively, look very good with only two months to play.

* * *

Although Joe Jackson could not help his team to send runs across the plate, the Naps showed they did not need his batting powers when they walloped the Red Sox in both games of a double-header.

* * *

Miller's drive for three bases with two men on turned the tide in favor of the Pirates in the game with the Dodgers. The Dodgers still could do nothing with Robinson, who has beaten them regularly for two years.

* * *

The Braves jumped on Geyer early in the game. It was well they did, because Sallee, who relieved his team-mate, held Boston safe. St. Louis plugged away, but fell one run short.

* * *

"Chink" Yingling is not with the Dodgers. The pitcher is suffering from poison ivy, with which he came in contact when he visited his home in Lebanon while the team was playing the Reds.

* * *

Frank Chance is not going to quit the Yankees. The report that the Peerless Leader would give up baseball, emanating in Los Angeles, was denied. Chance says he is far from being discouraged.

* * *

No, the Yankees are not claiming any pennants, but two straight victories over the White Sox has inspired Chance's men to try and get out of the ruthskeller.

* * *

The Athletics ran bases like a bush league team while the Browns made six of their eight hits count. The result was that the leaders were trailing at the wind-up.

* * *

Joe Boehling was a broken-hearted youngster to-day. One thousand fans came from his home town in Richmond to watch the star perform. But the Tigers squelched any enthusiasm by beating the Senators.

* * *

"Three-Fingered" Brown could not stop the heavy hitting Phillies and was driven from the box. Rixey eased up after the Reds were trailing hopelessly behind.

* * *

Ty Cobb put a few over on "Shoeless Joe" Jackson in the race for the batting honors. The Georgia Peach had a percentage of .500 while the Cleveland star went to bat six times and got nary a hit.

* * *

The Pirates have bought Joe Leonard, third baseman of the Des Moines team, of the Western League, and have also claimed Pitcher Kent, whom the Dodgers sent to Toronto, under the waiver rule.

* * *

The Reds have sold Pitcher Harter to the Kansas City team, of the American Association.

JAP CUE CHAMP HERE.

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 1.—Ikujar Tamura, champion billiard player of Japan, is here from Yokohama en route to Chicago and New York to play with Hoppe and others. Yamada, the young Japanese player who made a tour of the United States last winter, is said to have been beaten by Tamura.

Bill Bailey Placed On Ineligible List

Bill Bailey, plucky Cracker outfielder, has been placed on the ineligible list by the management, for the next ten days, and at the expiration of that time it is probable he will be released, if waivers have been obtained. This move was made necessary by the signing of Harry Holland, the Tech third baseman.

Bailey had been unfortunate all season. He has suffered from pains in his side, and a pitched ball, striking him in the same place during the New Orleans series, tore loose a couple of ribs and practically disabled him.

Bailey expects to return to his home in a few days and will play no more ball this season.

LEOPARDS AND ARMY POLO TEAMS IN FINAL GAME

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 1.—The Cooperstown Leopards and the army polo teams will meet tomorrow in the final game for the army and navy cups by virtue of their victory in the semi-final games at the point Judith Country Clubs field here yesterday.

Greatest Depth

The greatest depth known was discovered by the United States cable-survey ship Nero in 1900, near the Island of Guam, where a sounding was made of 5,269 fathoms, or nearly six statute miles, a depth sufficient to submerge the highest mountains.

It is probable that future soundings will reveal slightly greater depth.

The creatures of the deep sea are brought up by a dredge or beam trawl towed by a wire rope operated by a powerful engine on deck.

Dragged along the bottom, it quickly fills with animals of the queerest shapes and brightest colors. More than 800 deep sea fishes have been brought up at a single haul.

OUR NORTH AND SOUTH SIDE DELIVERIES LEAVE THE STORE AT 9 O'CLOCK, INMAN PARK AND WEST END DELIVERIES AT 2 P. M. ORDERS PLACED BEFORE THESE HOURS WILL BE DELIVERED SAME DAY.

IT'S TIME to feed Pratt's Poultry Regulator. It hastens laying maturity, insures quick and complete moult. That means fall and winter eggs which bring the big prices. Your money back if it fails—25c, 50c and $1 package.

12 CENTS PER HEN per year is all it costs to keep your hens in profit-paying condition on Pratt's Poultry Regulator. Worth trying, don't you think?

WON'T HURT HENS or chicks or even taint eggs in nests, but it does get the lice. That's our money-back guarantee on every package of Conkey's Lice Powder, 25c, 50c and $1.00 boxes.

THERE'S PROFIT in poultry, when you keep them free from lice and disease. Conkey's Nox-i-cide is an all-around dip disinfectant, spray and lice liquid; easy to use and cheap, as it mixes with 50 to 100 parts of water, 35c pt., 60c qt., 90c half-gallon, $1.50 gallon.

SOREHEAD is about the worst disease that Southern chickens are heir to, and it is just about time for it to appear. Get a box of Conkey's or Pratt's Sorehead Remedy, it is guaranteed to cure this dreaded disease.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—On the strength of cables, the cotton market opened steady to-day, with first prices at a net advance of 2 to 5 points from last night's close, and was sustained in the early trading by scattered covering ahead of the Government report, due at noon.

From many sections of Texas showers were reported and it was colder, with indications pointing for more rains within the next forty-eight hours. However, the market remained very steady, with trading very light. There was no feature of importance.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 1.—This market was due ½ point lower on August and 2 points lower on later positions, but opened quiet, 1 to 1½ points higher. At 12:15 p. m. the market was steady, at a net advance of 2 to 2½ points.

Spot cotton in moderate demand at 4 points advance; middling 6.57d; sales 7,000 bales, including 5,400 American.

COTTON GOSSIP

Browne, Drakeford & Co., Liverpool, cable: "Advance caused by reason of covering by shorts who are nervous and Continental buying."

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 1.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally cloudy over the entire belt; some rain in Northwest Texas and in Houston section; few light showers over the central States; nice rains over the Atlantics. Indications are for favorable to more general rains in western States, particularly southern half of Texas. Considerably cooler over entire western half; cloudy and showery in central and eastern States.

* * *

Montgomery, Ala., received first new bale of the Alabama cotton crop from Montgomery County yesterday.

Rainfall: Abilene, .16; Taylor, .01; Shreveport, .08; Vicksburg, .02; Chattanooga, .01; Atlanta, .94; Augusta, 1.34; Savannah, .24; Jacksonville, .12; Wilmington, .3.; Houston, .88.

Western Union reports that Texas and Oklahoma weather is delayed on account of wire trouble.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Professional belief that to-day's Bureau will show a crop condition deterioration of about one full point under last month's figure held the general market steady, but unofficial weather map readings, indicating near future rains over the long dry area in the West, impelled some desire to sell fall deliveries. However, an official forecast of fair weather in Texas checked bearish impulses. The July option passed into history at New York. The New Orleans position was well liquidated long before the end. Two or three trailers remained at New York and the death throes of the position there were rather exciting, the price ranging as low as 11.90 and as high as 12.25, with swings of 25 points between final trades."

Rainfall: Waynesboro, Cal., .60; Nolly Springs, Miss., 1.60; Okolona, Miss., 1.40; average over belt, .48. Temperatures, 94 to 72 degrees for past twenty-four hours.

Texas rainfall by districts for past twenty-four hours, to 8 a. m. to-day: Abilene, Pierce, .16; Sallinger, Luling, .12; Brenham, Lampassas, .04; Mondo, .10; Houston, .88; Kerrville, .20; Koppert, .84; Taylor, .01. Rainy conditions at Norfolk, Va.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Oceans says: "Opinions among wheat traders last night were not so unanimously bearish. A few of the big operators said they believed all bearish conditions have been discounted for the present. At the same time, they are not looking for much of an upturn, but expect that the strength in coarse grains should have a steadying effect on wheat values. It was noticeable that a number of local bulls took profits on corn on yesterday's bulge. Sharp reactions after bulges are to be expected. Bulls are talking much higher prices."

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—We should have a higher market to-day, and we believe that wheat is beginning to gain new friends around this level.

"Corn—Map shows no rain over the corn belt, except at one or two points in Ohio valley. Look for continued strength in the market.

"Oats—New buying is of a limited character, and local sentiment is rather inclined to be bearish, owing to continued heavy stocks.

"Provisions—Market still shows signs of scattered liquidation, with not much new buying, except in the January deliveries."

Wheat was higher on firm cables, good buying by commission houses and covering on the strength in corn.

Corn sold up on continued dry weather and increased apprehension over crop outlook.

Omaha wires: "Wheat and corn bulletin shows no rain in Nebraska. The entire State is clear, except part cloudy at Grand Island. Kansas City: Corn and wheat region bulletin shows no rain. Maximum Kansas temperatures 87 to 98. St. Louis had heavy shower last night, but did not extend three miles east."

Rainfall and Temperature: Canadian Northwest, 48 to 62; Northwest clear, 54 to 64; West clear, 60 to 70 degrees; Dubuque rain, .04 of 1 inch; Davenport, .02; Keokuk, .01; Southwest clear, 58 to 78; Abilene rain, .16; Ohio valley partly cloudy, 76 to 80; Indianapolis, .10; Chicago clear, 70; Minneapolis clear, 68; Springfield, Peoria clear, 77; Terre Haute cloudy, 78; Kansas City, Omaha clear, 70; St. Louis clear, 78; Winnipeg clear, 62; Duluth clear, 50; Glenwood clear, 65; Bismarck clear, 55.

Gearhart, Canby and Brosseau bought corn to-day. Commission houses led by Logan, who bought wheat. Selling was scattered.

Broomhall estimates world's shipments for the week, exclusive of North America, at 3,666,000, against 4,040,000 bushels last week. Of this Europe will take about 2,400,000 bushels.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Atwood, Violett & Co.: Anything under 80 for the report would be an incentive to higher prices temporarily.

Miller & Co.: We think prices will continue to be controlled by climatic conditions in the southwest.

Josephthal, Louchheam & Co.: We advise sales on all strong spots.

Germany Undecided On Panama Exhibit

Special Cable to The Georgian.

BERLIN, Aug. 1.—Germany has not yet made up its mind whether to take part in the Panama Exposition in San Francisco in 1915.

The Minister of the Interior to-day denied reports that Germany had barred the fair, and said that the Government would not make a decision for another month.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The wheat market at Chicago enjoyed upturns of ½@⅝ at the opening this morning. Reports from our own Northwest were of a favorable character, but these were lost sight of by the trade, who seemed to have oversold the market and were endeavoring to veer matters around into healthier channels. Futures at Liverpool were reported as higher, while spot wheat in that market was ½d@1d higher. Yesterday's easier American cables and favorable crop reports were offset in the Liverpool market by expected lighter world's shipments and a better call from the Continent. While harvesting on the Continent is well under way, offerings of new wheat were reported as light. Northwestern receipts were light, but exceeded those of the same day last year.

Further and pronounced strength was displayed by corn at the opening to-day on a good demand for this cereal. While light rains were reported in a few sections they were in all cases inadequate and in unimportant corn territory.

Oats followed corn, but poor threshing returns also proved a factor of strength in this market.

Provisions ruled higher in the pit with the strength in corn and the higher hog market.

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—The response to the news that the Government is prepared to supply funds for crop moving purposes was not as vigorous at the opening of the stock market to-day as had been expected. Gains ranging from ¼ to ½ were made in nearly all the important issues, but part of these advances were lost later on moderate selling. Canadian Pacific was exceptionally weak, declining 2 point.

With the exception of Southern Pacific shares, which were unsettled, American Railways ruled firm on the London market.

The curb market was steady.

STOCK GOSSIP

G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co., says: "I think we will have a good trading market for the next week with an upward tendency in prices. Would buy stocks on any fair recession, preferring active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Hear rumor that there may be a decision handed down against Reading within the next few days, but would buy this issue on any break, as a decision against the company would mean segregation and ultimately higher prices."

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Information channels favor profit-taking. Sentiment in well informed quarters continues conservatively hopeful, and under all the circumstances would look for buying opportunities in the stocks well protected by earnings, with the intention to secure moderate profits."

Reciprocity Is the Saving Grace of Free Trade

Absolute Free Trade Is Impossible to Commercial Prosperity Without Reciprocity Agreements in Reserve.

A Republican newspaper up East sounds an alarm on the tariff question which is not one whit less an alarm to the entire commercial and consuming republic.

The Republican paper concedes, as all concede, that the Wilson-Underwood tariff bill will be passed and become a law by the vote of a strict partisan Democratic majority. The Republican Senators are not making exhaustive speeches with the idea of converting anybody, but just to go on the record with a vague hope of future reactions toward the protective idea.

But the honest belief of the thinking economist is that this comparatively free trade tariff, if passed, will steadily move toward a full free trade policy in the near future.

It would be difficult to conceive a more definite commercial calamity.

Free trade would be just as distinct an evil in our national policy as a high protective tariff. One is as bad as the other. If protection builds a wall against our importations, free trade gives away our markets without getting anything in return.

Absolute free trade is impossible to commercial prosperity without reciprocity agreements in reserve.

Absolute free trade is as impossible and as impractical at this time as disarmament and universal peace. Everybody would like to see peace universal and the disbanding of armies. But no nation can afford to disband its armies and strip its navies so long as other nations increase armies and build new battleships, which leaves our country at their mercy.

Everybody likes the sound of free trade, but this country can not afford to batter down its tariff walls to universal trade so long as other nations hide behind tariff walls to prevent our products having free passage to their trade.

There is no universal peace until the greater nations all agree to disarm and arbitrate. There can be no free trade until the greater commercial nations all adopt free trade.

It is only by tariff bars held in discretion that we can secure the same trade advantages with other nations that they enjoy with us. It is only by RECIPROCITY that the tariff bars of other nations can be lowered to our trade. As Mr. Hearst declared:

"If we maintain our protective fence we can say to foreign countries: We will lower our bars to your products if you will lower your bars to our products.

"But if we have no tariff fence we can make no such beneficial bargain."

The common sense and the commercial judgment of this country will make a mighty fight before it surrenders the golden principle of reciprocity in any tariff we may make.

The Georgian has demonstrated how free trade on the seas has destroyed our merchant marine.

It is just as easy to see how free trade on the land will destroy the equality and prosperity of our markets.

The tariff is not a sentimental question. It is a common-sense commercial question.

THE TARIFF IS THE PRICE OF ADMISSION TO A MARKET! Congress has no right to make our people pay a higher price to foreign markets than foreign people pay to our markets.

The threat of free trade is alarming. But it is not likely. The common sense of the people will protect the country.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF FREE TRADE.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF PROTECTION.

It is impossible to construct a more just tariff without the reciprocity principle.

Too Late for Archbold

Mr. John D. Archbold must view with regret the plan for Congressmen to vote by pressing an electric button instead of shouting "aye" or "no" when the roll is called. For Mr. Archbold this ingenious invention came too late.

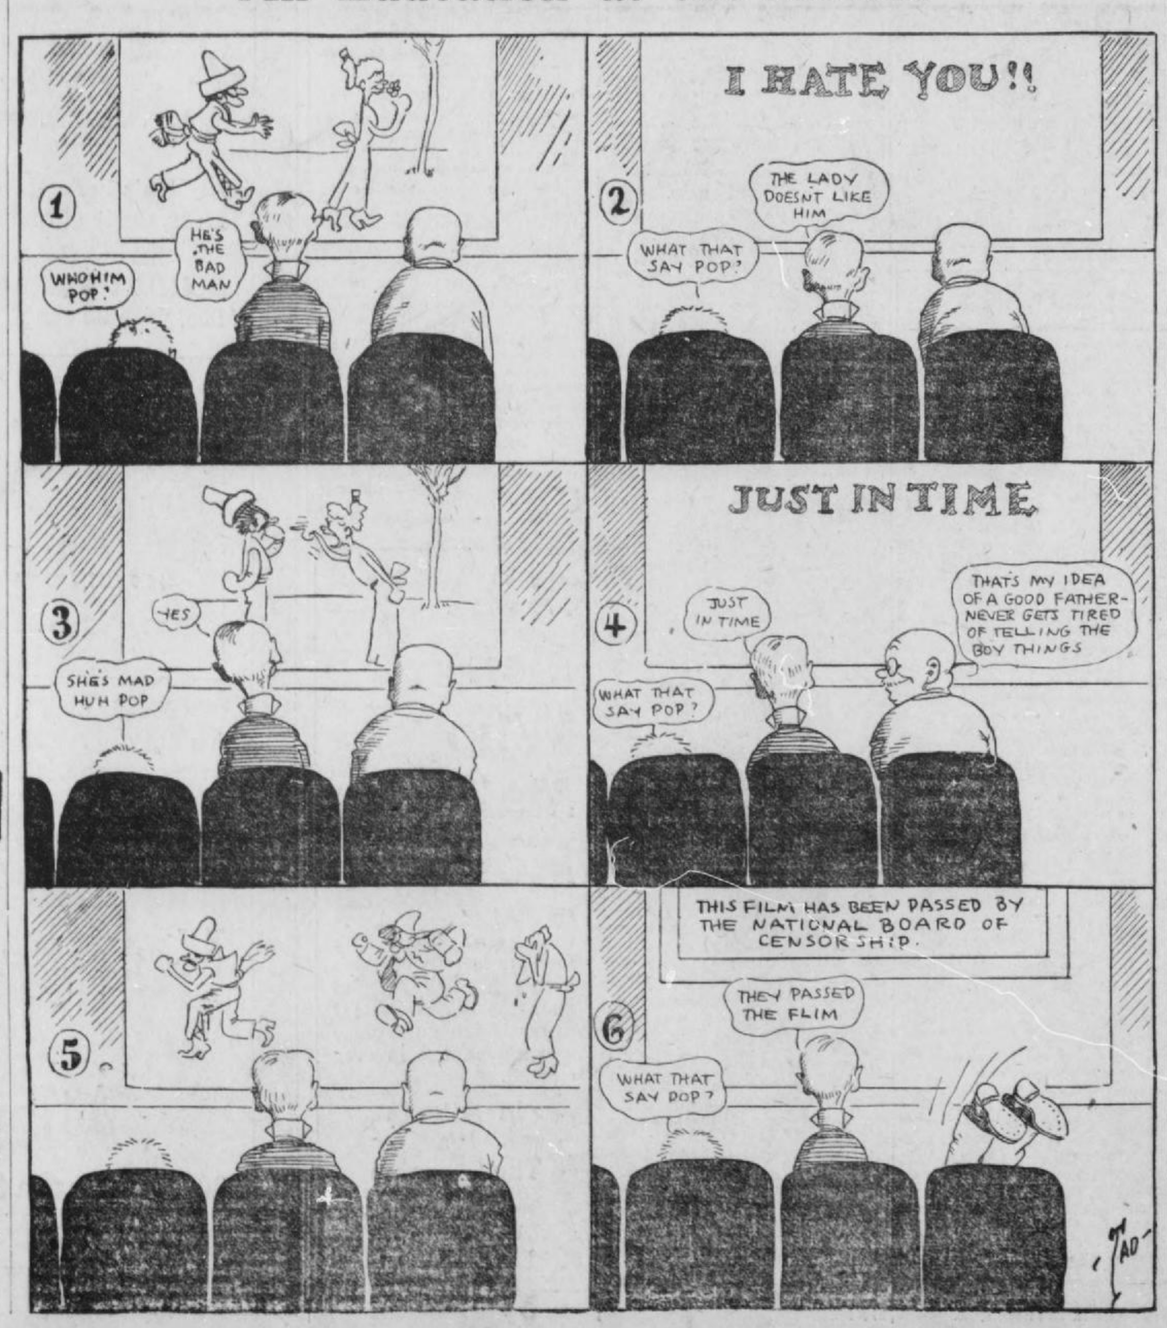

Before the Hearst newspapers ended his control of Senators and Representatives through the judicious use of certificates of deposit, the new scheme wuold have saved Mr. Archbold much time and trouble. It would have been easy to install a switchboard in his offices at No. 26 Broadway, with a telephone connecting with the halls of Congress. And when the roll was called the present master of Standard Oil could have pushed enough buttons to insure a safe majority for all the bills about which he had been writing letters to his private Congressmen and Senators.

But to-day the Archbold grip is broken, and it is doubtful if a member of either House would venture to permit his particular voting key to be operated from the offices of the Standard Oil Company.

The Bubble Reputation

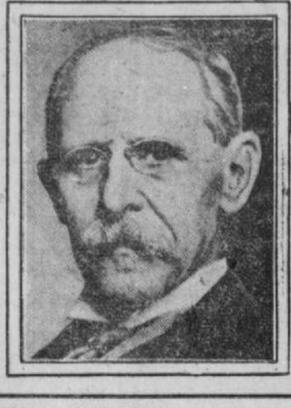

An Education at the Movies

Child Toil of Present Age Worst Ever

History Has Never Known a Slavery So Blighting as That of the Young Victims of Modern Commercialism—Money Spent in Pure Extravagance Would Soon Relieve These Children from the Grasp of Despair.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

IF one-half the energy that is wasted upon impracticable schemes of social reform and one-tenth of the money that is thrown away in pure extravagance were concentrated upon the solution of the problem of enfranchising the children of the so-called civilized nations from their bondage to Giant Despair, whose dungeons echo to the pitiless grinding of the money-making machines, there would go up, within a year's time, such a paean of rejoicing childhood as would warm the cockles of the world's great heart—for the world has a heart, if you can but reach it!

I have just been reading an article on "Children in Bondage," in the Good Housekeeping Magazine, which ought, in itself, to start a revolution. And it has recalled an experience of my own bearing upon this great question of child slavery.

Some years ago I went on a lecturing tour in the South. I stopped one night in one of the busiest of those industrial cities which have sprung up within a couple of decades in that wonderful part of our country.

Chief Promoter of Lecture Showed Writer Thro' His Mill.

The next morning the owner of a great mill, who was one of the chief promoters of the local lecture course, and who took great satisfaction in his connection with so commendable an enterprise, and gladly spent money to keep it going, invited me to visit his mill.

It was near noon when I approached its formidable walls, and was admitted within its guarded gates, and I stopped amazed at the first sight of human life that my eyes fell upon there.

It was a long row of little boys and girls, pale-faced and haggard, and clothed in the flimsiest and poorest garments, with tin pails on their arms—waiting in line to carry their dinners to their brothers and sisters who were haltered to the treadmills within. Some of them glanced quickly about, at the least sound, with a scared expression, as if they expected a lash! Evidently there was no time in that busy place for human beings to stop to eat, otherwise than as the overworked dray horse stops at the edge of the pavement to have a bag of meal hung over his neck, with his nose thrust into it!

My interest in the sights that the mill might have to offer was already chilled, but, nevertheless, I went in. I remembered how delighted the owner had been to see so many of "his people" listening to a lecture on astronomy the night before!

I shall not try to describe what I saw. No doubt it was a sight that ought to have made me thrill with admiration for the practical application of the great principle of "efficiency" which I saw before me, but in fact it only made me sad and depressed.

Pale Faces Obliterated Thought of Marvels of Machinery.

I could not admire the marvelous machinery, could pay no attention to the wonderful statistics that were poured into my ears about the incredible number of this, that or the other things that could be turned out in a single minute, for I really saw nothing but pale, drawn faces, bent over the machines, not daring to look up for a moment, and white, bony fingers doing perilous feats with the darting shuttles, and I heard only the inhuman hum of the mechanical monsters that were devouring those young lives!

I have always regretted that there was an occasion when I had not the courage to say what I thought. But we all meet many such occasions. One reason why the world does not improve more rapidly is because we are too often moral cowards. However, I never think pleasantly of the name of that town, although it had listened very flatteringly to what I did say—but that was about the stars and when you talk about them you can hurt no man's "business."

Such Conditions Prevail Throughout the Entire Country.

Of course such things are not confined to the South. In fact it is to be feared that New England taught the lesson. Read the article to which I have referred if you want a host of other facts about this nefarious business of killing off the young of the race, killing them soul and body, in order to swell the bloated carcass of Mammon! Then think seriously about what you have read, and, having thought, act; for modern civilization is doomed unless this unholy thing be destroyed!

The Toss of a Stone

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and eighty-one years ago a young man threw a stone at a tree. If the stone had missed its mark the most thrilling page of human history might never have been written.

Jean Jacques Rousseau was at the time loafing around the country estate of a rich French woman who had taken a fancy to him, and on the day in question he was strolling through the woods feeling greatly depressed. He made up his mind that he was worthless, and that the best thing he could do would be to commit suicide. However, he would gamble a little on it. So picking up a stone and fixing his eye on a tree some little distance away he resolved that should he hit the tree he would brace up and live. He hit it and lived—and the result of his living was the social, political and economic revolution of France and, indirectly, of the whole world.

In 1762—thirty years after he threw the stone at the tree in the park at Chambery—Rousseau gave the world the Contrat Sociale (Social Contract), and the Contrat Sociale made the French Revolution. For the political student Rousseau's book is one of the most curious in the world. "Historically it is null; logically it is full of gaps and flaws;" as a piece of reasoning it is a wretched failure; but it did the work. It carried the multitude. It made the revolution that made a new France, a new Europe and a new humanity.

"It was Rousseau, as John Morley well put it, who first in our modern time sounded a new trumpet note for one more of the great battles of humanity. He makes the poor very proud. It was truly said: "It was in Rousseau that polite Europe first harkened to strange voices and faint reverberations from out of the vague and cavernous shadow in which the common people move. The race owes something to one who helped to state the problem, writing up in letters of flame at the brutal feasts of kings and the rich that civilization is as yet only a mockery, and did furthermore inspire a generation of men and women with the stern resolve that they would rather perish than live on in a world where such things can be."

If Hamlet is right when he declared that "there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow," then surely we are mightily tempted to feel that all the providences were directing the stone that Rousseau threw at the tree in Madame Warren's park at Chambery.

HAWTHORNE SEES IDEAL PRISONS

Noted Author-Convict Pictures in Strange Allegory What Penal Reforms Would Do.

Four men sat round a table at one of the western windows of the great dining hall; one of them was a recent arrival at the prison. . . . The last course of dinner had been served, and the 400 friends were enjoying their coffee; a few were smoking cigarettes, for this was Sunday and tobacco was allowed to all those who cared for it, on that day. The band was playing Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata;" the music vibrated softly and remotely on the air. The hall had marked architectural beauty, and the colors and decorations were quiet but effective. The tables were arranged with aisles between, at the intersection of which stood immense orange trees and standard roses alternately.

That is the setting that Julian Hawthorne, in what is probably his last article for "Good Words," the magazine of the Atlanta Federal prison, provides for a remarkable dialogue between the four men on "Jails of the Future," forecasting prison reforms.

It appears in the August number, and is without doubt one of the best that the noted writer has produced since his incarceration in prison. One of the four men is a newcomer, both to the prison and to the country, and to him is explained the workings of a system that has revolutionized the treatment of crime and changed jails from "hells to a kind of antechamber to Paradise."

The dialogue is fanciful, but it undoubtedly depicts conditions that Hawthorne believes must exist when humanity has come to recognize crime as a disease and treat it as such. That portion of the article that describes the workings of the jails of the future is as follows:

"No More Lawyers."

"When we found we were jailing about a million men a year, and that the faster the lawyers made laws, the greater was the number of lawbreakers, some of the sane ones got together to talk it over.

"They fixed it so that there should be no more lawyers admitted to the bar for 50 years, and those already practicing should be charged 75 per cent of their incomes in taxes. No lawyer was eligible for election to any Legislature or office of public trust.

"A body of 500 experts was set to work revising the statutes, and they reduced the number of them 90 per cent. All artificial crimes—those created by laws—were cut out; only killing, stealing and lying were left in.

"If these were committed owing to congenial defects, or under abnormal conditions, the perpetrators were but under medical care; if otherwise, the culprits were tried and sentenced, but were given their choice of going to jail, or carrying round their necks, by a small steel chain, a pewetr disk, on which was engraved the crime and the penalty. At first, nearly everybody took the disk, but after a few years the majority preferred the jail. The jails, meanwhile, had been undergoing strange transformations, both actual and theoretical.

"It began to be realized that the handling of crime was the most important function of the State and problem of society. If even justice were done, everybody would be in prison, and so-called officers of justice were often the worst of the lot.

Best Men as Wardens.

"Accordingly, the very best men of the community were appointed wardens and guards of jails. Upon election, these men were given a free hand and all the funds they wanted to carry out their plans. All the old jails were torn down and new ones built upon different principles, both of construction and administration.

"In a few years jails had become a kind of universities for training men who were found to be below the average in intelligence, character or habits in the obligations and responsibilities of the best citizenship. All kinds of trades and professions were taught theoretically and practically, and the men were put to work as soon as possible at such employment as they selected or as were chosen as most suitable for them.

"Along with all this was established

What's T. R. Up To? Hist! Enlisting Men To Conquer Mexico

Editor's Note.—The riddle is solved. "What is Roosevelt doing?" the public has asked. Here is an answer by an ingenious and enterprising Texas correspondent. Whatever its merits or demerits, it is worth reading.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, August 1.—Governor O. B. Colquitt was to-day provided with what purports to be reliable and inside information to the effect that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has quietly organized four regiments of volunteer cavalry of the Rough Rider type, composed of trained riders and marksmen of Arizona, New Mexico and Western Texas.

It is alleged that the real purpose of Colonel Roosevelt's present visit to the Southwest is to direct the selection of men for the military division and that he will soon have it in readiness to enter Mexico in event of hostilities with that country.

The circumstantial report says further that Colonel Roosevelt is carrying on this work with the knowledge and sanction of the United States War Department. He will be placed in command of the brigade if war should come, it is said.

Weds Fiance, Georgia Man, on His Deathbed

LEBANON, PA., August 1.—The death of Wallace Van Sickle, of Macon, Ga., in a hospital here to-day revealed the devotion of a young woman member of a prominent Lebanon family, Miss Miriam Bowman, to whom Van Sickle became engaged. Shortly after the announcement was made he was stricken with typhoid fever.

The date of the wedding had been fixed, but it was postponed in the hope of Van Sickle's speedy recovery. There was no change in his condition, however, so it was decided that the marriage ceremony should be performed in the hospital. The ceremony was performed, and the bride remained at the bedside of her husband until he died.

Girl Fights Turks as Man; Weds In U. S.

PITTSBURG, PA., August 1.—A romance that began in the Balkans resulted in the marriage of Vida Radak and Barbara Coganic, Bulgarians, in Farrell, Pa.

When Radak was obliged to join the army and go to the front, Barbara dressed as a man and entered the fighting against Turkey. After many hardships, she found her lover and fought by his side.

In a battle, she was slightly wounded, her sex was discovered and she was sent back home. Later Radak left the army and came to this country. He sent for his sweetheart.

$900 Tip by Gates Is Returned by Waiter

MINNEAPOLIS, August 1.—Charles G. Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, nearly caused the collapse of a negro waiter in a hotel cafe here.

His dinner check amounted to almost $100, it is said. Gates called the waiter to him, pulled out a roll of $1,000 bills, slipped off the top one and said: "Here, boy, keep the change."

Gates then left. The waiter turned the $900 over to the manager of the cafe, who mailed Mr. Gates a check for the amount.

Try a 3-Year Egg; Ten Tons on Sale

TRENTON, N. J., August 1.—The State Board of Health has released ten tons of cold storage eggs, worth $4,000, which had been held by the Government for the last three and a half years in a warehouse in Jersey City.

Doctors and reporters had eaten cake, custards and ice cream made from the eggs, and not one of those daring persons had died, so the board decided the eggs were fit for other stomachs.

50 MILLIONS FOR BANKS IN DIXIE

Government to Minimize Money Stringency During Crop Moving.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—To facilitate the movement of crops, the Administration, through Secretary McAdoo, announces that $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of Government funds will be deposited in the national banks of the South and West at once. Federal, State and municipal bonds and prime commercial paper will be accepted as security for the money, upon which the banks will pay 2 per cent interest.

Unusual Amount Needed.

The motive of the Administration in establishing this new policy is to anticipate the money stringency in the late summer and fall, which accompanies the marketing and movement of crops, especially when the crops are unusually large, as the harvest now beginning forecasts. He intends to prevent or minimize the usual tightness of money.

The Secretary announces that Government bonds will be accepted at par as security for the new deposits, and that the additional money would be placed only with banks which have taken out at least 40 per cent of their authorized circulation.

United States 2 per cent bonds, serving as security for most of the national bank circulation, have been depressed recently to new low marks, records dropping to 95 3-4 during the past few days. The Secretary's willingness to accept these bonds at par as security for the $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of promised deposits and the inducement to the national banks to increase their circulation up to the 40 per cent limit are expected to help in restoring the parity of the depressed 2s by creating a new market for them.

To Accept Commercial Paper.

For the first time in history the Government will accept prime commercial paper as security for deposits. This privilege will be granted, announced the Secretary, in order to make these special deposits available to the banks on securities readily within their reach.

"The commercial paper submitted," added Mr. McAdoo, "shall first be passed upon and approved by the clearing house committees of the cities in which the banks offering such paper may be located. All commercial paper and bonds must finally be passed upon and accepted by the Secretary."

Dies Trying to Save Chicken From Storm

NORTHFIELD, MASS., August 1.—Richard Stratton, 11 years old, was killed instantly in an electrical storm to-day while attempting to release a chicken which was caught in a wire fence.

Lightning struck the fence 100 yards distant from the boy and, following the wire, passed through his body.

Peace Near in Mine War in Transvaal

Special Cable to The Georgian.

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 1.—A peaceful solution of the demands of the railroad men and miners seems assured to-day. Both sides are adopting a conciliatory attitude.

Troops which were called in to guard property in case violence was resorted to will be withdrawn by the Government.

Fines Both Twins To Get Right One

PHILADELPHIA, August 1.—It makes $8.50 difference to-day to either Frank or Harry Swarts, 19 years old, because the are twins. Magistrate Morris fined them both that amount because he couldn't tell which had been guilty of flirting in the park.

The only difference between the pair was that one of them wore white socks and the other lavender.

Mystery in Blaze That Does $2,000 Damage to Store

Fire of mysterious origin early Friday morning damaged the building occupied by the G. A. and F. Grocery Company, at 23 Piedmont avenue. The loss is $2,000. Firemen conquered the blaze in a hard fight.

The fire was discovered soon after 3 o'clock by Call Officers McHugh, Arnold and McWilliams, who thought they heard a pistol shot in the neighborhood of the store. They found the second floor of the store in flames. They think now what they supposed was a shot was an explosion.

'Walk With My Wife, Then Buy Her Shoes'

SACO, ME., August 1.—Irving L. Meserve, an expressman, attempted to take a new pair of tan shoes from the feet of his young wife when he met her walking in Main street with a young man he did not know.

"You're not going to parade in my shoes," he cried. "I bought these and paid for them. If that man is going to walk with you, he can buy your shoes."

With that he pulled off one of the shoes and was about to take off the other when the young man attacked him. They were fighting, it is alleged, when Special Officer Whiteworth placed them under arrest.

Widow Will Inspect Harriman Railways

NEW YORK, August 1.—Mrs. L. H. Harriman, accompanied by her daughter, Miss Carol Harriman, will leave early in August to visit her ranch in Idaho.

There was a report which C. C. Tegethoff, of the Harriman estate, refused to deny or confirm, that Mrs. Harriman will be accompanied by railroad officials and engineers for the purpose of making an official inspection of the Harriman railroad properties in the West.

Wife's Lips Too Red: Won't Pay Alimony

NEW YORK, August 1.—Emil Kopstein, a wine salesman, told Supreme Court Justice Donnelly yesterday that his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Kopstein, is not entitled to alimony pending the trial of her suit for separation because she painted her lips and penciled her eyebrows.

He said that on July 4, when they were at Arverne, L. I., his wife's cheeks were so red that he wouldn't be seen on the street with her, and he told her that if any other man had been her husband he "would have broken her bones long ago."

Fire Alarm System Nearing Completion

Work on the new fire and police alarm signal system is being rushed by the Okenite Company, despite the fact that an injunction restraining the city from paying for the work has been sought on the ground that the contract is a moral obligation, and therefore not legal.

Fire Chief Cummings speaks favorably of the new system, believing it will mean the saving of many thousands of dollars. The total cost of the new system will be $106,000.

Vincent Astor Bitten By Monkey on Yacht

NEW YORK, August 1.—Vincent Astor has sailed on the Noma to meet the Olympic, aboard of which is his mother, Mrs. John Astor. He will probably pick up the Olympic about 100 miles out.

Mr. Astor's friends to-day learned for the first time of an encounter he had last week with his pet monkey, Jocko, on the Noma. In his attempt to return him to his cage, Mr. Astor was severely bitten on the hand.

Massacre and Pillage Continued by Turks

Special Cable to The Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 1.—The Turks are continuing their campaign of massacre and pillage in the country near Dedeagatch. All the men in the villages of Tartarlare, Seilly, Saryta and Lachman, were killed when the Turkish troops entered those places.

GIRL KILLED AFTER FRANK LEFT PLANT, THEORY OF DEFENSE

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees of the National Pencil Factory, who declared she saw a negro hiding behind some boxes on the first floor of the plant on the day Mary Phagan was killed, was the first witness called Friday in the trial of Leo M. Frank.

The State with her testimony began to pave the way for the appearance of Conley, who, it is believed, would be the last witness to be called by Solicitor Dorsey, as he would be the most spectacular.

The first witness said her husband had been working at the National Pencil Plant about two years.

She said she went to the factory about 11 o'clock. She saw Frank in his office, and told him she would like to see her husband. Frank sent for White. The witness said she returned about 12:30. On the return trip she saw Mr. Frank standing at his safe in his office.

In reply to the question as to what happened then, she said she asked Frank if she could see her husband again, and that Frank jumped as she spoke. She then went upstairs to see her husband.

Was Mary Phagan killed at or very near the time she entered the National Pencil Factory April 26 to get her pay envelope or was she merely attacked at this time and murdered later?

The line of questioning pursued by Luther Rosser in his cross-examination of two of the State's witnesses Thursday afternoon indicated this will be one of the questions the jurors will have to settle before they will be able to determine the innocence or guilt of Lo M. Frank.

Rosser was most persistent in his interrogation both of William A. Gheeslin, embalmer, and Dr. Claude A. Smith, physician and bacteriologist. Gheesling went to the pencil factory at about 4 o'clock the morning of the crime and took charge of the Phagan girl's body. He told Solicitor Dorsey in the direct examination Thursday that the girl had been dead 10 or 15 hours and that rigor mortis was well established.

Gets Admission Before Jury.

Rosser at once began an attempt to break down this portion of the embalmer's testimony, and succeeded in getting before the jury the witness' admission that rigor mortis is extremely variable in the time it takes to set in and become well established in a body. Gheesling admitted that the surroundings in respect to dampness and temperature had their effect, as did the cause of the person's death, and that the degree of rigor mortis could not be taken as an invariable indication of the time that a person had been dead.

Frank's attorney made similar inquiries of Dr. Smith and from him obtained similar statements. The sumption is that he will use the testimony of the State's witnesses to supplement that of the defense, combining them to support the theory that the Phagan girl was attacked on the first floor by Conley and by him was thrown down the elevator shaft or carried down the ladder into the basement, but was not actually slain until after Frank had left the factory in the evening.

Two other points will be established by the defense before the State rests if Rosser is able to wring the information he wants from the witnesses called by Dorsey.

Says Frank Returned Alone.

One of them is that Jim Conley did not walk to the factory with or just behind Leo Frank Saturday morning, April 26, as Conley swore in his last affidavit that he did. E. F. Holloway, one of the State's witnesses, testified Thursday afternoon that no one was with Frank when he returned from Montag Brothers that morning.

Rosser also displayed an unmistakable intention of making the detectives and officers admit that Frank was under virtual arrest when he was questioned Monday by the authorities, and that there was no reason why he should not have been aware of his status.

He succeeded in getting B. B. Haslett to make just this admission and undoubtedly will use it to explain the measures that were taken at once for the protection of Frank's interests, measures on which the State has looked with suspicion because, the attorneys state, Frank was not placed under arrest until 11:30 the Thursday forenoon after the crime.

State Fares Better Thursday.

The State fared better Thursday than any other day during the trial. Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, submitted considerable damaging evidence in respect to Frank's appearance and actions during the first days of the investigation, although nothing that was startling or direct or even new.

He told that Frank was extremely nervous when the superintendent and Newt Lee were placed in the same room at the police station and that Frank squirmed about in his chair, rubbed his chin and lips in agitated manner, grew pale and trembling and in every way comported himself as one might who was guilty of a crime.

Scott said that he and John Black entered the room as Frank and Lee were finishing their conversation and that he overheard the latter part of Frank's remarks.

Rosser immediately caught the detective upon this statement, referring him to his testimony before the Coroner's Jury, where he testified that he had not entered the room until the conversation between Lee and Frank was completed and that he overheard nothing. Scott explained that he must have been mistaken when he testified before the Coroner.

Denies Attempt to Suppress.

Scott testified that Herbert Haas, one of Frank's attorneys, early in the case had tried to persuade him to turn his evidence over to the defense before submitting it to the police, but this already had been aired at the inquest and was without particular effect, as Scott added, under the cross-examination of Rosser, that there was no attempt to have it suppressed or kept from the police authorities, but

Mitchell Named by Anti-Tammany Men For New York Mayor

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—After a stormy all night session of the anti-Tammany allies, John Purroy Mitchell, collector of the port of New York, was named as the fusion candidate for Mayor of Greater New York. Mitchell was named on the ninth ballot, with 45 votes, to 43 for District Attorney Whitman.

The rest of the ticket follows:

Vote Buttons Sold By Suffrage League

Atlanta suffragists busied themselves Thursday in the sale of suffrage buttons and distribution of suffrage literature just to be doing something while their suffrage sisters were parading in Washington. The button sale was held at the entrance of Mrs. Lillian Smith's millinery store, No. 115 Peachtree street, and a neat sum secured. This fund will be expended in the holding of meetings to further the cause.

The sale was held under the auspices of the Woman Suffrage League of Atlanta, which was the Woman's Civic League until two weeks ago.

Society Women in Pajamas Dance at Narraganset Ball

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 1.—Stories of a gay party at the Point Judith Country Club, at which several of the women guests are declared to have danced in pajamas until sunrise, are being circulated here and are almost as much of a sensation as the hunt for the jewel thieves.

Some of the best known young matrons and maids of New York and New England society were among the guests. Turkish costumes are said to have vied with the pajamas.

One observer says fifteen of the women wore ankle watches. Detectives guarding the country club, it is said, to learn something of the jewel thefts, were ordered off by Malcolm Stevenson, who was giving the party.

Puts Steam Shovel Above Court; Jailed

PITTSBURG, August 1.—When Judge R. A. Kennedy, in Common Pleas Court, was annoyed by the puffing of a steam shovel excavating a street near the courthouse, he ordered the shovel stopped. When the noise continued, he issued a warrant and had the crew brought into court.

The superintendent was asked whether it would be better to stop the shovel or stop the court. The superintendent replied that the court should stop, and was promptly sentenced to jail for contempt.

GIRL SLAIN AFTER FRANK LEFT FACTORY, BELIEVED CONTENTION OF DEFENSE

only to have it given first to the defense.

What had the appearance of being the most sensational testimony of the day was that given by R. P. Barrett, a machinist on the second floor of the factory, when he declared that he had found a pay envelope under the machine used by Mary Phagan. The pay envelope, however, when it was shown to the jury, was discovered to have on it no date, no amount, no name, with the exception of a loop of one letter, no number nor any other mark to identify it as the pay envelope that the Phagan girl received Saturday, April 26. Nor was any explanation suggested as to how she may have happened to be at her machine when there was no work being done that day and the machines were not in operation.

Barrett testified to the finding of the alleged blood spots on the second floor near the woman's dressing room and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. No more was developed out of the testimony then was already known to the public when Barrett announced his discovery a few days after the murder. Barrett also declared that a white substance had been used with the apparent intention of removing the splotches of red.

Sweeper Tells of Splotches.

Mel Stanford, a factory sweeper, coroborated Barrett in history of the finding of the spots and the white substance that was spread over them. He said the spots were not there when he swept the factory Friday and that the first he noticed them was when they were pointed out to him the Monday morning after the murder.

Mrs. George W. Jefferson, who works in the polishing room, gave testimony of the same sort. She also testified that cords like the one found around the neck of Mary Phagan hung on a post in the polishing room. She said that this was the only place on the second floor where they were kept, but admitted that they might drop on the floor and be swept to any part of the factory. She said that three shades of red paint were used in the polishing room, but that all of them were distinguishable from blood and that the spots she saw near the women's dressing rom were none of the paints she had described.

Monteen Stover, the 14-year-old factory girl, gave exactly the testimony that had been expected. She said she had entered the factory at 2:05 the day of the tragedy, and that Frank was not in his office. She said that she looked about in his office for him and on failing to find him left the building. She testified that she looked at the clock as she departed, and it was 12:10. Her story contradicts the statement of Frank that he was in his office all the time after he came from Montag Brothers at about 11 o'clock until he went to the fourth floor to see Harry Denham and Arthur White at about 12:50.

Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, testified that he found four or five blood corpuscles on one of the chips of wood that were brought to him. He could not tell whether or not it was human blood. These chips were the ones taken from the floor where the alleged spots were found. He said that in his opinion the blood-stained shirt found at the home of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman, never had been worn and that the blood on it was put on the inside of the garment and seeped through on the outside.

Mrs. Leo Frank, wife of defendant in Phagan case, and Julian Boehm, a friend of the family, snapped as they were leaving the courtroom. Mrs. Frank evidently is well pleased with the course the case is running.

MRS. FRANK SMILING AS SHE LEAVES COURT

Sherlocks, Lupins and Lecoqs See Frank Trial

There are enough "hists," aha's" and those other exclamations that mark a true detective beside the badge on his left suspender, to fill a whole volume of Gaboriau thrillers at the Frank trial.

A stranger whirled from the Terminal Station to Judge Roan's courtroom would be convinced before he had been in that temple of justice five minutes that all Atlanta earns its living following clews and that if Sherlock Holmes was made a material being he could beat Jim Woodward for mayor by 8,000 votes.

Ever since the body of Mary Phagan was found, practically every man of voting age and a lot of those who just think they are, have evolved a theory as to the crime they regard as incontrovertible as two plus two makes four, and have a system of ratiocination (beg pardon, Mr. Poe), that either proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that Leo M. Frank is guilty, or that he is innocent, or that Jim Conley did it, or he didn't, or that somebody did, but they'll be hanged if they know who.

Theorists There for Vindication.

The census of 1910 gave Atlanta a population of 154,839, and it is safe to say that 154,829 sure-fire theories have been evolved.

And everyone of the theorists wants to go to the courtroom to see his theory upheld and see the theory of the other fellow smashed to smithereens.

Atlanta's deductive and inductive powers were never even dimly realized until this week.

Chat with the throng around the courthouse. Mingle with the Lupins, the Lacoqs, the Anna Katherine Greens n the room where the issue is being fought.

Clerk Turns Detective.

Your surprise lwil be suddenly converted into admiration and then into awe. A person, whom you had mistaken for a clerk with a brain capable of knowing nothing more complex than a suit will sell for $19.99 quicker than it will for $20, you discover has a reasoning power as infallible as that of Socrates and a knowledge of things criminal that makes him the most deadly foe to crime since Bertillon.

He can take an envelope, locate it on a second floor and in a flash conceive just ho wa deed of murder was committed.

He can watch a man's hand tremble and immediately conceive him a perjurer and a villain of the deepest dye, although he doesn't ask him if he had taken on too much the night before.

"Signs Air Hopeful," Says Uncle Ben.

He can point out the fatal weakness in the attack of a lawyer who makes more money in a minute than he himself makes in a week. A man selected by a sovereign people to represent the majority of their law becomes a mere novice under his merciless criticism.

"But the signs air hopeful," remarked Uncle Ben Green, from out Hapeville way, as he listened to the findings of the amateur sleuths and chewed tobacco.

"The signs air hopeful," he repeated. "I've been a-sittin' here since the trial begun, and from what I hev seed of these deteckertive fellers we've got right now, it's a pretty good thing that a new crop is a-comin' up."

Woman Is Named to Supervise 'Spooning'

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 1.—Mayor R. S. Bennett has appointed Mrs. Nanette, a social worker of Baltimore, as a special boardwalk policewoman.

She will watch the "spooners" and "mashers" and act as a censor of the bathing costumes.

FALLS 100 FEET, UNHURT.

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 1.—After falling 100 feet from a balloon here Fred Lomen was unhurt. His fall was broken by the branches of a tree.

Another Line Added To Southern System

MACON, Aug. 1.—J. H. Palmer, former chief clerk of the Georgia Southern and Florida Railroad, will be general manager of the combined Hawkinsville and Southern and Gulf Line Railroads. The Gulf Line was yesterday purchased by the Hawkinsville and Southern for $261,000.

The entire system, extending from Grovania, through Hawkinsville, Ashburn and Sylvester to Camilla, is a subsidiary of the G. S. and F., which is in turn controlled by the Southern Railway.

OBITUARY

The funeral of Hoy D. Terrell, 4-month-old child of Mr. and Mrs. N. J. Terrell, of Moore's Station, on the Marietta car line, who died early Thursday, was held from the home Friday morning. Interment was at Adamsville.

Mrs. D. C. Collins, twenty-nine years old, died at the home in College Park Thursday night. She is survived by her husband, three small children and her parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. P. Holton, of College Park. Funeral services will be conducted at Mount Zion Church at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. Interment in the churchyard.

The funeral services of Thomas A. Smith, who died Thursday at the home of his sister, Mrs. N. L. Moles, No. 34 South Humphries street, will be held at the residence Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock. Interment will follow at Greenwood.

The body of Mrs. Emma E. Smith, who died at the home, No. 138 South Forsyth street, Wednesday night, will rest in Atlanta Park Cemetery, following funeral services at the chapel of Harry G. Poole at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon.

Mrs. Fannie Bobo, sixty-six years old, died at her home in Riverside Thursday night. She is survived by one daughter, Miss Bessie Bobo. The body will be sent to Douglasville for funeral and interment.

POWER STATION DOUBLED.

COLUMBUS.—The Columbus Power Company has doubled the capacity of its substation in Newnan because of the growth of business in that town. The substation has been established about one year.

HIGH WAGES AND SHORT HOURS INEVITABLE

Incompetent Employers Doomed to Certain Failure—Workingman's Rights Paramount.

By B. C. FORBES.

"It can't be done" is the favorite argument of many employers when urged to treat their employes more liberally in the way of wages or hours or rest days or conditions of service. And they flatter themselves that their obiter dictum—their say-so—settles it, leaves no room for argument, closes the case finally and irrevocably.

Skinflint employers are going to learn a few things before the world is very much older. They are going to learn that few things "can't be done" when the public makes up its mind that they ought to be done. Not many things that are right and just are impossible.

The eight-hour day, you remember, was socialistic, anarchistic and absurd when first advocated. Nothing could be more impossible, all but a few far-seeing, broad-guaged, large-hearted, humane employers argued. Well, the eight-hour day was ushered in without any tremendous upheaval in the industries concerned.

"It can't be done" was once the pet reply to please for the abolition of seven-day work in the steel industry. To-day not five per cent of the United States Steel Corporation's employes work seven days a week.

* * *

Sunday labor in certain industries used to be considered absolutely unavoidable. To-day it has been radically reduced, almost eliminated in most directions.

* * *

The railroads at first vowed that rebating simply could not be stopped. To-day they are infinitely grateful that the law stepped in and annihilated it.

* * *

Political parties could not be held together, it was urged, without bosses. To-day the bosses are being driven out to the advantage of all.

* * *

"Can't" is an overworked word. It is too often the refuge of the unfit, the lazy and the coward. Sometimes it expresses a fact; more often it is an unconvincing excuse.

* * *

What is here written is for the edification and exhortation of certain corporations and other large employers who glibly declare that sorely-needed reforms for the benefit of their workers "can't be done." These employers are ready to admit that they would like to do certain things, that justice is on the side of the reforms and that they hope at some distant date conditions—especially among their competitors—will so change that it will be possible to mix a little more humanity with their money-making.

They would like to let their workers off one day every week, or every month. But "it can't be done."

* * *

They would like to pay all their helpers a living wage. But "it can't be done."

They would like to better working conditions. But, again, "it can't be done."

* * *

Gentlemen, it CAN be done. And it WILL be done.

Any man who can't pay his workers a living wage has no right to own a business. If he can not supply the brains necessary so to manage a concern that it can pay decent wages, then stop him from being an employer and let him become an employe. If capital can not be handled in one industry so as to afford reasonable wages, then let it seek other employment. Not only is it an economic sin to continue the use of capital in an unprofitable business, in one that does not pay for the things necessary for the sustenance of the workers engaged in it, but it is a crime against humanity, a crime against society, a crime against the State, for if an employe receives less wages than is absolutely needful to maintain life, then others—the butcher, the baker, the dry goods merchant, the landlord, etc., etc.—have to make up the difference, since men and women can not allow themselves to starve to death.

The employer who persists in replying "it can't be done" to requests for reasonable treatment of workers writes himself down incompetent, unfit to enjoy the services of others. Capital and labor are not sufficient to insure business success; MANAGEMENT is the third and indispensable requisite. And any employer who can not supply it intelligently enough to enable him to deal fairly and decently with workers has no claim to be allowed to remain an employer. That inexorable law which decrees the survival of the fittest marks such an one for destruction, as he ought to be marked.

It may be necessary to be more specific in a subsequent article.

CONVICT AUTHOR WRITES NOVEL ALLEGORY

Julian Hawthorne in Perhaps His Last Work in Prison Foresees Wonderful Reforms.

a system of hygiene and bodily exercise and diet somewhat resembling the old Spartan rules instituted by Lycurgus; and a general discipline of mind, manners and conduct as strict as that of West Point, but more enlightened. What had been a stigma became a certificate of merit, and by and by, instead of being sent to jail by sentence of court, men who had failed in life or felt themselves weak and incompetent voluntarily applied for admission. For what they produced they were paid good wages; their families were supported by the Government until the men's earnings could care for them."

Denounces Present Method.

In another article in the same number, on "Self-Respect," Hawthorne brands the dress and branding of prisoners, under present-day prison rules, and the substitution of numbers for names as a crude anachronism, as are also, he says, the titles of "convict," "felon" and "jailbird."

"Their effect," he writes, "is to produce in the prisoner a feeling of radical and permanent separation from his fellow men. It is an attempt on the part of finite human beings to inflict eternal damnation on some of their fellow creatures."

Hawthorne declares that most prisoners mean to be good when their term is up.

"Whether or not their resolution holds firm," he writes," depends partly upon their native strength of character, but in a larger part upon the treatment they get in jail. Shooting and clubbing prisoners and subjecting them to torture has proved unsuccessful in leading them toward sweetness and light. Need for the actual club and gun may arise in an emergency, but the more firm and uniform the discipline, founded, as all discipline should be, on enlightened principles of order and efficiency, the less likely is such emergency to occur."

FLOOD OF VOTES MARKS CLOSE OF CONTEST

Names of Victors in Georgian and American Pony Race To Be Announced Sunday.

The pony contest is over.

Winners in the exciting races conducted by The Georgian and American will be announced Sunday, if it is possible to complete the necessary clerical work in time.

Until midnight Thursday votes were received. Wednesday night the contest manager and his assistants worked almost as late. Friday finds them exhausted with the late hours and the strain, for the excitement of the contestants proved contagious, infecting the whole office.

Thousands upon thousands of votes, so many that the aggregate seems incredible, were received Thursday and up to the very last minute.

Most of the boys and girls took to heart the repeated warnings that over-confidence was fatal, and put copious quantities of "ginger" into their final efforts.

This was as true in the country as in the city. The mail brought hundreds of letters for the contest department.

From every point of view, it has been a thoroughly successful contest, and, conducted in the most strictly impartial manner, there has not been a word of complaint.

Nothing remains but to count the votes and announce the eleven winners of ponies and carts; the eleven saddle ponies, and the twenty-two watches.

Spain Loses Heavily In Moroccan Battle

Special Cable to The Georgian.

TANGIER, Aug. 1.—Spanish troops are suffering enormous losses in the campaign against the Arabs in Morrocco.

Stork and Cupid Cunning Plotters

Many a New Home Will Have a Little Sunbeam to Brighten It.

There is usually a certain degree of dread in every woman's mind as to the probable pain, distress and danger of child-birth. But, thanks to a most remarkable remedy known as Mother's Friend, all fear is banished and the period is one of unbounded, joyful anticipation.

Mother's Friend is used externally. It is a most penetrating application, makes the muscles of the stomach and abdomen pliant so they expand easily and naturally without pain, without distress and with none of that peculiar nausea, nervousness and other symptoms that tend to weaken the prospective mother. Thus Cupid and the stork are held up to veneration, they are raised as cunning plotters to herald the coming of a little sunbeam to gladden the hearts and brighten the homes of a host of happy families.

There are thousands of women who have used Mother's Friend, and thus know from experience that it is one of our greatest contributions to healthy, happy motherhood. It is sold by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle, and is especially recommended as a preventive of caking breasts and all other such distresses.

Write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 131 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their very valuable book to expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

The Kind You Have Always Bought.

THIS is the caution applied to the public announcement of Castoria that has been manufactured under the supervision of Chas. H. Fletcher for over 30 years—the genuine Castoria. We respectfully call the attention of fathers and mothers when purchasing Castoria to see that the wrapper bears his signature in black. When the wrapper is removed the same signature appears on both sides of the bottle in red. Parents who have used Castoria for their little ones in the past years need no warning against counterfeits and imitations, but our present duty is to call the attention of the younger generation to the great danger of introducing into their families spurious medicines.

It is to be regretted that there are people who are now engaged in the nefarious business of putting up and selling all sorts of substitutes, or what should more properly be termed conterfeits, for medicinal preparations not only for adults, but worse yet, for children's medicines. It therefore devolves on the mother to scrutinize closely what she gives her child. Adults can do that for themselves but the child has to rely on the mother's watchfulness.

Letters from Prominent Druggists addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Central Drug Co., of Detroit, Mich., says: "We consider your Castoria in a class distinct from patent medicines and commend it."

Christy Drug Stores, of Pittsburg, Pa., say: "We have sold your Castoria for so many years with such satisfactory results that we cannot refrain from saying a good word for it when we get a chance."

Jacob Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa., say: "We take pleasure in recommending Fletcher's Castoria as one of the oldest and best of the preparations of the kind upon the market."

Hess & McCann, of Kansas City, Mo., say: "Your Castoria always gives satisfaction. We have no substitute for it and only sell 'The Kind You Have Always Bought,' the original."

The Voegeli Bros., of Minneapolis, Minn., say: "We wish to say that we have at all times a large demand for Fletcher's Castoria at all of our three stores and that it gives universal satisfaction to our trade."

Polk Miller Drug Co., of Richmond, Va., says: "Your Castoria is one of the most satisfactory preparations we have ever handled. It seems to satisfy completely the public demand for such an article and is steadily creating a growing sale by its merit."

P. A. Capdau, of New Orleans, La., says: "We handle every good home remedy demanded by the public and while our shelves are thoroughly equipped with the best of drugs and proprietary articles, there are few if any which have the unceasing sale that your Castoria has."

M. C. Dow, of Cincinnati, Ohio, says: "When people in increasing numbers purchase a remedy and continue buying it for years; when it passes the fad or experimental stage and becomes a household necessity, then it can be said its worth has been firmly established. We can and do gladly offer this kind of commendation to Fletcher's Castoria."

The Kind You Have Always Bought

In Use For Over 30 Years.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

DEFENSE NOT HELPED BY WITNESSES ACCUSED OF ENTRAPPING THE STATE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Has the State succeeded in thoroughly establishing the fact that little Mary Phagan's tragic death was effected on the second floor of the National Pencil Factory, in Forsyth street?

It has not, of course—but it has set up by competent evidence a number of suspicious circumstances, which, if properly sustained later along, will prove damaging in the extreme to Leo Frank.

Unless these circumstances, trivial in some aspects, are braced up and backed up, however, by other much stronger circumstances, they will give the jury, in all probability, little concern in arriving at a verdict.

Thursday was not a sensationally good day for the State, although it was much better than the day before.

Twice Thursday the Solicitor General claimed that he had been "entrapped" by witnesses—and this, with the lamentable fall down of John Black the day before—served to give rise in the minds of some spectators to a faint suspicion that the State didn't have its case very well in hand.

No Help to Defense.

There is something terribly significant and actually sinister in that little word "entrapped," however, when hurled at a witness in the presence of a jury, and it would be a mistake to believe that a witness, actually convicted, even in the mere opinion of the jury, of having deliberately misled the prosecution thereby helps the defense.

The witness who entraps, or who is thrown under suspicion of having entrapped, frequently does the party he seems primarily to have hurt a wonderful amount of good.

I believe, for instance, that Witness E. F. Holloway was speaking the truth when, on oath, he reversed his former affidavit to the Solicitor, and said that he left the elevator unlocked on Saturday, whereas he before had sworn that he locked it Friday and did not unlock it Saturday—the last inferentially, at least.

This point will mean a good deal later, when it is reached in developing the defense's case, and if Holloway's last story, apparently satisfactorily explained, holds together, well and good—but who can tell what the jury thinks about that contradiction upon the part of Holloway, particularly when he has been so deliberately accused by the Solicitor of entrapping him?

Holloway is an employee of the pencil factory—was before and has been since the murder. If the jury gathers the impression that he has been tampered with since his first statement, and by friends of Frank, to clear up seemingly damaging circumstances against Frank, it likely will be an aggravating thing, when the jury comes to make up its findings.

Will Hurt Frank's Case.

Just as I thought, and still think, that Dorsey made a tactical mistake—for which he paid the full price, moreover—when on Wednesday he exclaimed "plant," thereby accusing the defense of unfair and grossly indecent methods of bolstering up its cause, so I think the constant suggestion of witnesses changed in opinion and testimony, and in favor of Frank, will hurt Frank's case, rather than help it, if sustained.

Mr. Dorsey failed utterly to bolster up his charge of "planted" evidence, but he didn't fail, in anything like the same degree, to say the least of it, in attacking Holloway.

Or, anyway, there is a grave probability that he didn't fail in the minds of the jury.

In short, my idea is this, as it has been all along: The public, and presumably even more the jury, will resent anything that savors of unfair methods employed either by the State or the defense.

Steadily, though slowly, the defense seems to be pulling away from the prosecution in the Frank trial, and the impression apparently is gaining ground gradually that the State likely is fighting a losing battle.

All of this may be changed in a moment—one witness on behalf of the State may serve to win back all the ground it may have lost.

Nothing More Uncertain Than Verdict

And, of all things, there is nothing to speculate upon quite so uncertain as the verdict a jury will hand in.

The jury is sitting there, its attention confined to the development of the evidence. It reads no newspapers; it converses with no outsiders.

It can not get up, run across the street and swap ideas with somebody in the corner drug store.

It took charge of the case, under its deliberately assumed oath that it was "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," and it is seeing things in its own way—and that way may not be the way outsiders are seeing it.

So far, however, the State's witnesses alone have been introduced. Whatever advantage the defense has gained of them has come in two ways—either in their failure to testify directly to the State's benefit or through circumstances and admissions brought out in favor of the defense, under the merciless cross-examination of Luther Rosser.

It is a good deal to say, nevertheless, that at this stage of the trial the defense apparently has scored heaviest, for such points as it has won necessarily have been wrung from the State's own witnesses, and not the witnesses of the defense. In other words, wherever the State fails to score, the defense scores.

How Points Have Been Scored.

If the defense made little, if anything, of Lee, it lost little, if anything, because of him.

It almost, if not quite, broke even on Rogers—and it most certainly scored tremendously on Black.

Scott, if damaging in a way, was also helpful in a way, in that he practically admitted suspicion of the negro Conley quite as strong as suspicion of Frank.

Monteen Stover swore that Frank was not in his office for, at least, a period of some five minutes, immediately after 12 o'clock on the day of the murder; at least, if he was, he was where she could not or did not see him. Grace Hix undoubtedly helped Frank. Dr. Smith helped the State.

R. P. Barrett swore he found a piece of a pay envelope under Mary Phagan's machine three or four days after the murder, and that he found blood spots near the dressing room door three or four days after the murder.

Mell Stanford swore that the spots near the dressing room were not there Friday, and were there Monday, but he could not swear the spots were blood. Holloway helped the defense, probably.

There is nothing new in most of this testimony, however, save that of Barrett concerning the piece of envelope, and the defense presumably is ready, therefore, to meet it.

State Faces Hard Task.

The mere finding of a piece of pay envelope somewhere, even near Mary Phagan's machine, is not, of itself, highly important; but it might serve as a link in an otherwise strong chain forged to connect Frank directly with the killing.

But if the state has succeeded in setting forth the fact that Frank may possibly have committed the crime, it yet has a long road to travel before it proves "beyond a reasonable doubt" that he DID do it.

Indeed, Frank's attorneys have never combated the idea that he was in the factory at a moment when the killing of Mary Phagan MIGHT have been effected—and beyond that fact the State has been unable to proceed very far to date.

It must be remembered, too, that while the State now is engaged in weaving a web, real or imaginary, about Frank, the defense expects to weave a much more terrible and substantial web about Conley.

But even at that, mere suspicion alone will serve to convict neither.

Much Depends on Conley.

After all is said and done, and it generally gets back to this, the preliminary chain of circumstances against Frank likely will hold together tightly or fall apart hopelessly, according to the fate of James Conley on the witness stand.

If Conley stands the test of exhaustive cross-examination, then the circumstances leading up to and away from Conley's connection with the case will stand or fall.

He is, and has been, at all times both the hope and the despair of the State, no less than the hope and despair of the defense.

He is the star witness about whom the entire Frank case revolves, about whom it has revolved for weeks, and about whom it must revolve to its end.

Of course, there ever is the chance that the State has something sensational, new and significant up its sleeve—and there is the remoter chance that the defense has some big surprises in store.

As the fifth day of the trial drags on, however, the impression has deepened almost into a conviction in the mind of the public that neither the State nor the defense has much to let out that already hasn't been let out, in whole or in substantial parts.

Spirit of Fairness Everywhere.

And the public is waiting for Conley's evidence before making up its mind.

More and more I notice in the casual comment of people about town a spirit of fairness and an inclination to await the full developments of both the State and the defense.

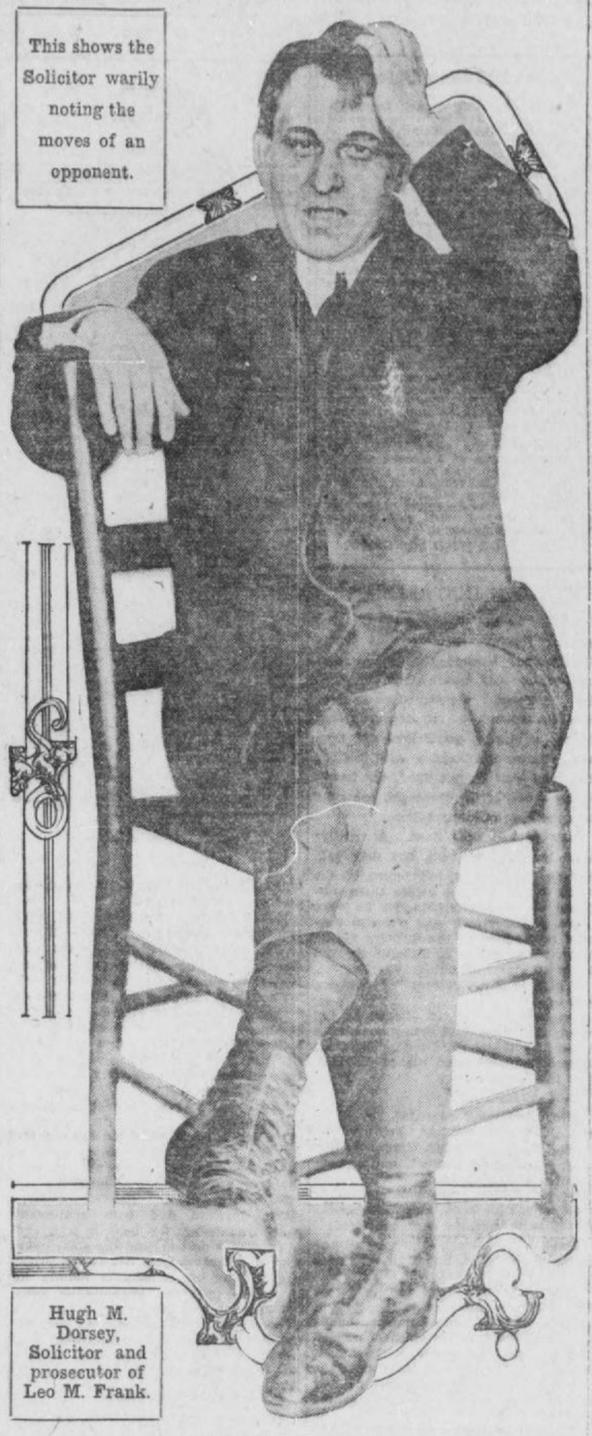

The public largely still is open-minded. It is "from Missouri"—and, after all, that is the way the public mind should be in this matter, for it is a very grave matter, and its final effect will be far-reaching and full of significance, no matter which way the verdict comes finally.

There is one point that Undertaker Gheesling cleared up, on oath, and the public should take careful note of it. He swore that Mary Phagan's body was NOT mutilated in the way street rumor and gossip had it mutilated, just after the crime was committed.

That ugly story undoubtedly was accountable for some of the primary prejudice against Frank—but it was an untrue rumor, and in all fairness, now that it has been exploded, it should be borne in mind.

DORSEY UNAFRAID AS HE FACES CHAMPIONS OF THE ATLANTA BAR

This shows the Solicitor warily noting the moves of an opponent.

Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor and prosecutor of Leo M. Frank.

Up Against a Hard Proposition Youthful Solicitor Is Fighting Valiantly to Win Case.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Georgia's law's most supreme penalty faces Leo Frank.

A reputation that they can not be beaten must be sustained by Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold.

Atlanta's detective department's future is swaying on the issue of the Frank trial.

But there is a man with probably as much at stake as any of the hundreds who crowd Judge Roan's courtroom, with the exception of Frank, and he is accepting the ordeal, though he realizes it, as calmly as a person who has nothing more serious to decide than whether he will order his steak rare or well done at breakfast time.

Hugh Dorsey is hereby introduced. He is known pretty well in Atlanta without introduction, but as chairmen on political meetings insists on telling the audience that the President of the United States is about to speak or that the Secretary of State is endeavoring to earn an additional amount to his yearly $12,000, Mr. Dorsey can be placed before the public without fear of violating precedent.

Consider Hugh Dorsey.

Consider Dorsey's job. His position as public prosecutor places on him the duty of sending someone to the gallows, and this time it is Leo M. Frank, against whom he must direct his efforts.

The proposition of convicting a man is as common in the life of a Solicitor as paying his car fare home. But here's a different proposition. Dorsey is confronted with the task of getting a conviction over the efforts of Luther Rosser and Rueben Arnold to obtain an acquittal.

And anyone who knows Atlanta, who knows Fulton County, who knows Rosser, who knows Arnold, realizes that this is a task from which Hercules might sidestep, a labor that is more tremendous than the building of the Panama Canal or the successful storming of the fortress of Gibraltar.

And still Dorsey has gone into the fight unafraid; not only that, he is aggressive.

Atlanta's record for big crime trials has not been altogether healthy in the past twelve months. In that time Dorsey has prosecuted Mrs. Daisy Grace on a charge of attempting to slay her husband. Atlanta was intensely interested in this issue. Mrs. Grace was acquitted. Dorsey lost.

He prosecuted Callie Scott Applebaum on a charge of ending the life of her husband. Again the public was deeply interested. Again Dorsey lost.

And then came the Phagan killing. Atlanta, Georgia and the South demanded that her slayer be brought before the bar of justice and be given law's severest penalty.

Frank was fixed upon by the police as the man.

The grand jury indicted him, and Dorsey staked his all on his conviction.

Luther Rosser had been retained by Frank's chief counsel.

Dorsey smiled.

Again there was a flash. Reuben Arnold had been added to the list of legal array to clear the name of the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory of the charge that he had taken the life of a little girl.

Reputation is a big thing. No prize fighter faces a champion without doubts as to his ability to cope with him. The greatest financial genius probably trembled in his boots when he first met the foremost captain of industry. A violin virtuoso bows before Kubelik. There is no pianist who would approach Paderewski without a sensation of awe.

And here in Atlanta, Arnold and Rosser are champions. They are Kubeliks, they are Paderewskis.

Hugh Dorsey hasn't quailed.

Desperately in Earnest.

Throughout the trial he has been desperately earnest. He realizes the work that is before him. If he has any enemies, they will admit that he has handled his case well.

The Solicitor General is a great deal younger than his opponents. His hair is tinged with gray, and there will probably be more of those strands there before he is through with his clashes with the dynamic Rosser and the erudite Arnold.

He is taking the case with intense seriousness. So far, Rosser's efforts to rattle him by calling him "Hugh," "my young friend," "son" and "bud" have been unavailing.

The practical collapse of his detective testimony was enough to stun any man, but Dorsey stuck it out gamely. There is plenty of fight still in his eyes. It will be there if the case goes against him.

His appearance would indicate that he is holding something back, something with which he expects to surprise his eminent opponents.

Then, There Is Hooper.

There is one thing that every spectator knows is being held back. He is a quiet little man, with a scholarly face, a man who has already won his spurs in Georgia politics, but who has not figured extensively in the bigger criminal cases tried before Atlanta courts.

The man is Frank Hooper. He has been on his feet but once. He made an impression then. And when the case comes to its crucial stages, it will be well to watch these two young lawyers arrayed against the admitted masters of their craft.

She lithe and unknown Corbett sent the invincible John L. Sullivan to oblivion. Brian du Bois Gilbert was unhorsed by Wilfred of Ivanhoe. Theodore Roosevelt ran second in a Presidential race.

MEASURE TO BAR NEGRO VOTERS IS FAVORED

Slade's Interpretation of Constitution's "Good Character" To Be Recommended to House.

The disfranchisement bill of Representative Slade of Muscogee, which its author says is an interpretation of the "good character" clause in the State Constitution, will be favorably recommended by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments at Friday's session of the House. The vote was unanimous in favor of so reporting the bill at the committee meeting Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Slade's bill interprets the good character clause to mean that "no man, white or black, whom a virtuous woman will not trust in a place of seclusion without fear of physical assault, shall be allowed to vote."

The right to strike off names of voters is vested in the ordinaries of the counties. If a voter objects, women shall not be called in, but the question shall be decided by men who are familiar with the voter's life and habits.

Mr. Slade declared that the bill is not directed against white men, but by its passage he hopes to disfranchise every negro in the State.

"I have been trying to get this bill through for the past two or three years, and am very hopeful that the members of this Legislature may see fit to pass it at the present session," Mr. Slade said.

NASH PROTESTS AGAINST SLADE MILITIA BILL

Declares Negligence of Civil Officials Is All That Makes State Troops Necessary.

Declaring that if the civil officers of the State could be made to do their duty, there would be no need of the military, Adjutant General Van Holt Nash, before the House Committee on Military Affairs Thursday afternoon, protested against the passage of the military bill offered by Representative Slade, of Muscogee.

The bill repeals the military act of 1912 and re-enacts the law of 1910, making the militia subservient to the civil authorities.

"The militia is entitled to some consideration," declared General Nash. "We offer our lives to the State with practically no remuneration, and are sworn to uphold the honor of the State and its laws. The only reason there is any need for the militia is because the civil officers do not do their duty. If you will make the civil authorities perform their work, there will be no necessity for calling out the militia.

Says Present Laws Protect Them.

"The present law should stand. It protects us from being overridden by the civil authorities, and prevents us from being made the scapegoats of incompetent civil officers."

Mr. Slade declared the present military law is unconstitutional because it means the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. He likened conditions that arose in Augusta last year, under military rule, to the Reconstruction period, when "blood flowed as freely as water."

Representative Ennis, of Baldwin County, spoke against the bill. He declared if the State were under military rule there would be fewer lawbreakers.

Because of the absence of a quorum the committee did not take any action on the bill. Mr. Slade declared he has small hopes of the passage of his bill, but seeks to effect a compromise with the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator McGregor, which curtails the powers of the military.

It is probable that the committee will not report on the Slade bill until next week.

Blacksmith Gives a Social in His Shop

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—The custom of using the churches and school houses of a community as social centers was upset in Oak Park, a suburb, when M. M. McMahon, a blacksmith, held an ice cream social where the guests sat among piles of horseshoes and the decorations were tongs, hammers and bellows.

A lecturer from Chicago gave a talk on the "Rocky Mountains," after McMahon called the folks to order by pounding on the anvil.

Textile Industry in Spain Hit by Strike

Special Cable to The Georgian.

MADRID, Aug. 1.—The textile industry in Spain is practically at a standstill today. Twenty thousand men are on strike for higher wages and better working conditions, and 195 factories have been closed.

The strike is spreading hourly, the workers at Sabadell, Tarrasa and Villa Nueva joining the men who are out. Troops are being rushed to the strike zone.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Jose Collins

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

ABOUT the hardest work I know is just being a beauty. For there is the ever-present dread that if you relax eternal vigilance, your greatest stock in trade will diminish and dwindle to nothingness! On the other hand, if you are merely on the way to the acquisition of beauty, any little trace of loveliness you acquire is net gain.

However, queenly Jose Collins, of the Ziegfeld Follies of 1913, in New York, refuses to worry about the ravages of time or avoirdupois. "If I get fat, I get fat," said she with complacent conviction; "I refuse to worry about it, and to lay in a supply of wrinkles and gray hair and insomnia dulled eyes. The women in New York have gone mad on the subject and they would probably look far better fat and cheerful than with the haunted-by-the-fear-of-another-pound look they all wear.

Eat Sparingly.

"I eat sparingly in hot weather, because then I don't feel warm and leggy. I breakfast on hot water and figs, and I eat fruit and salads without oil in great quantities. That keeps my system clear and in good working order. I never eat hot foods in summer, for that would mean putting in some internal heat when we are sufficiently bathed in the warm atmosphere. I keep a watch on by system—if it grows tired or poisoned by some food that was not all it should have been, why, I live on some soft of fermented milk product—some of the lactic acid drinks that put me in sweet, healthy trim soon again. Every one ought to be her own diet expert.

"I've another notion, if you care to hear it: Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert, too. Beautiful hands are improved by pink, smooth, shell-like nails with neat half-moons and white tips. Lay in a supply of rounded orange wood sticks, some cuticle remover, a cuticle food, a buffer a flexible file, one of the standard polishing pastes, and a nail bleach for removing stains from the nails. Spend five minutes with the nails night and morning, training them into shapely, smooth cleanliness, and see what splendid results you get—this would be my advice to all girls.

"Cold cream to make the hands smooth; careful drying to keep them so, and a little stretching and pulling and patting into long, graceful lines will make the ugliest hand more attractive. And if a fairly pretty hand is scrupulously smooth and clean, and is tipped by smoothly rounded pink nails with no soil or jagged cuticle to mar their outlines, it will be sure to give the impression of being very pretty indeed."

"Every woman her own diet expert and manicurist," I mused. "Then, Miss Collins, you may think also that every woman should be her own hair dresser and an expert on the care of the hair, too."

Care of the Hair.

"Indeed I do," agreed the dark-eyed beauty whose wonderful voice and delightful acting are two of the charms that add to merely appearing in glowing radiance on the stage. "I think every girl can train her hair in the way it should go—I think it well worth time and patience to learn how to take care of your hair.

"And I think a girl should find a simple, pretty and becoming style of hairdressing and stick to it. It is not fair to train the hair in one direction and then go yanking it off into some other way. A water wave can be put in and even straight, lanky hair taught to look fluffy and pretty.

"Just after your next shampoo press your still damp hair into waves with your fingers and pin the waves into place, and, with the waves still pinned, allow the hair to get perfectly dry; pinch these same waves into place morning and evening with a bit of hot water to add stability to the hair as it dries. Of course, this won't make naturally curly hair—but it will give a pretty fluffy look to locks that might otherwise be an imitation of seaweed.

"If your hair is too long or too thick to manage, cut out a bit of it—if it be too thin, go to an expert for a tonic and apply it faithfully with a loosening, circular motion that is splendid for the scalp—and then you will probably have a crowning glory—instead of just 'hair'!"

So, Little Miss Would-Be-Pretty, just work away at being your own sane little diet expert, and manicure artist and hair specialist, and see if you do not fall heir to some of beautiful, stately Jose Collins' healthful magnetic charm.

"If you are getting fat don't worry about it. Worry will add wrinkles and gray hair.

"Eat sparingly in hot weather.

"Never eat hot foods in summer.

"Every woman ought to be her own manicure expert.

"Girls should find a simple, becoming style of hair dressing."

Miss Jose Collins.

THE MAID WE LOVE.

"QUEEN of her realm!" uncertain name that puzzles and enchants your.
For the "Realm" and what it is the name no knowledge grants you.
Behold! She is a maiden fair who splendidly can cook,
And I would warn you one and all, there's danger in her look.

Her salads are a dear delight—likewise the cherry pies;
All folk must cater to this maid as in their power lies.
Ah, maid! how trembles all your realm when one like you departs,
For you are queen of rolling pins and of policemen's hearts.

The Greatest of All

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"WHOM," is one of the first questions asked a child, "do you love?"

There is a sudden clasping of little arms around the mother's neck, childish lips are pressed against her cheek and there comes the whispered response, "You."

It is the first word childhood hears—"love." It has been a life that was misspent if it is not the last.

The journey through life is only a few hours as compared with eternity, but it is long and weary as we measure it with our short-sighted eyes. To amuse ourselves we invent many diversions, hoping to find happiness in fame, wealth, pleasure, ambition, and when these fail we ask forgetfulness in work.

But nothing is worth while, nothing satisfies, though we gain all that we longed for, unless we also have love.

It lightens the burdens. It illumines the dark places. It gives purpose to the purposeless. It is the source and the sustenance of faith, courage, hope, ambition, patience and every ennobling quality.

It Gives Courage.

Without Love, wealth is poverty. With Love, poverty is wealth. It puts courage in the veins of the coward. It makes a man rise above himself. It is the transforming wand of the only good fairy the times have left us.

Love youthifies. Though one be old and wrinkled and bowed with the years, one is not old so long as there remains in the heart a reverence for Love. The young woman who scoffs at it is older than her grandmother who trusts and believes.

It beautifies. The plainest woman becomes beautiful when she loves and is loved.

Love strengthens. The mother never tires, though she works every hour, because she is strengthened by Love. The husband and father is persistent in the face of discouragement and defeat and spends his life in toil for those he loves.

It enthuses. No man is a good workman if he has only himself to provide for. The best workman is the man who loves.

It is the universal gift, and one which depends not upon the whim or caprice of some fickle goddess that presided at our births, but upon ourselves. We were born for love, and those who do not love.

If there were no such thing as love, the churches and theaters would close and the printing presses would stop.

all we need do is to beleive and it is ours.

It is independent of social position, age, color or wealth. The love that comes to the maid is just as sweet as that which comes to her mistress, and just as true. There is more of it in the home of the poor than in the home of the wealthy.

It is about the only thing in life that defies a bank account. One is never defeated so long as one loves. The failures, the loafers, the drunkards are. It is not only the greatest thing in life: it is life itself, and the world revolves around it.

It is the hope of youth and the comfort of old age. All along the way there is nothing that will take love's place.

The young woman is stretching out her arms to welcome it. The older woman owes it to her younger sister to forget love's bitterness and disappointments, and meet her with sympathy and understanding in the greatest experience life holds.

The old owe it to themselves to have faith in it. They owe it to their juniors to express that faith often. The mother or father who holds that a marriage for wealth or social position is more desirable than one for love is not fit to be a parent.

It is an injustice to the son and daughter more tragic in its results than beating a child.

One Against Higgins

Higgins is troubled with an overweening curiosity about other people's affairs. Occasionally he gets taken down, however. He met Smithers in an omnibus; he does not know Smithers very well, but he "my boys" him as if he were a lifelong friend.

"Been buying, eh?" he inquired at once.

"Yes," said Smithers, deliberately. "I've been looking after a horse for my wife."

"Have, eh? Well, let me look him over for you."

"Oh, I've bought him!"

"Not without trying him? Was he sound?"

"He appeared to be."

"Doesn't shy?"

"No; certainly not."

"Good mouth?"

"Y-e-s; I think so."

"Good manners?"

But here Smithers arrived at his crossing. When he reached the door of the bus, he called back to Higgins:

"I neglected to mention the kind of horse my wife wanted. It was a clothes-horse."

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van de Water.

CHAPTER XI.

THE taxicab bearing Mary Danforth and her escort drew up in line with other vehicles before the great opera house, which rose huge and somber above the flare of white lights upon the street. While Craig conferred for a moment with the chauffeur, the girl looked about her, noting the hurry and clamor of Broadway at theater-time. The rattle and snort of automobiles, the clang of passing cars, the gleaming and flashing electric signs—seemingly pasted high against the dark sky—the shuffle of thousands of feet, the light laughter of passing couples and the smiling faces which surged past her into the broad lobby of the opera house, thrilled her and almost intoxicated her with a strange sense of gayety and light-headedness. She laughed spontaneously when Craig returned to her and, laying a light hand on her arm, guided her through the crowd, of which they became immediately a part.

"It was very nice of you to ask me to come with you this evening," she said ingenuously, looking up brightly into the eyes of the man at her side.

"I'm very glad now that I asked you," he returned bluntly. "But I was not so very glad at first, for you did not seem at all keen at the thought of going with me."

The boyish frankness of the speech astonished the girl.

"Why, what a ridiculous thing for you to imagine, Mr. Craig!" she exclaimed. "What made you fancy that?"

"I didn't fancy it, I knew it," Craig declared, handing his checks to a supercilious usher who guided the young couple down the aisle. "I know there was some reason why you thought you would not go with me at first. Was I not right?"

They were seated now, and Mary, although she flushed hotly, answered him with a frankness that matched his own.

"Yes," she murmured, "there was a reason."

"I knew it," he said triumphantly, and droped the subject.

Whether the thought of her former reluctance acted as a spur to Craig's endeavors to appear well, or whether he was merely at his ease and happy, Mary did not know, but when the overture had begun she looked covertly at her escort and told herself that she found him charming. He was not particularly brilliant, she admitted, but she always thought that brilliant men were conceited anyhow. Yet she considered this man intensely interesting and amusing in a boyish, unaffected way, while his attitude of defrence and respect toward herself touched and pleased her. She smiled with happiness as the great orchestra played. If she had known what a tender, satisfied smile hers was at this time she would have been amazed.

When the curtain rose she forgot Craig and allowed herself to be swept along on the waves of harmony. When the curtain fell, she turned to her companion, her eyes shining.

"Oh, don't you just love it?" she asked impulsively.

"Yes," he answered, smiling significantly down at the hand she had unconsciously laid on his sleeve.

"I was talking about the opera, Mr. Craig," she reminded him with an effort at severity, withdrawing her hand quickly.

"Oh, the opera?" he queried, unabashed. His face was grave, but there was a light of quiet amusement in his gaze, a gleam that made Mary laugh, in spite of herself. "Yes, I like the music right well, too," he went on. "But I reckon the opera isn't a very good one, is it?"

"Indeed it is," exclaimed Mary vigorously.

"Well, I didn't think it could be," explained the young man, "because I like it, and from what my sister has always told me about my musical taste, I have naturally supposed that anything I liked along that line must be rather poor stuff."

"Then why do you come to the opera, if you don't care for music?" queried Mary.

"The answer to that question in this case is so obvious that I refuse to be drawn into another effort to pay a compliment," he declared. "I really believe, Miss Danforth, that you are blushing again."

"If I am," she returned, with a shrug, "it is because I am ashamed of a man who will not give a frank and truthful reply to a simple question."

His manner changed quickly, and his bantering tone became suddenly grave.

"I wonder if you would really care whether I was speaking the truth to you about some things or not," he said, slowly and softly.

But this time the girl did not answer him.

When the opera was over they were caught in the crowd moving up the aisles and at last found themselves upon the sidewalk.

"If you are not too tired," pleaded Craig, "won't you go with me to Rector's and have a bite of something before we go home?"

The girl shook her head.

"I'd like to," she answered regretfully, "but you must remember that I am a working person and need some sleep. I think that we would best go right home, but I thank you, just the same."

He did not urge her further, a fact for which she was secretly grateful. A sleepy elevator boy took them up to the door of her apartment, then went down again with his car, without waiting for Craig to make his adieus. Mary held out her hand frankly to her escort.

"It was kind of you to give me this delightful evening, Mr. Craig," she said, "and I have enjoyed every minute of it."

He looked down into her eyes as he returned her handclasp. "Will you believe me," he said huskily, "if I say that being with you for three hours this evening has made me very happy?"

"Yes," replied Mary, gently.

He started to speak again, checked himself, and lifted her hand quickly to his lips.

"Good night!" he said abruptly, and turning ran downstairs without waiting to signal for the elevator.

The girl, left alone, raised the hand that he had kissed and pressed it to her own lips. Her eyes were shining, her heart beating fast. Then she let herself softly into the quiet apartment.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Good! To the side door then." And dashing through a crowd of small urchins that blocked the road, they made their way around the house to the entrance mentioned, catching glimpses through the windows, as they did so, of blazing chandeliers and towering plants, and hearing with feelings that may well be imagined, the bewildering tones of an orchestra, mingling with the hum of many voices.

They opened the door. A festive scene burst upon them, but they paid it little heed. The tall figure of the family butler bowing before them, absorbed all their attention, for he wore a look of expectancy and cheerful welcome that added to the mystery of the moment and made it difficult for the doctor to stammer out:

"Where is Mrs. Gretorex? I must see her at once."

The butler, surprised, stared at the doctor an instant, and seeing something in his face that he did not understand, faltered helplessly and turned his eyes upon the detective.

"That Will Do!"

"Mrs. Gretorex," repeated Dr. Cameron. "I want to see her. Tell her——"

"Wait!" whispered Mr. Gryce. "I had better send her my name." And he took a card out of his pocket.

But the butler, more and more surprised, shook his head, and while he did not refuse to take the card, muttered:

"Pardon, monsieur!—Madame Gretorex make her toilet, but if Dr. Cameron will go to his room, I will tell her?"

"That will do," broke in the detective. "Take us upstairs at once." And ignoring with his usual imperturbability the glances of astonished inquiry that followed his rather burly figure, clad in its common business coat, he pushed his way to the stairway without waiting to see if the doctor was behind him.

This gave the butler an opportunity to whisper:

"The bride is a little late, Monsieur, and Mrs. Gretorex asked me to say——"

"I can not wait," broke in the doctor, exasperated that they should still attempt to keep him in ignorance of the real state of affairs. "I will go up, and you see that Mrs. Gretorex comes to me immediately." And he followed in the wake of the detective, conscious from the expression of the faces he passed that he wore anything but the aspect appropriate to his supposed position of bridegroom.

No Excuse.

Mr. Gryce was waiting in the hall above. "I have inquired for the room set apart for your use," whispered he, "and they point out the one at the end of the hall. Isn't it a shame?" he added. "And what pluck on the part of the mother. I declare I had no idea she would carry it as far as this. But I suppose she could not help herself. She kept hoping and hoping from minute to minute that her daughter would come, and has not yet found courage nor opportunity perhaps to explain the situation and dismiss her guests. If it were not for what we have still to do," he added as they stepped into the room which had been pointed out to them, "I would wait and hear what excuses she would frame to meet the emergency; for you may be sure they would be entirely in accordance with the demands of the occasion."

"There is no excuse possible. The truth will have to be told," declared the doctor.

But Mr. Gryce shook his head, and pointing to the clock, replied, "There is yet an hour before us. If she will come at once, Mr. Gretorex may safely be left to announce to the throng that his daughter has been suddenly taken so violently ill that her marriage to-night is impossible. Not one in a dozen will believe him, but the talk that will follow will not hurt you, and to-morrow any turn can be given to the story which the facts will bear out."

"Yes, yes," began the doctor, but he went no further, for at that moment there was a rustle heard on the threshold and Mrs. Gretorex, magnificent in velvet and diamonds, slowly pushed open the door and stood in a dignified attitude before them. Both gentlemen started forward and both gentlemen paused confused, for her air was one of courteous protest, and the glance she allowed to travel from one to the other had nothing but a haughty inquiry in it, which to them, knowing as they did all that was hid behind it, showed a power of dissimulation that for the moment was almost disconcerting. Nor were her first words calculated to better the impression she had made.

"My Daughter Is Here."

"You have sent for me?" said she with a glance at the doctor which completely ignored the detective. "May I ask what I can do for you?" Then as the doctor hesitated in his agitation, she added politely, "It is 8 o'clock and my daughter is almost ready. I hope these few minutes of delay have not inconvenienced you."

"Your daughter!" gasped Dr. Cameron. "She is here?" While Mr. Gryce, in no wise disturbed by the coldness with which his presence had been received, took up a silver paperweight from off a table near by and began to weigh it in his hand while his lips moved with what might be called the ghost of a whistle.

"My daughter is here, of course, sir," declared the mother in tones that were almost icy in their pride and indignation. "Where else should she be on her wedding night?" And she cast a furious glance at the detective, which that person was of course much too absorbed to meet.

"Here!" again repeated the physician, absolutely confounded at her audacity. "I beg pardon, but I thought—"

Her smooth smile stopped him.

"Shall I inform my child that her bridegroom is ready?" she asked, with a polite but doubtful glance at the overcoat he still wore.

Dr. Cameron stared, felt himself inadequate to grapple with the situation, and glanced at Mr. Gryce, who softly laid the paperweight down and advanced.

"Madam," said the latter, "excuse me, but moments are of inestimable value just now, and I must go straight to facts. Your daughter—"

But this woman was not one to brook interference.

"I don't know you, sir," she affirmed, and turned again to the doctor. "When my daughter's toilet is quite complete you will receive a summons from her maid. Would you like any assistance yourself?"

This aroused Dr. Cameron. Advancing he took the lady's hand and respectfully bowed over it.

"Mrs. Gretorex," said he, "you ignore the man you have employed, but you will not ignore me. If your daughter is in this house she must have returned in the last few minutes. In that case—"

But here he was again interrupted.

DR. CAMERON LEARNS HIS BRIDE IS FOUND

"Mrs. Gretorex stood before them."

"You mistake. My daughter—concerning whose movements you seem to have formed the most unaccountable conclusions—has been in this house since noon. She came back with a cousin of hers from Montclair, just as we were beginning to feel anxious about her. Her present delay is owing to an entirely different source. Some trouble about her veil, I believe."

Tantalizing Words.

For the second time the doctor showed intense astonishment. "Mrs. Gretorex, do you speak the truth?" he asked, "Miss Gretorex here and since noon, when I myself saw her at the C—— Hotel an hour ago? You are deceiving me and I as your intended son-in-law will not endure it. Though I pity your daughter from the bottom of my heart, I can not marry her, for her conduct has shown a duplicity to which this tardy return to fulfil her engagement only gives an emphasis."

It was now Mrs. Gretorex's turn to look dumbfounded. She gazed at the doctor as if to see whether he were in his proper senses, then she stepped up to the detective.

"This is your work," she cried. "You have gone beyond your orders. Did you not receive my telegram?"

"No, madam."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

PREMATURE GRAYNESS CAN BE AVERTED

THE hair turns gray because it has lost vitality, due to sickness, nervous strain, deficient nutrition and sometimes inherited causes. To pull out the hairs when they begin to turn white is simply to enlarge the cells, coarsen the hair and cause it to whiten more quickly than if left alone.

The best and only satisfactory treatment for premature grayness is a pure, reliable hair restorative, such as Robinnaire Hair Dye. This restorative is prepared in our own laboratory, a scientific formula, and we guarantee it to be non-injurious. It is not to bleach or change the original color, but is to restore faded or gray hair to its natural color and lost vitality. Its tonic effect makes the hair soft, lustrous and beautiful, and keeps it in a healthy condition. Does not stain the scalp and its use cannot be detected.

Don't let gray hair stand in your way either in the social or business world, for thousands of others are using this splendid restorative with best results. We have sold it for over a quarter of a century without even one complaint against it. It is a pure, beneficial restorative and cannot harm you. For light, medium and dark brown and black hair. At druggists and toilet goods departments, 75c; by parcel post, 83c.

Send us the name of your druggist if he cannot supply you, and we will send you FREE samples of Robinnaire Face Powder and Cold Cream of Roses. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Atlanta, Ga.

An Unappreciative Man

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"EVERY time my wife and I go out walking," a distressed husband writes me," she insists upon me pushing the baby carriage.

"When any of my friends see me they laugh and make fun of me. Kindly let me know if it is a married man's duty to push the baby carriage."

No, it is not his duty. It never, since life began, was his duty.

It is his PRIVILEGE!

Whose baby is it, you narrow-souled representative of your sex? Isn't it yours? And isn't pushing the baby carriage on the streets the lightest of the many thousand tasks that attend it?

Did your wife complain during the long weeks and months she carried it before it was born? Did she fear that her girl friends would laugh at her, or taunt her?

Did she feel that she had a grievance when she went down into the shadow of the Valley of Death, and returned, spent with pain, with your child in her arms?

Has she ever reproached you for the martyrdom motherhood has brought her?

She doesn't ask that you sit by its sickbed through the long hours of the night when every one in the household is asleep. She has never expected you to be always patient, tender, merciful, and forgetful of self, denying yourself every comfort if that denial made life happier for your child.

You Go To Sleep.

When you lay your head on your pillow, it is to sink into a sound sleep. When she goes to bed it is to hover so near the border of consciousness that the faintest sigh from the little bed near her own awakens her.

When you sit down to a meal it is to gratify your own appetite. With her, her own appetite is an afterthought. She attends to you and the child first.

When you take your pleasures it is with the thought only of what pleases YOU. From the hour her baby comes her amusements are those that are her child's.

You are stronger than your burdens are heavy, and she has tasks before her every hour that are greater than her strength.

You know only your own aches and pains. She suffers both her own and every ill to which childhood is heir.

Your apprehensions are centered around self. She fears nothing for herself and all that life threatens for her child.

When asked to push the baby carriage, you were ashamed. Ashamed to proclaim by this little act that you are the child's father!

She not only bore all the pain alone, she is not only alone in the wearying care of your child, but she stands alone in the pride that glorifies parenthood.

The Miracle.

If you were more a man and less an empty-headed peacock, you would picture yourself in the miracle that love has brought you, and would be overcome with pride that it would make you almost maudlin.

The father monkey in his cage will chatter with pride when visitors inspect the little mishapen image of himself in the mother monkey's arms. Every form of life, no matter how low, is proud of its offspring.

You call yourself a MAN, and you are ashamed of your own child! You are not a man. You are not of as high an order of intelligence as a monkey. You haven't as much heart as the lowest form of creation.

Push that baby carriage, and push it with pride and gratitude! I warn you that if you persist in your present attitude of shame for your own offspring, some day you will find the baby carriage has grown into a car of Juggernaut.

Couldn't Eat It.

After being kept waiting for the usual five or ten minutes, the new arrival at the restaurant was duly served with the first course of the table d'hote dinner—soup.

Hesitating a moment, he glanced at his plate, then said:

"Waiter, I can't eat this soup."

"Then I'll bring you another kind, sir," said the waiter, and hastened away.

The guest sighed as the second plate was placed in front of him.

"Nor can I eat this soup," he said, a trifle more emphatically than before.

And the waiter, silent, but angry, brought yet another plate of soup. Whereupon the guest once more remarked in a low, emphatic tone:

"Really, I can not eat this stuff!"

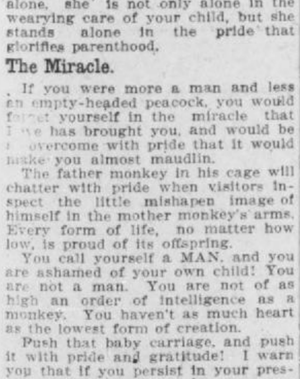

But the waiter, now really angry, summoned the manager, and, to the interest of the other guests in the restaurant, explained what had happened.

"Really, sir, this is most unusual, sir," said the manager. "May I ask why you can't eat any of our soups?"

"Because," replied the guest, with a sad, wan smile, "I have no spoon!".

THIRD PRIZE-WINNING STORY IN "THE TRIPLE TIE" CONTEST

By LILLIAN LUCILE HARDEN,
Oak Street, Decatur, Ga.
WINNER OF THIRD PRIZE, $25

Miss Lillian Lucile Harden, of Decatur Ga.

She is 15 years of age and won third prize in "The Triple Tie" contest.

CHAPTER XLIV.

"IS that you, Steve?" asked Mildred, at the phone.

Yas, sum, Miss Mildred."

"Well, just as soon as Mr. Gray returns, don't fail to call me up," she said.

"Yas, mum, Miss Mildred."

"And have everything ready to start immediately after his return."

"Yas, mum, I is," said the faithful Steve.

Mr. Gray returned early on the following morning and they started on the search for Gordon Kelly.

Mildred was allowed to go on the condition that she remain out of view until all danger was over. Indeed, you could not have forced her to remain at home, so anxious was she to see her lover.

One of Gordon's hints was to flash a light from a mirror so he would know to expect them, so he was not surprised at the two flashes of light, and turned smiling to his friends.

The Guard Surrenders.

Not more than 10 yards away, carefully concealed from the guard but fully revealed to Gordon, crouched five figures. Mr. Gray was in the lead, armed to his teeth. Cautiously they drew around to get the drop on Gordon's guard. Then they sprang forth and stated they had come for the prisoner, and the "prisoner" was prisoner no longer.

The guard gave up his weapon and Gordon Kelly greeted his friends. Doing so, he spied Mildred behind the bush, and ran to her with the speed that marked him such a marvelous base-runner. Amid her squeaks of delight, she managed to say!

"Sweetheart!"

And he returned softly:

"Honeybunch!"

Then Gordon told them about his weeks in captivity, but impressed it on their minds how considerate his captors had been. That spoke much for the mountaineers and they were turned loose on the promise not to capture Mr. Kelly again, but to help him out in the future. No one suspected that those same mountaineers would lay in wait for Forrest Cain and the awful tragedy that happened would happen.

Gordon and his friends returned to the two automobiles which were stationed about a quarter of a mile farther back. Gordon and Mildred sat in the one driven by Steve, with Elmer in front.

Hears of Triple Tie.

"Say, Gordon, do you know that the triple tie is to be played off to-morrow?" asked enthusiastic Elmer.

"Yes, I read all my papers," replied Gordon.

They discussed it a while, and Elmer turned again to Gordon:

"Hey, Gordon, let's go to New York, and you play and I'll be your mascot."

"Suppose I should go?" questioned Gordon of Mildred, with a twinkle in his eye.

Elmer's enthusiasm was contagious, or Mildred would never have replied:

"Yes, do, Gordon; arrive at the last minute and snatch the Red Sox out of trouble with a home run and be a baseball hero!"

"Well, I'm coming to see you this evening, and if I leave to-morrow I will get to New York in time to see the last game," returned Gordon.

Just then the unsuspecting Steve set the "buzzer" going and the two lovers took the opportunity for a kiss.

When they reached the mansion Elmer said:

"Gee, Gordon, wouldn't that be dramatic to arrive and play in the last game?"

"It sure would, Mildred, when can I come?"

"This afternoon at 5 o'clock. It's 4 now. Report on time."

"I will, Boss," laughed Gordon.

Mildred and Elmer reached home about 4:30. Elmer's excitement was over the trip to New York and Mildred's over the reception of Gordon.

Gordon arrived promptly on time. Mildred decided she could spare Gordon a little while if he would play if his manager would let him. Elmer was to go with him and he departed from them to get ready his things. Then they told each other what they had been aching to tell for many weeks.

"Gordon, sweetheart," murmured Mildred going close to him.

"Honeysuckle," was all he could whisper as he took her in his arms.

Gordon and Elmer left early the following morning for New York and Mildred returned home from the mountains.

The day after she arrived home, as the family were sitting at the breakfast table they were startled out of their wits to hear the newsboys shout:

"Wuxtra! Wuxtra! All about the murder of Forrest Cain in the mountains! Wuxtra! Wuxtra!"

Farnsworth, who had seen Forrest Cain murdered, returned to Atlanta on a train two hours later. This is the story he told to a policeman, a detective and The Georgian reporter.

Farnsworth's Story.

"I thought Forrest Cain had something to do with the disappearance of Gordon Kelly, so the next time he left town I determined to trail him. I had my chance this morning. We got off at a little station in the Blue Ridge about 30 miles from Pew Creek. A cracker was holding a horse for him and as that was the only horse in the community I couldn't follow him. I got out of cigarettes and suffered hour after hour until about 8 o'clock I heard a freight train coming and at the same time I heard the pounding of horses' hoofs. Just as the train was pulling by the man jumped from his horse and seized a grab-handle. At that instant a pistol was fired from behind and the man with a terrible screech fell under the moving cars. I went to him and struck a match. It was the lifeless and mangled form of Forrest Cain. I looked toward his assassin. He blew out the light before I saw his face and the inky darkness thoroughly concealed him.

"Why did you shoot him?" I asked.

"'None uv your damned business,' he drawled in smooth, even tones. 'You walk down the track and don't yer come back here in less than fifteen minutes, or you will be lying by that damned car. Then you all kin do what yer damned wanter,' he added.

"When I went back he and the horses were gone and I took the next train to Atlanta."

The Deery family were shocked to say the least, but Mildred felt strangely relieved, somehow.

A posse of men were put on the mountaineer's trail. He was caught dilly-dallying whisky, but not until he was fatally wounded. In the few remaining hours of his life he told his story of the past few weeks.

CHAPTER XLV.

GORDON KELLY, the baseball idol, at bat, and the bases full.

The White Sox "fans" let out a groan that almost drowned the wild cheers. Bill Smith thought he could distinguish Whisky's shout above all the din. Whisky was certainly doing his duty to Kelly, and as the noise died down a little he began to speak:

"Dat's him! Dat's him! Sho as I'm a libbin, dat's him! 'Marse Gordon goin' ter win dat game fer de Red Sox! He kin do hit! He gwine do hit!"

At the conclusion of this oration the people cheered again, at least, all but the White Sox. Bill Smith was proud of Whisky.

Kelly, having selected his bat, stepped to the plate in his Ansonlike pose.

Big Ed Walsh bent double, determined to put every ounce of his strength in the speed of that ball.

"Would Kelly hit it?" was the question on every tongue.

He Did Hit It!

Yes! He did hit it! When his bat crashed into that ball it sounded like a cannon.

Never had such a hit been made! The ball soared away out of reach of all hands. By the time the right fielder picked it up Kelly and the three men before him had scored.

The previous cheers seemed trivial to the one that now shook the Polo Grounds.

"He done hit! He done hit! But he show am a mysterioso!" shouted Whisky.

The next man was retired, but the Red Sox had won! The crowd demanded an explanation of how he learned to play ball in such a marvelous manner when he stoutly declared he never had seen a ball game nor played in one before his arrival in Atlanta.

Stahl shoved him out in the center and said: "Now, tell us all about it!"

Gordon, seeing no way out of it, began speaking:

"Well, ladies and gentlemen, it's very simple. I lived in my mountain home, surrounded by every luxury. I desired to play baseball, but had no comrades. My diamond was laid off according to the regulations. A correspondence school taught me what a curve, drop, strike, foul, etc., was, and I made a machine that would hurl balls of all kinds to me. I learned to bat that way. One of my servants chased the ball. I had another machine that I could touch as I left the home plate, that started it; as I returned I touched it again, that stoped it, and I could tell how long I had been. I could bat my balls straight up in the air or use my pitching machine to learn to catch. All my other knowledge I gained from the correspondence school and from the newspapers."

Gordon Back Home.

The cameras and reporters sure were busy that afternoon! And when one snapped Gordon with Elmer, Elmer's joy was complete.

They remained in New York several days. Gordon went to see his uncle and he showed Gordon and Elmer all around.

Mildred wrote them about the death of Forrest Cain and she wrote something else to Gordon that made him go into an ecstacy of delight. She had told her parents of their engagement and neither disapproved. Mildred knew her mother had something to do with bringing her father around. She told him he could tell Elmer about it and that young man was happier than Gordon, if it were possible.

Gordon soon came to Atlanta; their happiness was complete.

In his sweet musical voice Gordon sang "Lips o' Poppy" to Mildred with her arms wreathed around his neck.

"Gordon, sweetheart," she murmured.

"Honeybunch," he whispered.

By F. L. S.

THERE'S a charming little maiden
With eyes so wondrous brown—
Her cheeks with roses ladened,
The talk of all the town.
This winsome little lassie,
Who to-day is seventeen,
The idol of her daddy
And a mother's love supreme.
Years of sunshine have you brought us,
And our hearts with joy o'erflows
To the great and all-wise giver
For the gift He thus bestows.
Happy years they have been to us;
Years of joy and sweet content,
And in the years before us—
Where'er they may be spent—
We'll think of these blest hours,
Which time can ne'er efface;
So if there comes a little cupid,
And his fiercest dart be hurled,
To take from us our treasure,
The greatest in the world;
When comes this bold usurper,
Whoever he may be,
May this love through him continue
Through all eternity.

Household Suggestions

The best method of keeping small screws, brads and tacks from rusting is to place them in small, wide-mouthed bottles, tightly corked. The bottle should be perfectly dry before using. Sandpaper can be kept dry and in good working condition by rolling it and keeping it in a wide-mouthed jar and screwing down the lid.

When cream is only slightly sour it may be made delicious to serve with puddings, etc., in the following way. Put it into a basin with the juice of a lemon and tablespoonful of sugar, and whip until quite stiff. This treatment makes it excellent, and increases the quantity at the same time.

I AM HUNGRY

TO-DAY'S COMPLETE SHORT STORY

AS we came out of the fashionable restaurant a pale, thin man came toward us. He tottered with faintness as he held out his hand and said:

"I am hungry."

Verdier put his hand into his pocket, took out a large silver coin and gave it to the beggar.

"You are very liberal," I remarked.

"Do you know what it means to be hungry?" he asked.

"No. Do you, perhaps?"

"Yes, I do, and I will tell you about it. You know I was poor when I first came to Paris, and had a hard struggle to get on. How hard neither you nor anybody else ever knew. I woke up one morning in August depressed and hungry, more hungry than I can describe. I had tasted no food since the morning before. I did not have a single cent, and everything that I could pawn was gone. I did not know a single person who might assist me. I rummaged through all my pockets and found nothing but a cigarette.

"I lit it and went out. I walked through the streets, full of despair, seeing no way out of the misery. As the day passed my hunger grew and I grew more and more faint and full of bitterness. Should I really decide to beg? Yes. Why not? My ideals of morals were darkened by the shadow which dimmed my eyes.

"I caught sight of an elderly gentleman, tottered toward him, raised my hat and in a low voice confided my secret to him:

"'I am hungry.'

"He looked at me for two seconds. Then he shrugged his shoulders and said:

His Answer.

"'Then you had better drink no more to-day.'

"I felt as if I had been struck by lightning.

"Close by was a restaurant, from which came an appetizing smell of cooking. How it happened I do not know, but a moment later I was sitting at a table inside. Shortly afterward an omelette stood before me, but only two minutes, then it was gone. Then the waiter served a steak. I realized what was happening and I was seized with fear. I had no money to pay, and I thought the waiters and guests were staring at me with suspecting eyes.

"Just then somebody slapped my shoulder.

"'How are you?'

"I turned around and saw a pretty young woman, stylishly, perhaps too stylishly, dressed.

"'What can I do for you, mademoiselle?' I asked.

"'You don't seem to remember me.'

"I searched my memory and suddenly I knew. She was a young woman I had met once before at Maxime's in gay company.

"'Lili,' I exclaimed.

"She sat down next to me.

His Dilemma.

"'How kind of you to invite me for dinner,' she said.

"The waiter suddenly became very polite. He stood patiently, smiling, waiting for my orders. All confused I ordered what Lili asked for. Then the fear returned.

"'You don't look happy to-night,' Lili remarked.

"I was too nervous to answer.

"'Are you sick?'

"'Yes, it feels very close in here.'

"What was I to do? Should I pretend to have lost my pocketbook? The trick was too old—nobody would believe me. Should I tell Lili that I had not got a single cent to pay with?

"Just then Lili got up and took a powder box from her bag.

"'I will be back in a moment,' she said. 'Keep an eye on my bag, please.'

"She went out.

"Looking around to make sure nobody was observing me, I opened her bag with trembling fingers and took a five dollar bill.

"Yes, my friend, I really took it. Then I paid and we left. Lili took my arm.

"'Will you please see me home?' she asked.

"When I entered her apartment everything turned black around me, but mastering all my energy I overcame my faintness and said:

"'Lili, I was dying with hunger. I could not have paid and they would have had me arrested——'

"She stared at me coldly. I went on:

"'Then I took $5 from your bag.'

"'What do you say?'

"I saw the terrible change in her—the cruel expression in her eyes. Trembling with fury she searched her bag.

"'My money! My money!' she screamed. 'I will send for the police.'

"I tried in vain to quiet her. She screamed louder still. I wanted to run away, but she opened the window and screamed: 'Police!'

"I jumped at her, threw her down on the floor and squeezed her throat together with my hands. She turned purple in the face; her eyes bulged. Thirty seconds more and neither she nor I would have been alive to-day.

"And that might all have been avoided if the elderly gentleman had given me a few pennies.

"Now perhaps you will understand my generosity toward a man who says that he is hungry."

The Difference.

Ten Commandments for the Summer Girl

By DOROTHY DIX

WHEN thou farest forth for thy Summer vacation direct thy footsteps wisely, for what shall it profit thee to fish ever so cunningly in the waters in which no fish abide? Verily, I say unto thee, that, though there be mountains that touch the skies, or sapphire seas, or swelling hills, or dimpling vales, yet is all scenery an abomination and a desolation, and a Summer resort becomes as sounding brass and tinkling cymbals, if so be no eligible man abides thereat.

2—Consider thy apparel, for fine feathers make fine birds, and no maiden with the glad rags is as homely as the Lord made her. Yet be not extravagant in thy dress, lest some youth shall flee from thee, saying: "Wherewithal shall I get the scads to doll such a one up in the similitude of a fashion plate to which she is accustomed?"

3—Before thou disporteth thyself in the ocean, consider what manner of figure and of hair nature hath bestowed upon thee, and whether thou lookest when thou art wet like a mermaid or a drowned cat, for what shall it profit a maiden to dry her locks on the sands if so be she hath only three hairs on her head and looketh like Winter underwear after it hath shrunk in the wash?

Look Before You Bathe.

4—Propitiate with fair words the old cats that knit pink sweaters on the hotel gallery lest they arise and rend thy reputation and tear it limb from limb, for lo, the wagging of their tongues is even as a perpetual motion machine, and the things that they do to a character are a-plenty.

5—Also slight not the homely girl who art a wall flower, for many such are possessed of handsome brothers, and eke of male relatives with 1913 cars, who shall arrive in due season.

Fish Cunningly.

Despise Not the Fat Man.

and to whom she shall present thee, and so shalt thou reap thy reward.

6—When the musicians smite upon the band of an evening in the ballroom, dance not at all unless some man asketh thee, for, behold, there are many sad sights in the world, but none so woesome as the spectacle of two maidens turkey trotting together and attempting to wear on their countenance the look of one who rejoiceth.

7—When a youth treateth thee to ice cream soda boast not to him of some other man who fed thee on champagne and terrapin, for by so doing thou makest him feel like a cheap skate, and he will pass thee up when he geteth up the hay ride or the trolley excursion.

8—As thou art strong, be merciful. Consider that at a Summer hotel there are seven times seven women to one man, and that the poor youth that thou naillest hath already flagged seventeen mountains, and gathered four bushels of wild flowers and visited Lovers' Leap, and read poetry and rowed boats, and played golf, and danced millions of miles with other maidens before thou camest, and he is a-weary and fain would rest.

9—Despise not the fat man whose architecture is built after the manner of a bay window. Say not unto him, "Go up, thou bald head," for verily he may be a widower, with houses and lands, and automobiles, and jewels wherewith to endow a wife.

10—Avoid the snapshot fiend who taketh amateur pictures as thou wouldst pestilence or sudden death, for such a one shall take thee unaware with thy head on a manly breast, or a strange arm about thee, and, although it causeth the merry ha-ha at the time, peradventure thy fiance, to whom thou showeth it at home, lacketh in a sense of humor.

FRECKLE-FACE

Sun and Wind Bring Out Ugly Spots. How to Remove Easily.

Here's a chance, Miss Freckle-Face, to try a remedy for freckles with the guarantee of a reliable dealer that it will not cost you a penny unless it removes the freckles; while if it does give you a clear complexion the expense is trifling.

Simply get an ounce of othine—double strength—from Jacobs' Pharmacy and a few applications should show you how easy it is to rid yourself of the homely freckles and get a beautiful complexion. Rarely is more than one ounce needed for the worst case.

Be sure to ask the druggist for the double strength othine, as this is the prescription sold under guarantee of money back if it fails to remove freckles.

THOMPSON AND CLARK WILL PITCH TO-DAY

REVIVED somewhat by the cheering influence of yesterday's victory over the Volunteers, the Crackers will tackle the enemy in a doubleheader this afternoon, the first game to start at 2:15 o'clock.

Manager Smith announced this morning that Thompson and Clarke would pitch the twin bill, with Chapman and Dunn doing the catching. Manager Schwartz was not certain of his battery.

SWARTZ'S BROTHER HURT; MAY CALL HARRY AWAY

Harry Swartz, the popular motor rider who has been thrilling local fans at Jack Prince's saucer, may have to leave for Denver within the next 24 hours. His brother, Eddie Swartz, was badly injured in a motorcycle race there last Saturday afternoon, and is not expected to live.

Harry is ready to leave the minute he receives a wire. All the local riders and fans are rulling hard for Eddie to pull through. He is the most popular rider in the Middle West, and had expected to come here to ride in the fall.

$2,000 RAISED BY FANS IN AMERICUS FOR TEAM

AMERICUS, Aug. 1.—Two thousand dollars subscribed by enthusiastic Americus fans in mass meeting insures the maintenance of the Americus baseball team throughout the season. When the situation was thoroughly explained, baseball enthusiasts went into their pockets and the amount required was forthcoming, several citizens subscribing $100 each.

The amount raised in mass meeting cancels all outstanding indebtedness and insures the expense account throughout August. Americus fans never fail to respond to such calls.

PELS GET TWO PLAYERS IN THREE-CORNERED DEAL

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Aug. 1.—Pitcher Stevenson and Outfielder McKillen, purchased from the South Michigan League, were released to the Pelicans to-day. The players come as part of a three-cornered trade for Pitcher Brenton, who is slated to join Toledo via the Naps after working in Friday's game against Memphis. Stevenson and McKillen join the Pels at Memphis.

Crackers Loosed a Flood of Runs

Holland and Holtz Looked Good

By O. B. Keeler.

ALL the tallies that had backed up in the Crackers' systems while they were losing one-run margins on the late excursion burst forth in wild and exatic profusion in the first home engagement, the Volunteers the sufferers, 10 to 2.

Specifically, the explosion took place in a single inning. Books could be written about that inning. Poets might make odes and epics on it. Oscar Strauss might set it to music. Sousa's band might play it—but it is doubtful if even the "March King's" interpretation would equal that of the Crackers.

Returning to the date of the outburst, we find it to be located in the eighth round, domestic portion. Also, it was shortly before six bells, while the shades of night were falling at about the same rate of speed set forth in the well-known biographical sketch entitled, "Excelsior," or "A New Breakfast Food."

The contest had worked itself around to a 2-to-2 tie, which sounds like the midnight choo-choo if you say it fast. Dent and Beck, long pitchers with short monickers, were having what is commonly known as a slab duel, with both sides wasting a good many hits on comparatively few runs.

A detailed recital of the eighth inning would be piling it on. Gently summarizing results, the following appears:

Every Cracker in the game scored a run except Harry Holland, who was sent up to sacrifice before Bill Smith had any idea to what extremity Beck and the Vols were planning to blow.

Six hits were compiled by the Crackers, Welchonce opening the trouble with a Texas League single and closing the scoring with a ringing double down the right field foul line, unloading the towpath of three mates.

Beck contributed two bases on balls, a hit batsman and a two-base throw to the general merriment in the first one-third of the inning. After Welchonce got his second hit, Manager Schwartz got the derrick in working order and removed Mr. Beck from the field of battle.

But Mr. Schwartz did not calculate spoiling another regular pitcher, or even Fleharty, who had been in the bullpen most of the afternoon. He sent in a Mr. Young, who habitually plays right field. And Mr. Young smiled at the wild applause—and retired the side. Smith fouling to Gibson and Bisland flying to Daley.

* * *

BARRING a desperate attempt on the part of J. Pluvius to smear the doings, the other part of the game was reasonably conventional, interest centering in the performance of Harry Holland, the former Tech star, who played third base, and Holtz, the new outfielder. The Volunteers had had their first turn at bat, and one Cracker was salted in the same round, when the bottom fell out of a black cloud, which had been sneaking up behind the stands. For five minutes it rained in the proverbial sheets. Then the downpour slackened, the sun came out, and after twenty minutes' delay, Umps Stockdale came out, walking on his heels, and the combat was renewed.

HARRY HOLLAND looked like a regular ball player. He stood well at the plate, crowding it close, and while he did not get a hit, he looked over the pitching coolly and did not hit at any bad ones. He did not miss a single swing, either, and he laid his sacrifice down in classy style. In the field, he handled his single chance accurately and with speed, making a perfect throw to first from a rather difficult position.

One bit of fielding won't go to Holland's credit in the records, but he showed well in it, just the same. In the first inning, with two gone, Hofman got on by Bisland's wild peg. "Circus Solly" kept right on legging it, and Agler whipped the ball to third, Holland putting it on the sliding big leaguer in clever style. But Kerin ruled that Artie should have stopped at second under ground rules, the ball having got mixed up with the boxes. So the effort went for nothing.

HOLTZ made a becoming bow to the noble twelve hundred at the game. He got two hits and a base on balls out of four appearances. One of the wallops scored a run, and both were made with somebody on. In the field, the big fellow made a couple of nice running catches, the last one, a Texas Leaguer from Gibson's bat, that looked good for a hit. He did not show any amazing speed on the towpath, but used judgment in one particular instance, when he took advantage of a wild pitch that Gibson stopped to sneak down to second. He did not look at all like the typical bush leaguer.

ONE of the most complicated double plays ever presented on any stage came off in the sixth inning, and it deserves a chapter all to itself.

A base on balls and a two-base throw by Beck had put Bisland on third, with one down. Holland hit sharply to Jack Spratt at third, and Bisland was trapped. While he was being chased to death, Holland worked around past second, and after Spratt had put the ball on the dodging Bisland, a snap throw nipped Harry. The two-ply killing read this way:

Spratt to Gibson to Spratt to Beck to Spratt to Perry.

VANDERBERRY MAKES NEW 4-MILE MOTOR RECORD

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—The thousands who saw the final heat in the four-mile Pennsylvania Sweepstakes at the East End Motordrome last night witnessed the greatest speed contest ever run in Pittsburg. It was not alone because a new world's record for four miles was made that the race was unusual, but the spectacular manner in which the racers performed. Twenty times around the big wooden saucer Russell Smiley, Billy Vanderberry and Jack Harding raced at the average speed of 81 miles an hour, with their elbows touching frequently.

"Speedy Van" was a few inches ahead at the finish. The riders were so close the crowd did not know that Harding was second until the result was announced. The time for the four miles, 2 minutes 58 seconds, is two seconds under the former world's record.

Vedder Sitton Hurls No-Hit, No-Run Game

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 1.—P. Vedder Sitton, former Atlanta pitcher, now with the Troy club, of the New York State League, shut Wilkesbarre out without a run or hit yesterday afternoon. Not one of the visiting players reached second base, and only three reached first, each on a base on balls.

Sitton received brilliant support.

Sitton is one of those ball players whom the finger of fate seems to touch at widely separated intervals, and with something like a caress.

He is remembered around the SouthernLeague as the chap who helped to win two pennants in a single year, and came within a game of making it three.

In 1908, Sitton's work on the slab was responsible for the pennant in the Sally League. Then he went to Nashville, and pitched the final game of the season, on which the pennant depended, beating Breitenstein of New Orleans, 1 to 0. Then the youngster went to Cleveland, making its best attempt to win an American League pennant. But Cleveland lost out in the last pair of games.

Since then Sitton has been drifting about the country, pitching grand ball in flashes and streaks.

MEETING TO-NIGHT TO FORM ANGLERS' CLUB

The first meeting of the prospective Atlanta Anglers' Club is to be held at 8 o'clock to-night at the Yancey Hardware Company, 134 Peachtree street. Dr. Allan Fogle and C. P. Watson have made the arrangements for the meeting and request all who are interested in the promotion of angling in this vicinity to attend.

Mr. Fogle says that either Piedmont or Lakewood would would make an ideal place for fly-casting tournaments, which are among the prettiest sporting events to be seen anywher to-day. The ultimate object of the club would be affiliation with the national organization. Mr. Watson, of the Yancey Hardware Company, is answering all inquiries concerning the prospective club.

CARDINAL OWNER WILL TRADE ALL HIS PLAYERS

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—President Schuyler P. Britton, of the Cardinals, is on the warpath and in an endeavor to strengthen that club to-day declared he would trade every member of the club except Manager Miller Huggins. It means that Ed Konetchy, Harry Sallee, Bob Harmon, Charley O'Leary and recruits, will be swapped if there is a chance to strengthen the club.

Whether any trade will be made is not known, but President Britton announced that negotiations have been opened with the Giants, Reds and other clubs. The tumble in to eighth place for the first time in years is too much for President Britton and Manager Huggins.

MAY INCREASE FEDERAL LEAGUE TO SIXTEEN CLUBS

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—Directors of the Federal League go into an important session here to-day. Two propositions, one to make the Federal Baseball League an eight-club affair, and another to make it a twelve or sixteen-club league, a sort of tandem league, with an Eastern and Western division, will be discussed.

Baseball men in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Detroit, Milwaukee and Cincinnati, who have petitioned for admission, are anxious to get action, it is said. Many other cities seek admission, and magnates have announced they will deposit the $10,000 necessary to insure their finishing the season.

DETROIT BUYS PITCHERS NORTH AND REYNOLDS

FOILED.

A bandit placed a gatling gun against
a stranger's brow.
The stranger merely smiled at him
and said: "Pooh, Pook, for thou!
Pooh, Pooh for thou, and likewise
Fudge and also Fish and Tush!
I do not fear the gatling gun that
stares me in the mush,
For I have been in baseball parks
where peanut merchants ply,
And I have sat there unafraid and
looked them in the eye,
And though they poked me in the
slats and gave me bitter pain,
And though they walked upon my
corns, they tortured me in vain.
What chance have you, an amateur
to make me tremble now?
Again I say Pooh, Pooh, and Tush
and likewise Fudge for thou!"
The bandit slowly went his way, and
sore at heart was he.
"What chance is there," he sadly said
"for bush league guys like me?"

Quoth the London Daily Express: "The monotony of defeat becomes depressing." This sounds as if it were written by a baseball scribe in St. Louis.

Frank Navin is one of the few magnates who have the interests of the public at heart. Realizing that the good citizens of Detroit wanted some regular baseball, he staged a game between Buffalo and Providence.

It is said that Bill Carrigan will be given a free hand in Boston. In other words, he may do as he pleases, as long as he pleases J. McAleer.

A baseball manager these days is almost as sure of his job as a President of Mexico.

Ever and anon a scout unearths what he calls a slugging outfielder, but he fails to inform us whether said outfielder slugs the ball, the umpire or his fellow athletes.

OUR BLUE LAWS.

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter.
But wear a skirt and an overcoat
When you go in the water.

It is hoped that none of the Giant pitchers will attempt to bean the Great Zim. If Mr. Zim were hit on the head with sufficient force, it would sprain his ankle.

"Boxers Seek Work," quoth a headline, but it fails to tell us whom they seek to work.

As a wise old gent once remarked, a man is known by the guys he hangs out with. After consorting with Tom Jones for a few years, Ad Wolgast bets $25,000 a throw as if he really meant it.

Just to show that he is a versatile manager, Joe Tinker occasionally loses two games a day instead of one.

Even if Horace Fogel's new league does not pan out, he can make a good living by hiring out as a model in a phonograph factory.

Sitting in his Morris chair in New York, Jim Corbett hands us a vivid description of the Williams-Ledoux conflict in Los Angeles, thereby demonstrating that he is the greatest long distance eyewitness in captivity.

HUMAN NATURE.

Were I a baseball magnate
And owned a team or two,
I'd hunt the golden kale, I fear,
And walk upon the public's ear
The same as magnates do.

No, Rudolph; there is no truth in the report that Roger Bresnahan and John Evers will double up in a vaudeville stunt next winter.

White and Whitney to Mix Here

Castro Starts "Regular" Club

By Left Hook.

CIPRIANO CASTRO, an exiled personage, was a rank bush leaguer compared to his nephew, Count Lou Castro, when it came to promoting. Cipriano tried to promote matters down in Venezuela, but he couldn't get away with it. Not so with Count Lou.

Count Lou got it into his bonnet that boxing could be made to pay in this hustling burg. The Count believes in high-class affairs, high-class clubhouse, high-class mixers and a high-class location.

Result:

Charley White will meet Frank Whitney in a ten-round bout here on the evening of August 13.

On the same program will be two other high-class battles. In one, Mike Saul will endeavor to show Eddie Hanlon where he gets off. In the other, Kid Young will try to avenge a recent beating by turning the tables on Charley Lee.

The bouts will be staged at the Ponce DeLeon skating rink.

The ring will be adorned with plush ropes and highly-polished brass posts.

The Count will referee himself, and will be decorated in a Tuxedo.

* * *

ALL of which proves our assertion that the Count is going to show his uncle up. Cipriano never got away with anything as big as this.

And on Labor Day the Count plans to send the winner of the White-Whitney scrap right back at Jack Britton. Within two or three months he believes he will have a championship battle here.

* * *

AS for the main bout, let us whisper that it is by far the classiest ever offered Atlanta fans. White is a near champion. He made a tremendous hit here when he stopped Jake Abel in less than two rounds.

Whitney is the most popular boxer who ever displayed wares here. He is tough and rugged, and will give the Chicagoan a merry time of it for ten rounds.

Both boys will be here within a few days. They want to become acclimated, and realize that they must have at least ten days within the portals of the city to get right.

* * *

THE skating rink is a mammoth place. Castro, therefore, will put on all of his shows at popular prices.

And it is an ideal spot for bouts, especially during the hot months. The building is situated on a knoll, and a breeze always blows through it. It is a semi-open affair of a place. In the winter the Count will board up the sides and put in a steam-heating outfit.

Milt Saul, of the street railway company, has promised the Count perfect car service to and from the club. As soon as the last bout is over, a string of cars will be lined up in front of the club ready to take the fans home.

* * *

THREE cheers for Count Castro. He is going to put Atlanta on the boxing map.

MATTY OUT TO BAG 30 GAMES THIS SEASON

By Sam Crane.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 1.—Christy Mathewson, who was quite an old fellow in baseball as players go several years before Charlie Ebbets declared that the game was only in its infancy, finds it necessary to step out and give a real exhibition of the art of pitching every now and then to convince some folks that he has not gone into decay.

Matty is not usually prone to amassing records. He discovered some time back in the dark ages of the game that a well-preserved arm, protected from the strain of getting records, paid dividends longer than one that flashed all its best stuff in a short time and then went out like a flame on a wet stick. But if these records persist in forcing themselves upon him, he will not purposely step aside to avoid them.

The Old Master is out to bag 30 victories this season. This is not a record by any means, for Matty himself has done better several times in the years gone by, but for a man pitching in his thirteenth year in the big league, it is strong evidence that he is still there or thereabouts.

Ten-Mile Race Carded To-night

Graves Has Speedy New 'Boat'

TEN corking events are carded at the Motordrome to-night. The fans will get the longest list of races carded so far this season, and every one of them ought to be a thriller.

The feature event will be the Atlanta Sweepstakes. There will be trial heats of one mile and a ten-mile final. In the first trial heat, the starters will be Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis and Lockner. The second will bring together Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther and McNeil.

The first man in each heat and the third man in the fastest heat will battle in the final.

Richards and McNeil had been having things pretty well to themselves until Wednesday night. Then a new speed merchant popped up on the horizon in Morty Graves. Morty has always been considered a top-notch rider, but he has not had as fast a machine as those ridden by Richards and McNeil.

However, Morty is "there" now with a new Excelsior, and it is a bearcat. He hasn't got it tuned up just right yet, although he traveled two miles in 1:22 Wednesday night. This is at the rate of 87 miles per hour. To-night Morty says he will have the "boat" hitting better than 90 per.

The Motordrome Purse should prove almost as interesting as the feature event. This race will consist of three one-mile qualifying heats and a final of two miles. The first heat will find Graves, Swartz and Shields starters. The second heat will have Lockner, Richards and Luther battling, while the third will find Renel, McNeil, Lewis and Glenn fighting it out.

Harry Glenn is still after scalps. He has beaten Luther and Lockner in special match races. To-night he will try to show Billy Shields how to ride. This event is carded for two miles, and is for the best two heats in three.

Glenn is popular with the fans, and they will be cheering him from start to finish to-night.

Following is the complete program:

First Event—Motordrome Purse. Three 1-mile qualifying heats; final, 2 miles. First heat—Graves, Swartz, Shields.

Second Event—Second heat Motordrome Purse; Lockner, Richards, Luther.

Third Event—Third heat Motordrome Purse; Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

Fourth Event—Special match race, first heat, between Glenn and Shields. Distance, 2 miles. Best two heats in three.

Fifth Event—Final of Motordrome Purse, 2 miles. First in each heat and second man in fastest heat to start.

Sixth Event—Special match race, second heat, between Glenn and Shields.

Seventh Event—Atlanta Sweepstakes, two 1-mile trial heats and 10-mile final. First heat, Graves, Richards, Swartz, Lewis, Lockner.

Eighth Event—Second heat Atlanta Sweepstakes; Renel, Shields, Glenn, Luther, McNeil.

Ninth Event—Third heat of match race between Glenn and Shields, if necessary.

Tenth Event—Final heat of Atlanta Sweepstakes, 10 miles. First and second men in each trial heat and third man in fastest trial heat to start.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jim Flynn, who meets Gunboat Smith in a 10-round bout at the Garden A. C., New York, on August 8, is training harder for this battle than for any bout in which he has taken part for several years. "I realize that a win for me over Smith will place me in line for a title match," said Flynn, "and on that account I want to be in tip-top shape when I meet him."

* * *

Jack Britton will make his next fight against Frankie Burns at New York on August 11. This information comes to us in a letter from Danny Morgan, manager of the Chicago lightweight.

* * *

Jim Coffroth is trying his hardest to match Tommy Murphy with Willie Ritchie on Admission Day. The coast promoter has already secured Murphy's signature, but Ritchie refuses to sign until he hears from Tom McCarey regarding a match with Wolgast or Leach Cross.

* * *

Los Angeles fans are giving Jack White a good chance to defeat Johnny Dundee when the pair clash at Tom McCarey's arena on August 12. Dundee and White met about two months ago, and although Dundee was given the verdict after 20 rounds of hard milling, Jack claims he was not in the best of shape for the fray, as he took the match on five days' notice.

* * *

Jimmy Johnson, who sent Harry Stone, the New York lightweight, and Harry Thomas, the English welterweight, to Australia for fights several months ago, received word yesterday that Thomas knocked out Billy Elliott in nine rounds, and that Stone lost a decision to Billy Russell in twenty rounds. Both scraps took place on July 19.

* * *

When Kid Williams reaches New York en route from Los Angeles, it is expected that he will be called upon to meet Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight. Ever since Frankie held Coulon to a draw at Kenosha, Wis., about a month ago, he has been after a match with the Baltimore boy.

Terry Nelson, the Greek lightweight, is in good shape for his ten-round mill with Young Seymour at Marietta on Saturday night. Terry says he will go after bouts with some of the tough 133-pounders if he succeeds in defeating Seymour.

* * *

Charlie White is certainly one popular fighter around local sporting circles. Fans are still talking about the clean-cut fighting tactics he used against Abel. Charlie had a good chance to hit Abel when he had his back turned in the second round of their recent go, but waited until Jake turned completely around before dealing out the final wallop.

* * *

Ad Wolgast continues to chase Willie Ritchie in an effort to drag the champion into the ring with him again. Ritchie left yesterday morning for Frisco, but Wolgast left two hours later, hoping to corner Willie and force him to sign articles for a return scrap.

* * *

Kid Duke showed the white feather last night when he refused to go on with Kid Brooks in their scheduled finish bout. Brooks was willing to meet Duke and settle for once and all time who is the better of the two, but Duke claimed they could not get any place to stage the go. It looked like a case of cold feet on Duke's part.

CHESS TOURNEY RESULTS.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Duras, of Prague; Black, of Brooklyn, and Kupchik, of the Progressive Chess Club, were the winners in the ninth round of the masters' chess tournament.

The leaders to date are: Capablanca, won 13, lost 0; Duras, won 6, lost 1; Black, won 7 1-2, lost 1 1-2; Kupchik, won 7 1-2, lost 2 1-2; Marder, won 5 1-2, lost 3 1-2; Tenenwurzel, won 6, lost 4.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Rube Marquard carries a horseshoe. Knocked out of the box by the Cubs, he still keeps intact his record of nine straight games, because Fromme went in with the score a tie and then was beaten out in the ninth.

* * *

Both the Giants and the Athletics lost all around yesterday in the pennant race, but leads of eight and one-half and eight games, respectively, look very good with only two months to play.

* * *

Although Joe Jackson could not help his team to send runs across the plate, the Naps showed they did not need his batting powers when they walloped the Red Sox in both games of a double-header.

* * *

Miller's drive for three bases with two men on turned the tide in favor of the Pirates in the game with the Dodgers. The Dodgers still could do nothing with Robinson, who has beaten them regularly for two years.

* * *

The Braves jumped on Geyer early in the game. It was well they did, because Sallee, who relieved his team-mate, held Boston safe. St. Louis plugged away, but fell one run short.

* * *

"Chink" Yingling is not with the Dodgers. The pitcher is suffering from poison ivy, with which he came in contact when he visited his home in Lebanon while the team was playing the Reds.

* * *

Frank Chance is not going to quit the Yankees. The report that the Peerless Leader would give up baseball, emanating in Los Angeles, was denied. Chance says he is far from being discouraged.

* * *

No, the Yankees are not claiming any pennants, but two straight victories over the White Sox has inspired Chance's men to try and get out of the rathskeller.

* * *

The Athletics ran bases like a bush league team while the Browns made six of their eight hits count. The result was that the leaders were trailing at the wind-up.

* * *

Joe Boehling was a broken-hearted youngster to-day. One thousand fans came from his home town in Richmond to watch the star perform. But the Tigers squelched any enthusiasm by beating the Senators.

* * *

"Three-Fingered" Brown could not stop the heavy hitting Phillies and was driven from the box. Rixey eased up after the Reds were trailing hopelessly behind.

* * *

Ty Cobb put a few over on "Shoeless Joe" Jackson in the race for the batting honors. The Georgia Peach had a percentage of .500 while the Cleveland star went to bat six times and got nary a hit.

* * *

The Pirates have bought Joe Leonard, third baseman of the Des Moines team, of the Western League, and have also claimed Pitcher Kent, whom the Dodgers sent to Toronto, under the waiver rule.

* * *

The Reds have sold Pitcher Harter to the Kansas City team, of the American Association.

JAP CUE CHAMP HERE.

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 1.—Ikujar Tamura, champion billiard player of Japan, is here from Yokohama en route to Chicago and New York to play with Hoppe and others. Yamada, the young Japanese player who made a tour of the United States last winter, is said to have been beaten by Tamura.

Bill Bailey Placed On Ineligible List

Bill Bailey, plucky Cracker outfielder, has been placed on the ineligible list by the management, for the next ten days, and at the expiration of that time it is probable he will be released, if waivers have been obtained. This move was made necessary by the signing of Harry Holland, the Tech third baseman.

Bailey had been unfortunate all season. He has suffered from pains in his side, and a pitched ball, striking him in the same place during the New Orleans series, tore loose a couple of ribs, and practically disabled him.

Bailey expects to return to his home in a few days and will play no more ball this season.

LEOPARDS AND ARMY POLO TEAMS IN FINAL GAME

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 1.—The Cooperstown Leopards and the army polo teams will meet tomorrow in the final game for the army and navy cups by virtue of their victory in the semi-final games at the point Judith Country Clubs field here yesterday.

Aided by a handicap of three goals, the army scored a victory over the Sand Pipers in the semi-final matches by the score of 12 1-4 to 10 1-2. In another thrilling contest the Cooperstown four defeated Point Judith 11 3-4 to 7.

WHITNEY AND INMAN CLASH TO-DAY IN TENNIS FINALS

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 1.—E. R. Whitney, of Boston, and P. C. Inman, of New York, will clash to-day in the finals in the men's singles for the Point Judith Country Club's cup as a result of their victories in the semi-finals yesterday. Inman has two legs of the cup contest needs only one more victory to secure permanent possession of the trophy.

Greatest Depth

The greatest depth known was discovered by the United States cable-survey ship Nero in 1900, near the Island of Guam, where a sounding was made of 5,269 fathoms, or nearly six statute miles, a depth sufficient to submerge the highest mountains.

It is probable that future soundings will reveal slightly greater depth.

The creatures of the deep sea are brought up by a dredge or beam trawl towed by a wire rope operated by a powerful engine on deck.

Dragged along the bottom, it quickly fills with animals of the queerest shapes and brightest colors. More than 800 deep sea fishes have been brought up at a single haul.

Reciprocity Is the Saving Grace of Free Trade

Absolute Free Trade Is Impossible to Commercial Prosperity Without Reciprocity Agreements in Reserve.

A Republican newspaper up East sounds an alarm on the tariff question which is not one whit less an alarm to the entire commercial and consuming republic.

The Republican paper concedes, as all concede, that the Wilson-Underwood tariff bill will be passed and become a law by the vote of a strict partisan Democratic majority. The Republican Senators are not making exhaustive speeches with the idea of converting anybody, but just to go on the record with a vague hope of future reactions toward the protective idea.

But the honest belief of the thinking economist is that this comparatively free trade tariff, if passed, will steadily move toward a full free trade policy in the near future.

It would be difficult to conceive a more definite commercial calamity.

Free trade would be just as distinct an evil in our national policy as a high protective tariff. One is as bad as the other. If protection builds a wall against our importations, free trade gives away our markets without getting anything in return.

Absolute free trade is impossible to commercial prosperity without reciprocity agreements in reserve.

Absolute free trade is as impossible and as impractical at this time as disarmament and universal peace. Everybody would like to see peace universal and the disbanding of armies. But no nation can afford to disband its armies and strip its navies so long as other nations increase armies and build new battleships, which leaves our country at their mercy.

Everybody likes the sound of free trade, but this country can not afford to batter down its tariff walls to universal trade so long as other nations hide behind tariff walls to prevent our products having free passage to their trade.

There is no universal peace until the greater nations all agree to disarm and arbitrate. There can be no free trade until the greater commercial nations all adopt free trade.

It is only by tariff bars held in discretion that we can secure the same trade advantages with other nations that they enjoy with us. It is only by RECIPROCITY that the tariff bars of other nations can be lowered to our trade. As Mr. Hearst declared:

> "If we maintain our protective fence we can say to foreign countries: We will lower our bars to your products if you will lower your bars to our products.
> "But if we have no tariff fence we can make no such beneficial bargain."

The common sense and the commercial judgment of this country will make a mighty fight before it surrenders the golden principle of reciprocity in any tariff we may make.

The Georgian has demonstrated how free trade on the seas has destroyed our merchant marine.

It is just as easy to see how free trade on the land will destroy the equality and prosperity of our markets.

The tariff is not a sentimental question. It is a commonsense commercial question.

THE TARIFF IS THE PRICE OF ADMISSION TO A MARKET! Congress has no right to make our people pay a higher price to foreign markets than foreign people pay to our markets.

The threat of free trade is alarming. But it is not likely. The common sense of the people will protect the country.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF FREE TRADE.

RECIPROCITY IS THE SAVING GRACE OF PROTECTION.

It is impossible to construct a more just tariff without the reciprocity principle.

Too Late for Archbold

Mr. John D. Archbold must view with regret the plan for Congressmen to vote by pressing an electric button instead of shouting "aye" or "no" when the roll is called. For Mr. Archbold this ingenious invention came too late.

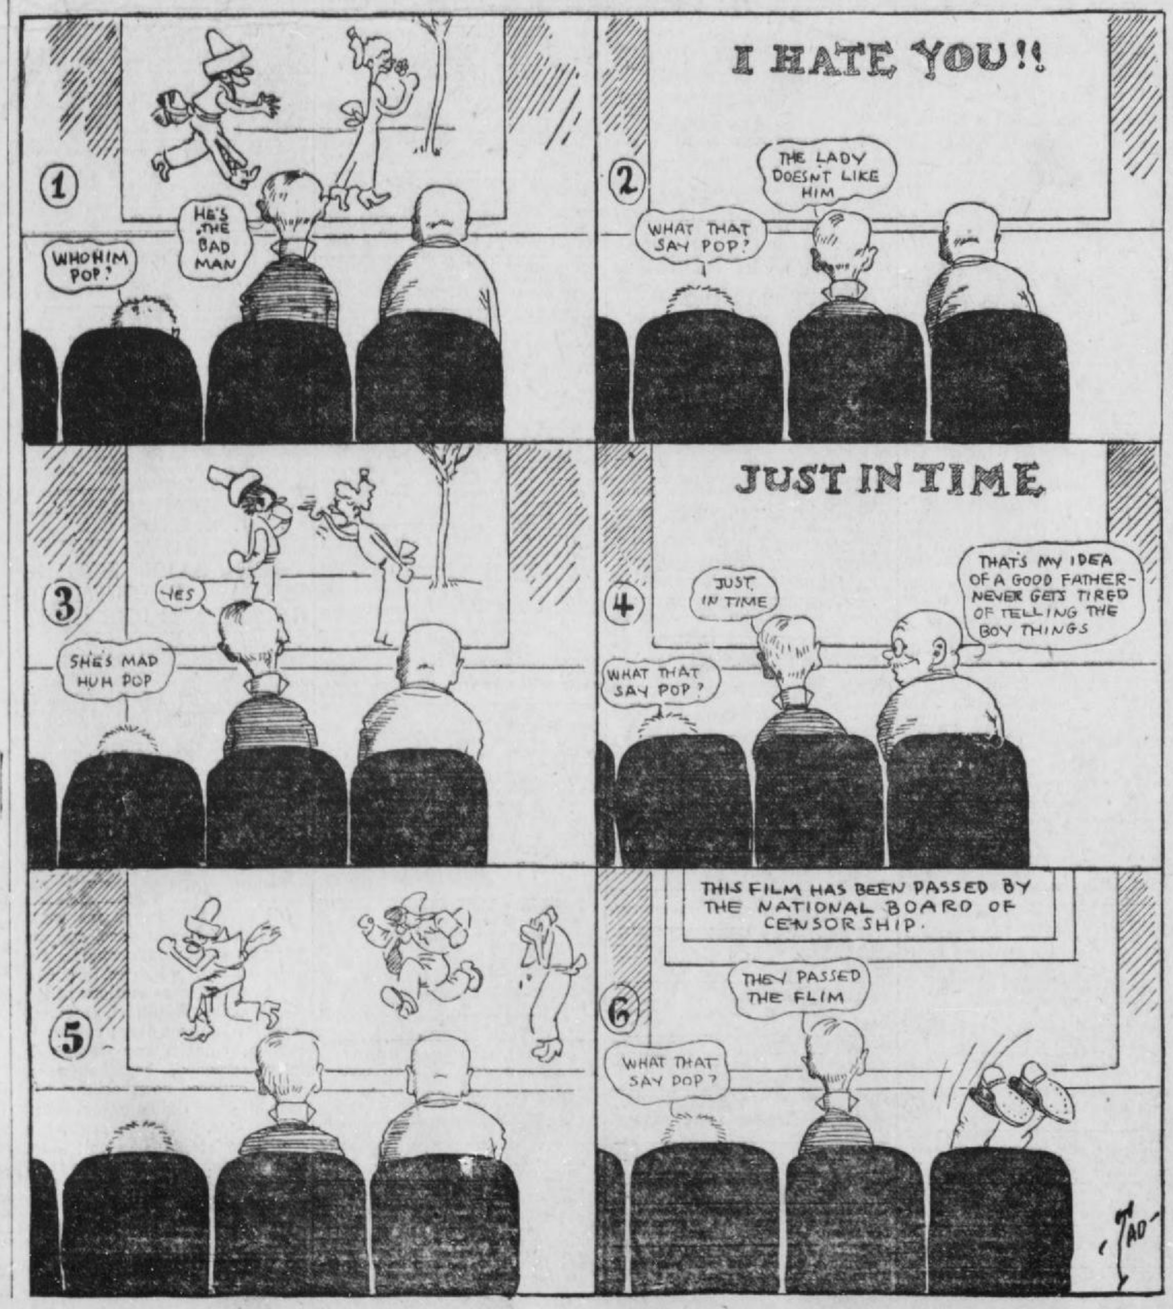

Before the Hearst newspapers ended his control of Senators and Representatives through the judicious use of certificates of deposit, the new scheme wuold have saved Mr. Archbold much time and trouble. It would have been easy to install a switchboard in his offices at No. 26 Broadway, with a telephone connecting with the halls of Congress. And when the roll was called the present master of Standard Oil could have pushed enough buttons to insure a safe majority for all the bills about which he had been writing letters to his private Congressmen and Senators.

But to-day the Archbold grip is broken, and it is doubtful if any member of either House would venture to permit his particular voting key to be operated from the offices of the Standard Oil Company.

Child Toil of Present Age Worst Ever

History Has Never Known a Slavery So Blighting as That of the Young Victims of Modern Commercialism—Money Spent in Pure Extravagance Would Soon Relieve These Children from the Grasp of Despair.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

IF one-half the energy that is wasted upon impracticable schemes of social reform and one-tenth of the money that is thrown away in pure extravagance were concentrated upon the solution of the problem of enfranchising the children of the so-called civilized nations from their bondage to Giant Despair, whose dungeons echo to the pitiless grinding of the money-making machines, there would go up, within a year's time, such a paean of rejoicing childhood as would warm the cockles of the world's great heart—for the world has a heart, if you can but reach it!

I have just been reading an article on "Children in Bondage," in the Good Housekeeping Magazine, which ought, in itself, to start a revolution. And it has recalled an experience of my own bearing upon this great question of child slavery.

Some years ago I went on a lecturing tour in the South. I stopped one night in one of the busiest of those industrial cities which have sprung up within a couple of decades in that wonderful part of our country.

Chief Promoter of Lecture Showed Writer Thro' His Mill.

The next morning the owner of a great mill, who was one of the chief promoters of the local lecture course, and who took great satisfaction in his connection with so commendable an enterprise, and gladly spent money to keep it going, invited me to visit his mill.

It was near noon when I approached its formidable walls, and was admitted within its guarded gates, and I stopped amazed at the first sight of human life that my eyes fell upon there.

It was a long row of little boys and girls, pale-faced and haggard, and clothed in the flimsiest and poorest garments, with tin pails on their arms—waiting in line to carry their dinners to their brothers and sisters who were haltered to the treadmills within. Some of them glanced quickly about, at the least sound, with a scared expression, as if they expected a lash! Evidently there was no time in that busy place for human beings to stop to eat, otherwise than as the overworked dray horse stops at the edge of the pavement to have a bag of meal hung over his neck, with his nose thrust into it!

My interest in the sights that the mill might have to offer was already chilled, but, nevertheless, I went in. I remembered how delighted the owner had been to see so many of "his people" listening to a lecture on astronomy the night before!

I shall not try to describe what I saw. No doubt it was a sight that ought to have made me thrill with admiration for the practical application of the great principle of "efficiency" which I saw before me, but in fact it only made me sad and depressed.

Pale Faces Obliterated Thought of Marvels of Machinery.

I could not admire the marvelous machinery, could pay no attention to the wonderful statistics that were poured into my ears about the incredible number of this, that or the other things that could be turned out in a single minute, for I really saw nothing but pale, drawn faces, bent over the machines, not daring to look up for a moment, and white, bony fingers doing perilous feats with the darting shuttles, and I heard only the inhuman hum of the mechanical monsters that were devouring those young lives!

I have always regretted that there was an occasion when I had not the courage to say what I thought. But we all meet many such occasions. One reason why the world does not improve more rapidly is because we are too often moral cowards. However, I never think pleasantly of the name of that town, although it had listened very flatteringly to what I did say—but that was about the stars and when you talk about them you can hurt no man's "business."

Such Conditions Prevail Throughout the Entire Country.

Of course such things are not confined to the South. In fact it is to be feared that New England taught the lesson. Read the article to which I have referred if you want a host of other facts about this nefarious business of killing off the young of the race, killing them soul and body, in order to swell the bloated carcass of Mammon! Then think seriously about what you have read, and, having thought, act; for modern civilization is doomed unless this unholy thing be destroyed!

The Toss of a Stone

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and eighty-one years ago a young man threw a stone at a tree. If the stone had missed its mark the most thrilling page of human history might never have been written.

Jean Jacques Rousseau was at the time loafing around the country estate of a rich French woman who had taken a fancy to him, and on the day in question he was strolling through the woods feeling greatly depressed. He made up his mind that he was worthless, and that the best thing he could do would be to commit suicide. However, he would gamble a little on it. So picking up a stone and fixing his eye on a tree some little distance away he resolved that should he hit the tree he would brace up and live. He hit it and lived—and the result of his living was the social, political and economic revolution of France and, indirectly, of the whole world.

In 1762—thirty years after he threw the stone at the tree in the park at Chambery—Rousseau gave the world the Contrat Sociale (Social Contract), and the Contrat Sociale made the French Revolution. For the political student Rousseau's book is one of the most curious in the world. "Historically it is null; logically it is full of gaps and flaws;" as a piece of reasoning it is a wretched failure; but it did the work. It carried the multitude. It made the revolution that made a new France, a new Europe and a new humanity.

It was Rousseau, as John Morley well put it, who first in our modern time sounded a new trumpet note for one more of the great battles of humanity. He makes the poor very proud. It was truly said: "It was in Rousseau that polite Europe first harkened to strange voices and faint reverberations from out of the vague and cavernous shadow in which the common people move. The race owes something to one who helped to state the problem, writing up in letters of flame at the brutal feasts of kings and the rich that civilization is as yet only a mockery, and did furthermore inspire a generation of men and women with the stern resolve that they would rather perish than live on in a world where such things can be."

If Hamlet is right when he declared that "there is a special providence in the fall of a sparrow," then surely we are mightily tempted to feel that all the providences were directing the stone that Rousseau threw at the tree in Madame Warren's park at Chambery.
