DR. HURT SAYS FOOD IN STOMACH FAILS TO SHOW TIME OF DEATH

Here are the important developments of Saturday's session of the trial of Leo M. Frank:

Attorneys for the defense spring a sensation by threatening a move for a mistrial because Judge Roan has exposed a newspaper headline to the jury. A compromise is effected by the judge cautioning the jury to disregard any outside influence.

Dr. J. W. Hurt, after testifying along the line taken by Dr. H. F. Harris' testimony of Friday, admits that no examination was made of Mary Phagan's lungs, and that whether death comes by strangulation can be determined only in this manner.

Dr. Hurt testifies under cross-examination that he would not attempt to say that Mary Phagan came to her death within a half hour after she had eaten merely because some cabbage, only partially digested, had been found in her stomach. He declares the time it would take to digest cabbage depends on the individual.

He also testifies that in his examination of the body he discovered no indications that would lead him to say that the girl had been criminally attacked.

Jim Conley is made ready to testify Saturday afternoon, but court adjourns at 12:30 until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

A genuine sensation was sprung at the trial of Leo M. Frank Saturday morning when Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, attorneys for the defense, asked the State to consent to a new trial on the ground that Judge Roan had allowed the jury to catch a glimpse of a headline in the first extra of The Georgian.

Juge Roan had laid the paper on the stand in front of him, and, accoring to the efense the headline across the first page could be read by th men in the jury box.

The headline said: "State Adding Links to Chain."

The defense's lawyers went into immediate conference with the judge, and a few minutes later asked Solicitor Dorsey to consent to a new trial. The Solicitor refused.

Rosser Asks Explanation.

Rosser and Arnold then came into the courtroom and asked that the jury be withdrawn.

Rosser addressed the court:

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now. One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it. I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Solicitor Dorsey Objects.

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

Attorney Rosser during the Solicitor's speech spoke in undertones, threatening a mistrial if the prosecution's request was granted.

Judge Warns Jury.

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an

40 FEARED DEAD IN MINE; FIND 8 BODIES

Pennsylvania Colliery Wrecked by Two Explosions—District Rescue Head Missing.

POTTSVILLE, PA., Aug. 2.—Estimates revised at 4:40 p. m. placed the number of dead at between 30 and 45 as the result of the mine explosions in the East Brookside Colliery, at Tower City, Pa., this afternoon.

At that time eight bodies had been recovered and from 25 to 40 were missing. Of the 75 men at work in the mine when the explosion occurred only a few had been accounted for nearly two hours after the explosion.

Rescue parties went into the mine immediately after the first explosion. Hardly had they reached there when a second blast further wrecked the mine and seemingly ended the last chance the entombed men had for escape.

One man in the first rescue party was District Superintendent John Lorenz, who is missing. It is feared he was overcome.

The explosion occurred in the tunnel. The first blast ripped out the roof supports. Tons of earth crashed upon the workmen. Only the few working near the shaft escaped.

It is thought the majority of the missing are either buried under the earth or blocked back of the wrecked portion of the mine. In the latter case it is doubtful if the men can be brought out alive.

One Brought Out Alive.

Shortly before 5 o'clock one of the men was brought up alive, but unconscious, and so badly mangled that there is little hope for his recovery.

Practically every one of the bodies brought to the surface by rescuers was fearfully burned. The head of one man was blown off.

One of the rescue party at work in the mine at the bottom of the shaft came to the surface shortly before 5 p. m. and reported that no signs of life were visible.

Mothers, wives, sisters and children of the entombed men enacted pathetic scenes around the mouth of the mine.

CORONER'S PHYSICIAN DAMAGES HARRIS' EVIDENCE FOR STATE

Dr. Hurt Says That Undigested Cabbage Does Not Prove Time of Death

EXPERT FOUND NO SKULL FRACTURE; SURE GIRL WAS STRANGLED TO DEATH

important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

The examination of witness proceeded.

The defense rallied sharply Saturday in a vigorous impressive attack on the sensational testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, who declared Friday afternoon that Mary Phagan was killed within a half-hour after she ate dinner April 26, and that she came to her death by strangulation.

Hurt Hits Harris.

From one of the State's own witnesses, Dr. J. W. Hurt, County Physician, Reuben Arnold obtained the important admission that the time it takes to digest cabbage depends on the individual and that the only way to determine with certainty if strangulation is the cause of death is by an examination of the lungs. He admitted the lungs were not examined.

Attacking the testimony of Dr. Harris, who collapsed while testifying on the stand Friday, Arnold asked the witness if Dr. Harris' statement that Mary Phagan had come to her death within a half hour of the time she ate her noon meal was not the wildest sort of a guess. Harris had based his conclusions on the fact that the cabbage he had found in her stomach had undergone only the slightest digestion.

"Is it not true that cabbage is one of the hardest foods to digest and that the average time required to digest it is from 3 1-2 to 4 hours?" asked Attorney Arnold.

Dr. Hurt replied that he thought this was so.

No Proof in Cabbage.

Arnold then showed the specimen of cabbage taken from the stomach of the murdered girl, and called attention to the fact that it had not even been masticated, and that therefore it might have been in her stomach for several hours before she was killed.

Dr. Hurt accompanied this statement by the one, equally vital, that no examination was ever made of the murdered girl's lungs. From this testimony the defense will be able to argue that the State had no substantial foundation for its charge that the girl was strangled to death.

Arnold also forced Dr. Hurt reluctantly to admit that it was impossible for him to state positively either that the blow on the back of Mary Phagan's head had produced unconsciousness or that, on the other hand, it might not have been the actual cause of her death.

Jim Conley, who has sworn that he assisted in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the direction of Frank, was taken from his cell at the police station Saturday in readiness to testify during the afternoon. At this moment Chief Beavers was notified by a Georgian reporter that the trial had been adjourned until Monday morning and the negro was taken back into the station.

Chief Beavers on Stand.

Chief Beavers was one of the witnesses of the morning. An informal objection was made by Attorney Rosser to his appearing as a witness as the Chief previously had been in the courtroom as a spectator. Solicitor Dorsey explained that he had not known that he was going to call Beavers until the afternoon before. The Chief testified only to his examination of the red spots on the floor at the pencil factory. He said that he was present when the spots were chipped up and that they looked like blood to him.

Other witnesses of the day were Helen Ferguson, a factory employee, who testified that she went to the factory Friday night for Mary Phagan's pay envelope and that it was refused her; Robert Lassiter, a policeman, who found the parasol and a ball of wrapping twine at the bottom of the elevator shaft, and Dr. Hurt.

That at least three or four witnesses will be placed on the stand by the State before Jim Conley is called was indicated Saturday afternoon. Dr. Harris, who was examined Friday, it is said, will go on the stand early Monday morning for cross-examination, and following him will be one or two witnesses, experts in adiminal surgery, who will be used by the State to corroborate the testimony of Dr. Harris.

The defense, it is understood, will make a vigorous attack on the testimony of these experts.

Conley may be called Monday afternoon, although it is more than likely that the State will save him until Tuesday.

Helen Ferguson, a companion of Mary Phagan and an employee of the factory, was the first witness to be called when court resumed Saturday morning. The greatest crowd of the week besieged the courthouse clamoring for admission.

Pay Refused.

Solicitor Dorsey examined Miss Ferguson.

Witness said she was an employee of the factory.

Q. Were you at work at the factory Friday, April 25?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you work that day or just go there?—A. I went to the office about 10 o'clock.

Q. What conversation did you have there?—A. I asked for Mary Phagan's money and was told that I could not get it. I talked to Mr. Frank.

Q. Did you ever get her pay before?—A. Yes, but not from Mr. Frank.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you know who paid off?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever get Mary Phagan's money from Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Did you work in the metal department with Mary?—A. Yes.

Detective R. L. Waggoner, who was detailed to watch Frank at the factory the Tuesday morning after the crime and who later rode to the police station with him, was the next witness called by Solicitor Dorsey.

Says Frank Wrung Hands.

Attorney Rosser raised an objection to Wagoner on account of his having been in the courtroom for twenty minutes Wednesday. Wagoner stated that he had heard nothing, and Judge Roan allowed him to testify.

Q. Where were you Tuesday, April 29?—A. Across the street from the National Pencil Factory.

Q. What did you see?—A. I saw Frank come to the window, wringing his hands and looking down. He did it about a dozen times.

Q. Was he nervous or composed?—A. Nervous.

Q. Were you in the automobile when he was taken to the police station?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. Yes. His leg was next to mine. It shook very much.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were you doing in front of the factory?—A. Watching.

Q. Do you know whether Frank was arrested?—A. He was not.

Q. Could you see whether anyone was in the office with him?—A. No.

Dr. Hurt Called to Stand.

Dr. J. W. Hurt followed Wagoner on the stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. County physician.

Q. How long have you held this position?—A. Since January 1. Four years at another time.

Q. What are your duties?—A. To appear at all inquests.

Q. Where did you graduate?—A. I attended the old College of Physicians and Surgeons and also studied in New York.

Q. Did you see the body of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes; Sunday morning, April 27.

Q. Describe to the jury how she appeared.—A. I went to the undertaking establishment. She had a scalp wound on the left side of the head, about two inches long. The right eye was bruised. There were some broken places on the cheek and forehead, scratches on the right and left elbows and scars on right and left legs just below the knees. There was a cord around her neck. It is my opinion that she died from strangulation.

Q. Was this the cord? (Dorsey displayed a long hemp cord.)—A. Yes, so it appears.

Q. Was there any swelling in the neck?—A. Yes.

Q. What would that indicate?—A. That the cord was put around her neck before death.

Q. What was the appearance of the scalp wound?—A. It appeared to have been made by a blunt instrument from below striking upward.

Looked Like First Bruise.

Q. What about the wound around the eye area?—A. The skin was not broken. It looked like it might have been made with a soft instrument.

Q. Could a fist have done it?—A. Yes, it was quite possible.

Q. What do you think would have been the effect of these blows? Were they sufficient to have caused death?—A. No. I would think the blow on the back of the head would have caused unconsciousness.

Q. Did you find any evidence of assault?—A. I did not discover any evidence of violence. There was some blood, but I could not say whether it was from a wound or not.

Q. What was the nature of the wounds on the elbows and the leg?—A. I would say they were made after death.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How did these scratches appear? Could they have been made by the body being dragged by the heels?—A. No. If she were dragged, I should say she was dragged face forward. The scratches ran back as though she was dragged forward.

Cut Two and Half Inches Long.

Q. How long did you say the wound on the scalp was?—A. Let me refer to my notes.

Q. You said it was two and a half inches long and Dr. Harris said it was one and a half inches long. I want to know which is right.

"Two and a half inches," said Dr. Hurt, after looking at his notes.

Q. Did you measure the wound when Dr. Harris dug up the body nine days later?—A. No.

Q. You are not absolutely certain about this examination? Just sort of guessing, aren't you?—A. I am not absolutely certain, but judging from the best of my ability.

Q. All expert testimony is guessing more or less, isn't it? It is just a question as to who can guess the best, isn't it?—A. I expect you are more familiar with expert testimony than anybody else, aren't you?

Skull Not Fractured.

Q. You didn't see any damage on the side of the skull, did you?—A. No, the skull was not fractured.

Q. The brain was not injured?—A. There was some slight trace of concussion on the inside.

Q. You had to be looking for it to see it, didn't you?—A. No, it could be easily seen.

Q. Did you ever hear of a test to see whether a hemorrhage on the inside would produce unconsciousness?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a question or strain on the medical profession as to answer a question like that?—A No.

Q. Were you ever asked before to examine the inside of a skull to determine whether a person was knocked unconscious?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of a person being killed from a blow on the head and there being no scar on the outside?—A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of persons living after a fracture having the inner and the outer table trepined and a piece taken out and then living?—A. Yes.

Results Always Uncertain.

Q. You can reduce almost every faculty of the brain without producing death? The sight, the hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what faculty of the brain was located where this blow was struck?—A. No, I don't believe I can.

Q. One thousand different effects could be produced without producing death or unconsciousness?—A. Yes.

Q. What makes you say that one little blow could have produced unconsciousness?—A. I just believe it.

Q. That little hemorrhage was not what enabled you to say that she was knocked unconscious?—A. No. The exterior appearance was on what I based my opinion, but I strengthened it by the extent of the contusion on the inside.

Q. How do you know strangulation killed her?—A. I could find no other cause.

Q. What about the windpipe and the lungs in strangulation?—A. What do you mean?

Q. How do the lungs appear?—A. Congested.

Q. You never examined the lungs?—A. No.

Q. Why do you say strangulation caused her death?—A. Because I found the rope deeply imbedded in the neck.

Not Sure About Assault.

Q. Looking at that girl that morning would you say that she was ravished?—A. I haven't said so.

Q. Will you say so?—A. I do not know.

Q. You found no external signs of violence?—A. No, but my examination was not final.

Mr. Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. There are a great many things to cause a little inflammation?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at the first post-mortem examination?—A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Harris took the body a second time, didn't he?—A. I don't know.

Q. Dr. Harris is a sort of specialist on post-mortems, isn't he?—A. I don't know.

Solicitor Dorsey made a side remark that Mr. Arnold's cross-examination of the witness was a pedantic parade.

Q. Doctor, it depends on the individual just how soon cabbage is digested, doesn't it?—A. Yes; some digest it sooner than others.

No Rule for Digesting Cabbage.

Q. Isn't each man a law unto himself?—A. Yes; more or less.

Q. Cabbage is one of the hardest things of the world to digest, isn't it?—A. Yes; it is generally regarded as hard.

Q. Doesn't it take from three to four hours to digest cabbage?—A. Yes; three or four hours to thoroughly digest it.

Q. It depends a great deal on how well it was chewed, and how much saliva flowed down, doesn't it?—A. Yes. Masticating helps digestion.

Q. Suppose a little girl in a hurry to catch a car hurriedly ate some cabbage and allowed it to go down unchewed. Wouldn't it take much longer to digest the unchewed part?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you think a doctor is making a mighty wild statement to get up here and state that a piece of unchewed cabbage had not been in a stomach—

"I object," said Dorsey. "That is a question for a jury, and not Dr. Hurt."

"I thought it was wild," said Mr. Arnold.

"I object to that," returned Dorsey.

"I withdraw it," said Mr. Arnold.

"It was entirely gratuitous and should never have been put in," said Solicitor Dorsey. The Solicitor was sustained.

Death Stops Digestion.

Q. Does death stop digestion?—A. Yes, sir; I think it does.

Q. When a person becomes unconscious, does digestion stop?—A. I rather think so.

Q. If you ate something and went to sleep, digestion would continue?—A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, does digestion stop when a person is unconscious?—A. It is an unnatural unconsciousness.

Q. Aren't the gastric juices and blood the only two things that have anything to do with digestion?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, do they die when a person becomes unconscious?—A. No, but the stomach is partially paralyzed.

Q. Didn't you say it was a wild guess to say how long she was unconscious until the time she died?—A. No, I don't think I did.

A mass of testimony followed that is unprintable. In the course of it, Dorsey said:

"I object to these comparisons."

Judge Roan—He has not asked any question that was a comparison.

Arnold—I withdraw the question.

Dorsey—I thought so.

Arnold—Then I won't withdraw it.

Rosser—Don't pay any attention to Dorsey, Rube.

Arnold—All right; I withdraw it.

Cabbage Not Long In Stomach.

Q. Have you ever experimented or not with the digestion of food?—A. I have.

Solicitor Dorsey showed Dr. Hurt samples of cabbage and bread which had been taken from a healthy person's stomach after remaining there one hour, and the samples taken from Mary Phagan's stomach, both of which were submitted by Dr. Harris Friday.

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death occurred?—A. Not very long.

Attorney Arnold objected. "Your honor," he said, "this is unfair. For it is obvious that this cabbage was not chewed. This witness has testified that it takes from three to four hours to digest cabbage; also he has said the cabbage said to have been digested in one hour might have gone into the stomach almost in as liquid form as it now appears. It is not a fair comparison, because the two samples of cabbage did not go into the stomach in the same form."

Jury Gets Breathing Spell.

While Solicitor Dorsey was looking up an authority the jury was allowed to retire for a breathing spell.

Dorsey: "On that proposition I have this to say: Anyone can give an opinion, provided they give the fact on which the opinion is predicated. I don't know how many teeth Mary Phagan had; I don't know whether this cabbage was cooked a long time or a short time; I don't know that this man had as many teeth as Mary Phagan; I don't know that he chewed it as much or as little as she did; I don't know that the cabbage she ate was as highly seasoned as the cabbage he ate, or whether it was seasoned at all, I insist, your honor, that the jury can draw its own conclusions of the value of this witness' testimony."

Mr. Arnold: "Your honor, the witnesses tell us it takes at least two to four hours to digest cabbage. We do not contend that either of these specimens were digested. We merely say they are in a certain state of digestion."

Judge Roan: "Put your question again, Mr. Dorsey. I want to get it straight before I rule."

Headline Upsets Trial.

At this moment Judge Roan held up a Georgian in which headlines reading "State Adding Links to Chain" were visible to the jury for a moment. Instantly Attorneys Arnold and Rosser were on their feet. Rosser spoke.

"Just a minute, your honor, we want to make a motion."

At this moment Arnold leaned over and spoke to Rosser.

"We will ask you to excuse us for a moment, judge," said Rosser, "while we confer."

Arnold and Rosser retired to a rear room, remarking aside as they went that they might make a motion for a new trial, as they were certain the jury had read the headlines in the paper.

In private conference they asked Dorsey to consent to a new trial and he refused.

After a five minutes' conference they returned to the courtroom and Attorney Rosser addressed the court and requested that the jury be withdrawn.

Says Jury Saw Paper.

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now," said Rosser. "One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it; I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Explains to Jury.

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

Examination Resumed.

Dorsey was permitted to put his question to Dr. Hurt:

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death?—A. I would say that it was a much shorter time than the other.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness is sleep?—A. Natural.

Q. Are any of the functions arrested?—A. The brain.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness does violence produce?—A. Unnatural.

Q. Are any of the processes of digestion arrested or delayed?—A. Yes.

Q. Have there not been instances of a blow on the head when the skull was fractured and death did not ensue?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on the recross-examination.

Q. You said some of the processes were delayed. What are they?—A. Motor and sensory nerves.

Processes Dormant in Sleep.

Q. Are they not dormant in sleep? A. Yes.

Q. How do they affect the blood and the breathing?—A. Not at all.

Q. Then how do they affect digestion?—A. I don't know.

Q. When a man is sleeping, are not all the elements of unconsciousness the same?—A. Yes.

Q. You were shown three bottles by Mr. Dorsey. Can you say to what extent this food was digested?—A. No, sir.

Q. This could have been taken as a gruel and it would have been in this shape, wouldn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, this man might have had a stomach that could digest a 10-penny nail?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that a blow on the back of the head will cause the eyes to blacken?—A. It might.

Dr. Hurt was then excused and was followed on the stand by Chief of Police Beavers.

Chief Beavers on Stand.

As Chief Beavers took his seat Mr. Rosser interposed with the question:

Q. Chief, have you been sitting in the courtroom?—A. Not this morning.

"I did not know I was going to use him until this morning," returned Dorsey. The Solicitor then questioned the witness:

Q. When were you at the National Pencil Factory?—A. Tuesday after the crime was committed.

Q. Did you see any blood spots near the ladies' dressing room on the second floor?—A. Yes, I think it was Tuesday I saw them.

Attorney Rosser objected to Beavers testifying because the Chief had heard part of the trial. His objection was overruled.

Q. How did they appear?—A. There were spots on the floor that looked like blood.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Monday morning, wasn't it?—A. I was there when it was chipped up. If it was Monday, I was mistaken in saying Tuesday.

Q. Chief, you did not know it was

Q. That blood was chipped up ear-

FOREMAN OF FACTORY AN IMPORTANT WITNESS

N. V. Darley, presented by the State, proved to be one of the most important witnesses in the trial of Frank.

Will 5 Ounces of Cabbage Help Convict Leo M. Frank?

Are five and a half ounces of cabbage to be the principal factor in sending a man to the gibbet?

If the prosecution is warranted in its belief in the vital and incriminating importance of the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, this is exactly the outcome to be expected in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

It remains, however, for the State to show explicitly just how the sensational statements made last Friday afternoon by the medical expert any more clearly connect Leo Frank with the terrible crime than they connect Jim Conley, the negro, who was skulking in the National Pencil Factory at the same time. The testimony of Mrs. Arthur White is relied upon to do that very thing.

State Plays High Card.

The Harris testimony was without doubt the highest card the prosecution has played since the trial of Frank started. No other evidence ever has been brought out in the three months of the murder mystery that fixed so definitely and apparently so far beyond dispute the time that the pretty factory girl met her death.

As the testimony stands, no opportunity having been given for cross-examination or refutation, it is easily the most damning that has been placed before the jury. It will remain so until the lawyers for the defense are able to attack the doctor's testimony or are given the opportunity to attach to it a significance entirely different than that advanced by the State.

Dr. Harris analyzed the contents of the murdered girl's stomach. He found there 160 cubic centimeters, or about five and two-fifths ounces, of cabbage and biscuit. This was the meal Mrs. J. W. Coleman, Mary's mother, testified that her daughter had eaten just before she left home on the day of the tragedy.

Killed at Early Hour.

The process of digestion had barely begun. Dr. Harris showed two specimens of cabbage which had been in healthy men's stomachs for an hour. They had been reduced to an emulsion. The cabbage taken from the stomach of Mary Phagan still showed the texture of the vegetable's leaves. The digestive fluids seemed to have acted scarcely at all. The presumption was, therefore, said Dr. Harris, that the little girl had met her death within half an hour after she had eaten the simple meal at her home in Bellwood and had left for the pencil factory. At the most, that was three-quarters of an hour.

Dr. Harris gave his testimony with a professional assurance, the effect of which can be counteracted only by the uttermost skill of Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold. He was positive that the girl was killed within a half or three-quarters of an hour after she had eaten.

This meant that she was attacked and murdered between 12:05, which is about the time the State believes she entered the factory, and 12:20. It was at 12:05 that Monteen Stover said she entered and found Frank absent from his office.

Describes Wounds Vividly.

The courtroom was hushed as Dr. Harris described the wounds of the girl in a manner that vividly portrayed the State's theory of how the girl met her death.

She was attacked near the lathing machine. There was a struggle. Her assailant, infuriated at her resistance or fearful of the approach of persons, struck her fiercely over the right eye. Dr. Harris described the injury. It must have been made with the fist, he said, or with some soft instrument, as there were few signs of abrasion of the skin, only a swelling and discoloration.

The blow felled the girl to the floor. She struck her head against some hard substance. Dr. Harris indicated this by testifying that the skin above the wound on the back of the head had been shoved upward slightly, a circumstance which woud hardly have obtained had the blow on the back of the head been delivered by a club or other instrument.

Further to clinch the State's indictment, charging strangulation, Dr. Harris was positive that the blow on the back of the head could not have caused death. It remained for the assailant to choke the unconscious little girl. There were indications of a criminal attempt before the girl's death. Of all this the medical expert told while Leo Frank looked on him with the same speculative expression he had given the other witnesses. The accused showed neither by the flicker of an eye lid nor the paling of a cheek that the graphic reproduction of what the State regarded as the circumstances of the gruewsome crime had affected him in the least.

If the prosecution is able to establish the accuracy of the conclusions reached by Dr. Harris as a result of his analysis and examination, it then will ask:

"If Jim Conley is the murderer of Mary Phagan and attacked her between 12:05 and 12:20, how did he happen to be dozing on a box by the side of the stairs on the first floor when Mrs. Arthur White came down stairs at about 12:50?"

As it stands, the testimony of Dr. Harris is not by any means conclusive. It is, however, far the most damaging evidence that has been submitted.

An interested public is awaiting the answer that the defense will make.

Takes 500 Pounds of Fat Off 40 Patients

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Professor Nagelschmidt performed two operations in a London hospital to-day with his wonderful diathermic treatment, in which he employs both medicine and surgery. In the former electric rays of very high temperature are passed through the diseased part. In the surgical part of the treatment the current reaches the tissues from the edge of a knife-like application which acts as a bloodless cautery.

The professor has used his treatment for the reduction of obesity, and says 40 patients were deprived of an aggregate of 500 pounds of fat.

LUTHER ROSSER EXEMPLIFYING THE GENTLE ART OF CROSS-EXAMINING

To the casual spectator who feels no personal interest in the outcome of the Frank trial, the one great feature of the courtroom is the cross-examining of the State's witnesses by Luther Z. Rosser. Rosser roars, Rosser whispers, Rosser threatens, Rosser pleads, Rosser insinuates, Rosser cajoles, Rosser jests.

At the left is shown Rosser holding his arms out as though to receive and clasp to his breast the answer about to come to a difficult question he has put.

At the right is Rosser grinning sarcastically. A witness for the State has just said that his memory was as fresh after two years as two days.

Rosser gently starting a battery of questions.

Rosser thundering, his face clouded by anger.

DR. HARRIS SHOWS FRANK HAD CHANCE TO KILL GIRL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The testimony of Dr. Roy Harris, chairman of the State Board of Health, and one of the most learned and approved physicians in Georgia, was dramatic, both in its substance and in the manner of its delivery Friday.

It was not calculated to help Leo Frank—and it did not.

The exhibition of a portion of the contents of the dead girl's stomach, for the purpose of approximating the time of her death, held breathless the packed courthouse—and the fainting of the physician during the progress of his testimony gave a final touch of melodrama to the trial that thrilled the audience as nothing else has thus far.

Dr. Harris impressed me, too, as believing in Frank's guilt—I do not know that he does believe that way, it merely happens that he seemed so to impress me.

And if he impressed that jury as he impressed me, then the things he testified may, if the remainder of the case against Frank holds together, prove eventually to be the defendant's undoing.

Shows He Had Chance.

To be sure, the State has not yet fixed the crime definitely on Frank—but it HAS definitely shown, unless its witnesses be impeached, which is highly unlikely, that Leo Frank MIGHT have murdered Mary Phagan and that he DID have the opportunity to accomplish it.

Having shown that the OPPORTUNITY was there, and that the murder likely was consummated during the time limits of that opportunity, the remaining elements of the case need but to be knitted properly together to make dark indeed the outlook for Frank.

Frank himself, Monteen Stover, Mrs. White and Dr. Harris—they together form a chain thus far apparently strong and dangerous!

That, from the standpoint of the defense, however, is the worst view to take of it.

It must be remembered that the defense as yet has introduced no witnesses. Such advantage as it so far has gained—and it has won many points—it has gained by wringing from the State's own witnesses matters of fact favorable to Frank.

When the defense comes to tell its story it may be confidently anticipated that additional weak points in the State's case may be discovered. The only question is, will they be found SUFFICIENTLY weak to cause the entire chain to fall apart?

Defense Seeks Weakest Link.

A chain is, of course, only as strong as its weakest link. Will the defense be able to locate the State's weakest link? And having located it, will it, can it be strained to the point of giving way?

That is the perplexing and grim puzzle that Rosser and Arnold are contemplating from one standpoint and to-day Dorsey and Hooper from the other.

The black, forbidding shadow of the negro, Jim Conley, has fallen heavily athwart the courtroom in the old City Hall, where Frank is battling for his liberty, his good name and the restoration of his status as an upright and honorable man among his fellows.

The State is paving the way to the climax of its case—it is leading up, and with considerable skill and adroitness, to the test of its biggest asset or its most tremendous liability, as the case may be—Jim Conley, confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder and by many suspected of being the principal to the murder.

Somehow it seemed to me that Luther Rosser grew more and more cautious in his cross-examining Friday and Saturday, and certainly Reuben Arnold appeared to weigh well his words and carefully propound his questions.

Dorsey Has Temper in Leash.

Dorsey, too, has his tempre much more thoroughly in hand—and Hooper?

Hooper is the same as ever—smiling, calm, deliberate, rarely speaking at all, save to whisper directing words into his associate's ear now and then.

When Jim Conley is on the stand, Leo Frank will be face to face with the crisis in his trial—either Conley will leave the stand Frank's final deliverance and refuge, or his eternal damnation on earth!

For this is a battle in truth to the very death—a battle in which quarter is being neither given nor asked!

It means hope, and love, and life, and liberty to Frank, or it means——!

I looked long and earnestly into the faces of those twelve "good men and true," the "gentlemen of the jury" on Friday afternoon.

To me, the Frank jury appears to be much above the average.

A composite picture of it would indicate, I suspect, intelligence, level-headedness, business knowledge and poise.

If it is the sort of jury I think it is, it is just the sort of jury that should try a case of such unusual quality as the one it now has in hand.

I am assuming that a vast majority of Georgians are hoping sincerely to see the truth of this famous case established—that it is largely an abstract proposition to the average man.

The point, however, is not so much what any one of us thinks—the point is what does that JURY think?

The impressions that evidence produce are varied and sometimes marked. One never can exactly and precisely say which way it will cut.

And right here my mind goes back involuntarily to Dr. Roy Harris, and his remarkable testimony.

Undoubtedly the defense will have to put on its thinking cap, straight and firmly set, if it hopes not only to upset that testimony and discredit it as particularly and relatively in point, but to remove the profound impression it may have made upon the jury.

It is, after all, largely upon mental impression—perhaps more often than not—that jury verdicts are predicted. The psychological receptiveness of the jury frequently controls the finding, I doubt not.

If Dr. Harris' testimony has weighed heavily against Frank in the mind of the jury, the defense will find it extremely difficult to remove that weight.

The Solicitor General may have been far more astute and incisive, too, than some have thought, when, time and again, he claimed to have been entrapped by his own witnesses—that they were not now swearing the same things that a few weeks ago they swore readily enough.

Effect May Be Decisive.

If the Solicitor has managed to get it into the minds of that jury that Frank needs protection against actually damaging circumstances, that witnesses deliberately have been drilled to protect him against sinister things, that witnesses have been tampered with in his behalf—all of which things may be inferentially set up, without many genuine reasons therefor being given—then a psychological effect will have been achieved that may prove dangerous in the extreme to the defendant.

Now, I do not mean to say the State HAS succeeded in doing that, and I hardly see wherein those impressions would be warranted altogether in the minds of the jurymen, still Dorsey and Hooper are driving at SOMETHING—and it may be they are driving at that exact psychological effect!

And you never can tell.

The way of a serpent upon a rock, of an eagle in the air, and of a man with a maid—these things have been said to be the strangest of all things. But the fourth strangest thing, and there may be so many as four superlatively strange things, is the way of a jury with a defendant at bar!

Therefore, if Hooper and Dorsey have been seeking, through the clever manipulation of their own witnesses and through the still cleverer directing of the cross-examination into desired channels, and if they have succeeded, which no man possibly may know now, the art employed has been consummately far-reaching and keen.

It will brace up the amazing story of Conley wonderfully and make his tale the easier for the jury to accept as true, and it will in inverse ratio discount the defendant's statement, moreover, if the jury can be brought to that psychological status suggested in this article, if it be the true purpose of the State to bring it there.

Situation Rests on "Ifs."

There are a good many "ifs" in this idea, to be sure—but all psychological situations are builded largely upon "ifs."

That the State is undertaking to establish a psychological effect in at least one other direction, too, is evident in the way it insists, over and over, that Frank was "nervous" or "extremely nervous" just after the crime was committed—the idea being that if he was agitated it likely was because of his guilty conscience.

The State has combated this wonderfully well, in so far as the substance of its denials are concerned—and yet into this idea obtrudes the thought that maybe here, again, the State has been cleverer than the defense has imagined, by forcing the State rather to overdo its hand in that direction!

Now, these suggestions may be more or less elusive and hard to get hold of, but they are in no way impossible. Indeed, when it is remembered that the State all along has been developing a rather weak circumstantial case against Frank always up to its star witness, Conley—at once both its hope and its despair—and that the story of that witness is grimly grotesque, in parts strenuously straining on the imagination, based, as it is in portions, upon admitted lies and misrepresentations, the great help and assistance to the State of a mentally receptive jury may be, and doubtless will be, appreciated immediately by the reader.

In any and every aspect of the case it is but the simple truth to say that both the State and the defense have been forced to the skating on dangerously thin ice more than once so far.

Wilson Takes a Day Off; Golfs a Little

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—President Wilson to-day dropped all official business. He golfed in the morning with Dr. C. G. Grayson, his physician, and planned to go to the ball game in the afternoon.

Roan Holding Scales of Justice With Steady Hand

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Emotion's entire gamut is daily run on the screen of faces watching the Frank trial.

A student of facial expression can find anything he seeks by watching the throng of spectators a half hour.

A glance at one man may show a sneer of hate as bitter as gall. His neighbor in the next seat will probably be smiling in amused content as if he were witnessing the antics of his favorite comedian.

Looking to the left he may see fear as vividly depicted on a countenance as trapped felon has ever felt. And another glance might show a spectator in studious contemplation as rapt as that of a philosopher endeavoring to fathom a new frailty in human character.

Men have been mad, and shown it, during the progress of Atlanta's most famous criminal case. And men have shown that they were glad to the point of jubilation at the very same instant.

Roan Utterly Impassive.

But throughout the tedious hours and hours of the hearing, one man sits, listening to every word. And he has yet to display the fact that his emotions are any more affected by the dramatic trial in which he is a commanding figure than those of a business man going through the daily routine of his prosaic grind.

That quality shows why the man is sitting there. If he were a man to show that his feelings were swayed as the tide of battle turned first for one side and then the other, he would not be qualified for the eminent position he holds.

Judge L. S Roan is performing the arduous duties of presiding justice in the Frank case, because the people of Fulton County recognized that he is the man of the county's 250,000 best endowed by nature to perform this task.

His attitude throughout the hearing has shown that the people chose wisely and well.

Think of his position. It is one of supreme importance just at this time, when passion and prejudice are more likely to rule than cool reasoning.

It is his work to uphold the theory that Justice is blind, and that the courts of the land are the blindfold that darkens the vision of the goddess. He must see that the scales are evenly balanced. He must be sure that the sword is sharp.

There are scores, yes hundreds, of people in Atlanta to-day convinced absolutely of Frank's guilt in the Phagan mystery, and it would take a power of inconceivable magnitude to change their mental attitude.

There are scores and hundreds right here who believe thoroughly and honestly that Frank is innocent of any crime, and is as cruelly a persecuted person as the earth has known since the days of the martyrs. And so firm is this belief that it could not be shaken by dynamite or earthquake.

No Doubt as to Fairness.

Judge Roan's position and his oath of office call on him to see that both of these classes are firmly convinced of one fact in common, and that is that the case of Leo M. Frank is being fairly, honestly and effectively tried according to the law and evidence.

When he does this, he is removing a tremendous amount of the poison in the case. People are too prone to hint that a man's money can assure him of safety in any act he may commit. People are too likely to say that law and order becomes as nothing beneath a weight of prejudice.

Every word that Judge Roan speaks is as eagerly listened to as the voice of a diva. His every action is watched as closely as those of the President of the United States are by his secret service protectors.

Therefore, in action as well as in word, the judge must be impartial. Therefore, he can not smile as one side or the other scores a point. He can not evince extraordinary interest if it is apparent that the lawyers are about to tear to shreds the story of a witness. He must make a mental picture of everything in the long-drawn-out battle in order to give his final instructions to the jury, but he must not permit this picture to be reflected on his face.

And he has not.

His rulings have been quick. They are spoken in a low voice, just loud enough for counsel and witness to hear. In rendering a decision, he rarely straightens himself from the reclining attitude he assumes in the office chair.

Heat Hard on Judge.

He sits through the long hours, his right hand waving a huge palm leaf fan, though two electric fans are turned on the bench. He needs all three, for the courtroom is stifling hot, and Judge Roan is no longer young. Occasionally he mops a hairless spot on his high forehead with a handkerchief.

Several times during each day during the duller moments of the trial, he speaks a smiling word to some member of the bar, not connected with the case, who passes the bench or exchanges pleasantries with a court attache.

But his mind is never off the burning issue that he must play so important a part in deciding.

FRANK JUROR'S LIFE ONE GRAND, SWEET SONG--NOT

O. B. KEELER.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

Look him over next time you attend the Frank trial. Size up his little job. Weigh his responsibility. Consider his problems.

And then, if seeking employment, go out and sign a contract to make little ones out of big ones.

It's a more satisfactory way of earning $2 a day.

The juror's business is to collect evidence by the earful, sift the same, separate the true from the false, and make it into a verdict as between the Stat of Georgia and Leo Frank.

On the face of it, the plan is beautifully simple.

But the beauty is only skin deep.

You are recokning without the lawyers.

Here Entereth the Lawyer.

The simple-minded layman—and that rating includes the juror—starts out with the idea that the business of a lawyer is to extract evidence from the witness in available form for proper consideration by the juror.

It speedily develops that the full intent of counsel is to prevent the witness from unburdening himself in any way whatsoever. The more expensive the counsel, the less information the opposition will be able to wheedle out of its star performers.

The method of blocking is objective—that is, it is by means of objections. It appears that our system of jurisprudence takes cognizance of the juror as a mere babe in arms, not fit to assimilate the strong meat of evidence straight.

How the Juror Is Spared.

So he is sedulously raised on the bottle.

Mr. Dorsey (for example) has a witness by whom he is aching to show that Leo Frank was nervous the morning he was apprised of the tragedy. Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold are equally positive that the witness is not competent to judge if Mr. Frank was nervous. Also they are quite sure that the bottle-fed juror is utterly incapable of deciding if the witness is competent to decide if Mr. Frank was nervous.

They do not intend that the juror shall endanger his delicate thinking apparatus by grappling with any such abstruse problem.

So they fix it up this way.

Witness: "He insited on having some coffee."

Mr. Rosser: "I object to the use of the word 'insisted.' It manifestly is a conclusion of the witness, and as such has no place in the evidence. I ask that the word be ruled out."

Objections Fix the Fact.

And the court orders it ruled out, thereby fixing the circumstance firmly in the mind of the juror. And then Mr. Dorsey twists the query around and gets the witness to state that Frank asked for coffee twice at his house and once at the factory.

Just why that arangement suits the defense beter than the simple proposition that Frank insisted on the coffee is not entirely plain—to the layman.

But it seems that the juror is to be shielded from any breath of anything not bearing strictly on the guilt or innonce of the accused.

Specific and accurate information being thus at a premium, the juror probably is amazed when Mr. Rosser, vibrating with grief and indignation, protests against Detective Scott reading from some notes he made while working directly on the case.

The court also is shocked, but permits Mr. Scott to "refresh his memorl" by means of the notes and then retail the product of such refreshment by word-of-mouth.

This is agreeable to Mr. Rosser and the court, but when Mr. Dorsey offers further to refresh Mr. Scott's somewhat wilted recollection, Mr. Rosser intimates at the top of a robust voice that such a thing shall be accomplished only over his (Mr. Rosser's) inanimate form.

And that promptly affords the bottle-fed juror some more evidence to ponder.

Mr. Dorsey insists it is his right to "lead" the witness.

The witness demands to know if he is suspected of holding back.

Mr. Dorsey declares he has been trapped by the witness, and Mr. Rosser appends the somewhat doubtful comment that Frank Hooper is a wise man.

Here Are More Problems.

Now, add this to the problems of the troubled juror:

Is Mr. Scott balking?

If so, has Mr. Dorsey the right to hold an ear of corn in front of him?

Has Mr. Dorsey been trapped?

And, in view of the foregoing, is or it not Mr. Hooper a wise man?

Other problems for the exercise of the Frank juror on the side, as it were, would include the following:

Should Mr. Dorsey be permitted to examine a witneg without interruption by Mr. Rosser?

Should Mr. Rosser be permitted to object?

If so, should Mr. Dorsey scowl while Mr. Rosser is objecting?

Does Mr. Rosser consider whisky a good remedy for indigestion?

Would He Hide Evidence?

Woud anybody think that Mr. Rosser would have anything to do with suppressing evidence, except in the regular and approved objective method prescribed by law?

Is Mr. Scott a trained sleuth?

And one more thing that tends to lend an acrobatic cast to the mental processes of the Frank juror.

Once in a while—not very often, it's true—but once in a while something gets by Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold. The witness may be quick on the trigger. Or Mr. Dorsey may manage to frog up a subtle query with a joker in it.

And after the storm of objection has thundered itself out and Mr. Rosser is mopping the signs of honest toil from his brow, and Mr. Dorsey is wearing an expression similar to that of a cat that knows all about what happened to the canary—why, then the court orders the stenographer to strike out the answer.

And the obliging juror is instructed to forget it.

Yes?

Would You Forget it, Too?

Just suppose that you, being an honest and hard-working juror, trying in an honest and hard-working way to extract a morsel of real information from a jungle of cross-questions and crabbed answers and objections and oratory and recrimination—suppose that the honest and hard-working witness should beat 'em to it for once, and disgorge something really interesting.

And then suppose the judge should tell you to wipe it right off your mental slate, and not remember it, or consider it, or think about it any more forever.

You would do it, would you not?

Neither would we.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

I was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast. "Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the countryside shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fireworks.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed.

"Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stuuid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had. Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes, bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or any strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and pepper and salt to taste. Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam. Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's cri right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I ses is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. "If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instant. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering. Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name. A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us; the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Friendship is to be valued for what there is in it, not for what can be gotten out of it.—Trumbull.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it runs to it, it may run itself out of breath.

The strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other.

There is no folly equal to throwing away friendship in a world where friendship is so rare.

It is a fine thing to be yourself, and a true friend loves you most when you are?

Think less of your right to demand service from friendship and more of your sacred duty to give to it.

To be a hero, trust yourself—to be a martyr, trust the world—and if you are an idealist, trust your friend.

When your friend disappoints you it hurts—but the agony is bitter when you find yourself failing your own ideal of friendship.

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this morning," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some one of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, 'Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without tiling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your lips are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took it, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin tonight I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. It is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my price. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly. I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first; I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before

* * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

Confessions of a Medium

(Spirit Transference in Clairvoyancy)

An Expose of Frauds Practiced in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc., Etc.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK. SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless, as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands, until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling galt and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it," I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought, ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

RITCHIE FEARS WOLGAST BOUT, ASSERTS NOLAN

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Money talks.

So says the old sporting slogan, and by the same token there are times when money proclaims itself in clarion tones.

Ad Wolgast, who has been mooning around in a half-hearted way ever since it was brought home to him that an operation for appendicitis had robbed him of much of his fighting force, had almost despaired of getting into the limelight again, when a happy thought struck him.

He challenged Willie Ritchie for $25,000 a side, and the sporting world, hearing the chink of so much money, immediately stopped to listen.

Then, right at the psychological moment, Ritchie said the proposition looked good to him, and the sporting world's sense of hearing became more acute than ever.

Now, in this case, as in others, money's voice may dwindle to a whisper, and finally merge into complete silence. That is, so far as threats of a big side wager are concerned. Ring men from time immortal have brandished bales of currency, and jingled $20 pieces only to decide after mature consideration that it was as well to let the ticket-purchasing public supply the sinews of war.

And the public, happy in the prospect of a match between fighters with pretensions to class, was quite content to have it that way.

IF Wolgast and Ritchie decide to have it out, never a single member of the grand army of fight fans will insist that the wager feature of the affair be lived up to. Of course, if the lads are stubborn about risking some of their accumulations, no one will object.

The notable thing about the situation just now is that there seems to have been a general awakening to the fact that Wolgast is entitled to a return match with Ritchie. It might be said that the feeling that little Ad should be given a chance to retrieve the laurels he lost on a technicality has existed ever since the day Ritchie became champion. But the absence of enthusiasm on the point was due to Wolgast's tactics. In many of his matches he was careless about his training, and even now, while hurling defiance at Ritchie, he is going around with his hand incased in a plaster cast.

What he needs is a couple of months far from the maddening crowd to give his splintered knuckles a chance to knit and enable the Wolgast frame to store up a little vitality. The Ritchie match will keep, and there is little fear of the public forgetting that the chance is coming to Wolgast.

BILLY NOLAN, ex-manager of Ritchie, is in town, and was asked what he thought of the Ritchie-Wolgast contest as an "attraction."

"I suppose," said Nolan, "that Tommy Murphy has the best right of them all to a match with Ritchie, but I honestly believe that a Wolgast-Ritchie bout would draw a big gate. To my way of thinking, it is the best card in sight. I have always made it a point to keep track of public sentiment in these matters, and I know that 70 per cent of the spectators who passed out through the gates the day Ritchie won the title from Wolgast on a foul felt that Wolgast should be given a chance to regain what he had lost. And that sentiment still exists."

And whisper, Nolan is skeptical about Ritchie's good faith in saying he is willing to box Wolgast again.

Now that the strings that held manager and man together are severed, Nolan is prone to call a spade a spade, and he says that Ritchie never relished the thought of one day having to stand in front of Wolgast again.

According to Nolan, the names on Ritchie's roll of eligibles were Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ad Wolgast's name was "nivver mintioned" in any of the councils of war that Nolan and Ritchie held.

RITCHIE said in Los Angeles a day or so ago that he held aloof from Wolgast, thinking Ad would prove a poor card. That is poppy-cock. Wolgast, were he to train right, is the best lightweight card in sight to-day.

He is a card for the reason that fighters who perform as well as Wolgast has done are always strong with the fight-going public until signally defeated, and nothing like that has happened to Wolgast as yet.

He is a card for the further reason that the breath of suspicion has never attached to any of his contests. He always gave the public the best he was capable of, and in the matter of square dealing, Wolgast's record is on a par with that of Battling Nelson.

Another Bargain Bill for To-day

By O. B. Keeler.

IN the sparsely occurring intervals when we have nothing else to do, we sit and wonder solemnly at the number and variety of the kinds of baseball that can be produced in the course of one reasonably short afternoon.

Once in a while it doesn't seem humanly possible.

But we turn to the old score book, and it is even so.

There was yesterday afternoon, now.

You might frisk the Big Show with a vacuum cleaner and not bring to light a prettier or more workmanlike combat than that first game. Four hits apiece, tight pitching, clean and brilliant fielding, and the score 3 to 1, settled up in the eighth round by a sharp attack.

And the home club on the long end. Can you beat it?

AND then, as the well-known Bard of Avon puts it, having gazed on this picture, unwind another reel and turn in the riot call.

The bald fact that Fleharty slipped it to us conveys only a small percentage of the devastation. The redeeming feature of the aftermath was the fact that it traveled only six frames.

In other words, the rain cut in at the wrong time, or else it stopped too early.

IN fact, the afternoon was consumed in a battle between the elements, two thousand earnest fans and a couple of ball clubs. At the end of the sixth inning, game No. 1, the heavens opened as usual and proceeded to save some more of the corn crop in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

The umpires held up the proceedings for the entire 30 minutes prescribed by law, and then started the cruel war again. Atlanta was leading by a score of 1 to 0 at the time, but the Volunteers, taking advantage of the only flivvers of the game, knotted the count. Joe Agler then shot off a triple that scored Chapman, and added his own run when the useful Welchonce scraped a wallop off Jack Spratt's upholstery.

GILBERT PRICE was in complete control of the situation from start to finish. The four hits of the opposition were in widely separated innings—one in the first, one in the fourth, one in the sixth and one in the eighth. Mr. More, who yielded the same number, was not so judicious in placing them. One was wasted in the fourth, but all the rest were produced in the eighth. A base on balls, a sacrifice hit, an out and a wild chuck by More spotted the Town Boys their first tally without the aid of a hit.

IN addition to his valuable triple, Joe Agler put on a bit of circus stuff in the sixth, when he made a neat steal of second while More clung to the ball, as if he was afraid somebody was going to take it away from him. Joe began to slide about the time More came to.

CIRCUS SOLLY HOFMAN continued to meet with poor luck on the towpath. In the fifth inning of the first game, he walked, after two were down, and tried for second on a short passed ball. Chapman made a quick recovery, and Bisland stuck the pill on the sliding Artie for a hair-line decision. It was fast work all 'round.

IT took two misplays, only one of which shows in the box, to help the Volunteers to their one run in the first game. In the eighth inning, Hofman singled and Lindsay sacrificed. More hit to Holland, who threw wide, and the pitcher was safe, Artie reaching third. The infield crept up on the grass, and Price did his part, making Daley hit weakly to short. Bisland stuttered with his hands, and Solly was over, but the runner was retired at first, saving Bisland a boot.

CARL THOMPSON ran into something in the second game and bounced back before a hand was out. Daley singled to left, Callahan tripled to center, and Spratt singled in the same hole, in rapid and terrifying succession. Clarke came on, and Spratt went out stealing, after which two more singles went to waste, the five solid smashes producing only two runs. Clarke got in the next round, an error, a sacrifice and three hits—one of the fluke Cincinnati variety—putting over two more runs and cinching things for the smiling Fleharty.

AFTER Manush had filed out for Clarke in the fifth, the fans got a belated treat. There was a slight delay, and then "String" Love, the human office building, was wheeled to the center of the arena.

The long chap got a great hand an responded with a burst of speed that in the thickening dusk was simply unhittable. Half dodging a shoot, Callahan scratched a Texas Leaguer into left, but the tall boy put some more swift on the pill, and Spratt's twisting short fly resulted in a sensational double play, put on by Tommy Long.

Callahan had reached second, when one of Love's fast ones got clean through Dunn, and when Tommy came sprinting in for Spratt's short pop, Cally broke for third. Tommy froze the fly on the dead run, and raced on over to second for the other out.

Then Noyes fanned, bewildered by the speed of the long fork-hander.

ANOTHER bargain matinee for this afternoon, the trouble beginning at 2:15 o'clock. Manager Smith said this morning he had a good mind to shoot Thompson right back at the Vols in one of the games. He was undecided as to Conzelman and Love for the other. Manager Schwartz announced that Williams would work in the opener, with Brackenridge in the afterpiece. "That's all I've got," said Bill, cheerfully.

Belgium Puts Ban On Jack Johnson

BRUSSELS, Aug. 2.—Jack Johnson may soon be without a country to fight in. England does not want him. He can not return to America because of the sentence for white slavery hanging over his head. France harbors him, but not enough to allow him to mix with the guests in first-class hotels. Now Belgium has put the ban on him.

Following the announcement that the champion was to give boxing exhibitions in Belgium, the Minister of Justice yesterday issued an order that all boxing contests in the future should be investigated. This move was made to prevent faking in matches.

The hue and cry against Johnson's exhibiting in Belgium became so great, however, that the Minister of Justice was forced to issue another edict. To-day he put the lid down on all boxing. No further matches, whether between blacks or whites or mixed, will be allowed to be staged in the kingdom.

GRIFFIN AND ARMSTRONG IN WESTERN TENNIS FINAL

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Clarence Griffin, California's latest tennis marvel, upheld the reputation of his State by qualifying for the Western championship finals through a victory in his hardest match of the tournament over William Blair, of Lake Geneva, Wis., 6-2, 7-5, 6-2.

To-day in the final round, upon which, through the absence of Champion Maurice McLoughlin, depends the title, Griffin will meet Joseph Armstrong, of St. Paul, who yesterday downed Harry Waidner, of Chicago, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, 6-3.

THE BASEBALL IDOL.

THE BASEBALL IDOL (CF. IDLE) is a state of mind. He was created by a lot of honest but thoughtless newspaper writers who were fond of jokes and never expected to be taken seriously. Thus we see that joking is a dangerous habit.

The Baseball Idol leads a life of busy inactivity. In the winter months he is on the stage or in the newspapers telling all and sundry how many thousands of dollars he will demand in the spring. In the spring he is hard at work demanding. In the summer he is in the hospital suffering with a comminuted fracture of the feelings or on the bench recovering from the effects of a collision with the umpire. He takes a much-needed rest in the fall.

Hailing from Marissa, Ill., or Broken Bow, Nebr., he begins at once to talk for publication about his "loyalty to our city," that being the one that has bid highest for his services. His loyalty fluctuates with his pay, and is changed with his uniform. Occasionally he adds to the sum of human joy by nodding to some otherwise intelligent man in the grandstand who at once rushes down to his office and demands a 50 per cent increase of salary on the strength of it.

On the field he can always be recognized, as he is the last member to emerge from the clubhouse and is languid and aloof. We knew one also who could be identified by the skill with which he could quarter an oval dish of mashed potatoes and empty it clean in four swift scoops of the knife.

He is the one financial fly in the golden ointment of the magnate. Whenever a club owner groans and tosses in his sleep he is thinking about some item or $10,000 on his payroll. From this we learn that in the wonderful scheme of things even a Baseball Idol has his use.

Don't miss the next article of the great series—"The Alibi."

Three Naps Using Matty's Fadeaway

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—Three members of the Naps' pitching staff have mastered the fadeaway ball invented by Christy Mathewson and have been using it lately to deceive batters. Cy Falkenberg learned the delivery while with Toledo, and his employment of it is the chief factor in his successful comeback, he says.

Falkenberg showed Vean Gregg and George Kahler how to throw it, and after experimenting for a month, both added it to their regular repertoire about six weeks ago.

Gregg is believed to be the only southpaw in the big leagues that uses a fadeaway. The ball is hard to control, but the three Naps have achieved good results with it.

40 BAPTIZED AT DALTON.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—Instead of spending their annual outing at St. Simons Island, as planned, the Dalton fire department will go to Tampa, Fla., and will leave here on August 7 in stead of August 6.

MARQUARD OUT TO BREAK HIS PITCHING MARK

By Damon Runyon.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—Rube Marquard, McGraw's eminent southpaw, who hung up a record for straight victories last season that will probably be a mark to shoot at for some time to come, is loose again upon a record-making expedition. The Rube has now compiled nine consecutive victories, or nearly one-half of the number he unfurled last year, and is still going strong.

It may be that Marquard will never again reach the mark he set himself last season and which such hurlers as Walter Johnson and Joe Wood have tried for and failed. But he has gone nearly half the distance without any difficulty whatever, and has a good chance to equal if not pass the nineteen straight, which now stands as the record.

Has Good Chance for Record.

The thing that stands very much in his favor just now is that the Giants are going at top speed. They are winning just as often as they were early last year when he started his large run, and what is more, they are apt to continue their pace through the balance of the season, as was the case last season, for they have already had their annual slump, and are now in the ascendant.

Has Changed His Style.

Marquard has changed his style of pitching since he made his big run of nineteen straight. He was under a heavy strain during that time last year, because he tried to get every man that faced him at the plate. He had not learned then to save himself for the tight place, but he now permits his teammates to do a little work whenever he has a lead, and, like Matty, only uses all of his stuff when the situation demands it. For that reason he may be able to go along and win repeatedly without in any way impairing his arm and bringing on a slump such as followed his streak last year.

Ranks of Champion Clubs Are Depleted

Queer how quickly a world's championship team will disintegrate. Already eight of the champion Athletics of 1911 have severed their connection with that club, while six of the Red Sox who helped to win the American League bunting and later down the New York Giants are no longer with Boston.

Of the 1911 array of Athletics, Livingston, Hartsel, Lord, Kraus, Danforth, Martin, Morgan and Derrick are no longer on the Philadelphia roster, while Danny Murphy, Harry Davis and Ira Thomas are but extras, with Jack Coombs prevented by illness from playing.

It is something new, however, for a world's championship manager to lose out before the following season is ended, but the going of Stahl was preceded by the release of Pitchers Pape and O'Brien and extra Infielders Ball, Krug and Bradley.

Of the Giants who lost to the Athletics in 1911, Ames, Becker, Devore, Devlin, Drucke, Latham and Paulette are now missing.

Motorcycle Races Off Until Tuesday

Rain again caused a postponement of the motorcycle races. Just when everything looked rosy for some fast going at Jack Prince's saucer yesterday afternoon, a big shower blew up and put everything "on the bum."

So the management decided to call proceedings off for the week. Next Tuesday night the same card that was to have been held last evening will be run.

In the meantime all the riders will be working on their machines in hope of establishing some new records.

ELBERTON PASTOR IS ON THREE WEEKS' VACATION

ELBERTON, Aug. 2.—The Rev. R. C. Cleckler, of the First Methodist Church, is attending camp meeting in Hart County. After the camp meeting he will attend the conference of the Sunday school and Epworth League near Waynesboro, N. C. There will be no services at the First Church for three weeks.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT.

McLoughlin smote the ball so hard
he made them all look lame,
And English critics up and wrote: "It
is a crying shame!
Such rude, uncultured tennis play
will kill the grand old game."

IT MIGHT HAPPEN THUSLY:

Old Honus Wagner came to bat and hit one to the fence.
"O, Roughneck! Roughneck!" yelled the fans, whose feelings were intense.
The umpire fined him fifty bones and told him beat it hence.

OR THUSLY:

Ad Wolgast poked a wallop through
the other fellow's guard.
"You lose," the referee remarked.
"You hit that man too hard,
And as a member of this club you
are forever barred."

OR IT MIGHT BE THIS:

Chick Evans drove the pellet far
across the grassy lea.
"Disqualified!" they said to him.
"And wherefore?" questioned he.
"Because," they said, "you smote the ball with too much energy."

While these English experts are about it, why not have McLoughlin indicted for cruelty to tennis balls.

McLoughlin may be guilty of trickery, as our beloved English brethren opine, but so is Walter Johnson when he heaves his smoke ball.

Lavern Chappell has been relegated to the bench as a result of a sore leg and paralysis of the batting average.

Mr. Evers' idea of the national pastime is to walk right in, bawl the umps and walk right out again.

The intrepid gent who threw the brickbat at Ty Cobb escaped to parts unknown. He probably is at home beating his wife.

EXERCISE.

"O, baseball is a healthful game," a fan remarked to me.
"It stirs the sluggish blood and makes the heart beat merrily.
It clears the eye, it clears the brain,
it makes the body strong;
It lays aside a store of health to live
and prosper long."
"How often do you play the game?"
I calmly made reply.
And as he spoke there was a look of
pity in his eye.
"What? Me? Get out there in the sun and sweat to death?" he said.
"Perchance you have a notion I am crazy in the head."

There are those who hold that Larry Chappell has not struck his stride and there are others who hold that he has.

Mr. Weston's hike to Minneapolis may be considerable feat (not feet), but why should any one go to all that trouble to get to Minneapolis?

After months of persistent endeavor, the Cards have achieved last place, demonstrating that perseverance always brings its reward.

Even a pugilist believes in taking an occasional vacation. For instance, Ad Wolgast has offered to bet $25,000 in the last two days.

THAT FAMILIAR RAG.

Warble not in mournful numbers:
"Sox are getting bumped again."
I can hear it in my slumbers,
So familiar is the strain.

BENTON TO LOSE SALARY AND PAY DOCTOR BILLS

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—President Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati baseball team, says that Rube Benton, who was seriously injured when his motorcycle collided with a street car, would not be allowed one penny of salary and that the club would not stand any expenses while he is at the hospital. Herrmann says that he had repeatedly requested Benton not to ride his cycle.

"The whole affair is an injustice to the club," said Mr. Herrmann. "The injury to Benton means that we will have to get a pitcher or two and good pitchers are hard to get."

RED SOX BUY PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Announcement was made to-day of the purchase by the Boston club, of the American League, of Pitcher Reiger, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association, and Infielder Carl Strom, of the Lawrence, Mass., team, of the New England League.

Satisfaction in glasses depends upon their fitting properly.

Our skillful fitting will satisfy the most critical.

To Call New Club Atlanta A. A.

White Has Fought 4 Champions

By Left Hook.

ATLANTA Athletic Association. That is the name of Lou Castro's boxing club at Ponce DeLeon.

Lou is forming a regular club, and he expects to have some of Atlanta's most prosperous business men as members within the next few days.

It is going to cost a heap of money to get the skating rink at Ponce DeLeon fixed into a "regular" clubhouse, but the Count is going to spend the money.

All yesterday he had an architect going over the building. The plans will be ready within a day or two, and next Monday the carpenters will start work.

There will be seats for 6,000 fans. Boxes, containing six chairs, will encircle the ring. Back of these will be row after row of opera chairs.

The ring is to be of regulation size, 24 feet by 24. The ropes are to be extra heavy and covered with red plush. The posts will be of heavy brass, and highly polished.

The "seconds" will be forced to wear white uniforms. And so will the ushers, ticket sellers and takers.

Class will stick out prominently everywhere.

AND to open his classy club, the Count has by far the classiest bout ever staged in Atlanta. In Charley White he has a real contender for the lightweight title. Whitney is a tough fellow, and the most popular that ever fought here.

Frank has boxed some tough lads here, too. Among them Clarence English, Jake Abel, Joe Thomas, Charley "Twin" Miller, Battling Nelson and Tommy O'Keefe. And since leaving here last spring he has been defeating all comers through the West. Only the other night he handed out Phil Knight a tough beating in Denver And Denver fans had been boosting this same Knight as a coming title holder.

White has fought four champions. He has stopped Joe Thomas twice and Jake Abel once within the past two months. He fought Abe Attell to a standstill twice while the Hebrew was a real champion. He made Ad Wolgast look like a joke in a six-round no-decision mill when Ad possessed the lightweight crown. And he held Johnny Kilbane even.

Charley gave Joe Mandot a terrific eight-round scrap when Joe was looked upon as a champion two years ago. It was called a draw, although Charley did all the forcing. He gave Pal Moore a severe trouncing.

And he stopped Owen Moran, former English champion, in nine rounds. Young Shugrue, the man who defeated Leach Cross in New York last spring, twice lost the decision to White.

With a broken hand, broken in the fourth round, he gave Jack Britton the fight of his life in New Orleans a few weeks ago. The bout was stopped in the eighteenth round because the sheriff thought the going was getting too rough.

After the bout, Britton openly declared that White was the hardest puncher he ever met.

WHITNEY has never been knocked out. Can White turn the trick that hundreds of others have failed to accomplish?

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

No Class D league in the country is putting up a prettier pennant race than the Empire just at this time. Every team in the league is within striking distance of first place and each day sees the race becoming warmer.

Waycross has cut loose one of the most helpful winning streaks seen in the league in weeks. Although at the bottom Waycross has brought the league teams close together by winnings from teams higher up. The last at home series resulted in four victories, one tie and one defeat.

Thomasville has added a few new men in anticipation of the post-season pennant games with Valdosta. Thomasville has a team that is to be reckoned with, too.

Otto Jordan nearly always furnishes a lot of fun in every game he plays. Recently after he was thrown out easily at first on a slow one to the pitcher he rushed to first, sliding into the bag, jumped up and romped to second. He actually looked peeved when the umpire motioned that he was out.

Whitey Morse, who once played with the Atlanta team, and more recently of the South Atlantic League, is again signing 'manager" after his name. He was released by Valdosta and signed with Brunswick, succeeding Charlie Moran, formerly of the Chattanooga team.

Doc Fenton continues his splendid work in center field for Waycross. In the first of the series at Thomasville he caught three line drives against the fence, and only a short time ago did the same thing at Waycross.

As far as is known Baby Wilder and Fillingim established a new no-hit record for organized baseball when they pitched two no-hit games at Cordele recently. Fillingim pitched a nine-inning no-hit game and was followed by Wilder, who gave up no hits for six innings.

Americus has been playing better baseball for the past few weeks than any team in the league. A casual review of the scores of games played shows that the team has put up some mighty pretty exhibitions.

Wild Bill Clark has added a one-hit game to his credit. Pitching for Waycross against Thomasville he let down the hard-hitting Thomasville bunch with but one hit, a single that was secured in the first inning.

Signed as an outfielder, Dacey, of the Americus team, has developed into one of the best pitchers in the league. His string of victories is apt to establish a new record in the Empire. A few of his games were won by mere luck, but most of them have been deserved victories.

Americus and Brunswick have two pitchers who are brothers and they are apt to oppose each other most any day now. They are the Stewarts and both seem to have the goods.

To Outfielder Medlock goes credit for the second home run hit on the Valdosta field. Bitting, now with Charleston, formerly with Waycross, got the first home run in Valdosta. Medlock played with Waycross before he was signed by Valdosta.

It is quite probable that the first games of the pennant series in the Empire will be played the last week in August. The season ends August 27, and, unless the directors decide to start the pennant series the first of September the winner of the second half will play Valdosta the first game on August 28.

GOLFER SHOULD IGNORE CROWD, EVANS ADVISES

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—The few years of my life have been very successful in a golfing way and, therefore, I have had but little time to follow other players' games. Last week, however, in the Western at Homewood, Mr. Allis put me so abruptly out of the game that I had ample time to follow the matches and form a part of the large galleries, and a golf gallery is always an interesting assemblage of people.

I have often been asked how I could play with a gallery. My questioners could not see why so many interested people did not disturb me and make me nervous. Players, however, are not much disturbed by a watching multitude, and they usually play their best games at such times. If I do happen to be playing badly, a gallery or anything else, of course, disturbs. As long as I am given room to get my club head around I am satisfied. A gallery forming a large body is much more acceptable to the player than the scattering few.

Lone Spectator Unnerving.

The one thing that bothers me is to have a single individual directly behind or in front of me. This is the commonest mistake made by the innocent spectator, for he wants to watch the ball's line of flight. This is especially bothersome to me on the putting green. I love the strange quiet when the shot is being executed, and the buzzing comments of hundreds of voices as the body of people begins to move along. Now and then one hears a woman, unacquainted with the etiquette of golf, lifting her voice in hurried speech above the breathless quiet of the crowd watching the execution of a difficult shot. This makes it hard for the player, and it is all the worse when the loud speech concerns something utterly foreign to golf.

Player Should Ignore Crowd.

The player should never notice the gallery except as a whole; singling out individuals is a mistake. The spectators of other sports are usually stationary, but the golf gallery moves around the course after the players. This frequently obliges the player to pass through the gallery to his ball, and then he is usually grasped from all sides by his friends; at such times they tell him that they have a bet on him, or make some other remark equally encouraging when he is playing badly. This is very bad for the player, and there is nothing more likely to prevent concentration of attention upon his game.

Personally, I like to talk to people in the gallery when I am playing, but the more successful players never do. At such times I like to see my friends and I hope that they like to see me.

"LET WILLARD GET A REP," WIRES BURNS TO JONES

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—Tommy Burns, manager of Arthur Pelky, and Tom Jones, who looks after the interests of Jess Willard, are booked to hook up in an interesting battle of invectives and near-blows within a day or two.

Jones wants to match Willard against Pelky, but Burns in a telegram to-day says that Willard must go get a reputation before presuming to challenge a champion.

"Gunboat Smith is the man Pelky wants to meet," said Burns. "Smith beat Willard, and then again, Charley Miller shaded the Kansas scrapper. Let him get a 'rep' for himself."

This sort of language is the sort that makes Jones glad he is alive, for he thrives on argument.

"When did Pelky whip Willard or anybody of consequence until he landed a lucky punch on Luther McCarty?" asks Jones. "Willard can whip Pelky, and Burns can name his own terms. Pelky took one beating from Willard and wants no more."

Blood is Purified Quickly in Summer

Here is a Remedy that has Wonderful Action and Promotes Health.

Mingling with your food, arousing stomach action, absorbed immediately into your blood, the famous remedy known as S. S. S. has a wonderful action. Its main purpose is to stimulate cellular activity or that peculiar process which instantly changes the worn-out cells for the new red blood corpuscles.

The medicinal value of the components of S. S. S. is relatively just as vital to healthy blood as the nutriment obtained from grain, meat, fats, sugars or any other part of our daily food is to the natural reconstructive requirements of the tissues. And there is one component of S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating the cellular tissue to a healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. Thus, in cases of skin disease such as eczema, acne, herpes, tetter or psoriasis, first purify your blood with S. S. S. so it will enable the tissues to rebuild their cellular strength and regain their normal health.

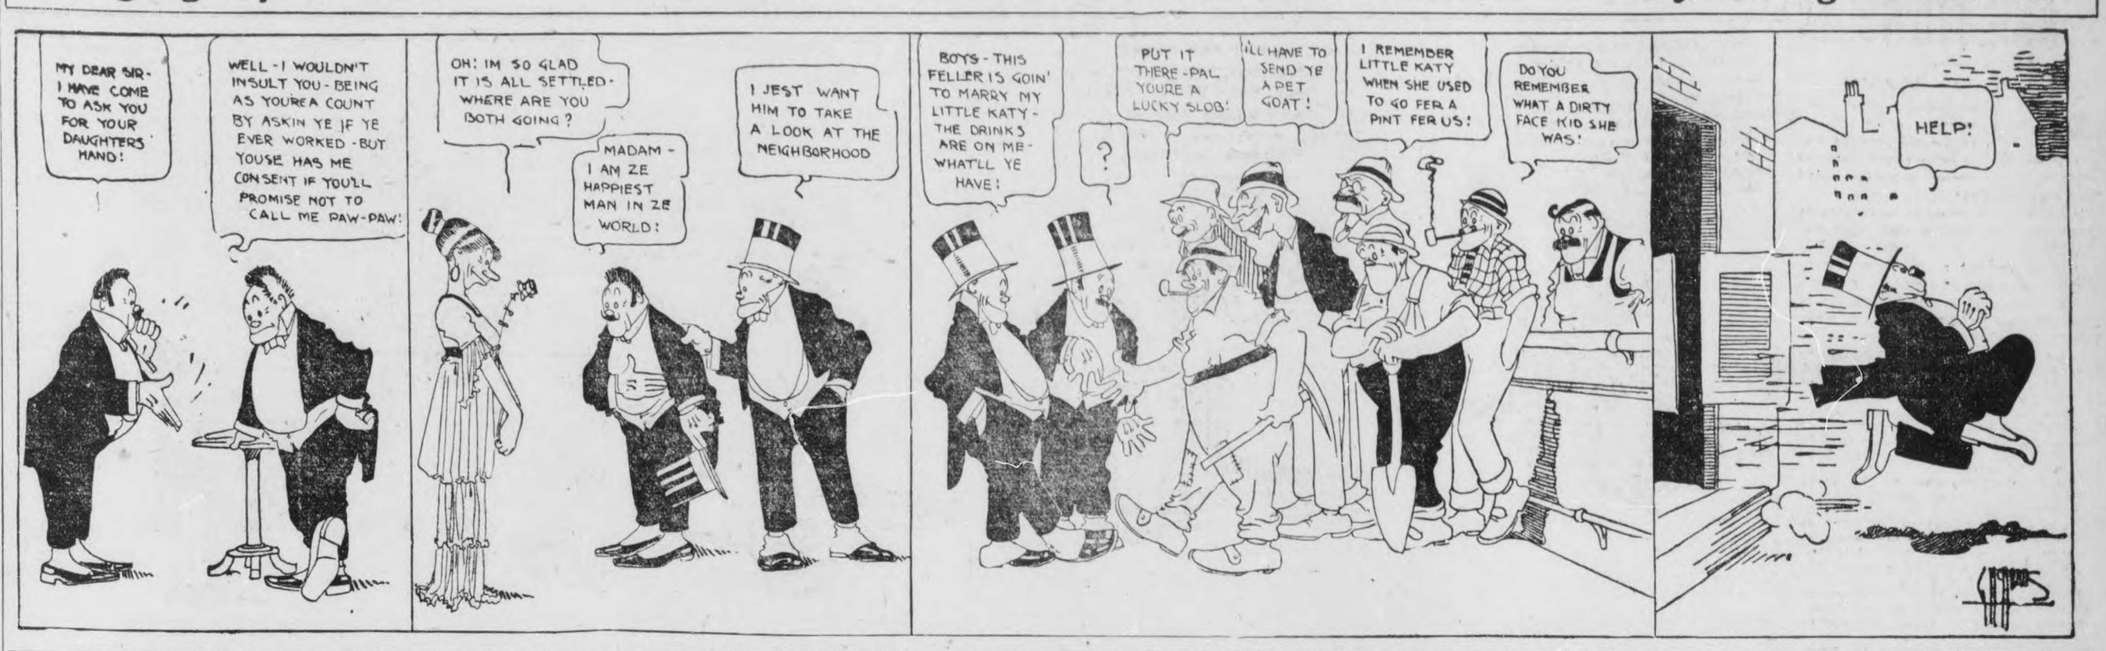

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier.

S. S. S. is purely a botanical product, and you will make a great mistake to have some enthusiast palm off a mineral preparation that may do you irreparable harm.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Company, 191 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any obstinate skin trouble, write to their Medical Department for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

The Charlie White-Frank Whitney bout has been closed. Local fans have been clamoring for this match for some time, and Count Lou Castro should be congratulated for landing the mill. The boys are to get together on August 13 at Ponce DeLeon Skating Rink.

Bud Anderson, the Oregon lightweight who underwent an operation for appendicitis following his recent scrap with Leach Cross, will be ready to fight again on Thanksgiving Day, according to his manager, Dick McDonald. He declares that Anderson will be as strong as ever by that time.

Despite his poor fight against Matty Baldwin the other day, Leach Cross seems in a fair way to land the Labor Day date at Los Angeles with he champion. Tom McCarey is working on the match now, and may close it any day.

Sam Langford, who recently returned to this country from Australia, spent several hours in Chicago en route from San Francisco to Boston. "I expect to stay in the East several months and will try to get a match with Porky Flynn," said Langford. "In the fall I will return to the Pacific Coast to fill several fight engagements."

Reports from New Orleans state that "Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny are in great shape for their 20-round engagement on Sunday afternoon. The bout is being advertised as for the welterweight championship. The pair clashed on July 4 in a 10-round affair, and Ferns was given the verdict after a fierce mill. Denny claims he was robbed in that go. Hence the rematch.

Pittsburg promoters are out after a match between George Chip and Frank Klaus. They are planning to stage the go on Labor Day afternoon.

Over in Belgium they prohibit boxing among professionals, but allow the amateurs to engage in the sport.

It is reported that Billy Gibson, New York matchmaker, is trying to land a Willie Ritchie-Freddie Welch set-to for some time in September. Welch boxes Johnny Dundee on the coast next month.

Arthur Pelky does not seem to be overanxious to meet Jess Willard in a 20-round go on the coast. Tom Jones, manager of the Kansas City heavyweight, has offered Tommy Burns' protege a neat side bet, but even this extra inducement fails to attract Arthur.

Young Abe Attell, the local bantamweight, wants to know why the bantamweights are dodging him. Attell says he would dearly love to meet either Kid Brooks or Tim Callahan in a bout around these parts.

Steve Ketchel, the Chicago lightweight, and Sammy Trott, of Columbus, have signed articles to box 12 rounds at Winnipeg on August 15. They have agreed to weigh 133 pounds at 6 o'clock for a night fight.

Spider Britt is another local boy who is pining for a fight. Britt cares not who it may be, just as long as he weighs under 118 pounds. Spider can easily make 115.

They all come and go, but Jim Flynn seems to go on forever. Despite his many years of ring service, Flynn has signed to meet Gunboat Smith at New York on August 8, in a near title match.

In case Johnny Dundee succeeds in defeating Jack White at Los Angeles on August 12 Charlie White says he will go after a match with the Easterner. Charlie has already defeated Dundee in a 10-round affair at New York. Charlie and Jack are brothers, and both fight best when weighing 126 pounds.

MIDDLEWEIGHTS START WORK FOR 20-ROUND GO

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Sailor Petroskey and Bob McAllister started work yesterday for their twenty-round bout on the night of August 8 at the Eighth Street arena.

McAllister boxed seven rounds, four with Al Greenwood and three more with Jack Brown. McAllister plans to have nothing but heavyweights for his boxing at the Sea Rock house, as he figures that Petroskey will give him a strenuous time of it.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Matty seems to be going back. With his aid the Giants tamed the Cubs, but "Big Six" allowed the Everites five hits and uncorked a wild pitch. This proves Matty is losing control.

The Yankees' winning streak of two games was nipped in the bud by old Jupe Pluv.

Miller's bat was once more in evidence. His two hits paved the way for the Pirates to again humble Dahlen's men. It took innings, however, to turn the trick.

Are the Athletics going back? Defeated twice in succession by a second division team does not look like A-1 ball. It may be only a temporary slump, but in any event Cleveland is only seven games behind.

The Braves are trying hard to forge ahead of the Dodgers. They won again from the Cardinals and are now but two and a half games behind sixth place.

The Phillies keep following the Giants' pace. The Reds' errors and opportune hitting gave Doolin's men another victory over Cincinnati.

"Elks' Day" at Boston proved disastrous for the Red Sox. The Naps again took them into camp. Cleveland is going at top speed now and in two days has cut down the Athletics' lead two and one-half games. Certainly will be some clash next week when the leaders and runners up meet.

Two weeks ago Clark Griffith predicted that his team would beat out the Athletics and the latter would be on the toboggan. To-day the Senators are further away from the leaders and still losing.

The Tigers proved a handicap again.

"Rube" Benton, although he will be in the hospital for a month as the result of his motorcycle accident, is now practically out of danger. There is no chance, however, that the Reds will have the services of their star pitcher again this season.

Catcher Agnew, struck on the jaw by a pitched ball during the recent series between the Senators and Browns, has left the hospital for St. Louis. He will be out of the game a week later.

RAIN HALTS MATCHES.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Rain halted proceedings after two matches had been played in the New York State championship tennis tournament on the turf course of the Crescent A. C. at Bayridge yesterday. Cured by Tetterine

For sixteen years I had been a sufferer from itching piles. I got a box of Tetterine and less than half a box made a complete cure.

Tetterine gives instant relief to all skin diseases, such as eczema, tetter, ringworm, ground itch, etc. It has the right medicinal qualities to get at the cause and to relieve the effect. Get it to-day—Tetterine.

THE SIN OF THE CINCY HIT

By Fred D. Pasley

Who Asks R. Kipling to Apologize for Him.

AS Thompson, the sportin' writer, lolled back in his swivel chair,
A spirit sneaked up behind him and deftly grappled his hair.
Grappled his hair and carried him farther and farther away,
Till he heard as the roar of the rain-fed ford the roar of the milky way.
Till he heard the roar of the milky way die down and drone and cease,
And they came to the gate within the wall where Peter holds the keys.
"Stand up, stand up, Mr. Thompson, and answer loud and high.
"The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone."
And the naked soul of our hero grew white as a rain-washed bone.
"I've thousands of friends on earth," he cried; "I was their priest and guide
"And my baseball chatter was famous from Oakland to Ingleside—
"Spheroid, Horsehide and Pellet, Globule, Capsule and Pill—
"I was a pen Napoleon, marshaled my words at will.
"I was the synomic wizard and rated far above par—
"Hurler, Twirler and Heaver, Curver and South-paw Star.
"I put the fest in Bootfest and the Slug in Slugfest, too,
"And I snipped the Ire off of Umpire to give the fans something new."
"Hold, hold!" then cried St. Peter, "I would question thee a bit:
"Art thou the man that discovered the Cincinnati Hit?"
"Yes," proudly answered Thompson, and the pride of the scribe was great;
"It is Baseball's Fourth Dimension—" and he started to orate.
"Aw, can thy chatter!" said Peter, as he opened a-wide the door,
"Keep on dropping downward till you reach the bottom floor.
"We take in a few reporters, and sport writers, too, sometimes,
"But you with your Cincy Hit must go where they punish such awful crimes."

FRANK DEFENSE SCORES WITH DR. HURT

Coroner's Physician, Under Cross Examination, Hits Testimony Given by Dr. Harris.

blood, did you?—A. I took it for blood.

Q. You are not an expert? You couldn't tell as well as a chemist who made an analysis, could you?—A. No, I am not an expert, but I took it for blood.

Chief Beavers then left the stand and Policeman Bass Rosser was called. He did not answer and Policeman Robert Lassiter took the stand. Dorsey examined him.

Q. Were you with the policemen called to the National Pencil Factory on the night of April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find this parasol?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. At the bottom of the elevator.

Q. Anything else?—A. A ball of wrapping twine beside the parasol.

Rosser cross-examined the witness.

Q. Did you see evidences of something having been dragged along the floor of the basement?—A. Yes. Some distance from the elevator shaft.

Shook Factory Door.

Q. Didn't you testify before the Coroner's jury that you found this evidence about the foot of the ladder?—A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. You were on the beat in front of the pencil factory, were you not?—A. Yes, until 12 o'clock at night.

Q. You tried the back door of the factory about 10 o'clock?—A. Yes. I shook it but didn't try to open it.

Q. Was it open or closed?—A. It was closed.

Dorsey took the witness on redirect examination.

Q. Do you know whether the elevator comes down flat on the ground?—A. No.

Q. How did you go down into the basement?—A. By a stepladder.

Lassiter was excused.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, of the police force, was then called, but failed to answer.

Judge Roan then adjourned court until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

As the case stood Saturday morning, these are the strong links in the State's case:

Mary Phagan left her home at 11:45, according to her mother, after having eaten some cabbage.

The girl arrived at the factory between 12:05 and 12:10, according to Frank's own statement before the Coroner's jury.

Monteen Stover looked into Frank's office between 12:05 and 12:10 and says he was not there.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies that the condition of the cabbage taken from the girl's stomach shows conclusively that she died within about half an hour after it was eaten. This would make the time of death about 12:10—a few minutes before or after.

Claims Negro Is Eliminated.

Mrs. Arthur White testifies that when she left the factory at about 1 o'clock a negro, presumably Conley, was sitting on a box on the first floor. This, according to the State, eliminates the negro as the slayer, because, according to its expert evidence, the girl must have been killed some time before that.

The defense's attack on all this testimony and reasoning was expected to be spirited and bitter, and until it has been made it is impossible to determine how much weight testimony like Dr. Harris' purporting to fix almost to the minute the time it takes to digest cabbage will have with the jury.

DOUBLE DEALING OVER TAX BILL IS CHARGED

Wohlwender Declares Sheppard Let Amendments Die After Agreeing to Them.

Efforts to obtain a reconsideration of the Sheppard substitute to the Lipscomb tax reform bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 107 to 59 after an all-day session Friday, will be made within two weeks, and probably before the bill is sent to the Senate.

Representative McMichael of Marion County, whose amendment providing tax discoverers to work with the county boards provided by the Sheppard bill, was defeated, served notice that he will make a motion to reconsider.

An amendment by Mr. Nunnally of Floyd, which makes the State Comptroller General a sort of balance wheel between the taxpayer and the county boards, also is likely to get a new trial.

State Board Men Favor Move.

It is understood the members of the House who favor the State board idea will support Mr. McMichael in his attempt to get a reconsideration of the bill, and prospects are considered good for the success of the movement. It was the State board advocates who passed the bill Friday.

More of Mr. Sheppard's followers voted against his bill than voted for it, and without the support of the State board advocates, who acted on the basis that half a loaf was better than no bread, the bill would have been lost.

The insurrection among the Sheppard forces was led by Messrs. Wimberly of Bibb, Wohlwender of Muscogee and McMichael of Marion, and was started after Mr. Sheppard got through two amendments to his own bill, which Mr. Wimberly declared takes away all powers from the county boards.

Mr. Wohlwender voted against the Sheppard bill and charged Mr. Sheppard with double dealing. He said the situation was this:

Failed to Give Signal.

The State board advocates agreed to favor the Sheppard bill as amended by Mr. Sheppard in the hope that it could be amended by the Senate to provide adequate tax revision. The members led by Mr. Wohlwender, Mr. Nunnally and Mr. McMichael agreed to support the bill on its final passage if the amendments offered by Nunnally and McMichael were adopted.

Mr. Sheppard, the claim, agreed, and when they came to a vote, he was to hold up his left hand as a signal, and the amendments were to go through. When the amendments were offered, however, Mr. Sheppard gazed steadily out of the window—and the amendments were voted down.

Then Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender led a fight against the adoption of the substitute, but lost.

On the passage of the bill by substitute Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender continued their fight, but the State board people, realizing the Sheppard bill was probably their only chance for any kind of tax revision measure in the House, rallied to its support.

Dr. Stovall, of Elbert County, who practically destroyed the original Lipscomb bill with his amendments, and who has advocated the Sheppard bill heretofore, lined up with opponents of all tax revision Friday, voting against the Sheppard bill.

SEEK NEGRO WHO TRIED TO SLAY 7 WITH AX

Grady County Posse Searches for Black Who Attacked White Farmer's Family.

CAIRO, Aug. 2.—A negro entered the home of George Bodiford, a respectable white farmer of Grady County, living about six miles from Cairo, and with an ax brained him, his wife and five children late last night. Some of the children have revived, but the father and mother are still unconscious and the chances for their recovery are very slight.

The details of the crime are meager. The only clew as to the guilty party is from one of the little girls, who has revived sufficiently to make a statement. She says that she was awakened by the negro coming into the house. As she screamed he hit her in the head with the ax and then struck her father, mother and some of the smaller children.

Girl Gives Alarm.

One girl, about 12 years old, was struck in the head and knocked down, but as she fell she grabbed the negro around the legs and threw him. This frightened the negro and he ran, leaving his ax in the house. The girl gave the alarm and several neighbors came to the house.

The Sheriff and a posse, with three physicians, went to the scene before daylight this morning. They report it is likely that most of them will recover, with the possible exception of the man and wife. The Sheriff arrested a negro said to have been with one who did the work. He remained in the yard to wat while the other entered the house.

Ax and Shoes Identified.

The ax and a pair of shoes, left in the yard, were identified to-day by the wife of the suspected negro. She claimed that he had not been home since yesterday afternoon, when the two negroes left together. One of Bodiford's daughters says that this negro and her father had some words a few days ago about a watermelon patch. This is the only motive that can be given for the crime.

The Sheriff and a posse are in search of the negro, and they hope to apprehend him to-day. Sentiment against the negro is very strong, but no threats of lynching are being made, and if caught, there will likely be no trouble.

The resolution provides for a commission of seven members—two Senators, three Representatives and two citizens to be appointed by the Governor. The commission will be organized immediately upon adjournment of the Legislature. The report of the commission will be filed at the next session.

Woman Halts Plan To Change Street Name; Wins Delay

McDaniel street received a new lease on life Friday afternoon when the Streets Committee of the General Council heeded the protest of Miss Susie Wells, a property owner, who, single-handed, fought the resolution to change the name of the street to Oxford Terrace.

"You can't improve the morals or change the color of the people by changing the name of the street they live on," declared Miss Wells in reply to Representative Bob Blackburn, who charged that McDaniel street, in certain sections, was "disreputable."

Members of the Council committee, including those who had practically made up their minds to vote for the change, saw the point and voted to postpone action two weeks. Alderman James W. Maddox, it is understood, will aid Miss Wells in her unique fight.

BABY'S AWFUL ECZEMA CURED

Face Just a Sore. Scratched Till It Bled. Resinol Stopped Itching Almost Instantly. Soon Well.

May 20, 1913:—"My baby's face broke out with eczema. We tried many prescriptions, ointments and lotions, but the baby's face kept getting worse all the time. He would scratch it until it would bleed, and finally his face on both sides was just an awful sore. It bothered him so much that he could not sleep much at night.

"I sent for samples of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and used them according to directions. The result was something wonderful. The itching stopped almost instantly, and from the first application we could see a marked improvement. I then bought a fifty-cent jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, and by the time the jar of Ointment was used, the baby's face was almost entirely cured, so I bought another jar and used only half of it, and the cure was complete. My doctor recommends Resinol very highly and I cannot say too much for Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment."

What Does John D. Care for Expenses? Lets Rain Hit Hat

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—John D. Rockefeller scorned the umbrella which was held over him when he left Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and allowed a fine drizzle to patter down on his straw hat while waiting for friends to get into his big touring car.

The Rev. Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Louisville, Ky., who preached on "Moral Assets," told the congregation that in the Christian life they were rich indeed, but that earthly riches do not amount to much, anyway. Mr. Rockefeller enthusiastically congratulated the minister after the sermon.

OLDEST TREES

The Dragon trees in the Canary Islands are the oldest inhabitants of the earth.

Until 1868 there existed a famous specimen of these trees in Teneriffe, the largest of the Canary Islands. At the time of Humboldt's visit, it was seventy feet tall and forty-five feet in circumference, and was estimated to be over 6,000 years old.

The GUANCHES worshiped this tree. They hollowed its trunk into a small sanctuary. One night this oldest of all trees was destroyed by a slight gale.

Legislators Inspect Home of E. P. Ansley

Looking for Governor's Mansion Site. Druid Hills Property Brings $11,000 Cash—Other Notes.

That members of the State Legislature have been quietly inspecting prospective sites for the new Governor's Mansion became known Saturday. A small delegation has been out several times to look over the fine residence of Edwin P. Ansley in Ansley Park, it is said, and have sought to get a proposition from Mr. Ansley.

While Mr. Ansley's position in the matter has not been learned, close friends declare that he will sell. His lot is one of the highest in Ansley Park, with a commanding view of the surrounding country. It contains six or eight acres and about 1,000 feet of frontage on two streets. The house is two stories and built of stone quarried in the park.

The delegation is said to have looked over W. F. Winecoff's marble house in Ansley Park. This was offered to the Legislature two years ago. Mr. Winecoff wanted an appraisal board to determine the value of the place and agreed to sell at that price.

The A. G. Rhodes stone house at the foot of Peachtree circle on Peachtree also came in for casual inspection. This was likewise offered, among other houses, in 1911.

Druid Hills Cash Sale.

Mrs. Alice A. Whitman has sold to Mrs. E. H. Cantrell a 120 by 230 foot lot and brick bungalow on the south side of Fairview road, near Moreland avenue, for $11,000 cash, or at the rate of nearly $92 a front foot, including the value of the improvements. The transaction was handled through the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency.

Warranty Deed for $30,000.

John W. Alexander has conveyed to J. N. Hirsch the northwest corner of Peters street and Hills avenue for $30,000. The deal was made Friday and warranty deed was placed on record.

Application for Building.

J. B. Thompson applied Saturday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays for a permit to erect a two-story business building on the east side of Fairlie street, between Poplar and Luckie streets, to cost $7,500. Mr. Thompson already had been given a permit to erect similar stores on the north side of Poplar street, in the same block. The stores are to the north of the Postoffice Building. Mr. Thompson's lots adjoin in the back, but the corner between them is under different ownership.

Mansion Question Agitated.

The question of disposing of the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain streets is still engaging the attention of the legislators. The Committee on Public Property is practically unanimous in favor of building a handsome new mansion and selling the old one, and is expected to draft a resolution embodying features of resolutions offered by Senators Watts, Turner and Peyton.

Remodeling Decatur Depot.

The Georgia Railroad is busy making repairs on its depot at Decatur, and there are other evidences of activity in this thriving suburb of Atlanta. Mrs. H. E. Goddard, owner, and W. A. Ozmer, contractor, are erecting a building to be occupied by the Johnson Hardware Company, a firm which will move from Conyers to Decatur. There are other improvements in progress, announcement of which has already been made.

JUDGE ATTACKS DUAL MORAL STANDARD

Frees Deserted Mother of Coal Operator's Two Children After She Shot at Him.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—"Women sin emotionally, unthinkingly; men often sin calculatingly, knowing they can escape penalties," said Police Magistrate Daniel Winters in discharging a woman who shot twice at, but missed, a man she alleged was the father of her two children and who cast her aside and married another after she had lived with him eleven years.

The woman is Miss Alice Hopkins, aged 33 years, and the man is C. H. Wisser, 60, a wealthy coal operator.

"I do not advocate shooting, but the peculiar circumstances gives this woman a great deal of latitude, said the magistrate. If judges would treat man and woman exactly alike, I imagine there would be less masculine license.

Man Should Not Escape.

"It is not fair that a woman should be an outcast and a man escape blame. In the case of a man and a woman about town, except where the man started the woman on her downward course, it is different.

"But when a man, as it seems Wisser has done, lives with a woman as his wife, and that woman has been faithful to him and has borne him children whom she is rearing to the best of her ability, then that woman should get at least as much consideration as the man.

"Except for the perfunctory fact that no marriage ceremony has been performed, he and she are man and wife, and even he does not deny that she has been faithful.

Why Should She Bear Blame?

"Then why, in the name of justice, should she bear all the blame? There is something wrong about a social system that accepts such a man and ostracizes this woman.

"Some say I have established a precedent in the Wisser-Hopkins case. If I have, I mean to follow it up. I do not mean I would desire to condone faults of women and punish only those of men, but I would like to feel that I could be fair and square to both, and judge them from a standpoint not influenced by sex difference."

CASE SHOWS NEED FOR GIRLS' HOME

Wayward Child-Wife's Trouble Causes Broyles to Speak for State Institution.

Recorder Nash Broyles Saturday morning characterized Mrs. F. J. Rathnaw, 16 years old, as a striking example of the need of a State or County reform institution to which wayward girls could be committed.

The Recorder took occasion to commend the plan of the Men and Religion Forward Movement to obtain such a home through legislation.

"Cases of girls like this one are a problem, and I hardly know what to do with them," remarked the Recorder. "The State or the county certainly should provide an institution to which wayward girls can be committed by the courts. As it is now, the courts are powerless to commit a girl to a reform school without the consent of the parents."

Mrs. Rathnaw, who is separated from her husband and is living with her parents near Faith's crossing, was arraigned on complaint of neighbors. She told the Recorder she wished to reform, and, on her promises, the case was held open during her good behavior.

PRISON REFORM BILLS PASSED BY SENATE

One Provides for Probation in Minor Cases—Other Allows Indeterminate Sentence.

With the concurrence of the State Prison Board and of many Superior Court judges of Georgia, the Senate has passed two measures designed to change greatly the methods of dealing with convicts.

They do not interfere with the system of working convicts on the road. In fact, Chairman Davisson, of the Prison Board, believes the changes will increase the efficiency of the convicts in road building. But the acts change the attitude of the State toward the convict and give the latter a chance to work out his own salvation.

The first measure legalizes the right of the judge to suspend sentence and provides that an adult for whom sentence has been suspended may be freed on probation. The second measure provides indeterminate sentence.

The first act passed the Senate unanimously and the second by a vote of 27 to 3. Both have been recommended for passage by the House committees. So far as is known no opposition has developed.

The bills sound complicated because of the various safeguards and restrictions thrown around the proposed changes, but their operation is simple.

The probation bill means the trial court has a right to suspend sentence and yet exercise a supervision over the sentenced. For instance, when a man is sentenced for abandonment of family, the judge, if he deems it wise, can sentence the man to the chaingang, and then let him go free on probation on condition that he goes to work and supports his family.

By the same method a first offender can be given a second chance, and yet can be kept under the restraining eye of the court. It is an application in a limited way of the children's court probation system to adults.

The indeterminate sentence bill is equally simple. After excluding lifetermers, persons previously convicted of felony or convicted for criminal assault or attempted criminal assault, it provides a sentence for an indeterminate period instead of a fixed number of years. Then the convict's behavior determines whether he gets out at the end of the minimum time, or stays in to the maximum.

J. Ham Lewis Calls For 'Fathers' Day'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, has come to the conclusion that the "Old Man" of the family has not received proper recognition from a grateful country. He announced to-day his intention to introduce a bill setting aside July 29 as "Fathers' Day." Already there is a "Mothers' Day" and a "Children's Day."

"The Old Man," said the Senator, "pays all the bills. On cold winter mornings he gets up to light the fire. In summer he works like a horse in mowing the lawn. His lot is not a happy one. He deserves recognition."

Aviator Quells Fire 4,000 Feet in the Air

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—"I thought I was a goner," said W. C. Robinson, an aviator, as he related his feelings while he was fighting a fire that threatened to destroy his aeroplane 4,000 feet above Chicago's business district.

Crowds along Michigan Boulevard and aviators at Cicero flying field watching through glasses thought he was a "goner," too. But Robinson, alone in the flaming aeroplane, fought the fire with a hand chemical while he made a perfect descent and landed just as the planes collapsed.

Mrs. Gardner has been visiting the King family several months, and according to King caused trouble between him and his wife. Mother-in-law refused to leave when requested to do so, and King obtained the injunction.

WOMAN FINDS BIG SURPRISE IN A WANT AD

Expects to Pay for Hauling Away Shrubs and Gets Five Dollars for It Instead.

"No, there isn't a thing I want that a want ad would bring me," said a North Side woman to a Georgian want ad contestant as he chatted with her on her front veranda. "Unless I could get rid of that unsightly big shrub in the front yard. It cuts off my view and I'd like to pay a man to take it it up and haul it away."

"I believe you can do better than that," said the contestant, who knew something of plants. "Let me sell it for you."

And next afternoon there came a couple just completing a new home who wanted to adorn their lawn, and they gladly paid $5 for the shrub and bore the expense of moving it. And that's what a want ad will do.

The contestants now at work are running across a world of human interest stories. They find many strange "wants" and many queer situations. But they are rounding up the ads.

Contestants who are not informing their friends about the race are overlooking their best opportunity. They should tell every acquaintance, for everybody is using want ads and every ad might mean a hundred or two votes for a friend just as well as not. The Want Ad Man will show contestants how to secure the friends' aid if you'll ask him.

And if you haven't entered the contest now is the time. You still have an excellent chance to get a start.

SENSATIONAL DROP IN PRICE OF COTTON

Texas Rains Cause Constant Flood of Long Cotton—Bulls Withdraw—No Support.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Absence of Liverpool cables and general showers over the larger part of the Western belt resulted in the cotton market opening weaker to-day, first prices at a net decline of 4 to 18 points from Friday's closing quotations. Good showers were reported over the East and Central portions of Texas.

The market was long after yesterday's upturn and there was much early pressure from room sources. Business was active. New crop positions were freely offered, but very little cotton changed hands and prices suffered an additional decline of 10 to 14 points in most active positions from the opening range. Liverpool cabled that Manchester was practically idle, and that spinners and manufacturers are cautious.

Throughout the short session low levels were sustained, in response to a constant flow of long cotton.

In addition to Texas rains, many of the more conservative element contend that the Government failed to give the crop as high percentage as it deserved. They also contend that the benefit of the recent rains should have been made up in the report, but the percentage given by the Bureau did not indicate such had been added.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 19 to 20 points from the final quotations of Friday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 2.—Weather developments overnight were distinctly favorable. Indications are for precipitation in the southern half of Texas, cooler generally over the western and northern half of the belt. Partly cloudy with showers in southeastern quarter and the Carolinas

Liverpool is closed to-day and will be closed on Monday. The market declined nearly 20 points in the early trading on liquidation of long cotton taken on the drouth in Texas and the Bureau report which is released now owing to rains in Texas. New York reported McFadden heavy seller through various brokers.

The tendency was to buy on the break on the fear of bullish efforts suggested by Mr Price's circular and also on account of delay to the crop in the Eastern States and possibly complaints of too much rain. A spell of fair weather is desirable in the Central and Eastern States.

The market was steady at the decline, with new crops around 11.20. Market prospects for next week depend on the weather and increase in new crop movement in the West.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Nobody guessed the Bureau crop condition figure low enough, consequently everybody spent the last half of the session explaining somebody's error. A multitude admitted bad judgment. Many accepted the showing as bullish. A few expressed the belief the Government had erred. But the market is so restricted by the fear of adverse legislation that very little trading was generated by the Government's figure of 79.6, which is .4 below the ten-year-average. Because of the low Bureau, bulls attached much importance to the dry weather in Texas and Oklahoma since July 25, and exploited the claim that further deterioration has taken place in those States since the compilation of the Bureau's data.

"On the other hand, big crop people dug into the record and found that between April 15 and July 25 the Texas rainfall amounted in 1913 to 7.53 inches, in 1912 to 7.59 inches, in 1911 to 7.56 inches. From these figures they drew the deduction that the western plant, which they say has a good tap root, can not now be suffering more than normally, and that the crop outlook on the whole is really excellent. However, the consumer of cotton these days seems to pin greater faith to the significance of Government utterances on the condition of the crop than does the middleman. He is also slower to act. Thus, to-day or Monday the market may show strength as the result of buying for consumers' account."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "A good many wheat traders think that with corn advancing, and Southwestern receipts of wheat declining present values are low enough. Conservative commission houses are advising against short sales, except on bulges. That a bull market is on in corn is certain, but how long it will last depends upon the weather. Every day of continued drouth reduces crop possibilities. The general belief is that without rain higher prices will result. Sentiment in oats is mostly bullish, and traders are looking for them to do better unless corn breaks."

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—We prefer long side of the market on weak spots.

"Corn—It is possible that some holders liquidate rather than take chances on precipitation over Sunday, although at the moment there seems to be very slight prospect of rain.

"Oats—Heavy covering by shorts was a prominent factor yesterday, but there was considerable outside buying."

ATLANTA LIVE STOCK MARKET.

(By W. H. White, Jr., of the White Provision Company.)

Cattle receipts fair with a better assortment this week than usual. Several loads of Tennessee cattle were on the market; one car of 1,200-pound steers shipped from Wartrace. These were in a class to themselves and were sold promptly to the Atlanta packer at better than 7c, the top price of the week. These were two-year-old steers and fat, and the price was not considered too high for the quality. This only goes to show that Atlanta is like other markets; they will pay good prices for good stuff. Tennessee cows and heifers were fairly plentiful and prices ruled steady. There are not so many half fat and ragged bunches in the pens, although enough to supply the demand for this class. Prices vary according to flesh and condition.

Sheep and lambs in fair supply; market steady to a shade lower.

Hogs continue scarce; market steady and active.

Good to choice steers, 1,000 to 1,200, $5.50@6.50.

Good steers, 800 to 1,000, $5.25@6.00.

Medium to good steers, 700 to 850, $5.00@5.50.

Good to choice beef cows, 800 to 900, $4.50@5.50.

Medium to good cows, 700 to 800, $4.00@4.50.

Good to choice heifers, 750 to 850, $4.75@5.25.

Medium to good heifers, 650 to 750, $4.00@4.50.

The above represents ruling prices of good quality of beef cattle. Inferior grades and dairy types selling lower.

Medium to common steers, if fat, 800 to 900, $4.00@4.75.

Medium to common cows, if fat, 700 to 800, $3.50@4.25.

Mixed common, 600 to 800, $3.00@3.75.

Good butcher bulls, $3.25@4.00.

Prime hogs, 160 to 200, $8.80@9.00.

Good butcher hogs, 140 to 160, $8.60@8.80.

Good butcher pigs, 100 to 140, $8.25@8.50.

Light pigs, 80 to 100, $8.00@8.25.

Heavy roughs and mixed hogs, $7.50@8.00.

The above quotations apply to corn-fed hogs; mash and peanut-fattened 1c to 1½c under.

M'CULLOUGH BROS.' WEEKLY FRUIT AND PRODUCE LETTER

Although it is quiet, as is usual at this season of the year, in the fruit and produce line, the prospects for a heavy fall and winter's business were never brighter.

The local gardeners are at this time supplying to a large extent vegetables and fruit to meet the present limited demand.

Virginia cabbage are moving, but in a small way as yet, with high prices applying. The market is also active on onions and Irish potatoes.

The few California oranges in the market are selling slowly, but at high prices.

The lemon market is about at a standstill at present. Values are ranging from $1.50 to $2 per box lower than applied two weeks ago.

It is yet too early for California fruit or Eastern or Western grapes. The latest reports are that these sections will be moving their crop during the next ten days or two weeks at values sufficiently low to authorize a general and liberal consumption.

Fancy cantaloupes, also peaches, are in good demand at satisfactory prices. Pineapples high, with the demand limited.

The market is and has been overstocked on live poultry, especially small and medium fries, for some days. Hens in fair demand at quotation prices. The egg market is looking up, showing a 1c to 2c per dozen advance over last week's prices.

A fair demand prevails for fancy table and cooking butter.

As usual, there is very little demand for dressed poultry at this season of the year. A fair demand prevails for sweet potatoes.

Bailed Out, All Right, But by Stomach Pump

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—There was no chance for Max Rubin, in jail, to be bailed out in the usual way. Still he wanted to get out, even if his next summer resort had to be the county hospital.

He pretended to have swallowed bichloride of mercury tablets and was baled out with a stomach pump. Indeed, he was baled out so many times that he finally admitted that he had not taken the poison at all.

CORN CONTINUES UPWARD TREND

Bad Crop News and Light Offerings Factors—Corn Expected To Be in 70's Next Week.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The advancing tendency of corn prices was unchecked at the opening to-day, there being nothing in the news coming forward to warrant lower prices for this cereal. Continued dry weather prevails over the corn belt, although temperatures are more seasonable than for several days past. Shorts were the best buyers in the pit at the opening and prices were 1⅛ to 1¼c higher than ruled at yesterday's close. Reports received here stated that farmers in many instances were feeding wheat because of the scarcity of corn.

The strength and higher prices ruling in corn carried wheat ¼ to ⅜c higher, September selling at ⅜c higher. There was a holiday at Liverpool. Reports showed weather in the Northwest clear and favorable for maturing the crop. Receipts at both Northwestern points, as well as Winnipeg, were light.

Oats gained ½ to ⅝c on poor thrashing returns, although the strength in corn also proved a help in this market.

Bearish construction was placed on the semi-monthly reports on hog products, and this, coupled with a weak hog market, caused provisions to sell lower.

Some of the best posted men in the corn trade are impressed with the idea that this grains will be in the 70s next week and that it will continue to advance until checked by rains.

The gains to-day were 1½c to 1⅝c, and there was noly a slight reaction and decline from the best prices reached. Only 90,000 bushels of corn were sold here and 46,000 bushels of oats.

Wheat was up Zc to ⅜c and ruled strong. Cash sales were 46,000 bushels.

Oats gained ⅝c to 1c.

Hog products were lower all around.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

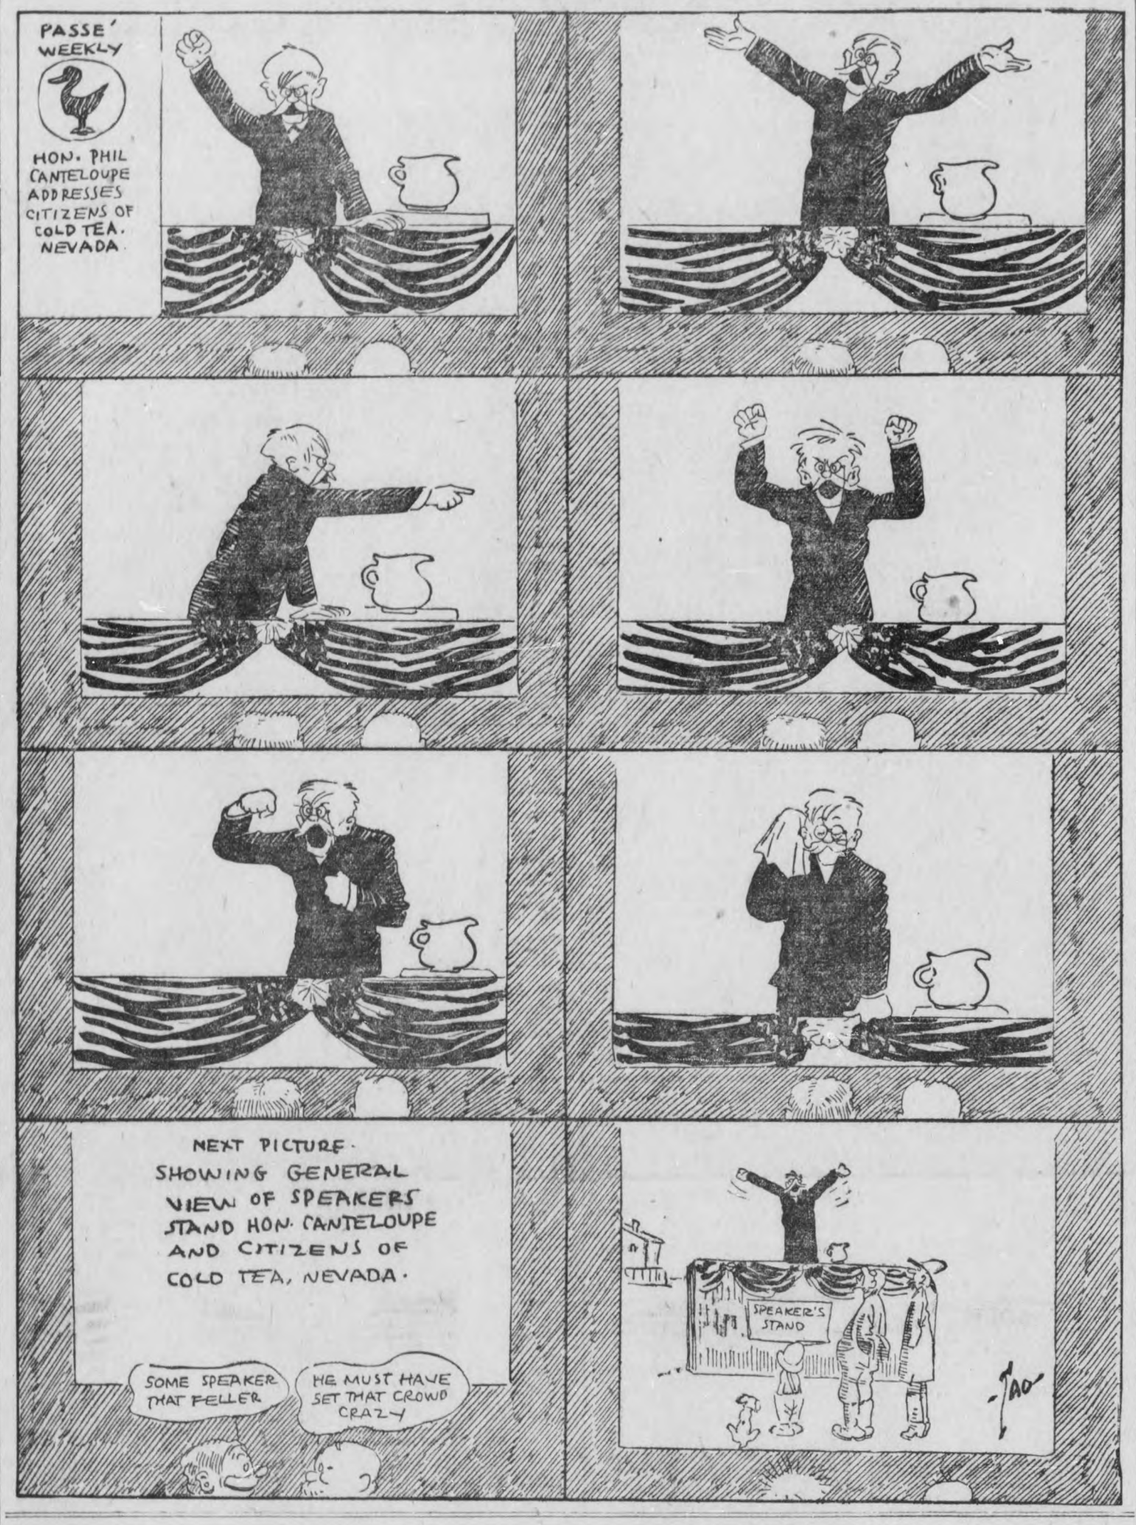

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the fact that in consequence of the judicial murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of Ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and Progress.

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at the slightest sprinkling of rain! A sultry March day bring him out, like a hibernating fly buzzing round a Christmas hearth, but a touch of returning frost sends him scurrying under ground. A golden day in November plays another trick upon his instinct, and out he comes from the mud, and hobbles to the feet of a good old lady whom he has known for thirty years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all his movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaise, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

THE PRICE HE PAID

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn,
By the sins of their fathers scarred.

DR. HURT SAYS FOOD IN STOMACH FAILS TO SHOW TIME OF DEATH

Here are the important developments of Saturday's session of the trial of Leo M. Frank:

Attorneys for the defense spring a sensation by threatening a move for a mistrial because Judge Roan has exposed a newspaper headline to the jury. A compromise is effected by the judge cautioning the jury to disregard any outside influence.

Dr. J. W. Hurt, after testifying along the line taken by Dr. H. F. Harris' testimony of Friday, admits that no examination was made of Mary Phagan's lungs, and that whether death comes by strangulation can be determined only in this manner.

Dr. Hurt testifies under cross-examination that he would not attempt to say that Mary Phagan came to her death within a half hour after she had eaten merely because some cabbage, only partially digested, had been found in her stomach. He declares the time it would take to digest cabbage depends on the individual.

He also testifies that in his examination of the body he discovered no indications that would lead him to say that the girl had been criminally attacked.

Jim Conley is made ready to testify Saturday afternoon, but court adjourns at 12:30 until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

A genuine sensation was sprung at the trial of Leo M. Frank Saturday morning when Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, attorneys for the defense, asked the State to consent to a new trial on the ground that Judge Roan had allowed the jury to catch a glimpse of a headline in the first extra of The Georgian.

Juge Roan had laid the paper on the stand in front of him, and, accoring to the efense the headline across the first page could be read by th men in the jury box.

The headline said: "State Adding Links to Chain."

The defense's lawyers went into immediate conference with the judge, and a few minutes later asked Solicitor Dorsey to consent to a new trial. The Solicitor refused.

Rosser Asks Explanation.

Rosser and Arnold then came into the courtroom and asked that the jury be withdrawn.

Rosser addressed the court:

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now. One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it. I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Solicitor Dorsey Objects.

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

Attorney Rosser during the Solicitor's speech spoke in undertones, threatening a mistrial if the prosecution's request was granted.

Judge Warns Jury.

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an

SEEK NEGRO WHO TRIED TO SLAY 7 WITH AX

CAIRO, Aug. 2.—A negro entered the home of George Bodiford, a respectable white farmer of Grady County, living about six miles from Cairo, and with an ax brained him, his wife and five children late last night. Some of the children have revived, but the father and mother are still unconscious and the chances for their recovery are very slight.

The details of the crime are meager. The only clew as to the guilty party is from one of the little girls, who has revived sufficiently to make a statement. She says that she was awakened by the negro coming into the house. As she screamed he hit her in the head with the ax and then struck her father, mother and some of the smaller children.

Girl Gives Alarm.

One girl, about 12 years old, was struck in the head and knocked down, but as she fell she grabbed the negro around the legs and threw him. This frightened the negro and he ran, leaving his ax in the house. The girl gave the alarm and several neighbors came to the house.

The Sheriff and a posse, with three physicians, went to the scene before daylight this morning. They report it is likely that most of them will recover, with the possible exception of the man and wife. The Sheriff arrested a negro said to have been with one who did the work. He remained in the yard to wate while the other entered the house.

Ax and Shoes Identified.

The ax and a pair of shoes, left in the yard, were identified to-day by the wife of the suspected negro. She claimed that he had not been home since yesterday afternoon, when the two negroes left together. One of Bodiford's daughters says that this negro and her father had some words a few days ago about a watermelon patch. This is the only motive that can be given for the crime.

The Sheriff and a posse are in search of the negro, and they hope to apprehend him to-day. Sentiment against the negro is very strong, but no threats of lynching are being made and if caught, there will likely be no trouble.

Life Sentence for Mrs. Silva Hawkins; Cantrells to Hang

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 2.—At noon to-day the jury returned a verdict of guilty with recommendation to life imprisonment against Mrs. Silva Hawkins, charged with plotting the death of her husband, Arthur Hawkins, of Bellton. Judge Jones sentenced her in keeping with this verdict. He also sentenced Bartow Cantrell and James Cantrell, jointly indicted with Mrs. Hawkins and convicted earlier in the week, to be hanged September 26. Motions for new trials have been made in all three cases.

Judge Jones complimented the jury on the verdict in Mrs. Hawkins' case and said he had never made up his mind to sign a verdict hanging a woman.

Judge Jones said this case was worse than the Mary Phagan case in Atlanta, as the conspiracy to murder was entered into weeks before the slaying. Mrs. Hawkins is of one of the best Georgia families, said Judge Jones.

MONEY BILL HELD PANIC REMEDY

Senator Owen Asserts Banks Will Gain, Not Lose, Under Wilson Reform Act.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—With the broad assertion that "panic will be impossible if the administration currency reform bill is passed," Senator R. L. Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, to-day replied to bankers who demand to know what advantages they will gain from the bill.

Owen asserts the bill will safeguard banks against occasional runs, give the ordinary State bank peace of mind against possible artificial panics, and that while the banker loses 2 per cent on a part of his reserve deposited with the Federal Reserve Bank, he actually will make money by other advantages.

Senator Owen points out that a reserve of 15 per cent will be sufficient instead of the 25 per cent now carried. With the same money, he asserts, a bank of $100,000 capital would make $2,750 each year more than under the present law.

In reply to the suggestion that bankers should control the Federal Reserve Board because they are "putting up all the money," he replied that the banks are not putting up money, but are merely lending credit, and that the Government is really supplying the money which is not supplied by depositors themselves.

Eight Trains of U. S. Refugees Landed in El Paso by Rebels

EL PASO, TEXAS, Aug. 2.—The last of the Americans in Chihuahua City were being brought into El Paso to-day by special trains over the Mexican National road, guarded by 1,200 Federal soldiers under Colonel Mancilla. Eight train loads of regugees have been brought out of the Mexican city. Fifty Americans huddled in one coach arrived here last night after being three days on the way.

The refugees said they had assurances from Governor Carranza, head of the Constitutionalists, that Americans and other foreigners in all the states where his troops are fighting Federals, will be protected. Carranza added that the Constitutionalists will not accept any proposals for peace until Huerta has been deposed.

'Drink Buttermilk, Not Wine, in Clubs,' Judge Urges Women

Buttermilk as a social beverage for women who visit Atlanta's locker clubs is advocated by Recorder Nash Broyles.

The Recorder especially recommended buttermilk to Minnie L. Brown, a young woman giving her address at 14-A West Baker street and her occupation as a bookkeeper, when she was arraigned Friday afternoon for drunkenness. She said she became intoxicated when she visited the Theatrical Club with a man.

"You should have called for buttermilk instead of wines and liquors," said the Recorder. "If buttermilk were kept on tap in all of these locker clubs to be served to women instead of strong drink, women would be better off."

important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

The examination of witness proceeded.

The defense rallied sharply Saturday in a vigorous impressive attack on the sensational testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, who declared Friday afternoon that Mary Phagan was killed within a half-hour after she ate dinner April 26, and that she came to her death by strangulation.

Hurt Hits Harris.

From one of the State's own witnesses, Dr. J. W. Hurt, County Physician, Reuben Arnold obtained the important admission that the time it takes to digest cabbage depends on the individual and that the only way to determine with certainty if strangulation is the cause of death is by an examination of the lungs. He admitted the lungs were not examined.

Attacking the testimony of Dr. Harris, who collapsed while testifying on the stand Friday, Arnold asked the witness if Dr. Harris' statement that Mary Phagan had come to her death within a half hour of the time she ate her noon meal was not the wildest sort of a guess. Harris had based his conclusions on the fact that the cabbage he had found in her stomach had undergone only the slightest digestion.

"Is it not true that cabbage is one of the hardest foods to digest and that the average time required to digest it is from 3 1-2 to 4 hours?" asked Attorney Arnold.

Dr. Hurt replied that he thought this was so.

No Proof in Cabbage.

Arnold then showed the specimen of cabbage taken from the stomach of the murdered girl, and called attention to the fact that it had not even been masticated, and that therefore it might have been in her stomach for several hours before she was killed.

Dr. Hurt accompanied this statement by the one, equally vital, that no examination was ever made of the murdered girl's lungs. From this testimony the defense will be able to argue that the State had no substantial foundation for its charge that the girl was strangled to death.

Arnold also forced Dr. Hurt reluctantly to admit that it was impossible for him to state positively either that the blow on the back of Mary Phagan's head had produced unconsciousness or that, on the other hand, it might not have been the actual cause of her death.

Jim Conley, who has sworn that he assisted in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the direction of Frank, was taken from his cell at the police station Saturday in readiness to testify during the afternoon. At this moment Chief Beavers was notified by a Georgian reporter that the trial had been adjourned until Monday morning and the negro was taken back into the station.

Chief Beavers on Stand.

Chief Beavers was one of the witnesses of the morning. An informal objection was made by Attorney Rosser to his appearing as a witness as the Chief previously had been in the courtroom as a spectator. Solicitor Dorsey explained that he had not known that he was going to call Beavers until the afternoon before. The Chief testified only to his examination of the red spots on the floor at the pencil factory. He said that he was present when the spots were chipped up and that they looked like blood to him.

Other witnesses of the day were Helen Ferguson, a factory employee, who testified that she went to the factory Friday night for Mary Phagan's pay envelope and that it was refused her; Robert Lassiter, a policeman, who found the parasol and a ball of wrapping twine at the bottom of the elevator shaft, and Dr. Hurt.

That at least three or four witnesses will be placed on the stand by the State before Jim Conley is called was indicated Saturday afternoon. Dr. Harris, who was examined Friday, it is said, will go on the stand early Monday morning for cross-examination, and following him will be one or two witnesses, experts in adiminal surgery, who will be used by the State to corroborate the testimony of Dr. Harris.

The defense, it is understood, will make a vigorous attack on the testimony of these experts.

Conley may be called Monday afternoon, although it is more than likely that the State will save him until Tuesday.

Helen Ferguson, a companion of Mary Phagan and an employee of the factory, was the first witness to be called when court resumed Saturday morning. The greatest crowd of the week besieged the courthouse clamoring for admission.

Pay Refused.

Solicitor Dorsey examined Miss Ferguson.

Witness said she was an employee of the factory.

Q. Were you at work at the factory Friday, April 25?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you work that day or just go there?—A. I went to the office about 10 o'clock.

Q. What conversation did you have there?—A. I asked for Mary Phagan's money and was told that I could not get it. I talked to Mr. Frank.

Q. Did you ever get her pay before?—A. Yes, but not from Mr. Frank.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you know who paid off?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever get Mary Phagan's money from Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Did you work in the metal department with Mary?—A. Yes.

Detective R. L. Waggoner, who was detailed to watch Frank at the factory the Tuesday morning after the crime and who later rode to the police station with him, was the next witness called by Solicitor Dorsey.

Says Frank Wrung Hands.

Attorney Rosser raised an objection to Wagoner on account of his having been in the courtroom for twenty minutes Wednesday. Wagoner stated that he had heard nothing, and Judge Roan allowed him to testify.

Q. Where were you Tuesday, April 29?—A. Across the street from the National Pencil Factory.

Q. What did you see?—A. I saw Frank come to the window, wringing his hands and looking down. He did it about a dozen times.

Q. Was he nervous or composed?—A. Nervous.

Q. Were you in the automobile when he was taken to the police station?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. Yes. His leg was next to mine. It shook very much.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were you doing in front of the factory?—A. Watching.

Q. Do you know whether Frank was arrested?—A. He was not.

Q. Could you see whether anyone was in the office with him?—A. No.

Dr. Hurt Called to Stand.

Dr. J. W. Hurt followed Wagoner on the stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. County physician.

Q. How long have you held this position?—A. Since January 1. Four years at another time.

Q. What are your duties?—A. To appear at all inquests.

Q. Where did you graduate?—A. I attended the old College of Physicians and Surgeons and also studied in New York.

Q. Did you see the body of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes; Sunday morning, April 27.

Q. Describe to the jury how she appeared.—A. I went to the undertaking establishment. She had a scalp wound on the left side of the head, about two inches long. The right eye was bruised. There were some broken places on the cheek and forehead, scratches on the right and left elbows and scars on right and left legs just below the knees. There was a cord around her neck. It is my opinion that she died from strangulation.

Q. Was this the cord? (Dorsey displayed a long hemp cord.)—A. Yes, so it appears.

Q. Was there any swelling in the neck?—A. Yes.

Q. What would that indicate?—A. That the cord was put around her neck before death.

Q. What was the appearance of the scalp wound?—A. It appeared to have been made by a blunt instrument from below striking upward.

Looked Like First Bruise.

Q. What about the wound around the eye area?—A. The skin was not broken. It looked like it might have been made with a soft instrument.

Q. Could a fist have done it?—A. Yes, it was quite possible.

Q. What do you think would have been the effect of these blows? Were they sufficient to have caused death?—A. No. I would think the blow on the back of the head would have caused unconsciousness.

Q. Did you find any evidence of assault?—A. I did not discover any evidence of violence. There was some blood, but I could not say whether it was from a wound or not.

Q. What was the nature of the wounds on the elbows and the leg?—A. I would say they were made after death.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How did these scratches appear? Could they have been made by the body being dragged by the heels?—A. No. If she were dragged, I should say she was dragged face forward. The scratches ran back as though she was dragged forward.

Cut Two and Half Inches Long.

Q. How long did you say the wound on the scalp was?—A. Let me refer to my notes.

Q. You said it was two and a half inches long and Dr. Harris said it was one and a half inches long. I want to know which is right.

"Two and a half inches," said Dr. Hurt, after looking at his notes.

Q. Did you measure the wound when Dr. Harris dug up the body nine days later?—A. No.

Q. You are not absolutely certain about this examination? Just sort of guessing, aren't you?—A. I am not absolutely certain, but judging from the best of my ability.

Q. All expert testimony is guessing more or less, isn't it? It is just a question as to who can guess the best, isn't it?—A. I expect you are more familiar with expert testimony than anybody else, aren't you?

Skull Not Fractured.

Q. You didn't see any damage on the side of the skull, did you?—A. No, the skull was not fractured.

Q. The brain was not injured?—A. There was some slight trace of concussion on the inside.

Q. You had to be looking for it to see it, didn't you?—A. No, it could be easily seen.

Q. Did you ever hear of a test to see whether a hemorrhage on the inside would produce unconsciousness?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a question or strain on the medical profession as to answer a question like that?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever asked before to examine the inside of a skull to determine whether a person was knocked unconscious?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of a person being killed from a blow on the head and there being no scar on the outside?—A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of persons living after a fracture having the inner and the outer table trepined and a piece taken out and then living?—A. Yes.

Results Always Uncertain.

Q. You can reduce almost every faculty of the brain without producing death? The sight, the hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what faculty of the brain was located where this blow was struck?—A. No, I don't believe I can.

Q. One thousand different effects could be produced without producing death or unconsciousness?—A. Yes.

Q. What makes you say that one little blow could have produced unconsciousness?—A. I just believe it.

Q. That little hemorrhage was not what enabled you to say that she was knocked unconscious?—A. No. The exterior appearance was on what I based my opinion, but I strengthened it by the extent of the contusion on the inside.

Q. How do you know strangulation killed her?—A. I could find no other cause.

Q. What about the windpipe and the lungs in strangulation?—A. What do you mean?

Q. How do the lungs appear?—A. Congested.

Q. You never examined the lungs?—A. No.

Q. Why do you say strangulation caused her death?—A. Because I found the rope deeply imbedded in the neck.

Not Sure About Assault.

Q. Looking at that girl that morning would you say that she was ravished?—A. I haven't said so.

Q. Will you say so?—A. I do not know.

Q. You found no external signs of violence?—A. No, but my examination was not final.

Mr. Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. There are a great many things to cause a little inflammation?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at the first post-mortem examination?—A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Harris took the body a second time, didn't he?—A. I don't know.

Q. Dr. Harris is a sort of specialist on post-mortems, isn't he?—A. I don't know.

Solicitor Dorsey made a side remark that Mr. Arnold's cross-examination of the witness was a pedantic parade.

Q. Doctor, it depends on the individual just how soon cabbage is digested, doesn't it?—A. Yes; some digest it sooner than others.

No Rule for Digesting Cabbage.

Q. Isn't each man a law unto himself?—A. Yes; more or less.

Q. Cabbage is one of the hardest things of the world to digest, isn't it?—A. Yes; it is generally regarded as hard.

Q. Doesn't it take from three to four hours to digest cabbage?—A. Yes; three or four hours to thoroughly digest it.

Q. It depends a great deal on how well it was chewed, and how much saliva flowed down, doesn't it?—A. Yes. Masticating helps digestion.

Q. Suppose a little girl in a hurry to catch a car hurriedly ate some cabbage and allowed it to go down unchewed. Wouldn't it take much longer to digest the unchewed part?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you think a doctor is making a mighty wild statement to get up here and state that a piece of unchewed cabbage had not been in a stomach—

"I object," said Dorsey. "That is a question for a jury, and not Dr. Hurt."

"I thought it was wild," said Mr. Arnold.

"I object to that," returned Dorsey.

"I withdraw it," said Mr. Arnold.

"It was entirely gratuitous and should never have been put in," said Solicitor Dorsey. The Solicitor was sustained.

Death Stops Digestion.

Q. Does death stop digestion?—A. Yes, sir; I think it does.

Q. When a person becomes unconscious, does digestion stop?—A. I rather think so.

Q. If you ate something and went to sleep, digestion would continue?—A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, does digestion stop when a person is unconscious?—A. It is an unnatural unconsciousness.

Q. Aren't the gastric juices and blood the only two things that have anything to do with digestion?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, do they die when a person becomes unconscious?—A. No, but the stomach is partially paralyzed.

Q. Didn't you say it was a wild guess to say how long she was unconscious until the time she died?—A. No, I don't think I did.

A mass of testimony followed that is unprintable. In the course of it, Dorsey said:

"I object to these comparisons."

Judge Roan—He has not asked any question that was a comparison.

Arnold—I withdraw the question.

Dorsey—I thought so.

Arnold—Then I won't withdraw it.

Rosser—Don't pay any attention to Dorsey, Rufe.

Arnold—All right; I withdraw it.

The witness left the stand and was followed by Detective R. L. Waggoner.

Cabbage Not Long In Stomach.

Q. Have you ever experimented or not with the digestion of food?—A. I have.

Solicitor Dorsey showed Dr. Hurt samples of cabbage and bread which had been taken from a healthy person's stomach after remaining there one hour, and the samples taken from Mary Phagan's stomach, both of which were submitted by Dr. Harris Friday.

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death occurred?—A. Not very long.

Attorney Arnold objected. "Your honor," he said, "this is unfair. For it is obvious that this cabbage was not chewed. This witness has testified that it takes from three to four hours to digest cabbage; also he has said the cabbage said to have been digested in one hour might have gone into the stomach almost in as liquid form as it now appears. It is not a fair comparison, because the two samples of cabbage did not go into the stomach in the same form."

Jury Gets Breathing Spell.

While Solicitor Dorsey was looking up an authority the jury was allowed to retire for a breathing spell.

Dorsey: "On that proposition I have this to say: Anyone can give an opinion, provided they give the fact on which the opinion is predicated. I don't know how many teeth Mary Phagan had; I don't know whether this cabbage was cooked a long time or a short time; I don't know that this man had as many teeth as Mary Phagan; I don't know that he chewed it as much or as little as she did; I don't know that the cabbage she ate was as highly seasoned as the cabbage he ate, or whether it was seasoned at all, I insist, your honor, that the jury can draw its own conclusions of the value of this witness' testimony."

Mr. Arnold: "Your honor, the witnesses tell us it takes at least two to four hours to digest cabbage. We do not contend that either of these specimens were digested. We merely say they are in a certain state of digestion."

Judge Roan: "Put your question again, Mr. Dorsey. I want to get it straight before I rule."

Headline Upsets Trial.

At this moment Judge Roan held up a Georgian in which headlines reading "State Adding Links to Chain" were visible to the jury for a moment. Instantly Attorneys Arnold and Rosser were on their feet. Rosser spoke.

"Just a minute, your honor, we want to make a motion."

At this moment Arnold leaned over and spoke to Rosser.

"We will ask you to excuse us for a moment, judge," said Rosser, "while we confer."

Arnold and Rosser retired to a rear room, remarking aside as they went that they might make a motion for a new trial, as they were certain the jury had read the headlines in the paper.

In private conference they asked Dorsey to consent to a new trial and he refused.

After a five minutes' conference they returned to the courtroom and Attorney Rosser addressed the court and requested that the jury be withdrawn.

Says Jury Saw Paper.

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now," said Rosser. "One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it; I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Explains to Jury.

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

Examination Resumed.

Dorsey was permitted to put his question to Dr. Hurt:

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death?—A. I would say that it was a much shorter time than the other.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness is sleep?—A. Natural.

Q. Are any of the functions arrested?—A. The brain.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness does violence produce?—A. Unnatural.

Q. Are any of the processes of digestion arrested or delayed?—A. Yes.

Q. Have there not been instances of a blow on the head when the skull was fractured and death did not ensue?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on the recross-examination.

Q. You said some of the processes were delayed. What are they?—A. Motor and sensory nerves.

Processes Dormant in Sleep.

Q. Are they not dormant in sleep? A. Yes.

Q. How do they affect the blood and the breathing?—A. Not at all.

Q. Then how do they affect digestion?—A. I don't know.

Q. When a man is sleeping, are not all the elements of unconsciousness the same?—A. Yes.

Q. You were shown three bottles by Mr. Dorsey. Can you say to what extent this food was digested?—A. No, sir.

Q. This could have been taken as a gruel and it would have been in this shape, wouldn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, this man might have had a stomach that could digest a 10-penny nail?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that a blow on the back of the head will cause the eyes to blacken?—A. It might.

Dr. Hurt was then excused and was followed on the stand by Chief of Police Beavers.

Chief Beavers on Stand.

As Chief Beavers took his seat Mr. Rosser interposed with the question:

Q. Chief, have you been sitting in the courtroom?—A. Not this morning.

"I did not know I was going to use him until this morning," returned Dorsey. The Solicitor then questioned the witness:

Q. When were you at the National Pencil Factory?—A. Tuesday after the crime was committed.

Q. Did you see any blood spots near the ladies' dressing room on the second floor?—A. Yes, I think it was Tuesday I saw them.

Attorney Rosser objected to Beavers testifying because the Chief had heard part of the trial. His objection was overruled.

Q. How did they appear?—A. There were spots on the floor that looked like blood.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

ly Monday morning, wasn't it?—A. I was there when it was chipped up. If it was Monday, I was mistaken in saying Tuesday.

Q. Chief, you did not know it was

Q. That blood was chipped up ear-

FOREMAN OF FACTORY AN IMPORTANT WITNESS

N. V. Darley, presented by the State, proved to be one of the most important witnesses in the trial of Frank.

Will 5 Ounces of Cabbage Help Convict Leo M. Frank?

Are five and a half ounces of cabbage to be the principal factor in sending a man to the gibbet?

If the prosecution is warranted in its belief in the vital and incriminating importance of the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, this is exactly the outcome to be expected in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

It remains, however, for the State to show explicitly just how the sensational statements made last Friday afternoon by the medical expert any more clearly connect Leo Frank with the terrible crime than they connect Jim Conley, the negro, who was skulking in the National Pencil Factory at the same time. The testimony of Mrs. Arthur White is relied upon to do that very thing.

State Plays High Card.

The Harris testimony was without doubt the highest card the prosecution has played since the trial of Frank started. No other evidence ever has been brought out in the three months of the murder mystery that fixed so definitely and apparently so far beyond dispute the time that the pretty factory girl met her death.

As the testimony stands, no opportunity having been given for cross-examination or refutation, it is easily the most damning that has been placed before the jury. It will remain so until the lawyers for the defense are able to attack the doctor's testimony or are given the opportunity to attach to it a significance entirely different than that advanced by the State.

Dr. Harris analyzed the contents of the murdered girl's stomach. He found there 160 cubic centimeters, or about five and two-fifths ounces, of cabbage and biscuit. This was the meal Mrs. J. W. Coleman, Mary's mother, testified that her daughter had eaten just before she left home on the day of the tragedy.

Killed at Early Hour.

The process of digestion had barely begun. Dr. Harris showed two specimens of cabbage which had been in healthy men's stomachs for an hour. They had been reduced to an emulsion. The cabbage taken from the stomach of Mary Phagan still showed the texture of the vegetable's leaves. The digestive fluids seemed to have acted scarcely at all. The presumption was, therefore, said Dr. Harris, that the little girl had met her death within half an hour after she had eaten the simple meal at her home in Bellwood and had left for the pencil factory. At the most, that was three-quarters of an hour.

Dr. Harris gave his testimony with a professional assurance, the effect of which can be counteracted only by the uttermost skill of Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold. He was positive that the girl was killed within a half or three-quarters of an hour after she had eaten.

This meant that she was attacked and murdered between 12:05, which is about the time the State believes she entered the factory, and 12:20. It was at 12:05 that Monteen Stover said she entered and found Frank absent from his office.

Describes Wounds Vividly.

The courtroom was hushed as Dr. Harris described the wounds of the girl in a manner that vividly portrayed the State's theory of how the girl met her death.

She was attacked near the lathing machine. There was a struggle. Her assailant, infuriated at her resistance or fearful of the approach of persons, struck her fiercely over the right eye. Dr. Harris described the injury. It must have been made with the fist, he said, or with some soft instrument, as there were few signs of abrasion of the skin, only a swelling and discoloration.

The blow felled the girl to the floor. She struck her head against some hard substance. Dr. Harris indicated this by testifying that the skin above the wound on the back of the head had been shoved upward slightly, a circumstance which woud hardly have obtained had the blow on the back of the head been delivered by a club or other instrument.

Further to clinch the State's indictment, charging strangulation, Dr. Harris was positive that the blow on the back of the head could not have caused death. It remained for the assailant to choke the unconscious little girl. There were indications of a criminal attempt before the girl's death. Of all this the medical expert told while Leo Frank looked on him with the same speculative expression he had given the other witnesses. The accused showed neither by the flicker of an eye lid nor the paling of a cheek that the graphic reproduction of what the State regarded as the circumstances of the gruewsome crime had affected him in the least.

If the prosecution is able to establish the accuracy of the conclusions reached by Dr. Harris as a result of his analysis and examination, it then will ask:

"If Jim Conley is the murderer of Mary Phagan and attacked her between 12:05 and 12:20, how did he happen to be dozing on a box by the side of the stairs on the first floor when Mrs. Arthur White came down stairs at about 12:50?"

As it stands, the testimony of Dr. Harris is not by any means conclusive. It is, however, far the most damaging evidence that has been submitted.

An interested public is awaiting the answer that the defense will make.

Takes 500 Pounds of Fat Off 40 Patients

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Professor Nagelschmidt performed two operations in a London hospital to-day with his wonderful diathermic treatment, in which he employs both medicine and surgery. In the former electric rays of very high temperature are passed through the diseased part. In the surgical part of the treatment the current reaches the tissues from the edge of a knife-like application which acts as a bloodless cautery.

The professor has used his treatment for the reduction of obesity, and says 40 patients were deprived of an aggregate of 500 pounds of fat.

LUTHER ROSSER EXEMPLIFYING THE GENTLE ART OF CROSS-EXAMINING

To the casual spectator who feels no personal interest in the outcome of the Frank trial, the one great feature of the courtroom is the cross-examining of the State's witnesses by Luther Z. Rosser. Rosser roars, Rosser whispers, Rosser threatens, Rosser pleads, Rosser insinuates, Rosser cajoles, Rosser jests.

At the left is shown Rosser holding his arms out as though to receive and clasp to his breast the answer about to come to a difficult question he has put.

At the right is Rosser grinning sarcastically. A witness for the State has just said that his memory was as fresh after two years as two days.

Rosser gently starting a battery of questions.

Rosser thundering, his face clouded by anger.

DR. HARRIS SHOWS FRANK HAD CHANCE TO KILL GIRL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The testimony of Dr. Roy Harris, chairman of the State Board of Health, and one of the most learned and approved physicians in Georgia, was dramatic, both in its substance and in the manner of its delivery Friday.

It was not calculated to help Leo Frank—and it did not.

The exhibition of a portion of the contents of the dead girl's stomach, for the purpose of approximating the time of her death, held breathless the packed courthouse—and the fainting of the physician during the progress of his testimony gave a final touch of melodrama to the trial that thrilled the audience as nothing else has thus far.

Dr. Harris impressed me, too, as believing in Frank's guilt—I do not know that he does believe that way, it merely happens that he seemed so to impress me.

And if he impressed that jury as he impressed me, then the things he testified may, if the remainder of the case against Frank holds together, prove eventually to be the defendant's undoing.

Shows He Had Chance.

To be sure, the State has not yet fixed the crime definitely on Frank—but it HAS definitely shown, unless its witnesses be impeached, which is highly unlikely, that Leo Frank MIGHT have murdered Mary Phagan and that he DID have the opportunity to accomplish it.

Having shown that the OPPORTUNITY was there, and that the murder likely was consummated during the time limits of that opportunity, the remaining elements of the case need but to be knitted properly together to make dark indeed the outlook for Frank.

Frank himself, Monteen Stover, Mrs. White and Dr. Harris--they together form a chain thus far apparently strong and dangerous!

That, from the standpoint of the defense, however, is the worst view to take of it.

It must be remembered that the defense as yet has introduced no witnesses. Such advantage as it so far has gained—and it has won many points—it has gained by wringing from the State's own witnesses matters of fact favorable to Frank.

When the defense comes to tell its story it may be confidently anticipated that additional weak points in the State's case may be discovered. The only question is, will they be found SUFFICIENTLY weak to cause the entire chain to fall apart?

Defense Seeks Weakest Link.

A chain is, of course, only as strong as its weakest link. Will the defense be able to locate the State's weakest link? And having located it, will it, can it be strained to the point of giving way?

That is the perplexing and grim puzzle that Rosser and Arnold are contemplating from one standpoint and to-day Dorsey and Hooper from the other.

The black, forbidding shadow of the negro, Jim Conley, has fallen heavily athwart the courtroom in the old City Hall, where Frank is battling for his liberty, his good name and the restoration of his status as an upright and honorable man among his fellows.

The State is paving the way to the climax of its case—it is leading up, and with considerable skill and adroitness, to the test of its biggest asset or its most tremendous liability, as the case may be—Jim Conley, confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder and by many suspected of being the principal to the murder.

Somehow it seemed to me that Luther Rosser grew more and more cautious in his cross-examining Friday and Saturday, and certainly Reuben Arnold appeared to weigh well his words and carefully propound his questions.

Dorsey Has Temper in Leash.

Dorsey, too, has his tempre much more thoroughly in hand—and Hooper?

Hooper is the same as ever—smiling, calm, deliberate, rarely speaking at all, save to whisper directing words into his associate's ear now and then.

When Jim Conley is on the stand, Leo Frank will be face to face with the crisis in his trial—either Conley will leave the stand Frank's final deliverance and refuge, or his eternal damnation on earth!

For this is a battle in truth to the very death—a battle in which quarter is being neither given nor asked!

It means hope, and love, and life, and liberty to Frank, or it means——!

I looked long and earnestly into the faces of those twelve "good men and true," the "gentlemen of the jury" on Friday afternoon.

To me, the Frank jury appears to be much above the average.

A composite picture of it would indicate, I suspect, intelligence, levelheadedness, business knowledge and poise.

If it is the sort of jury I think it is, it is just the sort of jury that should try a case of such unusual quality as the one it now has in hand.

I am assuming that a vast majority of Georgians are hoping sincerely to see the truth of this famous case established—that it is largely an abstract proposition to the average man.

The point, however, is not so much what any one of us thinks—the point is what does that JURY think?

The impressions that evidence produce are varied and sometimes marked. One never can exactly and precisely say which way it will cut.

And right here my mind goes back involuntarily to Dr. Roy Harris, and his remarkable testimony.

Undoubtedly the defense will have to put on its thinking cap, straight and firmly set, if it hopes not only to upset that testimony and discredit it as particularly and relatively in point, but to remove the profound impression it may have made upon the jury.

It is, after all, largely upon mental impression—perhaps more often than not—that jury verdicts are predicted. The psychological receptiveness of the jury frequently controls the finding, I doubt not.

If Dr. Harris' testimony has weighed heavily against Frank in the mind of the jury, the defense will find it extremely difficult to remove that weight.

The Solicitor General may have been far more astute and incisive, too, than some have thought, when, time and again, he claimed to have been entrapped by his own witnesses—that they were not now swearing the same things that a few weeks ago they swore readily enough.

Effect May Be Decisive.

If the Solicitor has managed to get it into the minds of that jury that Frank needs protection against actually damaging circumstances, that witnesses deliberately have been drilled to protect him against sinister things, that witnesses have been tampered with in his behalf—all of which things may be inferentially set up, without many genuine reasons therefor being given—then a psychological effect will have been achieved that may prove dangerous in the extreme to the defendant.

Now, I do not mean to say the State HAS succeeded in doing that, and I hardly see wherein those impressions would be warranted altogether in the minds of the jurymen, still Dorsey and Hooper are driving at SOMETHING—and it may be they are driving at that exact psychological effect!

And you never can tell.

The way of a serpent upon a rock, of an eagle in the air, and of a man with a maid—these things have been said to be the strangest of all things. But the fourth strangest thing, and there may be so many as four superlatively strange things, is the way of a jury with a defendant at bar!

Therefore, if Hooper and Dorsey have been seeking, through the clever manipulation of their own witnesses and through the still cleverer directing of the cross-examination into desired channels, and if they have succeeded, which no man possibly may know now, the art employed has been consummately far-reaching and keen.

It will brace up the amazing story of Conley wonderfully and make his tale the easier for the jury to accept as true, and it will in inverse ratio discount the defendant's statement, moreover, if the jury can be brought to that psychological status suggested in this article, if it be the true purpose of the State to bring it there.

Situation Rests on "Ifs."

There are a good many "ifs" in this idea, to be sure—but all psychological situations are builded largely upon "ifs."

That the State is undertaking to establish a psycnological effect in at least one other direction, too, is evident in the way it insists, over and over, that Frank was "nervous" or "extremely nervous" just after the crime was committed—the idea being that if he was agitated it likely was because of his guilty conscience.

The State has combated this wonderfully well, in so far as the substance of its denials are concerned—and yet into this idea obtrudes the thought that maybe here, again, the State has been cleverer than the defense has imagined, by forcing the State rather to overdo its hand in that direction!

Now, these suggestions may be more or less elusive and hard to get hold of, but they are in no way impossible. Indeed, when it is remembered that the State all along has been developing a rather weak circumstantial case against Frank always up to its star witness, Conley—at once both its hope and its despair—and that the story of that witness is grimly grotesque, in parts strenuously straining on the imagination, based, as it is in portions, upon admitted lies and misrepresentations, the great help and assistance to the State of a mentally receptive jury may be, and doubtless will be, appreciated immediately by the reader.

In any and every aspect of the case it is but the simple truth to say that both the State and the defense have been forced to the skating on dangerously thin ice more than once so far.

Wilson Takes a Day Off; Golfs a Little

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—President Wilson to-day dropped all official business. He golfed in the morning with Dr. C. G. Grayson, his physician, and planned to go to the ball game in the afternoon.

Roan Holding Scales of Justice With Steady Hand

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Emotion's entire gamut is daily run on the screen of faces watching the Frank trial.

A student of facial expression can find anything he seeks by watching the throng of spectators a half hour.

A glance at one man may show a sneer of hate as bitter as gall. His neighbor in the next seat will probably be smiling in amused content as if he were witnessing the antics of his favorite comedian.

Looking to the left he may see fear as vividly depicted on a countenance as trapped felon has ever felt. And another glance might show a spectator in studious contemplation as rapt as that of a philosopher endeavoring to fathom a new frailty in human character.

Men have been mad, and shown it, during the progress of Atlanta's most famous criminal case. And men have shown that they were glad to the point of jubilation at the very same instant.

Roan Utterly Impassive.

But throughout the tedious hours and hours of the hearing, one man sits, listening to every word. And he has yet to display the fact that his emotions are any more affected by the dramatic trial in which he is a commanding figure than those of a business man going through the daily routine of his prosaic grind.

That quality shows why the man is sitting there. If he were a man to show that his feelings were swayed as the tide of battle turned first for one side and then the other, he would not be qualified for the eminent position he holds.

Judge L. S. Roan is performing the arduous duties of presiding justice in the Frank case, because the people of Fulton County recognized that he is the man of the county's 250,000 best endowed by nature to perform this task.

His attitude throughout the hearing has shown that the people chose wisely and well.

Think of his position. It is one of supreme importance just at this time, when passion and prejudice are more likely to rule than cool reasoning.

It is his work to uphold the theory that Justice is blind, and that the courts of the land are the blindfold that darkens the vision of the goddess. He must see that the scales are evenly balanced. He must be sure that the sword is sharp.

There are scores, yes hundreds, of people in Atlanta to-day convinced absolutely of Frank's guilt in the Phagan mystery, and it would take a power of inconceivable magnitude to change their mental attitude.

There are scores and hundreds right here who believe thoroughly and honestly that Frank is innocent of any crime, and is as cruelly a persecuted person as the earth has known since the days of the martyrs. And so firm is this belief that it could not be shaken by dynamite or earthquake.

No Doubt as to Fairness.

Judge Roan's position and his oath of office call on him to see that both of these classes are firmly convinced of one fact in common, and that is that the case of Leo M. Frank is being fairly, honestly and effectively tried according to the law and evidence.

When he does this, he is removing a tremendous amount of the poison in the case. People are too prone to hint that a man's money can assure him of safety in any act he may commit. People are too likely to say that law and order becomes as nothing beneath a weight of prejudice.

Every word that Judge Roan speaks is as eagerly listened to as the voice of a diva. His every action is watched as closely as those of the President of the United States are by his secret service protectors.

Therefore, in action as well as in word, the judge must be impartial. Therefore, he can not smile as one side or the other scores a point. He can not evince extraordinary interest if it is apparent that the lawyers are about to tear to shreds the story of a witness. He must make a mental picture of everything in the long-drawn-out battle in order to give his final instructions to the jury, but he must not permit this picture to be reflected on his face.

And he has not.

His rulings have been quick. They are spoken in a low voice, just loud enough for counsel and witness to hear. In rendering a decision, he rarely straightens himself from the reclining attitude he assumes in the office chair.

Heat Hard on Judge.

He sits through the long hours, his right hand waving a huge palm leaf fan, though two electric fans are turned on the bench. He needs all three, for the courtroom is stifling hot, and Judge Roan is no longer young. Occasionally he mops a hairless spot on his high forehead with a handkerchief.

Several times during each day during the duller moments of the trial, he speaks a smiling word to some member of the bar, not connected with the case, who passes the bench or exchanges pleasantries with a court attache.

But his mind is never off the burning issue that he must play so important a part in deciding.

FRANK JUROR'S LIFE ONE GRAND, SWEET SONG--NOT

O. B. KEELER.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

Look him over next time you attend the Frank trial. Size up his little job. Weigh his responsibility. Consider his problems.

And then, if seeking employment, go out and sign a contract to make little ones out of big ones.

It's a more satisfactory way of earning $2 a day.

The juror's business is to collect evidence by the earful, sift the same, separate the true from the false, and make it into a verdict as between the Stat of Georgia and Leo Frank.

On the face of it, the plan is beautifully simple.

But the beauty is only skin deep.

You are recokning without the lawyers.

Here Entereth the Lawyer.

The simple-minded layman—and that rating includes the juror—starts out with the idea that the business of a lawyer is to extract evidence from the witness in available form for proper consideration by the juror.

It speedily develops that the full intent of counsel is to prevent the witness from unburdening himself in any way whatsoever. The more expensive the counsel, the less information the opposition will be able to wheedle out of its star performers.

The method of blocking is objective—that is, it is by means of objections. It appears that our system of jurisprudence takes cognizance of the juror as a mere babe in arms, not fit to assimilate the strong meat of evidence straight.

How the Juror Is Spared.

So he is sedulously raised on the bottle.

Mr. Dorsey (for example) has a witness by whom he is aching to show that Leo Frank was nervous the morning he was apprised of the tragedy. Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold are equally positive that the witness is not competent to judge if Mr. Frank was nervous. Also they are quite sure that the bottle-fed juror is utterly incapable of deciding if the witness is competent to decide if Mr. Frank was nervous.

They do not intend that the juror shall endanger his delicate thinking apparatus by grappling with any such abstruse problem.

So they fix it up this way.

Witness: "He insited on having some coffee."

Mr. Rosser: "I object to the use of the word 'insisted.' It manifestly is a conclusion of the witness, and as such has no place in the evidence. I ask that the word be ruled out."

Objections Fix the Fact.

And the court orders it ruled out, thereby fixing the circumstance firmly in the mind of the juror. And then Mr. Dorsey twists the query around and gets the witness to state that Frank asked for coffee twice at his house and once at the factory.

Just why that arangement suits the defense beter than the simple proposition that Frank insisted on the coffee is not entirely plain—to the layman.

But it seems that the juror is to be shielded from any breath of anything not bearing strictly on the guilt or innonce of the accused.

Specific and accurate information being thus at a premium, the juror probably is amazed when Mr. Rosser, vibrating with grief and indignation, protests against Detective Scott reading from some notes he made while working directly on the case.

The court also is shocked, but permits Mr. Scott to "refresh his memorl" by means of the notes and then retail the product of such refreshment by word of mouth.

This is agreeable to Mr. Rosser and the court, but when Mr. Dorsey offers further to refresh Mr. Scott's somewhat wilted recollection, Mr. Rosser intimates at the top of a robust voice that such a thing shall be accomplished only over his (Mr. Rosser's) inanimate form.

And that promptly affords the bottle-fed juror some more evidence to ponder.

Mr. Dorsey insists it is his right to "lead" the witness.

The witness demands to know if he is suspected of holding back.

Mr. Dorsey declares he has been trapped by the witness, and Mr. Rosser appends the somewhat doubtful comment that Frank Hooper is a wise man.

Here Are More Problems.

Now, add this to the problems of the troubled juror:

Is Mr. Scott balking?

If so, has Mr. Dorsey the right to hold an ear of corn in front of him?

Has Mr. Dorsey been trapped?

And, in view of the foregoing, is or it not Mr. Hooper a wise man?

Other problems for the exercise of the Frank juror on the side, as it were, would include the following:

Should Mr. Dorsey be permitted to examine a witnes without interruption by Mr. Rosser?

Should Mr. Rosser be permitted to object?

If so, should Mr. Dorsey scowl while Mr. Rosser is objecting?

Does Mr. Rosser consider whisky a good remedy for indigestion?

Would He Hide Evidence?

Woud anybody think that Mr. Rosser would have anything to do with suppressing evidence, except in the regular and approved objective method prescribed by law?

Is Mr. Scott a trained sleuth?

And one more thing that tends to lend an acrobatic cast to the mental processes of the Frank juror.

Once in a while—not very often, it's true—but once in a while something gets by Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold. The witness may be quick on the trigger. Or Mr. Dorsey may manage to frog up a subtle query with a joker in it.

And after the storm of objection has thundered itself out and Mr. Rosser is mopping the signs of honest toil from his brow, and Mr. Dorsey is wearing an expression similar to that of a cat that knows all about what happened to the canary—why, then the court orders the stenographer to strike out the answer.

And the obliging juror is instructed to forget it.

Yes?

Would You Forget it, Too?

Just suppose that you, being an honest and hard-working juror, trying in an honest and hard-working way to extract a morsel of real information from a jungle of cross-questions and crabbed answers and objections and oratory and recrimination—suppose that the honest and hard-working witness should beat 'em to it for once, and disgorge something really interesting.

And then suppose the judge should tell you to wipe it right off your mental slate, and not remember it, or consider it, or think about it any more forever.

You would do it, would you not?

Neither would we.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

I was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast.

"Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the country-side shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fire-works.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed. "Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stuuid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had. Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes, bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or any strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and pepper and salt to taste. Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam. Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's orl right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I ses is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. "If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instant. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering. Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name. A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us; the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Friendship is to be valued for what there is in it, not for what can be gotten out of it.—Trumbull.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it runs to it, it may run itself out of breath.

The strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other.

There is no folly equal to throwing away friendship in a world where friendship is so rare.

It is a fine thing to be yourself, and a true friend loves you most when you are?

Think less of your right to demand service from friendship and more of your sacred duty to give to it.

To be a hero, trust yourself—to be a martyr, trust the world—and if you are an idealist, trust your friend.

When your friend disappoints you it hurts—but the agony is bitter when you find yourself failing your own ideal of friendship.

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this morning," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some one of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, 'Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without tiling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your ilps are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took It, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin to-night I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. it is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my price. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly. I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first; I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before * * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

Confessions of a Medium

(Spirit Transference in Clairvoyancy)

An Expose of Frauds Practiced in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc., Etc.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK. SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND. FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless, as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands, until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling gait and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it," I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought, ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

FRANK DEFENSE SCORES WITH DR. HURT

Coroner's Physician, Under Cross Examination, Hits Testimony Given by Dr. Harris.

blood, did you?—A. I took it for blood.

Q. You are not an expert? You couldn't tell as well as a chemist who made an analysis, could you?—A. No, I am not an expert, but I took it for blood.

Chief Beavers then left the stand and Policeman Base Rosser was called. He did not answer and Policeman Robert Lassiter took the stand. Dorsey examined him.

Q. Were you with the policeman called to the National Pencil Factory on the night of April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find this parasol?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. At the bottom of the elevator.

Q. Anything else?—A. A ball of wrapping twine beside the parasol.

Rosser cross-examined the witness.

Q. Did you see evidences of something having been dragged along the floor of the basement?—A. Yes. Some distance from the elevator shaft.

Shook Factory Door.

Q. Didn't you testify before the Coroner's jury that you found this evidence about the foot of the ladder?—A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. You were on the beat in front of the pencil factory, were you not?—A. Yes, until 12 o'clock at night.

Q. You tried the back door of the factory about 10 o'clock?—A. Yes. I shook it but didn't try to open it.

Q. Was it open or closed?—A. It was closed.

Dorsey took the witness on redirect examination.

Q. Do you know whether the elevator comes down flat on the ground?—A. No.

Q. How did you go down into the basement?—A. By a stepladder.

Lassiter was excused.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, of the police force, was then called, but failed to answer.

Judge Roan then adjourned court until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

As the case stood Saturday morning, these are the strong links in the State's case:

Mary Phagan left her home at 11:45, according to her mother, after having eaten some cabbage.

The girl arrived at the factory between 12:05 and 12:10, according to Frank's own statement before the Coroner's jury.

Monteen Stover looked into Frank's office between 12:05 and 12:10 and says he was not there.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies that the condition of the cabbage taken from the girl's stomach shows conclusively that she died within about half an hour after it was eaten. This would make the time of death about 12:10—a few minutes before or after.

Claims Negro Is Eliminated.

Mrs. Arthur White testifies that when she left the factory at about 1 o'clock a negro, presumably Conley, was sitting on a box on the first floor. This, according to the State, eliminates the negro as the slayer, because, according to its expert evidence, the girl must have been killed some time before that.

The defense's attack on all this testimony and reasoning was expected to be spirited and bitter, and until it has been made it is impossible to determine how much weight testimony like Dr. Harris' purporting to fix almost to the minute the time it takes to digest cabbage will have with the jury.

DOUBLE DEALING OVER TAX BILL IS CHARGED

Wohlwender Declares Sheppard Let Amendments Die After Agreeing to Them.

Efforts to obtain a reconsideration of the Sheppard substitute to the Lipscomb tax reform bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 107 to 59 after an all-day session Friday, will be made within two weeks, and probably before the bill is sent to the Senate.

Representative McMichael of Marion County, whose amendment providing tax discoverers to work with the county boards provided by the Sheppard bill, was defeated, served notice that he will make a motion to reconsider.

An amendment by Mr. Nunnally of Floyd, which makes the State Comptroller General a sort of balance wheel between the taxpayer and the county boards, also is likely to get a new trial.

State Board Men Favor Move.

It is understood the members of the House who favor the State board idea will support Mr. McMichael in his attempt to get a reconsideration of the bill, and prospects are considered good for the success of the movement. It was the State board advocates who passed the bill Friday.

More of Mr. Sheppard's followers voted against his bill than voted for it, and without the support of the State board advocates, who acted on the basis that half a loaf was better than no bread, the bill would have been lost.

The insurrection among the Sheppard forces was led by Messrs. Wimberly of Bibb, Wohlwender of Muscogee and McMichael of Marion, and was started after Mr. Sheppard got through two amendments to his own bill, which Mr. Wimberly declared takes away all powers from the county boards.

Mr. Wohlwender voted against the Sheppard bill and charged Mr. Sheppard with double dealing. He said the situation was this:

Failed to Give Signal.

The State board advocates agreed to favor the Sheppard bill as amended by Mr. Sheppard in the hope that it could be amended by the Senate to provide adequate tax revision. The members led by Mr. Wohlwender, Mr. Nunnally and Mr. McMichael agreed to support the bill on its final passage if the amendments offered by Nunnally and McMichael were adopted.

Mr. Sheppard, they claim, agreed, and when they came to a vote, he was to hold up his left hand as a signal, and the amendments were to go through. When the amendments were offered, however, Mr. Sheppard gazed steadily out of the window—and the amendments were voted down.

Then Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender led a fight against the adoption of the substitute, but lost.

On the passage of the bill by substitute Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender continued their fight, but the State board people, realizing the Sheppard bill was probably their only chance for any kind of tax revision measure in the House, rallied to its support.

Dr. Stovall, of Elbert County, who practically destroyed the original Lipscomb bill with his amendments, and who has advocated the Sheppard bill heretofore, lined up with opponents of all tax revision Friday, voting against the Sheppard bill.

OVER $1,000,000 LOSS FEARED IN TAX RETURNS

Decrease of $750,000 Shown by 35 Out of 39 Counties—Governor Keeping Tab.

With county tax returns showing a loss of approximately $750,000 in 35 out of 59 counties reported to date, the State Treasurer Saturday faced the probability of the first decrease in tax returns since 1899.

Comptroller General Wright declared that unless the larger counties—Fulton, Bibb, Chatham and Richmond—which have not been reported, show exceptionally large increases, the State Treasury would show a big decrease in tax returns when the books are closed next week.

To date 59 counties have been reported, and out of this number 35 show decreases over last year. Of the eleven reported Friday seven showed losses and only four increases.

Just as soon as the reports are received by the Comptroller General they are prepared and submitted to the Governor, who is keeping close tab on the situation.

If the decreases continue to be reported from the counties, it is very likely that the deficit over last year's returns will be something over $1,000,000.

Woman Halts Plan To Change Street Name; Wins Delay

McDaniel street received a new lease on life Friday afternoon when the Streets Committee of the General Council heeded the protest of Miss Susie Wells, a property owner, who, single-handed, fought the resolution to change the name of the street to Oxford Terrace.

"You can't improve the morals or change the color of the people by changing the name of the street they live on," declared Miss Wells in reply to Representative Bob Blackburn, who charged that McDaniel street, in certain sections, was "disreputable."

Members of the Council committee, including those who had practically made up their minds to vote for the change, saw the point and voted to postpone action two weeks. Alderman James W. Maddox, it is understood, will aid Miss Wells in her unique fight.

BABY'S AWFUL ECZEMA CURED

Face Just a Sore. Scratched Till It Bled. Resinol Stopped Itching Almost Instantly. Soon Well.

May 20, 1913:—"My baby's face broke out with eczema. We tried many prescriptions, ointments and lotions, but the baby's face kept getting worse all the time. He would scratch it until it would bleed, and finally his face on both sides was just an awful sore. It bothered him so much that he could not sleep much at night.

"I sent for samples of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and used them according to directions. The result was something wonderful. The itching stopped almost instantly, and from the first application we could see a marked improvement. I then bought a fifty-cent jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, and by the time the jar of Ointment was used, the baby's face was almost entirely cured, so I bought another jar and used only half of it, and the cure was complete. My doctor recommends Resinol very highly and I cannot say too much for Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment."

What Does John D. Care for Expenses? Lets Rain Hit Hat

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—John D. Rockefeller scorned the umbrella which was held over him when he left Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and allowed a fine drizzle to patter down on his straw hat while waiting for friends to get into his big touring car.

The Rev. Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Louisville, Ky., who preached on "Moral Assets," told the congregation that in the Christian life they were rich indeed, but that earthly riches do not amount to much, anyway. Mr. Rockefeller enthusiastically congratulated the minister after the sermon.

DON'T WAIT Until Jack Frost arrives with chilly winds and wintry blasts and you are shaking and shivering, but buy your COAL NOW, and have it in the bin. Prices are RIGHT, delivery PROMPT.

OLDEST TREES

The Dragon trees in the Canary Islands are the oldest inhabitants of the earth.

Until 1868 there existed a famous specimen of these trees in Teneriffe, the largest of the Canary Islands. At the time of Humboldt's visit, it was seventy feet tall and forty-five feet in circumference, and was estimated to be over 6,000 years old.

The GUANCHES worshiped this tree. They hollowed its trunk into a small sanctuary. One night this oldest of all trees was destroyed by a slight gale.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Legislators Inspect Home of E. P. Ansley

Looking for Governor's Mansion Site. Druid Hills Property Brings $11,000 Cash—Other Notes.

That members of the State Legislature have been quietly inspecting prospective sites for the new Governor's Mansion became known Saturday. A small delegation has been out several times to look over the fine residence of Edwin P. Ansley in Ansley Park, it is said, and have sought to get a proposition from Mr. Ansley.

While Mr. Ansley's position in the matter has not been learned, close friends declare that he will sell. His lot is one of the highest in Ansley Park, with a commanding view of the surrounding country. It contains six or eight acres and about 1,000 feet of frontage on two streets. The house is two stories and built of stone quarried in the park.

The delegation is said to have looked over W. F. Winecoff's marble house in Ansley Park. This was offered to the Legislature two years ago. Mr. Winecoff wanted an appraisal board to determine the value of the place and agreed to sell at that price.

The A. G. Rhodes stone house at the foot of Peachtree circle on Peachtree also came in for casual inspection. This was likewise offered, among other houses, in 1911.

Druid Hills Cash Sale.

Mrs. Alice A. Whitman has sold to Mrs. E. H. Cantrell a 120 by 230 foot lot and brick bungalow on the south side of Fairview road, near Moreland avenue, for $11,000 cash, or at the rate of nearly $92 a front foot, including the value of the improvements. The transaction was handled through the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency.

Warranty Deed for $30,000.

John W. Alexander has conveyed to J. N. Hirsch the northwest corner of Peters street and Hills avenue for $30,000. The deal was made Friday and warranty deed was placed on record.

Application for Building.

J. B. Thompson applied Saturday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays for a permit to erect a two-story business building on the east side of Fairlie street, between Poplar and Luckie streets, to cost $7,500. Mr. Thompson already had been given a permit to erect similar stores on the north side of Poplar street, in the same block. The stores are to the north of the Postoffice Building. Mr. Thompson's lots adjoin in the back, but the corner between them is under different ownership.

Mansion Question Agitated.

The question of disposing of the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain streets is still engaging the attention of the legislators. The Committee on Public Property is practically unanimous in favor of building a handsome new mansion and selling the old one, and is expected to draft a resolution embodying features of resolutions offered by Senators Watts, Turner and Peyton.

Remodeling Decatur Depot.

The Georgia Railroad is busy making repairs on its depot at Decatur, and there are other evidences of activity in this thriving suburb of Atlanta. Mrs. H. E. Goddard, owner, and W. A. Ozmer, contractor, are erecting a building to be occupied by the Johnson Hardware Company, a firm which will move from Conyers to Decatur. There are other improvements in progress, announcement of which has already been made.

JUDGE ATTACKS DUAL MORAL STANDARD

Frees Deserted Mother of Coal Operator's Two Children After She Shot at Him.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—"Women sin emotionally, unthinkingly; men often sin calculatingly, knowing they can escape penalties," said Police Magistrate Daniel Winters in discharging a woman who shot twice at, but missed, a man she alleged was the father of her two children and who cast her aside and married another after she had lived with him eleven years.

The woman is Miss Alice Hopkins, aged 33 years, and the man is C. H. Wisser, 60, a wealthy coal operator.

"I do not advocate shooting, but the peculiar circumstances gives this woman a great deal of latitude, said the magistrate. If judges would treat man and woman exactly alike, I imagine there would be less masculine license.

Man Should Not Escape.

"It is not fair that a woman should be an outcast and a man escape blame. In the case of a man and a woman about town, except where the man started the woman on her downward course, it is different.

"But when a man, as it seems Wisser has done, lives with a woman as his wife, and that woman has been faithful to him and has borne him children whom she is rearing to the best of her ability, then that woman should get at least as much consideration as the man.

"Except for the perfunctory fact that no marriage ceremony has been performed, he and she are man and wife, and even he does not deny that she has been faithful.

Why Should She Bear Blame?

"Then why, in the name of justice, should she bear all the blame? There is something wrong about a social system that accepts such a man and ostracizes this woman.

"Some say I have established a precedent in the Wisser-Hopkins case. If I have, I mean to follow it up. I do not mean I would desire to condone faults of women and punish only those of men, but I would like to feel that I could be fair and square to both, and judge them from a standpoint not influenced by sex difference."

CASE SHOWS NEED FOR GIRLS' HOME

Wayward Child-Wife's Trouble Causes Broyles to Speak for State Institution.

Recorder Nash Broyles Saturday morning characterized Mrs. F. J. Rathnaw, 16 years old, as a striking example of the need of a State or County reform institution to which wayward girls could be committed.

The Recorder took occasion to commend the plan of the Men and Religion Forward Movement to obtain such a home through legislation.

"Cases of girls like this one are a problem, and I hardly know what to do with them," remarked the Recorder. "The State or the county certainly should provide an institution to which wayward girls can be committed by the courts. As it is now, the courts are powerless to commit a girl to a reform school without the consent of the parents."

Mrs. Rathnaw, who is separated from her husband and is living with her parents near Faith's crossing, was arraigned on complaint of neighbors. She told the Recorder she wished to reform, and, on her promises, the case was held open during her good behavior.

PRISON REFORM BILLS PASSED BY SENATE

One Provides for Probation in Minor Cases — Other Allows Indeterminate Sentence.

With the concurrence of the State Prison Board and of many Superior Court judges of Georgia, the Senate has passed two measures designed to change greatly the methods of dealing with convicts.

They do not interfere with the system of working convicts on the road. In fact, Chairman Davisson, of the Prison Board, believes the changes will increase the efficiency of the convicts in road building. But the acts change the attitude of the State toward the convict and give the latter a chance to work out his own salvation.

The first measure legalizes the right of the judge to suspend sentence and provides that an adult for whom sentence has been suspended may be freed on probation. The second measure provides indeterminate sentence.

The first act passed the Senate unanimously and the second by a vote of 27 to 3. Both have been recommended for passage by the House committees. So far as is known no opposition has developed.

The bills sound complicated because of the various safeguards and restrictions thrown around the proposed changes, but their operation is simple.

The probation bill means the trial court has a right to suspend sentence and yet exercise a supervision over the sentenced. For instance, when a man is sentenced for abandonment of family, the judge, if he deems it wise, can sentence the man to the chaingang, and then let him go free on probation on condition that he goes to work and supports his family.

By the same method a first offender can be given a second chance, and yet can be kept under the restraining eye of the court. It is an application in a limited way of the children's court probation system to adults.

The indeterminate sentence bill is equally simple. After excluding lifetermers, persons previously convicted of felony or convicted for criminal assault or attempted criminal assault, it provides a sentence for an indeterminate period instead of a fixed number of years. Then the convict's behavior determines whether he gets out at the end of the minimum time, or stays in to the maximum.

J. Ham Lewis Calls For 'Fathers' Day'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, has come to the conclusion that the "Old Man" of the family has not received proper recognition from a grateful country. He announced to-day his intention to introduce a bill setting aside July 29 as "Fathers' Day." Already there is a "Mothers' Day" and a "Children's Day."

"The Old Man," said the Senator, "pays all the bills. On cold winter mornings he gets up to light the fire. In summer he works like a horse in mowing the lawn. His lot is not a happy one. He deserves recognition."

Aviator Quells Fire 4,000 Feet in the Air

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—"I thought I was a goner," said W. C. Robinson, an aviator, as he related his feelings while he was fighting a fire that threatened to destroy his aeroplane 4,000 feet above Chicago's business district.

Crowds along Michigan Boulevard and aviators at Cicero flying field watching through glasses thought he was a "goner," too. But Robinson, alone in the flaming aeroplane, fought the fire with a hand chemical while he made a perfect descent and landed just as the planes collapsed.

Help! Mother-in-Law! Judge Answers Call

OMAHA, NEBR., Aug. 2.—Lester L. King, a wealthy business man here, secured an injunction enjoining his mother-in-law, Mrs. Levi Gardner, of Harvard, Ill., to keep out of his home.

Mrs. Gardner has been visiting the King family several months, and according to King caused trouble between him and his wife. Mother-in-law refused to leave when requested to do so, and King obtained the injunction.

One Year Given to Abate Copper Fumes

The Tennessee Copper Company, operating at Ducktown, Ga., was notified Saturday of a one-year extension in which to eliminate the smoke nuisance that farmers in that section said had ruined the crops. The extension was secured by an amendment to the Wright resolution by the Senate, which was concurred in by the House Friday.

WOMAN FINDS BIG SURPRISE IN A WANT AD

Expects to Pay for Hauling Away Shrubs and Gets Five Dollars for It Instead.

"No, there isn't a thing I want that a want ad would bring me," said a North Side woman to a Georgian want ad contestant as he chatted with her on her front veranda. "Unless I could get rid of that unsightly big shrub in the front yard. It cuts off my view and I'd like to pay a man to take it it up and haul it away."

"I believe you can do better than that," said the contestant, who knew something of plants. "Let me sell it for you."

And next afternoon there came a couple just completing a new home who wanted to adorn their lawn, and they gladly paid $5 for the shrub and bore the expense of moving it. And that's what a want ad will do.

The contestants now at work are running across a world of human interest stories. They find many strange "wants" and many queer situations. But they are rounding up the ads.

Contestants who are not informing their friends about the race are overlooking their best opportunity. They should tell every acquaintance, for everybody is using want ads and every ad might mean a hundred or two votes for a friend just as well as not. The Want Ad Man will show contestants how to secure the friends' aid if you'll ask him.

And if you haven't entered the contest now is the time. You still have an excellent chance to get a start.

SENSATIONAL DROP IN PRICE OF COTTON

Texas Rains Cause Constant Flood of Long Cotton—Bulls Withdraw—No Support.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Absence of Liverpool cables and general showers over the larger part of the Western belt resulted in the cotton market opening weaker to-day, first prices at a net decline of 4 to 18 points from Friday's closing quotations. Good showers were reported over the East and Central portions of Texas.

The market was long after yesterday's upturn and there was much early pressure from room sources. Business was active. New crop positions were freely offered, but very little cotton changed hands and prices suffered an additional decline of 10 to 14 points in most active positions from the opening range. Liverpool cabled that Manchester was practically idle, and that spinners and manufacturers are cautious.

Throughout the short session low levels were sustained, in response to a constant flow of long cotton.

In addition to Texas rains, many of the more conservative element contend that the Government failed to give the crop as high percentage as it deserved. They also contend that the benefit of the recent rains should have been made up in the report, but the percentage given by the Bureau did not indicate such had been added.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 19 to 20 points from the final quotations of Friday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 2.—Weather velopments overnight were distinctly favorable. Indications are for precipitation in the southern half of Texas, cooler generally over the western and northern half of the belt. Partly cloudy with showers in southeastern quarter and the Carolinas.

Liverpool is closed to-day and will be closed on Monday. The market declined nearly 20 points in the early trading on liquidation of long cotton taken on the drouth in Texas and the Bureau report which is released now owing to rains in Texas. New York reported McFadden heavy seller through various brokers.

The tendency was to buy on the break on the fear of bullish efforts suggested by Mr. Price's circular and also on account of delay to the crop in the Eastern States and possibly complaints of too much rain. A spell of fair weather is desirable in the Central and Eastern States.

The market was steady at the decline with new crops around 11.20. Market prospects for next week depend on the weather and increase in new crop movement in the West.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Nobody guessed the Bureau crop condition figure low enough, consequently everybody spent the last half of the session explaining somebody's error. A multitude admitted bad judgment. Many accepted the showing as bullish. A few expressed the belief the Government had erred. But the market is so restricted by the fear of adverse legislation that very little trading was generated by the Government's figure of 79.6, which is .4 below the ten-year-average. Because of the low Bureau, bulls attached much importance to the dry weather in Texas and Oklahoma since July 25, and exploited the claim that further deterioration has taken place in those States since the compilation of the Bureau's data.

"On the other hand, big crop people dug into the record and found that between April 15 and July 25 the Texas rainfall amounted in 1913 to 7.53 inches, in 1912 to 7.59 inches, in 1911 to 7.56 inches. From these figures they drew the deduction that the western plant, which they say has a good tap root, can not now be suffering more than normally, and that the crop outlook on the whole is really excellent. However, the consumer of cotton these days seems to pin greater faith to the significance of Government utterances on the condition of the crop than does the middleman. He is also slower to act. Thus, to-day or Monday the market may show strength as the result of buying for consumers' account."

STREET HAS DULL DAY; TONE HEAVY

Business Continues Listless and Causes Sagging Tendency. Shorts Cover.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—There was no improvement in speculative conditions during the early trading in the stock market to-day. Business continued of a listless character. There was a further sagging off of prices. Reading, Union Pacific and Amalgamated yielded about ½, with smaller losses in Steel, Southern Pacific and St. Paul.

About the only buying consisted of covering by shorts and when this was completed a heavier tone generally prevailed.

The London market was closed owing to a bank holiday.

The curb market was steady.

The market closed firm.

Government bonds unchanged. Other bonds steady.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "A good many wheat traders think that with corn advancing, and Southwestern receipts of wheat declining present values are low enough. Conservative commission houses are advising against short sales, except on bulges. That a bull market is on in corn is certain, but how long it will last depends upon the weather. Every day of continued drouth reduces crop possibilities. The general belief is that without rain higher prices will result. Sentiment in oats is mostly bullish, and traders are looking for them to do better unless corn breaks."

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—We prefer long side of the market on weak spots.

"Corn—It is possible that some holders liquidate rather than take chances on precipitation over Sunday, although at the moment there seems to be very slight prospect of rain.

"Oats—Heavy covering by shorts was a prominent factor yesterday, but there was considerable outside buying."

ATLANTA LIVE STOCK MARKET.

(By W. H. White, Jr., of the White Provision Company.)

Cattle receipts fair with a better assortment this week than usual. Several loads of Tennessee cattle were on the market; one car of 1,200-pound steers shipped from Wartrace. These were in a class to themselves and were sold promptly to the Atlanta packer at better than 7c, the top price of the week. These were two-year-old steers and fat, and the price was not considered too high for the quality. This only goes to show that Atlanta is like other markets; they will pay good prices for good stuff. Tennessee cows and heifers were fairly plentiful and prices ruled steady. There are not so many half fat and ragged bunches in the pens, although enough to supply the demand for this class. Prices vary according to flesh and condition.

Sheep and lambs in fair supply; market steady to a shade lower.

Hogs continue scarce; market steady and active.

Good to choice steers, 1,000 to 1,200, $5.50@6.50.

Good steers, 800 to 1,000, $5.25@6.00.

Medium to good steers, 700 to 850, $5.00@5.50.

Good to choice beef cows, 800 to 900, $4.50@5.50.

Medium to good cows, 700 to 800, $4.00@4.50.

Good to choice heifers, 750 to 850, $4.75@5.25.

Medium to good heifers, 650 to 750, $4.00@4.50.

The above represents ruling prices of good quality of beef cattle. Inferior grades and dairy types selling lower.

Medium to common steers, if fat, 800 to 900, $4.00@4.75.

Medium to common cows, if fat, 700 to 800, $3.50@4.25.

Mixed common, 600 to 800, $3.00@3.75.

Good butcher bulls, $3.25@4.00.

Prime hogs, 160 to 200, $8.80@9.00.

Good butcher hogs, 140 to 160, $8.60@8.80.

Good butcher pigs, 100 to 140, $8.25@8.50.

Light pigs, 80 to 100, $8 00@8.25.

Heavy roughs and mixed hogs, $7.50@8.00.

The above quotations apply to corn-fed hogs; mash and peanut-fattened 1c to 1½c under.

M'CULLOUGH BROS.' WEEKLY FRUIT AND PRODUCE LETTER

Although it is quiet, as is usual at this season of the year in the fruit and produce line, the prospects for a heavy fall and winter's business were never brighter.

The local gardeners are at this time supplying to a large extent vegetables and fruit to meet the present limited demand.

Virginia cabbage are moving, but in a small way as yet, with high prices applying. The market is also active on onions and Irish potatoes.

The few California oranges in the market are selling slowly, but at high prices.

The lemon market is about at a standstill at present. Values are ranging from $1.50 to $2 per box lower than applied two weeks ago.

It is yet too early for California fruit or Eastern or Western grapes. The latest reports are that these sections will be moving their crop during the next ten days or two weeks at values sufficiently low to authorize a general and liberal consumption.

Fancy cantaloupes, also peaches, are in good demand at satisfactory prices. Pineapples high, with the demand limited.

The market is and has been overstocked on live poultry, especially small and medium fries, for some days. Hens in fair demand at quotation prices. The egg market is looking up, showing a 1c to 2c per dozen advance over last week's prices.

A fair demand prevails for fancy table and cooking butter.

As usual, there is very little demand for dressed poultry at this season of the year. A fair demand prevails for sweet potatoes.

Bailed Out, All Right, But by Stomach Pump

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—There was no chance for Max Rubin, in jail, to be bailed out in the usual way. Still he wanted to get out, even if his next summer resort had to be the county hospital.

He pretended to have swallowed bichloride of mercury tablets and was baled out with a stomach pump. Indeed, he was baled out so many times that he finally admitted that he had not taken the poison at all.

CORN CONTINUES UPWARD TREND

Bad Crop News and Light Offerings Factors—Corn Expected To Be in 70's Next Week.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The advancing tendency of corn prices was unchecked at the opening to-day, there being nothing in the news coming forward to warrant lower prices for this cereal. Continued dry weather prevails over the corn belt, although temperatures are more seasonable than for several days past. Shorts were the best buyers in the pit at the opening and prices were 1⅛ to 1¼c higher than ruled at yesterday's close. Reports received here stated that farmers in many instances were feeding wheat because of the scarcity of corn.

The strength and higher prices ruling in corn carried wheat ¼ to ⅜c higher, September selling at ⅜c higher. There was a holiday at Liverpool. Reports showed weather in the Northwest clear and favorable for maturing the crop. Receipts at both Northwestern points, as well as Winnipeg, were light.

Oats gained ½ to ⅝c on poor thrashing returns, although the strength in corn also proved a help in this market.

Bearish construction was placed on the semi-monthly reports on hog products, and this, coupled with a weak hog market, caused provisions to sell lower.

Some of the best posted men in the corn trade are impressed with the idea that this grains will be in the 70s next week and that it will continue to advance until checked by rains.

The gains to-day were 1½c to 1⅜c, and there was noly a slight reaction and decline from the best prices reached. Only 90,000 bushels of corn were sold here and 46,000 bushels of oats.

Wheat was up Zc to ⅜c and ruled strong. Cash sales were 46,000 bushels.

Oats gained ⅝c to 1c.

Hog products were lower all around.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

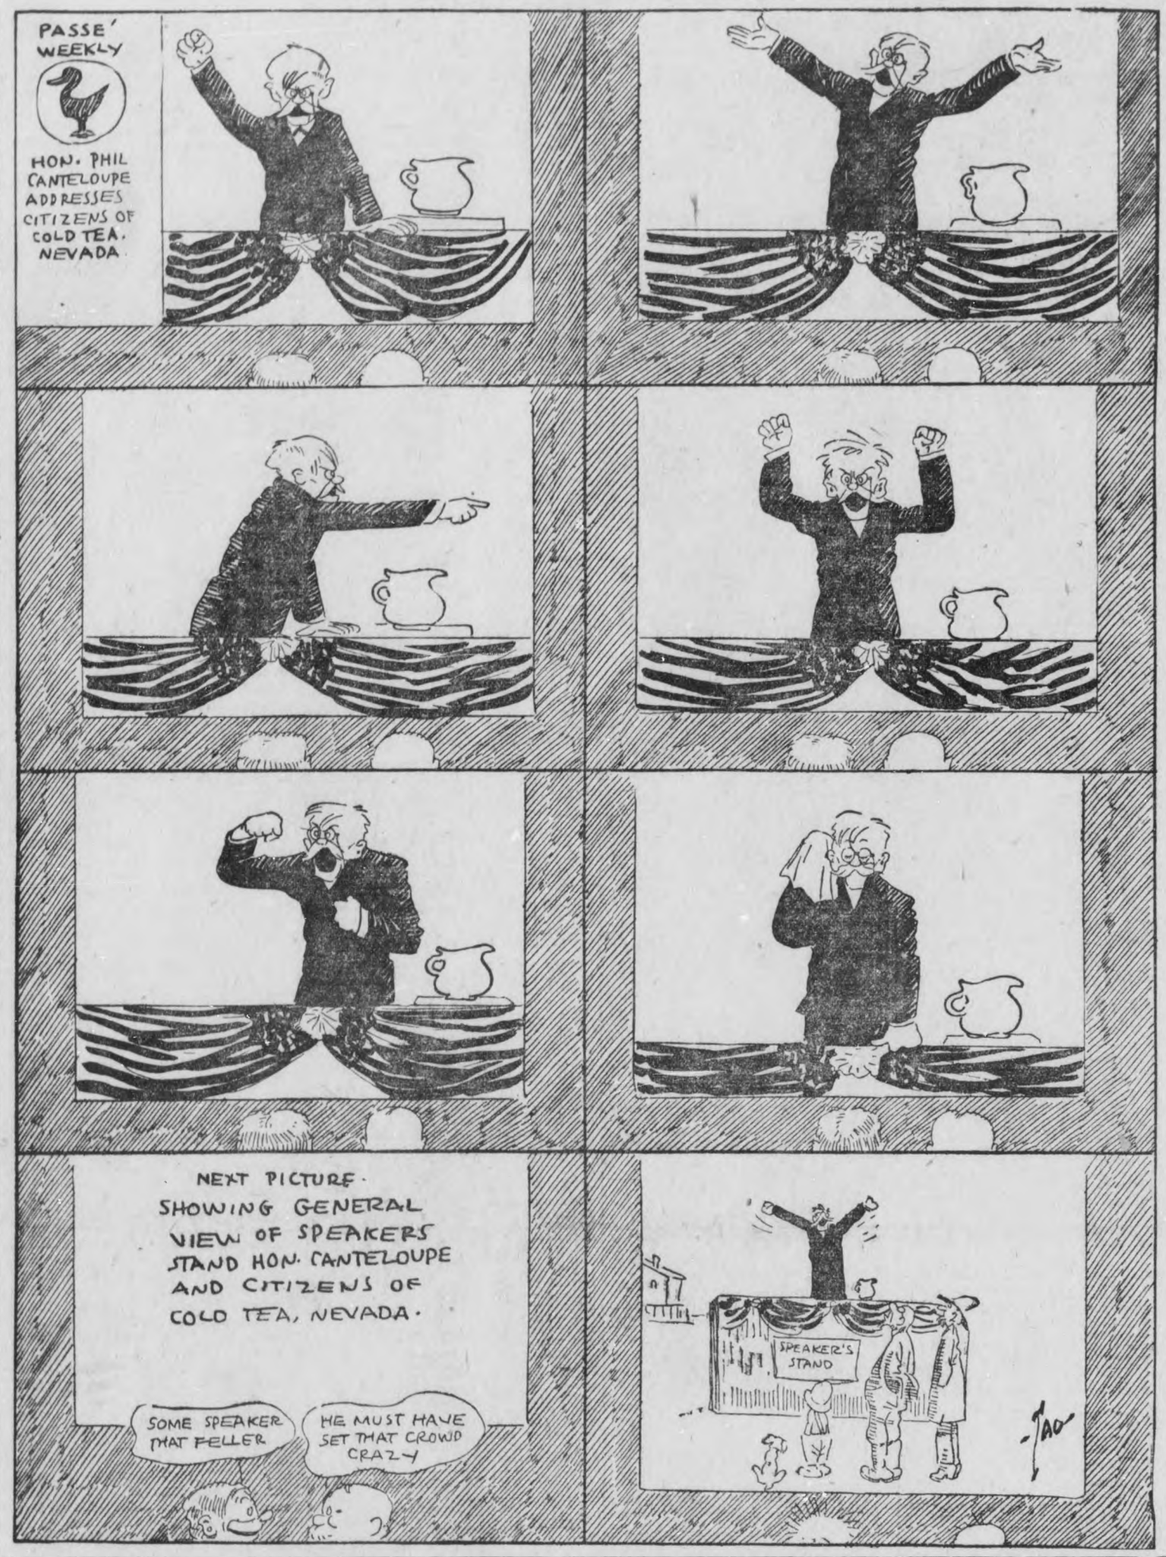

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the [illegible] consequence of the [illegible] murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of Ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and Progress.

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at the slightest sprinkling of rain! A sultry March day bring him out, like a hibernating fly buzzing round a Christmas hearth, but a touch of returning frost sends him scurrying under ground. A golden day in November plays another trick upon his instinct, and out he comes from the mud, and hobbles to the feet of a good old lady whom he has known for thirty years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all has movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaise, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn,
By the sins of their fathers scarred.

HARRIS' TESTIMONY ATTACKED

NEGRO TRIES TO KILL 7 WITH AX

Grady County Posse Searches for Black Who Attacked White Farmer's Family.

CAIRO, Aug. 2.—A negro entered the home of George Bodiford, a respectable white farmer of Grady County, living about six miles from Cairo, and with an ax brained him, his wife and five children late last night. Some of the children have revived, but the father and mother are still unconscious and the chances for their recovery are very slight.

The details of the crime are meager. The only clew as to the guilty party is from one of the little girls, who has revived sufficiently to make a statement. She says that she was awakened by the negro coming into the house. As she screamed he hit her in the head with the ax and then struck her father, mother and some of the smaller children.

Girl Gives Alarm.

One girl, about 12 years old, was struck in the head and knocked down, but as she fell she grabbed the negro around the legs and threw him. This frightened the negro and he ran, leaving his ax in the house. The girl gave the alarm and several neighbors came to the house.

The Sheriff and a posse, with three physicians, went to the scene before daylight this morning. They report it is likely that most of them will recover, with the possible exception of the man and wife. The Sheriff arrested a negro said to have been with one who did the work. He remained in the yard to watch while the other entered the house.

Ax and Shoes Identified.

The ax and a pair of shoes, left in the yard, were identified to-day by the wife of the suspected negro. She claimed that he had not been home since yesterday afternoon, when the two negroes left together. One of Bodiford's daughters says that this negro and her father had some words a few days ago about a watermelon patch. This is the only motive that can be given for the crime.

The Sheriff and a posse are in search of the negro, and they hope to apprehend him to-day. Sentiment against the negro is very strong, but no threats of lynching are being made, and if caught, there will likely be no trouble.

'Drink Buttermilk, Not Wine, in Clubs,' Judge Urges Women

Buttermilk as a social beverage for women who visit Atlanta's locker clubs is advocated by Recorder Nash Broyles.

The Recorder especially recommended buttermilk to Minnie L. Brown, a young woman giving her address at 14-A West Baker street and her occupation as a bookkeeper, when she was arraigned Friday afternoon for drunkenness. She said she became intoxicated when she visited the Theatrical Club with a man.

"You should have called for buttermilk instead of wines and liquors," said the Recorder. "If buttermilk were kept on tap in all of these locker clubs to be served to women instead of strong drink, women would be better off."

President Gomez was informed the United States would support Venezuela in this crisis.

MONEY BILL HELD PANIC REMEDY

Senator Owen Asserts Banks Will Gain, Not Lose, Under Wilson Reform Act.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—With the broad assertion that "panic will be impossible if the administration currency reform bill is passed," Senator R. L. Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, to-day replied to bankers who demand to know what advantages they will gain from the bill.

Owen asserts the bill will safeguard banks against occasional runs, give the ordinary State bank peace of mind against possible artificial panics, and that while the banker loses 2 per cent on a part of his reserve deposited with the Federal Reserve Bank, he actually will make money by other advantages.

Senator Owen points out that a reserve of 15 per cent will be sufficient instead of the 25 per cent now carried. With the same money, he asserts, a bank of $100,000 capital would make $2,750 each year more than under the present law.

In reply to the suggestion that bankers should control the Federal Reserve Board because they are "putting up all the money," he replied that the banks are not putting up money, but are merely lending credit, and that the Government is really supplying the money which is not supplied by depositors themselves.

He was taken to Grady Hospital, but recovered sufficiently on the way there to be able to walk back.

Life Sentence for Mrs. Silva Hawkins; Cantrells to Hang

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 2.—At noon to-day the jury returned a verdict of guilty with recommendation to life imprisonment against Mrs. Silva Hawkins, charged with plotting the death of her husband, Arthur Hawkins, of Bellton. Judge Jones sentenced her in keeping with this verdict. He also sentenced Bartow Cantrell and James Cantrell, jointly indicted with Mrs. Hawkins and convicted earlier in the week, to be hanged September 26. Motions for new trials have been made in all three cases.

Judge Jones complimented the jury on the verdict in Mrs. Hawkins' case and said he had never made up his mind to sign a verdict hanging a woman.

Judge Jones said this case was worse than the Mary Phagan case in Atlanta, as the conspiracy to murder was entered into weeks before the slaying. Mrs. Hawkins is of one of the best Georgia families, said Judge Jones.

EVIDENCE OF EXPERTS ON FOOD CONFLICTING

Here are the important developments of Saturday's session of the trial of Leo M. Frank:

Attorneys for the defense spring a sensation by threatening a move for a mistrial because Judge Roan has exposed a newspaper headline to the jury. A compromise is effected by the judge cautioning the jury to disregard any outside influence.

Dr. J. W. Hurt, after testifying along the line taken by Dr. H. F. Harris 'testimony of Friday, admits that no examination was made of Mary Phagan's lungs, and that whether death comes by strangulation can be determined only in this manner.

Dr. Hurt testifies under cross-examination that he would not attempt to say that Mary Phagan came to her death within a half hour after she had eaten merely because some cabbage, only partially digested, had been found in her stomach. He declares the time it would take to digest cabbage depends on the inividual.

He also testifies that in his examination of the body he discovered no indications that would lead him to say that the girl had been criminally attacked.

Jim Conley is made ready to testify Saturday afternoon, but court adjourns at 12:30 until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

A genuine sensation was sprung at the trial of Leo M. Frank Saturday morning when Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, attorneys for the defense, asked the State to consent to a new trial on the ground that Judge Roan had allowed the jury to catch a glimpse of a headline in the first headline in the first extra of The Georgian.

Judge Roan had laid the paper on the stand in front of him, and, according to the defense, the headline across the first page could be read by the men in the jury box.

The headline said: "State Adding Links to Chain."

The defense's lawyers went into immediate conference with the judge, and a few minutes later asked Solicitor Dorsey to consent to a new trial. The Solicitor refused.

Rosser Asks Explanation.

Rosser and Arnold then came into the courtroom and asked that the jury be withdrawn.

Rosser addressed the court:

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now. One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it. I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Solicitor Dorsey Objects.

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

EL PASO, TEXAS, Aug. 2.—The last of the Americans in Chihuahua City were being brought into El Paso to-day by special trains over the Mexican National road, guarded by 1,200 Federal soldiers under Colonel Mancilla. Carranza added that the Constitutionalists will not accept any proposals for peace until Huerta has been deposed.

CORONER'S PHYSICIAN DAMAGES HARRIS' EVIDENCE FOR STATE

Dr. Hurt Says That Undigested Cabbage Does Not Prove Time of Death

EXPERT FOUND NO SKULL FRACTURE; SURE GIRL WAS STRANGLED TO DEATH

tor's speech spoke in undertones, threatening a mistrial if the prosecution's request was granted.

Judge Warns Jury.

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

The examination of witness proceeded.

The defense rallied sharply Saturday in a vigorous impressive attack on the sensational testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, who declared Friday afternoon that Mary Phagan was killed within a half-hour after she ate dinner April 26, and that she came to her death by strangulation.

Hurt Hits Harris.

From one of the State's own witnesses, Dr. J. W. Hurt, County Physician, Reuben Arnold obtained the important admission that the time it takes to digest cabbage depends on the individual and that the only way to determine with certainty if strangulation is the cause of death is by an examination of the lungs. He admitted the lungs were not examined.

Attacking the testimony of Dr. Harris, who collapsed while testifying on the stand Friday, Arnold asked the witness if Dr. Harris' statement that Mary Phagan had come to her death within a half hour of the time she ate her noon meal was not the wildest sort of a guess. Harris had based his conclusions on the fact that the cabbage he had found in her stomach had undergone only the slightest digestion.

"Is it not true that cabbage is one of the hardest foods to digest and that the average time required to digest it is from 3 1-2 to 4 hours?" asked Attorney Arnold.

Dr. Hurt replied that he thought this was so.

No Proof in Cabbage.

Arnold then showed the specimen of cabbage taken from the stomach of the murdered girl, and called attention to the fact that it had not even been masticated, and that therefore it might have been in her stomach for several hours before she was killed.

Dr. Hurt accompanied this statement by the one, equally vital, that no examination was ever made of the murdered girl's lungs. From this testimony the defense will be able to argue that the State had no substantial foundation for its charge that the girl was strangled to death.

Arnold also forced Dr. Hurt reluctantly to admit that it was impossible for him to state positively either that the blow on the back of Mary Phagan's head had produced unconsciousness or that, on the other hand, it might not have been the actual cause of her death.

Jim Conley, who has sworn that he assisted in the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at the direction of Frank, was taken from his cell at the police station Saturday in readiness to testify during the afternoon. At this moment Chief Beavers was notified by a Georgian reporter that the trial had been adjourned until Monday morning and the negro was taken back into the station.

Chief Beavers was one of the witnesses of the morning. An informal objection was made by Attorney Rosser to his appearing as a witness as the Chief previously had been in the courtroom as a spectator. Solicitor Dorsey explained that he had not known that he was going to call Beavers until the afternoon before. The Chief testified only to his examination of the red spots on the floor at the pencil factory. He said that he was present when the spots were chipped up and that they looked like blood to him.

Other witnesses of the day were Helen Ferguson, a factory employee, who testified that she went to the factory Friday night for Mary Phagan's pay envelope and that it was refused her; Robert Lassiter, a policeman, who found the parasol and a ball of string twine at the bottom of the elevator shaft, and Dr. Hurt

That at least three or four witnesses will be placed on the stand by the State before Jim Conley is called was indicated Saturday afternoon. Dr. Harris, who was examined Friday, it is said, will go on the stand early Monday morning for cross-examination, and following him will be one or two witnesses, experts in adminal surgery, who will be used by the State to corroborate the testimony of Dr. Harris.

The defense, it is understood, will make a vigorous attack on the testimony of these experts.

Conley may be called Monday afternoon, although it is more than likely that the State will save him until Tuesday.

Links in State's Case.

Helen Ferguson, a companion of Mary Phagan and an employee of the factory, was the first witness to be called when court resumed Saturday morning. The greatest crowd of the week besieged the courthouse clamoring for admission.

Pay Refused.

Solicitor Dorsey examined Miss Ferguson.

Witness said she was an employee of the factory.

Q. Were you at work at the factory Friday, April 25?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you work that day or just go there?—A. I went to the office about 10 o'clock.

Q. What conversation did you have there?—A. I asked for Mary Phagan's money and was told that I could not get it. I talked to Mr. Frank.

Q. Did you ever get her pay before?—A. Yes, but not from Mr. Frank.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you know who paid off?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever get Mary Phagan's money from Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Did you work in the metal department with Mary?—A. Yes.

Says Frank Wrung Hands.

Attorney Rosser raised an objection to Wagoner on account of his having been in the courtroom for twenty minutes Wednesday. Wagoner stated that he had heard nothing, and Judge Roan allowed him to testify.

Q. Where were you Tuesday, April 29?—A. Across the street from the National Pencil Factory.

Q. What did you see?—A. I saw Frank come to the window, wringing his hands and looking down. He did it about a dozen times.

Q. Was he nervous or composed?—A. Nervous.

Q. Were you in the automobile when he was taken to the police station?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. Yes. His leg was next to mine. It shook very much.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were you doing in front of the factory?—A. Watching.

Q. Do you know whether Frank was arrested?—A. He was not.

Q. Could you see whether anyone was in the office with him?—A. No.

Dr. Hurt Called to Stand.

Dr. J. W. Hurt followed Wagoner on the stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. County physician.

Q. How long have you held this position?—A. Since January 1. Four years at another time.

Q. What are your duties?—A. To appear at all inquests.

Q. Where did you graduate?—A. I attended the old College of Physicians and Surgeons and also studied in New York.

Q. Did you see the body of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes; Sunday morning, April 27.

Q. Describe to the jury how she appeared.—A. I went to the undertaking establishment. She had a scalp wound on the left side of the head, about two inches long. The right eye was bruised. There were some broken places on the cheek and forehead, scratches on the right and left elbows and scars on right and left legs just below the knees. There was a cord around her neck. It is my opinion that she died from strangulation.

Q. Was this the cord? (Dorsey displayed a long hemp cord.)—A. Yes, so it appears.

Q. Was there any swelling in the neck?—A. Yes.

Q. What would that indicate?—A. That the cord was put around her neck before death.

Q. What was the appearance of the scalp wound?—A. It appeared to have been made by a blunt instrument from below striking upward.

Looked Like First Bruise.

Q. What about the wound around the eye area?—A. The skin was not broken. It looked like it might have been made with a soft instrument.

Q. Could a fist have done it?—A. Yes, it was quite possible.

Q. What do you think would have been the effect of these blows? Were they sufficient to have caused death?—A. No. I would think the blow on the back of the head would have caused unconsciousness.

Q. Did you find any evidence of assault?—A. I did not discover any evidence of violence. There was some blood, but I could not say whether it was from a wound or not.

Q. What was the nature of the wounds on the elbows and the leg?—A. I would say they were made after death.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How did these scratches appear? Could they have been made by the body being dragged by the heels?—A. No. If she were dragged, I should say she was dragged face forward. The scratches ran back as though she was dragged forward.

Cut Two and Half Inches Long.

Q. How long did you say the wound on the scalp was?—A. Let me refer to my notes.

Q. You said it was two and a half inches long and Dr. Harris said it was one and a half inches long. I want to know which is right.

"Two and a half inches," said Dr. Hurt, after looking at his notes.

Q. Did you measure the wound when Dr. Harris dug up the body nine days later?—A. No.

Q. You are not absolutely certain about this examination? Just sort of guessing, aren't you?—A. I am not absolutely certain, but judging from the best of my ability.

Q. All expert testimony is guessing more or less, isn't it? It is just a question as to who can guess the best, isn't it?—A. I expect you are more familiar with expert testimony than anybody else, aren't you?

Skull Not Fractured.

Q. You didn't see any damage on the side of the skull, did you?—A. No, the skull was not fractured.

Q. The brain was not injured?—A. There was some slight trace of concussion on the inside.

Q. You had to be looking for it to see it, didn't you?—A. No, it could be easily seen.

Q. Did you ever hear of a test to see whether a hemorrhage on the inside would produce unconsciousness?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a question or strain on the medical profession as to answer a question like that?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever asked before to examine the inside of a skull to determine whether a person was knocked unconscious?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of a person being killed from a blow on the head and there being no scar on the outside?—A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of persons living after a fracture having the inner and the outer table trepined and a piece taken out and then living?—A. Yes.

Results Always Uncertain.

Q. You can reduce almost every faculty of the brain without producing death? The sight, the hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what faculty of the brain was located where this blow was struck?—A. No, I don't believe I can.

Q. One thousand different effects could be produced without producing death or unconsciousness?—A. Yes.

Q. What makes you say that one little blow could have produced unconsciousness?—A. I just believe it.

Q. That little hemorrhage was not what enabled you to say that she was knocked unconscious?—A. No. The exterior appearance was on what I based my opinion, but I strengthened it by the extent of the contusion on the inside.

Q. How do you know strangulation killed her?—A. I could find no other cause.

Q. What about the windpipe and the lungs in strangulation?—A. What do you mean?

Q. How do the lungs appear?—A. Congested.

Q. You never examined the lungs?—A. No.

Q. Why do you say strangulation caused her death?—A. Because I found the rope deeply imbedded in the neck.

Not Sure About Assault.

Q. Looking at that girl that morning would you say that she was ravished?—A. I haven't said so.

Q. Will you say so?—A. I do not know.

Q. You found no external signs of violence?—A. No, but my examination was not final.

Mr. Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. There are a great many things to cause a little inflammation?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at the first post-mortem examination?—A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Harris took the body a second time, didn't he?—A. I don't know.

Q. Dr. Harris is a sort of specialist on post-mortems, isn't he?—A. I don't know.

Solicitor Dorsey made a side remark that Mr. Arnold's cross-examination of the witness was a pedantic parade.

Q. Doctor, it depends on the individual just how soon cabbage is digested, doesn't it?—A. Yes; some digest it sooner than others.

No Rule for Digesting Cabbage.

Q. Isn't each man a law unto himself?—A. Yes; more or less.

Q. Cabbage is one of the hardest things of the world to digest, isn't it?—A. Yes; it is generally regarded as hard.

Q. Doesn't it take from three to four hours to digest cabbage?—A. Yes; three or four hours to thoroughly digest it.

Q. It depends a great deal on how well it was chewed, and how much saliva flowed down, doesn't it?—A. Yes. Masticating helps digestion.

Q. Suppose a little girl in a hurry to catch a car hurriedly ate some cabbage and allowed it to go down unchewed. Wouldn't it take much longer to digest the unchewed part?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you think a doctor is making a mighty wild statement to get up here and state that a piece of unchewed cabbage had not been in a stomach—

"I object," said Dorsey. "That is a question for a jury, and not Dr. Hurt."

"I thought it was wild," said Mr. Arnold.

"I object to that," returned Dorsey.

"I withdraw it," said Mr. Arnold.

"It was entirely gratuitous and should never have been put in," said Solicitor Dorsey. The Solicitor was sustained.

Death Stops Digestion.

Q. Does death stop digestion?—A. Yes, sir; I think it does.

Q. When a person becomes unconscious, does digestion stop?—A. I rather think so.

Q. If you ate something and went to sleep, digestion would continue?—A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, does digestion stop when a person is unconscious?—A. It is an unnatural unconsciousness.

Q. Aren't the gastric juices and blood the only two things that have anything to do with digestion?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, do they die when a person becomes unconscious?—A. No, but the stomach is partially paralyzed.

Q. Didn't you say it was a wild guess to say how long she was unconscious until the time she died?—A. No, I don't think I did.

A mass of testimony followed that is unprintable. In the course of it, Dorsey said:

"I object to these comparisons."

Judge Roan—He has not asked any question that was a comparison.

Arnold—I withdraw the question.

Dorsey—I thought so.

Arnold—Then I won't withdraw it.

Rosser—Don't pay any attention to Dorsey, Rube.

Arnold—All right; I withdraw it.

The witness left the stand and was followed by Detective R. L. Waggoner.

Cabbage Not Long In Stomach.

Q. Have you ever experimented or not with the digestion of food?—A. I have.

Solicitor Dorsey showed Dr. Hurt samples of cabbage and bread which had been taken from a healthy person's stomach after remaining there one hour, and the samples taken from Mary Phagan's stomach, both of which were submitted by Dr. Harris Friday.

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death occurred?—A. Not very long.

Attorney Arnold objected. "Your honor," he said, "this is unfair. For it is obvious that this cabbage was not chewed. This witness has testified that it takes from three to four hours to digest cabbage; also he has said the cabbage said to have been digested in one hour might have gone into the stomach almost in as liquid form as it now appears. It is not a fair comparison, because the two samples of cabbage did not go into the stomach in the same form."

Jury Gets Breathing Spell.

While Solicitor Dorsey was looking up an authority the jury was allowed to retire for a breathing spell.

Dorsey: "On that proposition I have this to say: Anyone can give an opinion, provided they give the fact on which the opinion is predicated. I don't know how many teeth Mary Phagan had; I don't know whether this cabbage was cooked a long time or a short time; I don't know that this man had as many teeth as Mary Phagan; I don't know that he chewed it as much or as little as she did; I don't know that the cabbage she ate was as highly seasoned as the cabbage he ate, or whether it was seasoned at all, I insist, your honor, that the jury can draw its own conclusions of the value of this witness' testimony."

Mr. Arnold: "Your honor, the witnesses tell us it takes at least two to four hours to digest cabbage. We do not contend that either of these specimens were digested. We merely say they are in a certain state of digestion."

Judge Roan: "Put your question again, Mr. Dorsey. I want to get it straight before I rule."

Headline Upsets Trial.

At this moment Judge Roan held up a Georgian in which headlines reading "State Adding Links to Chain" were visible to the jury for a moment. Instantly Attorneys Arnold and Rosser were on their feet. Rosser spoke.

"Just a minute, your honor, we want to make a motion."

At this moment Arnold leaned over and spoke to Rosser.

"We will ask you to excuse us for a moment, judge," said Rosser, "while we confer."

Arnold and Rosser retired to a rear room, remarking aside as they went that they might make a motion for a new trial, as they were certain the jury had read the headlines in the paper.

In private conference they asked Dorsey to consent to a new trial and he refused.

After a five minutes' conference they returned to the courtroom and Attorney Rosser addressed the court and requested that the jury be withdrawn.

Says Jury Saw Paper.

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now," said Rosser. "One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it; I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Explains to Jury.

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit."

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to see some headlines or some writings in the newspapers which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

Examination Resumed.

Dorsey was permitted to put his question to Dr. Hurt:

Q. How long would you say this cabbage was in Mary Phagan's stomach before death?—A. I would say that it was a much shorter time than the other.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness is sleep?—A. Natural.

Q. Are any of the functions arrested?—A. The brain.

Q. What kind of unconsciousness does violence produce?—A. Unnatural.

Q. Are any of the processes of digestion arrested or delayed?—A. Yes.

Q. Have there not been instances of a blow on the head when the skull was fractured and death did not ensue?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on the recross-examination.

Q. You said some of the processes were delayed. What are they?—A. Motor and sensory nerves.

Processes Dormant in Sleep.

Q. Are they not dormant in sleep? A. Yes.

Q. How do they affect the blood and the breathing?—A. Not at all.

Q. Then how do they affect digestion?—A. I don't know.

Q. When a man is sleeping, are not all the elements of unconsciousness the same?—A. Yes.

Q. You were shown three bottles by Mr. Dorsey. Can you say to what extent this food was digested?—A. No, sir.

Q. This could have been taken as a gruel and it would have been in this shape, wouldn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. On the other hand, this man might have had a stomach that could digest a 10-penny nail?—A. Yes.

Q. You say that a blow on the back of the head will cause the eyes to blacken?—A. It might.

Dr. Hurt was then excused and was followed on the stand by Chief of Police Beavers.

Chief Beavers on Stand.

As Chief Beavers took his seat Mr. Rosser interposed with the question:

Q. Chief, have you been sitting in the courtroom?—A. Not this morning.

"I did not know I was going to use him until this morning," returned Dorsey. The Solicitor then questioned the witness:

Q. When were you at the National Pencil Factory?—A. Tuesday after the crime was committed.

Q. Did you see any blood spots near the ladies' dressing room on the second floor?—A. Yes, I think it was Tuesday I saw them.

Attorney Rosser objected to Beavers testifying because the Chief had heard part of the trial. His objection was overruled.

Q. How did they appear?—A. There were spots on the floor that looked like blood.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

ly Monday morning, wasn't it?—A. I was there when it was chipped up. If it was Monday, I was mistaken in saying Tuesday.

Q. Chief, you did not know it was Q. That blood was chipped up ear-

FOREMAN OF FACTORY AN IMPORTANT WITNESS

N. V. Darley, presented by the State, proved to be one of the most important witnesses in the trial of Frank.

Will 5 Ounces of Cabbage Help Convict Leo M. Frank?

Are five and a half ounces of cabbage to be the principal factor in sending a man to the gibbet?

If the prosecution is warranted in its belief in the vital and incriminating importance of the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, this is exactly the outcome to be expected in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

It remains, however, for the State to show explicitly just how the sensational statements made last Friday afternoon by the medical expert any more clearly connect Leo Frank with the terrible crime than they connect Jim Conley, the negro, who was skulking in the National Pencil Factory at the same time. The testimony of Mrs. Arthur White is relied upon to do that very thing.

State Plays High Card.

The Harris testimony was without doubt the highest card the prosecution has played since the trial of Frank started. No other evidence ever has been brought out in the three months of the murder mystery that fixed so definitely and apparently so far beyond dispute the time that the pretty factory girl met her death.

As the testimony stands, no opportunity having been given for cross-examination or refutation, it is easily the most damning that has been placed before the jury. It will remain so until the lawyers for the defense are able to attack the doctor's testimony or are given the opportunity to attach to it a significance entirely different than that advanced by the State.

Dr. Harris analyzed the contents of the murdered girl's stomach. He found there 160 cubic centimeters, or about five and two-fifths ounces, of cabbage and biscuit. This was the meal Mrs. J. W. Coleman, Mary's mother, testified that her daughter had eaten just before she left home on the day of the tragedy.

Killed at Early Hour.

The process of digestion had barely begun. Dr. Harris showed two specimens of cabbage which had been in healthy men's stomachs for an hour. They had been reduced to an emulsion. The cabbage taken from the stomach of Mary Phagan still showed the texture of the vegetable's leaves. The digestive fluids seemed to have acted scarcely at all. The presumption was, therefore, said Dr. Harris, that the little girl had met her death within half an hour after she had eaten the simple meal at her home in Bellwood and had left for the pencil factory. At the most, that was three-quarters of an hour.

Dr. Harris gave his testimony with a professional assurance, the effect of which can be counteracted only by the uttermost skill of Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold. He was positive that the girl was killed within a half or three-quarters of an hour after she had eaten.

This meant that she was attacked and murdered between 12:05, which is about the time the State believes she entered the factory, and 12:20. It was at 12:05 that Monteen Stover said she entered and found Frank absent from his office.

Describes Wounds Vividly.

The courtroom was hushed as Dr. Harris described the wounds of the girl in a manner that vividly portrayed the State's theory of how the girl met her death.

She was attacked near the lathing machine. There was a struggle. Her assailant, infuriated at her resistance or fearful of the approach of persons, struck her fiercely over the right eye. Dr. Harris described the injury. It must have been made with the fist, he said, or with some soft instrument, as there were few signs of abrasion of the skin, only a swelling and discoloration.

The blow felled the girl to the floor. She struck her head against some hard substance. Dr. Harris indicated this by testifying that the skin above the wound on the back of the head had been shoved upward slightly, a circumstance which woud hardly have obtained had the blow on the back of the head been delivered by a club or other instrument.

Further to clinch the State's indictment, charging strangulation, Dr. Harris was positive that the blow on the back of the head could not have caused death. It remained for the assailant to choke the unconscious little girl. There were indications of a criminal attempt before the girl's death. Of all this the medical expert told while Leo Frank looked on him with the same speculative expression he had given the other witnesses. The accused showed neither by the flicker of an eye lid nor the paling of a cheek that the graphic reproduction of what the State regarded as the circumstances of the gruewsome crime had affected him in the least.

If the prosecution is able to establish the accuracy of the conclusions reached by Dr. Harris as a result of his analysis and examination, it then will ask:

"If Jim Conley is the murderer of Mary Phagan and attacked her between 12:05 and 12:20, how did he happen to be dozing on a box by the side of the stairs on the first floor when Mrs. Arthur White came down stairs at about 12:50?"

As it stands, the testimony of Dr. Harris is not by any means conclusive. It is, however, far the most damaging evidence that has been submitted.

An interested public is awaiting the answer that the defense will make.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Professor Nagelschmidt performed two operations in a London hospital to-day with his wonderful diathermic treatment, in which he employs both medicine and surgery. In the former electric rays of very high temperature are passed through the diseased part. In the surgical part of the treatment the current reaches the tissues from the edge of a knife-like application which acts as a bloodless cautery.

The professor has used his treatment for the reduction of obesity, and says 40 patients were deprived of an aggregate of 500 pounds of fat.

LUTHER ROSSER EXEMPLIFYING THE GENTLE ART OF CROSS-EXAMINING

To the casual spectator who feels no personal interest in the outcome of the Frank trial, the one great feature of the courtroom is the cross-examining of the State's witnesses by Luther Z. Rosser. Rosser roars, Rosser whispers, Rosser threatens, Rosser pleads, Rosser insinuates, Rosser cajoles, Rosser jests.

At the left is shown Rosser holding his arms out as though to receive and clasp to his breast the answer about to come to a difficult question he has put.

At the right is Rosser grinning sarcastically. A witness for the State has just said that his memory was as fresh after two years as two days.

Rosser gently starting a battery of questions.

Rosser thundering, his face clouded by anger.

DR. HARRIS SHOWS FRANK HAD CHANCE TO KILL GIRL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The testimony of Dr. Roy Harris, chairman of the State Board of Health, and one of the most learned and approved physicians in Georgia, was dramatic, both in its substance and in the manner of its delivery Friday.

It was not calculated to help Leo Frank—and it did not.

The exhibition of a portion of the contents of the dead girl's stomach, for the purpose of approximating the time of her death, held breathless the packed courthouse—and the fainting of the physician during the progress of his testimony gave a final touch of melodrama to the trial that thrilled the audience as nothing else has thus far.

Dr. Harris impressed me, too, as believing in Frank's guilt—I do not know that he does believe that way, it merely happens that he seemed so to impress me.

And if he impressed that jury as he impressed me, then the things he testified may, if the remainder of the case against Frank holds together, prove eventually to be the defendant's undoing.

Shows He Had Chance.

To be sure, the State has not yet fixed the crime definitely on Frank—but it HAS definitely shown, unless its witnesses be impeached, which is highly unlikely, that Leo Frank MIGHT have murdered Mary Phagan and that he DID have the opportunity to accomplish it.

Having shown that the OPPORTUNITY was there, and that the murder likely was consummated during the time limits of that opportunity, the remaining elements of the case need but to be knitted properly together to make dark indeed the outlook for Frank.

Frank himself, Monteen Stover, Mrs. White and Dr. Harris—they together form a chain thus far apparently strong and dangerous!

That, from the standpoint of the defense, however, is the worst view to take of it.

It must be remembered that the defense as yet has introduced no witnesses. Such advantage as it so far has gained—and it has won many points—it has gained by wringing from the State's own witnesses matters of fact favorable to Frank.

When the defense comes to tell its story it may be confidently anticipated that additional weak points in the State's case may be discovered. The only question is, will they be found SUFFICIENTLY weak to cause the entire chain to fall apart?

Defense Seeks Weakest Link.

A chain is, of course, only as strong as its weakest link. Will the defense be able to locate the State's weakest link? And having located it, will it, can it be strained to the point of giving way?

That is the perplexing and grim puzzle that Rosser and Arnold are contemplating from one standpoint and to-day Dorsey and Hooper from the other.

The black, forbidding shadow of the negro, Jim Conley, has fallen heavily athwart the courtroom in the old City Hall, where Frank is battling for his liberty, his good name and the restoration of his status as an upright and honorable man among his fellows.

The State is paving the way to the climax of its case—it is leading up, and with considerable skill and adroitness, to the test of its biggest asset or its most tremendous liability, as the case may be—Jim Conley, confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder and by many suspected of being the principal to the murder.

Somehow it seemed to me that Luther Rosser grew more and more cautious in his cross-examining Friday and Saturday, and certainly Reuben Arnold appeared to weigh well his words and carefully propound his questions.

Dorsey Has Temper in Leash.

Dorsey, too, has his tempre much more thoroughly in hand—and Hooper?

Hooper is the same as ever—smiling, calm, deliberate, rarely speaking at all, save to whisper directing words into his associate's ear now and then.

When Jim Conley is on the stand, Leo Frank will be face to face with the crisis in his trial—either Conley will leave the stand Frank's final deliverance and refuge, or his eternal damnation on earth!

For this is a battle in truth to the very death—a battle in which quarter is being neither given nor asked!

It means hope, and love, and life, and liberty to Frank, or it means——!

I looked long and earnestly into the faces of those twelve "good men and true," the "gentlemen of the jury" on Friday afternoon.

To me, the Frank jury appears to be much above the average.

A composite picture of it would indicate, I suspect, intelligence, level-headedness, business knowledge and poise.

If it is the sort of jury I think it is, it is just the sort of jury that should try a case of such unusual quality as the one it now has in hand.

I am assuming that a vast majority of Georgians are hoping sincerely to see the truth of this famous case established—that it is largely an abstract proposition to the average man.

The point, however, is not so much what any one of us thinks—the point is what does that JURY think?

The impressions that evidence produce are varied and sometimes marked. One never can exactly and precisely say which way it will cut.

And right here my mind goes back involuntarily to Dr. Roy Harris, and his remarkable testimony.

Undoubtedly the defense will have to put on its thinking cap, straight and firmly set, if it hopes not only to upset that testimony and discredit it as particularly and relatively in point, but to remove the profound impression it may have made upon the jury.

It is, after all, largely upon mental impression—perhaps more often than not—that jury verdicts are predicted. The psychological receptiveness of the jury frequently controls the finding, I doubt not.

If Dr. Harris' testimony has weighed heavily against Frank in the mind of the jury, the defense will find it extremely difficult to remove that weight.

The Solicitor General may have been far more astute and incisive, too, than some have thought, when, time and again, he claimed to have been entrapped by his own witnesses—that they were not now swearing the same things that a few weeks ago they swore readily enough.

Effect May Be Decisive.

If the Solicitor has managed to get it into the minds of that jury that Frank needs protection against actually damaging circumstances, that witnesses deliberately have been drilled to protect him against sinister things, that witnesses have been tampered with in his behalf—all of which things may be inferentially set up, without many genuine reasons therefor being given—then a psychological effect will have been achieved that may prove dangerous in the extreme to the defendant.

Now, I do not mean to say the State HAS succeeded in doing that, and I hardly see wherein those impressions would be warranted altogether in the minds of the jurymen, still Dorsey and Hooper are driving at SOMETHING—and it may be they are driving at that exact psychological effect!

And you never can tell.

The way of a serpent upon a rock, of an eagle in the air, and of a man with a maid—these things have been said to be the strangest of all things. But the fourth strangest thing, and there may be so many as four superlatively strange things, is the way of a jury with a defendant at bar!

Therefore, if Hooper and Dorsey have been seeking, through the clever manipulation of their own witnesses and through the still cleverer directing of the cross-examination into desired channels, and if they have succeeded, which no man possibly may know now, the art employed has been consummately far-reaching and keen.

It will brace up the amazing story of Conley wonderfully and make his tale the easier for the jury to accept as true, and it will in inverse ratio discount the defendant's statement, moreover, if the jury can be brought to that psychological status suggested in this article, if it be the true purpose of the State to bring it there.

Situation Rests on "Ifs."

There are a good many "ifs" in this idea, to be sure—but all psychological situations are builded largely upon "ifs."

That the State is undertaking to establish a psychological effect in at least one other direction, too, is evident in the way it insists, over and over, that Frank was "nervous" or "extremely nervous" just after the crime was committed—the idea being that if he was agitated it likely was because of his guilty conscience.

The State has combated this wonderfully well, in so far as the substance of its denials are concerned—and yet into this idea obtrudes the thought that maybe here, again, the State has been cleverer than the defense has imagined, by forcing the State rather to overdo its hand in that direction!

Now, these suggestions may be more or less elusive and hard to get hold of, but they are in no way impossible. Indeed, when it is remembered that the State all along has been developing a rather weak circumstantial case against Frank always up to its star witness, Conley—at once both its hope and its despair—and that the story of that witness is grimly grotesque, in parts strenuously straining on the imagination, based, as it is in portions, upon admitted lies and misrepresentations, the great help and assistance to the State of a mentally receptive jury may be, and doubtless will be, appreciated immediately by the reader.

In any and every aspect of the case it is but the simple truth to say that both the State and the defense have been forced to the skating on dangerously thin ice more than once so far.

Wilson Takes a Day Off; Golfs a Little

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—President Wilson to-day dropped all official business. He golfed in the morning with Dr. C. G. Grayson, his physician, and planned to go to the ball game in the afternoon.

Roan Holding Scales of Justice With Steady Hand

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Emotion's entire gamut is daily run on the screen of faces watching the Frank trial.

A student of facial expression can find anything he seeks by watching the throng of spectators a half hour.

A glance at one man may show a sneer of hate as bitter as gall. His neighbor in the next seat will probably be smiling in amused content as if he were witnessing the antics of his favorite comedian.

Looking to the left he may see fear as vividly depicted on a countenance as trapped felon has ever felt. And another glance might show a spectator in studious contemplation as rapt as that of a philosopher endeavoring to fathom a new frailty in human character.

Men have been mad, and shown it, during the progress of Atlanta's most famous criminal case. And men have shown that they were glad to the point of jubilation at the very same instant.

Roan Utterly Impassive.

But throughout the tedious hours and hours of the hearing, one man sits, listening to every word. And he has yet to display the fact that his emotions are any more affected by the dramatic trial in which he is a commanding figure than those of a business man going through the daily routine of his prosaic grind.

That quality shows why the man is sitting there. If he were a man to show that his feelings were swayed as the tide of battle turned first for one side and then the other, he would not be qualified for the eminent position he holds.

Judge L. S. Roan is performing the arduous duties of presiding justice in the Frank case, because the people of Fulton County recognized that he is the man of the county's 250,000 best endowed by nature to perform this task.

His attitude throughout the hearing has shown that the people chose wisely and well.

Think of his position. It is one of supreme importance just at this time, when passion and prejudice are more likely to rule than cool reasoning.

It is his work to uphold the theory that Justice is blind, and that the courts of the land are the blindfold that darkens the vision of the goddess. He must see that the scales are evenly balanced. He must be sure that the sword is sharp.

There are scores, yes hundreds, of people in Atlanta to-day convinced absolutely of Frank's guilt in the Phagan mystery, and it would take a power of inconceivable magnitude to change their mental attitude.

There are scores and hundreds right here who believe thoroughly and honestly that Frank is innocent of any crime, and is as cruelly a persecuted person as the earth has known since the days of the martyrs. And so firm is this belief that it could not be shaken by dynamite or earthquake.

No Doubt as to Fairness.

Judge Roan's position and his oath of office call on him to see that both of these classes are firmly convinced of one fact in common, and that is that the case of Leo M. Frank is being fairly, honestly and effectively tried according to the law and evidence.

When he does this, he is removing a tremendous amount of the poison in the case. People are too prone to hint that a man's money can assure him of safety in any act he may commit. People are too likely to say that law and order becomes as nothing beneath a weight of prejudice.

Every word that Judge Roan speaks is as eagerly listened to as the voice of a diva. His every action is watched as closely as those of the President of the United States are by his secret service protectors.

Therefore, in action as well as in word, the judge must be impartial. Therefore, he can not smile as one side or the other scores a point. He can not evince extraordinary interest if it is apparent that the lawyers are about to tear to shreds the story of a witness. He must make a mental picture of everything in the long-drawn-out battle in order to give his final instructions to the jury, but he must not permit this picture to be reflected on his face.

And he has not.

His rulings have been quick. They are spoken in a low voice, just loud enough for counsel and witness to hear. In rendering a decision, he rarely straightens himself from the reclining attitude he assumes in the office chair.

Heat Hard on Judge.

He sits through the long hours, his right hand waving a huge palm leaf fan, though two electric fans are turned on the bench. He needs all three, for the courtroom is stifling hot, and Judge Roan is no longer young. Occasionally he mops a hairless spot on his high forehead with a handkerchief.

Several times during each day during the duller moments of the trial, he speaks a smiling word to some member of the bar, not connected with the case, who passes the bench or exchanges pleasantries with a court attache.

But his mind is never off the burning issue that he must play so important a part in deciding.

FRANK JUROR'S LIFE ONE GRAND, SWEET SONG--NOT

O. B. KEELER.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

Look him over next time you attend the Frank trial. Size up his little job. Weigh his responsibility. Consider his problems.

And then, if seeking employment, go out and sign a contract to make little ones out of big ones.

It's a more satisfactory way of earning $2 a day.

The juror's business is to collect evidence by the earful, sift the same, separate the true from the false, and make it into a verdict as between the Stat of Georgia and Leo Frank.

On the face of it, the plan is beautifully simple.

But the beauty is only skin deep.

You are recokning without the lawyers.

Here Entereth the Lawyer.

The simple-minded layman—and that rating includes the juror—starts out with the idea that the business of a lawyer is to extract evidence from the witness in available form for proper consideration by the juror.

It speedily develops that the full intent of counsel is to prevent the witness from unburdening himself in any way whatsoever. The more expensive the counsel, the less information the opposition will be able to wheedle out of its star performers.

The method of blocking is objective—that is, it is by means of objections. It appears that our system of jurisprudence takes cognizance of the juror as a mere babe in arms, not fit to assimilate the strong meat of evidence straight.

How the Juror Is Spared.

So he is sedulously raised on the bottle.

Mr. Dorsey (for example) has a witness by whom he is aching to show that Leo Frank was nervous the morning he was apprised of the tragedy. Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold are equally positive that the witness is not competent to judge if Mr. Frank was nervous. Also they are quite sure that the bottle-fed juror is utterly incapable of deciding if the witness is competent to decide if Mr. Frank was nervous.

They do not intend that the juror shall endanger his delicate thinking apparatus by grappling with any such abstruse problem.

So they fix it up this way.

Witness: "He insited on having some coffee."

Mr. Rosser: "I object to the use of the word 'insisted.' It manifestly is a conclusion of the witness, and as such has no place in the evidence. I ask that the word be ruled out."

Objections Fix the Fact.

And the court orders it ruled out, thereby fixing the circumstance firmly in the mind of the juror. And then Mr. Dorsey twists the query around and gets the witness to state that Frank asked for coffee twice at his house and once at the factory.

Just why that arangement suits the defense beter than the simple proposition that Frank insisted on the coffee is not entirely plain—to the layman.

But it seems that the juror is to be shielded from any breath of anything not bearing strictly on the guilt or innonce of the accused.

Specific and accurate information being thus at a premium, the juror probably is amazed when Mr. Rosser, vibrating with grief and indignation, protests against Detective Scott reading from some notes he made while working directly on the case.

The court also is shocked, but permits Mr. Scott to "refresh his memori" by means of the notes and then retail the product of such refreshment by word of mouth.

This is agreeable to Mr. Rosser and the court, but when Mr. Dorsey offers further to refresh Mr. Scott's somewhat wilted recollection, Mr. Rosser intimates at the top of a robust voice that such a thing shall be accomplished only over his (Mr. Rosser's) inanimate form.

And that promptly affords the bottle-fed juror some more evidence to ponder.

Mr. Dorsey insists it is his right to "lead" the witness.

The witness demands to know if he is suspected of holding back.

Mr. Dorsey declares he has been trapped by the witness, and Mr. Rosser appends the somewhat doubtful comment that Frank Hooper is a wise man.

Here Are More Problems.

Now, add this to the problems of the troubled juror:

Is Mr. Scott balking?

If so, has Mr. Dorsey the right to hold an ear of corn in front of him?

Has Mr. Dorsey been trapped?

And, in view of the foregoing, is or it not Mr. Hooper a wise man?

Other problems for the exercise of the Frank juror on the side, as it were, would include the following:

Should Mr. Dorsey be permitted to examine a witnes without interruption by Mr. Rosser?

Should Mr. Rosser be permitted to object?

If so, should Mr. Dorsey scowl while Mr. Rosser is objecting?

Does Mr. Rosser consider whisky a good remedy for indigestion?

Would He Hide Evidence?

Woud anybody think that Mr. Rosser would have anything to do with suppressing evidence, except in the regular and approved objective method prescribed by law?

Is Mr. Scott a trained sleuth?

And one more thing that tends to lend an acrobatic cast to the mental processes of the Frank juror.

Once in a while—not very often, jt's true—but once in a while something gets by Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold. The witness may be quick on the trigger. Or Mr. Dorsey may manage to frog up a subtle query with a joker in it.

And after the storm of objection has thundered itself out and Mr. Rosser is mopping the signs of honest toil from his brow, and Mr. Dorsey is wearing an expression similar to that of a cat that knows all about what happened to the canary—why, then the court orders the stenographer to strike out the answer.

And the obliging juror is instructed to forget it.

Yes?

Would You Forget it, Too?

Just suppose that you, being an honest and hard-working juror, trying in an honest and hard-working way to extract a morsel of real information from a jungle of cross-questions and crabbed answers and objections and oratory and recrimination—suppose that the honest and hard-working witness should beat 'em to it for once, and disgorge something really interesting.

And then suppose the judge should tell you to wipe it right off your mental slate, and not remember it, or consider it, or think about it any more forever.

You would do it, would you not?

Neither would we.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

I was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast. "Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the countryside shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fireworks.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed.

"Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stuuid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had. Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Wife so Weak and Nervous Could Not Stand Least Noise—How Cured.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes, bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or at strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and pepper and salt to taste Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam! Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's orl right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I ses is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. "If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instant. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering. Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name.

A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us: the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Friendship is to be valued for what there is in it, not for what can be gotten out of it.—Trumbull.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it runs to it, it may run itself out of breath.

The strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other.

There is no folly equal to throwing away friendship in a world where friendship is so rare.

It is a fine thing to be yourself, and a true friend loves you most when you are?

Think less of your right to demand service from friendship and more of your sacred duty to give to it.

To be a hero, trust yourself—to be a martyr, trust the world—and if you are an idealist, trust your friend.

When your friend disappoints you it hurts—but the agony is bitter when you find yourself failing your own ideal of friendship.

I love you for the tears we've wept together."

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this morning," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some one of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, 'Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without tilling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your lips are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took it, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin to-night I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. It is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my prices. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly. I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first; I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

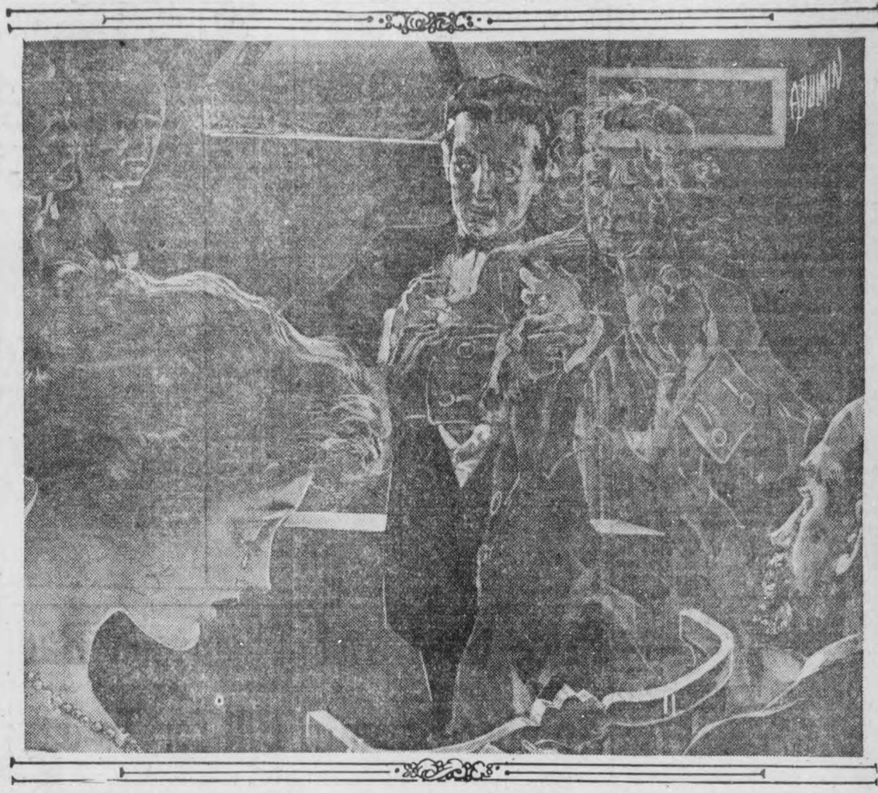

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before * * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

Confessions of a Medium

(Spirit Transference in Clairvoyancy)

An Expose of Frauds Practiced in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc., Etc.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK. SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless, as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands, until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling gait and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it," I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought, ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby,—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

RITCHIE FEARS WOLGAST BOUT, ASSERTS NOLAN

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Money talks.

So says the old sporting slogan, and by the same token there are times when money proclaims itself in clarion tones.

Ad Wolgast, who has been mooning around in a half-hearted way ever since it was brought home to him that an operation for appendicitis had robbed him of much of his fighting force, had almost despaired of getting into the limelight again, when a happy thought struck him.

He challenged Willie Ritchie for $25,000 a side, and the sporting world, hearing the chink of so much money, immediately stopped to listen.

Then, right at the psychological moment, Ritchie said the proposition looked good to him, and the sporting world's sense of hearing became more acute than ever.

Now, in this case, as in others, money's voice may dwindle to a whisper, and finally merge into complete silence. That is, so far as threats of a big side wager are concerned. Ring men from time immortal have brandished bales of currency and jingled $20 pieces only to decide after mature consideration that it was as well to let the ticket-purchasing public supply the sinews of war.

And the public, happy in the prospect of a match between fighters with pretensions to class, was quite content to have it that way.

IF Wolgast and Ritchie decide to have it out, never a single member of the grand army of fight fans will insist that the wager feature of the affair be lived up to. Of course, if the lads are stubborn about risking some of their accumulations, no one will object.

The notable thing about the situation just now is that there seems to have been a general awakening to the fact that Wolgast is entitled to a return match with Ritchie. It might be said that the feeling that little Ad should be given a chance to retrieve the laurels he lost on a technicality has existed ever since the day Ritchie became champion. But the absence of enthusiasm on the point was due to Wolgast's tactics. In many of his matches he was careless about his training, and even now, while hurling defiance at Ritchie, he is going around with his hand incased in a plaster cast.

What he needs is a couple of months far from the maddening crowd to give his splintered knuckles a chance to knit and enable the Wolgast frame to store up a little vitality. The Ritchie match will keep, and there is little fear of the public forgetting that the chance is coming to Wolgast.

BILLY NOLAN, ex-manager of Ritchie, is in town, and was asked what he thought of the Ritchie-Wolgast contest as an "attraction."

"I suppose," said Nolan, "that Tommy Murphy has the best right of them all to a match with Ritchie, but I honestly believe that a Wolgast-Ritchie bout would draw a big gate. To my way of thinking, it is the best card in sight. I have always made it a point to keep track of public sentiment in these matters, and I know that 70 per cent of the spectators who passed out through the gates the day Ritchie won the title from Wolgast on a foul felt that Wolgast should be given a chance to regain what he had lost. And that sentiment still exists."

And whisper, Nolan is skeptical about Ritchie's good faith in saying he is willing to box Wolgast again.

Now that the strings that held manager and man together are severed, Nolan is prone to call a spade a spade, and he says that Ritchie never relished the thought of one day having to stand in front of Wolgast again.

According to Nolan, the names on Ritchie's roll of eligibles were Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ad Wolgast's name was "nivver mintioned" in any of the councils of war that Nolan and Ritchie held.

RITCHIE said in Los Angeles a day or so ago that he held aloof from Wolgast, thinking Ad would prove a poor card. That is poppy-cock. Wolgast, were he to train right, is the best lightweight card in sight to-day.

He is a card for the reason that fighters who perform as well as Wolgast has done are always strong with the fight-going public until signally defeated, and nothing like that has happened to Wolgast as yet.

He is a card for the further reason that the breath of suspicion has never attached to any of his contests. He always gave the public the best he was capable of, and in the matter of square dealing, Wolgast's record is on a par with that of Battling Nelson.

McGILL GOES TO MACON.

Another Bargain Bill for To-day

By O. B. Keeler.

IN the sparsely occurring intervals when we have nothing else to do, we sit and wonder solemnly at the number and variety of the kinds of baseball that can be produced in the course of one reasonably short afternoon.

Once in a while it doesn't seem humanly possible.

But we turn to the old score book, and it is even so.

There was yesterday afternoon, now.

You might frisk the Big Show with a vacuum cleaner and not bring to light a prettier or more workmanlike combat than that first game. Four hits apiece, tight pitching, clean and brilliant fielding, and the score 3 to 1, settled up in the eighth round by a sharp attack.

And the home club on the long end. Can you beat it?

AND then, as the well-known Bard of Avon puts it, having gazed on this picture, unwind another reel and turn in the riot call.

The bald fact that Fleharty slipped it to us conveys only a small percentage of the devastation. The redeeming feature of the aftermath was the fact that it traveled only six frames.

In other words, the rain cut in at the wrong time, or else it stopped too early.

IN fact, the afternoon was consumed in a battle between the elements, two thousand earnest fans and a couple of ball clubs. At the end of the sixth inning, game No. 1, the heavens opened as usual and proceeded to save some more of the corn crop in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

The umpires held up the proceedings for the entire 30 minutes prescribed by law, and then started the cruel war again. Atlanta was leading by a score of 1 to 0 at the time, but the Volunteers, taking advantage of the only flivvers of the game, knotted the count. Joe Agler then shot off a triple that scored Chapman, and added his own run when the useful Welchonce scraped a wallop off Jack Spratt's upholstery.

GILBERT PRICE was in complete control of the situation from start to finish. The four hits of the opposition were in widely separated innings—one in the first, one in the fourth, one in the sixth and one in the eighth. Mr. More, who yielded the same number, was not so judicious in placing them. One was wasted in the fourth, but all the rest were produced in the eighth. A base on balls, a sacrifice hit, an out and a wild chuck by More spotted the Town Boys their first tally without the aid of a hit.

IN addition to his valuable triple, Joe Agler put on a bit of circus stuff in the sixth, when he made a neat steal of second while More clung to the ball, as if he was afraid somebody was going to take it away from him. Joe began to slide about the time More came to.

CIRCUS SOLLY HOFMAN continued to meet with poor luck on the towpath. In the fifth inning of the first game, he walked, after two were down, and tried for second on a short passed ball. Chapman made a quick recovery, and Bisland stuck the pill on the sliding Artie for a hair-line decision. It was fast work all 'round.

IT took two misplays, only one of which shows in the box, to help the Volunteers to their one run in the first game. In the eighth inning, Hotman singled and Lindsay sacrificed. More hit to Holland, who threw wide, and the pitcher was safe, Artie reaching third. The infield crept up on the grass, and Price did his part, making Daley hit weakly to short. Bisland stuttered with his hands, and Solly was over, but the runner was retired at first, saving Bisland a boot.

CARL THOMPSON ran into something in the second game and bounced back before a hand was out. Daley singled to left, Callahan tripled to center, and Spratt singled in the same hole, in rapid and terrifying succession. Clarke came on, and Spratt went out stealing, after which two more singles went to waste, the five solid smashes producing only two runs. Clarke got in the next round, an error, a sacrifice and three hits—one of the fluke Cincinnati variety—putting over two more runs and cinching things for the smiling Fleharty.

AFTER Manush had hied out for Clarke in the fifth, the fans got a belated treat. There was a slight delay, and then "String" Love, the human office building, was wheeled to the center of the arena.

The long chap got a great hand an responded with a burst of speed that in the thickening dusk was simply unhittable. Half dodging a shoot, Callahan scratched a Texas Leaguer into left, but the tall boy put some more swift on the pill, and Spratt's twisting short fly resulted in a sensational double play, put on by Tommy Long.

Callahan had reached second, when one of Love's fast ones got clean through Dunn, and when Tommy came sprinting in for Spratt's short pop, Cally broke for third. Tommy froze the fly on the dead run, and raced on over to second for the other out.

Then Noyes fanned, bewildered by the speed of the long fork-hander.

ANOTHER bargain matinee for this afternoon, the trouble beginning at 2:15 o'clock. Manager Smith said this morning he had a good mind to shoot Thompson right back at the Vols in one of the games. He was undecided as to Conzelman and Love for the other. Manager Schwartz announced that Williams would work in the opener, with Brackenridge in the afterpiece. "That's all I've got," said Bill, cheerfully.

Belgium Puts Ban On Jack Johnson

BRUSSELS, Aug. 2.—Jack Johnson may soon be without a country to fight in. England does not want him. He can not return to America because of the sentence for white slavery hanging over his head. France harbors him, but not enough to allow him to mix with the guests in first-class hotels. Now Belgium has put the ban on him.

Following the announcement that the champion was to give boxing exhibitions in Belgium, the Minister of Justice yesterday issued an order that all boxing contests in the future should be investigated. This move was made to prevent faking in matches.

The hue and cry against Johnson's exhibiting in Belgium became so great, however, that the Minister of Justice was forced to issue another edict. To-day he put the lid down on all boxing. No further matches, whether between blacks or whites or mixed, will be allowed to be staged in the kingdom.

GRIFFIN AND ARMSTRONG IN WESTERN TENNIS FINAL

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Clarence Griffin, California's latest tennis marvel, upheld the reputation of his State by qualifying for the Western championship finals through a victory in his hardest match of the tournament over William Blair, of Lake Geneva, Wis., 6-2, 7-5, 6-2.

To-day in the final round, upon which, through the absence of Champion Maurice McLoughlin, depends the title, Griffin will meet Joseph Armstrong, of St. Paul, who yesterday downed Harry Waldner, of Chicago, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, 6-3.

THE BASEBALL IDOL.

THE BASEBALL IDOL (CF, IDLE) is a state of mind. He was created by a lot of honest but thoughtless newspaper writers who were fond of jokes and never expected to be taken seriously. Thus we see that joking is a dangerous habit.

The Baseball Idol leads a life of busy inactivity. In the winter months he is on the stage or in the newspapers telling all and sundry how many thousands of dollars he will demand in the spring. In the spring he is hard at work demanding. In the summer he is in the hospital suffering with a comminuted fracture of the feelings or on the bench recovering from the effects of a collision with the umpire. He takes a much-needed rest in the fall.

Hailing from Marissa, Ill., or Broken Bow, Nebr., he begins at once to talk for publication about his "loyalty to our city," that being the one that has bid highest for his services. His loyalty fluctuates with his pay, and is changed with his uniform. Occasionally he adds to the sum of human joy by nodding to some otherwise intelligent man in the grandstand who at once rushes down to his office and demands a 50 per cent increase of salary on the strength of it.

On the field he can always be recognized, as he is the last member to emerge from the clubhouse and is languid and aloof. We knew one also who could be identified by the skill with which he could quarter an oval disn of mashed potatoes and empty it clean in four swift scoops of the knife.

He is the one financial fly in the golden ointment of the magnate. Whenever a club owner groans and tosses in his sleep he is thinking about some item or $10,000 on his payroll. From this we learn that in the wonderful scheme of things even a Baseball Idol has his use.

Don't miss the next article of the great series—"The Alibi."

THE RULE PROVIDING heavily padded head-gears for motorcyclists in track competition is a wise one. We have always understood that it cost a lot of money to build a good motor track.

IF JOHN BULL HAS ANY more valuable junk lying around over there, let's send somebody over after it and get the whole thing finished up.

THERE IS A LOT OF unnecessary excitement about betting in ball parks, which is bound to die a natural death. The few with so little intelligence as to bet on baseball can not acquire much money or keep it long—so there you are.

• • •

AD WOLGAST HAS DECIDED to re-enter the ring in a match with Johnny Dundee, which is about as safe an entrance as could be devised.

• • •

CHANCE'S DIFFICULTY IN making trades is occasioned by the fact that since the Chicago deal the other managers resent his wanting anything in return.

Three Naps Using Matty's Fadeaway

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—Three members of the Naps' pitching staff have mastered the fadeaway ball invented by Christy Mathewson and have been using it lately to deceive batters. Cy Falkenberg learned the delivery while with Toledo, and his employment of it is the chief factor in his successful comeback, he says.

Falkenberg showed Vean Gregg and George Kahler how to throw it, and after experimenting for a month, both added it to their regular repertoire about six weeks ago.

Gregg is believed to be the only southpaw in the big leagues that uses a fadeaway. The ball is hard to control, but the three Naps have achieved good results with it.

40 BAPTIZED AT DALTON.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—As a result of the revival meeting in progress in North Dalton, the Rev. E. B. Farrar, in charge of the meeting, baptized 40 people in a large pool near the Crown Cotton Mills, the baptizing attracting hundreds of people.

FIREMEN GOING TO TAMPA.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—Instead of spending their annual outing at St. Simons Island, as planned, the Dalton fire department will go to Tampa, Fla., and will leave here on August 7 in stead of August 9.

MARQUARD OUT TO BREAK HIS PITCHING MARK

By Damon Runyon.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—Rube Marquard, McGraw's eminent southpaw, who hung up a record for straight victories last season that will probably be a mark to shoot at for some time to come, is loose again upon a record-making expedition. The Rube has now compiled nine consecutive victories, or nearly one-half of the number he unfurled last year, and is still going strong.

It may be that Marquard will never again reach the mark he set himself last season and which such hurlers as Walter Johnson and Joe Wood have tried for and failed. But he has gone nearly half the distance without any difficulty whatever, and has a good chance to equal if not pass the nineteen straight, which now stands as the record.

Has Good Chance for Record.

The thing that stands very much in his favor just now is that the Giants are going at top speed. They are winning just as often as they were early last year when he started his large run, and what is more, they are apt to continue their pace through the balance of the seasen, as was the case last season, for they have already had their annual slump, and are now in the ascendant.

Has Changed His Style.

Marquard has changed his style of pitching since he made his big run of nineteen straight. He was under a heavy strain during that time last year, because he tried to get every man that faced him at the plate. He had not learned then to save himself for the tight place, but he now permits his teammates to do a little work whenever he has a lead, and, like Matty, only uses all of his stuff when the situation demands it. For that reason he may be able to go along and win repeatedly without in any way impairing his arm and bringing on a slump such as followed his streak last year.

Ranks of Champion Clubs Are Depleted

Queer how quickly a world's championship team will disintegrate. Already eight of the champion Athletics of 1911 have severed their connection with that club, while six of the Red Sox who helped to win the American League bunting and later down the New York Giants are no longer with Boston.

Of the 1911 array of Athletics, Livingston, Hartsel, Lord, Kraus, Danforth, Martin, Morgan and Derrick are no longer on the Philadelphia roster, while Danny Murphy, Harry Davis and Ira Thomas are but extras, with Jack Coombs prevented by illness from playing.

It is something new, however, for a world's championship manager to lose out before the following season is ended, but the going of Stahl was preceded by the release of Pitchers Pape and O'Brien and extra Infielders Ball, Krug and Bradley.

Of the Giants who lost to the Athletics in 1911, Ames, Becker, Devore, Devlin, Drucke, Latham and Paulette are now missing.

Motorcycle Races Off Until Tuesday

Rain again caused a postponement of the motorcycle races. Just when everything looked rosy for some fast going at Jack Prince's saucer yesterday afternoon, a big shower blew up and put everything "on the bum."

So the management decided to call proceedings off for the week. Next Tuesday night the same card that was to have been held last evening will be run.

In the meantime all the riders will be working on their machines in hope of establishing some new records.

ELBERTON PASTOR IS ON THREE WEEKS' VACATION

ELBERTON, Aug. 2.—The Rev. R. C. Cleckler, of the First Methodist Church, is attending camp meeting in Hart County. After the camp meeting he will attend the conference of the Sunday school and Epworth League near Waynesboro, N. C. There will be no services at the First Church for three weeks.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

SPORT.

McLoughlin smote the ball so hard
he made them all look lame,
And English critics up and wrote: "It
is a crying shame!
Such rude, uncultured tennis play
will kill the grand old game."

IT MIGHT HAPPEN THUSLY:

Old Honus Wagner came to bat and
hit one to the fence.
"O, Roughneck! Roughneck!" yelled
the fans, whose feelings were intense.
The umpire fined him fifty bones and told him beat it hence.

OR THUSLY:

Ad Wolgast poked a wallop through
the other fellow's guard.
"You lose," the referee remarked.
"You hit that man too hard,
And as a member of this club you
are forever barred."

OR IT MIGHT BE THIS:

Chick Evans drove the pellet far
across the grassy lea.
"Disqualified!" they said to him.
"And wherefore?" questioned he.
"Because," they said, "you smote the ball with too much energy."

While these English experts are about it, why not have McLoughlin indicted for cruelty to tennis balls.

McLoughlin may be guilty of trickery, as our beloved English brethren opine, but so is Walter Johnson when he heaves his smoke ball.

Lavern Chappell has been relegated to the bench as a result of a sore leg and paralysis of the batting average.

Mr. Evers' idea of the national pastime is to walk right in, bawl the umps and walk right out again.

The intrepid gent who threw the brickbat at Ty Cobb escaped to parts unknown. He probably is at home beating his wife.

EXERCISE.

"O, baseball is a healthful game," a fan remarked to me.
"It stirs the sluggish blood and makes
the heart beat merrily.
It clears the eye, it clears the brain,
it makes the body strong;
It lays aside a store of health to live
and prosper long."
"How often do you play the game?"
I calmly made reply,
And as he spoke there was a look of
pity in his eye.
"What? Me? Get out there in the sun
and sweat to death?" he said.
"Perchance you have a notion I am crazy in the head."

There are those who hold that Larry Chappell has not struck his stride and there are others who hold that he has.

Mr. Weston's hike to Minneapolis may be considerable feat (not feet), but why should any one go to all that trouble to get to Minneapolis?

After months of persistent endeavor, the Cards have achieved last place, demonstrating that perseverance always brings its reward.

Even a pugilist believes in taking an occasional vacation. For instance, Ad Wolgast has offered to bet $25,000 in the last two days.

THAT FAMILIAR RAG.

Warble not in mournful numbers:
"Sox are getting bumped again."
I can hear it in my slumbers,
So familiar is the strain.

BENTON TO LOSE SALARY AND PAY DOCTOR BILLS

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—President Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati baseball team, says that Rube Benton, who was seriously injured when his motorcycle collided with a street car, would not be allowed one penny of salary and that the club would not stand any expenses while he is at the hospital. Herrmann says that he had repeatedly requested Benton not to ride his cycle.

"The whole affair is an injustice to the club," said Mr. Herrmann. "The injury to Benton means that we will have to get a pitcher or two and good pitchers are hard to get."

RED SOX BUY PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Announcement was made to-day of the purchase by the Boston club, of the American League, of Pitcher Reiger, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association, and Infielder Carl Strom, of the Lawrence, Mass., team, of the New England League.

To Call New Club Atlanta A. A.

White Has Fought 4 Champions

By Left Hook.

ATLANTA Athletic Association. That is the name of Lou Castro's boxing club at Ponce DeLeon.

Lou is forming a regular club, and he expects to have some of Atlanta's most prosperous business men as members within the next few days.

It is going to cost a heap of money to get the skating rink at Ponce De-Leon fixed into a "regular" clubhouse, but the Count is going to spend the money.

All yesterday he had an architect going over the building. The plans will be ready within a day or two, and next Monday the carpenters will start work.

There will be seats for 6,000 fans. Boxes, containing six chairs, will encircle the ring. Back of these will be row after row of opera chairs.

The ring is to be of regulation size, 24 feet by 24. The ropes are to be extra heavy and covered with red plush. The posts will be of heavy brass and highly polished.

The "seconds" will be forced to wear white uniforms. And so will the ushers, ticket sellers and takers.

Class will stick out prominently everywhere.

AND to open his classy club, the Count has by far the classiest bout ever staged in Atlanta. In Charley White he has a real contender for the lightweight title. Whitney is a tough fellow, and the most popular that ever fought here.

Frank has boxed some tough lads here, too. Among them Clarence English, Jake Abel, Joe Thomas, Charley "Twin" Miller, Battling Nelson and Tommy O'Keefe. And since leaving here last spring he has been defeating all comers through the West. Only the other night he handed out Phil Knight a tough beating in Denver. And Denver fans had been boosting this same Knight as a coming title holder.

White has fought four champions. He has stopped Joe Thomas twice and Jake Abel once within the past two months. He fought Abe Attell to a standstill twice while the Hebrew was a real champion. He made Ad Wolgast look like a joke in a six-round no-decision mill when Ad possessed the lightweight crown. And he held Johnny Kilbane even.

Charley gave Joe Mandot a terrific eight-round scrap when Joe was looked upon as a champion two years ago. It was called a draw, although Charley did all the forcing. He gave Pal Moore a severe trouncing.

And he stopped Owen Moran, former English champion, in nine rounds. Young Shugrue, the man who defeated Leach Cross in New York last spring, twice lost the decision to White.

With a broken hand, broken in the fourth round, he gave Jack Britton the fight of his life in New Orleans a few weeks ago. The bout was stopped in the eighteenth round because the sheriff thought the going was getting too rough.

After the bout, Britton openly declared that White was the hardest puncher he ever met.

WHITNEY has never been knocked out. Can White turn the trick that hundreds of others have failed to accomplish?

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

No Class D league in the country is putting up a prettier pennant race than the Empire just at this time. Every team in the league is within striking distance of first place and each day sees the race becoming warmer.

Waycross has cut loose one of the most helpful winning streaks seen in the league in weeks. Although at the bottom Waycross has brought the league teams close together by winnings from teams higher up. The last at home series resulted in four victories, one tie and one defeat.

Thomasville has added a few new men in anticipation of the post-season pennant games with Valdosta. Thomasville has a team that is to be reckoned with, too.

Otto Jordan nearly always furnishes a lot of fun in every game he plays. Recently after he was thrown out easily at first on a slow one to the pitcher he rushed to first, sliding into the bag, jumped up and romped to second. He actually looked peeved when the umpire motioned that he was out.

• • •

Whitey Morse, who once played with the Atlanta team, and more recently of the South Atlantic League, is again signing "manager" after his name. He was released by Valdosta and signed with Brunswick, succeeding Charlie Moran, formerly of the Chattanooga team.

Doc Fenton continues his splendid work in center field for Waycross. In the first of the series at Thomasville he caught three line drives against the fence, and only a short time ago did the same thing at Waycross.

As far as is known Baby Wilder and Fillingim established a new no-hit record for organized baseball when they pitched two no-hit games at Cordele recently. Fillingim pitched a nine-inning no-hit game and was followed by Wilder, who gave up no hits for six innings.

Americus has been playing better baseball for the past few weeks than any team in the league. A casual review of the scores of games played shows that the team has put up some mighty pretty exhibitions.

• • •

Wild Bill Clark has added a one-hit game to his credit. Pitching for Waycross against Thomasville he let down the hard-hitting Thomasville bunch with but one hit, a single that was secured in the first inning.

Signed as an outfielder, Dacey, of the Americus team, has developed into one of the best pitchers in the league. His string of victories is apt to establish a new record in the Empire. A few of his games were won by mere luck, but most of them have been deserved victories.

Americus and Brunswick have two pitchers who are brothers and they are apt to oppose each other most any day now. They are the Stewarts and both seem to have the goods.

To Outfielder Medlock goes credit for the second home run hit on the Valdosta field. Bitting, now with Charleston, formerly with Waycross, got the first home run in Valdosta. Medlock played with Waycross before he was signed by Valdosta.

It is quite probable that the first games of the pennant series in the Empire will be played the last week in August. The season ends August 27, and, unless the directors decide to start the pennant series the first of September the winner of the second half will play Valdosta the first game on August 28.

GOLFER SHOULD IGNORE CROWD, EVANS ADVISES

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—The few years of my life have been very successful in a golfing way and, therefore, I have had but little time to follow other players' games. Last week, however, in the Western at Homewood, Mr. Allis put me so abruptly out of the game that I had ample time to follow the matches and form a part of the large galleries, and a golf gallery is always an interesting assemblage of people.

I have often been asked how I could play with a gallery. My questioners could not see why so many interested people did not disturb me and make me nervous. Players, however, are not much disturbed by a watching multitude, and they usually play their best games at such times. If I do happen to be playing badly, a gallery or anything else, of course, disturbs. As long as I am given room to get my club head around I am satisfied. A gallery forming a large body is much more acceptable to the player than the scattering few.

Lone Spectator Unnerving.

The one thing that bothers me is to have a single individual directly behind or in front of me. This is the commonest mistake made by the innocent spectator, for he wants to watch the ball's line of flight. This is especially bothersome to me on the putting green. I love the strange quiet when the shot is being executed, and the buzzing comments of hundreds of voices as the body of people begins to move along. Now and then one hears a woman, unacquainted with the etiquette of golf, lifting her voice in hurried speech above the breathless quiet of the crowd watching the execution of a difficult shot. This makes it hard for the player, and it is all the worse when the loud speech concerns something utterly foreign to golf.

Player Should Ignore Crowd.

The player should never notice the gallery except as a whole; singling out individuals is a mistake. The spectators of other sports are usually stationary, but the golf gallery moves around the course after the players. This frequently obliges the player to pass through the gallery to his ball, and then he is usually grasped from all sides by his friends; at such times they tell him that they have a bet on him, or make some other remark equally encouraging when he is playing badly. This is very bad for the player, and there is nothing more likely to prevent concentration of attention upon his game.

Personally, I like to talk to people in the gallery when I am playing, but the more successful players never do. At such times I like to see my friends and I hope that they like to see me.

"LET WILLARD GET A REP," WIRES BURNS TO JONES

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—Tommy Burns, manager of Arthur Pelky, and Tom Jones, who looks after the interests of Jess Willard, are booked to hook up in an interesting battle of invectives and near-blows within a day or two.

Jones wants to match Willard against Pelky, but Burns in a telegram to-day says that Willard must go get a reputation before presuming to challenge a champion.

"Gunboat Smith is the man Pelky wants to meet," said Burns. "Smith beat Willard, and then again, Charley Miller shaded the Kansas scrapper. Let him get a 'rep' for himself."

This sort of language is the sort that makes Jones glad he is alive, for he thrives on argument.

"When did Pelky whip Willard or anybody of consequence until he landed a lucky punch on Luther McCarty?" asks Jones. "Willard can whip Pelky, and Burns can name his own terms. Pelky took one beating from Willard and wants no more."

Blood is Purified Quickly in Summer

Here is a Remedy that has Wonderful Action and Promotes Health.

Mingling with your food, arousing stomach action, absorbed immediately into your blood, the famous remedy known as S. S. S. has a wonderful action. Its main purpose is to stimulate cellular activity or that peculiar process which instantly changes the worn-out cells for the new red blood corpuscles.

The medicinal value of the components of S. S. S. is relatively just as vital to healthy blood as the nutriment obtained from grain, meat, fats, sugars or any other part of our daily food is to the natural reconstructive requirements of the tissues. And there is one component of S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating the cellular tissue to a healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. Thus, in cases of skin disease such as eczema, acne, herpes, tetter or psoriasis, first purify your blood with S. S. S. so it will enable the tissues to rebuild their cellular strength and regain their normal health.

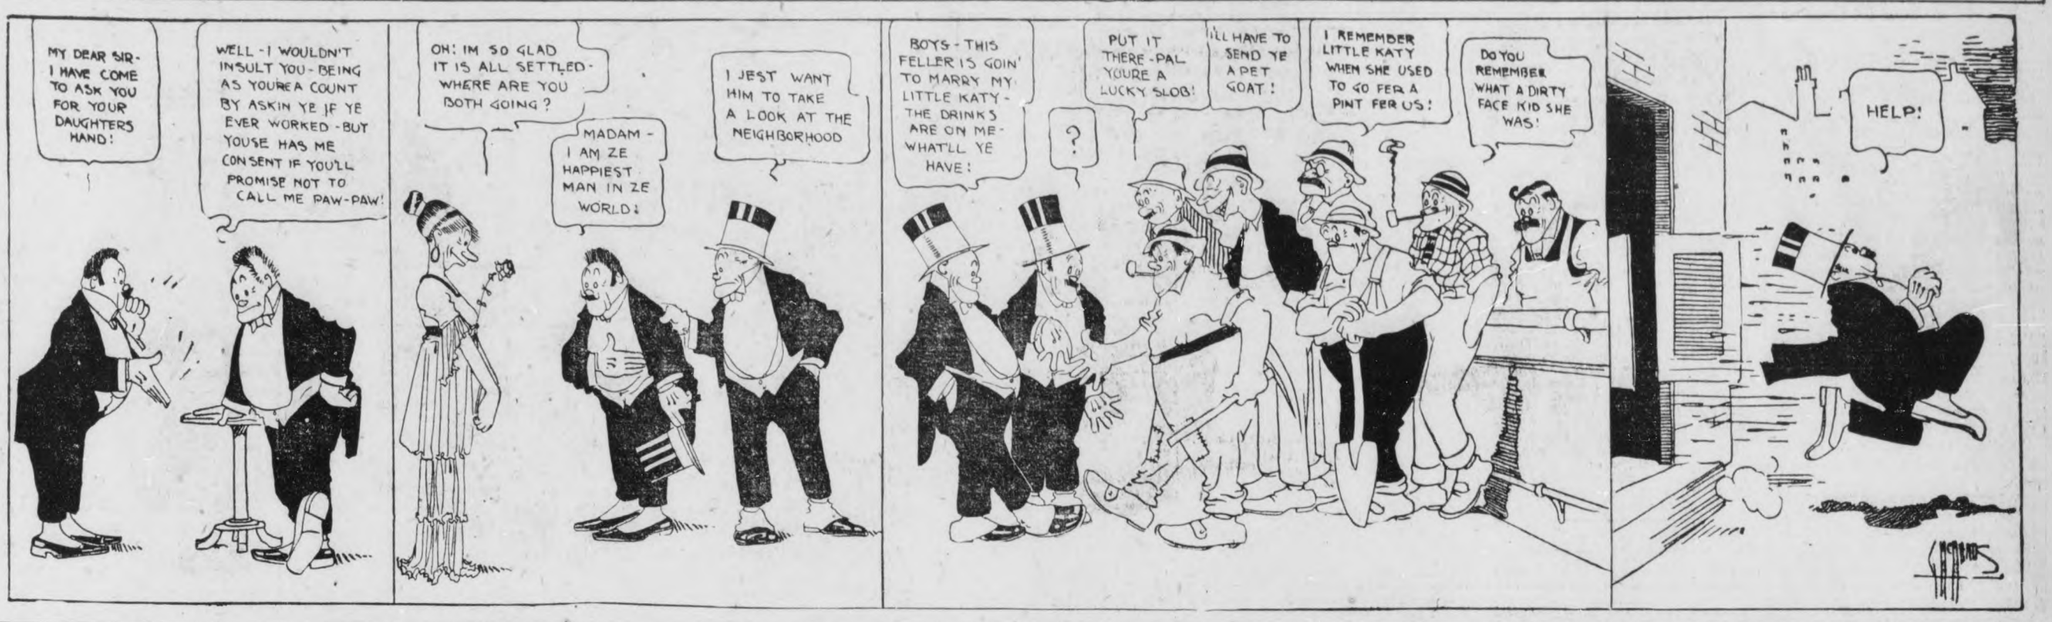

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier.

S. S. S. is purely a botanical product, and you will make a great mistake to have some enthusiast palm off a mineral preparation that may do you irreparable harm.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Company, 191 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any obstinate skin trouble, write to their Medical Department for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

Sam Langford, who recently returned to this country from Australia, spent several hours in Chicago en route from San Francisco to Boston. "I expect to stay in the East several months and will try to get a match with Porky Flynn," said Langford. "In the fall I will return to the Pacific Coast to fill several fight engagements."

Reports from New Orleans state that "Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny are in great shape for their 20-round engagement on Sunday afternoon. The bout is being advertised as for the welterweight championship. The pair clashed on July 4 in a 10-round affair, and Ferns was given the verdict after a fierce mill. Denny claims he was robbed in that go. Hence the rematch.

Young Abe Attell, the local bantamweight, wants to know why the bantamweights are dodging him. Attell says he would dearly love to meet either Kid Brooks or Tim Callahan in a bout around these parts.

Spider Britt is another local boy who is pining for a fight. Britt cares not who it may be, just as long as he weighs under 118 pounds. Spider can easily make 115.

They all come and go, but Jim Flynn seems to go on forever. Despite his many years of ring service, Flynn has signed to meet Gunboat Smith at New York on August 8, in a near title match.

In case Johnny Dundee succeeds in defeating Jack White at Los Angeles on August 12 Charlie White says he will go after a match with the Easterner. Charlie has already defeated Dundee in a 10-round affair at New York. Charlie and Jack are brothers and both fight best when weighing 126 pounds.

Are the Athletics going back? Defeated twice in succession by a second division team does not look like A-1 ball. It may be only a temporary slump, but in any event Cleveland is only seven games behind.

The Braves are trying hard to forge ahead of the Dodgers. They won again from the Cardinals and are now but two and a half games behind sixth place.

The Phillies keep following the Giants' pace. The Reds' errors and opportune hitting gave Doolin's men another victory over Cincinnati.

"Elks' Day" at Boston proved disastrous for the Red Sox. The Naps again took them into camp. Cleveland is going at top speed now and in two days has cut down the Athletics' lead two and one-half games. Certainly will be some clash next week when the leaders and runners up meet.

Two weeks ago Clark Griffith predicted that his team would beat out the Athletics and the latter would be on the toboggan. To-day the Senators are further away from the leaders and still losing.

THE SIN OF THE CINCY HIT

By Fred D. Pasley

Who Asks R. Kipling to Apologize for Him.

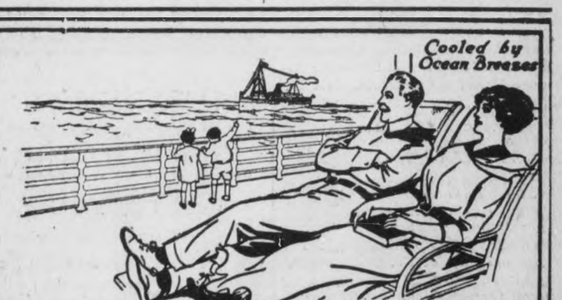

As Thompson, the sportin' writer, lolled back in his swivel chair,
A spirit sneaked up behind him and deftly grappled his hair.
Grappled his hair and carried him farther and farther away,
Till he heard as the roar of the rain-fed ford the roar of the milky way.
Till he heard the roar of the milky way die down and drone and cease,
And they came to the gate within the wall where Peter holds the keys.
"Stand up, stand up, Mr. Thompson, and answer loud and high.
"The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone."
And the naked soul of our hero grew white as a rain-washed bone.
"I've thousands of friends on earth," he cried; "I was their priest and guide.
"And my baseball chatter was famous from Oakland to Ingleside—
"Spheroid, Horsehide and Pellet, Globule, Capsule and Pill—
"I was a pen Napoleon, marshaled my words at will.
"I was the synomic wizard and rated far above par—
"Hurler, Twirler and Heaver, Curver and South-paw Star.
"I put the fest in Bootfest and the Slug in Slugfest, too,
"And I snipped the Ire off of Umpire to give the fans something new."
"Hold, hold!" then cried St. Peter, "I would question thee a bit:
"Art thou the man that discovered the Cincinnati Hit?"
"Yes," proudly answered Thompson, and the pride of the scribe was great;
"It is Baseball's Fourth Dimension—" and he started to orate.
"Aw, can thy chatter!" said Peter, as he opened a-wide the door,
"Keep on dropping downward till you reach the bottom floor.
"We take in a few reporters, and sport writers, too, sometimes,
"But you with your Cincy Hit must go where they punish such awful crimes."

FRANK DEFENSE SCORES WITH DR. HURT

Coroner's Physician, Under Cross Examination, Hits Testimony Given by Dr. Harris.

blood, did you?—A. I took it for blood.

Q. You are not an expert? You couldn't tell as well as a chemist who made an analysis, could you?—A. No, I am not an expert, but I took it for blood.

Chief Beavers then left the stand and Policeman Base Rosser was called. He did not answer and Policeman Robert Lassiter took the stand. Dorsey examined him.

Q. Were you with the policemen called to the National Pencil Factory on the night of April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find this parasol?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. At the bottom of the elevator.

Q. Anything else?—A. A ball of wrapping twine beside the parasol.

Rosser cross-examined the witness.

Q. Did you see evidences of something having been dragged along the floor of the basement?—A. Yes. Some distance from the elevator shaft.

Shook Factory Door.

Q. Didn't you testify before the Coroner's jury that you found this evidence about the foot of the ladder?—A. I don't remember that I did.

Q. You were on the beat in front of the pencil factory, were you not?—A. Yes, until 12 o'clock at night.

Q. You tried the back door of the factory about 10 o'clock?—A. Yes. I shook it but didn't try to open it.

Q. Was it open or closed?—A. It was closed.

Dorsey took the witness on redirect examination.

Q. Do you know whether the elevator comes down flat on the ground?—A. No.

Q. How did you go down into the basement?—A. By a stepladder.

Lassiter was excused.

Sergeant L. S. Dobbs, of the police force, was then called, but failed to answer.

Judge Roan then adjourned court until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

As the case stood Saturday morning, these are the strong links in the State's case:

Mary Phagan left her home at 11:45, according to her mother, after having eaten some cabbage.

The girl arrived at the factory between 12:05 and 12:10, according to Frank's own statement before the Coroner's jury.

Monteen Stover looked into Frank's office between 12:05 and 12:10 and says he was not there.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies that the condition of the cabbage taken from the girl's stomach shows conclusively that she died within about half an hour after it was eaten. This would make the time of death about 12:10—a few minutes before or after.

Claims Negro Is Eliminated.

Mrs. Arthur White testifies that when she left the factory at about 1 o'clock a negro, presumably Conley, was sitting on a box on the first floor. This, according to the State, eliminates the negro as the slayer, because, according to its expert evidence, the girl must have been killed some time before that.

The defense's attack on all this testimony and reasoning was expected to be spirited and bitter, and until it has been made it is impossible to determine how much weight testimony like Dr. Harris' purporting to fix almost to the minute the time it takes to digest cabbage will have with the jury.

DOUBLE DEALING OVER TAX BILL IS CHARGED

Wohlwender Declares Sheppard Let Amendments Die After Agreeing to Them.

Efforts to obtain a reconsideration of the Sheppard substitute to the Lipscomb tax reform bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 107 to 59 after an all-day session Friday, will be made within two weeks, and probably before the bill is sent to the Senate.

Representative McMichael of Marion County, whose amendment providing tax discoverers to work with the county boards provided by the Sheppard bill, was defeated, served notice that he will make a motion to reconsider.

An amendment by Mr. Nunnally of Floyd, which makes the State Comptroller General a sort of balance wheel between the taxpayer and the county boards, also is likely to get a new trial.

State Board Men Favor Move.

It is understood the members of the House who favor the State board idea will support Mr. McMichael in his attempt to get a reconsideration of the bill, and prospects are considered good for the success of the movement. It was the State board advocates who passed the bill Friday.

More of Mr. Sheppard's followers voted against his bill than voted for it, and without the support of the State board advocates, who acted on the basis that half a loaf was better than no bread, the bill would have been lost.

The insurrection among the Sheppard forces was led by Messrs. Wimberly of Bibb, Wohlwender of Muscogee and McMichael of Marion, and was started after Mr. Sheppard got through two amendments to his own bill, which Mr. Wimberly declared takes away all powers from the county boards.

Mr. Wohlwender voted against the Sheppard bill and charged Mr. Sheppard with double dealing. He said the situation was this:

Failed to Give Signal.

The State board advocates agreed to favor the Sheppard bill as amended by Mr. Sheppard in the hope that it could be amended by the Senate to provide adequate tax revision. The members led by Mr. Wohlwender, Mr. Nunnally and Mr. McMichael agreed to support the bill on its final passage if the amendments offered by Nannally and McMichael were adopted.

Mr. Sheppard, they claim, agreed, and when they came to a vote, he was to hold up his left hand as a signal, and the amendments were to go through. When the amendments were offered, however, Mr. Sheppard gazed steadily out of the window—and the amendments were voted down.

Then Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender led a fight against the adoption of the substitute, but lost.

On the passage of the bill by substitute Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender continued their fight, but the State board people, realizing the Sheppard bill was probably their only chance for any kind of tax revision measure in the House, rallied to its support.

Dr. Stovall, of Elbert County, who practically destroyed the original Lipscomb bill with his amendments, and who has advocated the Sheppard bill heretofore, lined up with opponents of all tax revision Friday, voting against the Sheppard bill.

OVER $1,000,000 LOSS FEARED IN TAX RETURNS

Decrease of $750,000 Shown by 35 Out of 39 Counties—Governor Keeping Tab.

With county tax returns showing a loss of approximately $750,000 in 35 out of 59 counties reported to date, the State Treasurer Saturday faced the probability of the first decrease in tax returns since 1899.

Comptroller General Wright declared that unless the larger counties—Fulton, Bibb, Chatham and Richmond—which have not been reported, show exceptionally large increases, the State Treasury would show a big decrease in tax returns when the books are closed next week.

To date 59 counties have been reported, and out of this number, 35 show decreases over last year. Of the eleven reported Friday seven showed losses and only four increases.

Just as soon as the reports are received by the Comptroller General they are prepared and submitted to the Governor, who is keeping close tab on the situation.

If the decreases continue to be reported from the counties, it is very likely that the deficit over last year's returns will be something over $1,000,000.

Woman Halts Plan To Change Street Name; Wins Delay

McDaniel street received a new lease on life Friday afternoon when the Streets Committee of the General Council heeded the protest of Miss Susie Wells, a property owner, who, single-handed, fought the resolution to change the name of the street to Oxford Terrace.

"You can't improve the morals or change the color of the people by changing the name of the street they live on," declared Miss Wells in reply to Representative Bob Blackburn, who charged that McDaniel street, in certain sections, was "disreputable."

Members of the Council committee, including those who had practically made up their minds to vote for the change, saw the point and voted to postpone action two weeks. Alderman James W. Maddox, it is understood, will aid Miss Wells in her unique fight.

BABY'S AWFUL ECZEMA CURED

Face Just a Sore. Scratched Till It Bled. Resinol Stopped Itching Almost Instantly. Soon Well.

May 20, 1913:—"My baby's face broke out with eczema. We tried many prescriptions, ointments and lotions, but the baby's face kept getting worse all the time. He would scratch it until it would bleed, and finally his face on both sides was just an awful sore. It bothered him so much that he could not sleep much at night.

"I sent for samples of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and used them according to directions. The result was something wonderful. The itching stopped almost instantly, and from the first application we could see a marked improvement. I then bought a fifty-cent jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, and by the time the jar of Ointment was used, the baby's face was almost entirely cured, so I bought another jar and used only half of it, and the cure was complete. My doctor recommends Resinol very highly and I cannot say too much for Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment."

What Does John D. Care for Expenses? Lets Rain Hit Hat

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—John D. Rockefeller scorned the umbrella which was held over him when he left Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and allowed a fine drizzle to patter down on his straw hat while waiting for friends to get into his big touring car.

The Rev. Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Louisville, Ky., who preached on "Moral Assets," told the congregation that in the Christian life they were rich indeed, but that earthly riches do not amount to much, anyway. Mr. Rockefeller enthusiastically congratulated the minister after the sermon.

OLDEST TREES

The Dragon trees in the Canary Islands are the oldest inhabitants of the earth.

Until 1868 there existed a famous specimen of these trees in Teneriffe, the largest of the Canary Islands. At the time of Humboldt's visit, it was seventy feet tall and forty-five feet in circumference, and was estimated to be over 6,000 years old.

The GUANCHES worshiped this tree. They hollowed its trunk into a small sanctuary. One night this oldest of all trees was destroyed by a slight gale.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Legislators Inspect Home of E. P. Ansley

Looking for Governor's Mansion Site. Druid Hills Property Brings $11,000 Cash—Other Notes.

That members of the State Legislature have been quietly inspecting prospective sites for the new Governor's Mansion became known Saturday. A small delegation has been out several times to look over the fine residence of Edwin P. Ansley in Ansley Park, it is said, and have sought to get a proposition from Mr. Ansley.

While Mr. Ansley's position in the matter has not been learned, close friends declare that he will sell. His lot is one of the highest in Ansley Park, with a commanding view of the surrounding country. It contains six or eight acres and about 1,000 feet of frontage on two streets. The house is two stories and built of stone quarried in the park.

The delegation is said to have looked over W. F. Winecoff's marble house in Ansley Park. This was offered to the Legislature two years ago. Mr. Winecoff wanted an appraisal board to determine the value of the place and agreed to sell at that price.

The A. G. Rhodes stone house at the foot of Peachtree circle on Peachtree also came in for casual inspection. This was likewise offered, among other houses, in 1911.

Druid Hills Cash Sale.

Mrs. Alice A. Whitman has sold to Mrs. E. H. Cantrell a 120 by 230 foot lot and brick bungalow on the south side of Fairview road, near Moreland avenue, for $11,000 cash, or at the rate of nearly $92 a front foot, including the value of the improvements. The transaction was handled through the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency.

Warranty Deed for $30,000.

John W. Alexander has conveyed to J. N. Hirsch the northwest corner of Peters street and Hills avenue for $30,000. The deal was made Friday and warranty deed was placed on record.

Application for Building.

J. B. Thompson applied Saturday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays for a permit to erect a two-story business building on the east side of Fairlie street, between Poplar and Luckie streets, to cost $7,500. Mr. Thompson already had been given a permit to erect similar stores on the north side of Poplar street, in the same block. The stores are to the north of the Postoffice Building. Mr. Thompson's lots adjoin in the back, but the corner between them is under different ownership.

Mansion Question Agitated.

The question of disposing of the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain streets is still engaging the attention of the legislators. The Committee on Public Property is practically unanimous in favor of building a handsome new mansion and selling the old one, and is expected to draft a resolution embodying features of resolutions offered by Senators Watts, Turner and Peyton.

Remodeling Decatur Depot.

The Georgia Railroad is busy making repairs on its depot at Decatur, and there are other evidences of activity in this thriving suburb of Atlanta. Mrs. H. E. Goddard, owner, and W. A. JUDGE ATTACKS DUAL MORAL STANDARD

Frees Deserted Mother of Coal Operator's Two Children After She Shot at Him.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—"Women sin emotionally, unthinkingly; men often sin calculatingly, knowing they can escape penalties," said Police Magistrate Daniel Winters in discharging a woman who shot twice at, but missed, a man she alleged was the father of her two children and who cast her aside and married another after she had lived with him eleven years.

The woman is Miss Alice Hopkins, aged 33 years, and the man is C. H. Wisser, 60, a wealthy coal operator.

"I do not advocate shooting, but the peculiar circumstances gives this woman a great deal of latitude, said the magistrate. If judges would treat man and woman exactly alike, I imagine there would be less masculine license.

Man Should Not Escape.

"It is not fair that a woman should be an outcast and a man escape blame. In the case of a man and a woman about town, except where the man started the woman on her downward course, it is different.

"But when a man, as it seems Wisser has done, lives with a woman as his wife, and that woman has been faithful to him and has borne him children whom she is rearing to the best of her ability, then that woman should get at least as much consideration as the man.

"Except for the perfunctory fact that no marriage ceremony has been performed, he and she are man and wife, and even he does not deny that she has been faithful.

Why Should She Bear Blame?

"Then why, in the name of justice, should she bear all the blame? There is something wrong about a social system that accepts such a man and ostracizes this woman.

"Some say I have established a precedent in the Wisser-Hopkins case. If I have, I mean to follow it up. I do not mean I would desire to condone faults of women and punish only those of men, but I would like to feel that I could be fair and square to both, and judge them from a standpoint not influenced by sex difference."

CASE SHOWS NEED FOR GIRLS' HOME

Wayward Child-Wife's Trouble Causes Broyles to Speak for State Institution.

Recorder Nash Broyles Saturday morning characterized Mrs. F. J. Rathnaw, 16 years old, as a striking example of the need of a State or County reform institution to which wayward girls could be committed.

The Recorder took occasion to commend the plan of the Men and Religion Forward Movement to obtain such a home through legislation.

"Cases of girls like this one are a problem, and I hardly know what to do with them," remarked the Recorder. "The State or the county certainly should provide an institution to which wayward girls can be committed by the courts. As it is now, the courts are powerless to commit a girl to a reform school without the consent of the parents."

Mrs. Rathnaw, who is separated from her husband and is living with her parents near Faith's crossing, was arraigned on complaint of neighbors. She told the Recorder she wished to reform, and, on her promises, the case was held open during her good behavior.

PRISON REFORM BILLS PASSED BY SENATE

One Provides for Probation in Minor Cases—Other Allows Indeterminate Sentence.

With the concurrence of the State Prison Board and of many Superior Court judges of Georgia, the Senate has passed two measures designed to change greatly the methods of dealing with convicts.

They do not interfere with the system of working convicts on the road. In fact, Chairman Davisson, of the Prison Board, believes the changes will increase the efficiency of the convicts in road building. But the acts change the attitude of the State toward the convict and give the latter a chance to work out his own salvation.

The first measure legalizes the right of the judge to suspend sentence and provides that an adult for whom sentence has been suspended may be freed on probation. The second measure provides indeterminate sentence.

The first act passed the Senate unanimously and the second by a vote of 27 to 3. Both have been recommended for passage by the House committees. So far as is known no opposition has developed.

The bills sound complicated because of the various safeguards and restrictions thrown around the proposed changes, but their operation is simple.

The probation bill means the trial court has a right to suspend sentence and yet exercise a supervision over the sentenced. For instance, when a man is sentenced for abandonment of family, the judge, if he deems it wise, can sentence the man to the chaingang, and then let him go free on probation on condition that he goes to work and supports his family.

By the same method a first offender can be given a second chance, and yet can be kept under the restraining eye of the court. It is an application in a limited way of the children's court probation system to adults.

The indeterminate sentence bill is equally simple. After excluding lifetermers, persons previously convicted of felony or convicted for criminal assault or attempted criminal assault, it provides a sentence for an indeterminate period instead of a fixed number of years. Then the convict's behavior determines whether he gets out at the end of the minimum time, or stays in to the maximum.

J. Ham Lewis Calls For 'Fathers' Day'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, has come to the conclusion that the "Old Man" of the family has not received proper recognition from a grateful country. He announced to-day his intention to introduce a bill setting aside July 29 as "Fathers' Day." Already there is a "Mothers' Day" and a "Children's Day."

"The Old Man," said the Senator, "pays all the bills. On cold winter mornings he gets up to light the fire. In summer he works like a horse in mowing the lawn. His lot is not a happy one. He deserves recognition."

Aviator Quells Fire 4,000 Feet in the Air

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—"I thought I was a goner," said W. C. Robinson, an aviator, as he related his feelings while he was fighting a fire that threatened to destroy his aeroplane 4,000 feet above Chicago's business district.

Crowds along Michigan Boulevard and aviators at Cicero flying field watching through glasses thought he was a "goner," too. But Robinson, alone in the flaming aeroplane, fought the fire with a hand chemical while he made a perfect descent and landed just as the planes collapsed.

WOMAN FINDS BIG SURPRISE IN A WANT AD

Expects to Pay for Hauling Away Shrubs and Gets Five Dollars for It Instead.

"No, there isn't a thing I want that a want ad would bring me," said a North Side woman to a Georgian want ad contestant as he chatted with her on her front veranda. "Unless I could get rid of that unsightly big shrub in the front yard. It cuts off my view and I'd like to pay a man to take it it up and haul it away."

"I believe you can do better than that," said the contestant, who knew something of plants. "Let me sell it for you."

And next afternoon there came a couple just completing a new home who wanted to adorn their lawn, and they gladly paid $5 for the shrub and bore the expense of moving it. And that's what a want ad will do.

The contestants now at work are running across a world of human interest stories. They find many strange "wants" and many queer situations. But they are rounding up the ads.

Contestants who are not informing their friends about the race are overlooking their best opportunity. They should tell every acquaintance, for everybody is using want ads and every ad might mean a hundred or two votes for a friend just as well as not. The Want Ad Man will show contestants how to secure the friends' aid if you'll ask him.

And if you haven't entered the contest now is the time. You still have an excellent chance to get a start.

SENSATIONAL DROP IN PRICE OF COTTON

Texas Rains Cause Constant Flood of Long Cotton—Bulls Withdraw—No Support.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Absence of Liverpool cables and general showers over the larger part of the Western belt resulted in the cotton market opening weaker to-day, first prices at a net decline of 4 to 18 points from Friday's closing quotations. Good showers were reported over the East and Central portions of Texas.

The market was long after yesterday's upturn and there was much early pressure from room sources. Business was active. New crop positions were freely offered, but very little cotton changed hands and prices suffered an additional decline of 10 to 14 points in most active positions from the opening range. Liverpool cabled that Manchester was practically idle, and that spinners and manufacturers are cautious.

Throughout the short session low levels were sustained, in response to a constant flow of long cotton.

In addition to Texas rains, many of the more conservative element contend that the Government failed to give the crop as high percentage as it deserved. They also contend that the benefit of the recent rains should have been made up in the report, but the percentage given by the Bureau did not indicate such had been added.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 19 to 20 points from the final quotations of Friday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 2.—Weather developments overnight were distinctly favorable. Indications are for precipitation in the southern half of Texas, cooler generally over the western and northern half of the belt. Partly cloudy with showers in southeastern quarter and the Carolinas

Liverpool is closed to-day and will be closed on Monday. The market declined nearly 20 points in the early trading on liquidation of long cotton taken on the drouth in Texas and the Bureau report which is released now owing to rains in Texas. New York reported McFadden heavy seller through various brokers.

The tendency was to buy on the break on the fear of bullish efforts suggested by Mr Price's circular and also on account of delay to the crop in the Eastern States and possibly complaints of too much rain. A spell of fair weather is desirable in the Central and Eastern States.

The market was steady at the decline, with new crops around 11.20. Market prospects for next week depend on the weather and increase in new crop movement in the West.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Nobody guessed the Bureau crop condition figure low enough, consequently everybody spent the last half of the session explaining somebody's error. A multitude admitted bad judgment. Many accepted the showing as bullish. A few expressed the belief the Government had erred. But the market is so restricted by the fear of adverse legislation that very little trading was generated by the Government's figure of 79.6, which is .4 below the ten-year-average. Because of the low Bureau, bulls attached much importance to the dry weather in Texas and Oklahoma since July 25, and exploited the claim that further deterioration has taken place in those States since the compilation of the Bureau's data.

"On the other hand, big crop people dug into the record and found that between April 15 and July 25 the Texas rainfall amounted in 1913 to 7.53 inches, in 1912 to 7.59 inches, in 1911 to 7.56 inches. From these figures they drew the deduction that the western plant, which they say has a good tap root, can not now be suffering more than normally, and that the crop outlook on the whole is really excellent. However, the consumer of cotton these days seems to pin greater faith to the significance of Government utterances on the condition of the crop than does the middleman. He is also slower to act. Thus, to-day or Monday the market may show strength as the result of buying for consumers' account."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "A good many wheat traders think that with corn advancing, and Southwestern receipts of wheat declining present values are low enough. Conservative commission houses are advising against short sales, except on bulges. That a bull market is on in corn is certain, but how long it will last depends upon the weather. Every day of continued drouth reduces crop possibilities. The general belief is that without rain higher prices will result. Sentiment in oats is mostly bullish, and traders are looking for them to do better unless corn breaks."

ATLANTA LIVE STOCK MARKET.

(By W. H. White, Jr., of the White Provision Company.)

Cattle receipts fair with a better assortment this week than usual. Several loads of Tennessee cattle were on the market; one car of 1,200-pound steers shipped from Wartrace. These were in a class to themselves and were sold promptly to the Atlanta packer at better than 7c, the top price of the week. These were two-year-old steers and fat, and the price was not considered too high for the quality. This only goes to show that Atlanta is like other markets; they will pay good prices for good stuff. Tennessee cows and heifers were fairly plentiful and prices ruled steady. There are not so many half fat and ragged bunches in the pens, although enough to supply the demand for this class. Prices vary according to flesh and condition.

Sheep and lambs in fair supply; market steady to a shade lower.

Hogs continue scarce; market steady and active.

Good to choice steers, 1,000 to 1,200, $5.50@6.50.

Good steers, 800 to 1,000, $5.25@6.00.

Medium to good steers, 700 to 850, $5.00@5.50.

Good to choice beef cows, 800 to 900, $4.50@5.50.

Medium to good cows, 700 to 800, $4.00 @4.50.

Good to choice heifers, 750 to 850, $4.75 @5.25.

Medium to good heifers, 650 to 750, $4.00@4.50.

The above represents ruling prices of good quality of beef cattle. Inferior grades and dairy types selling lower.

Medium to common steers, if fat, 800 to 900, $4.00@4.75.

Medium to common cows, if fat, 700 to 800, $3.50@4.25.

Mixed common, 600 to 800, $3.00@3.75.

Good butcher bulls, $3.25@4.00.

Prime hogs, 160 to 200, $8.80@9.00.

Good butcher hogs, 140 to 160, $8.60@8.80.

Good butcher pigs, 100 to 140, $8.25@8.50.

Light pigs, 80 to 100, $8 00@8.25.

Heavy roughs and mixed hogs, $7.50 @8.00.

The above quotations apply to cornfed hogs; mash and peanut-fattened 1c to 1½c under.

M'CULLOUGH BROS.' WEEKLY FRUIT AND PRODUCE LETTER

Although it is quiet, as is usual at this season of the year in the fruit and produce line, the prospects for a heavy fall and winter's business were never brighter.

The local gardeners are at this time supplying to a large extent vegetables and fruit to meet the present limited demand.

Virginia cabbage are moving, but in a small way as yet, with high prices applying. The market is also active on onions and Irish potatoes.

The few California oranges in the market are selling slowly, but at high prices.

The lemon market is about at a standstill at present. Values are ranging from $1.50 to $2 per box lower than applied two weeks ago.

It is yet too early for California fruit or Eastern or Western grapes. The latest reports are that these sections will be moving their crop during the next ten days or two weeks at values sufficiently low to authorize a general and liberal consumption.

Fancy cantaloupes, also peaches, are in good demand at satisfactory prices. Pineapples high, with the demand limited.

The market is and has been overstocked on live poultry, especially small and medium fries, for some days. Hens in fair demand at quotation prices. The egg market is looking up, showing a 1c to 2c per dozen advance over last week's prices.

A fair demand prevails for fancy table and cooking butter.

As usual, there is very little demand for dressed poultry at this season of the year. A fair demand prevails for sweet potatoes.

Bailed Out, All Right, But by Stomach Pump

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—There was no chance for Max Rubin, in jail, to be bailed out in the usual way. Still he wanted to get out, even if his next summer resort had to be the county hospital.

He pretended to have swallowed bichloride of mercury tablets and was baled out with a stomach pump. Indeed, he was baled out so many times that he finally admitted that he had not taken the poison at all.

CORN CONTINUES UPWARD TREND

Bad Crop News and Light Offerings Factors—Corn Expected To Be in 70's Next Week.

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The advancing tendency of corn prices was unchecked at the opening to-day, there being nothing in the news coming forward to warrant lower prices for this cereal. Continued dry weather prevails over the corn belt, although temperatures are more seasonable than for several days past. Shorts were the best buyers in the pit at the opening and prices were 1⅛ to 1¼c higher than ruled at yesterday's close. Reports received here stated that farmers in many instances were feeding wheat because of the scarcity of corn.

The strength and higher prices ruling in corn carried wheat ¼ to ⅜c higher, September selling at ⅜c higher. There was a holiday at Liverpool. Reports showed weather in the Northwest clear and favorable for maturing the crop. Receipts at both Northwestern points, as well as Winnipeg, were light.

Oats gained ½ to ⅝c on poor thrashing returns, although the strength in corn also proved a help in this market.

Bearish construction was placed on the semi-monthly reports on hog products, and this, coupled with a weak hog market, caused provisions to sell lower.

Some of the best posted men in the corn trade are impressed with the idea that this grains will be in the 70s next week and that it will continue to advance until checked by rains.

The gains to-day were 1⅛c to 1¾c, and there was noly a slight reaction and decline from the best prices reached. Only 90,000 bushels of corn were sold here and 46,000 bushels of oats.

Wheat was up Zc to ¾c and ruled strong. Cash sales were 46,000 bushels.

Oats gained ⅝c to 1c.

Hog products were lower all around.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

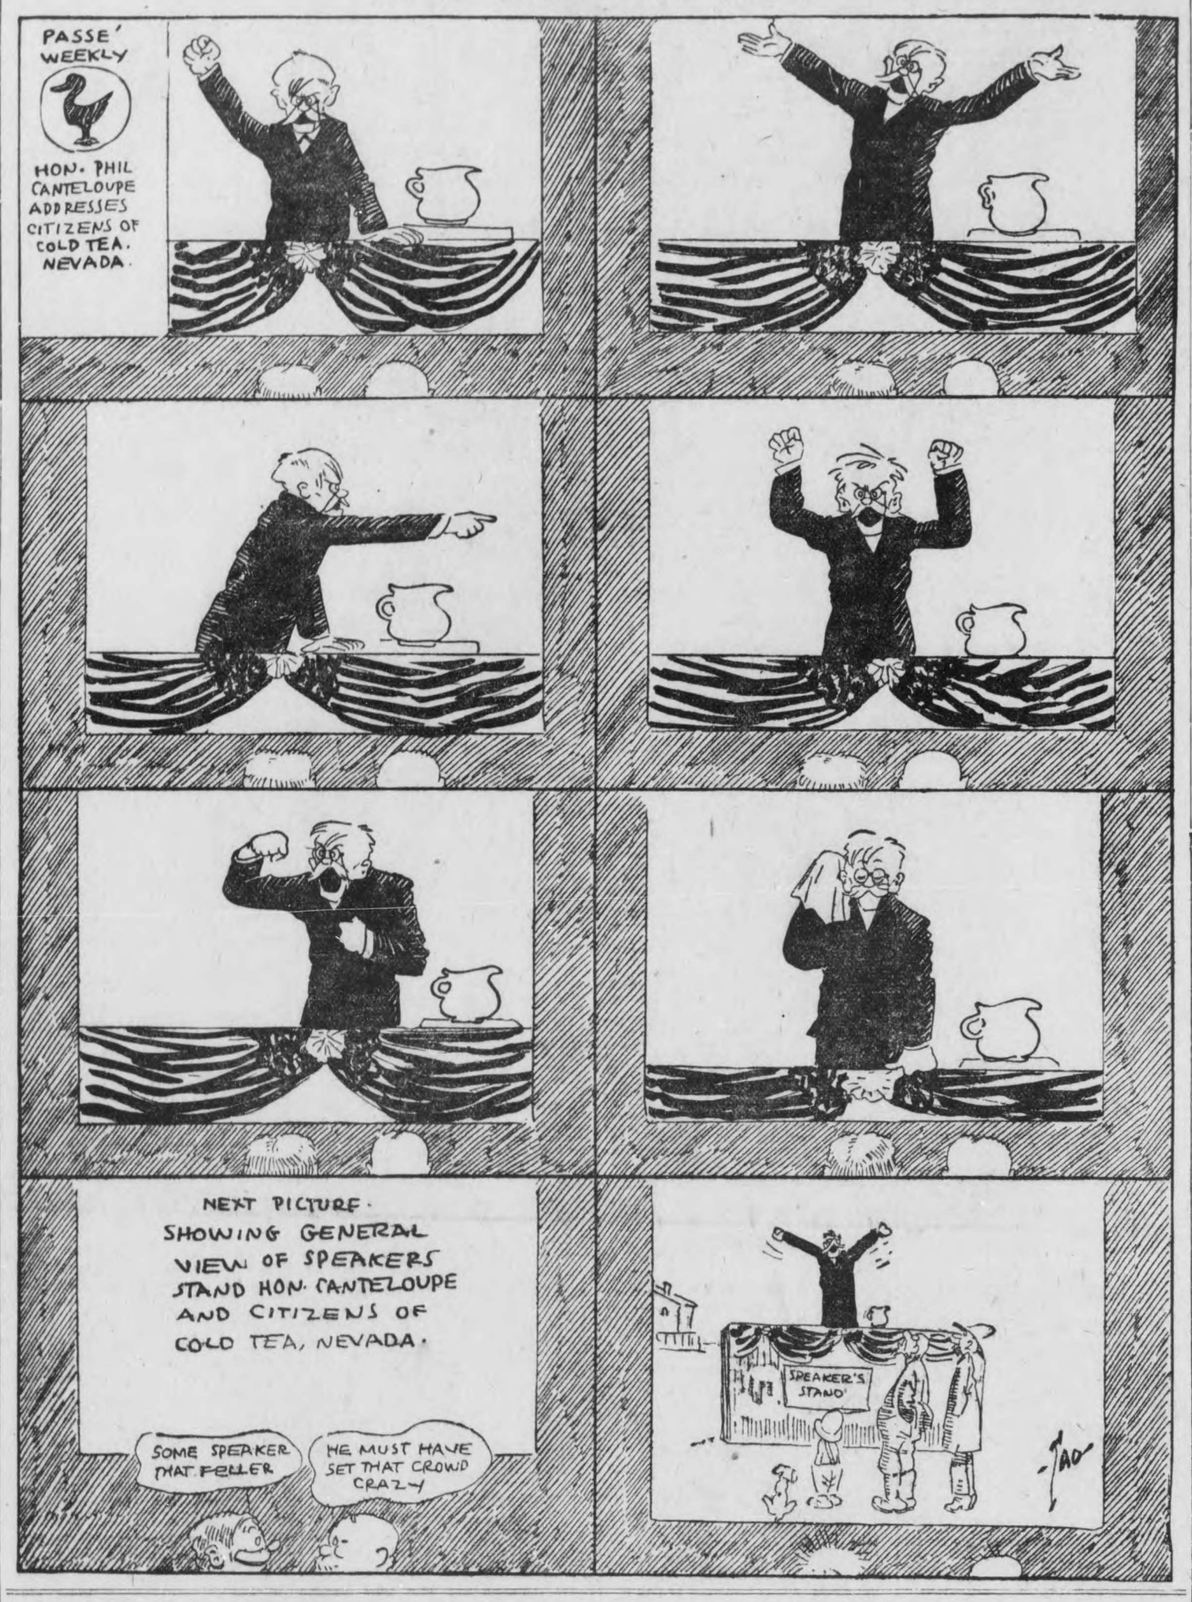

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the fact that in consequence of the judicial murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of Ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and Progress

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at the slightest sprinkling of rain! A sultry March day bring him out, like a hibernating fly buzzing round a Christmas hearth, but a touch of returning frost sends him scurrying under ground. A golden day in November plays another trick upon his instinct, and out he comes from the mud, and hobbles to the feet of a good old lady whom he has known for thirty years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all his movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaises, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

THE PRICE HE PAID

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn
By the sins of their fathers scarred.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY AN IMPORTANT WITNESS

N. V. Darley, presented by the State, proved to be one of the most important witnesses in the trial of Frank.

MONEY BILL HELD PANIC REMEDY

Senator Owen Asserts Banks Will Gain, Not Lose, Under Wilson Reform Act.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—With the broad assertion that "panic will be impossible if the administration currency reform bill is passed," Senator R. L. Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, to-day replied to bankers who demand to know what advantages they will gain from the bill.

Owen asserts the bill will safeguard banks against occasional runs, give the ordinary State bank peace of mind against possible artificial panics, and that while the banker loses 2 per cent on a part of his reserve deposited with the Federal Reserve Bank, he actually will make money by other advantages.

Senator Owen points out that a reserve of 15 per cent will be sufficient instead of the 25 per cent now carried. With the same money, he asserts, a bank of $100,000 capital would make $2,750 each year more than under the present law.

In reply to the suggestion that bankers should control the Federal Reserve Board because they are "putting up all the money," he replied that the banks are not putting up money, but are merely lending credit, and that the Government is really supplying the money which is not supplied by depositors themselves.

Eight Trains of U. S. Refugees Landed in El Paso by Rebels

EL PASO, TEXAS, Aug. 2.—The last of the Americans in Chihuahua City were being brought into El Paso to-day by special trains over the Mexican National road, guarded by 1,200 Federal soldiers under Colonel Mancilla. Eight train loads of regugees have been brought out of the Mexican city. Fifty Americans huddled in one coach arrived here last night after being three days on the way.

The refugees said they had assurances from Governor Carranza, head of the Constitutionalists, that Americans and other foreigners in all the states where his troops are fighting Federals, will be protected. Carranza added that the Constitutionalists will not accept any proposals for peace until Huerta has been deposed.

DOUBLE DEAL CHARGED IN TAX BILL

Wohlwender Declares Sheppard Let Amendments Die After Agreeing to Them.

Efforts to obtain a reconsideration of the Sheppard substitute to the Lipscomb tax reform bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 107 to 59 after an all-day session Friday, will be made within two weeks, and probably before the bill is sent to the Senate.

Representative McMichael of Marion County, whose amendment providing tax discoverers to work with the county boards provided by the Sheppard bill, was defeated, served notice that he will make a motion to reconsider.

An amendment by Mr. Nunnally of Floyd, which makes the State Comptroller General a sort of balance wheel between the taxpayer and the county boards, also is likely to get a new trial.

State Board Men Favor Move.

It is understood the members of the House who favor the State board idea will support Mr. McMichael in his attempt to get a reconsideration of the bill, and prospects are considered good for the success of the movement. It was the State board advocates who passed the bill Friday.

More of Mr. Sheppard's followers voted against his bill than voted for it, and without the support of the State board advocates, who acted on the basis that half a loaf was better than no bread, the bill would have been lost.

The insurrection among the Sheppard forces was led by Messrs. Wimberly of Bibb, Wohlwender of Muscogee and McMichael of Marion, and was started after Mr. Sheppard got through two amendments to his own bill, which Mr. Wimberly declared takes away all powers from the county boards.

Mr. Wohlwender voted against the Sheppard bill and charged Mr. Sheppard with double dealing. He said the situation was this:

Failed to Give Signal.

The State board advocates agreed to favor the Sheppard bill as amended by Mr. Sheppard in the hope that it could be amended by the Senate to provide adequate tax revision. The members led by Mr. Wohlwender, Mr. Nunnally and Mr. McMichael agreed to support the bill on its final passage if the amendments offered by Nunnally and McMichael were adopted.

Mr. Sheppard, they claim, agreed, and when they came to a vote, he was to hold up his left hand as a signal, and the amendments were to go through. When the amendments were offered, however, Mr. Sheppard gazed steadily out of the window—and the amendments were voted down.

Then Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender led a fight against the adoption of the substitute, but lost.

On the passage of the bill by substitute Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender continued their fight, but the State board people, realizing the Sheppard bill was probably their only chance for any kind of tax revision measure in the House, rallied to its support.

Dr. Stovall, of Elbert County, who practically destroyed the original Lipscomb bill with his amendments, and who has advocated the Sheppard bill heretofore, lined up with opponents of all tax revision Friday, voting against the Sheppard bill.

Woman Halts Plan To Change Street Name; Wins Delay

McDaniel street received a new lease on life Friday afternoon when the Streets Committee of the General Council heeded the protest of Miss Susie Wells, a property owner, who, single-handed, fought the resolution to change the name of the street to Oxford Terrace.

"You can't improve the morals or change the color of the people by changing the name of the street they live on," declared Miss Wells in reply to Representative Bob Blackburn, who charged that McDaniel street, in certain sections, was "disreputable."

Members of the Council committee, including those who had practically made up their minds to vote for the change, saw the point and voted to postpone action two weeks. Alderman James W. Maddox, it is understood, will aid Miss Wells in her unique fight.

DR. HURT, UNDER FIRE OF DEFENSE, HITS AT DR. HARRIS' TESTIMONY

A genuine sensation was sprung at the trial of Leo M. Frank Saturday morning when Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold, attorneys for the defense, asked the State to consent to a new trial on the ground that Judge Roan had allowed the jury to catch a glimpse of a headline in the first extra of The Georgian.

Judge Roan had laid the paper on the stand in front of him, and, according to the defense, the headline across the first page could be read by the men in the jury box.

The headline said: "State Adding Links to Chain."

The defense's lawyers went into immediate conference with the judge, and a few minutes later asked Solicitor Dorsey to consent to a new trial. The Solicitor refused.

Rosser Asks Explanation.

Rosser and Arnold then came into the courtroom and asked that the jury be withdrawn.

Rosser addressed the court:

"Your honor inadvertently displayed a newspaper when you came in just now. One side was turned up with large red letters reading: 'State Adding Links to Chain.' Every member of the jury read it. I saw them leaning forward to see it.

"We don't want to make a motion for a new trial, but we want this jury called back and such explanation made by your honor as will eliminate any harm that might have been done by the jury seeing this paper."

Solicitor Dorsey Objects.

Dorsey objected to Rosser's request of Judge Roan.

"I object to your honor making an explanation as to an isolated instance," said Dorsey. "It is only fair to the State to call that jury back and ask it if it had seen any newspaper. It is only fair to the State to tell that jury that this objection of protest was registered by the defense. The jury must have seen newspapers on the streets in going to and from the hotel that had headlines in them eminently unfair to the State's case. I will ask your honor to explain the matter fully to the jury."

Judge Roan heatedly said: "Call the jury back and I will tell it what I see fit.

Attorney Rosser during the Solicitor's speech spoke in undertones, threatening a mistrial if the prosecution's request was granted.

Judge Warns Jury.

Judge Roan said to the jury when the tribunal had been returned to the jury box:

"Gentlemen of the jury, this is an important case. You will have to be extremely cautious and extremely careful. You are to try this case from the evidence and from nothing else. It has been suggested that you have been able to se some headlines or some writings in the newspaper which may have influenced you in your judgment on this case. I desire to tell you that you are the ones trying this case, and I desire to warn you again that nothing you see in the newspapers on the streets or in the courtroom should have any influence upon you either in respect to the case of the State or that of the defense. Let the case proceed."

The xamination of witnesses proceeded.

The defense rallied sharply Saturday in a vigorous impressive attack on the sensational testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, who declared Friday afternoon that Mary Phagan was killed within a half-hour after she ate dinner April 26, and that she came to her death by strangulation.

From one of the State's own witnesses, Dr. J. W. Hurt, County Physician, Reuben Arnold obtained the important admission that the time it takes to digest cabbage depends on the individual and that the only way to determine with certainty if strangulation is the cause of death is by an examination of the lungs. He admitted the lungs were not examined.

Attacking the testimony of Dr. Harris, who collapsed while testifying on the stand Friday, Arnold asked the witness if Dr. Harris' statement that Mary Phagan had come to her death within a half hour of the time she ate her noon meal was not the wildest sort of a guess. Harris had based his conclusions on the fact that the cabbage he had found in her stomach had undergone only the slightest digestion.

"Is it not true that cabbage is one of the hardest foods to digest and that the average time required to digest it is from 3 1-2 to 4 hours?" asked Attorney Arnold.

Dr. Hurt replied that he thought this was so.

No Proof in Cabbage.

Arnold then showed the specimen of cabbage taken from the stomach of the murdered girl, and called attention to the fact that it had not even been masticated, and that therefore it might have been in her stomach for several hours before she was killed.

Dr. Hurt accompanied this statement by the one, equally vital, that no examination was ever made of the murdered girl's lungs. From this testimony the defense will be able to argue that the State had no substantial foundation for its charge that the girl was strangled to death.

Arnold also forced Dr. Hurt reluctantly to admit that it was impossible for him to state positively either that the blow on the back of Mary Phagan's head had produced unconsciousness or that, on the other hand, it might not have been the actual cause of her death.

State Adds to Chain.

The State Saturday continued to strengthen the web of circumstantial evidence in which it seeks to enmesh Frank by preparing to introduce additional testimony showing Mary Phagan arrived at the National Pencil Factory at 12:05 or before.

As the case stood Saturday morning, these are the strong links in the State's case:

Mary Phagan left her home at 11:45, according to her mother, after having eaten some cabbage.

The girl arrived at the factory between 12:05 and 12:10, according to Frank's own statement before the Coroner's jury.

Monteen Stover looked into Frank's office between 12:05 and 12:10 and says he was not there.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies that the condition of the cabbage taken from the girl's stomach shows conclusively that she died within about half an hour after it was eaten. This would make the time of death about 12:10—a few minutes before or after.

Claims Negro Is Eliminated.

Mrs. Arthur White testifies that when she left the factory at about 1 o'clock a negro, presumably Conley, was sitting on a box on the first floor. This, according to the State, eliminates the negro as the slayer, because, according to its expert evidence, the girl must have been killed some time before that.

The defense's attack on all this testimony and reasoning was expected to be spirited and bitter, and until it has been made it is impossible to determine how much weight testimony like Dr. Harris' purporting to fix almost to the minute the time it takes to digest cabbage will have with the jury.

Helen Ferguson, a companion of Mary Phagan and an employee of the

'Drink Buttermilk, Not Wine, in Clubs,' Judge Urges Women

Buttermilk as a social beverage for women who visit Atlanta's locker clubs is advocated by Recorder Nash Broyles.

The Recorder especially recommended buttermilk to Minnie L. Brown, a young woman giving her address at 14-A West Baker street and her occupation as a bookkeeper, when she was arraigned Friday afternoon for drunkenness. She said she became intoxicated when she visited the Theatrical Club with a man.

"You should have called for buttermilk instead of wines and liquors," said the Recorder. "If buttermilk were kept on tap in all of these locker clubs to be served to women instead of strong drink, women would be better off."

CORONER'S PHYSICIAN DAMAGES HARRIS' EVIDENCE FOR STATE

Dr. Hurt Says That Undigested Cabbage Does Not Prove Time of Death

EXPERT FOUND NO SKULL FRACTURE; SURE GIRL WAS STRANGLED TO DEATH

factory, was the first witness to be called when court resumed Saturday morning. The greatest crowd of the week besieged the courthouse clamoring for admission.

Pay Refused.

Solicitor Dorsey examined Miss Ferguson.

Witness said she was an employee of the factory.

Q. Were you at work at the factory Friday, April 25?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you work that day or just go there?—A. I went to the office about 10 o'clock.

Q. What conversation did you have there?—A. I asked for Mary Phagan's money and was told that I could not get it. I talked to Mr. Frank.

Q. Did you ever get her pay before?—A. Yes, but not from Mr. Frank.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you know who paid off?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever get Mary Phagan's money from Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Did you work in the metal department with Mary?—A. Yes.

Says Frank Wrung Hands.

Attorney Rosser raised an objection to Wagoner on account of his having been in the courtroom for twenty minutes Wednesday. Wagoner stated that he had heard nothing, and Judge Roan allowed him to testify.

Q. Where were you Tuesday, April 29?—A. Across the street from the National Pencil Factory.

Q. What did you see?—A. I saw Frank come to the window, wringing his hands and looking down. He did it about a dozen times.

Q. Was he nervous or composed?—A. Nervous.

Q. Were you in the automobile when he was taken to the police station?—A. Yes.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. Yes. His leg was next to mine. It shook very much.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were you doing in front of the factory?—A. Watching.

Q. Do you know whether Frank was arrested?—A. He was not.

Q. Could you see whether anyone was in the office with him?—A. No.

Dr. Hurt Called to Stand.

Dr. J. W. Hurt followed Wagoner on the stand.

Q. What is your business?—A. County physician.

Q. How long have you held this position?—A. Since January 1. Four years at another time.

Q. What are your duties?—A. To appear at all inquests.

Q. Where did you graduate?—A. I attended the old College of Physicians and Surgeons and also studied in New York.

Q. Did you see the body of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes; Sunday morning, April 27.

Q. Describe to the jury how she appeared.—A. I went to the undertaking establishment. She had a scalp wound on the left side of the head, about two inches long. The right eye was bruised. There were some broken places on the cheek and forehead, scratches on the right and left elbows and scars on right and left legs just below the knees. There was a cord around her neck. It is my opinion that she died from strangulation.

Q. Was this the cord? (Dorsey displayed a long hemp cord.)—A. Yes, so it appears.

Q. Was there any swelling in the neck?—A. Yes.

Q. What would that indicate?—A. That the cord was put around her neck before death.

Q. What was the appearance of the scalp wound?—A. It appeared to have been made by a blunt instrument from below striking upward.

Looked Like First Bruise.

Q. What about the wound around the eye area?—A. The skin was not broken. It looked like it might have been made with a soft instrument.

Q. Could a fist have done it?—A. Yes, it was quite possible.

Q. What do you think would have been the effect of these blows? Were they sufficient to have caused death?—A. No. I would think the blow on the back of the head would have caused unconsciousness.

Q. Did you find any evidence of assault?—A. I did not discover any evidence of violence. There was some blood, but I could not say whether it was from a wound or not.

Q. What was the nature of the wounds on the elbows and the leg?—A. I would say they were made after death.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How did these scratches appear? Could they have been made by the body being dragged by the feet?—A. No. If she were dragged, I should say she was dragged face forward. The scratches ran back as though she was dragged forward.

Cut Two and Half Inches Long.

Q. How long did you say the wound on the scalp was?—A. Let me refer to my notes.

Q. You said it was two and a half inches long and Dr. Harris said it was one and a half inches long. I want to know which is right.

"Two and a half inches," said Dr. Hurt, after looking at his notes.

Q. Did you measure the wound when Dr. Harris dug up the body nine days later?—A. No.

Q. You are not absolutely certain about this examination? Just sort of guessing, aren't you?—A. I am not absolutely certain, but judging from the best of my ability.

Q. All expert testimony is guessing more or less, isn't it? It is just a question as to who can guess the best, isn't it?—A. I expect you are more familiar with expert testimony than anybody else, aren't you?

Skull Not Fractured.

Q. You didn't see any damage on the side of the skull, did you?—A. No, the skull was not fractured.

Q. The brain was not injured?—A. There was some slight trace of concussion on the inside.

Q. You had to be looking for it to see it, didn't you?—A. No, it could be easily seen.

Q. Did you ever hear of a test to see whether a hemorrhage on the inside would produce unconsciousness?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of such a question or strain on the medical profession as to answer a question like that?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever asked before to examine the inside of a skull to determine whether a person was knocked unconscious?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of a person being killed from a blow on the head and there being no scar on the outside?—A. No.

Q. Have you ever heard of persons living after a fracture having the inner and the outer table trepined and a piece taken out and then living?—A. Yes.

Results Always Uncertain.

Q. You can reduce almost every faculty of the brain without producing death? The sight, the hearing?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what faculty of the brain was located where this blow was struck?—A. No, I don't believe I can.

Q. One thousand different effects could be produced without producing death or unconsciousness?—A. Yes.

Q. What makes you say that one little blow could have produced unconsciousness?—A. I just believe it.

Q. That little hemorrhage was not what enabled you to say that she was knocked unconscious?—A. No. The exterior appearance was on what I based my opinion, but I strengthened it by the extent of the contusion on the inside.

Q. How do you know strangulation killed her?—A. I could find no other cause.

Q. What about the windpipe and the lungs in strangulation?—A. What do you mean?

Q. How do the lungs appear?—A. Congested.

Q. You never examined the lungs?—A. No.

Q. Why do you say strangulation caused her death?—A. Because I found the rope deeply imbedded in the neck.

Not Sure About Assault.

Q. Looking at that girl that morning would you say that she was ravished?—A. I haven't said so.

Q. Will you say so?—A. I do not know.

Q. You found no external signs of violence?—A. No, but my examination was not final.

Mr. Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. There are a great many things to cause a little inflammation?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you present at the first post-mortem examination?—A. Yes.

Q. Dr. Harris took the body a second time, didn't he?—A. I don't know.

Q. Dr. Harris is a sort of specialist on post-mortems, isn't he?—A. I don't know.

Solicitor Dorsey made a side remark that Mr. Arnold's cross-examination of the witness was a pedantic parade.

Q. Doctor, it depends on the individual just how soon cabbage is digested, doesn't it?—A. Yes; some digest it sooner than others.

No Rule for Digesting Cabbage.

Q. Isn't each man a law unto himself?—A. Yes; more or less.

Q. Cabbage is one of the hardest things of the world to digest, isn't it?—A. Yes; it is generally regarded as hard.

Q. Doesn't it take from three to four hours to digest cabbage?—A. Yes; three or four hours to thoroughly digest it.

Q. It depends a great deal on how well it was chewed, and how much saliva flowed down, doesn't it?—A. Yes. Masticating helps digestion.

Q. Suppose a little girl in a hurry to catch a car hurriedly ate some cabbage and allowed it to go down unchewed. Wouldn't it take much longer to digest the unchewed part?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you think a doctor is making a mighty wild statement to get up here and state that a piece of unchewed cabbage had not been in a stomach—

"I object," said Dorsey. "That is a question for a jury, and not Dr. Hurt."

"I thought it was wild," said Mr. Arnold.

"I object to that," returned Dorsey.

"I withdraw it," said Mr. Arnold.

"It was entirely gratuitous and should never have been put in," said Solicitor Dorsey. The Solicitor was sustained.

Death Stops Digestion.

Q. Does death stop digestion?—A. Yes, sir; I think it does.

Q. When a person becomes unconscious, does digestion stop?—A. I rather think so.

Q. If you ate something and went to sleep, digestion would continue?—A. Yes.

Q. Why, then, does digestion stop when a person is unconscious?—A. It is an unnatural unconsciousness.

Q. Aren't the gastric juices and blood the only two things that have anything to do with digestion?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, do they die when a person becomes unconscious?—A. No, but the stomach is partially paralyzed.

Q. Didn't you say it was a wild guess to say how long she was unconscious until the time she died?—A. No, I don't think I did.

A mass of testimony followed that is unprintable. In the course of it, Dorsey said:

"I object to these comparisons."

Judge Roan—He has not asked any question that was a comparison.

Arnold—I withdraw the question.

Dorsey—I thought so.

Arnold—Then I won't withdraw it.

Rosser—Don't pay any attention to Dorsey, Rube.

Arnold—All right; I withdraw it.

The witness left the stand and was followed by Detective R. L. Waggoner.

The testimony of Dr. Harris came as a startling climax to Friday's session of the Frank trial. The State had been getting along only indifferently well up to this point.

Darley Proves Disappointment.

N. V. Darley, associated with Frank in the supervision of the factory's administration, had given promise of being one of the State's star witnesses, but he later had proved a disappointment from the prosecution's viewpoint and under the cross-examination of Reuben Arnold had developed about as good a witness for the defense as the State has called so far.

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees who was working on the fourth floor of the factory the day of the crime, possibly added a weak link in the chain of circumstantial evidence that the State is welding about Frank, but the most that she could say was that Frank was startled when she entered his office at 12:30—just after the girl had been murdered, according to the State's theory—and that Frank did not put on his hat and coat to leave as he said he was going to do when he came to the fourth floor at 12:30 to tell the three persons there to go or be locked in.

One piece of her testimony which is expected to play an important part in the later development of the State's theory was that she saw a negro lounging by the steps as she left a few minutes before 1 o'clock.

Four Others Called.

The other witnesses of the day were Call Officer W. F. Anderson, Stenographer L. F. Parry, Albert McKnight, husband of the servant girl in the home where Frank and his parents lived, and G. C. Febuary, private secretary to Chief of Detectives Lanford.

Anderson told of his efforts to get Frank on the telephone the morning of the tragedy. Under cross-examination, he was led to repudiate in part some of the testimony he had given at the Coroner's inquest. Before the Coroner he had said that the negro Newt Lee could not have seen the body of Mary Phagan from the point where he declared he stood when he made his grewsome discovery.

Attorney Rosser called his previous testimony to his attention, but the policeman asserted that he was mistaken when he made his first statement and that it now was his opinion that Lee could have seen the body all right.

Parry was called to identify the testimony of Leo Frank before the Coroner's jury and later by the defense was asked to identify that of Lee and other witnesses and declare if it was a correct statement of what they had said at the preliminary inquiry.

Gets in Frank's Story.

Solicitor Dorsey called Febuary to get in evidence the first statement that Frank made to the police after he was taken to headquarters. In this statement Frank said that the Phagan girl came to the factory for her money between 12:05 and 12:10, possibly 12:07.

McKnight's most important testimony was that he had been in the Frank home at 1:30 the afternoon of April 26, and had seen Frank come home and rush away without getting anything to eat. He said that looking into a mirror from his vantage point in the kitchen he had obtained a good view of Frank as he entered the house.

He declared that all Frank did was to go to the sideboard and a moment later leave the house. Frank at the Coroner's inquest said that when he went home at noon he ate luncheon with his father-in-law and lay down for a few minutes on the lounge. McKnight said he had a good view of the table and that Frank did not sit down.

Darley, after admitting to Solicitor Dorsey that Frank was nervous, pale and trembling the day after the tragedy, added under cross-examination that this condition was nothing unusual for the young factory superintendent. He said that frequently when Frank was excited he ran his hands through his hair and that he had seen Frank a thousand times rub his hands nervously.

He also declared that on two occasions in particular he had witnessed Frank in the same condition he was in Sunday at the factory. One was when Frank saw a street car run down a child, and another when he had an altercation with one of the factory officials.

Darley testified it was nothing unusual for scratch pads like the one found in the basement near Mary Phagan's body to be discovered in any part of the factory. He said the same of the pay envelopes like the one found by Mary Phagan's machine. He asserted that the envelopes were scattered on every floor of the factory every pay day. A ripple of merriment was caused when Attorney Arnold, referring to R. P. Barrett and his discoveries of pay envelope, blood spots and strands of hair, designated him as "Christopher Columbus Barrett."

After a sharp fight between the attorneys, Attorneys Arnold and Rosser succeeded in getting before the jury that other persons as well as Leo Frank were excited and nervous after the tragedy. Judge Roan was inclined at first to sustain the prosecution's objections, but later decided that testimony of this sort might be admitted in order that the defense might show that these signs of nervousness need not be taken as indications of guilt.

Calls Wife Out and Stabs Her in Heart

Ed J. Thomas, a negro about 25 years of age, called his wife, Emma Thomas, out into the street from their home at 495 Auburn avenue Friday night and stabbed her in the heart to death.

He fled and no trace of him has yet been found by the police.

Thomas went home Friday night and found his wife playing cards. He told her he wanted to speak to her on the outside. A moment after she went out a scream was heard. They found her lying in the street dead.

Will 5 Ounces of Cabbage Help Convict Leo M. Frank?

Are five and a half ounces of cabbage to be the principal factor in sending a man to the gibbet?

If the prosecution is warranted in its belief in the vital and incriminating importance of the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, this is exactly the outcome to be expected in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

It remains, however, for the State to show explicitly just how the sensational statements made last Friday afternoon by the medical expert any more clearly connect Leo Frank with the terrible crime than they connect Jim Conley, the negro, who was skulking in the National Pencil Factory at the same time. The testimony of Mrs. Arthur White is relied upon to do that very thing.

State Plays High Card.

The Harris testimony was without doubt the highest card the prosecution has played since the trial of Frank started. No other evidence ever has been brought out in the three months of the murder mystery that fixed so definitely and apparently so far beyond dispute the time that the pretty factory girl met her death.

As the testimony stands, no opportunity having been given for cross-examination or refutation, it is easily the most damning that has been placed before the jury. It will remain so until the lawyers for the defense are able to attack the doctor's testimony or are given the opportunity to attach to it a significance entirely different than that advanced by the State.

Dr. Harris analyzed the contents of the murdered girl's stomach. He found there 160 cubic centimeters, or about five and two-fifths ounces, of cabbage and biscuit. This was the meal Mrs. J. W. Coleman, Mary's mother, testified that her daughter had eaten just before she left home on the day of the tragedy.

Killed at Early Hour.

The process of digestion had barely begun. Dr. Harris showed two specimens of cabbage which had been in healthy men's stomachs for an hour. They had been reduced to an emulsion. The cabbage taken from the stomach of Mary Phagan still showed the texture of the vegetable's leaves. The digestive fluids seemed to have acted scarcely at all. The presumption was, therefore, said Dr. Harris, that the little girl had met her death within half an hour after she had eaten the simple meal at her home in Bellwood and had left for the pencil factory. At the most, that was three-quarters of an hour.

Dr. Harris gave his testimony with a professional assurance, the effect of which can be counteracted only by the uttermost skill of Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold. He was positive that the girl was killed within a half or three-quarters of an hour after she had eaten.

This meant that she was attacked and murdered between 12:05, which is about the time the State believes she entered the factory, and 12:20. It was at 12:05 that Monteen Stover said she entered and found Frank absent from his office.

Describes Wounds Vividly.

The courtroom was hushed as Dr. Harris described the wounds of the girl in a manner that vividly portrayed the State's theory of how the girl met her death.

She was attacked near the lathing machine. There was a struggle. Her assailant, infuriated at her resistance or fearful of the approach of persons, struck her fiercely over the right eye. Dr. Harris described the injury. It must have been made with the fist, he said, or with some soft instrument, as there were few signs of abrasion of the skin, only a swelling and discoloration.

The blow felled the girl to the floor. She struck her head against some hard substance. Dr. Harris indicated this by testifying that the skin above the wound on the back of the head had been shoved upward slightly, a circumstance which would hardly have obtained had the blow on the back of the head been delivered by a club or other instrument.

Strangulation Indicated.

Further to clinch the State's indictment, charging strangulation, Dr. Harris was positive that the blow on the back of the head could not have caused death. It remained for the assailant to choke the unconscious little girl. There were indications of a criminal attempt before the girl's death. Of all this the medical expert told while Leo Frank looked on him with the same speculative expression he had given the other witnesses. The accused showed neither by the flicker of an eye lid nor the paling of a cheek that the graphic reproduction of what the State regarded as the circumstances of the gruewsome crime had affected him in the least.

If the prosecution is able to establish the accuracy of the conclusions reached by Dr. Harris as a result of his analysis and examination, it then will ask:

"If Jim Conley is the murderer of Mary Phagan and attacked her between 12:05 and 12:20, how did he happen to be dozing on a box by the side of the stairs on the first floor when Mrs. Arthur White came down stairs at about 12:50?"

As it stands, the testimony of Dr. Harris is not by any means conclusive. It is, however, far the most damaging evidence that has been submitted.

An interested public is awaiting the answer that the defense will make.

BABY'S AWFUL ECZEMA CURED

Face Just a Sore. Scratched Till it Bled. Resinol Stopped Itching Almost Instantly. Soon Well.

May 20, 1913:—"My baby's face broke out with eczema. We tried many prescriptions, ointments and lotions, but the baby's face kept getting worse all the time. He would scratch it until it would bleed, and finally his face on both sides was just an awful sore. It bothered him so much that he could not sleep much at night.

"I sent for samples of Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment and used them according to directions. The result was something wonderful. The itching stopped almost instantly, and from the first application we could see a marked improvement. I then bought a fifty-cent jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, and by the time the jar of Ointment was used, the baby's face was almost entirely cured, so I bought another jar and used only half of it, and the cure was complete. My doctor recommends Resinol very highly and I cannot say too much for Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment."

LUTHER ROSSER EXEMPLIFYING THE GENTLE ART OF CROSS-EXAMINING

To the casual spectator who feels no personal interest in the outcome of the Frank trial, the one great feature of the courtroom is the cross-examining of the State's witnesses by Luther Z. Rosser. Rosser roars. Rosser whispers. Rosser threatens. Rosser pleads. Rosser insinuates. Rosser cajoles. Rosser jests.

At the left is shown Rosser holding his arms out as though to receive and clasp to his breast the answer about to come to a difficult question he has put.

At the right is Rosser grinning sarcastically. A witness for the State has just said that his memory was as fresh after two years as two days.

Rosser gently starting a battery of questions.

Rosser thundering, his face clouded by anger.

STATE HOPES DR. HARRIS FIXED FACT THAT FRANK HAD CHANCE TO KILL GIRL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The testimony of Dr. Roy Harris, chairman of the State Board of Health, and one of the most learned and approved physicians in Georgia, was dramatic, both in its substance and in the manner of its delivery Friday.

It was not calculated to help Leo Frank—and it did not.

The exhibition of a portion of the contents of the dead girl's stomach, for the purpose of approximating the time of her death, held breathless the packed courthouse—and the fainting of the physician during the progress of his testimony gave a final touch of melodrama to the trial that thrilled the audience as nothing else has thus far.

Dr. Harris impressed me, too, as believing in Frank's guilt—I do not know that he does believe that way, it merely happens that he seemed so to impress me.

And if he impressed that jury as he impressed me, then the things he testified may, if the remainder of the case against Frank holds together, prove eventually to be the defendant's undoing.

Shows He Had Chance.

To be sure, the State has not yet fixed the crime definitely on Frank—but it HAS definitely shown, unless its witnesses be impeached, which is highly unlikely, that Leo Frank MIGHT have murdered Mary Phagan and that he DID have the opportunity to accomplish it.

Having shown that the OPPORTUNITY was there, and that the murder likely was consummated during the time limits of that opportunity, the remaining elements of the case need but to be knitted properly together to make dark indeed the outlook for Frank.

Frank himself, Monteen Stover, Mrs. White and Dr. Harris--they together form a chain thus far apparently strong and dangerous!

That, from the standpoint of the defense, however, is the worst view to take of it.

It must be remembered that the defense as yet has introduced no witnesses. Such advantage as it so far has gained—and it has won many points—it has gained by wringing from the State's own witnesses matters of fact favorable to Frank.

When the defense comes to tell its story it may be confidently anticipated that additional weak points in the State's case may be discovered. The only question is, will they be found SUFFICIENTLY weak to cause the entire chain to fall apart?

Defense Seeks Weakest Link.

A chain is, of course, only as strong as its weakest link. Will the defense be able to locate the State's weakest link? And having located it, will it, can it be strained to the point of giving way?

That is the perplexing and grim puzzle that Rosser and Arnold are contemplating from one standpoint and to-day Dorsey and Hooper from the other.

The black, forbidding shadow of the negro, Jim Conley, has fallen heavily athwart the courtroom in the old City Hall, where Frank is battling for his liberty, his good name and the restoration of his status as an upright and honorable man among his fellows.

The State is paving the way to the climax of its case—it is leading up, and with considerable skill and adroitness, to the test of its biggest asset or its most tremendous liability, as the case may be—Jim Conley, confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder and by many suspected of being the principal to the murder.

Somehow it seemed to me that Luther Rosser grew more and more cautious in his cross-examining Friday and Saturday, and certainly Reuben Arnold appeared to weigh well his words and carefully propound his questions.

Dorsey Has Temper in Leash.

Dorsey, too, has his tempre much more thoroughly in hand—and Hooper?

Hooper is the same as ever—smiling, calm, deliberate, rarely speaking at all, save to whisper directing words into his associate's ear now and then.

When Jim Conley is on the stand, Leo Frank will be face to face with the crisis in his trial—either Conley will leave the stand Frank's final deliverance and refuge, or his eternal damnation on earth!

For this is a battle in truth to the very death—a battle in which quarter is being neither given nor asked!

It means hope, and love, and life, and liberty to Frank, or it means——!

I looked long and earnestly into the faces of those twelve "good men and true," the "gentlemen of the jury" on Friday afternoon.

To me, the Frank jury appears to be much above the average.

A composite picture of it would indicate, I suspect, intelligence, level-headedness, business knowledge and poise.

If it is the sort of jury I think it is, it is just the sort of jury that should try a case of such unusual quality as the one it now has in hand.

I am assuming that a vast majority of Georgians are hoping sincerely to see the truth of this famous case established—that it is largely an abstract proposition to the average man.

The point, however, is not so much what any one of us thinks—the point is what does that JURY think?

The impressions that evidence produce are varied and sometimes marked. One never can exactly and precisely say which way it will cut.

And right here my mind goes back involuntarily to Dr. Roy Harris, and his remarkable testimony.

Undoubtedly the defense will have to put on its thinking cap, straight and firmly set, if it hopes not only to upset that testimony and discredit it as particularly and relatively in point, but to remove the profound impression it may have made upon the jury.

It is, after all, largely upon mental impression—perhaps more often than not—that jury verdicts are predicted. The psychological receptiveness of the jury frequently controls the finding, I doubt not.

If Dr. Harris' testimony has weighed heavily against Frank in the mind of the jury, the defense will find it extremely difficult to remove that weight.

The Solicitor General may have been far more astute and incisive, too, than some have thought, when, time and again, he claimed to have been entrapped by his own witnesses—that they were not now swearing the same things that a few weeks ago they swore readily enough.

Effect May Be Decisive.

If the Solicitor has managed to get it into the minds of that jury that Frank needs protection against actually damaging circumstances, that witnesses deliberately have been drilled to protect him against sinister things, that witnesses have been tampered with in his behalf—all of which things may be inferentially set up, without many genuine reasons therefor being given—then a psychological effect will have been achieved that may prove dangerous in the extreme to the defendant.

Now, I do not mean to say the State HAS succeeded in doing that, and I hardly see wherein those impressions would be warranted altogether in the minds of the jurymen, still Dorsey and Hooper are driving at SOMETHING—and it may be they are driving at that exact psychological effect!

And you never can tell.

The way of a serpent upon a rock, of an eagle in the air, and of a man with a maid—these things have been said to be the strangest of all things. But the fourth strangest thing, and there may be so many as four superlatively strange things, is the way of a jury with a defendant at bar!

Therefore, if Hooper and Dorsey have been seeking, through the clever manipulation of their own witnesses and through the still cleverer directing of the cross-examination into desired channels, and if they have succeeded, which no man possibly may know now, the art employed has been consummately far-reaching and keen.

It will brace up the amazing story of Conley wonderfully and make his tale the easier for the jury to accept as true, and it will in inverse ratio discount the defendant's statement, moreover, if the jury can be brought to that psychological status suggested in this article, if it be the true purpose of the State to bring it there.

Situation Rests on "Ifs."

There are a good many "ifs" in this idea, to be sure—but all psychological situations are builded largely upon "ifs."

That the State is undertaking to establish a psychological effect in at least one other direction, too, is evident in the way it insists, over and over, that Frank was "nervous" ("extremely nervous" just after the crime was committed—the idea being that if he was agitated it likely was because of his guilty conscience.

The State has combated this wonderfully well, in so far as the substance of its denials are concerned—and yet into this idea obtrudes the thought that maybe here, again, the State has been cleverer than the defense has imagined, by forcing the State rather to overdo its hand in that direction!

Now, these suggestions may be more or less elusive and hard to get hold of, but they are in no way impossible. Indeed, when it is remembered that the State all along has been developing a rather weak circumstantial case against Frank always up to its star witness, Conley—at once both its hope and its despair—and that the story of that witness is grimly grotesque, in parts strenuously straining on the imagination, based, as it is in portions, upon admitted lies and misrepresentations, the great help and assistance to the State of a mentally receptive jury may be, and doubtless will be, appreciated immediately by the reader.

In any and every aspect of the case it is but the simple truth to say that both the State and the defense have been forced to the skating on dangerously thin ice more than once so far.

Roan Holding Scales of Justice With Steady Hand

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Emotion's entire gamut is daily run on the screen of faces watching the Frank trial.

A student of facial expression can find anything he seeks by watching the throng of spectators a half hour.

A glance at one man may show a sneer of hate as bitter as gall. His neighbor in the next seat will probably be smiling in amused content as if he were witnessing the antics of his favorite comedian.

Looking to the left he may see fear as vividly depicted on a countenance as trapped felon has ever felt. And another glance might show a spectator in studious contemplation as rapt as that of a philosopher endeavoring to fathom a new frailty in human character.

Men have been mad, and shown it, during the progress of Atlanta's most famous criminal case. And men have shown that they were glad to the point of jubilation at the very same instant.

Roan Utterly Impassive.

But throughout the tedious hours and hours of the hearing, one man sits, listening to every word. And he has yet to display the fact that his emotions are any more affected by the dramatic trial in which he is a commanding figure than those of a business man going through the daily routine of his prosaic grind.

That quality shows why the man is sitting there. If he were a man to show that his feelings were swayed as the tide of battle turned first for one side and then the other, he would not be qualified for the eminent position he holds.

Judge L. S. Roan is performing the arduous duties of presiding justice in the Frank case, because the people of Fulton County recognized that he is the man of the county's 250,000 best endowed by nature to perform this task.

His attitude throughout the hearing has shown that the people chose wisely and well.

Think of his position. It is one of supreme importance just at this time, when passion and prejudice are more likely to rule than cool reasoning.

It is his work to uphold the theory that Justice is blind, and that the courts of the land are the blindfold that darkens the vision of the goddess. He must see that the scales are evenly balanced. He must be sure that the sword is sharp.

There are scores, yes hundreds, of people in Atlanta to-day convinced absolutely of Frank's guilt in the Phagan mystery, and it would take a power of inconceivable magnitude to change their mental attitude.

There are scores and hundreds right here who believe thoroughly and honestly that Frank is innocent of any crime, and is as cruelly a persecuted person as the earth has known since the days of the martyrs. And so firm is this belief that it could not be shaken by dynamite or earthquake.

No Doubt as to Fairness.

Judge Roan's position and his oath of office call on him to see that both of these classes are firmly convinced of one fact in common, and that is that the case of Leo M. Frank is being fairly, honestly and effectively tried according to the law and evidence.

When he does this, he is removing a tremendous amount of the poison in the case. People are too prone to hint that a man's money can assure him of safety in any act he may commit. People are too likely to say that law and order becomes as nothing beneath a weight of prejudice.

Every word that Judge Roan speaks is as eagerly listened to as the voice of a diva. His every action is watched as closely as those of the President of the United States are by his secret service protectors.

Therefore, in action as well as in word, the judge must be impartial. Therefore, he can not smile as one side or the other scores a point. He can not evince extraordinary interest if it is apparent that the lawyers are about to tear to shreds the story of a witness. He must make a mental picture of everything in the long-drawn-out battle in order to give his final instructions to the jury, but he must not permit this picture to be reflected on his face.

And he has not.

His rulings have been quick. They are spoken in a low voice, just loud enough for counsel and witness to hear. In rendering a decision, he rarely straightens himself from the reclining attitude he assumes in the office chair.

Heat Hard on Judge.

He sits through the long hours, his right hand waving a huge palm leaf fan, though two electric fans are turned on the bench. He needs all three, for the courtroom is stifling hot, and Judge Roan is no longer young. Occasionally he mops a hairless spot on his high forehead with a handkerchief.

Several times during each day during the duller moments of the trial, he speaks a smiling word to some member of the bar, not connected with the case, who passes the bench or exchanges pleasantries with a court attache.

But his mind is never off the burning issue that he must play so important a part in deciding.

FRANK JUROR'S LIFE ONE GRAND, SWEET SONG--NOT

O. B. KEELER.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

Look him over next time you attend the Frank trial. Size up his little job. Weigh his responsibility. Consider his problems.

And then, if seeking employment, go out and sign a contract to make little ones out of big ones.

It's a more satisfactory way of earning $2 a day.

The juror's business is to collect evidence by the earful, sift the same, separate the true from the false, and make it into a verdict as between the Stat of Georgia and Leo Frank.

On the face of it, the plan is beautifully simple.

But the beauty is only skin deep.

You are recokning without the lawyers.

Here Entereth the Lawyer.

The simple-minded layman—and that rating includes the juror—starts out with the idea that the business of a lawyer is to extract evidence from the witness in available form for proper consideration by the juror.

It speedily develops that the full intent of counsel is to prevent the witness from unburdening himself in any way whatsoever. The more expensive the counsel, the less information the opposition will be able to wheedle out of its star performers.

The method of blocking is objective—that is, it is by means of objections. It appears that our system of jurisprudence takes cognizance of the juror as a mere babe in arms, not fit to assimilate the strong meat of evidence straight.

How the Juror Is Spared.

So he is sedulously raised on the bottle.

Mr. Dorsey (for example) has a witness by whom he is aching to show that Leo Frank was nervous the morning he was apprised of the tragedy. Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold are equally positive that the witness is not competent to judge if Mr. Frank was nervous. Also they are quite sure that the bottle-fed juror is utterly incapable of deciding if the witness is competent to decide if Mr. Frank was nervous.

They do not intend that the juror shall endanger his delicate thinking apparatus by grappling with any such abstruse problem.

So they fix it up this way.

Witness: "He insited on having some coffee."

Mr. Rosser: "I object to the use of the word 'insisted.' It manifestly is a conclusion of the witness, and as such has no place in the evidence. I ask that the word be ruled out."

Objections Fix the Fact.

And the court orders it ruled out, thereby fixing the circumstance firmly in the mind of the juror. And then Mr. Dorsey twists the query around and gets the witness to state that Frank asked for coffee twice at his house and once at the factory.

Just why that arangement suits the defense beter than the simple proposition that Frank insisted on the coffee is not entirely plain—to the layman.

But it seems that the juror is to be shielded from any breath of anything not bearing strictly on the guilt or innonce of the accused.

Specific and accurate information being thus at a premium, the juror probably is amazed when Mr. Rosser, vibrating with grief and indignation, protests against Detective Scott reading from some notes he made while working directly on the case.

The court also is shocked, but permits Mr. Scott to "refresh his memori" by means of the notes and then retail the product of such refreshment by word of mouth.

This is agreeable to Mr. Rosser and the court, but when Mr. Dorsey offers further to refresh Mr. Scott's somewhat wilted recollection, Mr. Rosser intimates at the top of a robust voice that such a thing shall be accomplished only over his (Mr. Rosser's) inanimate form.

And that promptly affords the bottle-fed juror some more evidence to ponder.

Mr. Dorsey insists it is his right to "lead" the witness.

The witness demands to know if he is suspected of holding back.

Mr. Dorsey declares he has been trapped by the witness, and Mr. Rosser appends the somewhat doubtful comment that Frank Hooper is a wise man.

Here Are More Problems.

Now, add this to the problems of the troubled juror:

Is Mr. Scott balking?

If so, has Mr. Dorsey the right to hold an ear of corn in front of him?

Has Mr. Dorsey been trapped?

And, in view of the foregoing, is or it not Mr. Hooper a wise man?

Other problems for the exercise of the Frank juror on the side, as it were, would include the following:

Should Mr. Dorsey be permitted to examine a witnes without interruption by Mr. Rosser?

Should Mr. Rosser be permitted to object?

If so, should Mr. Dorsey scowl while Mr. Rosser is objecting?

Does Mr. Rosser consider whisky a good remedy for indigestion?

Would He Hide Evidence?

Woud anybody think that Mr. Rosser would have anything to do with suppressing evidence, except in the regular and approved objective method prescribed by law?

Is Mr. Scott a trained sleuth?

And one more thing that tends to lend an acrobatic cast to the mental processes of the Frank juror.

Once in a while—not very often, it's true—but once in a while something gets by Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold. The witness may be quick on the trigger. Or Mr. Dorsey may manage to frog up a subtle query with a joker in it.

And after the storm of objection has thundered itself out and Mr. Rosser is mopping the signs of honest toil from his brow, and Mr. Dorsey is wearing an expression similar to that of a cat that knows all about what happened to the canary—why, then the court orders the stenographer to strike out the answer.

And the obliging juror is instructed to forget it.

Yes?

Would You Forget it, Too?

Just suppose that you, being an honest and hard-working juror, trying in an honest and hard-working way to extract a morsel of real information from a jungle of cross-questions and crabbed answers and objections and oratory and recrimination—suppose that the honest and hard-working witness should beat 'em to it for once, and disgorge something really interesting.

And then suppose the judge should tell you to wipe it right off your mental slate, and not remember it, or consider it, or think about it any more forever.

You would do it, would you not?

Neither would we.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

I was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast. "Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the countryside shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fireworks.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed.

"Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks, containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stupid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had. Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Wife so Weak and Nervous Could Not Stand Least Noise—How Cured.

Munford, Ala.—"I was so weak and nervous while passing through the Change of Life that I could hardly live. My husband had to nail rubber on all the gates, for I could not stand it to have a gate slam.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes, bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or any strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and pepper and salt to taste. Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam. Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's ori right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I see is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. 'If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instent. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering.

Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name.

A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us; the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

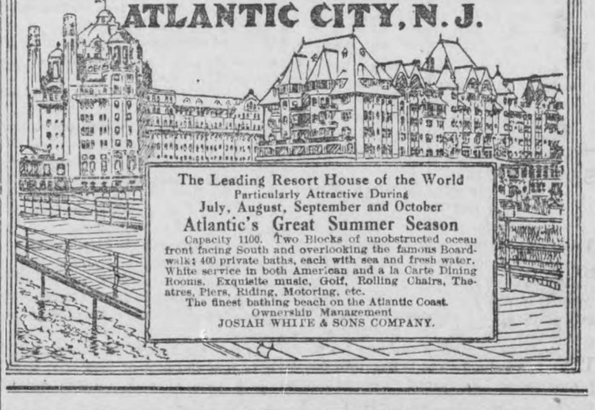

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this mernIng," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some one of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without telling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your lips are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took it, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin tonight I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. It is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my price. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly. I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first, I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before * * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

Confessions of a Medium

(Spirit Transference in Clairvoyancy)

An Expose of Frauds Practiced in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc., Etc.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK. SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling gait and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it," I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

RITCHIE FEARS WOLGAST BOUT, ASSERTS NOLAN

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Money talks.

So says the old sporting slogan, and by the same token there are times when money proclaims itself in clarion tones.

Ad Wolgast, who has been mooning around in a half-hearted way ever since it was brought home to him that an operation for appendicitis had robbed him of much of his fighting force, had almost despaired of getting into the limelight again, when a happy thought struck him.

He challenged Willie Ritchie for $25,000 a side, and the sporting world, hearing the chink of so much money, immediately stopped to listen.

Then, right at the psychological moment, Ritchie said the proposition looked good to him, and the sporting world's sense of hearing became more acute than ever.

Now, in this case, as in others, money's voice may dwindle to a whisper, and finally merge into complete silence. That is, so far as threats of a big side wager are concerned. Ring men from time immortal have brandished bales of currency and jingled $20 pieces only to decide after mature consideration that it was as well to let the ticket-purchasing public supply the sinews of war.

And the public, happy in the prospect of a match between fighters with pretensions to class, was quite content to have it that way.

* * * *

IF Wolgast and Ritchie decide to have it out, never a single member of the grand army of fight fans will insist that the wager feature of the affair be lived up to. Of course, if the lads are stubborn about risking some of their accumulations, no one will object.

The notable thing about the situation just now is that there seems to have been a general awakening to the fact that Wolgast is entitled to a return match with Ritchie. It might be said that the feeling that little Ad should be given a chance to retrieve the laurels he lost on a technicality has existed ever since the day Ritchie became champion. But the absence of enthusiasm on the point was due to Wolgast's tactics. In many of his matches he was careless about his training, and even now, while hurling defiance at Ritchie, he is going around with his hand incased in a plaster cast.

What he needs is a couple of months far from the maddening crowd to give his splintered knuckles a chance to knit and enable the Wolgast frame to store up a little vitality. The Ritchie match will keep, and there is little fear of the public forgetting that the chance is coming to Wolgast.

BILLY NOLAN, ex-manager of Ritchie, is in town, and was asked what he thought of the Ritchie-Wolgast contest as an "attraction."

"I suppose," said Nolan, "that Tommy Murphy has the best right of them all to a match with Ritchie, but I honestly believe that a Wolgast-Ritchie bout would draw a big gate. To my way of thinking, it is the best card in sight. I have always made it a point to keep track of public sentiment in these matters, and I know that 70 per cent of the spectators who passed out through the gates the day Ritchie won the title from Wolgast on a foul felt that Wolgast should be given a chance to regain what he had lost. And that sentiment still exists."

And whisper, Nolan is skeptical about Ritchie's good faith in saying he is willing to box Wolgast again.

Now that the strings that held manager and man together are severed, Nolan is prone to call a spade a spade, and he says that Ritchie never relished the thought of one day having to stand in front of Wolgast again.

According to Nolan, the names on Ritchie's roll of eligibles were Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ad Wolgast's name was "nivver mintioned" in any of the councils of war that Nolan and Ritchie held.

RITCHIE said in Los Angeles a day or so ago that he held aloof from Wolgast, thinking Ad would prove a poor card. That is poppy-cock. Wolgast, were he to train right, is the best lightweight card in sight to-day.

He is a card for the reason that fighters who perform as well as Wolgast has done are always strong with the fight-going public until signally defeated, and nothing like that has happened to Wolgast as yet.

He is a card for the further reason that the breath of suspicion has never attached to any of his contests. He always gave the public the best he was capable of, and in the matter of square dealing, Wolgast's record is on a par with that of Battling Nelson.

Another Bargain Bill for To-day

By O. B. Keeler.

IN the sparsely occurring intervals when we have nothing else to do, we sit and wonder solemnly at the number and variety of the kinds of baseball that can be produced in the course of one reasonably short afternoon.

Once in a while it doesn't seem humanly possible.

But we turn to the old score book, and it is even so.

There was yesterday afternoon, now.

You might frisk the Big Show with a vacuum cleaner and not bring to light a prettier or more workmanlike cor bat "an that first game. Four hits apiece, tight pitching, clean and brilliant fielding, and the score 3 to 1, settled up in the eighth round by a sharp attack.

And the home club on the long end. Can you beat it?

* * *

AND then, as the well-known Bard of Avon puts it, having gazed on this picture, unwind another reel and turn in the riot call.

The bald fact that Fleharty slipped it to us conveys only a small percentage of the devastation. The redeeming feature of the aftermath was the fact that it traveled only six frames.

In other words, the rain cut in at the wrong time, or else it stopped too early.

IN fact, the afternoon was consumed in a battle between the elements, two thousand earnest fans and a couple of ball clubs. At the end of the sixth inning, game No. 1, the heavens opened as usual and proceeded to save some more of the corn crop in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

The umpires held up the proceedings for the entire 30 minutes prescribed by law, and then started the cruel war again. Atlanta was leading by a score of 1 to 0 at the time, but the Volunteers, taking advantage of the only flivvers of the game, knotted the count. Joe Agler then shot off a triple that scored Chapman, and added his own run when the useful Weichonce scraped a wallop off Jack Spratt's upholstery.

GILBERT PRICE was in complete control of the situation from start to finish. The four hits of the opposition were in widely separated innings—one in the first, one in the fourth, one in the sixth and one in the eighth. Mr. More, who yielded the same number, was not so judicious in placing them. One was wasted in the fourth, but all the rest were produced in the eighth. A base on balls, a sacrifice hit, an out and a wild chuck by More spotted the Town Boys their first tally without the aid of a hit.

* * *

IN addition to his valuable triple, Joe Agler put on a bit of circus stuff in the sixth, when he made a neat steal of second while More clung to the ball, as if he was afraid somebody was going to take it away from him. Joe began to slide about the time More came to.

* * *

CIRCUS SOLLY HOFMAN continued to meet with poor luck on the towpath. In the fifth inning of the first game, he walked, after two were down, and tried for second on a short passed ball. Chapman made a quick recovery and Bisland stuck the ball on the sliding Artie for a hair-line decision. It was fast work all around.

Hofman took two misplays, only one of which shows in the box, to help the Volunteers to their one run in the first game. In the eighth inning, Hofman singled and Lindsay sacrificed. More hit to Holland, who threw wide, and the pitcher was safe, Artie reaching third. The infield crept up on the grass, and Price did his part, making Daley hit weakly to short. Bisland stuttered with his hands, and Solly was over, but the runner was retired at first, saving Bisland a boot.

* * *

CARL THOMPSON ran into something in the second game and bounced back before a hand was out. Daley singled to left, Callahan tripled to center, and Spratt singled in the same hole, in rapid and terrifying succession. Clarke came on, and Spratt went out stealing, after which two more singles went to waste, the five solid smashes producing only two runs. Clarke got in the next round, an error, a sacrifice and three hits—one of the fluke Cincinnati variety—putting over two more runs and cinching things for the smiling Fleharty.

AFTER Manush had flied out for Clarke in the fifth, the fans got a belated treat. There was a slight delay, and then "String" Love, the human office building, was wheeled to the center of the arena.

The long chap got a great hand as responded with a burst of speed that in the thickening dusk was simply unhittable. Half dodging a shoot, Callahan scratched a Texas Leaguer into left, but the tall boy put some more swift on the pill, and Spratt's twisting short fly resulted in a sensational double play, put on by Tommy Long.

Callahan had reached second, when one of Love's fast ones got clean through Dunn, and when Tommy came sprinting in for Spratt's short pop, Cally broke for third. Tommy froze the fly on the dead run, and raced on over to second for the other out.

Then Noyes fanned, bewildered by the speed of the long fork-hander.

ANOTHER bargain matinee for this afternoon, the trouble beginning at 2:15 o'clock. Manager Smith said this morning he had a good mind to shoot Thompson right back at the Vols in one of the games. He was undecided as to Conzelman and Love for the other. Manager Schwartz announced that Williams would work in the opener, with Brackenridge in the afterpiece. "That's all I've got," said Bill, cheerfully.

Belgium Puts Ban On Jack Johnson

BRUSSELS, Aug. 2.—Jack Johnson may soon be without a country to fight in. England does not want him. He can not return to America because of the sentence for white slavery hanging over his head. France harbors him, but not enough to allow him to mix with the guests in first-class hotels. Now Belgium has put the ban on him.

Following the announcement that the champion was to give boxing exhibitions in Belgium, the Minister of Justice yesterday issued an order that all boxing contests in the future should be investigated. This move was made to prevent faking in matches.

The hue and cry against Johnson's exhibiting in Belgium became so great, however, that the Minister of Justice was forced to issue another edict. To-day he put the lid down on all boxing. No further matches, whether between blacks or whites or mixed, will be allowed to be staged in the kingdom.

GRIFFIN AND ARMSTRONG IN WESTERN TENNIS FINAL

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Clarence Griffin, California's latest tennis marvel, upheld the reputation of his State by qualifying for the Western championship finals through a victory in his hardest match of the tournament over William Blair, of Lake Geneva, Wis., 6-2, 7-5, 6-2.

To-day in the final round, upon which, through the absence of Champion Maurice McLaughlin, depends the title, Griffin will meet Joseph Armstrong, of St. Paul, who yesterday downed Harry Waldner, of Chicago, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, 6-3.

SINGING CONVENTION IN ELBERT TO BE REPEATED

ELBERTON, Aug. 2.—The Elbert County Singing Convention, which met in an all-day session at the courthouse here, was a success in every way. The singing was enjoyed so much that it was decided to have another session here on Saturday before the fourth Sunday in September.

FAMOUS IN SPORT—I.

THE BASEBALL IDOL.

THE BASEBALL IDOL (CF. IDLE) is a state of mind. He was created by a lot of honest but thoughtless newspaper writers who were fond of jokes and never expected to be taken seriously. Thus we see that joking is a dangerous habit.

The Baseball Idol leads a life of busy inactivity. In the winter months he is on the stage or in the newspapers telling all and sundry how many thousands of dollars he will demand in the spring. In the spring he is hard at work demanding. In the summer he is in the hospital suffering with a comminuted fracture of the feelings or on the bench recovering from the effects of a collision with the umpire. He takes a much-needed rest in the fall.

Hailing from Marissa, Ill., or Broken Bow, Nebr., he begins at once to talk for publication about his "loyalty to our city," that being the one that has bid highest for his services. His loyalty fluctuates with his pay, and is changed with his uniform. Occasionally he adds to the sum of human joy by nodding to some otherwise intelligent man in the grandstand who at once rushes down to his office and demands a 50 per cent increase of salary on the strength of it.

On the field he can always be recognized, as he is the last member to emerge from the clubhouse and is languid and aloof. We knew one also who could be identified by the skill with which he could quarter an oval dish of mashed potatoes and empty it clean in four swift scoops of the knife.

He is the one financial fly in the golden ointment of the magnate. Whenever a club owner groans and tosses in his sleep he is thinking about some item or $10,000 on his payroll. From this we learn that in the wonderful scheme of things even a Baseball Idol has his use.

Don't miss the next article of the great series—"The Alibi."

THE RULE PROVIDING heavily padded head-gears for motorcyclists in track competition is a wise one. We have always understood that it cost a lot of money to build a good motor track.

IF JOHN BULL HAS ANY more valuable junk lying around over there, let's send somebody over after it and get the whole thing finished up.

* * *

THERE IS A LOT OF unnecessary excitement about betting in bait parks, which is bound to die a natural death. The few with so little intelligence as to bet on baseball can not acquire much money or keep it long—so there you are.

AD WOLGAST HAS DECIDED to re-enter the ring in a match with Johnny Dundee, which is about as safe an entrance as could be devised.

CHANCE'S DIFFICULTY IN making trades is occasioned by the fact that since the Chicago deal the other managers resent his wanting anything in return.

Three Naps Using Matty's Fadeaway

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—Three members of the Naps' pitching staff have mastered the fadeaway ball invented by Christy Mathewson and have been using it lately to deceive batters. Cy Falkenberg learned the delivery while with Toledo, and his employment of it is the chief factor in his successful comeback, he says.

Falkenberg showed Vean Gregg and George Kahler how to throw it, and after experimenting for a month, both added it to their regular repertoire about six weeks ago.

Gregg is believed to be the only southpaw in the big leagues that uses a fadeaway. The ball is hard to control, but the three Naps have achieved good results with it.

40 BAPTIZED AT DALTON.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—As a result of the revival meeting in progress in North Dalton, the Rev. E. B. Farrar, in charge of the meeting, baptized 40 people in a large pool near the Crown Cotton Mills, the baptizing attracting hundreds of people.

FIREMEN GOING TO TAMPA.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—Instead of spending their annual outing at St. Simons Island, as planned, the Dalton fire department will go to Tampa, Fla., and will leave here on August 7 in stead of August 9.

MARQUARD OUT TO BREAK HIS PITCHING MARK

By Damon Runyon.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—Rube Marquard, McGraw's eminent southpaw, who hung up a record for straight victories last season that will probably be a mark to shoot at for some time to come, is loose again upon a record-making expedition. The Rube has now compiled nine consecutive victories, or nearly one-half of the number he unfurled last year, and is still going strong.

It may be that Marquard will never again reach the mark he set himself last season and which such hurlers as Walter Johnson and Joe Wood have tried for and failed. But he has gone nearly half the distance without any difficulty whatever, and has a good chance to equal if not pass the nineteen straight, which now stands as the record.

Has Good Chance for Record.

The thing that stands very much in his favor just now is that the Giants are going at speed. They are winning just as often as they were early last year when he started his large run, and what is more, they are apt to continue their pace through the balance of the season, as was the case last season, for they have already had their annual slump, and are now in the ascendant.

Has Changed His Style.

Marquard has changed his style of pitching since he made his big run of nineteen straight. He was under a heavy strain during that time last year, because he tried to get every man that faced him at the plate. He had not learned then to save himself for the tight place, but he now permits his teammates to do a little work whenever he has a lead, and, like Matty, only uses all of his stuff when the situation demands it. For that reason he may be able to go along and win repeatedly without in any way impairing his arm and bringing on a slump such as followed his streak last year.

Ranks of Champion Clubs Are Depleted

Queer how quickly a world's championship team will disintegrate. Already eight of the champion Athletics of 1911 have severed their connection with that club, while six of the Red Sox who helped to win the American League bunting and later down the New York Giants are no longer with Boston.

Of the 1911 array of Athletics, Livingston, Hartsel, Lord, Kraus, Danforth, Martin, Morgan and Derrick are no longer on the Philadelphia roster, while Danny Murphy, Harry Davis and Ira Thomas are but extras, with Jack Coombs prevented by illness from playing.

It is something new, however, for a world's championship manager to lose out before the following season is ended, but the going of Stahl was preceded by the release of Pitchers Pape and O'Brien and extra Infielders Ball, Krug and Bradley.

Of the Giant who lost to the Athletics in 1911, Ames, Becker, Devore, Devlin, Drucke, Latham and Paulette are now missing.

Motorcycle Races Off Until Tuesday

Rain again caused a postponement of the motorcycle races. Just when everything looked rosy for some fast going at Jack Prince's saucer yesterday afternoon, a big shower blew up and put everything "on the bum."

So the management decided to call proceedings off for the week. Next Tuesday night the same card that was to have been held last evening will be run.

In the meantime all the riders will be working on their machines in hope of establishing some new records.

ELBERTON PASTOR IS ON THREE WEEKS' VACATION

ELBERTON, Aug. 2.—The Rev. R. C. Cleckler, of the First Methodist Church, is attending camp meeting in Hart County. After the camp meeting he will attend the conference of the Sunday school and Epworth League near Waynesboro, N. C. There will be no services at the First Church for three weeks.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT.

McLoughlin smote the ball so hard
he made them all look lame,
And English critics up and wrote: "It
is a crying shame!
Such rude, uncultured tennis play
will kill the grand old game."

IT MIGHT HAPPEN THUSLY:

Old Honus Wagner came to bat and
hit one to the fence.
"O, Roughneck! Roughneck!" yelled
the fans, whose feelings were intense.
The umpire fined him fifty bones and told him beat it hence.

OR THUSLY:

Ad Wolgast poked a wallop through
the other fellow's guard.
"You lose," the referee remarked.
"You hit that man too hard,
And as a member of this club you
are forever barred."

OR IT MIGHT BE THIS:

Chick Evans drove the pellet far
across the grassy lea.
"Disqualified!" they said to him.
"And wherefore?" questioned he.
"Because," they said, "you smote the ball with too much energy."

While these English experts are about it, why not have McLoughlin indicted for cruelty to tennis balls.

McLoughlin may be guilty of trickery, as our beloved English brethren opine, but so is Walter Johnson when he heaves his smoke ball.

Lavern Chappell has been relegated to the bench as a result of a sore leg and paralysis of the batting average.

Mr. Evers' idea of the national pastime is to walk right in, bawl the umps and walk right out again.

The intrepid gent who threw the brickbat at Ty Cobb escaped to parts unknown. He probably is at home beating his wife.

EXERCISE.

"O, baseball is a healthful game," a fan remarked to me.
"It stirs the sluggish blood and makes
the heart beat merrily.
It clears the eye, it clears the brain,
it makes the body strong;
It lays aside a store of health to live
and prosper long."
"How often do you play the game?"
I calmly made reply,
And as he spoke there was a look of
pity in his eye.
"What? Me? Get out there in the sun
and sweat to death?" he said.
"Perchance you have a notion I am crazy in the head."

There are those who hold that Larry Chappell has not struck his stride and there are others who hold that he has.

Mr. Weston's hike to Minneapolis may be considerable feat (not on feet), but why should any one go to all that trouble to get to Minneapolis?

After months of persistent endeavor, the Cards have achieved last place, demonstrating that perseverance always brings its reward.

Even a pugilist believes in taking an occasional vacation. For instance, Ad Wolgast has offered to bet $25,000 in the last two days.

THAT FAMILIAR RAG.

Warble not in mournful numbers:
"Sox are getting bumped again."
I can hear it in my slumbers,
So familiar is the strain.

BENTON TO LOSE SALARY AND PAY DOCTOR BILLS

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—President Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati baseball team, says that Rube Benton, who was seriously injured when his motorcycle collided with a street car, would not be allowed one penny of his salary and that the club would not stand any expenses while he is at the hospital. Herrmann says that he had repeatedly requested Benton not to ride his cycle.

"The whole affair is an injustice to the club," said Mr. Herrmann. "The injury to Benton means that we will have to get a pitcher or two and good pitchers are hard to get."

RED SOX BUY PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Announcement was made to-day of the purchase by the Boston club, of the American League, of Pitcher Reiger, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association, and Infielder Carl Strom, of the Lawrence, Mass., team, of the New England League.

To Call New Club Atlanta A. A.

White Has Fought 4 Champions

By Left Hook.

ATLANTA Athletic Association, That is the name of Lou Castro's boxing club at Ponce DeLeon.

Lou is forming a regular club, and he expects to have some of Atlanta's most prosperous business men as members within the next few days.

It is going to cost a heap of money to get the skating rink at Ponce DeLeon fixed into a "regular" clubhouse, but the Count is going to spend the money.

All yesterday he had an architect going over the building. The plans will be ready within a day or two, and next Monday the carpenters will start work.

There will be seats for 6,000 fans. Boxes, containing six chairs, will encircle the ring. Back of these will be row after row of opera chairs.

The ring is to be of regulation size, 24 feet by 24. The ropes are to be extra heavy and covered with red plush. The posts will be of heavy brass, and highly polished.

The "seconds" will be forced to wear white uniforms. And so will the ushers, ticket sellers and takers.

Class will stick out prominently everywhere.

AND to open his classy club, the Count has by far the classiest bout ever staged in Atlanta. In Charley White he has a real contender for the lightweight title. Whitney is a tough fellow, and the most popular that ever fought here.

Frank has boxed some tough lads here, too. Among them Clarence English, Jake Abel, Joe Thomas, Charley "Twin" Miller, Battling Nelson and Tommy O'Keefe. And since leaving here last spring he has been defeating all comers through the West. Only the other night he handed out Phil Knight a tough beating in Denver. And Denver fans had been boosting this same Knight as a coming title holder.

White has fought four champions. He has stopped Joe Thomas twice and Jake Abel once within the past two months. He fought Abe Attell to a standstill twice while the Hebrew was a real champion. He made Ad Wolgast look like a joke in a six-round no-decision mill when Ad possessed the lightweight crown. And he held Johnny Kilbane even.

Charley gave Joe Mandot a terrific eight-round scrap when Joe was looked upon as a champion two years ago. It was called a draw, although Charley did all the forcing. He gave Pal Moore a severe trouncing.

And he stopped Owen Moran, former English champion, in nine rounds. Young Shugrue, the man who defeated Leach Cross in New York last spring, twice lost the decision to White.

With a broken hand, broken in the fourth round, he gave Jack Britton the fight of his life in New Orleans a few weeks ago. The bout was stopped in the eighteenth round because the sheriff thought the going was getting too rough.

After the bout, Britton openly declared that White was the hardest puncher he ever met.

* * *

WHITNEY has never been knocked out. Can White turn the trick that hundreds of others have failed to accomplish?

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

No Class D league in the country is putting up a prettier pennant race than the Empire just at this time. Every team in the league is within striking distance of first place and each day sees the race becoming warmer.

* * *

Waycross has cut loose one of the most helpful winning streaks seen in the league in weeks. Although at the bottom Waycross has brought the league teams close together by winnings from teams higher up. The last at home series resulted in four victories, one tie and one defeat.

* * *

Thomasville has added a few new men in anticipation of the post-season pennant games with Valdosta. Thomasville has a team that is to be reckoned with, too.

* * *

Otto Jordan nearly always furnishes a lot of fun in every game he plays. Recently after he was thrown out easily at first on a slow one to the pitcher he rushed to first, sliding into the bag, jumped up and romped to second. He actually looked peeved when the umpire motioned that he was out.

* * *

Whitey Morse, who once played with the Atlanta team, and more recently of the South Atlantic League, is again signing "manager" after his name. He was released by Valdosta and signed with Brunswick, succeeding Charlie Moran, formerly of the Chattanooga team.

* * *

Doc Fenton continues his splendid work in center field for Waycross. In the first of the series at Thomasville he caught three line drives against the fence, and only a short time ago did the same thing at Waycross.

* * *

As far as is known Baby Wilder and Fillingim established a new no-hit record for organized baseball when they pitched two no-hit games at Cordele recently. Illingim pitched a nine-inning no-hit game and was followed by Wilder, who gave up no hits for six innings.

* * *

Americus has been playing better baseball for the past few weeks than any team in the league. A casual review of the scores of games played shows that the team has put up some mighty pretty exhibitions.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark has added a one-hit game to his credit. Pitching for Waycross against Thomasville he let down the hard-hitting Thomasville bunch with but one hit, a single that was secured in the first inning.

* * *

Signed as an outfielder, Dacey, of the Americus team, has developed into one of the best pitchers in the league. His string of victories is apt to establish a new record in the Empire. A few of his games were won by mere luck, but most of them have been deserved victories.

* * *

Americus and Brunswick have two pitchers and they are apt to oppose each other most any day now. They are the Stewart's and both seem to hae the goods.

* * *

To Outfielder Medlock goes credit for the second home run hit on the Valdosta field. Bitting, now with Charleston, formerly with Waycross, got the first home run in Valdosta. Medlock played with Waycross before he was signed by Valdosta.

* * *

It is quite probable that the first games of the pennant series in the Empire will be played the last week in August. The season ends August 27, and, unless the directors decide to start the pennant series the first of September the winner of the second half will play Valdosta the first game on August 28.

GOLFER SHOULD IGNORE CROWD, EVANS ADVISES

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—The few years of my life have been very successful in a golfing way, and, therefore, I have had but little time to follow other players' games. Last week, however, in the Western at Homewood, Mr. Allis put me so abruptly out of the game that I had ample time to follow the matches and form a part of the large galleries, and a golf gallery is always an interesting assemblage of people.

I have often been asked how I could play with a gallery. My questioners could not see why so many interested people did not disturb me and make me nervous. Players, however, are not much disturbed by a watching multitude, and they usually play their best games at such times. If I do happen to be playing badly, a gallery or anything else, of course, disturbs. As long as I am given room to get my club head around I am satisfied. A gallery forming a large body is much more acceptable to the player than the scattering few.

Lone Spectator Unnerving.

The one thing that bothers me is to have a single individual directly behind or in front of me. This is the commonest mistake made by the innocent spectator, for he wants to watch the ball's line of flight. This is especially bothersome to me on the putting green. I love the strange quiet when the shot is being executed, and the buzzing comments of hundreds of voices as the body of people begins to move along. Now and then one hears a woman, unacquainted with the etiquette of golf, lifting her voice in hurried speech above the breathless quiet of the crowd watching the execution of a difficult shot. This makes it hard for the player, and it is all the worse when the loud speech concerns something utterly foreign to golf.

Player Should Ignore Crowd.

The player should never notice the gallery except as a whole; singling out individuals is a mistake. The spectators of other sports are usually stationary, but the golf gallery moves around the course after the players. This frequently obliges the player to pass through the gallery to his ball, and then he is usually grasped from all sides by his friends; at such times they tell him that they have a bet on him, or make some other remark equally encouraging when he is playing badly. This is very bad for the player, and there is nothing more likely to prevent concentration of attention upon his game.

Personally, I like to talk to people in the gallery when I am playing, but the more successful players never do. At such times I like to see my friends and I hope that they like to see me.

"LET WILLARD GET A REP," WIRES BURNS TO JONES

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—Tommy Burns, manager of Arthur Pelky, and Tom Jones, who looks after the interests of Jess Willard, are booked to hook up in an interesting battle of invectives and near-blows within a day or two.

Jones wants to match Willard against Pelky, but Burns in a telegram to-day says that Willard must go get a reputation before presuming to challenge a champion.

"Gunboat Smith is the man Pelky wants to meet," said Burns. "Smith beat Willard, and then again, Charley Miller shaded the Kansas scrapper. Let him get a 'rep' for himself."

This sort of language is the sort that makes Jones glad he is alive, for he thrives on argument.

"When did Pelky whip Willard or anybody of consequence until he landed a lucky punch on Luther McCarty?" asks Jones. "Willard can whip Pelky, and Burns can name his own terms. Pelky took one beating from Willard and wants no more."

Blood is Purified Quickly in Summer

Here is a Remedy that has Wonderful Action and Promotes Health.

Mingling with your food, arousing stomach action, absorbed immediately into your blood, the famous remedy known as S. S. S. has a wonderful action. Its main purpose is to stimulate cellular activity or that peculiar process which instantly changes the worn-out cells for the new red blood corpuscles.

The medicinal value of the components of S. S. S. is relatively just as vital to healthy blood as the nutriment obtained from grain, meat, fats, sugars or any other part of our daily food is to the natural reconstructive requirements of the tissues. And there is one component of S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating the cellular tissue to a healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. Thus, in cases of skin disease such as eczema, acne, herpes, tetter or psoriasis, first purify your blood with S. S. S. so it will enable the tissues to rebuild their cellular strength and regain their normal health.

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier.

S. S. S. is purely a botanical product, and you will make a great mistake to have some enthusiast palm off a mineral preparation that may do you irreparable harm.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Company, 191 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any obstinate skin trouble, write to their Medical Department for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Bud Anderson, the Oregon lightweight who underwent an operation for appendicitis following his recent scrap with Leach Cross, will be ready to fight again on Thanksgiving Day, according to his manager, Dick McDonald. He declares that Anderson will be as strong as ever by that time.

Sam Langford, who recently returned to this country from Australia, spent several hours in Chicago en route from San Francisco to Boston. "I expect to stay in the East several months and will try to get a match with Porky Flynn," said Langford. "In the fall I will return to the Pacific Coast to fill several fight engagements."

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that "Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny are in great shape for their 20-round engagement on Sunday afternoon. The bout is being advertised as for the welterweight championship. The pair clashed on July 4 in a 10-round affair, and Ferns was given the verdict after a fierce mill. Denny claims he was robbed in that go. Hence the rematch.

It is reported that Billy Gibson, New York matchmaker, is trying to land a Willie Ritchie-Freddie Welch set-to for some time in September. Welch boxes Johnny Dundee on the coast next month.

* * *

Arthur Pelky does not seem to be overanxious to meet Jess Willard in a 20-round go on the coast. Tom Jones, manager of the Kansas City heavyweight, has offered Tommy Burns' protege a neat side bet, but even this extra inducement fails to attract Arthur.

* * *

Young Abe Attell, the local bantamweight, wants to know why the bantamweights are dodging him. Attell says he would dearly love to meet either Kid Brooks or Tim Callahan in a bout around these parts.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the Chicago lightweight, and Sammy Trott, of Columbus, have signed articles to box 12 rounds at Winnipeg on August 15. They have agreed to weigh 133 pounds at 6 o'clock for a night fight.

* * *

Spider Britt is another local boy who is pining for a fight. Britt cares not who it may be, just as long as he weighs under 118 pounds. Spider can easily make 115.

* * *

They all come and go, but Jim Flynn seems to go on forever. Despite his many years of ring service, Flynn has signed to meet Gunboat Smith at New York on August 8, in a near title match.

* * *

In case Johnny Dundee succeeds in defeating Jack Whitz at Los Angeles on August 12 Charlie White says he will go after a match with the Easterner. Charlie has already defeated Dundee in a 10-round affair at New York. Charlie and Jack are brothers, and both fight best when weighing 126 pounds.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Matty seems to be going back. With his aid the Giants tamed the Cubs, but "Big Six" allowed the Everites five hits and uncorked a wild pitch. This proves Matty is losing control.

* * *

The Yankees' winning streak of two games was nipped in the bud by old Jupe Pluv.

* * *

Miller's bat was once more in evidence. His two hits paved the way for the Pirates to again humble Dahlen's men. It took innings, however, to turn the trick.

Are the Athletics going back? Defeated twice in succession by a second division team does not look like A-1 ball. It may be only a temporary slump, but in any event Cleveland is only seven games behind.

* * *

The Braves are trying hard to forge ahead of the Dodgers. They won again from the Cardinals and are now but two and a half games behind sixth place.

* * *

The Phillies keep following the Giants' pace. The Reds' errors and opportune hitting gave Doolin's men another victory over Cincinnati.

* * *

"Elks' Day" at Boston proved disastrous for the Red Sox. The Naps again took them into camp. Cleveland is going at top speed now and in two days has cut down the Athletics' lead two and one-half games. Certainly will be some clash netx week when the leaders and runners up meet.

* * *

Two weeks ago Clark Griffith predicted that his team would beat out the Athletics and the latter would be on the toboggan. To-day the Senators are further away from the leaders and still losing.

The Tigers proved a handicap again.

"Rube" Benton, although he will be in the hospital for a month as the result of his motorcycle accident, is now practically out of danger. There is no chance, however, that the Reds will have the services of their star pitcher again this season.

* * *

Catcher Agnew, struck on the jaw by a pitched ball during the recent series between the Senators and Browns, has left the hospital for St. Louis. He will be out of the game a week later.

ITCHING PILES

Every sufferer from itching piles should read these words from H. S. Hood, of Bellaire, Mich., who was

Cured by Tetterine

For sixteen years I had been a sufferer from itching piles. I got a box of Tetterine and less than half a box made a complete cure.

Tetterine gives instant relief to all skin diseases, such as eczema, tetter, ringworm, ground itch, etc. It has the right medicinal qualities to get at the cause and to relieve the effect. Get it to-day—Tetterine.

THE SIN OF THE CINCY HIT

By Fred D. Pasley

Who Asks R. Kipling to Apologize for Him.

AS Thompson, the sportin' writer, lolled back in his swivel chair,
A spirit sneaked up behind him and deftly grappled his hair.
Grappled his hair and carried him farther and farther away,
Till he heard as the roar of the rain-fed ford the roar of the milky way.
Till he heard the roar of the milky way die down and drone and cease,
And they came to the gate within the wall where Peter holds the keys.
"Stand up, stand up, Mr. Thompson, and answer loud and high.
"The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone."
And the naked soul of our hero grew white as a rain-washed bone.
"I've thousands of friends on earth," he cried; "I was their priest and guide.
"And my baseball chatter was famous from Oakland to Ingleside—
"Spheroid, Horsehide and Pellet, Globule, Capsule and Pill—
"I was a pen Napoleon, marshaled my words at will.
"I was the synomic wizard and rated far above par—
"Hurler, Twirler and Heaver, Curver and South-paw Star.
"I put the fest in Bootfest and the Slug in Slugfest, too,
"And I snipped the Ire off of Umpire to give the fans something new."
"Hold, hold!" then cried St. Peter, "I would question thee a bit:
"Art thou the man that discovered the Cincinnati Hit?"
"Yes," proudly answered Thompson, and the pride of the scribe was great;
"It is Baseball's Fourth Dimension—" and he started to orate.
"Aw, can thy chatter!" said Peter, as he opened a-wide the door,
"Keep on dropping downward till you reach the bottom floor.
"We take in a few reporters, and sport writers, too, sometimes,
"But you with your Cincy Ilit must go where they punish such awful crimes."

LARGEST RESIDENCE

The largest private residence in the world is the winter palace of the Czar of Russia at St. Petersburg.

The enormous proportions of the palace are made evident from the fact that in one room alone the entire Atlanta courthouse could be sheltered without inconvenience.

There are seven hundred rooms in the greatest of all Russian palaces. It is said that at one time 7,000 soldiers were quartered under its roof.

Neither the present occupant nor any of the former rulers of Russia have ever seen all the rooms of this edifice. Yet, despite its tremendous size, the palace contains treasures of architectural beauty.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Business Houses Due Soon for Peachtree

Huntley Subdivision on McBurney Lot—$500,000 Concern Organizes and Is Seeking Location.

Stores will soon go up at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets on property bought some months ago by Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley. This is the old E. P. McBurney place, and it has been cut into 25-foot store lots for the erection of business houses. The present tenant, Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, it was reported Friday, had been given notice that the house would not be rented after the fall.

This neighborhood is due to have more improvements later on. The owners of the northeast corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets—John G. and B. Frank Bell and Wallace Boyd—have had separate bonds for title executed on the M. L. Bates place, and are expected either to subdivide or improve. Four business lots will be 25 by 100 on Peachtree and two will be 45 by 100 on Sixth street.

The Raoul homestead across the street will probably be torn down before a great while. Mrs. Mary W. Raoul, the owner and present occupant, has bought a large lot in Druid Hills and will build there.

The old Ryan place at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Seventh streets passed into the hands of Clyde L. King and others last December, and this is also said to be marked for subdivision. This lot is 100 by 200 feet.

There has been considerable trading on the place of Dr. J. Scott Todd on the east side of Peachtree between the Bates and Ryan homes, and the home of Dr. Joseph Jacobs was put up for sale, but later withdrawn from the market.

Announcement that John D. Little anticipates encroachments on his handsome place at the northwest corner of Peachtree and Eighth streets and will build on Pace's Ferry road emphasises the anxiety which pioneer residents feel over the advance of business. Among the residents in the neighborhood of the proposed Huntley improvement are Christopher L. Stoney, General R. K. Evans, Junius G. Oglesby, Jr., Frank Hawkins, Mrs. Louise Calhoun, Joseph Cooper and others.

Organizing $500,000 Concern.

A new $500,000 concern for the manufacture of farming implements is being organized in Atlanta, and real estate men are looking for a desirable site for it with railroad frontage.

This is the Barwick Implement company, which has applied to the Superior Court for a charter througs Smith & Hastings, attorneys. The incorporators are J. P. Armstrong, of Richmond County, and J. W. Barwick and Garnett McMillan, of Fulton.

Install Renting Department.

Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents, will soon install a renting department in connection with their sales and loan business and publish a weekly rent bulletin.

Realty Men on Move.

Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners and a leading realty man, returned to Atlanta Thursday and was in his office Friday after a vacation of two weeks. He will presid at the meeting of the commissioners at the courthouse Saturday morning, when some important business is to be transacted. The monthly meeting of the board is due Wednesday, August 6.

Frank Adair, of the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency, has returned from Europe. J. H. Ewings and E. S. Rankin, of the Smith & Ewing Agency, are leaving Friday for New York, where they will go to bring capital to Atlanta.

Harris G. White, Charles P. Glover and S. B. Turman are expected to return Monday from the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges at Winnipeg.

Ornamental Work Rushed.

Workmen are busy completing the ornamental terra cotta job on the Healey Building, and should be able to go ahead in a week with the exterior walls above the second floor. The Healy Building is shaping up nicely and in a month very little of the steel work will be seen.

Building Permits.

$2,000—S. W. Sullivan, 196 Holderness street, one-story frame dwelling. Day work.

$1,500—Same to same, No. 29 Milledge avenue.

$1,250—S. Goldstein, 81 Connally street, addition to store. Wyche Construction Company.

PRISON REFORM BILLS PASSED BY SENATE

One Provides for Probation in Minor Cases—Other Allows Intermediate Sentence.

With the concurrence of the State Prison Board and of many Superior Court judges of Georgia, the Senate has passed two measures designed to change greatly the methods of dealing with convicts.

They do not interfere with the system of working convicts on the road. In fact, Chairman Davisson, of the Prison Board, believes the changes will increase the efficiency of the convicts in road building. But the acts change the attitude of the State toward the convict and give the latter a chance to work out his own salvation.

The first measure legalizes the right of the judge to suspend sentence and provides that an adult for whom sentence has been suspended may be freed on probation. The second measure provides indeterminate sentence.

The first act passed the Senate unanimously and the second by a vote of 27 to 3. Both have been recommended for passage by the House committees. So far as is known no opposition has developed.

The bills sound complicated because of the various safeguards and restrictions thrown around the proposed changes, but their operation is simple.

The probation bill means the trial court has a right to suspend sentence and yet exercise a supervision over the sentence. For instance, when a man is sentenced for abandonment of family, the judge, if he deems it wise, can sentence the man to the chain-gang, and then let him go free on probation on condition that he goes to work and supports his family.

By the same method a first offender can be given a second chance, and yet can be kept under the restraining eye of the court. It is an application in a limited way of the children's court probation system to adults.

The indeterminate sentence bill is equally simple. After excluding lifetermers, persons previously convicted of felony or convicted for criminal assault or attempted criminal assault, it provides a sentence for an indeterminate period instead of a fixed number of years. Then the convict's behavior determines whether he gets out at the end of the minimum time, or stays in to the maximum.

J. Ham Lewis Calls For 'Fathers' Day'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, has come to the conclusion that the "Old Man" of the family has not received proper recognition from a grateful country. He announced to-day his intention to introduce a bill setting aside July 29 as "Fathers' Day." Already there is a "Mothers' Day" and a "Children's Day."

"The Old Man," said the Senator, "pays all the bills. On cold winter mornings he gets up to light the fire. In summer he works like a horse in mowing the lawn. His lot is not a happy one. He deserves recognition."

Aviator Quells Fire 4,000 Feet in the Air

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—"I thought I was a goner," said W. C. Robinson, an aviator, as he related his feelings while he was fighting a fire that threatened to destroy his aeroplane 4,000 feet above Chicago's business district.

Crowds along Michigan Boulevard and aviators at Cicero flying field watching through glasses thought he was a "goner," too. But Robinson, alone in the flaming aeroplane, fought the fire with a hand chemical while he made a perfect descent and landed just as the planes collapsed.

Mrs. Gardner has been visiting the King family several months, and according to King caused trouble between him and his wife. Mother-in-law refused to leave when requested to do so, and King obtained the injunction.

The Tennessee Copper Company, operating at Ducktown, Ga., was notified Saturday of a one-year extension in which to eliminate the smoke nuisance that farmers in that section said had ruined the crops. The extension was secured by an amendment to the Wright resolution by the Senate, which was concurred in by the House Friday.

WOMAN FINDS BIG SURPRISE IN A WANT AD

Expects to Pay for Hauling Away Shrubs and Gets Five Dollars for It Instead.

"No, there isn't a thing I want that a want ad would bring me," said a North Side woman to a Georgian want ad contestant as he chatted with her on her front veranda. "Unless I could get rid of that unsightly big shrub in the front yard. It cuts off my view and I'd like to pay a man to take it it up and haul it away."

"I believe you can do better than that," said the contestant, who knew something of plants. "Let me sell it for you."

And next afternoon there came a couple just completing a new home who wanted to adorn their lawn, and they gladly paid $5 for the shrub and bore the expense of moving it. And that's what a want ad will do.

The contestants now at work are running across a world of human interest stories. They find many strange "wants" and many queer situations. But they are rounding up the ads.

Contestants who are not informing their friends about the race are overlooking their best opportunity. They should tell every acquaintance, for everybody is using want ads and every ad might mean a hundred or two votes for a friend just as well as not. The Want Ad Man will show contestants how to secure the friends' aid if you'll ask him.

And if you haven't entered the contest now is the time. You still have an excellent chance to get a start.

EVERGLADES BEING DRAINED RAPIDLY

Lands Formerly Valueless Now Worth Large Sum, Says W. E. Hall, Atlanta Geologist.

Vital interest throughout the United States is being taken in the drainage of the Florida Everglades. Warren E. Hall, district engineer of the Geological Survey stationed in Atlanta, whose territory embraces the southeastern portion of the United States, made a two weeks' survey of the heart of the great swamps in company with M. O. Leighton, E. T. Perkins and Isham Randolph, members of the Florida Everglades Commission. Mr. Hall declares great work is being done in regard to draining off the water, thus making thousands of acres of land formerly valueless now worth large sums.

The Government is taking an active hand in furnishing information which will be of great assistance to the commission in figuring out the various cuts to be made for canals. Nine Government stations have been established in the Everglades.

"While in Florida assisting the Commission to determine the feasibility of draining portions of the Everglades," said Mr. Hall," I saw only a small amount of the work previously done. It was most pleasing and satisfactory as far as I could determine from the reports and my personal observations."

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—In absence of Liverpool cables and general showers over the larger part of the Western belt, resulted in the cotton market opening weaker to-day, first prices at a net decline of 4 to 18 points from Friday's closing quotations. Good showers were reported over the East and Central portions of Texas.

The market was long after yesterday's upturn and there was much early pressure from room sources. Business was active. New crop positions were freely offered, but very little cotton changed hands and prices suffered an additional decline of 10 to 14 points in most active positions from the opening range. Liverpool cabled that Manchester was practically idle, and that spinners and manufacturers are cautious.

Throughout the short session low levels were sustained in response to a constant flow of long cotton.

In addition to Texas rains, many of the more conservative element contend that the Government failed to give the crop as high percentage as it deserved. They also contend that the benefit of the recent rains should have been made up in the report, but the percentage given by the Bureau did not indicate such had been added.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 19 to 20 points from the final quotations of Friday.

The New Orleans Times-Demorrat says: "Nobody guessed the Bureau crop condition figure low enough, consequently everybody spent the last half of the session explaining somebody's error. A multitude admitted bad judgment. Many accepted the showing as bullish. A few expressed the belief the Government had erred. But the market is so restricted by the fear of adverse legislation that very little trading was generated by the Government's figure of 79.6, which is 4 below the ten-year-average. Because of the low Bureau, bulls attached much importance to the dry weather in Texas and Oklahoma since July 25, and exploited the claim that further deterioration has taken place in those States since the compilation of the Bureau's data.

"On the other hand, big crop people dug into the record and found that between April 15 and July 25 the Texas rainfall amounted in 1913 to 7.53 inches, in 1912 to 7.59 inches, in 1911 to 7.56 inches. From these figures they drew the deduction that the western plant, which they say has a good tap root, can not now be suffering more than normally, and that the crop outlook on the whole is really excellent. However, the consumer of cotton these days seems to pin greater faith to the significance of Government utterances on the condition of the crop than does the middleman. He is also slower to act. Thus, to-day or Monday the market may show strength as the result of buying for consumers' account."

Bailed Out, All Right, But by Stomach Pump

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—There was no chance for Max Rubin, in jail, to be bailed out in the usual way. Still he wanted to get out, even if his next summer resort had to be the county hospital.

He pretended to have swallowed bichloride of mercury tablets and was bailed out with a stomach pump. Indeed, he was bailed out so many times that he finally admitted that he had not taken the poison at all.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—The advancing tendency of corn prices was unchecked at the opening to-day, there being nothing in the news coming forward to warrant lower prices for this cereal. Continued dry weather prevails over the corn belt, although temperatures are more seasonable than for several days past. Shorts were the best buyers in the pit at the opening and prices were 1⅛ to 1¼c higher than ruled at yesterday's close. Reports received here stated that farmers in many instances were feeding wheat because of the scarcity of corn.

The strength and higher prices ruling in corn carried wheat ¼ to ⅜c higher, September selling at ⅞c higher. There was a holiday at Liverpool. Reports showed weather in the Northwest clear and favorable for maturing the crop. Receipts at both Northwestern points, as well as Winnipeg, were light.

Oats gained ½ to ⅝c on poor thrashing returns, although the strength in corn also proved a help in this market.

Bearish construction was placed on the semi-monthly reports on hog products, and this, coupled with a weak hog market, caused provisions to sell lower.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "A good many wheat traders think that with corn advancing, and Southwestern receipts of wheat declining present values are low enough. Conservative commission houses are advising against short sales, except on bulges. That a bull market is on in corn is certain, but how long it will last depends upon the weather. Every day of continued drouth reduces crop possibilities. The general belief is that without rain higher prices will result. Sentiment in oats is mostly bullish, and traders are looking for them to do better unless corn breaks."

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: "Wheat—We prefer long side of the market on weak spots.

"Corn—It is possible that some holders liquidate rather than take chances on precipitation over Sunday, although at the moment there seems to be very slight prospect of rain.

"Oats—Heavy covering by shorts was a prominent factor yesterday, but there was considerable outside buying."

10 PER CENT DIVIDEND DECLARED.

GREENSBORO, GA., Aug. 2.—The Bank of White Plains held its annual stockholders meeting to-day, and declared a 10 per cent dividend, which is considered as remarkable for this section in view of the financial condition for the past twelve months. John L. Walker was re-elected president, C. C. King vice president, W. C. Davidson cashier and T. C. King assistant cashier. The same board of directors was re-elected.

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—There was no improvement in speculative conditions during the early trading in the stock market to-day. Business continued of a listless character. There was a further sagging off of prices. Reading, Union Pacific and Amalgamated yielded about ½, with smaller losses in Steel, Southern Pacific and St. Paul.

About the only buying consisted of covering by shorts and when this was completed a heavier tone generally prevailed.

The London market was closed owing to a bank holiday.

The curb market was steady.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

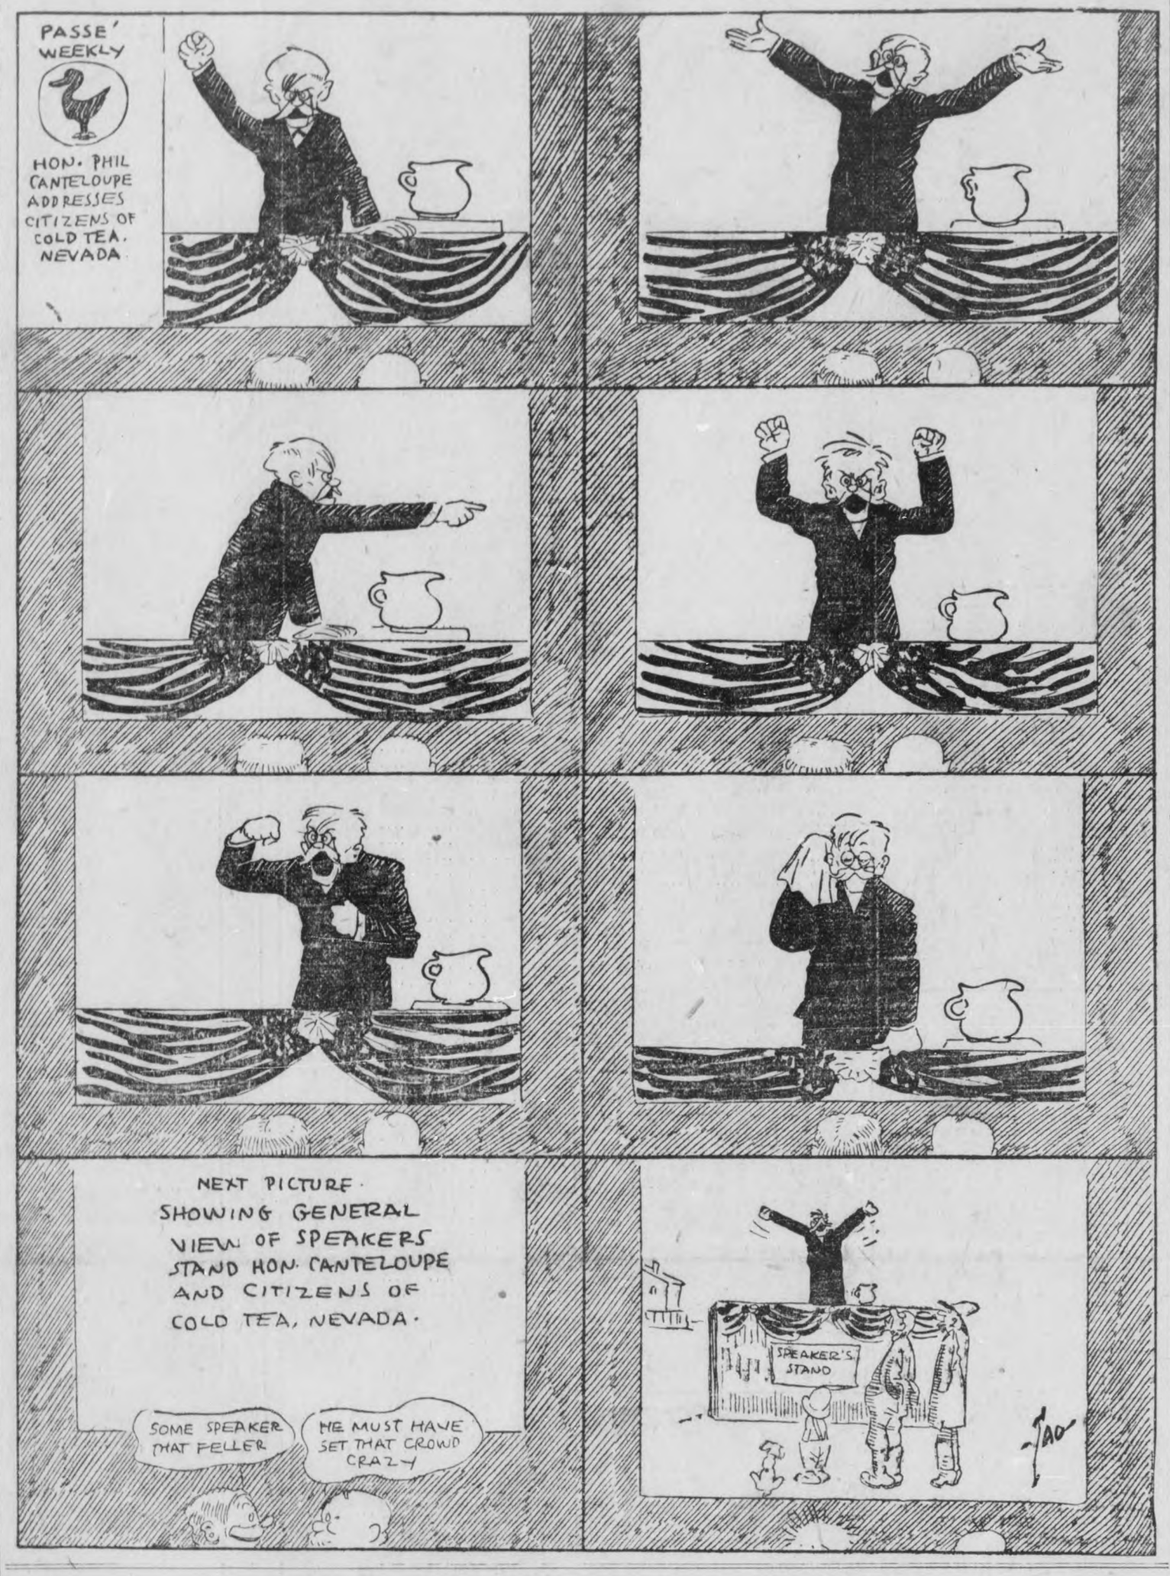

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the fact that in consequence of the judicial murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and Progress.

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at the slightest sprinkling of rain! A sultry March day bring him out, like a hibernating fly buzzing round a Christmas hearth, but a touch of returning frost sends him scurrying under ground. A golden day in November plays another trick upon his instinct, and out he comes from the mud, and hobbles to the feet of a good old lady whom he has known for thirty years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all his movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaises, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

THE PRICE HE PAID

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn,
By the sins of their fathers scarred.

DOUBLE DEAL CHARGED IN TAX BILL

Wohlwender Declares Sheppard Let Amendments Die After Agreeing to Them.

Efforts to obtain a reconsideration of the Sheppard substitute to the Lipscomb tax reform bill, which was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 107 to 59 after an all-day session Friday, will be made within two weeks, and probably before the bill is sent to the Senate.

Representative McMichael of Marion County, whose amendment providing tax discoverers to work with the county boards provided by the Sheppard bill, was defeated, served notice that he will make a motion to reconsider.

An amendment by Mr. Nunnally of Floyd, which makes the State Comptroller General a sort of balance wheel between the taxpayer and the county boards, also is likely to get a new trial.

State Board Men Favor Move.

It is understood the members of the House who favor the State board idea will support Mr. McMichael in his attempt to get a reconsideration of the bill, and prospects are considered good for the success of the movement. It was the State board advocates who passed the bill Friday.

More of Mr. Sheppard's followers voted against his bill than voted for it, and without the support of the State board advocates, who acted on the basis that half a loaf was better than no bread, the bill would have been lost.

The insurrection among the Sheppard forces was led by Messrs. Wimberly of Bibb, Wohlwender of Muscogee and McMichael of Marion, and was started after Mr. Sheppard got through two amendments to his own bill, which Mr. Wimberly declared takes away all powers from the county boards.

Mr. Wohlwender voted against the Sheppard bill and charged Mr. Sheppard with double dealing. He said the situation was this:

Failed to Give Signal.

The State board advocates agreed to favor the Sheppard bill as amended by Mr. Sheppard in the hope that it could be amended by the Senate to provide adequate tax revision. The members led by Mr. Wohlwender, Mr. Nunnally and Mr. McMichael agreed to support the bill on its final passage if the amendments offered by Nunnally and McMichael were adopted.

Mr. Sheppard, they claim, agreed, and when they came to a vote, he was to hold up his left hand as a signal, and the amendments were to go through. When the amendments were offered, however, Mr. Sheppard gazed steadily out of the window—and the amendments were voted down.

Then Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender led a fight against the adoption of the substitute, but lost.

On the passage of the bill by substitute Mr. Wimberly and Mr. Wohlwender continued their fight, but the State board people, realizing the Sheppard bill was probably their only chance for any kind of tax revision measure in the House, rallied to its support.

Dr. Stovall, of Elbert County, who practically destroyed the original Lipscomb bill with his amendments, and who has advocated the Sheppard bill heretofore, lined up with opponents of all tax revision Friday, voting against the Sheppard bill.

Americans Fleeing Mexico Fill Eight Trains—Insurrectos to Fight Till Huerta Is Deposed.

EL PASO, TEXAS, Aug. 2.—The last of the Americans in Chihuahua City were being brought into El Paso to-day by special trains over the Mexican National road, guarded by 1,200 Federal soldiers under Colonel Mancilla. Eight train loads of refugees have been brought out of the Mexican city. Fifty Americans huddled in one coach arrived here last night after being three days on the way.

The refugees said they had assurances from Governor Carranza, head of the Constitutionalists, that Americans and other foreigners in all the states where his troops are fighting Federals, will be protected. Carranza added that the Constitutionalists will not accept any proposals for peace until Huerta has been deposed.

Woman Halts Plan To Change Street Name; Wins Delay

McDaniel street received a new lease on life Friday afternoon when the Streets Committee of the General Council heeded the protest of Miss Susie Wells, a property owner, who, single-handed, fought the resolution to change the name of the street to Oxford Terrace.

"You can't improve the morals or change the color of the people by changing the name of the street they live on," declared Miss Wells in reply to Representative Bob Blackburn, who charged that McDaniel street, in certain sections, was "disreputable."

Members of the Council committee, including those who had practically made up their minds to vote for the change, saw the point and voted to postpone action two weeks. Alderman James W. Maddox, it is understood, will aid Miss Wells in her unique fight.

The Senate Committee on the Western and tAlantic Railroad has reported favorably on Senator Sweat's resolution providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate the proposed extension or re-leasing of the road. The resolution has been read the second time in the Senate and probably will come up for final action Monday.

The resolution provides for a commission of seven members—two Senators, three Representatives and two citizens to be appointed by the Governor. The commission will be organized immediately upon adjournment of the Legislature. The report of the commission will be filed at the next session.

'Drink Buttermilk, Not Wine, in Clubs,' Judge Urges Women

Buttermilk as a social beverage for women, who visit Atlanta's locker clubs is advocated by Recorder Nash Broyles.

The Recorder especially recommended buttermilk to Minnie L. Brown, a young woman giving her address at 14-A West Baker street and her occupation as a bookkeeper, when she was arraigned Friday afternoon for drunkenness. She said she became intoxicated when she visited the Theatrical Club with a man.

"You should have called for buttermilk instead of wines and liquors," said the Recorder. "If buttermilk were kept on tap in all of these locker clubs to be served to women instead of strong drink, women would be better off."

Takes 500 Pounds of Fat Off 40 Patients

Special Cable to The Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 2.—Professor Nagelschmidt performed two operations in a London hospital to-day with his wonderful diathermic treatment, in which he employs both medicine and surgery. In the former electric rays of very high temperature are passed through the diseased part. In the surgical part of the treatment the current reaches the tissues from the edge of a knife-like application which acts as a bloodless cautery.

The professor has used his treatment for the reduction of obesity, and says 40 patients were deprived of an aggregate of 500 pounds of fat.

Forty-five stings are expected to give him permanent relief. Frank Johnson, who has a bee farm near the city, guaranteed to-day a perfect cure, with no charge for the bees.

The treatment will be made at Johnson's farm, where 45 bees will be let loose in a closed room with the Mayor. Only his face and hands will be protected.

Civic Club to Ask Council to Shelter Famous Old Engine

Despite the threatening weather, the Third Ward Civic Club held an enthusiastic meeting Friday afternoon at the bandstand in Grant Park.

Improvements of Grant Park were discussed. It was decided to ask the City Council to erect a shelter for the famous old engine, "Texas," a relic of Civil War days. At present the engine is exposed to the elements. A tablet bearing its name and history is also desired.

The present enrollment of the club includes over 400 women of the Third Ward. The officers are: Mrs. John Justis, 616 Woodward avenue, president; Mrs. Boland, Park avenue, vice president; Mrs. A. S. Wilson, 79 Augusta avenue, secretary, and Mrs. John B. Crossland, 57 Park avenue, treasurer.

"Of course," he added, "I consulted Miss Wilson on the subject, and she approved my choice of a career."

Offers Pearl Riches To Garrison; Arrested

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Frank Buffington, a pearl fisher, enlivened Secretary of War Garrison's visit here by offering to make him very rich. Buffington was locked up.

What Does John D. Care for Expenses? Lets Rain Hit Hat

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—John D. Rockefeller scorned the umbrella which was held over him when he left Euclid Avenue Baptist Church and allowed a fine drizzle to patter down on his straw hat while waiting for friends to get into his big touring car.

The Rev. Dr. Carter Helm Jones, of Louisville, Ky., who preached on "Moral Assets," told the congregation that in the Christian life they were rich indeed, but that earthly riches do not amount to much, anyway. Mr. Rockefeller enthusiastically congratulated the minister after the sermon.

Grasshopper Pest a Blessing--Incognito

JETMORE, KANS., Aug. 2.—Elmer Mather, a farmer, who lives near Burdette, has an extensive irrigation plant.

He put in eighteen acres of beets, which were doing fine, when they attacked by the grasshopper plague. Mr. Mather proceeded on the work of improvising a trap out of a header and pans of water and crude oil.

He not only saved the crop, but caught 119 bushels of hoppers, the greater part of which he has dried, sacked and stored away for chicken feed for winter use.

J. Ham Lewis Calls For 'Fathers' Day'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, of Illinois, has come to the conclusion that the "Old Man" of the family has not received proper recognition from a grateful country. He announced to-day his intention to introduce a bill setting aside July 29 as "Fathers' Day." Already there is a "Mothers' Day" and a "Children's Day."

"The Old Man," said the Senator, "pays all the bills. On cold winter mornings he gets up to light the fire. In summer he works like a horse in mowing the lawn. His lot is not a happy one. He deserves recognition."

DEFENSE PLANS HOT ASSAULT ON HARRIS' EVIDENCE FOR STATE

The State Saturday continued to strengthen the web of circumstantial evidence in which it seeks to emmesh Leo M. Frank by preparing to introduce additional testimony showing Mary Phagan arrived at the National Pencil Factory at 12:05 or before.

The way had virtually been cleared for Jim Conley, the negro sweeper, to be put on the stand, but according to Solicitor Dorsey the negro will very likely be held over until next week.

As the case stood Saturday morning, these are the strong links in the State's case:

Mary Phagan left her home at 11:45, according to her mother, after having eaten some cabbage.

The girl arrived at the factory between 12:05 and 12:10, according to Frank's own statement before the Coroner's jury.

Monteen Stover looked into Frank's office between 12:05 and 12:10 and says he was not there.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies that the condition of the cabbage taken from the girl's stomach shows conclusively that she died within about half an hour after it was eaten. This would make the time of death about 12:10—a few minutes before or after.

Claims Negro Is Eliminated.

Mrs. Arthur White testifies that when she left the factory at about 1 o'clock a negro, presumably Conley, was sitting on a box on the first floor. This, according to the State, eliminates the negro as the slayer, because, according to its expert evidence, the girl must have been killed some time before that.

The defense's attack on all this testimony and reasoning was expected to be spirited and bitter, and until it has been made it is impossible to determine how much weight testimony like Dr. Harris' purporting to fix almost to the minute the time it takes to digest cabbage will have with the jury.

Helen Ferguson, a companion of Mary Phagan and an employee of the factory, was the first witness to be called when court resumed Saturday morning. The greatest crowd of the week besieged the courthouse clamoring for admission.

Pay Refused.

Solicitor Dorsey examined Miss Ferguson.

Witness said she was an employee of the factory.

Q. Were you at work at the factory Friday, April 25?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you work that day or just go there?—A. I went to the office about 10 o'clock.

Q. What conversation did you have there?—A. I asked for Mary Phagan's money and was told that I could not get it. I talked to Mr. Frank.

Q. Did you ever get her pay before?—A. Yes, but not from Mr. Frank.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you know who paid off?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever get Mary Phagan's money from Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Did you work in the metal department with Mary?—A. Yes.

The witness left the stand and was followed by Policeman R. L. Wagner.

The testimony of Dr. Harris came as a strating climax to Friday's session of the Frank trial. The State had been getting along only indifferently well up to this point.

Darley Proves Disappointment.

N. V. Darley, associated with Frank in the supervision of the factory's administration, had given promise of being one of the State's star witnesses, but he later had proved a disappointment from the prosecution's viewpoint and under the cross-examination of Reuben Arnold had developed about as good a witness for the defense as the State has called so far.

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees who was working on the fourth floor of the factory the day of the crime, possibly added a weak link in the chain of circumstantial evidence that the State is welding about Frank, but the most that she could say was that Frank was startled when she entered his office at 12:30—just after the girl had been murdered, according to the State's theory—and that Frank did not put on his hat and coat to leave as he said he was going to do when he came to the fourth floor at 12:50 to tell the three persons there to go or be locked in.

One piece of her testimony which is expected to play an important part in the later development of the State's theory was that she saw a negro lounging by the steps as she left a few minutes before 1 o'clock.

Four Others Called.

The other witnesses of the day were Call Officer W. F. Anderson, Stenographer L. F. Parry, Albert McKnight, husband of the servant girl in the home where Frank and his parents lived, and G. C. February, private secretary to Chief of Detectives Lanford.

Anderson told of his efforts to get Frank on the telephone the morning of the tragedy. Under cross-examination, he was led to repudiate in part some of the testimony he had given at the Coroner's inquest. Before the Coroner he had said that the negro Newt Lee could not have seen the body of Mary Phagan from the point where he declared he stood when he made his gruesome discovery.

Attorney Rosser called his previous testimony to his attention, but the policeman asserted that he was mistaken when he made his first statement and that it now was his opinion that Lee could have seen the body all right.

Parry was called to identify the testimony of Leo Frank before the Coroner's jury and later by the defense was asked to identify that of Lee and other witnesses and declar if it was a corrct transcript of what they had said at the preliminary inquiry.

Gets in Frank's Story.

Solicitor Dorsey called Febuary to get in evidence the first statement that Frank made to the police after he was taxen to headquarters. In this statement Frank said that the Phagan girl came to the factory for her money between 12:05 and 12:10, possibly 12:07.

McKnight's most important testimony was that he had been in the Frank home at 1:30 the afternoon of April 26, and had seen Frank come home and rush away without getting anything to eat. He said that looking into a mirror from his vantage point in the kitchen he had obtained a good view of Frank as he entered the house.

He declared that all Frank did was to go to the sideboard and a moment later leave the house. Frank at the Coroner's inquest said that when he went home at noon he ate luncheon with his father-in-law and lay down for a few minutes on the lounge. McKnight said he had a good view of the table and that Frank did not sit down.

Darley, after admitting to Solicitor Dorsey that Frank was nervous, pale and trembling the day after the tragedy, added under cross-examination that this condition was nothing unusual for the young factory superintendent. He said that frequently when Frank was excited he ran his hands through his hair and that he had seen Frank a thousand times rub his hands nervously.

He also declared that on two occasions in particular he had witnessed Frank in the same condition he was in Sunday at the factory. One was when Frank saw a street car run down a child, and another when he had an altercation with one of the factory officials.

Darley testified it was nothing un-

LUTHER ROSSER EXEMPLIFYING THE GENTLE ART OF CROSS-EXAMINING

To the casual spectator who feels no personal interest in the outcome of the Frank trial, the one great feature of the courtroom is the cross-examining of the State's witnesses by Luther Z. Rosser. Rosser roars. Rosser whispers, Rosser threatens, Rosser pleads, Rosser insinuates, Rosser cajoles, Rosser jests.

At the left is shown Rosser holding his arms out as though to receive and clasp to his breast the answer about to come to a difficult question he has put.

At the right is Rosser grinning sarcastically. A witness for the State has just said that his memory was as fresh after two years as two days.

Rosser gently starting a battery of questions.

Rosser thundering, his face clouded by anger.

STATE FORGES NEW LINK IN CHAIN AGAINST FRANK

asual for scratch pads like the one found in the basement near Mary Phagan's body to be discovered in any part of the factory. He said the same of the pay envelopes like the one found by Mary Phagan's machine. He asserted that the envelopes were scattered on every floor of the factory every pay day. A ripple of merriment was caused when Attorney Arnold, referring to R. P. Barrett and his discoveries of pay envelope, blood spots and strands of hair, designated him as "Christopher Columbus Barrett."

After a sharp fight between the attorneys, Attorneys Arnold and Rosser succeeded in getting before the jury that other persons as well as Leo Frank were excited and nervous after the tragedy. Judge Roan was inclined at first to sustain the prosecution's objections, but later decided that testimony of this sort might be admitted in order that the defense might show that these signs of nervousness need not be taken as indications of guilt.

Will 5 Ounces of Cabbage Help Convict Leo M. Frank?

Are five and a half ounces of cabbage to be the principal factor in sending a man to the gibbet?

If the prosecution is warranted in its belief in the vital and incriminating importance of the testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, director of the State Board of Health, this is exactly the outcome to be expected in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of little Mary Phagan.

It remains, however, for the State to show explicitly just how the sensational statements made last Friday afternoon by the medical expert any more clearly connect Leo Frank with the terrible crime than they connect Jim Conley, the negro, who was skulking in the National Pencil Factory at the same time. The testimony of Mrs. Arthur White is relied upon to do that very thing.

Harris Testimony Is State's Best Card

The Harris testimony was without doubt the highest card the prosecution has played since the trial of Frank started. No other evidence ever has been brought out in the three months of the murder mystery that fixed so definitely and apparently so far beyond dispute the time that the pretty factory girl met her death.

As the testimony stands, no opportunity having been given for cross-examination or refutation, it is easily the most damning that has been placed before the jury. It will remain so until the lawyers for the defense are able to attack the doctor's testimony or are given the opportunity to attach to it a significance entirely different than that advanced by the State.

Dr. Harris analyzed the contents of the murdered girl's stomach. He found there 160 cub centimeters, or about five and two-fifths ounces, of cabbage and biscuit. This was the meal Mrs. J. W. Coleman, Mary's mother, testified that her daughter had eaten just before she left home on the day of the tragedy.

Met Death in Half An Hour After Dinner.

The process of digestion had barely begun. Dr. Harris showed two specimens of cabbage which had been in healthy men's stomachs for an hour. That had been reduced to an emulsion. The cabbage taken from the stomach of Mary Phagan still showed the texture of the vegetable's leaves. The digestive fluids seemed to have acted scarcely at all. The presumption was, therefore, said Dr. Harris, that the little girl had met her death within half an hour after she had eaten the simple meal at her home in Bellwood and had left for the pencil factory. At the most, that was three-quarters of an hour.

Dr. Harris gave his testimony with a professional assurance, the effect of which can be counteracted only by the uttermost skill of Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold. He was positive that the girl was killed within a half or three-quarters of an hour after she had eaten.

This meant that she was attacked and murdered between 12:05, which is about the time the State believes she entered the factory, and 12:20. It was at 12:05 that Monteen Stover said she entered and found Frank absent from his office.

The courtroom was hushed as Dr. Harris described the wounds of the girl in a manner that vividly portrayed the State's theory of hom the girl met her death.

She was attacked near the lathing machine. There was a struggle. Her assailant, infuriated at her resistance or fearful of the approach of persons, struck her fiercely over the right eye. Dr. Harris described the injury. It must have been made with the fist, he said, or with some soft instrument, as there were few signs of abrasion of the skin, only a swelling and discoloration.

The blow felled the girl to the floor. She struck her head against some hard substance. Dr. Harris indicated this by testifying that the skin above the wound on the back of the head had been shoved upward slighty, a circumstance which woud hardly have obtained had the blow on the back of the head been delivered by a club or other instrument.

Strangulation Theory Given Added Weight.

Further to clinch the State's indictment, charging strangulation, Dr. Harris was positive that the blow on the back of the head could not have caused death. It remained for the assailant to choke the unconscious little girl. There were indications of a criminal attempt before the girl's death. Of all this the medical expert told while Leo Frank looked on him with the same speculative expression he had given the other witnesses. The accused showed neither by the flicker of an eye lid nor the paling of a cheek that the graphic reproduction of what the State regarded as the circumstances of the gruesome crime had affected him in the least.

If the prosecution is able to establish the accuracy of the conclusions reached by Dr. Harris as a result of his analysis and examination, it then will ask:

"If Jim Conley is the murderer of Mary Phagan and attacked her between 12:05 and 12:20, how did he happen to be dozing on a box by the side of the stairs on the first floor when Mrs. Arthur White came down stairs at about 12:50?"

As it stands, the testimony of Dr. Harris is not by any means conclusive. It is, however, far the most damaging evidence that has been submitted.

An interested public is awaiting the answer that the defense will make.

EVERGLADES BEING DRAINED RAPIDLY

Lands Formerly Valueless Now Worth Large Sum, Says W. E. Hall, Atlanta Geologist.

Vital interest throughout the United States is being taken in the drainage of the Florida Everglades. Warren E. Hall, district engineer of the Geological Survey stationed in Atlanta, whose territory embraces the southeastern portion of the United States, made a two weeks' survey of the heart of the great swamps in company with M. Mr. Hall declares great work is being done in regard to draining off the water, thus making thousands of acres of land formerly valueless now worth large sums.

The Government is taking an active hand in furnishing information which will be of great assistance to the commission in figuring out the various cuts to be made for canals. Nine Government stations have been established in the Everglades.

"While in Florida assisting the Commission to determine the feasibility of draining portions of the Everglades," said Mr. Hall," I saw only a small amount of the work previously done. It was most pleasing and satisfactory as far as I could determine from the reports and my personal observations."

JUDGE ATTACKS DUAL MORAL STANDARD

Frees Deserted Mother of Coal Operator's Two Children After She Shot at Him.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—"Women sin emotionally, unthinkingly; men often sin calculatingly, knowing they can escape penalties," said Police Magistrate Daniel Winters in discharging a woman who shot twice at, but missed, a man she alleged was the father of her two children and who cast her aside and married another after she had lived with him eleven years.

The woman is Miss Alice Hopkins, aged 33 years, and the man is C. H. Wisser, 60, a wealthy coal operator.

"I do not advocate shooting, but the peculiar circumstances gives this woman a great deal of latitude, said the magistrate. If judges would treat man and woman exactly alike, I imagine there would be less masculine license.

Man Should Not Escape.

"It is not fair that a woman should be an outcast and a man escape blame. In the case of a man and a woman about town, except where the man started the woman on her downward course, it is different.

"But when a man, as it seems Wisser has done, lives with a woman as his wife, and that woman has been faithful to him and has borne him children whom she is rearing to the best of her ability, then that woman should get at least as much consideration as the man.

"Except for the perfunctory fact that no marriage ceremony has been performed, he and she are man and wife, and even he does not deny that she has been faithful.

Why Should She Bear Blame?

"Then why, in the name of justice, should she bear all the blame? There is something wrong about a social system that accepts such a man and ostracizes this woman.

"Some say I have established a precedent in the Wisser-Hopkins case. If I have, I mean to follow it up. I do not mean I would desire to condone faults of women and punish only those of men, but I would like to feel that I could be fair and square to both, and judge them from a standpoint not influenced by sex difference."

WOMAN FINDS BIG SURPRISE IN A WANT AD

Expects to Pay for Hauling Away Shrubs and Gets Five Dollars for It Instead.

"No, there isn't a thing I want that a want ad would bring me," said a North Side woman to a Georgian want ad contestant as he chatted with her on her front veranda. "Unless Icould get rid of that unsightly big shrub in the front yard. It cuts off my view and I'd like to pay a man to take it it up and haul it away."

"I believe you can do better than that," said the contestant, who knew something of plants. "Let me sell it for you."

And next afternoon there came a couple just completing a new home who wanted adorn their lawn, and they gladly paid $5 for the shrub and bore the expense of moving it. And that's what a want ad will do.

The contestants now at work are running across a world of human interest stories. They find many strange "wants" and many queer situations. But they are rounding up the ads.

Contestants who are not informing their friends about the race are overlooking their best opportunity. They should tell every acquaintance, for everybody is using want ads and every ad might mean a hundred or two votes for a friend just as well as not. The Want Ad Man will show contestants how to secure the friends' aid if you'll ask him.

And if you haven't entered the contest now is the time. You still have an excellent chance to get a start.

STATE HOPES DR. HARRIS FIXED FACT THAT FRANK HAD CHANCE TO KILL GIRL

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The testimony of Dr. Roy Harris, chairman of the State Board of Health, and one of the most learned and approved physicians in Georgia, was dramatic, both in its substance and in the manner of its delivery Friday.

It was not calculated to help Leo Frank—and it did not.

The exhibition of a portion of the contents of the dead girl's stomach, for the purpose of approximating the time of her death, held breathless the packed courthouse—and the fainting of the physician during the progress of his testimony gave a final touch of melodrama to the trial that thrilled the audience as nothing else has thus far.

Dr. Harris impressed me, too, as believing in Frank's guilt—I do not know that he does believe that way, it merely happens that he seemed so to impress me.

And if he impressed that jury as he impressed me, then the things he testified may, if the remainder of the case against Frank holds together, prove eventually to be the defendant's undoing.

Shows He Had Chance.

To be sure, the State has not yet fixed the crime definitely on Frank—but it HAS definitely shown, unless its witnesses be impeached, which is highly unlikely, that Leo Frank MIGHT have murdered Mary Phagan and that he DID have the opportunity to accomplish it.

Having shown that the OPPORTUNITY was there, and that the murder likely was consummated during the time limits of that opportunity, the remaining elements of hte case need but to be knitted properly together to make lark indeed the outlook for Frank.

Frank himself, Monteen Stover, Mrs. White and Dr. Harris—they together form a chain thus far apparently strong and dangerous!

That, from the standpoint of the defense, however, is the worst view to take of it.

It must be remembered that the defense as yet has introduced no witnesses. Such advantage as it so far has gained—and it has won many points—it has gained by wringing from the State's own witnesses matters of fact favorable to Frank.

When the defense comes to tell its story it may be confidently anticipated that additional weak points in the State's case may be discovered. The only question is, will they be found SUFFICIENTLY weak to cause the entire chain to fall apart?

Defense Seeks Weakest Link.

A chain is, of course, only as strong as its weakest link. Will the defense be able to locate the State's weakest link? And having located it, will it, can it be strained to the point of giving way?

That is the perplexing and grim puzzle that Rosser and Arnold are contemplating from one standpoint and to-day Dorsey and Hooper from the other.

The black, forbidding shadow of the negro, Jim Conley, has fallen heavily athwart the courtroom in the old City Hall, where Frank is battling for his liberty, his good name and the restoration of his status as an upright and honorable man among his fellows.

The State is paving the way to the climax of its case—it is leading up, and with considerable skill and adroitness, to the test of its biggest asset or its most tremendous liability, as the case may be—Jim Conley, confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder and by many suspected of being the principal to the murder.

Somehow it seemed to me that Luther Rosser grew more and more cautious in his cross-examining Friday and Saturday, and certainly Reuben Arnold appeared to weigh well his words and carefully propound his questions.

Dorsey Has Temper in Leash.

Dorsey, too, has his tempre much more thoroughly in hand—and Hooper?

Hooper is the same as ever—smiling, calm, deliberate, rarely speaking at all, save to whisper directing words into his associate's ear now and then.

When Jim Conley is on the stand, Leo Frank will be face to face with the crisis in his trial—either Conley will leave the stand Frank's final deliverance and refuge, or his eternal damnation on earth!

For this is a battle in truth to the very death—a battle in which quarter is being neither given nor asked!

It means hope, and love, and life, and liberty to Frank, or it means——!

I looked long and earnestly into the faces of those twelve "good men and true," the "gentlemen of the jury" on Friday afternoon.

To me, the Frank jury appears to be much above the average.

A composite pictureo f it would indicate, I suspect, intelligence, level-headedness, business knowledge and poise.

If it is the sort of jury I think it is, it is just the sort of jury that should try a case of such unusual quality as the one it now has in hand.

I am assuming that a vast majority of Georgians are hoping sincerely to see the truth of this famous case established—that it is largel an abstract proposition to the average man.

The point, however, is not so much what any one of us thinks—the point is what does that JURY think?

The impressions that evidence produce are varied and sometimes marked. One never can exactly and precisely say which way it will cut.

And right here my mind goes back involuntarily to Dr. Roy Harris, and his remarkable testimony.

Undoubtedly the defense will have to put on its thinking cap, straight and firmly set, if it hopes not only to upset that testimony and discredit it as particularly and relatively in point, but to remove the profound impression it may have made upon the jury.

It is, after all, largely upon mental impression—perhaps more often than not—that jury verdicts are predicted. The psychological receptiveness of the jury frequently controls the finding, I doubt not.

If Dr. Harris' testimony has weighed heavily against Frank in the mind of the jury, the defense will find it extremely difficult to remove that weight.

The Solicitor General may have been far more astute and incisive, too, than some have thought, when, time and again, he claimed to have been entrapped by his own witnesses—that they were not now swearing the same things that a few weeks ago they sore readily enough.

Effect May Be Decisive.

If the Solicitor has managed to get it into the minds of that jury that Frank needs protection against actually damaging circumstances, that witnesses deliverately have been drilled to protect him against sinister things, that witnesses have been tampered with in his behalf—all of which things may be inferentially set up, without many genuine reasons therefor being given—then a psychological effect will have been achieved that may prove dangerous in the extreme to the defendant.

Now, I do not mean to say the State HAS succeeded in doing that, and I hardly see wherein those impressions would be warranted altogether in the minds of the jurymen, still Dorsey and Hooper are driving at SOMETHING—and it may be they are driving at that exact psychological effect!

And you never can tell.

The way of a serpent upon a rock, of an eagle in the air, and of a man with a mind—these things have been said to be the strangest of all things. But the fourth strangest thing, and there may be so many as four superlatively strange things, is the way of a jury with a defendant at bar!

Therefore, if Hooper and Dorsey have been seeking, through the clever manipulation of their own witnesses and through the still cleverer directing of the cross-examination into desired channels, and if they have succeeded, which no man possibly may know now, the art employed has been consummately far-reaching and keen.

It will brace up the amazing story of Conley wonderfully and make his tale the easier for the jury to accept as true, and it will in inverse ratio discount the defendant's statement, moreover, if the jury can be brought to that psychological status suggested in this article, if it be the true purpose of the State to bring it there.

Situation Rests on "Ifs."

There are a good many "ifs" in this idea, to be sure—but all psychological situations are builded largely upon "ifs."

That the State is undertaking to establish a psychological effect in at least one other direction, too, is evident in the way it insists, over and over, that Frank was "nervous" or "extremely nervous" just after the crime was committed—the idea being that if he was agitated it likely was because of his guilty conscience.

The State has combated this wonderfully well, in so far as the substance of its denials are concerned—and yet into this idea obtrudes the thought that maybe here, again, the State has been cleverer than the defense has imagined, by forcing the State rather to overdo its hand in that direction!

Now, these suggestions may be more or less elusive and hard to get hold of, but they are in no way impossible. Indeed, when it is remembered that the State all along has been developing a rather weak circumstantial case against Frank always to its star witness, Conley—at once both its hope and its despair—and that the story of that witness is grimly grotesque, in parts strenuously straining on the imagination, based, as it is in portions, upon admitted lies and misrepresentations, the great help and assistance to the State of a mentally receptive jury may be, and doubtless will be, appreciated immediately by the reader.

In any and every aspect of the case it is but the simple truth to say that both the State and the defense have been forced to the skating on dangerously thin ice more than once so far.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY AN IMPORTANT WITNESS

Roan Holding Scales of Justice With Steady Hand

Emotion's entire gamut is daily run on the screen of faces watching the Frank trial.

A student of facial expression can find anything he seeks by watching the throng of spectators a half hour.

A glance at one man may show a sneer of hate as bitter as gall. His neighbor in the next seat will probably be smiling in amused content as if he were witnessing the antics of his favorite comedian.

Looking to the left he may see fear as vividly depicted on a countenance as trapped felon has ever felt. And another glance might show a spectator in studious contemplation as rapt as that of a philosopher endeavoring to fathom a new frailty in human character.

Men have been mad, and shown it, during the progress of Atlanta's most famous criminal case. And men have shown that they were glad to the point of jubilation at the very same instant.

Roan Utterly Impassive.

But throughout the tedious hours and hours of the hearing, one man sits, listening to every word. And he has yet to display the fact that his emotions are any more affected by the dramatic trial in which he is a commanding figure than those of a business man going through the daily routine of his prosaic grind.

That quality shows why the man is sitting there. If he were a man to show that his feelings were swayed as the tide of battle turned first for one side and then the other, he would not be qualified for the eminent position he holds.

Judge L. S. Roan is performing the arduous duties of presiding justice in the Frank case, because the people of Fulton County recognized that he is the man of the county's 250,000 best endowed by nature to perform this task.

His attitude throughout the hearing has shown that the people chose wisely and well.

Think of his position. It is one of supreme importance just at this time, when passion and prejudice are more likely to rule than cool reasoning.

It is his work to uphold the theory that Justice is blind, and that the courts of the land are the blindfold that darkens the vision of the goddess. He must see that the scales are evenly balanced. He must be sure that the sword is sharp.

There are scores, yes hundreds, of people in Atlanta to-day convinced absolutely of Frank's guilt in the Phagan mystery, and it would take a power of inconceivable magnitude to change their mental attitude.

There are scores and hundreds right here who believe thoroughly and honestly that Frank is innocent of any crime, and is as cruelly a persecuted person as the earth has known since the days of the martyrs. And so firm is this belief that it could not be shaken by dynamite or earthquake.

No Doubt as to Fairness.

Judge Roan's position and his oath of office call on him to see that both of these classes are firmly convinced of one fact in common, and that is that the case of Leo M. Frank is being fairly, honestly and effectively tried according to the law and evidence.

When he does this, he is removing a tremendous amount of the poison in the case. People are too prone to hint that a man's money can assure him of safety in any get he may commit. People are too likely to say that law and order becomes as nothing beneath a weight of prejudice.

Every word that Judge Roan speaks is as eagerly listened to as the voice of a diva. His every action is watched as closely as those of the President of the United States are by his secret service protectors.

Therefore, in action as well as in word, the judge must be impartial. Therefore, he can not smile as one side or the other scores a point. He can not evince extraordinary interest if it is apparent that the lawyers are about to tear to shreds the story of a witness. He must make a mental picture of everything in the long-drawn-out battle in order to give his final instructions to the jury, but he must not permit this picture to be reflected on his face.

And he has not.

His rulings have been quick. They are spoken in a low voice, just loud enough for counsel and witness to hear. In rendering a decision, he rarely straightens himself from the reclining attitude he assumes in the office chair.

Heat Hard on Judge.

He sits through the long hours, his right hand waving a huge palm leaf fan, though two electric fans are turned on the bench. He needs all three, for the courtroom is stifling hot, and Judge Roan is no longer young. Occasionally he mops a hairless spot on his high forehead with a handkerchief.

Several times during each day during the duller moments of the trial, he speaks a smiling word to some member of the bar, not connected with the case, who passes the bench or exchanges pleasantries with a court attache.

But his mind is never off the burning issue that he must play so important a part in deciding.

It is remarkable to note that though the case has been in progress for five days, though so far the evidence has been purely circumstantial and that fine points have been made on admissability of testimony, there has been no single exception taken to his rulings. If the case should be decided to-day and immediately carried to the higher courts, there would be no bill of exceptions on which to base an appeal on any point of law.

Judge Roan has been on the Atlanta bench many years. He has tried practically every famous criminal case here for a decade.

A person who has followed the Frank trial does not have to look far for the answer. Atlanta believes Judge Roan best equipped for the work.

FRANK JUROR'S LIFE ONE GRAND, SWEET SONG--BUT FOR THE SUBTLE LAWYER

O. B. KEELER.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

Look him over next time you attend the Frank trial. Size up his little job. Weigh his responsibility. Consider his problems.

And then, if seeking employment, go out and sign a contract to make little ones out of big ones.

It's a more satisfactory way of earning $2 a day.

The juror's business is to collect evidence by the earful, sift the same, separate the true from the false, and make it into a verdict as between the Stat of Georgia and Leo Frank.

On the face of it, the plan is beautifully simple.

But the beauty is only skin deep.

You are recokning without the lawyers.

Here Entereth the Lawyer.

The simple-minded layman—and that rating includes the juror—starts out with the idea that the business of a lawyer is to extract evidence from the witness in available form for proper consideration by the juror.

It speedily develops that the full intent of counsel is to prevent the witness from unburdening himself in any way whatsoever. The more expensive the counsel, the less information the opposition will be able to wheedle out of its star performers.

The method of blocking is objective—that is, it is by means of objections. It appears that our system of jurisprudence takes cognizance of the juror as a mere babe in arms, not fit to assimilate the strong meat of evidence straight.

How the Juror Is Spared.

So he is sedulously raised on the bottle.

Mr. Dorsey (for example) has a witness by whom he is aching to show that Leo Frank was nervous the morning he was apprised of the tragedy. Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold are equally positive that the witness is not competent to judge if Mr. Frank was nervous. Also they are quite sure that the bottle-fed juror is utterly incapable of deciding if the witness is competent to decide if Mr. Frank was nervous.

They do not intend that the juror shall endanger his delicate thinking apparatus by grappling with any such abstruse problem.

So they fix it up this way.

Witness: "He insited on having some coffee."

Mr. Rosser: "I object to the use of the word 'insisted.' It manifestly is a conclusion of the witness, and as such has no place in the evidence. I ask that the word be ruled out."

Objections Fix the Fact.

And the court orders it ruled out, thereby fixing the circumstance firmly in the mind of the juror. And then Mr. Dorsey twists the query around and gets the witness to state that Frank asked for coffee twice at his house and once at the factory.

Just why that arangement suits the defense beter than the simple proposition that Frank insisted on the coffee is not entirely plain—to the layman.

But it seems that the juror is to be shielded from any breath of anything not bearing strictly on the guilt or innonce of the accused.

Specific and accurate information being thus at a premium, the juror probably is amazed when Mr. Rosser, vibrating with grief and indignation, protests against Detective Scott reading from some notes he made while working directly on the case.

The court also is shocked, but permits Mr. Scott to "refresh his memori" by means of the notes and then retail the product of such refreshment by word of mouth.

This is agreeable to Mr. Rosser and the court, but when Mr. Dorsey offers further to refresh Mr. Scott's somewhat wilted recollection, Mr. Rosser intimates at the top of a robust voice that such a thing shall be accomplished only over his (Mr. Rosser's) inanimate form.

And that promptly affords the bottle-fed juror some more evidence to ponder.

Mr. Dorsey insists it is his right to "lead" the witness.

The witness demands to know if he is suspected of holding back.

Mr. Dorsey declares he has been trapped by the witness, and Mr. Rosser appends the somewhat doubtful comment that Frank Hooper is a wise man.

Here Are More Problems.

Now, add this to the problems of the troubled juror:

Is Mr. Scott balking?

If so, has Mr. Dorsey the right to hold an ear of corn in front of him?

Has Mr. Dorsey been trapped?

And, in view of the foregoing, is or it not Mr. Hooper a wise man?

Other problems for the exercise of the Frank juror on the side, as it were, would include the following:

Should Mr. Dorsey be permitted to examine a witnes without interruption by Mr. Rosser?

Should Mr. Rosser be permitted to object?

If so, should Mr. Dorsey scowl while Mr. Rosser is objecting?

Does Mr. Rosser consider whisky a good remedy for indigestion?

Would He Hide Evidence?

Woud anybody think that Mr. Rosser would have anything to do with suppressing evidence, except in the regular and approved objective method prescribed by law?

Is Mr. Scott a trained sleuth?

And one more thing that tends to lend an acrobatic cast to the mental processes of the Frank juror.

Once in a while—not very often, it's true—but once in a while something gets by Mr. Rosser and Mr. Arnold. The witness may be quick on the trigger. Or Mr. Dorsey may manage to frog up a subtle query with a joker in it.

And after the storm of objection has thundered itself out and Mr. Rosser is mopping the signs of honest toil from his brow, and Mr. Dorsey is wearing an expression similar to that of a cat that knows all about what happened to the canary—why, then the court orders the stenographer to strike out the answer.

And the obliging juror is instructed to forget it.

Yes?

Would You Forget it, Too?

Just suppose that you, being an honest and hard-working juror, trying in an honest and hard-working way to extract a morsel of real information from a jungle of cross-questions and crabbed answers and objections and oratory and recrimination—suppose that the honest and hard-working witness should beat 'em to it for once, and disgorge something really interesting.

And then suppose the judge should tell you to wipe it right off your mental slate, and not remember it, or consider it, or think about it any more forever.

You would do it, would you not?

Neither would we.

The juror's life is not unmixed with care.

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

It was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast.

"Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the countryside shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fireworks.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed.

"Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stuuid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had! Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes, bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or any strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and pepper and salt to taste. Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam. Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's ori right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I ses is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. "If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instant. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering. Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name. A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us; the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Friendship is to be valued for what there is in it, not for what can be gotten out of it.—Trumbull.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it runs to it, it may run itself out of breath.

The strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other.

There is no folly equal to throwing away friendship in a world where friendship is so rare.

It is a fine thing to be yourself, and a true friend loves you most when you are?

Think less of your right to demand service from friendship and more of your sacred duty to give to it.

To be a hero, trust yourself—to be a martyr, trust the world—and if you are an idealist, trust your friend.

When your friend disappoints you it hurts—but the agony is bitter when you find yourself failing your own ideal of friendship.

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED,
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this morning," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some one of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, 'Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without tiling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your lips are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took it, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin tonight I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. It is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my price. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly. I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first; I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

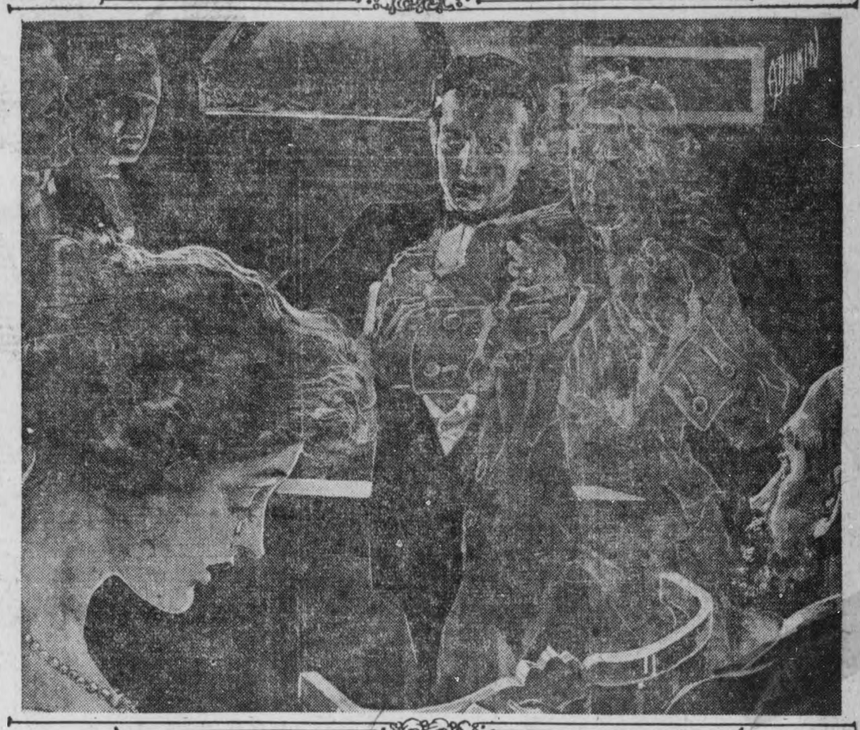

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before * * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

Confessions of a Medium

(Spirit Transference in Clairvoyancy)

An Expose of Frauds Practiced in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc., Etc.

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK, SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless, as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands, until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling gait and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it." I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought, ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

RITCHIE FEARS WOLGAST BOUT, ASSERTS NOLAN

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Money talks.

So says the old sporting slogan, and by the same token there are times when money proclaims itself in clarion tones.

Ad Wolgast, who has been mooning around in a half-hearted way ever since it was brought home to him that an operation for appendicitis had robbed him of much of his fighting force, had almost despaired of getting into the limelight again, when a happy thought struck him.

He challenged Willie Ritchie for $25,000 a side, and the sporting world, hearing the chink of so much money, immediately stopped to listen.

Then, right at the psychological moment, Ritchie said the proposition looked good to him, and the sporting world's sense of hearing became more acute than ever.

Now, in this case, as in others, money's voice may dwindle to a whisper, and finally merge into complete silence. That is, so far as threats of a big side wager are concerned. Ring men from time immortal have brandished bales of currency and jingled $20 pieces only to decide after mature consideration that it was as well to let the ticket-purchasing public supply the sinews of war.

And the public, happy in the prospect of a match between fighters with pretensions to class, was quite content to have it that way.

IF Wolgast and Ritchie decide to have it out, never a single member of the grand army of fight fans will insist that the wager feature of the affair be lived up to. Of course, if the lads are stubborn about risking some of their accumulations, no one will object.

The notable thing about the situation just now is that there seems to have been a general awakening to the fact that Wolgast is entitled to a return match with Ritchie. It might be said that the feeling that little Ad should be given a chance to retrieve the laurels he lost on a technicality has existed ever since the day Ritchie became champion. But the absence of enthusiasm on the point was due to Wolgast's tactics. In many of his matches he was careless about his training, and even now, while hurling defiance at Ritchie, he is going around with his hand incased in a plaster cast.

What he needs is a couple of months far from the maddening crowd to give his splintered knuckles a chance to knit and enable the Wolgast frame to store up a little vitality. The Ritchie match will keep, and there is little fear of the public forgetting that the chance is coming to Wolgast.

BILLY NOLAN, ex-manager of Ritchie, is in town, and was asked what he thought of the Ritchie-Wolgast contest as an "attraction."

"I suppose," said Nolan, "that Tommy Murphy has the best right of them all to a match with Ritchie, but I honestly believe that a Wolgast-Ritchie bout would draw a big gate. To my way of thinking, it is the best card in sight. I have always made it a point to keep track of public sentiment in these matters, and I know that 70 per cent of the spectators who passed out through the gates the day Ritchie won the title from Wolgast on a foul felt that Wolgast should be given a chance to regain what he had lost. And that sentiment still exists."

And whisper, Nolan is skeptical about Ritchie's good faith in saying he is willing to box Wolgast again.

Now that the strings that held manager and man together are severed, Nolan is prone to call a spade a spade, and he says that Ritchie never relished the thought of one day having to stand in front of Wolgast again.

According to Nolan, the names on Ritchie's roll of eligibles were Rivers, Freddie Welsh and Leach Cross. Ad Wolgast's name was "nivver mintioned" in any of the councils of war that Nolan and Ritchie held.

RITCHIE said in Los Angeles a day or so ago that he held aloof from Wolgast, thinking Ad would prove a poor card. That is poppy-cock. Wolgast, were he to train right, is the best lightweight card in sight to-day.

He is a card for the reason that fighters who perform as well as Wolgast has done are always strong with the fight-going public until signally defeated, and nothing like that has happened to Wolgast as yet.

He is a card for the further reason that the breath of suspicion has never attached to any of his contests. He always gave the public the best he was capable of, and in the matter of square dealing, Wolgast's record is on a par with that of Battling Nelson.

Another Bargain Bill for To-day

By O. B. Keeler.

IN the sparsely occurring intervals when we have nothing else to do, we sit and wonder solemnly at the number and variety of the kinds of baseball that can be produced in the course of one reasonably short afternoon.

Once in a while it doesn't seem humanly possible.

But we turn to the old score book, and it is even so.

There was yesterday afternoon, now.

You might frisk the Big Show with a vacuum cleaner and not bring to light a prettier or more workmanlike con bat than that first game. Four hits apiece, tight pitching, clean and brilliant fielding, and the score 3 to 1, settled up in the eighth round by a sharp attack.

And the home club on the long end. Can you beat it?

AND then, as the well-known Bard of Avon puts it, having gazed on this picture, unwind another reel and turn in the riot call.

The bald fact that Fleharty slipped it to us conveys only a small percentage of the devastation. The redeeming feature of the aftermath was the fact that it traveled only six frames.

In other words, the rain cut in at the wrong time, or else it stopped too early.

IN fact, the afternoon was consumed in a battle between the elements, two thousand earnest fans and a couple of ball clubs. At the end of the sixth inning, game No. 1, the heavens opened as usual and proceeded to save some more of the corn crop in the immediate vicinity of the ball park.

The umpires held up the proceedings for the entire 30 minutes prescribed by law, and then started the cruel war again. Atlanta was leading by a score of 1 to 0 at the time, but the Volunteers, taking advantage of the only flivvers of the game, knotted the count. Joe Agler then shot off a triple that scored Chapman, and added his own run when the useful Welchonce scraped a wallop off Jack Spratt's upholstery.

GILBERT PRICE was in complete control of the situation from start to finish. The four hits of the opposition were in widely separated innings—one in the first, one in the fourth, one in the sixth and one in the eighth. Mr. More, who yielded the same number, was not so judicious in placing them. One was wasted in the fourth, but all the rest were produced in the eighth. A base on balls, a sacrifice hit, an out and a wild chuck by More spotted the Town Boys their first tally without the aid of a hit.

* * *

IN addition to his valuable triple, Joe Agler put on a bit of circus stuff in the sixth, when he made a neat steal of second while More clung to the ball, as if he was afraid somebody was going to take it away from him. Joe began to slide about the time More came to.

* * *

CIRCUS SOLLY HOFMAN continued to meet with poor luck on the towpath. In the fifth inning of the first game, he walked, after two were down, and tried for second on a short passed ball. Chapman made a quick recovery, and Bisland stuck the pill on the sliding Artie for a hair-decision. It was fast work all round.

* * *

It took two misplays, only one of which shows in the box, to help the Volunteers to their one run in the first game. In the eighth inning, Hofman singled and Lindsay sacrificed. More hit to Holland, who threw wide, and the pitcher was safe, Artie reaching third. The infield crept up on the grass, and Price did his part, making Daley hit weakly to short. Bisland stuttered with his hands, and Solly was over, but the runner was retired at first, saving Bisland a boot.

* * *

CARL THOMPSON ran into something in the second game and bounced back before a hand was out. Daley sineled to left, Callahan tripled to center, and Spratt singled in the same hole, in rapid and terrifying succession. Clarke came on, and Spratt went out stealing, after which two more singles went to waste, the five solid smashes producing only two runs. Clarke got in the next round, an error, a sacrifice and three hits—one of the fluke Cincinnati variety—putting over two more runs and cinching things for the smiling Fleharty.

AFTER Manush had flied out for Clarke in the fifth, the fans got a belated treat. There was a slight delay, and then "String" Love, the human office building, was wheeled to the center of the arena.

The long chap got a great hand as responded with a burst of speed that in the thickening dusk was simply unhittable. Half dodging a shoot, Callahan scratched a Texas Leaguer into left, but the tall boy put some more swift on the pill, and Spratt's twisting short fly resulted in a sensational double play, put on by Tommy Long.

Callahan had reached second, when one of Love's fast ones got clean through Dunn, and when Tommy came sprinting in for Spratt's short pop, Cally broke for third. Tommy froze the fly on the dead run, and raced on over to second for the other out.

Then Noyes fanned, bewildered by the speed of the long fork-hander.

ANOTHER bargain matinee for this afternoon, the trouble beginning at 2:15 o'clock. Manager Smith said this morning he had a good mind to shoot Thompson right back at the Vols in one of the games. He was undecided as to Conzelman and Love for the other. Manager Schwartz announced that Williams would work in the opener, with Brackenridge in the afterpiece. "That's all I've got," said Bill, cheerfully.

Belgium Puts Ban On Jack Johnson

BRUSSELS, Aug. 2.—Jack Johnson may soon be without a country to fight in. England does not want him. He can not return to America because of the sentence for a white slavery hanging over his head. France harbors him, but not enough to allow him to mix with the guests in first-class hotels. Now Belgium has put the ban on him.

Following the announcement that the champion was to give boxing exhibitions in Belgium, the Minister of Justice yesterday issued an order that all boxing contests in the future should be investigated. This move was made to prevent faking in matches.

The hue and cry against Johnson's exhibiting in Belgium became so great, however, that the Minister of Justice was forced to issue another edict. To-day he put the lid down on all boxing. No further matches, whether between blacks or whites or mixed, will be allowed to be staged in the kingdom.

GRIFFIN AND ARMSTRONG IN WESTERN TENNIS FINAL

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Clarence Griffin, California's latest tennis marvel, upheld the reputation of his State by qualifying for the Western championship finals through a victory in his hardest match of the tournament over William Blair, of Lake Geneva, Wis., 6-2, 7-5, 6-2.

To-day in the final round, upon which, through the absence of Champion Maurice McLaughlin, depends the title, Griffin will meet Joseph Armstrong, of St. Paul, who yesterday downed Harry Waldner, of Chicago, 4-6, 6-1, 6-2, 6-3.

THE BASEBALL IDOL.

THE BASEBALL IDOL (CF. IDLE) is a state of mind. He was created by a lot of honest but thoughtless newspaper writers who were fond of jokes and never expected to be taken seriously. Thus we see that joking is a dangerous habit.

The Baseball Idol leads a life of busy inactivity. In the winter months he is on the stage or in the newspapers telling all and sundry how many thousands of dollars he will demand in the spring. In the spring he is hard at work demanding. In the summer he is in the hospital suffering with a comminuted fracture of the feelings or on the bench recovering from the effects of a collision with the umpire. He takes a much-needed rest in the fall.

Hailing from Marissa, Ill., or Broken Bow, Nebr., he begins at once to talk for publication about his "loyalty to our city," that being the one that has bid highest for his services. His loyalty fluctuates with his pay, and is changed with his uniform. Occasionally he adds to the sum of human joy by nodding to some otherwise intelligent man in the grandstand who at once rushes down to his office and demands a 50 per cent increase of salary on the strength of it.

On the field he can always be recognized, as he is the last member to emerge from the clubhouse and is languid and aloof. We knew one also who could be identified by the skill with which he could quarter an oval dish of mashed potatoes and empty it clean in four swift scoops of the knife.

He is the one financial fly in the golden ointment of the magnate. Whenever a club owner groans and tosses in his sleep he is thinking about some item or $10,000 on his payroll. From this we learn that in the wonderful scheme of things even a Baseball Idol has his use.

Don't miss the next article of the great series—"The Alibi."

THE RULE PROVIDING heavily padded head-gears for motorcyclists in track competition is a wise one. We have always understood that it cost a lot of money to build a good motor track.

* * *

IF JOHN BULL HAS ANY more valuable junk lying around over there, let's send somebody over after it and get the whole thing finished up.

* * *

THERE IS A LOT OF unnecessary excitement about betting in ball parks, which is bound to die a natural death. The few with so little intelligence as to bet on baseball can not acquire much money or keep it long—so there you are.

* * *

AD WOLGAST HAS DECIDED to re-enter the ring in a match with Johnny Dundee, which is about as safe an entrance as could be devised.

* * *

CHANCE'S DIFFICULTY IN making trades is occasioned by the fact that since the Chicago deal the other managers resent his wanting anything in return.

Three Naps Using Matty's Fadeaway

CLEVELAND, Aug. 2.—Three members of the Naps' pitching staff have mastered the fadeaway ball invented by Christy Mathewson and have been using it lately to deceive batters. Cy Falkenberg learned the delivery while with Toledo, and his employment of it is the chief factor in his successful comeback, he says.

Falkenberg showed Vean Gregg and George Kahler how to throw it, and after experimenting for a month, both added it to their regular repertoire about six weeks ago.

Gregg is believed to be the only southpaw in the big leagues that uses a fadeaway. The ball is hard to control, but the three Naps have achieved good results with it.

40 BAPTIZED AT DALTON.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—As a result of the revival meeting in progress in North Dalton, the Rev. E. B. Farrar, in charge of the meeting, baptized 40 people in a large pool near the Crown Cotton Mills, the baptizing attracting hundreds of people.

FIREMEN GOING TO TAMPA.

DALTON, Aug. 2.—Instead of spending their annual outing at St. Simons Island, as planned, the Dalton fire department will go to Tampa, Fla., and will leave here on August 7 instead of August 9.

MARQUARD OUT TO BREAK HIS PITCHING MARK

By Damon Runyon.

CHICAGO, Ill., Aug. 2.—Rube Marquard, McGraw's eminent southpaw, who hung up a record for straight victories last season that will probably be a mark to shoot at for some time to come, is loose again upon a record-making expedition. The Rube has now compiled nine consecutive victories, or nearly one-half of the number he unfurled last year, and is still going strong.

It may be that Marquard will never again reach the mark he set himself last season and which such hurlers as Walter Johnson and Joe Wood have tried for and failed. But he has gone nearly half the distance without any difficulty whatever, and has a good chance to equal if not pass the nineteen straight, which now stands as the record.

Has Good Chance for Record.

The thing that stands very much in his favor just now is that the Giants are going at top speed. They are winning just as often as they were early last year when he started his large run, and what is more, they are apt to continue their pace through the balance of the season, as was the case last season, for they have already had their annual slump, and are now in the ascendant.

Has Changed His Style.

Marquard has changed his style of pitching since he made his big run of nineteen straight. He was under a heavy strain during that time last year, because he tried to get every man that faced him at the plate. He had not learned then to save himself for the tight place, but he now permits his teammates to do a little work whenever he has a lead, and, like Matty, only uses all of his stuff when the situation demands it. For that reason he may be able to go along and win repeatedly without in any way impairing his arm and bringing on a slump such as followed his streak last year.

Ranks of Champion Clubs Are Depleted

Queer how quickly a world's championship team will disintegrate. Already eight of the champion Athletics of 1911 have severed their connection with that club, while six of the Red Sox who helped to win the American League bunting and later down the New York Giants are no longer with Boston.

Of the 1911 array of Athletics, Livingston, Hartsel, Lord, Kraus, Danforth, Martin, Morgan and Derrick are no longer on the Philadelphia roster, while Danny Murphy, Harry Davis and Ira Thomas are but extras, with Jack Coombs prevented by illness from playing.

It is something new, however, for a world's championship manager to lose out before the following season is ended, but the going of Stahl was preceded by the release of Pitchers Pape and O'Brien and extra Infielders Ball, Krug and Bradley.

Of the Giants who lost to the Athletics in 1911, Ames, Becker, Devore, Devlin, Drucke, Latham and Paulette are now missing.

Motorcycle Races Off Until Tuesday

Rain again caused a postponement of the motorcycle races. Just when everything looked rosy for some fast going at Jack Prince's saucer yesterday afternoon, a big shower blew up and put everything "on the bum."

So the management decided to call proceedings off for the week. Next Tuesday night the same card that was to have been held last evening will be run.

In the meantime all the riders will be working on their machines in hope of establishing some new records.

ELBERTON PASTOR IS ON THREE WEEKS' VACATION

ELBERTON, Aug. 2.—The Rev. R. C. Cleckler, of the First Methodist Church, is attending camp meeting in Hart County. After the camp meeting he will attend the conference of the Sunday school and Epworth League near Waynesboro, N. C. There will be no services at the First Church for three weeks.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT.

McLoughlin smote the ball so hard
he made them all look lame,
And English critics up and wrote: "It
is a crying shame!
Such rude, uncultured tennis play
will kill the grand old game."

IT MIGHT HAPPEN THUSLY:

Old Honus Wagner came to bat and
hit one to the fence.
"O, Roughneck! Roughneck!" yelled
the fans, whose feelings were intense.
The umpire fined him fifty bones and told him beat it hence.

OR THUSLY:

Ad Wolgast poked a wallop through
the other fellow's guard.
"You lose," the referee remarked,
"You hit that man too hard,
And as a member of this club you
are forever barred."

OR IT MIGHT BE THIS:

Chick Evans drove the pellet far
across the grassy lea.
"Disqualified!" they said to him.
"And wherefore?" questioned he.
"Because," they said, "you smote the ball with too much energy."

While these English experts are about it, why not have McLoughlin indicted for cruelty to tennis balls.

McLoughlin may be guilty of trickery, as our beloved English brethren opine, but so is Walter Johnson when he heaves his smoke ball.

Lavern Chappell has been relegated to the bench as a result of a sore leg and paralysis of the batting average.

Mr. Evers' idea of the national pastime is to walk right in, bawl the umps and walk right out again.

The intrepid gent who threw the brickbat at Ty Cobb escaped to parts unknown. He probably is at home beating his wife.

EXERCISE.

"O, baseball is a healthful game," a fan remarked to me.
"It stirs the sluggish blood and makes
the heart beat merrily.
It clears the eye, it clears the brain,
it makes the body strong;
It lays aside a store of health to live
and prosper long."
"How often do you play the game?"
I calmly made reply,
And as he spoke there was a look of
pity in his eye.
"What? Me? Get out there in the sun
and sweat to death?" he said,
"Perchance you have a notion I am crazy in the head."

There are those who hold that Larry Chappell has not struck his stride and there are others who hold that he has.

Mr. Weston's hike to Minneapolis may be considerable feat (not feet), but why should any one go to all that trouble to get to Minneapolis?

After months of persistent endeavor, the Cards have achieved last place, demonstrating that perseverance always brings its reward.

Even a pugilist believes in taking an occasional vacation. For instance, Ad Wolgast has offered to bet $25,000 in the last two days.

THAT FAMILIAR RAG.

Warble not in mournful numbers:
"Sox are getting humped again."
I can hear it in my slumbers,
So familiar is the strain.

BENTON TO LOSE SALARY AND PAY DOCTOR BILLS

CINCINNATI, Aug. 2.—President Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati baseball team, says that Rube Benton, who was seriously injured when his motorcycle collided with a street car, would not be allowed one penny of his salary and that the club would not stand any expenses while he is at the hospital. Herrmann says that he had repeatedly requested Benton not to ride his cycle.

"The whole affair is an injustice to the club," said Mr. Herrmann. "The injury to Benton means that we will have to get a pitcher or two and good pitchers are hard to get."

RED SOX BUY PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 2.—Announcement was made to-day of the purchase by the Boston club, of the American League, of Pitcher Reiger, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association, and Infielder Carl Strom, of the Lawrence, Mass., team, of the New England League.

Satisfaction in glasses depends upon their fitting properly.

To Call New Club Atlanta A. A.

White Has Fought 4 Champions

By Left Hook.

ATLANTA Athletic Association, That is the name of Lou Castro's boxing club at Ponce DeLeon.

Lou is forming a regular club, and he expects to have some of Atlanta's most prosperous business men as members within the next few days.

It is going to cost a heap of money to get the skating rink at Ponce DeLeon fixed into a "regular" clubhouse, but the Count is going to spend the money.

All yesterday he had an architect going over the building. The plans will be ready within a day or two, and next Monday the carpenters will start work.

There will be seats for 6,000 fans. Boxes, containing six chairs, will encircle the ring. Back of these will be row after row of opera chairs.

The ring is to be of regulation size, 24 feet by 24. The ropes are to be extra heavy and covered with red plush. The posts will be of heavy brass, and highly polished.

The "seconds" will be forced to wear white uniforms. And so will the ushers, ticket sellers and takers.

Class will stick out prominently everywhere.

AND to open his classy club, the Count has by far the classiest bout ever staged in Atlanta. In Charley White he has a real contender for the lightweight title. Whitney is a tough fellow, and the most popular that ever fought here.

Frank has boxed some tough lads here, too. Among them Clarence English, Jake Abel, Joe Thomas, Charley "Twin" Miller, Battling Nelson and Tommy O'Keefe. And since leaving here last spring he has been defeating all comers through the West. Only the other night he handed out Phil Knight a tough beating in Denver. And Denver fans had been boosting this same Knight as a coming title holder.

White has fought four champions. He has stopped Joe Thomas twice and Jake Abel once within the past two months. He fought Abe Attell to a standstill twice while the Hebrew was a real champion. He made Ad Wolgast look like a joke in a six-round no-decision mill when Ad possessed the lightweight crown. And he held Johnny Kilbane even.

Charley gave Joe Mandot a terrific eight-round scrap when Joe was looked upon as a champion two years ago. It was called a draw, although Charley did all the forcing. He gave Pal Moore a severe trouncing.

And he stopped Owen Moran, former English champion, in nine rounds. Young Shugrue, the man who defeated Leach Cross in New York last spring, twice lost the decision to White.

With a broken hand, broken in the fourth round, he gave Jack Britton the fight of his life in New Orleans a few weeks ago. The bout was stopped in the eighteenth round because the sheriff thought the going was getting too rough.

After the bout, Britton openly declared that White was the hardest puncher he ever met.

* * *

WHITNEY has never been knocked out. Can White turn the trick that hundreds of others have failed to accomplish?

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

No Class D league in the country is putting up a prettier pennant race than the Empire just at this time. Every team in the league is within striking distance of first place and each day sees the race becoming warmer.

* * *

Waycross has cut loose one of the most helpful winning streaks seen in the league in weeks. Although at the bottom Waycross has brought the league teams close together by winnings from teams higher up. The last at home series resulted in four victories, one tie and one defeat.

* * *

Thomasville has added a few new men in anticipation of the post-season pennant games with Valdosta. Thomasville has a team that is to be reckoned with, too.

* * *

Otto Jordan nearly always furnishes a lot of fun in every game he plays. Recently after he was thrown out easily at first on a slow one to the pitcher he rushed to first, sliding into the bag, jumped up and romped to second. He actually looked peeved when the umpire motioned that he was out.

* * *

Whitey Morse, who once played with the Atlanta team, and more recently of the South Atlantic League, is again signing "manager" after his name. He was released by Valdosta and signed with Brunswick, succeeding Charlie Moran, formerly of the Chattanooga team.

* * *

Doc Fenton continues his splendid work in center field for Waycross. He, the first of the series at Thomasville he caught three line drives against the fence, and only a short time ago did the same thing at Waycross.

* * *

As far as is known Baby Wilder and Pillingim established a new no-hit record for organized baseball when they pitched two no-hit games at Cordele recently. Illingim pitched a nine-inning no-hit game and was followed by Wilder, who gave up no hits for six innings.

* * *

Americus has been playing better baseball for the past few weeks than any team in the league. A casual review of the scores of games played shows that the team has put up some mighty pretty exhibitions.

* * *

Wild Bill Clark has added a one-hit game to his credit. Pitching for Waycross against Thomasville he let down the hard-hitting Thomasville bunch with but one hit, a single that was secured in the first inning.

* * *

Signed as an outfielder, Dacey, of the Americus team, has developed into one of the best pitchers in the league. His string of victories is apt to establish a new record in the Empire. A few of his games were won by mere luck, but most of them have been deserved victories.

* * *

Americus and Brunswick have two pitchers and they are apt to oppose each other most any day now. They are the Stewart's and both seem to hae the goods.

* * *

To Outfielder Medlock goes credit for the second home run hit on the Valdosta field. Bitting, now with Charleston, formerly with Waycross, got the first home run in Valdosta. Medlock played with Waycross before he was signed by Valdosta.

* * *

It is quite probable that the first games of the pennant series in the Empire will be played the last week in August. The season ends August 27, and, unless the directors decide to start the pennant series the first of September the winner of the second half will play Valdosta the first game on August 28.

GOLFER SHOULD IGNORE CROWD, EVANS ADVISES

By "Chick" Evans.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 2.—The few years of my life have been very successful in a golfing way and, therefore, I have had but little time to follow other players' games. Last week, however, in the Western at Homewood, Mr. Allis put me so abruptly out of the game that I had ample time to follow the matches and form a part of the large galleries, and a golf gallery is always an interesting assemblage of people.

I have often been asked how I could play with a gallery. My questioners could not see why so many interested people did not disturb me and make me nervous. Players, however, are not much disturbed by a watching multitude, and they usually play their best games at such times. If I do happen to be playing badly, a gallery or anything else, of course, disturbs. As long as I am given room to get my club head around I am satisfied. A gallery forming a large body is much more acceptable to the player than the scattering few.

Lone Spectator Unnerving.

The one thing that bothers me is to have a single individual directly behind or in front of me. This is the commonest mistake made by the innocent spectator, for he wants to watch the ball's line of flight. This is especially bothersome to me on the putting green. I love the strange quiet when the shot is being executed, and the buzzing comments of hundreds of voices as the body of people begins to move along. Now and then one hears a woman, unacquainted with the etiquette of golf, lifting her voice in hurried speech above the breathless quiet of the crowd watching the execution of a difficult shot. This makes it hard for the player, and it is all the worse when the loud speech concerns something utterly foreign to golf.

Player Should Ignore Crowd.

The player should never notice the gallery except as a whole; singling out individuals is a mistake. The spectators of other sports are usually stationary, but the golf gallery moves around the course after the players. This frequently obliges the player to pass through the gallery to his ball, and then he is usually grasped from all sides by his friends; at such times they tell him that they have a bet on him, or make some other remark equally encouraging when he is playing badly. This is very bad for the player, and there is nothing more likely to prevent concentration of attention upon his game.

Personally, I like to talk to people in the gallery when I am playing, but the more successful players never do. At such times I like to see my friends and I hope that they like to see me.

"LET WILLARD GET A REP," WIRES BURNS TO JONES

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—Tommy Burns, manager of Arthur Pelky, and Tom Jones, who looks after the interests of Jess Willard, are booked to hook up in an interesting battle of invectives and near-blows within a day or two.

Jones wants to match Willard against Pelky, but Burns in a telegram to-day says that Willard must go get a reputation before presuming to challenge a champion.

"Gunboat Smith is the man Pelky wants to meet," said Burns. "Smith beat Willard, and then again, Charley Miller shaded the Kansas scrapper. Let him get a 'rep' for himself."

This sort of language is the sort that makes Jones glad he is alive, for he thrives on argument.

"When did Pelky whip Willard or anybody of consequence until he landed a lucky punch on Luther McCarty?" asks Jones. "Willard can whip Pelky, and Burns can name his own terms. Pelky took one beating from Willard and wants no more."

Blood is Purified Quickly in Summer

Here is a Remedy that has Wonderful Action and Promotes Health.

Mingling with your food, arousing stomach action, absorbed immediately into your blood, the famous remedy known as S. S. S. has a wonderful action. Its main purpose is to stimulate cellular activity or that peculiar process which instantly changes the worn-out cells for the new red blood corpuscles.

The medicinal value of the components of S. S. S. is relatively just as vital to healthy blood as the nutriment obtained from grain, meat, fats, sugars or any other part of our daily food is to the natural reconstructive requirements of the tissues. And there is one component of S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating the cellular tissue to a healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. Thus, in cases of skin disease such as eczema, acne, herpes, tetter or psoriasis, first purify your blood with S. S. S. so it will enable the tissues to rebuild their cellular strength and regain their normal health.

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store, but take no other so-called blood purifier.

S. S. S. is purely a botanical product, and you will make a great mistake to have some enthusiast palm off a mineral preparation that may do you irreparable harm.

S. S. S. is prepared by The Swift Specific Company, 191 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga., and if you have any obstinate skin trouble, write to their Medical Department for free advice. It will be worth your while to do so.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

The Charlie White-Frank Whitney bout has been closed. Local fans have been clamoring for this match for some time, and Count Leu Castro should be congratulated for landing the mill. The boys are to get together on August 13 at Ponce DeLeon Skating Rink.

* * *

Bud Anderson, the Oregon lightweight who underwent an operation for appendicitis following his recent scrap with Leach Cross, will be ready to fight again on Thanksgiving Day, according to his manager, Dick McDonald. He declares that Anderson will be as strong as ever by that time.

* * *

Despite his poor fight against Matty Baldwin the other day, Leach Cross seems in a fair way to land the Labor Day date at Los Angeles with he champion. Tom McCarey is working on the match now, and may close it any day.

Sam Langford, who recently returned to this country from Australia, spent several hours in Chicago en route from San Francisco to Boston. "I expect to stay in the East several months and will try to get a match with Perky Flynn," said Lanford. "In the fall I will return to the Pacific Coast to fill several fight engagements."

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that "Wildcat" Ferns and Young Denny are in great shape for their 20-round engagement on Sunday afternoon. The bout is being advertised as for the welterweight championship. The pair clashed on July 4 in a 10-round affair, and Ferns was given the verdict after a fierce mill. Denny claims he was robbed in that go. Hence the rematch.

* * *

Pittsburg promoters are out after a match between George Chip and Frank Klaus. They are planning to stage the go on Labor Day afternoon.

* * *

Over in Belgium they prohibit boxing among professionals, but allow the amateurs to engage in the sport.

* * *

It is reported that Billy Gibson, New York matchmaker, is trying to land a Willie Ritchie-Freddie Welch set-to for some time in September. Welch boxes Johnny Dundee on the coast next month.

* * *

Arthur Pelky does not seem to be overanxious to meet Jess Willard in a 20-round go on the coast. Tom Jones, manager of the Kansas City heavyweight, has offered Tommy Burns' protege a neat side bet, but even this extra inducement fails to attract Arthur.

* * *

Young Abe Attell, the local bantamweight, wants to know why the bantamweights are dodging him. Attell says he would dearly love to meet either Kid Brooks or Tim Callahan in a bout around these parts.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the Chicago lightweight, and Sammy Trott, of Columbus, have signed articles to box 12 rounds at Winnipeg on August 15. They have agreed to weigh 133 pounds at 6 o'clock for a night fight.

* * *

Spider Britt is another local boy who is pining for a fight. Britt cares not who it may be, just as long as he weighs under 118 pounds. Spider can easily make 115.

* * *

They all come and go, but Jim Flynn seems to go on forever. Despite his many years of ring service, Flynn has signed to meet Gunboat Smith at New York on August 8, in a near title match.

In case Johnny Dundee succeeds in defeating Jack White at Los Angeles on August 12 Charlie White says he will go after a match with the Easterner. Charlie has already defeated Dundee in a 10-round affair at New York. Charlie and Jack are brothers, and both fight best when weighing 126 pounds.

Matty seems to be going back. With his aid the Giants tamed the Cubs, but "Big Six" allowed the Everites five hits and uncorked a wild pitch. This proves Matty is losing control.

The Yankees' winning streak of two games was nipped in the bud by old Jupe Pluv.

Miller's bat was once more in evidence. His two hits paved the way for the Pirates to again humble Dahlen's men. It took innings, however, to turn the trick.

Are the Athletics going back? Defeated twice in succession by a second division team does not look like A-1 ball. It may be only a temporary slump, but in any event Cleveland is only seven games behind.

* * *

The Braves are trying hard to forge ahead of the Dodgers. They won again from the Cardinals and are now but two and a half games behind sixth place.

The Phillies keep following the Giants' pace. The Reds' errors and opportune hitting gave Dooin's men another victory over Cincinnati.

"Elks' Day" at Boston proved disastrous for the Red Sox. The Naps again took them into camp. Cleveland is going at top speed now and in two days has cut down the Athletics' lead two and one-half games. Certainly will be some clash netx week when the leaders and runners up meet.

Two weeks ago Clark Griffith predicted that his team would beat out the Athletics and the latter would be on the toboggan. To-day the Senators are further away from the leaders and still losing.

The Tigers proved a handicap again.

"Rube" Benton, although he will be in the hospital for a month as the result of his motorcycle accident, is now practically out of danger. There is no chance, however, that the Reds will have the services of their star pitcher again this season.

Catcher Agnew, struck on the jaw by a pitched ball during the recent series between the Senators and Browns, has left the hospital for St. Louis. He will be out of the game a week later.

THE SIN OF THE CINCY HIT

By Fred D. Pasley

Who Asks R. Kipling to Apologize for Him.

AS Thompson, the sportin' writer, lolled back in his swivel chair,
A spirit sneaked up behind him and deftly grappled his hair.
Grappled his hair and carried him farther and farther away,
Till he heard as the roar of the rain-fed ford the roar of the milky way.
Till he heard the roar of the milky way die down and drone and cease,
And they came to the gate within the wall where Peter holds the keys.
"Stand up, stand up, Mr. Thompson, and answer loud and high.
"The good that ye did for the sake of men in little earth so lone."
And the naked soul of our hero grew white as a rain-washed bone.
"I've thousands of friends on earth," he cried; "I was their priest and guide.
"And my baseball chatter was famous from Oakland to Ingleside—
"Spheroid, Horsehide and Pellet, Globule, Capsule and Pill—
"I was a pen Napoleon, marshaled my words at will.
"I was the synomic wizard and rated far above par—
"Hurler, Twirler and Heaver, Curver and South-paw Star.
"I put the fest in Bootfest and the Slug in Slugfest, too,
"And I snipped the Ire off of Umpire to give the fans something new."
"Hold, hold!" then cried St. Peter, "I would question thee a bit:
"Art thou the man that discovered the Cincinnati Hit?"
"Yes," proudly answered Thompson, and the pride of the scribe was great;
"It is Baseball's Fourth Dimension—" and he started to orate.
"Aw, can thy chatter!" said Peter, as he opened a-wide the door,
"Keep on dropping downward till you reach the bottom floor.
"We take in a few reporters, and sport writers, too, sometimes,
"But you with your Cincy Hit must go where they punish such awful crimes."

LARGEST RESIDENCE

The largest private residence in the world is the winter palace of the Czar of Russia at St. Petersburg.

The enormous proportions of the palace are made evident from the fact that in one room alone the entire Atlanta courthouse could be sheltered without inconvenience.

There are seven hundred rooms in the greatest of all Russian palaces. It is said that at one time 7,000 soldiers were quartered under its roof.

Neither the present occupant nor any of the former rulers of Russia have ever seen all the rooms of this edifice. Yet, despite its tremendous size, the palace contains treasures of architectural beauty.

Business Houses Due Soon for Peachtree

Huntley Subdivision on McBurney Lot—$500,000 Concern Organizes and Is Seeking Location.

Stores will soon go up at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets on property bought some months ago by Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley. This is the old E. P. McBurney place, and it has been cut into 25-foot store lots for the erection of business houses. The present tenant, Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, it was reported Friday, had been given notice that the house would not be rented after the fall.

This neighborhood is due to have more improvements later on. The owners of the northeast corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets—John G. and B. Frank Bell and Wallace Boyd—have had separate bonds for title executed on the M. L. Bates place, and are expected either to subdivide or improve. Four business lots will be 25 by 100 on Peachtree and two will be 45 by 100 on Sixth street.

The Raoul homestead across the street will probably be torn down before a great while. Mrs. Mary W. Raoul, the owner and present occupant, has bought a large lot in Druid Hills and will build there.

The old Ryan place at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Seventh streets passed into the hands of Clyde L. King and others last December, and this is also said to be marked for subdivision. This lot is 100 by 200 feet.

There has been considerable trading on the place of Dr. J. Scott Todd on the east side of Peachtree between the Bates and Ryan homes, and the home of Dr. Joseph Jacobs was put up for sale, but later withdrawn from the market.

Announcement that John D. Little anticipates encroachments on his handsome place at the northwest corner of Peachtree and Eighth streets and will build on Pace's Ferry road emphasises the anxiety which pioneer residents feel over the advance of business. Among the residents in the neighborhood of the proposed Huntley improvement are Christopher L. Stoney, General R. K. Evans, Junius G. Oglesby, Jr., Frank Hawkins, Mrs. Louise Calhoun, Joseph Cooper and others.

Organizing $500,000 Concern.

A new $500,000 concern for the manufacture of farming implements is being organized in Atlanta, and real estate men are looking for a desirable site for it with railroad frontage.

This is the Barwick Implement company, which has applied to the Superior Court for a charter through Smith & Hastings, attorneys. The incorporators are J. P. Armstrong, of Richmond County, and J. W. Barwick and Garnett McMillan, of Fulton.

Install Renting Department.

Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents, will soon install a renting department in connection with their sales and loan business and publish a weekly rent bulletin.

Realty Men on Move.

Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners and a leading realty man, returned to Atlanta Thursday and was in his office Friday after a vacation of two weeks. He will presid at the meeting of the commissioners at the courthouse Saturday morning, when some important business is to be transacted. The monthly meeting of the board is due Wednesday, August 6.

Frank Adair, of the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency, has returned from Europe. J. H. Ewings and E. S. Rankin, of the Smith & Ewing Agency, are leaving Friday for New York, where they will go to bring capital to Atlanta.

Harris G. White, Charles P. Glover and S. B. Turman are expected to return Monday from the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges at Winnipeg.

Ornamental Work Rushed.

Workmen are busy completing the ornamental terra cotta job on the Healey Building, and should be able to go ahead in a week with the exterior walls above the second floor. The Healy Building is shaping up nicely and in a month very little of the steel work will be seen.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

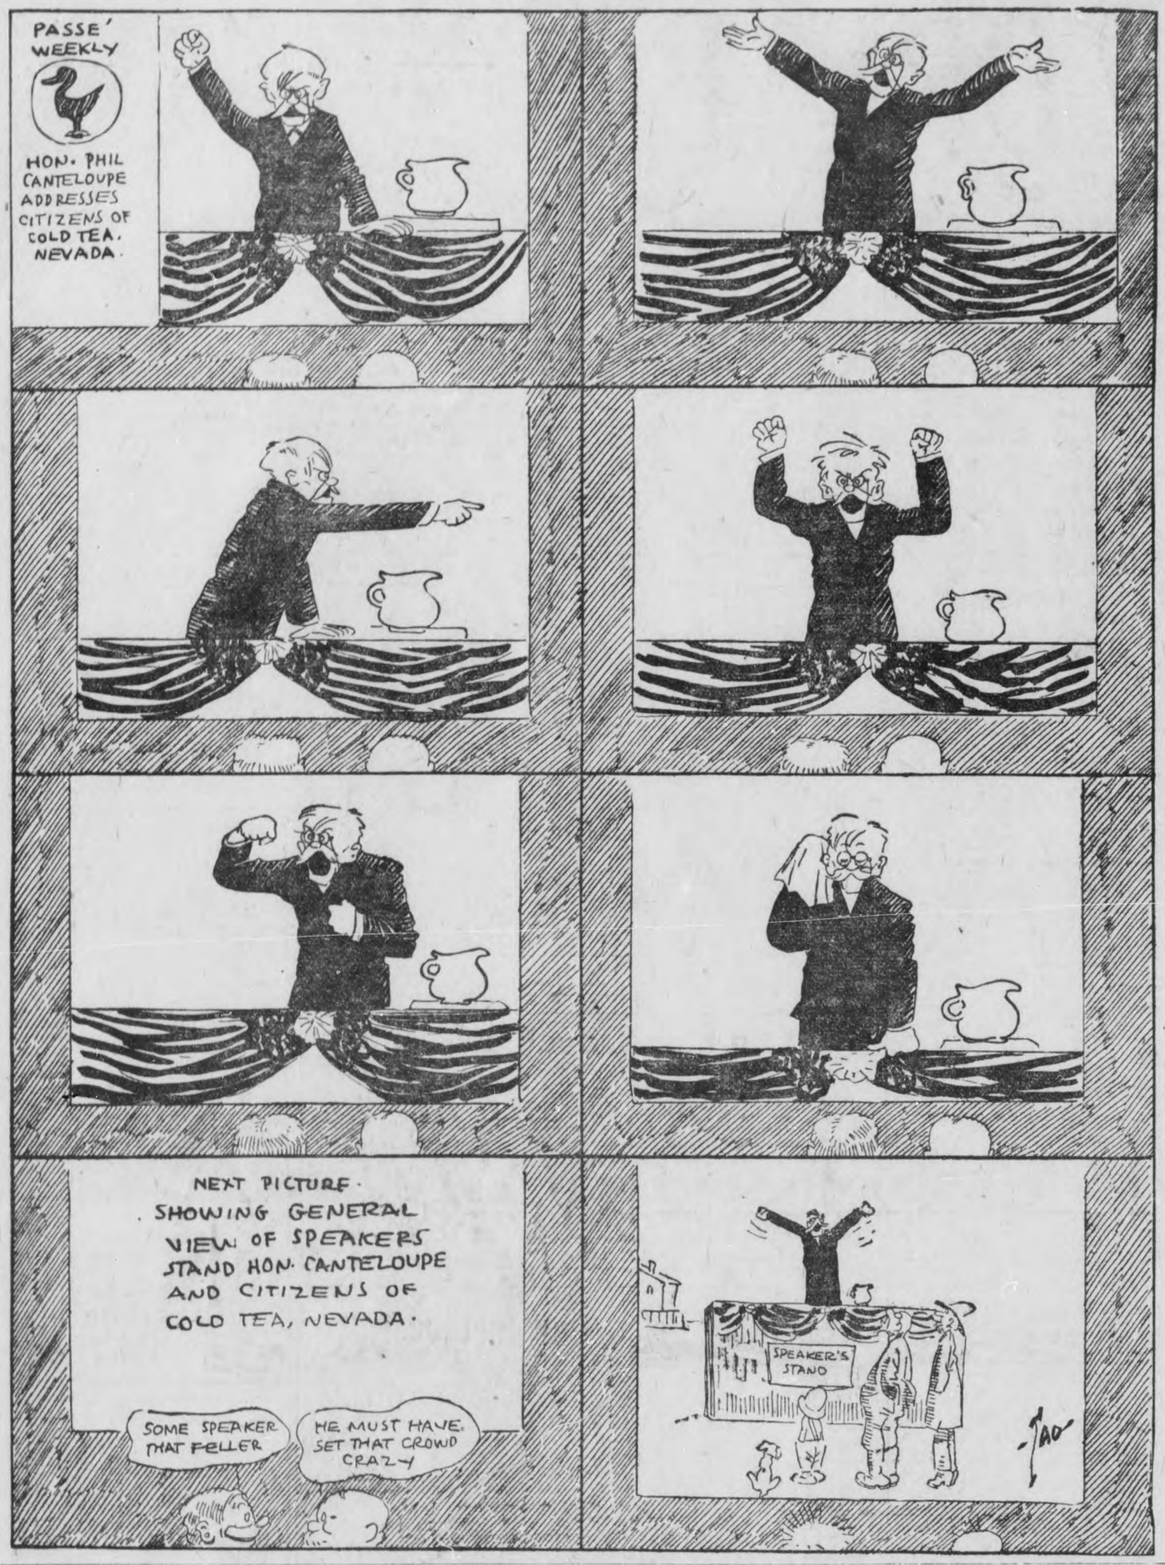

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the fact that in consequence of the judicial murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of Ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and P[illegible]

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at th[illegible] est sprinkling of rain!

March day bring him o[illegible] hibernating fly buzzing Christmas hearth, but a t[illegible] returning frost sends him[illegible] rying under ground. A [illegible] day in November plays an[illegible] trick upon his instinct, and he comes from the mud, and [illegible] bles to the feet of a good old [illegible] whom he has known for th[illegible] years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all his movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaises, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

THE PRICE HE PAID

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn,
By the sins of their fathers scarred.

Lawyers Wrangle Over Frank's Nervousness

STOCK FRAUD CHARGED IN ARRESTS

Florida Officers Catch Two Men Wanted in Georgia Accused of Fake Sales.

ARCADIA, FLA., Aug. 1.—Sheriff J. L. Dishong has arrested G. W. Bishop, D. E. Moorefield and a third person on a telegram from Atlanta telling him to hold these men for Greene County, Georgia, authorities.

The men, it is alleged, were doing business under assumed names, G. W. Bishop, alias G. Baker; D. E. Moorefield, alias M. E. Dorsey, alias D. E. Ennis; and G. Moorefield, alias E. Moore. The latter escaped. It is said they claimed to be organizing a stock company to manufacture soft drings, the plant to be erected in Tampa. The promoters, it is alleged, cashed about $2,000 in notes received for stock, at Arcadia. They had $1,825 on them when arersted. Mrs. Bishop and two children were with the party.

Moorefield and Bishop Indicted.

GREENSBORO, Aug. 1.—D. E. Moorefield and G. W. Bishop were indicted by the Greene County Grand Jury, in session now, charged with cheating and swindling. The indictment charges that they represented themselves to John H. Bowles, of this county, as selling stock in the Gray Car Door Company, of Atlanta, and secured Bowles' promissory notes to the amount of $1,500.

Bowles charges there is no such corporation and that the representations made were wholly false.

Requisition papers for Moorefield and Bishop, arrested in Florida, were requested to-day from Governor Slaton. The defendants are said to have operated extensively through this section of the State.

Slaying of Rooney Another Chapter in Feud of Gamblers

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 1.—Ed Ellis, who late last night shot and killed Pat Rooney, of Montgomery, when the two met in the heart of the city, was to-day transferred to the Jefferson County jail. He still contends that while he was sorry for the killing, he could not help it, self-defense being claimed. W. B. Rooney, brother of the slain man, declares the killing was a chapter in a feud among gamblers and that Ellis had envy and malice for Rooney.

Though a Birmingham man, Ellis has been residing in Montgomery for a year or two. In that city Rooney killed Louis Smith, a gambler, and was acquitted. Smith prior to that was acquitted of the assassination of Brooks Fuller, another gambler. Ellis and Smith were great friends.

Pat Rooney came here two weeks ago from Atlanta and worked for a Northern publishing house. He and Ellis met near the entrance to the hotel where Ellis is stopping. As Rooney's body was being placed in an ambulance a pistol fell to the ground. W. B. Rooney denies his brother had a pistol with him. Ellis' mother and brother live in Birmingham. Rooney's body was taken to Montgomery.

GADSDEN, Aug. 1.—A judgment in the sum of $400 has been awarded in the Circuit Court of Cherokee County, Alabama, at Center, in the case of the J. A. Arnold Cotton Company against the Bank of Menlo, Ga., to recover that amount which had been lost by the bank. J. S. Chamblee, cashier of the bank, testified he had been ordered to deliver $400 to a cotton buyer for the company. He claimed to have given the money to a flagman named Drake, employed on the Tennessee, Alabama and Georgia Railroad. The flagman denied receiving the money. In giving his testimony, Chamblee fainted and created a panic in the crowded courtroom. A score of witnesses testified that the flagman is a man of irreproachable character.

The young husband threatens to make trouble.

SENATE CUTS BUDGET TO MEET TAX

Appropriations Committee Slashes $280,325 From House Measure After Anderson's Plea.

Following a conference with Governor John M. Slaton, the Senae Appropriations Committee Friday morning slashed $280,325 from the House general appropriations bill, making the disbursements balance with the estimated revenues.

The cut was made in the fourth-class service on a basis of 7 per cent, including pensions, public schools and the higher schools and colleges, including Tech and the University of Georgia.

Following the meeting of the committee, which was executive, members declared that the action of the committee was unanimous, and that it would stand behind the report like a rock wall. Under the ruling of the committee, it will now be up to the House to provide means for raising more revenue if appropriations are to be raised.

The action of the Senate committee followed an address in the Senate of President Randolph Anderson, who called upon the Appropriations Committee to further consider the House bill calling for an excess of $280,000 in disbursements over revenues.

Later during the session the committee went into executive session, and shortly before noon a conference was held with Governor Slaton. The Governor, it is understood, lined up with the Senate committee and President Anderson in putting it squarely up to the House to provide more revenues before appropriations are raised.

The cuts are as follows:

Pensions service class, $75,900; public schools, $178,500; Tech, $5,600; State Normal at Athens, $3,325; Normal at Milledgeville, $3,775; Normal at Valdosta, $1,750; University, $3,375; extension of agricultural schools, $7,000; Medical College at Augusta, $2,100.

Georgian, Arrested In Alabama, Freed

Rylee sold an automobile to Mrs. Ida Colbert, at Colbert, and several notes were given. It seems that there was one too many and Rylee banked it and left town. He was located here, and after being arrested, paid the amount he obtained on the extra note.

Moose Officers To Be Called in Probe Of Fatal Initiation

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 1.—When the probe into the deaths of Christopher Gustin and Donald Kenny, the two men killed during initiation into the local lodge of the Loyal Order of Moose last week, is resumed next Tuesday it is proposed to place on the stand officers of the lodge to ascertain what they know of the work put on that night.

The witnesses examined so far who were present at the fatal meeting told practically the same story as to the accident. Emil Feast, who was a candidate the same evening, told of receiving the "branding" stunt. He said he felt the shock, but was not afraid. While for a few minutes he left the sensation, he got over it.

Relatives of the deceased are getting copies of the testimony being taken before the Coroner.

EXPERT'S EVIDENCE ADDS STRONG LINK TO CASE AGAINST FRANK

Here are the important developments of Friday in the trial of Leo M. Frank:

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees of the pencil factory, testifies that when she came upon Frank suddenly in his office at 12:30 the day of the crime, he jumped.

N. V. Darley, manufacturing foreman of the factory, testifies that, on the afternoon of the tragic day, Frank did three hours of intricate mathematical work, but also declares that Sunday and Monday he was extremely nervous.

Judge Roan rules that evidence can not be introduced to show the nervousness of others when the body was found, but later changes his decision.

Policeman Anderson testifies that Lee could have seen the body from where he stood in the basement, and is confronted with his testimony to the contrary at the coroner's inquest.

Dr. H. Harris, secretary of the State Board of Health, testifies food in stomach shows she was killed within half or three-quarters of an hour after it was eaten. He also testifies to evidence of a criminal attack. Dr. Harris collapses and is excused from cross-examination.

Albert McKnight, husband of the cook in the Frank home, testifies he did not see Frank eat anything for lunch on the day of the crime. On cross-examination he says he noticed Frank through a mirror.

Solicitor Dorsey sprang Friday afternoon his most important witness since the trial of Leo M. Frank began in the person of Dr. H. F. Harris, Director and Secretary of the State Board of Health. Dr. Haris was the expert engaged by the Solicitor to make an analysis of the contents of the Phagan girl's stomach and an examination of her body and organs.

Here is the State's theory of Mary Phagan's murder as first presented in the sensational testimony of Dr. Harris:

Mary Phagan was attacked and killed not more than three-quarters, or possibly half an hour, after she ate her meal at her home in Bellwood.

Mary Phagan's assailant struck her first in the right eye with his first, or with some soft instrument that left a little brasion on her skin.

She was felled to the floor by the blow.

This blow on the skull was not sufficient to cause her death, but undoubtedly caused a temporary unconsciousness. Death came from strangulation which the girl's assailant very soon produced by means of a cord bound about the girl's neck.

Killed Soon After Dinner.

Dr. Harris reached the conclusion that death had come probably within half an hour after she had eaten at home from the fact that fifteen centemetres of cabbage and biscuit on which tnhe process of digestion had barely started were form in her stomach. He produced specimens of thne cabbage in the courtroom as he had preserved them. n

He declared that from his examination of her body, she had been criminally attacked within a few minutes of her death.

Albert McKnight, husband of the Selig servant, Minola McKnight, followed Dr. Harris on the stand and swore than he was at the Selig home when Frank came home at 1:30 o'clock afternoon of the crime and that Frank ate nothing, but only went to the sideboard for a moment.

Wrangle Over Frank's Story.

Solicitor Dorsey made the startling proposition Friday afternoon, in order to get before the Jury Frank's story of his movements on the day Mary Phagan was killed, to read the questions and answers of Frank's testimony before the coroner's inquest.

His proposal met with instant objection from Attorneys Rosser and Arnold, and one of the bitterst legal wrangles of the case was precipitated.

Rosser declared that he objected to the introduction of the testimony in part or in whole. He later said that he would agree to have all of Frank testimony go before the jury, but that he would continue his objections that different parts be culled from it.

Te debate grew in warmth and finally the jury was excused while the point was argued.

Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Hooper argued that Frank was legally sworn; that his statements were freely and voluntarily made; that Rosser was present and that neither Frank nor Rosser had any objection to the defendant going on the stand.

"I think the objection of the defense is well taken," said Judge Roan at the conclusion of the arguments.

The jury had been sent out of the room during the arguments and was recalled.

Objections by Attorney Hooper, assistant to Solicitor Dorsey, to questions put to N. V. Darley by Attorney Arnold about the contents of the financial sheet made out by Leo Frank developed the fact that the defense would introduce evidence in rebuttal.

Defense to Introduce Evidence.

"We will introduce this sheet and plenty of other evidence," said Mr. Arnold. "You need not worry about that."

"That is just what I was after," remarked Mr. Hooper, aside. "I wanted to find out whether the defense intended to introduce evidence."

It had been rumored around the courthouse that the defense might rest its case at the completion of the submission of evidence by the State. Mr. Arnold's statement is taken to mean that Leo Frank himself will be placed on the stand.

Luther Z. Rosser, chief of counsel for Frank, declared Friday that the ruling of Judge Roan against the admissibility of the evidence that persons other than Frank were nervous and excited the Sunday morning after the crime might vitiate the entire trial.

He intimated strongly after Judge Roan refused to change his ruling that a new trial would be asked on a writ of error in the event of Frank's conviction.

Later, however, Judge Roan reversed his decision.

Arnold, in arguing for the admission of Darley's testimony that other persons at the factory, as well as Frank, were nervous and distrait, got before the jury that it was hardly to be wondered at that Frank, aroused from his bed and told of a shocking crime at his factory, should be agitated, pale and nervous.

Calls Barrett Monomaniac.

Referring to the discoveries of R. P. Barrett, Arnold came out boldly and declared that it was his purpose to show Barrett a monomaniac who continually was turning up evidence, and who very likely was hunting for the rewards offered.

Darley testified that scores of pay envelopes like the one found by Mary Phagan's machine were scattered about the factory every week, and that it was most common to find them in any part of the factory. He said that he looked over the time tape with Leo Frank Sunday morning and made the same error that Frank did, believing at the time that the punches had been made correctly. The tape was shown to the jury to prove how the mistake might have been made.

CONLEY, SWEEPER, LIKELY TO BE LAST WITNESS FOR STATE

BARRING OF TESTIMONY ON NERVOUSNESS OF FACTORY EMPLOYEES HIT BY ROSSER

Judge Roan ruled out testimony as to the conduct and appearance of other persons than Frank at the factory Sunday morning.

The defense played one of its strong cards in behalf of Leo M. Frank when it secured from Darley, manufacturing head of the plant and State's witness, evidence that the prisoner performed three hours of the most intricate mathematical work just after the time the prosecution claims Mary Phagan was slain.

This, the defense brought out, acquired an exceedingly clear mind.

Darley also gave startling testimony as to Frank's nervous and upset condition on the two days following the murder of Mary Phagan.

The statements of Darley came as a complete surprise. The nature of the testimony had been carefully guarded by the Solicitor.

Darley declared that he and Frank arrived at the factory at about the same time Sunday morning, April 27, and that he first noticed Frank's nervousness when he saw the factory superintendent's hand tremble violently when he grasped the elevator rope to run the elevator down into the basement.

"When we got down to the basement," continued Darley, "and Frank started to nail up the back door, I saw that his hands were trembling and I took the hammer and nailed up the door myself, because I thought I could do it better than he could."

Darley also told that when he rode with Frank to the police station Monday, Frank sat on his knee.

"I could perceive that his whole body was trembling and shaking," said Darley. "I noticed it all of the way to the station house."

Club Not Found in Clean-Up.

Solicitor Dorsey asked Darley about a general clean-up ordered by a general insurance inspector who visited the factory April 28. Darley replied that the factory had been cleaned on the first and second floors on or before May 3.

Dorsey then called for the bloody club that was said to have been found on the first floor May 15 near where Jim Conley was sitting. Dorsey threw it down with a clatter by the chair of the witness.

"Was any club of this sort turned up during the cleaning process?" shouted Dorsey.

"No," the witness replied.

"And was not this a thorough cleaning?" the Solicitor asked.

"It was a general cleaning," replied Darley.

Frank Explains Nervousness.

Darley said that Frank later explained his nervousness of Sunday by saying that he had not had any breakfast and that he had just looked upon the body of the dead girl at the morgue. The witness added that Frank did not appear completely upset Monday, as he was able to transact a number of business affairs.

Darley, in spite of his testimony, which will be interpreted by the State as incriminating against Frank, probably was as valuable a witness for the defense as he was for the prosecution. It was under the skillful questioning of Attorney Reuben Arnold, who had begun to take a more active part in the cross-examinations than he had at first, that Darley told of the intricate work that Frank did on the afternoon of April 26 after the time the State claims that Frank murdered the Phagan girl.

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of one of the employees of the National Pencil Factory, who declared she saw a negro hiding behind some boxes on the first floor of the plant on the day Mary Phagan was killed, was the first witness called Friday.

The State with her testimony began to pave the way for the appearance of Conley, who, it is believed, would be the last witness to be called by Solicitor Dorsey, as he would be the most spectacular.

The first witness said her husband had been working at the National Pencil plant about two years.

Mr. Rosser took a blueprint to explain the position in which she saw the negro.

Q. How long after this was it that you talked with Mr. Dorsey about seeing this negro? Wasn't it four or five days?—A. No, sir; about two weeks.

Mrs. White left the stand. Arthur White, her husband, was called, but failed to answer his name. M. V. Darley, assistant superintendent at the National Pencil Factory, was called.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 9:40.

Q. When were you there again?—A. Sunday morning about 8:10 or 8:20.

Q. Why did you go there?—A. Mrs. Frank called me.

Rosser objected.

"I object to anything Mrs. Frank said. She can't be used as a witness," he said.

"Your honor, we have already shown that Frank told his wife to call this man," said Solicitor Dorsey.

"If that's all you want to show, I withdraw my objection," said Rosser.

Q. What time did Frank call at the factory?—A. Shortly after 1 did.

Q. Did you notice anything unusual about Frank?—A. When he reached out his hand to start the elevator, it was trembling. And again when he went to nail up the back door, he was so nervous he couldn't do it, and I did it for him.

Said Body Made Him Nervous.

Q. What, if anything, did Frank say?—A. I don't remember. He said something about having on a new suit of clothes, or something.

Q. Did he say anything about not having breakfast?—A. He said he hadn't had his breakfast and wanted a cup of coffee.

Q. Did he say anything about being nervous?—A. Yes; he said they took him by Bloomfield's and into a dark room, where they turned on the light suddenly and he saw the girl. He said it made him nervous.

Q. Were you there when Newt Lee was?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the murder?—A. He was under the impression the murder occurred in the basement.

Staple Easily Pulled.

Q. Did you observe anything about the staple?—A. Yes; it looked as if it had been taken out easily.

Q. Did you see Frank again?—A. Yes, the following day.

Q. Did he say anything about his nervousness of the day before?—A. Yes; he said something, but I have forgotten.

"Your honor," said Dorsey, "I would like to refresh the witness' memory by reading his previous statement."

"You can only show it to him," answered Judge Roan.

Dorsey showed Darley the affidavit.

Q. Just tell everything you heard Frank say about the murder—A. I don't remember.

"Your honor, I would like to read this," said Dorsey.

Forgets Vital Evidence.

Rosser and Arnold objected.

"He will have to make the usual something about having on a new suit of clothes, or something.

"He is trying to bring in evidence from the outside," said Rosser.

"You can't read it, Mr. Dorsey," said Judge Roan.

"My friend Dorsey would show anything, your honor," said Rosser. "Nothing's too good for him."

Q. State to the jury how much of Frank's body was nervous?—A. That is a pretty hard question.

"Look at this," said Dorsey, showing him an affidavit.

"I said there he was shaking all over," said the witness.

Rosser objected.

Judge Roan asked the witness if he was making that statement now.

Darley's Replies Guarded.

"Judge, that's a very hard question for me," answered Darley. "He reached up to get the ropes, and his hands were shaking very much."

Darley appeared very reluctant to answer any question that might incriminate Frank.

Q. Who nailed up the back door of the basement?—A. I did.

Q. Was Frank able to do it?—A. He was able to do it, I think, but he was nervous.

Q. How did Frank's face appear on the second floor?—A. It was very pale.

Q. Was he upset when you got to the factory?

Rosser objected, but was overruled.

A. I can't say he was completely upset.

"Now, look here," said Dorsey, walking toward the witness with his affidavit.

"Your honor," interrupted Rosser, "he can't speak to the witness in that nasal tone. It is his witness. He can't cross-question him."

"That's right," ruled the judge.

"But," said Mr. Rosser, "your Honor has not been enforcing that ruling."

"I am going to enforce it," replied Judge Roan.

"That's what I am asking you to do now," returned Mr. Rosser.

Mr. Dorsey put his question again.

A. He was somewhat upset, but did some things around the factory that he could not have done if he had been completely upset.

State Wins Clash.

Q. Was he done up?

"I object," broke in Mr. Arnold. "He may mean that he was dead by 'done up.'"

"Leave it to the jury to decide what is meant by 'done up,'" said Dorsey.

"It isn't for you to decide what is to go before the jury," retorted Rosser. "That is for the judge."

Judge Roan ruled the question was admissible.

A. He was partially done up but not completely.

Q. Why do you say that?—A. He did some things he could not have done if he had been wholly done up.

Q. Who was with you on the way to the police station?—A. I got in an automobile. I afterward learned that it was run by "Boots" Rogers. Mr. Frank sat on my knee.

Q. What was his condition?—A. He was trembling all over.

Q. To what extent?—A. He was sitting on my knee and I could feel his body shaking.

Q. What was the condition of Newt Lee?

"I object," said Rosser. "I have been objecting to this line of testimony all along. If your Honor permits this question to be asked, I want to be recorded as protesting."

"Do you insist on the question?" asked Judge Roan of Solicitor Dorsey.

Dorsey and Hooper conferred.

"I am willing to strike out all reference to Newt Lee's condition," said Dorsey.

Attorneys Exchange Courtesies.

"I am glad it has finally dawned on my brothers that these questions are illegal," said Rosser. "I have been trying to get them to see and I am glad to say the light finally has dawned upon them."

"Your Honor," interrupted Hooper, "I object to Mr. Rosser's statement about how long it takes anything to soak into my head. A reference to Newt Lee's attitude was made the other day. We see the object of these objections is to lead into a large field of invesigation. We want to strike it all out."

Dorsey continued questioning the witness.

Q. Did you attend to any business Monday?—A. There wasn't much work to do.

Q. Did you see the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything about the financial sheet Monday?—A. Yes, Mr. Frank called my attention to it.

Q. What did he say, and at what time?—A. I don' recall the conversation, but it was about 9 o'clock.

Q. Did Gantt ever come to the factory after he was discharged?—A. Yes.

Ordered Factory Cleaned.

Q. Did Frank say anything about it?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Did Mr. Haas, the insurance man, come to the factory Monday or Tuesday?—A. He did.

Q. What did he do?—A. He ordered us to clean up the factory in a general way.

Q. What time did you clean up the main floor?—A. May 3.

Q. Did you know anything about the finding of this club? (The witness was handed a heavy stick.)—A. No.

Q. Do you know whether it was found before or after the cleaning up?—A. Afterward—about May 15.

Arnold here took up the cross-examination.

Q. Did you see any spots on the floor?—Yes, in the dressing room.

Q. Who showed them to you?—A. Quinn.

Calls Barrett a "Columbus."

Q. Where was the hair found?—A. On the handle of the lathe.

Q. How was it?—A. Wound around the lathe.

Q. Did Mr. Barrett find it?—A. Yes.

Q. How many strands of hair were there?—A. Not over six.

Q. Barrett has been doing most of the discovering around there, hasn't he?

"I object," said Dorsey. "The question is immaterial."

"I want to show that this man Barrett was a monomaniac," said Arnold.

Judge Roan ruled: "You can show that this man was more than ordinarily interested."

Q. Do you recall Barrett stating he was working for a reward?—I don't recall.

Dorsey: "I object."

Judge Roan ruled: "I have ruled that he can show that to prove interest."

"I want to show that this man was a regular Christopher Columbus."

Q. Do you know who Barrett made this statement to?—A. No.

Q. Is this a pay envelope?—A. Yes.

Pay Envelopes Common.

Q. Are they thrown all over the factory?—A. Yes. We have a rule that if there is any mistake in the pay roll it had to be reported before the employee left.

Q. They are very common in the metal room?—Yes.

Q. Were you present Sunday morning when Frank took out the time slip?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see him run his finger down the time slip?—A. Yes. He ran his finger down the number side. I was looking over his shoulder.

Q. Is there a row of figures down the number side?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything?—A. Yes. He said they were all punched and I verified it.

Q. How did you do it?—A. Just loking at the numbers. We would not have noticed a skip in the time.

Juror Asks Question.

Attorney Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor, a juror wants to ask a question, but Mr. Hooper objects."

"I don't object to his asking the question, but I do object to Mr. Arnold giving the answer," said Mr. Hooper.

Juror Marcellus Johemming asked Darley to explain the time clock system, which Darley did.

Arnold took up the financial sheet.

Q. What did Frank say about the financial sheet?

"I object," said Hooper. "He can ask him about the sheet, provided it is later put in evidence."

"We will put it in all right," said Arnold, "and plenty of other evidence. You need not worry about that."

Q. When was the financial sheet

COST SHEET TESTIMONY OF STATE AIDS DEFENSE OF ACCUSED

Exceptionally Clear Brain Required on Such Figures, Rosser Shows

JUDGE CHANGES RULING ON EVIDENCE

Permits Defense to Show Nervousness of Others Than Frank After Tragedy.

made up?—A. Saturday afternoon.

Q. You were interested?—A. Yes, it was my duty to see it. It dealt with the cost of production.

Q. What time was it made up—that is, what day of the week did it show last?—A. Thursday.

Financial Sheet Introduced.

Q. Who makes it up now?—A. One has not been made out since Mr. Frank left?

Q. How long did it usually take him to make it out?—A. Always from about 2:30 or 3 until 5 o'clock.

Q. Look at this and tell me if this is the sheet you found on his desk Sunday morning?—A. Yes.

Q. How does it compare with his regular handwriting?

Dorsey objected.

"I object, your honor," he said. "The writing is the best evidnce."

Q. I want to ask you are you familiar with Mr. Frank's writing?—A. Yes, I have been seeing it about five years.

Q. Now, I want to ask you one question, but don't answer until we get a ruling. Does this compare favorably with all of Mr. Frank's writing?

Dorsey objected.

Ruling on Handwriting Reserved.

"The code says, your Honor, that we are entitled to the very best evidence," the Solicitor said. "This section holds that in any question of handwriting that an expert must testify, and the papers or specimen of handwriting on the day in question and on other days should be introduced. The jury might not agree with the witness that the sheet in question and other sheets, are similar. They can be produced, and they should be."

"I will withhold my ruling until I look up some authorities," replied Judge Roan.

"I will ask the witness something else," said Arnold.

Q. What process did Frank have to go into to get at these results?—A. He had to get reports from every department, figure averages, costs, sales, profits, expense.

Figures Required Clear Head.

Q. It took a man with a good clear head to figure it?—A. Yes.

Q. What calculation was necessary to arrive at the net result?—A. The amount of rubber tips, labels, and every other little detail must be calculated.

Q. It required a large amount of calculation?—A. Yes.

Q. Sunday, were you in the factory with Frank and Detective Starnes? A. Yes.

Q. There were forty or fifty people in the factory Sunday, were there not?—No, not over six or eight.

Q. Did you go into the cellar?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get to the factory?—A. 8:20.

Q. There was a great deal of excitement there?

Dorsey objected. "I think your Honor has already ruled on this question," said he.

Calls Nervousness Natural.

Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor, it is eminently unfair," he said. "I want to show that this young man was whisked from his home before he had his coffee, and it was nothing unusual if he was excited. Why, I lived at a boarding house with some old bachelors, and they wouldn't even talk before breakfast. When Newt Lee first saw this girl in the basement he ran like a turkey. That was one way of showing his excitement. Some men are naturally nervous; some show nervousness in reading a paper or making a speech; some men go into battle without even flinching."

Judge Roan ruled: "I think you can show the occasion."

Rosser interrupted. "Let me give you a little illustration, your honor," he said. "I was on the streets during the time of the Atlanta riots. Crowds were everywhere and everyone was excited."

Dorsey then spoke: "Only a few minutes ago, your honor, you ruled out, or we considered that you ruled out, the question of Newt Lee being nervous or composed. The only question before this jury is: Was Leo M. Frank nervous?"

Dorsey Wins Ruling.

"You can't show that anyone else was nervous," said Judge Roan.

Rosser: "If you have ruled that way, it will vitiate this trial. This jury will never know that that crowd was nervous and excited. It will never know that Starnes, sleuth that he is, trembled and was excited when he saw that lifeless corpse. That Pat Campbell, son of the Emerald Isle, started back aghast when he touched that icy chest. And if there is one mistake at this time it will vitiate this trial."

"If there is any doubt on your honor's mind, I want to refer you to the 81 and 85 Georgia," said Dorsey. "This proposition is simply a dragnet to go out and bring in everyone when Leo Frank is the only one we are concerned with here."

The objection was sustained.

Attorney Arnold declared that he only wanted those around Frank in the factory described. Dorsey objected, and the objection was sustained.

Attorney Arnold then asked that the objection of the defense be recorded.

Blood Spots Common.

Q. How long have you been working at the factory where there were women, Mr Darley?—A. 24 years.

Q. Isn't it a common thing to find bloodspots around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see any blood spots around the dressing room in this factory?—A. (Darley hesitated). Yes, sir, I have.

Q. What color was the suit Mr. Frank had on Saturday?—A. Brown.

Q. What color suit did he wear on Sunday?—A. Blue.

Q. What color on Monday?—A. The same one he wore on Saturday.

Q. Did you see any splotches on it?—A. No.

Q. Did you see any scratches on Frank's face or hands when he came to the factory Sunday?—A. No, I did not.

Q. What time did Frank leave the factory Saturday morning?—A. About 9:40 o'clock. He started toward Montag's.

Q. You never saw him any more until Sunday?—A. No.

Elevator Found Unlocked.

Q. In what condition did you find the elevator Sunday?—A. The lock was in place but it was unlocked.

Q. Could anybody else have gone in and run it?—A. Anybody who knows how.

Q. That elevator and motor made a good deal of noise when in operation, didn't it?—A. The saw made more noise than the motor and the elevator. When the elevator was running, the saw also was running.

Q. These cords that have been referred to; they were scattered all over the building, were they not?—A. Yes sir. Scattered all around.

Q. Mr. Dorsey asked you something about this building being cleaned?—A. Yes, after the girl was killed.

Q. It was very dirty on the floor of the metal room, wasn't it, the dirt being about an inch thick?—A. I don't know whether it would average that thick or not, but it was very dirty.

Q. The building also was very dark, especially on dark days, wasn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of a day was it on which the little girl was killed?—A. Drizzling rain.

Q. Is anybody supposed to be in the factory on Sunday?—A. No, sir. It is suppcsed to be locked up on Sunday.

Q. The rope on the elevator has some slack in it, hasn't it?—A. A little.

Q. Did Frank catch it with both hands, or with one hand?—A. With both hands.

Q. Frank only weighs about 125 or 130 pounds, doesn't he? He is what you would call a little fellow isn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he fatter now than he was then?—A. He is about the same.

Q. How did you happen to go to Mr. Dorsey's office?—A. He 'phoned for me.

Q. He served a subpena on you, didn't he?

Dorsey objected, but Judge Roan overruled the objection.

A. He served two subpenas on me and 'phoned me once.

Frank Nervous Every Day.

Q. Didn't you know those subpenas were not worth the paper they were written on?—A. I didn't then. I have heard so since.

Q. Who was at Dorsey's office?—A. Dorsey, Chief Lanford, Detectives Starnes and Campbell and a stenographer.

Q. They asked you questions, except the stenographer?—A. Yes, sometimes. One would interrupt before I could answer the question of the other.

Q. They asked you whether Mr. Frank was a nervous man, didn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Wasn't he a hard working man who easily got nervous when things went wrong?—A. Yes, sir. If your honor will allow me, I will say that there never was a day passed that Mr. Frank didn't get nervous over something. I have seen him run his hands through his hair in an agitated way a thousand times.

DEFENSE NOT HELPED BY WITNESSES ACCUSED OF ENTRAPPING THE STATE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Has the State succeeded in thoroughly establishing the fact that little Mary Phagan's tragic death was effected on the second floor of the National Pencil Factory, in Forsyth street?

It has not, of course—but it has set up by competent evidence a number of suspicious circumstances, which, if properly sustained later along, will prove damaging in the extreme to Leo Frank.

Unless these circumstances, trivial in some aspects, are braced up and backed up, however, by other much stronger circumstances, they will give the jury, in all probability, little concern in arriving at a verdict.

Thursday was not a sensationally good day for the State, although it was much better than the day before.

Twice Thursday the Solicitor General claimed that he had been "entrapped" by witnesses—and this, with the lamentable fall down of John Black the day before—served to give rise in the minds of some spectators to a faint suspicion that the State didn't have its case very well in hand.

No Help to Defense.

There is something terribly significant and actually sinister in that little word "entrapped," however, when hurled at a witness in the presence of a jury, and it would be a mistake to believe that a witness, actually convicted, even in the mere opinion of the jury, of having deliberately misled the prosecution thereby helps the defense.

The witness who entraps, or who is thrown under suspicion of having entrapped, frequently does the party he seems primarily to have hurt a wonderful amount of good.

I believe, for instance, that Witness E. F. Holloway was speaking the truth when, on oath, he reversed his former affidavit to the Solicitor, and said that he left the elevator unlocked on Saturday, whereas he before had sworn that he locked it Friday and did not unlock it Saturday—the last inferentially, at least.

This point will mean a good deal later, when it is reached in developing the defense's case, and if Holloway's last story, apparently satisfactorily explained, holds together, well and good—but who can tell what the jury thinks about that contradiction upon the part of Holloway, particularly when he has been so deliberately accused by the Solicitor of entrapping him?

Holloway is an employee of the pencil factory—was before and has been since the murder. If the jury gathers the impression that he has been tampered with since his first statement, and by friends of Frank, to clear up seemingly damaging circumstances against Frank, it likely will be an aggravating thing, when the jury comes to make up its findings.

Will Hurt Frank's Case.

Just as I thought, and still think, that Dorsey made a tactical mistake—for which he paid the full price, moreover—when on Wednesday he exclaimed "plant," thereby accusing the defense of unfair and grossly indecent methods of bolstering up its cause, so I think the constant suggestion of witnesses changed in opinion and testimony, and in favor of Frank, will hurt Frank's case, rather than help it, if sustained.

Mr. Dorsey failed utterly to bolster up his charge of "planted" evidence, but he didn't fail, in anything like the same degree, to say the least of it, in attacking Holloway.

Or, anyway, there is a grave probability that he didn't fail in the minds of the jury.

In short, my idea is this, as it has been all along: The public, and presumably even more the jury, will resent anything that savors of unfair methods employed either by the State or the defense.

Steadily, though slowly, the defense seems to be pulling away from the prosecution in the Frank trial, and the impression apparently is gaining ground gradually that the State likely is fighting a losing battle.

All of this may be changed in a moment—one witness on behalf of the State may serve to win back all the ground it may have lost.

Nothing More Uncertain Than Verdict

And, of all things, there is nothing to speculate upon quite so uncertain as the verdict a jury will hand in.

The jury is sitting there, its attention confined to the development of the evidence. It reads no newspapers; it converses with no outsiders.

It can not get up, run across the street and swap ideas with somebody in the corner drug store.

It took charge of the case, under its deliberately assumed oath that it was "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," and it is seeing things in its own way—and that way may not be the way outsiders are seeing it.

So far, however, the State's witnesses alone have been introduced. Whatever advantage the defense has gained of them has come in two ways—either in their failure to testify directly to the State's benefit or through circumstances and admissions brought out in favor of the defense, under the merciless cross-examination of Luther Rosser.

It is a good deal to say, nevertheless, that at this stage of the trial the defense apparently has scored heavilest, for such points as it has won necessarily have been wrung from the State's own witnesses, and not the witnesses of the defense. In other words, wherever the State fails to score, the defense scores.

How Points Have Been Scored.

If the defense made little, if anything, of Lee, it lost little, if anything, because of him.

It almost, if not quite, broke even on Rogers—and it most certainly scored tremendously on Black.

Scott, if damaging in a way, was also helpful in a way, in that he practically admitted suspicion of the negro Conley quite as strong as suspicion of Frank.

Monteen Stover swore that Frank was not in his office for, at least, a period of some five minutes immediately after 12 o'clock on the day of the murder; at least, if he was, he was where she could not or did not see him. Grace Hix undoubtedly helped Frank. Dr. Smith helped the State.

R. P. Barrett swore he found a piece of a pay envelope under Mary Phagan's machine three or four days after the murder, and that he found blood spots near the dressing room door three or four days after the murder.

Mell Stanford swore that the spots near the dressing room were not there Friday, and were there Monday, but he could not swear the spots were blood. Holloway helped the defense, probably.

There is nothing new in most of this testimony, however, save that of Barrett concerning the piece of envelope, and the defense presumably is ready, therefore, to meet it.

State Faces Hard Task.

The mere finding of a piece of pay envelope somewhere even near Mary Phagan's machine, is not, of itself, highly important; but it might serve as a link in an otherwise strong chain forged to connect Frank directly with the killing.

But if the State has succeeded in setting forth the fact that Frank may possibly have committed the crime, it yet has a long road to travel before it proves "beyond a reasonable doubt" that he DID do it.

Indeed, Frank's attorneys have never combated the idea that he was in the factory at a moment when the killing of Mary Phagan MIGHT have been effected—and beyond that fact the State has been unable to proceed very far to date.

It must be remembered, too, that while the State now is engaged in weaving a web, real or imaginary, about Frank, the defense expects to weave a much more terrible and substantial web about Conley.

But even at that, mere suspicion alone will serve to convict neither.

Much Depends on Conley.

After all is said and done, and it generally gets back to this, the preliminary chain of circumstances against Frank likely will hold together tightly or fall apart hopelessly, according to the fate of James Conley on the witness stand.

If Conley stands the test of exhaustive cross-examination, then the circumstances leading up to and away from Conley's connection with the case will stand or fall.

He is, and has been, at all times both the hope and the despair of the State, no less than the hope and despair of the defense.

He is the star witness about whom the entire Frank case revolves, about whom it has revolved for weeks, and about whom it must revolve to its end.

Of course, there ever is the chance that the State has something sensational, new and significant up its sleeve—and there is the remoter chance that the defense has some big surprises in store.

As the fifth day of the trial drags on, however, the impression has deepened almost into a conviction in the mind of the public that neither the State nor the defense has much to let out that already hasn't been let out, in whole or in substantial parts.

Spirit of Fairness Everywhere.

And the public is waiting for Conley's evidence before making up its mind.

More and more I notice in the casual comment of people about town a spirit of fairness and an inclination to await the full developments of both the State and the defense.

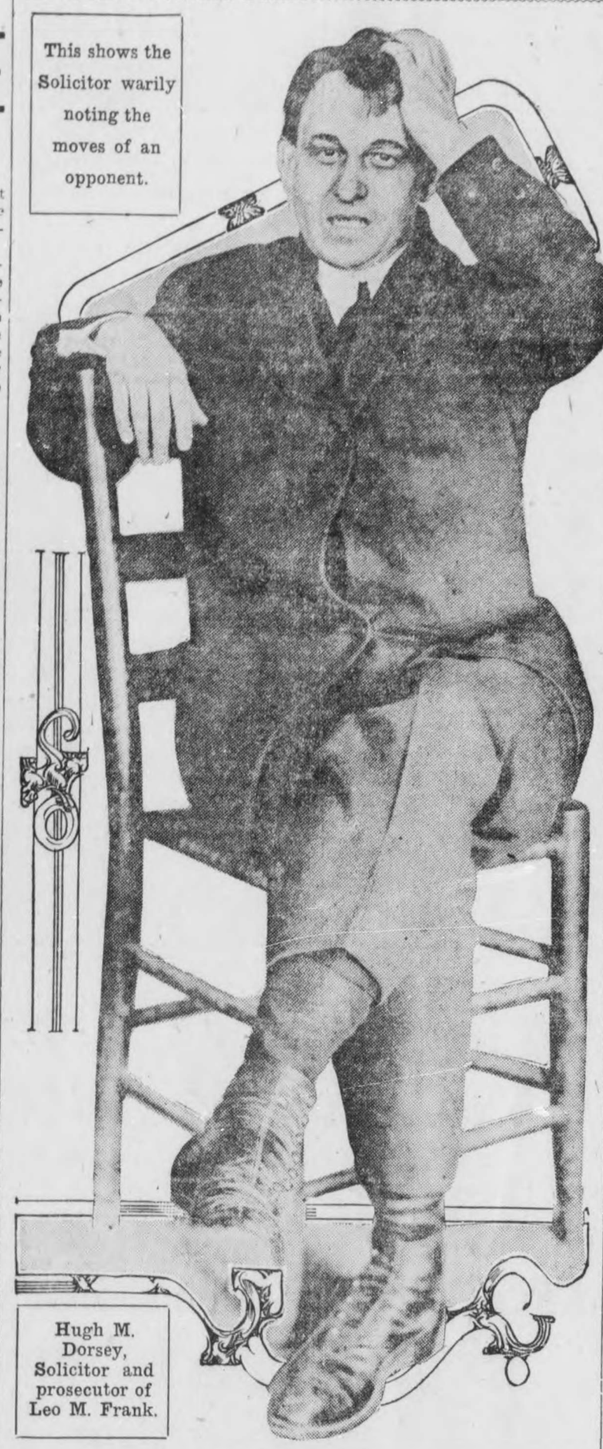

The public largely still is open-minded. It is "from Missouri"—and, after all, that is the way the public mind should be in this matter, for it is a very grave matter, and its final effect will be far-reaching and full of significance, no matter which way the verdict comes finally.

There is one point that Undertaker Gheesling cleared up, on oath, and the public should take careful note of it. He swore that Mary Phagan's body was NOT mutilated in the way street rumor and gossip had it mutilated, just after the crime was committed.

That ugly story undoubtedly was accountable for some of the primary prejudice against Frank—but it was an untrue rumor, and in all fairness, now that it has been exploded, it should be borne in mind.

DORSEY UNAFRAID AS HE FACES CHAMPIONS OF THE ATLANTA BAR

This shows the Solicitor warily noting the moves of an opponent.

Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor and prosecutor of Leo M. Frank.

Up Against a Hard Proposition Youthful Solicitor Is Fighting Valiantly to Win Case.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Georgia's law's most supreme penalty faces Leo Frank.

A reputation that they can not be beaten must be sustained by Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold.

Atlanta's detective department's future is swaying on the issue of the Frank trial.

But there is a man with probably as much at stake as any of the hundreds who crowd Judge Roan's courtroom, with the exception of Frank, and he is accepting the ordeal, though he realizes it, as calmly as a person who has nothing more serious to decide than whether he will order his steak rare or well done at breakfast time.

Hugh Dorsey is hereby introduced. He is known pretty well in Atlanta without introduction, but as chairmen on political meetings insists on telling the audience that the President of the United States is about to speak or that the Secretary of State is endeavoring to earn an additional amount to his yearly $12,000, Mr. Dorsey can be placed before the public without fear of violating precedent.

Consider Hugh Dorsey.

Consider Dorsey's job. His position as public prosecutor places on him the duty of sending someone to the gallows, and this time it is Leo M. Frank, against whom he must direct his efforts.

The proposition of convicting a man is as common in the life of a Solicitor as paying his car fare home. But here's a different proposition. Dorsey is confronted with the task of getting a conviction over the efforts of Luther Rosser and Rueben Arnold to obtain an acquittal.

And anyone who knows Atlanta, who knows Fulton County, who knows Rosser, who knows Arnold, realizes that this is a task from which Hercules might sidestep, a labor that is more tremendous than the building of the Panama Canal or the successful storming of the fortress of Gibraltar.

And still Dorsey has gone into the fight unafraid; not only that, he is aggressive.

Atlanta's record for big crime trials has not been altogether healthy in the past twelve months. In that time Dorsey has prosecuted Mrs. Daisy Grace on a charge of attempting to slay her husband. Atlanta was intensely interested in this issue. Mrs. Grace was acquitted. Dorsey lost.

He prosecuted Callie Scott Applebaum on a charge of ending the life of her husband. Again the public was deeply interested. Again Dorsey lost.

And then came the Phagan killing.

Atlanta, Georgia and the South demanded that her slayer be brought before the bar of justice and be given law's severest penalty.

Frank was fixed upon by the police as the man.

The grand jury indicted him, and Dorsey staked his all on his conviction.

Luther Rosser had been retained as Frank's chief counsel.

Dorsey smiled.

Again there was a flash. Reuben Arnold had been added to the list of legal array to clear the name of the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory of the charge that the had taken the life of a little girl.

Reputation is a big thing. No prize fighter faces a champion without doubts as to his ability to cope with him. The greatest financial genius probably trembled in his boots when he first met the foremost captain of industry. A violin virtuoso bows before Kubelik. There is no pianist who would approach Paderewski without a sensation of awe.

And here in Atlanta, Arnold and Rosser are champions. They are Kubeliks, they are Paderewskis.

Hugh Dorsey hasn't quailed.

Throughout the trial he has been desperately earnest. He realizes the work that is before him. If he has any enemies, they will admit that he has handled his case well.

The Solicitor General is a great deal younger than his opponents. His hair is tinged with gray, and there will probably be more of those strands there before he is through with his clashes with the dynamic Rosser and the erudite Arnold.

He is taking the case with intense seriousness. So far, Rosser's efforts to rattle him by calling him "Hugh," "my young friend," "son" and "bud" have been unavailing.

The practical collapse of his detective testimony was enough to stun any man, but Dorsey stuck it out gamely. There is plenty of fight still in his eyes. It will be there if the case goes against him.

His appearance would indicate that he is holding something back, something with which he expects to surprise his eminent opponents.

Then, There Is Hooper.

There is one thing that every spectator knows is ebing held back. He is a quiet little man, with a scholarly face, a man who has already won his spurs in Georgia politics, but who has not figured extensively in the bigger criminal cases tried before Atlanta courts.

The man is Frank Hooper. He has been on his feet but once. He made an impression then. And when the case comes to its crucial stages, it will be well to watch these two young lawyers arrayed against the admitted masters of their craft.

She lithe and unknown Corbett sent the invincible John L. Sullivan to oblivion. Brian du Bois Gilbert was unhorsed by Wilfred of Ivanhoe. Theodore Roosevelt ran second in a Presidential race.

Who knows?

Sherlocks, Lupins and Lecoqs See Frank Trial

There are enough "hists," aha's" and those other exclamations that mark a true detective besides the badge on his left suspender to fill a whole volume of Gaborieau thrillers at the Frank trial.

A stranger whirled from the Terminal Station to Judge Roan's courtroom would be convinced before he had been in that temple of justice five minutes that all Atlanta earns its living following clews, and that if Sherlock Holmes was made a material being he could beat Jim Woodward for Mayor by 8,000 votes.

Ever since the body of Mary Phagan was found, practically every man of voting age and a lot of those who just think they are, have evolved a theory as to the crime they regard as incontrovertible as two plus two makes four, and have a system of ratiocination (beg pardon, Mr. Poe), that either proves beyond the shadow of a doubt that Leo M. Frank is guilty, or that he is innocent, or that Jim Conley did it, or he didn't, or that somebody did, but they'll be hanged if they know who.

Theorists There for Vindication.

The census of 1910 gave Atlanta a population of 154,839, and it is safe to say that 154,839 sure-fire theories have been evolved.

And everyone of the theorists wants to go to the courtroom to see his theory upheld and see the theory of the other fellow smashed to smithereens.

Atlanta's deductive and inductive powers were never even dimly realized until this week.

Chat with the throng around the courthouse. Mingle with the Lupins, the Lacoqs, the Anna Katherine Greens in the room where the issue is being fought.

Clerk Turns Detective.

Your surprise will be suddenly converted into admiration and then into awe. A person, whom you had mistaken for a clerk with a brain capable of knowing nothing more complex than a suit will sell for $19.99 quicker than it will for $20, you discover has a reasoning power as infallible as that of Socrates and a knowledge of things criminal that makes him the most deadly foe to crime since Bertillon.

He can take an envelope, locate it on a second floor and in a flash conceive just how a deed of murder was committed.

He can watch a man's hand tremble and immediately conceive him a perjurer and a villain of the deepest dye, although he doesn't ask him if he had taken on too much the night before.

"Signs Air Hopeful," Says Uncle Ben.

He can point out the fatal weakness in the attack of a lawyer who makes more money in a minute than he himself makes in a week. A man selected by a sovereign people to represent the majority of their law becomes a mere novice under his merciless criticism.

"But the signs air hopeful," remarked Uncle Ben Green, from out Hapeville way, as he listened to the findings of the amateur sleuths and chewed tobacco.

"The signs air hopeful," he repeated. "I've been a-sittin' here since the trial begun, and from what I hev seed of these deteckertive fellers we've got right now, it's a pretty good thing that a new crop is a-comin' up."

MEASURE TO BAR NEGRO VOTERS IS FAVORED

Slade's Interpretation of Constitution's "Good Character" To Be Recommended to House.

The disfranchisement bill of Representative Slade of Muscogee, which its author says is an interpretation of the "good character" clause in the State Constitution, will be favorably recommended by the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments at Friday's session of the House. The vote was unanimous in favor of so reporting the bill at the committee meeting Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Slade's bill interprets the good character clause to mean that "no man, white or black, whom a virtuous woman will not trust in a place of seclusion without fear of physical assault, shall be allowed to vote."

The right to strike off names of voters is vested in the ordinaries of the counties. If a voter objects, women shall not be called in, but the question shall be decided by men who are familiar with the voter's life and habits.

Mr. Slade declared that the bill is not directed against white men, but by its passage he hopes to disfranchise every negro in the State.

"I have been trying to get this bill through for the past two or three years, and am very hopeful that the members of this Legislature may see fit to pass it at the present session," Mr. Slade said.

Vote Buttons Sold By Suffrage League

Atlanta suffragists busied themselves Thursday in the sale of suffrage buttons and distribution of suffrage literature just to be doing something while their suffrage sisters were parading in Washington. The button sale was held at the entrance of Mrs. Lillian Smith's millinery store, No. 115 Peachtree street, and a neat sum secured. This fund will be expended in the holding of meetings to further the cause.

The sale was held under the auspices of the Woman's Suffrage League of Atlanta, which was the Woman's Civic League until two weeks ago.

Diplomats in Revolt Against Grape Juice

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—"Grape juice diplomacy" has been banished by the dinner given by Senator Lefevre, Charge d'Affaires of the Panama Legation, in honor of Richard L. Metcalf, a member of the Isthmian Canal Commission, at which Secretary Bryan was present.

The dinner was distinguished by the choice selection of wines and other liquids served. Grape juice had no place on the menu.

This is the first of a series of revolts said to be hatching among the diplomats.

LOAN SHARK KING FINED; PUT ON PROBATION

Prison Sentence If Daniel Tolman Re-enters Business—Made $500,000 a Year.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 1.—The loan shark business of the country received a death blow to-day when Daniel H. Tolman, alleged to be the head of practically the entire business of the country, was sentenced to pay a fine of $1,000 and was placed under probation for three years.

Should Tolman be detected in operating a loan agency in any part of the United States, his probation will be revoked and he will be brought back to Trenton to serve a prison term.

Tolman was arrested in a raid on his offices here on July 30, 1912, and was one of the first caught in the dragnet to clean up the loan sharks. When arrested he resisted the officers and had to be carried and dragged to the patrol.

He is said to have operated 69 loan shark agencies throughout the country. The business netted him $500,000 profits a year.

He fought the case at every step through the courts, but when forced to go to trial, changed his attitude and pleaded guilty.

Dr. O'Kelley Chosen As New Mercer Head

MACON, Aug. 1.—It is definitely announced that the presidency of Mercer University has been offered to Dr. T. W. O'Kelley, pastor of the First Baptist Church, of Raleigh, N. C. It is believed that he will accept.

Dr. O'Kelley graduated at Mercer in 1890 with first honors, and subsequently he taught Greek and Latin at Mercer. Afterward he became principal of Hiawassee High School, in North Georgia. He is 50 years of age and a man of family. He is regarded as one of the ablest Baptist ministers of the south.

Dr. O'Kelley was chosen from a list of sixteen prominent clergymen and educators.

$900 Tip by Gates Is Returned by Waiter

MINNEAPOLIS, August 1.—Charles G. Gates, son of the late John W. Gates, nearly caused the collapse of a negro waiter in a hotel cafe here.

His dinner check amounted to almost $100, it is said. Gates called the waiter to him, pulled out a roll of $1,000 bills, slipped off the top one and said: "Here, boy, keep the change."

Gates then left. The waiter turned the $900 over to the manager of the cafe, who mailed Mr. Gates a check for the amount.

GIRL SLAIN AFTER FRANK LEFT FACTORY, BELIEVED TO BE DEFENSE THEORY

Was Mary Phagan killed at or very near the time she entered the National Pencil Factory April 26 to get her pay envelope or was she merely attacked at this time and murdered later?

The line of questioning pursued by Luther Rosser in his cross-examination of two of the State's witnesses Thursday afternoon indicated this will be one of the questions the jurors will have to settle before they will be able to determine the innocence or guilt of Leo M. Frank.

Rosser was most persistent in his interrogation both of William A. Gheesling embalmer, and Dr. Claude A. Smith, physician and bacteriologist. Gheesling went to the pencil factory at about 4 o'clock the morning of the crime and took charge of the Phagan girl's body. He told Solicitor Dorsey in the direct examination Thursday that the girl had been dead ten or fifteen hours and that rigor mortis was well established.

Gets Admission Before Jury.

Rosser at once began an attempt to break down this portion of the embalmer's testimony, and succeeded in getting before the jury the witness' admission that rigor mortis is extremely variable in the time it takes to set in and become well established in a body. Gheesling admitted that the surroundings in respect to dampness and temperature had their effect, as did the cause of the person's death, and that the degree of rigor mortis could not be taken as an invariable indication of the time that a person had been dead.

Frank's attorney made similar inquiries of Dr. Smith and from him obtained similar statements. The presumption is he will use the testimony of the State's witnesses to supplement that of the defense, combining them to support the theory that the Phagan girl was attacked on the first floor by Conley and by him was thrown down the elevator shaft or carried down the ladder into the basement, but was not actually slain until after Frank had left the factory in the evening.

Two other points will be established by the defense before the State rests if Rosser is able to wring the information he wants from the witnesses called by Dorsey.

Says Frank Returned Alone.

One of them is that Jim Conley did not walk to the factory with or just behind Leo Frank Saturday morning, April 26, as Conley swore in his last affidavit that he did. E. F. Holloway, one of the State's witnesses, testified Thursday afternoon that no one was with Frank when he returned from Montag Brothers that morning.

Rosser also displayed an unmistakable intention of making the detectives and officers admit that Frank was under virtual arrest when he was questioned Monday by the authorities, and that there was no reason why he should not have been aware of his status.

He succeeded in getting B. B. Haslett to make just this admission and undoubtedly will use it to explain the measures that were taken at once for the protection of Frank's interests, measures on which the State has looked with suspicion because, the attorneys state, Frank was not placed under arrest until 11:30 the Thursday forenoon after the crime.

State Fares Better Thursday.

The State fared better Thursday than any other day during the trial. Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, submitted considerable damaging evidence in respect to Frank's appearance and actions during the first days of the investigation, although nothing that was startling or direct or even new.

He told that Frank was extremely nervous when the superintendent and Newt Lee were placed in the same room at the police station and that Frank squirmed about in his chair, rubbed his chin and lips in agitated manner, grew pale and trembling and in every way comported himself as one might who was guilty of a crime.

Scott said that he and John Black entered the room as Frank and Lee were finishing their conversation and that he overheard the latter part of Frank's remarks.

Rosser immediately caught the detective up on this statement, referring him to his testimony before the Coroner's Jury, where he testified that he had not entered the room until the conversation between Lee and Frank was completed and that he overheard nothing. Scott explained that he must have been mistaken when he testified before the Coroner.

Scott testified that Herbert Haas, one of Frank's attorneys, early in the case had tried to persuade him to turn his evidence over to the defense before submitting it to the police, but this already had been aired at the inquest and was without particular effect, as Scott added, under the cross-examination of Rosser, that there was no attempt to have it suppressed or kept from the police authorities, but only to have it given first to the defense.

What had the appearance of being the most sensational testimony of the day was that given by R. P. Barrett, a machinist on the second floor of the factory, when he declared that he had found a pay envelope under the machine used by Mary Phagan. The pay envelope, however, when it was shown to the jury, was discovered to have on it no date, no amount, no name, with the exception of a loop of one letter, no number nor any other mark to identify it as the pay envelope that the Phagan girl received Saturday, April 26. Nor was any explanation suggested as to how she may have happened to be at her machine when there was no work being done that day and the machines were not in operation.

Barrett testified to the finding of the alleged blood spots on the second floor near the women's dressing room and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. No more was developed out of the testimony then was already known to the public when Barrett announced his discovery a few days after the murder. Barrett also declared that a white substance had been used with the apparent intention of removing the splotches of red.

Sweeper Tells of Splotches.

Mel Stanford, a factory sweeper, corroborated Barrett in his story of the finding of the spots and the white substance that was spread over them. He said the spots were not there when he swept the factory Friday and that the first time he noticed them was when they were pointed out to him the Monday morning after the murder.

Monteen Stover, the 14-year-old factory girl, gave exactly the testimony that had been expected. She said she had entered the factory at 12:05 the day of the tragedy, and that Frank was not in his office. She said that she looked about in his office for him and on failing to find him left the building. She testified that she looked at the clock as she departed, and it was 12:10. Her story contradicts the statement of Frank that he was in his office all the time after he came from Montag Brothers at about 11 o'clock until he went to the fourth floor to see Harry Denham and Arthur White at about 12:50.

Dr. Claude A. Smith, city bacteriologist, testified that he found four or five blood corpuscles on one of the chips of wood that were brought to him. He could not tell whether or not it was human blood. These chips were the ones taken from the floor where the alleged spots were found. He said that in his opinion the blood-stained shirt found at the home of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman, never had been worn and that the blood on it was put on the inside of the garment and seeped through to the outside.

of the help, did he?

"I object," said Dorsey. Arnold withdrew the question.

"Did he know Mary Phagan?

"I object to that," continued Dorsey still on his feet.

Objection was overruled.

A. Not to my knowledge, he didn't.

Q. Did you know her?—A. If I had seen her on the street I would have known she was a factory girl; but I didn't know her name.

Q. I believe you said all sorts of papers get down into that boiler room, don't they?—A. Yes.

"Give me those notes and that pay envelope," said Arnold.

Q. It was nothing unusual to find papers like these in the basement, was it?—A. I have seen such papers there.

Q. Any man who had the run of the factory, would have no trouble in getting hold of them, would he?—A. No.

Q. Was the watchman accustomed to locking the clock door?—A. Yes, but at that time the key was lost.

Q. Frank didn't unlock it Sunday morning, did he?—A. He couldn't have. The key was gone.

Q. You say you and Frank both made the mistake of thinking all the punches had been made?—A. Yes.

At this point, which was 12:15, the court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Frank Nervous at Accident.

Q. Did you look over the building at the noon hour, as I requested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I want you to say if there are any inaccuracies in this diagram.—A. Yes, the steps are too short (pointing to the steps from the first to second floor).

Q. You said Mr. Frank was often nervous. Do you remember any specific occasion?—A. Yes; I remember once when a child had been run down by a street car, he was so nervous he couldn't work on his books.

Q. Now I will ask you if everyone around that factory Sunday was not excited and nervous?—A. Yes, more or less.

Q. (Attorney Arnold pointed to the diagram again) Now, isn't the bottom of the ladder much closer to the elevator than this picture would indicate?—A. I would think so. About six feet.

Q. Isn't the toilet in the basement closer to the wall than the boiler than this picture would indicate?—A. It is right up against the wall and closer to the boiler.

Thought Starnes Was Nervous.

Q. Are there not double dors on the first floor instead of single doors? A. Yes.

Q. Does this picture show a bookcase in Frank's office?—A. No.

Q. This picture here seems pretty adroitly drawn to show a clear view of Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. Is the door to Frank's office as large as this?—A. No.

Q. Isn't this safe here about the size of this dor?—A. Yes.

Q. How large does it look?—A. About half as large.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. You say you observed at the same time you observed Frank's nervousness, the nervousness of other people?—A. Yes.

Q. Name one other man you thought was nervous?—A. Detective Starnes.

Q. Detail to the jury one act of nervousness on his part?—A. I can't recall.

Q. Then you can tell the jury as accurately as you did about Leo M. Frank's one instance of nervousness? A. I can't except Holloway and Schiff.

Q. Did anyone of them say anything about being nervous?—A. No.

Says Extra Affected Frank.

Q. Did you see anyone nervous Tuesday?—A. Yes. Mr. Frank was nervous when he read the extra that said he would be arrested He gave me his letters and told me to answer them.

Q. What did Frank say to you about that slip?—A. He said it was all right up until 3:30 o'clock.

Q. What did Frank do about dating it?—A. I don't know.

Q. What about this one dated April 28 on a typewriter?—A. That might be it.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Starnes calling for a slip Sunday morning? A. Yes.

Q. Who gave it to him?—A. Schiff, I think.

Q. Could there have been two slips of Newt Lee for that night? Were they duplicated?—A. No.

Q. Well there is no more that would enable you to identify which slip was Newt Lee's for that night, is there? A. No one could identify it.

Q. Where do you spend most of your time while at the factory?—A. I come to the factory about 7:15 a. m. and am all over it until about 11 o'clock, when I go to lunch. I return and stay until 5 o'clock.

Blanks Kept in Office.

Q. Where is the nearest place to Frank's office that they keep order blanks?—A. The proper place to keep them is in the outer office.

Q. Is there any place to keep these pads in the basement?—A. No, not unless it is swept there.

Q. Is there any place for them around the radiator on the second floor?—A. No, but they are swept there.

Q. Where is trash kept in the basement?—A. Near the boiler.

Q. What is done with it?—A. It is burned.

Q. How far did you go with Miss Smith?—A. I didn't go all the way out.

Q. What time was it?—A. About 9:20.

Q. Before or after Frank left?—A. Before.

Q. You had been working with Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see Frank manifest nervousness so long before?—A. Only twice.

Attorney Anold here took the witness on the re-cross-examination.

Q. Didn't some woman get hysterical at the factory Monday morning?—A. Yes, Miss Eula Flowers.

Mr. Darley then left the witness stand, and Policeman W. F. Anderson was called.

Q. Where were you at 3 o'clock Saturday night, April 26?—A. At the police station.

Tells of Murder News.

Q. What happened?—A. Why the telephone rang and a voice that said he was the nightwatchman at the National Pencil factory asked us to come over there, that a girl had been murdered there.

Q. Did he say it was a white or a negro girl?—A. He said it was a white girl.

Q. Did you do any telephoning from the pencil factory?—A. I called Mr. Frank, the superintendent.

Q. Did you get him?—A. No, sir, all I heard was a buzzing and ringing.

Q. Did you call anyone else?—A. Yes, I called the police station and then Mr. Montag and Mr. Haas.

Q. Did you get them?—A. Yes, I got them all within a few minutes.

Q. Did you try to get Mr. Frank again?—A. Yes, but failed.

Q. What time was it?—A. Near 4 o'clock.

Mr. Rosser took up the cross-examination.

Q. How long did it take you to get to the pencil factory from the police station?—A. About five minutes.

Q. Who met you at the factory? The negro nightwatchman, Newt Lee. He came down from the second floor and let us in.

Refers to Former Evidence.

Q. What sort of a light did he have?—A. An old lantern.

Q. Was it smoky?—A. Yes.

Q. The negro told you he saw the body of the girl while at the oilet? A. Just as he was standing there.

Q. Did you stand in that position to see if you could see what he said he saw?—A. Not at that time, but later.

Q. What the old lantern, sitting in front of him, could he have seen the body?—A. He could have seen the bulk, but not have been able to identify it.

Q. Did not you testify before the Coroner's jury that he could not have seen it?—No, I said just what I said just now.

Mr. Rosser read his testimony before the Coroner in which the witness said he did not think the body could have been seen.

Q. Didn't you say that?—A. I don't think so. He could have seen the bulk.

Q. Your memory was fresher then? A. No, sir.

Q. Doesn't time dim your memory? A. No.

Q. You mean you can remember a translation as well ten years afterward as two minutes?—A. Sometimes I thing I can.

Q. Do you remember the telephone number by which you called Mr. Frank?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Isn't your memory just as fresh ten years afterwards as it is two minutes after?—A. I didn't say I remembered the telephone number.

Q. You made an investigation down in that basement with the Coroner's jury?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you use Lee's lantern in making your test?—A. No, I used a flash light.

Q. It is better than a lantern, isn't it?—A. Yes, sir.

H. L. Parry, court stenographer, was called to the stand to testify as to the evidence taken before the Coroner's jury.

Q. Did you report the Coroner's inquest?—A. Yes; I don't know whether I reported it all.

Q. Look at this—did you report this (Frank's statement was shown)?—A. Yes.

Q. Is that correct?—A. Yes, to the best of my ability.

Q. You have been reporting a long time, haven't you?—A. About 25 year.

Took Lee's Testimony.

Rosser took the witness.

Q. Can you tell me whether you reported the testimony of Policeman Anderson?—A. I don't recall.

Q. Did you take down the estimony of Newt Lee?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that correct?—A. To the best of my ability and in the common acceptance of the word.

Q. I want you to say whether you took it down accurately?—A. I wrote it, word for word (looking at record). The evidence of Newt Lee here was when he was recalled. Now, the evidence of Frank that I wrote was when he was first sworn.

Here Attorney Rosser compared his record of the inquest with the official copy and found them identical.

Dorsey said: "Your honor, I want to read Frank's statement before the Coroner and have it introduced."

Rosser: "I will ask your honor to give a moment's consideration to that."

Judge Roan ordered the jury to retire while he heard the arguments.

Dorsey: "I want to read this to your honor. The next witness to be called will follow right on it."

Rosser: "I am quite sure that he can not use a part of that testimony nor all of it. I have two objections. One is that he can't take or cull out a part of it which, when standing alone, might mean something different, and I object to all or any of it going in."

Starnes Called Again.

Rosser considered a moment, then: "After consideration, I will agree to all of it going in."

Dorsey: "We decline that proposition."

Detective Starnes was then called to the stand.

The jury had not returned. Attorney Hooper questioned him.

Q. Were you at the inquest when Frank made this statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Rosser represent him?—A. I don't know

After an extended argument again over the introduction of Frank's evidence at the Coroner's inquest, Dorsey said he would give the matter up and take it up again from a different angle.

Dr. H. F. Harris, Secretary of the State Board of Health, was called to the stand, following Starnes, who was called for a moment to testify that he was present when Frank testified before the Coroner.

The jury returned. Dorsey began the questioning:

Q. What is your business?—A. Physician.

Q. What experience have you had?—A. I began to practice in 1888.

Q. Outline, please, your experience.

Dr. Harris made a lengthy outline of his experience in the field of medicine, declaring that he became Secretary of the State Board of Health in 1903.

Few Wounds on Body.

Q. Did you examine the body of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes; there were several abrasions on her body. A scar on her forehead, a small place on her right arm, on her left leg and the right leg was bruised. There was a wound on the back of her head to the left. It was a severe blow. The blood on her hair was from a fist or some soft instrument.

Q. Was the injury on her scalp sufficient to have caused her death?—A. No.

Q. What effect do you think it would have had?—A. It would have rendered her unconscious.

Q. What do you think caused her death?—A. Strangulation. The indentions on her throat from the cords were very deep. Undoubtedly they caused her death.

Q. Was the blow on her eye and head before or afte death?—A. Before death.

Q. Did you examine the contents of Mary Phagan's stomach?—A. Yes.

Q. What did it contain?—A. About 150 cubic centimetres of cabbage.

Q. How long would you say this cabbage had been in her stomach before she met her death?—A. Not more than half an hour. I have here some cabbage taken from a stomach about an hour after death. The cabbage was completely dissolved.

Q. Did you not examine the organs of Mary Phagan?—A. Yes.

Q. How long after death does it take for rigor mortis to set in?—A. That varies with people. It may begin within a few minutes after death, or be delayed for hours.

Doctor on Verge of Collapse.

Q. Will you be able to state from your examination how long Mary Phagan had been lying on the ground? A. I could not.

Q. How long after she ate that meal do you think death resulted?—A. I should say between half and three quarters of an hour.

Q. How fresh were the evidence of violence?—A. I would say just a few minutes before death.

Dr. Harris then address Judge Roan "Your honor, I will ask you to excuse me, I am too weak to go on with this. I have been ill three days."

"I just want to ask one more question," said Dorsey, "and then I will ask your honor to excuse this witness until he is able to return for the cross-examination."

Q. How much blood was lost?—A. very little.

Deputy Plennie Miner helped Dr. Harris from the stand where he was on the urge of collapsing. He he went from the stand, Dr. Harris said he would endeavor to return Saturday.

G. C. Febuary, stenographer to Chief Lanford, followed Dr. Harris to the witness stand.

Dorsey took up the examination:

Q. Were you present at Chief Lanford's office when Leo Frank and L. Z. Rosser were there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you take a report of Frank's statement, and if so, is this it? (Dorsey handed the witness a typewritten statement)—A. Yes, sir.

Can't Recall Lunch Incident.

Q. Do you remember what he said about going home to lunch?—A. No, sir.

"Refresh your memory," said Dorsey, handing him a paper.

Rosser objected, unless the entire statement was read.

The statement was shown to the attorneys for the defense.

Q. What did Mr. Rosser do down there?—A. Mr. Rosser didn't do anything while I was there—that is, that I remember.

The attorneys for the defense decided the netire statement of Frank referred to could be admitted without objection.

Rosser then questioned the witness.

Q. You haven't got a dictograph with you now?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Frank showed his clothing to Chief Lanford, didn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he show Chief Lanford all he wanted to see?—A. He did it voluntarily.

Q. Chief Lanford saw all he wanted to see?—A. Yes; I suppose so.

Q. He has been Chief of Police for many years, hasn't he?—A. He never has been Chief of Police that I know of.

Q. Well, Chief of Detectives, and that's worse. That's the handsome gentleman over there, isn't it? (pointing to Chief Lanford, who was sitting behind Solicitor Dorsey)—A. Yes.

Assistant Solicitor Stephens then read the statement of Frank taken by Febuary.

Fixes Time of Visit.

Solicitor Dorsey's reason for wanting the statement on record was to show the time Frank said Mary Phagan came to the pencil factory for her pay. The statement reads:

"Came for her pay between 12:05 and 12:10—probably 12:07 o'clock."

Albert McKnight, husband of Minola McKnight, cok at the Frank home, was then called to the stand. Dorsey questioned the negro.

Q. What is your name?—A. Albert McKnight.

Q. What does your wife, Minola McKnight, do?—A. Cooks for Mrs. Selig.

Q. Where were you Saturday, April 26, between 1 and 2 o'clock?—A. At Mrs. Frank's.

Says Frank Didn't Eat.

Q. Who did you see?—A. Mr. Frank.

Q. What was he doing?—A. He came in and went to the sideboard and turned and walked out.

Q. What did he do at the sideboard?—A. I couldn't see that.

Rosser tok the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who was there when Mr. Frank ate?—A. Mr. Selig, Mrs. Selig and Mr. Frank's wife.

Q. Where were you?—A. In the kitchen.

Q. How do you know Mr. Frank didn't eat anything?—A. There was a swinging door between and it was swinging open and shut.

Q. Don't you know you couldn't see what was going on?—A. There was a mirror in the dining room and you could see all over it.

Q. Oh, you saw it through the mirror?

Draws Plan for Negro.

Q. What kind of furniture was there in the dining room?—A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know what kind of furniture there is in the kitchen?—A. Yes; a safe and a stove.

Q. Where is the stove? The negro pointed toward the southeastern part of the courtroom.

Q. Where were you sitting?—A. In the back door.

Unable to get the negro to explain clearly his view of the dining room, Attorney Rosser drew a diagram and asked Albert to explain it to the jury.

Q. You can't see in a curve, can you, Albert?—A. No, sir.

Q. Mr. Frank just came in and walked up to the sideboard and walked out?—A. He went into the kitchen where Mr. Selig was.

Q. I thought you said you didn't see Mr. Selig?—A. I didn't; I just supposed he was there.

Q. When did you tell for the first time that Mr. Frank did not eat any donner?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it after you came back from Birmingham?—A. It was after April 26.

Q. You don't know when?—A. Not exactly.

Q. When you got there at 1:30 o'clock, were Mrs. Selig and Mrs. Frank there?—A. I don't know, sir; I didn't see them.

Albert Sticks to Story.

Q. If they had been walking around there, you could have heard them, couldn't you?—A. I don't know, sir.

Mr. Rosser continued to ask questions about the location of the room in an effort to tangle the negro, but the negro stuck to his original statements.

Deputy Plennie Miner had to rap for order.

Mr. Dorsey then took up the redirect examination.

Q. Where does Mr. Frank live?—A. On East Georgia avenue.

Q. Which way did Frank go when he left his house?—A. He walked up to Pulliam street and caught a car.

Q. Did the car pass his house?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is there a cross street between his house and Pulliam street?—A. Yes, Washington street.

Q. Could he have taken a car closer to his house?

"I object," said Rosser. The objection was overruled.

A. I don't know exactly. Pulliam and Washington streets are about the same.

Trial Adjourned to Saturday.

Q. Which is the nearer to town, Pulliam or Washington street?—A. Pulliam.

Q. Was there anything to prevent you seeing Frank when he was in the dining room?—A. No, sir.

At this moment Judge Roan signaled to the attorneys that members of the jury had expressed a desire to see some magazines that had no bearing on the case. Also that the Sheriff had some mail which he wanted to give to them after censoring it.

"I want to know," said Judge Roan, "if there is any objection by the attorneys on both sides?"

Counsel for both sides said they had no objections, and court was then adjourned until 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

PLAN WAR ON 34 MACON SALOONS

Campaign of Law Enforcement Advocates Hinges on Pending Injunctions.

MACON, Aug. 1.—If Judge Mathews to-day sustains the injunctions against the four saloons and social clubs that are charged by the Law Enforcement League with being public nuisances in that they are blind tigers, a campaign will be undertaken to close every saloon in the city. Petitions for injunctions against every one of the saloons and clubs have been prepared in anticipation of Judge Mathews making the present restraining orders permanent.

In addition to having to answer the petition for injunction the four saloon men must show cause to-day why they should not be punished for contempt of court. They are charged withhaving sold intoxicating liquors after being enjoined not to make such sales. The question of whether beer containing 5½ per cent of alcohol is intoxicating is an issue in the case. However, the Law Enforcement League officials claim to have evidence of whisky sales against thirty-four saloons.

JULIAN HAWTHORNE, IN CONVICT LIFE ALLEGORY, FORESEES IDEAL PRISONS

Four men sat around a table at one of the western windows of the great dining hall; one of them was a recent arrival at the prison. * * * The last course of dinner had been served and the 400 friends were enjoying their coffee; a few were smoking cigarettes, for this was Sunday and tobacco was allowed to all who cared for it, on that day. The band was playing Beethoven's "Moonlight Sonata," the music vibrated softly and remotely on the air. The hall had marked architectural beauty, and the colors and decorations were quiet but effective. The tables were arranged with aisles between, at the intersection of which stood immense orange trees and standard roses alternately.

That is the setting that Julian Hawthorne, in what is probably his last article for "Good Words," the magazine of the Atlanta Federal prison, provides for a remarkable dialogue between the four men on "Jails of the Future," forecasting prison reforms.

It appears in the August number, and is without doubt one of the best that the noted writer has produced since his incarceration in prison. One of the four men is a newcomer, both to the prison and to the country, and to him is explained the workings of a system that has revolutionized the treatment of crime and changed jails from "hells to a kind of antechamber to Paradise."

The dialogue is fanciful, but it undoubtedly depicts conditions that Hawthorne believes must exist when humanity has come to recognize crime as a disease and treat it as such. That portion of the article that describes the workings of the jails of the future is as follows:

"No More Lawyers."

"When we found we were jailing about a million men a year, and that the faster the lawyers made laws, the greater was the number of lawbreakers, some of the sane ones got together to talk it over.

"They fixed it so that there should be no more lawyers admitted to the bar for 50 years, and those already practicing should be charged 75 per cent of their incomes in taxes. No lawyer was eligible for election to any Legislature or office of public trust.

"A body of 500 experts was set to work revising the statutes, and they reduced the number of them 90 per cent. All artificial crimes—those created by laws—were cut out; only killing, stealing and lying were left in.

"If these were committed owing to congenial defects, or under abnormal conditions, the perpetrators were put under medical care; if otherwise, the culprits were tried and sentenced, but were given their choice of going to jail, or carrying round their necks, by a small steel chain, a pewter disk, on which was engraved the crime and the penalty. At first, nearly everybody took the disk, but after a few years the majority preferred the jail. The jails, meanwhile, had been undergoing strange transformations, both actual and theoretical.

"It began to be realized that the handling of crime was the most important function of the State and problem of society. If even justice were done, everybody would be in prison, and so-called officers of justice were often the worst of the lot.

Best Men as Wardens.

"Accordingly, the very best men of the community were appointed wardens and guards of jails. Upon election, these men were given a free hand and all the funds they wanted to carry out their plans. All the old jails were torn down and new ones built upon different principles, both of construction and administration.

"In a few years jails had become a kind of universities for training men who were found to be below the average in intelligence, character or habits in the obligations and responsibilities of the best citizenship. All kinds of trades and professions were taught theoretically and practically, and the men were put to work as soon as possible at such employment as they selected or as were chosen as most suitable for them.

"Along with all this was established a system of hygiene and bodily exercise and diet somewhat resembling the old Spartan rules instituted by Lycurgus; and a general discipline of mind, manners and conduct as strict as that of West Point, but more enlightened. What had been a stigma became a certificate of merit, and by and by, instead of being sent to jail by sentence of court, men who had failed in life or felt themselves weak and incompetent voluntarily applied for admission. For what they produced they were paid good wages; their families were supported by the Government until the men's earnings could care for them."

Denounces Present Method.

In another article in the same number, on "Self-Respect," Hawthorne brands the dress and branding of prisoners, under present-day prison rules, and the substitution of numbers for names as a crude anachronism, as are also, he says, the titles of "convict," "felon" and "jailbird."

"Their effect," he writes, "is to produce in the prisoner a feeling of radical and permanent separation from his fellow men. It is an attempt on the part of finite human beings to inflict eternal damnation on some of their fellow creatures."

Hawthorne declares that most prisoners mean to be good when their term is up.

"Whether or not their resolution holds firm," he writes," depends partly upon their native strength of character, but in a larger part upon the treatment they get in jail. Shooting and clubbing prisoners and subjecting them to torture has proved unsuccessful in leading them toward sweetness and light. Need for the actual club and gun may arise in an emergency, but the more firm and uniform the discipline, founded, as all discipline should be, on enlightened principles of order and efficiency, the less likely is such emergency to occur."

POET PAYS TRIBUTE TO 'ANGEL OF U.S. PRISON'

AN APPRECIATION

TO MRS. EMMA NEAL DOUGLAS

Beautiful, gracious Spirit of human pity and kindness,
You, from your tranquil retreat, remember our need and our blindness;
You speak not, but stretch your hands, full of plenty and healing,
Not cold and disdainful, but gentle and tender with sisterly feeling;
From your height serene you step down to comfort our gloom, and remind us
To hope and be strong, and to leave our evil and error behind us,
Our void is filled with your bounty, we bless your name, though unspoken,
We hail you the herald of God, whose mercy your mercies betoken.

This inspiring verse is by Julian Hawthorne, dedicated to the "Angel of the Federal Prison" in "Good Words," the Federal Penitentiary publication.

LIFE TERMS FOR TWO DALTON SLAYERS

Judge Fite Sentences Dan Hatfield and Clem Poole—Quick Justice Meted.

DALTON, Aug. 1.—Judge Fite today sentenced Dan Hatfield, convicted of the murder of Will Parish, and Clem Poole, convicted of murdering Policeman Harry Cook to the penitentiary for life.

In the Hatfield case he held there was doubt as to the existence of a conspiracy, and exercising the right where conviction comes from circumstantial evidence alone did not pass the death sentence, as was expected from the jury's refusal to recommend mercy.

John and Tom Nicodemus, indicted with Hatfield, were released on their own recognizance, the outcome of the Hatfield case not showing enough evidence to convict them.

Convicted in Four Days.

Poole was found guilty Thursday night, the jury making a recommendation for mercy. The verdict was returned twelve hours after the trial began. The evidence was completed at 2:30 o'clock.

Poole shot and killed Policeman Cook Sunday near midnight. Monday afternoon he was captured in Chattanooga, and Tuesday afternoon was indicted for murder. He was convicted four days after the killing.

The case attracted approximately 1,000 people, the courtroom being filled to its capacity.

Defense Claims Insanity.

The defense stood on a plea of insanity, relatives of the prisoner swearing that for the past few months, since his marriage, Poole had changed greatly, and was at times not mentally responsible for his actions. The defense also contended that Cook, being without a warrant for Poole's arrest on the charge of shooting at his wife, had no right to seize him.

The State put witnesses on the stand who testified that they had known Poole for years and believed him capable of distinguishing right from wrong.

Girl Wife in Court.

Witnesses testified that Poole shot Cooke while the officer was only attempting to arrest him. In his statement, Poole said Cook was clubbing him, but this was not borne out by other testimony. The prisoner also said that he was attempting to get rid of his pistol and it was accidentally discharged.

Cook while the officer was only at with him throughout the trial, weeping at times. His aged father and mother were also present.

At 5:15 o'clock Thursday afternoon, Judge Fite had completed his charge and the case had been given to the jury.

When Mr. Jackson appeared at the office Friday morning he was met by the entire forces of the Revenue Service and the Custodian Department. Following a speech by U. S. Seal, Assistant Custodian, he was presented with a handsome loving cup as a token of the esteem of the Custodian Department.

O. H. Pendley, of the Revenue Service, presented a loving cup as a token from the Revenue Department. Mr. Jackson was deeply affected.

Howard Thompson, appointed United States Marshal to succeed Colonel Walter Johnson, took the oath at 10 o'clock Friday morning and appointed the following deputies: B. B. WAR ON COTTON PEST STARTED BY SENATE

Bill Passed Looking to Eradication of Weevil Through Regulation of Cotton Traffic.

The State Senate Friday morning passed House Bill No. 443 providing for an additional judge of the Superior Court of the Atlanta Circuit.

The Senate also passed, unanimously, Senator Ford's bill to eradicate the boll weevil by giving the State Board of Entomology the power to prescribe rules for the shipment of cotton and cotton articles.

Mansion Question Up.

The proposed disposition of the Governor's Mansion provoked much discussion in the Senate when the bill of Senator Watts, providing for the appointment of a commission to investigate, was reported unfavorably by the Committee on Public Property.

Senator Burtz, chairman, declared the proposal to appoint a special commission was contrary to the spirit for which the Public Property Committee was created. He, therefore, opposed this measure and others of similar character.

Senator Harrell of the Twelfth raised the question as to the advisability of disposing of the property. In reply, Senator Miller, who also proposed a bill providing for a commission to be appointed by the Governor, replied that it was absolutely necessary.

Adjourns Until Monday.

To this Senator McNeill of Macon objected on the grounds that the capital would soon be removed to Macon.

The matter finally was sent back to the Committee on Public Property.

Senator Harrell's bill requiring paint manufacturers to label their goods, which was reported unfavorably by the committee, was re-committed by unanimous vote of the Senate.

The Senate passed a number of local bills and adjourned until 11 o'clock Monday.

NEW LAW IS VITAL TO INSURANCE COMPANIES

Bickerstaff Says Present Statutes Discriminate in Favor of Foreign Competitors.

"If the Legislature fails to pass the Meaders bill allowing Georgia fire insurance companies the statutory right to invest in stocks it will have the effect of forcing several Georgia companies out of existence," said Charles A. Bickerstaff, of the Atlanta Home Insurance Company, Friday in commenting on some of the objections raised against the proposed measure.

Mr. Bickerstaff declared several of the companies would be unable to pay dividends if their investments were hampered and restricted to an extent that would prevent them from purchasing securities that would yield them a sufficient income.

"The bill introduced by Mr. Meaders," he asserted, "is copied practically verbatim after the New York law, and is intended to restore to the Georgia companies the right which they had until the bill of 1912.

"No such restrictions are thrown about any foreign company operating in Georgia, and the companies of this State have been placed at a decided disadvantage. The foreign companies have built up their tremendous assets and surpluses by making investments in staple stocks which yield a much larger percentage of income than the investment in bonds.

New Month Picks Hot Day for Debut

August picked a hot day to make its 1913 debut, the mercury standing at 75 at daybreak. Light breezes afforded the downtown section very little relief, for at 1 o'clock the Government thermometer showed 90 degrees, while the heat mark on the streets was about 94.

Relief is promised Friday night or Saturday by thundershowers.

Zachry Child Torn From Mother's Arms

COLUMBIA, Aug. 1.—When Judge Gary to-day awarded the elder Zachry child, Frances, aged 3 years, to Julian J. Zachry, the father, it required four deputies to overpower Mrs. Mary W. Zachry, the weeping mother who refused to give up her child.

The scene in the courtroom was pathetic as the child was torn from the mother's arms.

Mrs. Zachry fled from Augusta to South Carolina with the children after Judge Hammond had ruled that under the Georgia law the children belonged to the father.

Stork and Cupid Cunning Plotters

Many a New Home Will Have a Little Sunbeam to Brighten It.

There is usually a certain degree of dread in every woman's mind as to the probable pain, distress and danger of child-birth. But, thanks to a most remarkable remedy known as Mother's Friend, all fear is banished and the period is one of unbounded, joyful anticipation.

Mother's Friend is used externally. It is a most penetrating application, makes the muscles of the stomach and abdomen pliant so they expand easily and naturally without pain, without distress and with none of that peculiar nausea, nervousness and other symptoms that tend to weaken the prospective mother. Thus Cupid and the stork are held up to veneration; they are rated as cunning plotters to herald the coming of a little sunbeam to gladden the hearts and brighten the homes of a host of happy families.

There are thousands of women who have used Mother's Friend, and thus know from experience that it is one of our greatest contributions to healthy, happy motherhood. It is sold by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle, and is especially recommended as a preventive of caking breasts and all other such distresses.

Write to Bradfield Regulator Co., 131 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their very valuable book to expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

GRIZZLY AND CUBS COMING FOR ZOO

Fine Bear Specimens Reward Carey's Efforts—Captured in Yellowstone Reserve.

A big, wild grizzly bear and two cubs will be added to the Grant Park Zoo next week. They were shipped from the Government reservation in Yellowstone Park Friday and should reach Atlanta not later than next Wednesday.

Manager Dan Carey received a telegram Friday morning that the bear and cubs had been shipped. He said that their cost to the city of Atlanta, in addition to the express, would be just $62.

When Manager Carey visited Washington in May, 191 , to attend the playgrounds convention, he took up with the Government the matter of getting a grizzly bear for Grant Park, and has kept steadily at it. More than 50 letters have been exchanged between Manager Carey and the Government officials, it appearing at times that there would be no chance of getting this prize specimen, but Manager Carey kept steadily at it and the telegram stating that they had been shipped was the culmination.

Yellowstone Park is the only place where it is possible to obtain a real grizzly bear, and the expense was incurred in the capture, no charge being made by the Government.

In the open market a specimen of this kind—the weight of the bear and cubs being 1,400 pounds—would cost several hundred dollars.

U. S. Makes Railway Pact With Mexico

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—The Interstate Commerce Commission to-day rescinded its action in denying the interchange of free transportation between Mexican railroad officials and officials of lines in the United States.

Shipments from the United States to Mexico which are held on the border because of inability to transport them farther on account of disturbed conditions will be turned either to the original shippers or disposed of by the railroads upon one day's notice. Such authority was granted to the carriers to-day by the commission.

What's T. R. Up To? Hist! Enlisting Men To Conquer Mexico

Editor's Note.—The riddle is solved. "What is Roosevelt doing?" the public has asked. Here is an answer by an ingenious and enterprising Texas correspondent. Whatever its merits or demerits, it is worth reading.

AUSTIN, TEXAS, August 1.—Governor O. B. Colquitt was to-day provided with what purports to be reliable and inside information to the effect that Colonel Theodore Roosevelt has quietly organized four regiments of volunteer cavalry of the Rough Rider type, composed of trained riders and marksmen of Arizona, New Mexico and Western Texas.

It is alleged that the real purpose of Colonel Roosevelt's present visit to the Southwest is to direct the selection of men for the military division and that he will soon have it in readiness to enter Mexico in event of hostilities with that country.

The circumstantial report says further that Colonel Roosevelt is carrying on this work with the knowledge and sanction of the United States War Department. He will be placed in command of the brigade if war should come, it is said.

Society Women in Pajamas Dance at Narragansett Ball

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 1.—Stories of a gay party at the Point Judith Country Club, at which several of the women guests are declared to have danced in pajamas until sunrise, are being circulated here and are almost as much of a sensation as the hunt for the jewel thieves.

Some of the best-known young matrons and maids of New York and New England society were among the guests. Turkish costumes are said to have vied with the pajamas.

One observer says fifteen of the women wore ankle watches. Detectives guarding the country club, it is said, to learn something of the jewel thefts, were ordered off by Malcolm Stevenson, who was giving the party.

Exhibits Her Limb To a Blushing Judge

DENVER, Aug. 1.—Mrs. Alma Dittman will get $10 to-day because after much hesitation and several blushes had played tag over his judicial countenance, Judge Benjamin F. Stapleton personally inspected her silken shod nether limb.

Counsel for Mrs. Dittman, in a damage suit for injuries to her knee, alleged to have been inflicted by Michael Dittman, insisted that the court determine the extent of his client's injuries by a personal examination.

The examination was conducted in chambers, and, on his return to the bench, the court ordered Dittman to pay $10 damages and court costs.

'Society Girls Not as Modest as Actresses'

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—A report submitted to Mayor Harrison to-day by his legal adviser on the subject of cabaret shows said:

"The dancers in the cabarets I visited were modest when compared to some women—society ladies—who were sitting in the audience. Some of the women who were there to be amused were in greater danger of catching cold in the chest than any of the cabaret performers."

SLATON TO GREET METAL WORKERS

Mayor Woodward Also Will Welcome Delegates to National Convention Monday.

Governor Slaton and Mayor Woodward are expected to welcome the delegates of the Amalgamated Sheet Metal Workers of America at the opening of the convention at the Piedmont Hotel next Monday morning at 10 o'clock.

Delegates are arriving in Atlanta on almost every train, the executive board being present and in session. There will probably be five hundred delegates and visitors.

C. H. Barnes, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades and the Atlanta Building Trades Council, is being urged to enter the race for national president.

President O'Sullivan has held the office for several years, but there has developed considerable opposition, and, in case Mr. Barnes enters the race, there may be a hot contest.

$56,000,000 OF U. S. CASH FOR DIXIE BANKS

Government to Minimize Money Stringency During Crop Moving.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—To facilitate the movement of crops, the Administration, through Secretary McAdoo, announces that $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of Government funds will be deposited in the national banks of the South and West at once. Federal, State and municipal bonds and prime commercial paper will be accepted as security for the money, upon which the banks will pay 2 per cent interest.

Unusual Amount Needed.

The motive of the Administration in establishing this new policy is to anticipate the money stringency in the late summer and fall, which accompanies the marketing and movement of crops, especially when the crops are unusually large, as the harvest now beginning forecasts. He intends to prevent or minimize the usual tightness of money.

The Secretary announces that Government bonds will be accepted at par as security for the new deposits, and that the additional money would be placed only with banks which have taken out at least 40 per cent of their authorized circulation.

United States 2 per cent bonds, serving as security for most of the national bank circulation, have been depressed recently to new low market records, dropping to 95 3-4 during the past few days. The Secretary's willingness to accept these bonds at par as security for the $25,000,000 to $50,000,000 of promised deposits and the inducement to the national banks to increase their circulation up to the 40 per cent limit are expected to help in restoring the parity of the depressed 2s by creating a new market for them.

To Accept Commercial Paper.

For the first time in history the Government will accept prime commercial paper as security for deposits. This privilege will be granted, announced the Secretary, in order to make these special deposits available to the banks on securities readily within their reach.

"The commercial paper submitted," added Mr. McAdoo, "shall first be passed upon and approved by the clearing house committees of the cities in which the banks offering such paper may be located. All commercial paper and bonds must finally be passed upon and accepted by the Secretary."

WOMAN DENIES PLOT TO KILL HUSBAND

Mrs. Silva Hawkins Takes Stand in Own Defense in Gainesville Court.

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 1.—Mrs. Silva Hawkins, on trial under a triple indictment with James and Bartow Cantrell for the murder of her husband, Arthur Hawkins, at Bellton, to-day took the witness stand and denied that she had anything whatever to do with a plot to kill her husband.

She declared that the Cantrell boys murdered him because he was opposed to their operating a still, and that there had been trouble before the killing between the Cantrell boys and her husband.

All testimony has been heard and arguments of counsel have begun.

It is the general belief that the State has built up a strong case against Mrs. Hawkins, evidence showing that she had tried to get strychnine and had threatened her husband's life because of her affection for James Cantrell. Letters were introduced purporting to be from her to Cantrell, and in them were many endearing words.

Colonel W. M. Johnson, for the defense, claimed the Sheriff had no right to force a confession from Mrs. Hawkins.

FLOOD OF VOTES MARKS CLOSE OF CONTEST

Names of Victors in Georgian and American Pony Race To Be Announced Sunday.

The pony contest is over.

Winners in the exciting races conducted by The Georgian and American will be announced Sunday, if it is possible to complete the necessary clerical work in time.

Until midnight Thursday votes were received. Wednesday night the contest manager and his assistants worked almost as late. Friday finds them exhausted with the late hours and the strain, for the excitement of the contestants proved contagious, infecting the whole office.

Thousands upon thousands of votes, so many that the aggregate seems incredible, were received Thursday and up to the very last minute.

Most of the boys and girls took to heart the repeated warnings that over-confidence was fatal, and put copious quantities of "ginger" into their final efforts.

This was as true in the country as in the city. The mail brought hundreds of letters for the contest department.

From every point of view, it has been a thoroughly successful contest, and, conducted in the most strictly impartial manner, there has not been a word of complaint.

Nothing remains but to count the votes and announce the eleven winners of ponies and carts; the eleven saddle ponies, and the twenty-two watches.

In the very first announcement of the pony contest the time of closing was set for midnight of July 31. In almost every mention of the contest since that time emphasis has been laid on the same fact.

Despite this, two contestants appeared Friday morning with almost $100 each for subscriptions. They were too late. One of them had been given warning Thursday night.

The votes this contestant brought in Friday would have changed the result in thatd istrict. But there was nothing to do but "turn down" the money.

The superintendent was asked whether it would be better to stop the shovel or stop the court. The superintendent replied that the court should stop, and was promptly sentenced to jail for contempt.

Bedell Slaying Puzzles Police Of Chattanooga

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 1.—At noon to-day no arrests had been made in connection with the murder of 'Squire C. A. Bedell, upon the porch of his home in East Chattanooga last night. Every available officer, however, has been detailed upon the case and arrests are expected within the next twelve hours. The officers are almost positive that the two assailants were white men.

The murder and robbery of Bedell shortly after 11 o'clock upon the front porch of his home and before the eyes of his wife has greatly excited this city. While robbery is considered the primary motive of the killing, as Bedell had the entire receipts of his day's business at his store upon his person, it is also considered by the officers that there were other contributory motives.

'Walk With My Wife, Then Buy Her Shoes'

SACO, ME., August 1.—Irving L. Meserve, an expressman, attempted to take a new pair of tan shoes from the feet of his young wife when he met her walking in Main street with a young man he did not know.

"You're not going to parade in my shoes," he cried. "I bought these and paid for them. If that man is going to walk with you, he can buy your shoes."

With that he pulled off one of the shoes and was about to take off the other when the young man attacked him. They were fighting, it is alleged, when Special Officer Whiteworth placed them under arrest.

Wife's Lips Too Red; Won't Pay Alimony

NEW YORK, August 1.—Emil Kopstein, a wine salesman, told Supreme Court Justice Donnelly yesterday that his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Kopstein, is not entitled to alimony pending the trial of her suit for separation because she painted her lips and penciled her eyebrows.

He said that on July 4, when they were at Arverne, L. I., his wife's cheeks were so red that he wouldn't be seen on the street with her, and he told her that if any other man had been her husband he "would have broken her bones long ago."

NASH PROTESTS AGAINST SLADE MILITIA BILL

Declares Negligence of Civil Officials Is All That Makes State Troops Necessary.

Declaring that if the civil officers of the State could be made to do their duty, there would be no need of the military, Adjutant General Van Holt Nash, before the House Committee on Military Affairs Thursday afternoon, protested against the passage of the military bill offered by Representative Slade, of Muscogee.

The bill repeals the military act of 1912 and re-enacts the law of 1910, making the militia subservient to the civil authorities.

"The militia is entitled to some consideration," declared General Nash. "We offer our lives to the State with practically no remuneration, and are sworn to uphold the honor of the State and its laws. The only reason there is any need for the militia is because the civil officers do not do their duty. If you will make the civil authorities perform their work, there will be no necessity for calling out the militia.

Says Present Laws Protect Them.

"The present law should stand. It protects us from being overridden by the civil authorities, and prevents us from being made the scapegoats of incompetent civil officers."

Mr. Slade declared the present military law is unconstitutional because it means the suspension of the writ of habeas corpus. He likened conditions that arose in Augusta last year, under military rule, to the Reconstruction period, when "blood flowed as freely as water."

Representative Ennis, of Baldwin County, spoke against the bill. He declared if the State were under military rule there would be fewer lawbreakers.

Because of the absence of a quorum the committee did not take any action on the bill. Mr. Slade declared he has small hopes of the passage of his bill, but seeks to effect a compromise with the bill introduced in the Senate by Senator McGregor, which curtails the powers of the military.

It is probable that the committee will not report on the Slade bill until next week.

LEBANON, PA., August 1.—The death of Wallace Van Sickle, of Macon, Ga., in a hospital here to-day revealed the devotion of a young woman member of a prominent Lebanon family, Miss Miriam Bowman, to whom Van Sickle became engaged. Shortly after the announcement was made he was stricken with typhoid fever.

The date of the wedding had been fixed, but it was postponed in the hope of Van Sickle's speedy recovery. There was no change in his condition, however, so it was decided that the marriage ceremony should be performed in the hospital. The ceremony was performed, and the bride remained at the bedside of her husband until he died.

Grocer Dumping Bad Eggs in Street Fined

Recorder Broyles Friday morning held that an Atlanta street is not a proper dumping ground for spoiled eggs, when he imposed a fine of $5.75 on C. Kalich, a merchant at Williams and Parker streets.

Inspector Rice, of the sanitary department, was passing through Williams street Thursday afternoon when he noticed eggs being pitched from the store into the street. Investigating he found that Kalich was testing his stock of eggs and eliminating the bad ones.

Had Serious Lung Trouble---Now Well

It is surprising that there exists much skepticism as to the possibility of a person recovering from severe Lung Trouble when there are so many reports of complete recoveries brought about through the use of Eckman's Alterative. This is a remedy for the throat and lungs, which should be investigated by every sufferer. Read of this case:

1619 Susquehanna Ave., Phila., Pa.
"My Dear Sir: For two years I was afflicted with hemorrhages of the lungs, and in February of 1902 I was taken with a severe attack of pneumonia. When I recovered sufficiently to walk about the house I was left with a frightful hacking cough, which no medicine I had taken could alleviate. It was a; this time, March, 1902, that I started taking Eckman's Alterative. In a short time my cough was gone and I was pronounced well. Since that time I have had two slight attacks of pneumonia, and I have resorted to no other medicine to effect a recovery. I can not speak too highly for the good it has done."
(Signed) HOWARD L. KLOTZ.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. APPROPRIATIONS IN GEORGIA

"By their fruits ye shall know them." ---Matt. vii:20.

"Now we pray to God---

"Not that we may appear approved,

"BUT THAT YOU MAY DO THAT WHICH IS HONORABLE,

"Though we be as reprobate." ---2nd Cor. xiii:7.

Not attacks.

Facts.

Some appropriations in Georgia:

$10,000.00 agriculture.

$10,000.00 carrying out pure food and drug act.

$ 5,000.00 for cattle tick eradication and protection of live stock.

$15,000.00 to developing live stock and exterminating the cattle tick.

$ 6,000.00 to manufacture and distribute hog cholera serum.

$20,000.00 horticulture and entomology.

Nothing for wayward and delinquent girls—for their protection, development and culture—

Later, if—

Maybe, next year—

God pity them!

THEY CAN NOT WAIT.

These are girls—not hogs, nor cows, nor fields which may be replaced.

Once lost, these—?

And crime claws—

Hell reaches out for them, even while you talk.

Seventy-five girls—

Only those under sixteen known to us—others—scores are in the State sinking because there is no place.

Care for prisoners is required by the laws of Georgia and of God, as as well as appropriations for sick cattle and hogs. And if the State's Wards—we will not call them prisoners—be as they are, these girls, what will you do with them?

In the chaingang?

With the hardened prisoners of the prison farm?

You could not put them in your reformatory for boys.

WHAT OF THESE GIRLS?

The Prison Commission says:

"No place for them in Georgia."

Agriculture.

Pure food.

Tickless cattle.

Choleraless hogs.

These are much to be desired. They should be cultivated and sought.

But you know these girls. You would take care of them. They are more valuable than our cows and hogs.

Georgia's shame! Other States take care of girls. Why not Georgia?

Of the JONES-MILLS bill providing a reformatory for girls, CHAIRMAN WHEATLEY said:

"It was referred to a subcommittee to plan for the creation of a home and to make such changes in the measure for an appropriation that could be granted."

Cutting $45,000.00 from the $75,000.00 appropriation asked, the subcommittee reported back the bill carrying an appropriation of $30,000.00, for action by the whole committee.

The Penitentiary Committee had previously recommended the bill without a dissenting vote. All recognize the need.

And if money can be obtained for the cultivation of hogs, cattle and fields, surely it can be found for this—the saving of girls.

NOT AN ATTACK.

A fact:

We believe that the Committee on Appropriations will find a way.

While taking care of beasts and spraying bugs, you will not neglect and destroy our girls.

You can protect both.

You will.

HIGH WAGES AND SHORT HOURS INEVITABLE

Incompetent Employers Doomed to Certain Failure—Workingman's Rights Paramount.

By B. C. FORBES.

"It can't be done" is the favorite argument of many employers when urged to treat their employes more liberally in the way of wages or hours or rest days or conditions of service. And they flatter themselves that their obiter dictum—their say-so—settles it, leaves no room for argument, closes the case finally and irrevocably.

Skinflint employers are going to learn a few things before the world is very much older. They are going to learn that few things "can't be done" when the public makes up its mind that they ought to be done. Not many things that are right and just are impossible.

The eight-hour day, you remember, was socialistic, anarchistic and absurd when first advocated. Nothing could be more impossible, all but a few far-seeing, broad-guaged, large-hearted, humane employers argued. Well, the eight-hour day was ushered in without any tremendous upheaval in the industries concerned.

"It can't be done" was once the pet reply to please for the abolition of seven-day work in the steel industry. To-day not five per cent of the United States Steel Corporation's employes work seven days a week.

* * *

Sunday labor in certain industries used to be considered absolutely unavoidable. To-day it has been radically reduced, almost eliminated in most directions.

* * *

The railroads at first vowed that rebating simply could not be stopped. To-day they are infinitely grateful that the law stepped in and annihilated it.

* * *

Political parties could not be held together, it was urged, without bosses. To-day the bosses are being driven out to the advantage of all.

* * *

"Can't" is an overworked word. It is too often the refuge of the unfit, the lazy and the coward. Sometimes it expresses a fact; more often it is an unconvincing excuse.

* * *

What is here written is for the edification and exhortation of certain corporations and other large employers who glibly declare that sorely-needed reforms for the benefit of their workers "can't be done." These employers are ready to admit that they would like to do certain things, that justice is on the side of the reforms and that they hope at some distant date conditions—especially among their competitors—will so change that it will be possible to mix a little more humanity with their money-making.

They would like to let their workers off one day every week, or every month. But "it can't be done."

* * *

They would like to pay all their helpers a living wage. But "it can't be done."

* * *

They would like to better working conditions.. But, again, "it can't be done."

* * *

Gentlemen, it CAN be done. And it WILL be done.

Any man who can't pay his workers a living wage has no right to own a business. If he can not supply the brains necessary so to manage a concern that it can pay decent wages, then stop him from being an employer and let him become an employe. If capital can not be handled in one industry so as to afford reasonable wages, then let it seek other employment. Not only is it an economic sin to continue the use of capital in an unprofitable business, in one that does not pay for the things necessary for the sustenance of the workers engaged in it, but it is a crime against humanity, a crime against society, a crime against the State, for if an employe receives less wages than is absolutely needful to maintain life, then others—the butcher, the baker, the dry goods merchant, the landlord, etc., etc.—have to make up the difference, since men and women can not allow themselves to starve to death.

The employer who persists in replying "it can't be done" to requests for reasonable treatment of workers writes himself down incompetent, unfit to enjoy the services of others. Capital and labor are not sufficient to insure business success; MANAGEMENT is the third and indispensable requisite. And any employer who can not supply it intelligently enough to enable him to deal fairly and decently with workers has no claim to be allowed to remain an employer. That inexorable law which decrees the survival of the fittest marks such an one for destruction, as he ought to be marked.

CHARTER FACING SURE DEFEAT IN SENATE

Corporations Committee Dooms Bill Curbing Recorder and Providing Referendum and Recall.

The proposed new charter for Atlanta, providing, among other things, for the limitation of the city recorder's power and the application of the initiative, referendum and recall to heads of city departments, is doomed to defeat at the hands of the Senate corperation committee.

The committee held an executive session Friday morning following an open meeting in which the matter was discussed by Representatives Blackton, of Fulton, Alderman Nutting and Mason, City Attorney Mason and Judge Hillyer also addressed the committee.

Immediately following the executive session Senator Burtz, chairman of the Senate corporation committee, declared that the proposed charter has objectionable features and probably would never not get the support of the committee.

He also intimated that the Senate committee might never take any action on the charter.

Later the charter bill was recommitted in the Senate for the further consideration by the commitee on corporations. The charter bill has been passed by the House and recommended to the Senate with the initiative, referendum and recall feature omitted.

Representative Blackbon, in urging a favorable report, Friday morning, declared in favor of the provision limiting the City Recorder's power. Under this provision the Recorder may not have jurisdiction in cases where the fine exceeds $200 or the sentence is more than 30 days.

Senator Burtz opposes this, he says, on the grounds that it does not leave the Recorder the power of discretion in cases where one man should receive a heavier fine than another for similar offenses. The provision, he says, would be a boon to violators of the prohibition law.

Blackmon, nowever, opposed the initiative, referendum and recall feature, upheld by the City Council delegation including the City Attorney and the two aldermen. Senator Burtz joined Mr. Blackmon in this on the grounds that, under the provision it would be too easy to get the required 20 per cent of the voters to sign the petition for the recall.

Senator Burtz declared this proposed amendment was a slap at the Mayor and would be opposed by the Senate Committee.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—The young King of Siam, according to Mrs. Clara Williams, wife of a wealthy plantation owner of Bankok here today, is an automaniac, writer of poetry and admirer of American women. He declares he will marry only an American girl.

The King still indites bits of verse to the former actress, and it is well known in Siam that he refused to wed his cousin because he was waiting for an American girl to enter his life.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Peter's Party .:.

I FLUNG down the morning paper with a groan. Looking out of the window, a scene of springtime met my eyes. And the sky was blue—April blue.

I was blue, too, but it was another sort of blue; the sort you see when you read that everything has gone down with a slump, and that the rattling good thing you put every penny you could scrape together into a few months ago, expecting confidently—on the word of your pet broker—a huge profit, has gone to ruin. Nice things for a man on a gay spring morning to look things in the face and read only one word wherever he looks—ruin.

My soliloquy was rudely interrupted by a ringing feminine voice, following hard on the arrested purr of a motor.

"Peter! Peter!"

"Here!" I shouted, flinging open the door. "What's wrong? Fire? Or—Good heavens—Sybil! What brings you here?"

Sybil Manisty laughed and flung back the long, floating gauze veil. From beneath that pretty motor bonnet her sparkling blue eyes looked at me with gleeful amusement.

"A nice welcome for a long-lost cousin!" she retorted, presenting to me a cheek of such fragrant pinkness that what could I do but kiss it? "The motor brought me; it also shed William on the road where I left him staring, like one bewitched, at the lake. We've come to stay, if you'll have us, Peter—I know you will. We're on our way to the Allinghams, but they can't have us till next week."

"You're welcome," I replied, laughing; "but I've very little to offer you in the way of food. I don't keep a chef. When we don't know what to have, we go out and kill a chicken and eat it. Mind you, it's dull here."

A Party.

"If that's all, I'll soon change things. We'll give a party, Peter—or, rather, you shall."

"A party!" I stared at her aghast.

"Yes; William always says I can't be five minutes in the country without arranging instantly a party of some kind. Peter, you ought to marry!"

"Marry? I? On what, pray?"

"On whatever you've got. It's enough for two, isn't it?"

"I don't know. I'm not at all sure that it's going to be enough for one even."

"Peter!"

I nodded.

"True. I read the news only this morning. Something's gone smash in which I put the little capital I had. But don't look like that, Sybil. If I have to go out like a snuffed candle, I'll go cheerfully. And as to a party—why, I'll give one that the countryside shall talk about for many a day, Sybil!"

She laughed. I know she thought my first words were only a joke. She had no conception of what the words "ruin" or "poverty" meant. She did not know, nor was she likely to know as long as her stolid, well-gilded William kept his head. His was a head not easily lost!

He was an excellent fellow—quite excellent. But dull—utterly wanting in humor—and ponderous both in person and mind. But he adored Sybil; and she adored him.

Of course, there was Leila; but what was I that I should aspire to Leila and her winsome charm; could I ask her to share a gaunt house and—practically, ruin? Impossible! Besides, there was another fellow in the field—an odious, plausible, good-looking Saxon, with hunters and a motor, and all the things I could never give her. And Leila's people encouraged him, and were cold to me.

Very Bold.

Two days later Mr. Peter Lambert requested the pleasure of his friends' company at a fancy dress dance.

The humor of the situation struck me keenly, but nobody else. That a ruined man should give a fancy dress dance was a distinct anomaly; but I might as well come to the end with a flourish of trumpets and fireworks.

When it was all over I saw nothing for it but—Canada, with the small amount of capital a sale would bring in. And for the rest—hard work far from all the haunts dear to me—far from everything and everyone I cared a button about. Far from—Leila.

I was far from her in any case. For she was rich and I was a pauper. The fellow with the hunters and a motor need have no scruples in trying to win her. Rumor had it that the thing was as good as done. But I couldn't—I wouldn't believe it.

However, I had to grin and bear it, for they would both come to the dance. I should have to play the part of the one who looks on.

Sybil was a marvel. The old house was transformed; the supper tables were a miracle when one considered the slender resources of the house; and Sybil herself, dressed in a silvery tissue gown, representing a snow queen, was the loveliest thing in creation, I thought, until I caught sight of Leila pass in a cloud of rosy tulle veiled in gray—Dawn.

That Saxon fellow was there, in a sort of glittering armor. And yet it was at me at Leila smiled with such softness, such sweetness, as her hand lingered in mine.

"I'm so glad, Peter!" she breathed.

"Glad! What about?" I stared at her.

"Why, this, of course!"

"This" was the dance—the pretty scene, with polished floor and ivy-decked walls, and persons who looked as if they had stepped out of a fairy tale.

Not Dancing.

"Oh, yes; it looks nice, doesn't it? I hope you'll have a jolly evening, Leila. I feel rather like a bear that's forgotten how to dance—horribly rusty."

Leila looked at her program.

"Oh, I forgot! Peter, let's dance the first barn dance together. We always do, don't we?"

"We used to," I said, writing my name on her program. "May I have two?"

"Yes."

"And supper?"

Leila looked up at me. Her soft hazel eyes were very bright; the color rose to her face.

"Why, of course, Peter," she said.

She moved away on an arm of glittering armor, but looked back as she went, and there was a wistful happiness in her eyes that puzzled me.

Why had she said she was so glad? Glad for what?

The dance didn't seem a sufficient reason.

It went with spirit; dances were rare enough in those parts, and Sybil made an admirable hostess. Even her stolid William—dressed as a fisherman of the olden times—came out of his shell and frolicked with the rest.

I banished with an effort my own depression of spirits, the visions of Canada and coming exile, the realization of the ruin hanging over my head. For the place must go—the gaunt barrack of a house, so dear to me, that must find a purchaser in some rich American who wanted an old place with rough shooting and fishing and all the rest of it. It would sell readily enough; but I loathed the idea. If only——

Alone.

"Are you going to cut out our dance, Peter? Or are you dreaming?"

Leila was beside me. I offered my arm in silence. We danced once, twice, around the room. Then I drew her away into the corridor, where Sybil had contrived some wonderfully secluded nooks containing just two seats, no more. For the moment we were alone.

And there we sat—silent. I, plunged in moody thought—Leila, twisting her fan in restless fingers.

Suddenly I felt I couldn't bear it—the truth must come out.

"When is it to be, Leila?" I asked, roughly.

"When is what to be?"

"Your marriage."

She grew quite white, but looked at me with smiling eyes.

"He hasn't asked me yet, Peter."

I stared at her.

"But when he does—" I stammered. "I know I have no right to ask you—but when he does——"

"Who has a better right than you, Peter?"

"Leila! Are you going to marry him? Tell me, for Heaven's sake! I sha'n't be here much longer; the place must go. I'm off to Canada and——"

Her cry cut across my stumbling words.

"Canada, Peter! What do you mean?"

"What I say. I've got to face ruin. I can battle with it better somewhere else."

A Wrong Guess.

"But, Peter, I thought—I imagined everything was going well. This party of yours—I thought it meant that luck had turned for you at last, and I was so glad—so glad!"

"So that was it! My heart was suddenly like a singing bird."

"I've lost everything, Leila."

There was a momentary silence. Then—a soft hand stole into mine.

"Not everything, Peter," said a very soft voice, "because there still remains—me. Am I nothing?"

"You! You are everything; but you're going to marry that fellow in shining armor; everyone knows it, and——"

"Everyone knows nothing. I am not going to marry him."

"But—your people?" I said, stupidly, her hand still in mine. And, mind you, she made no effort to get it back.

"I marry to please myself—not my people. I marry the man I—love or no one! And, Peter, I always wanted to go to Canada."

I sat there silent—stricken to stone—dumb.

"Peter! It's no longer leap-year, you know; but all the same——"

She was in my arms in an instant. I held her fast.

"Leila!" You don't mean it—you can't! I oughtn't to let you marry a ruined man! Why, they'll call me a fortune hunter; they'll——"

"They'll say! Let them say!" she said, with starry eyes. "What need we care, Peter, for anyone? I hated my money before; I knew it was keeping us apart. Now I'm glad, because it may make the way easier for you—for us both. Much makes more. And we'll come back, Peter, some day, and begin again. You dear old stuuid. I thought you never would understand. I thought you were blind——"

"I was only afraid."

"And yet I had the courage to nearly ask you to marry me! Oh, Peter! But for your party who knows what might have happened? It was that that gave me courage. You see, I believed the barrier was gone. It has—now."

It had. Love had overthrown it as it overthrows all obstacles.

Beauty

"My ideal of beauty is health," says Blanche Ring; and other valuable hints.

Miss Blanche Ring.

Beauty is health. Health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman. Fat is not pretty. Those who find it threatening them should avoid potatoes, food prepared in oils and sugar products. Magnetism, sweetness of disposition and willingness to work are all aids to beauty.

Think less about what you have a right to expect from life, and make sure you are giving life all that it has a right to expect from you. Try to make others happy. That gives you a proper setting to your beauty.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"YOU would never dream of setting a diamond in paste, would you?" said everyone's favorite—Blanche Ring. And in the deep underlying philosophy of the magnetic comedienne's remark lies the secret of the popularity and charm that place the jewel of her beauty in a worthy setting.

"A theatrical star surrounded by a group of poor players so that her personality may be exploited and may occupy the center of the stage and of the attention is not giving her public what it wants. If she has real merit, it will be enhanced by the presence of clever people about her—well, Miss Beauty Editor, can't you apply that rule to beauty all through life?"

Indeed, you can—for beauty that arrests the eye and has no further power to charm may exist in the person of a slovenly, ignorant, unlovely creature, who has only the picture qualities of a perfect animal, while true beauty must appeal to mind and heart as well as to vision.

True Beauty.

"You would never dream of setting a diamond in paste," I quoted to the author of the remark. "Now, Miss Ring, exactly what is your ideal of beauty and your idea of the setting therefor?"

"My idea of beauty is health," answered Miss Ring with prompt certainty. "And health does not exist in the haggard, leathery-skinned woman who has dieted herself into a state of near-decline. The healthy woman is at her normal weight, whether that be pleasing plumpness or sylphlike slimness—and she has not the nervous, heavy-eyed look of the woman who lives on a cracker and an apple a day so she can persuade a figure that might be a healthy looking thirty-eight to be a shadowy poster that measures about thirty inches about its greatest girth.

"Of course, fat is not pretty—and if a woman finds it threatening her she would do well to avoid potatoes bread, rich gravies and food prepared in oils and sugar products. But after a woman reaches 30 the red blood corpuscles go on a long holiday and she had better not hasten their demise by furiously banting herself to a consumptive shadow—or any strain through overexercise. No, let her live out of doors all she can—swimming, tennis and gardening are the most delightful summer exercises, and a simple, sane diet with this little secret to help it along will do wonders to bring on attractive slenderness without painful swraniness.

A Lasting Debt.

"Here is the secret: One day of every week live on this menu for each of the three meals: For breakfast, for luncheon and for dinner eat a baked potato seasoned with a bit of butter, some skimmed milk and 'pepper and salt to taste.' Then you will have the proper compound of substance and shadow!"

"And now for the setting of this properly slender figure," I queried.

"Well," said the beautiful friend of everyone who has ever seen her, "the world does not owe me a living, but I owe the world a great deal in return for all it has done for me. So I try to give all I can in affection, in interest and in earnest effort to the world. I think it would be a good plan for girls to think less about what they have a right to expect from life, and to make sure that they are giving life all it has a right to expect from them; a happy, amiable expression and a sunshiny nature to account for it are bound to result from that attitude.

"But I started to tell you what I think forms the most beautiful setting for beauty—which is health, magnetism, sweetness of disposition and a joyous willingness to work. The last two one can cultivate, but magnetism, charm, the power that breaks down walls of indifference and of possible misunderstanding between human and human—that is the gift women long most to possess—and is the hardest thing in all the world to analyze.

The Final Jewel.

"The nearest I can come to explaining my idea of magnetism is to suggest that women give all they can to life in love, in effort and in the desire to make others happy. Perhaps in this way they can add the final jewel to the setting about their beauty—at least, so it seems to me.

"Seems, madam. Nay, 'tis—not 'seems'." For the woman whose power reaches over footlights and luncheon tables alike is the spirit of beauty and magnetic charm incarnate—so her modest little suggestions for magnetism may surely point the way to all beauty seekers."

Up-to-Date Jokes

The last train had crawled through the station laboriously.

In the waiting room the guard told the tale to a belated passenger.

"It was last year," he said, "a man wanted to commit suicide. He got on to the lines, put his head on the rails, and waited for the train."

"Well?" queried the passenger breathlessly.

"Oh!" said the guard, "he died all right—of starvation."

"Oh, thank you!" exclaimed an elderly lady to a laborer who surrendered his seat in a crowded car.

"That's ori right, mum," was the rejoinder.

As the lady sat down the chivalrous laborer added:

"Wot I ses is, a man never ort to let a woman stand. Some men never gets up unless she's pretty, but you see, mum, it don't make no difference to me."

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

What Has Gone Before.

It is the wedding day of Dr. Walter Cameron. He is to be married at 8 o'clock that evening to Genevieve Gretorex, a beautiful society girl. At 4 o'clock Dr. Cameron is called upon in his office by Ebenezer Gryce, a member of the Scotland Yard detective force. He astounds Dr. Cameron by telling him that Miss Gretorex has been missing for several days. Gryce says that the girl's mother requested his services in the hunt for her daughter, and showed him a note in which Miss Gretorex declared she would be back in time for the ceremony. Gryce astounds Dr. Cameron by declaring he tracked Miss Gretorex to an obscure London hotel, where he found her registered under the name of Mildred Farley. They drive to the hotel and peer through curtains into Room No. 153, where they see Miss Gretorex kneeling before a fire weeping and burning up some letters. They go downstairs greatly mystified. Gryce makes some inquiries and learns that three hours before the girl was visited by a man, who, when he left the hotel, notified the management that he would return at 9 o'clock with a clergyman who was going to marry them. Dr. Cameron excitedly demands that Gryce tell him the name of this man. The detective hands him a card inscribed with this name—"Dr. Julius Molesworth."

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I sent you one as soon as my daughter came back. Her explanations were entirely satisfactory, and there is no reason why any of us should think of the matter again. Yet you have talked in the very quarter where I desired you to be silent, and the consequence is that my daughter's happiness is threatened and her character impeached. It is an irreparable injury which I shall never forgive." And, leaving Mr. Gryce to digest these pleasing words, she turned again to Dr. Cameron.

"Sir," said she, "I do not know what excuse you can have for asserting that you have seen my daughter within an hour. I only know that the fact is impossible, for Genevieve has not been out of the house since her return at the time I mentioned, as a dozen witnesses at least can prove to you. As to the duplicity of which you complain, it amounts simply to this, that she felt her health giving way under the constant strain of our numerous preparations, and in a sudden freak, which she now deplores as sincerely as myself, started off for Montclair without telling any one of her intention, thinking that the complete rest thus obtained would benefit her, as it has; for never has she looked more blooming or more fitted to be your wife than at this very moment when you hesitate to accept her."

For answer, the doctor walked up to the detective.

"Could we have been mistaken?" he asked. "Was it indeed another woman?"

"I will tell you in two minutes," was the hasty answer; and, quitting them with small ceremony, Mr. Gryce passed out of the room.

The doctor made no effort to apologize or answer Mrs. Gretorex till he came back. His whole future destiny was trembling in the balance and it was as much as he could do to retain his composure. Happily the time of waiting was short. Mr. Gryce rejoined them almost immediately, and bowing low to the lady of the house, said in Dr. Cameron's ear, "Another case of mistaken identity. Mrs. Gretorex is correct in all her assertions. You have made a fool of me and I show my chagrin by simply departing."

The doctor attempted no reply. He was beside himself with joy. What? The whole dreadful business of the last four hours a farce? His marriage assured, his bride untainted, no Molesworth in her past, no possible jealousy in their future. He almost dropped on his knees to Mrs. Gretorex in his contrition; attempted explanations and then paused, thinking them too inadequate; laughed, asked questions about his bride's beauty, and betrayed impatience to see her; in short, acted like any man suddenly transported from unhappiness to rapture.

The mother, understanding him better than he thought perhaps, only smiled, and pointing to his black necktie, asked if he had a white one in his pocket.

Changed to Joy.

His face grew suddenly long and he flushed with intense mortification.

"I have not come quite prepared for so grand a ceremony," he stammered. "If the guests will wait a little longer while I send for my coat and tie—"

"They must," declared Mrs. Gretorex, calling a servant at once and giving him one or two orders. "It will not take more than another half hour, and the band can keep them patient till then."

"Tell them I was detained by an accident on the elevated road. As I was," he merrily added. "Keep them in good nature and give me a glimpse of my bride."

"You impatient lover!" was all the relieved mother could say; but her look was a promise, and in a few minutes a trim and quiet girl came tripping to the door, and, smiling coquettishly, showed him a room at the other end of the hall, saying:

"Miss Gretorex is all dressed, sir, and will speak to you for a minute if you desire it."

He did not linger an instant. Something—was it love, or only that old pride of his restored to its full life, burned in his breast, and made his short walk down the hall a remembrance of delight to him? Her door, just ajar, was like a beacon of hope, and when he saw it open wider and caught the one short glimpse she allowed him of her tall and elegant figure in its shimmering robes and misty veil, he felt his pulse beat as never before, and scarcely needed the charming smile she gave him to complete a happiness which at that moment was supreme.

"I have kept you waiting," she murmured; and he found no answer for looking at her eyes, that, seen thus through her veil, possessed a beauty and a glow which made her absolutely beautiful. "I am all ready now," she cried, "and mamma says that you are not. Naughty man, to go careering downtown to look after some patient or other when you should have been thinking only of me."

He laughed, feeling himself to be another being, and she another being from the man and woman of a week ago. Then he looked at her again, and uttered some tender compliment which made her blush deliciously, and then in answer to a wave of her hand, that seemed to say: "Enough!" was about to withdraw, when he saw her eyes suddenly dilate and a look of such shock and fear cross her face that he involuntarily turned and glanced down the hall behind him for the cause. There was nothing there, absolutely nothing; only the figure of a hair dresser or some such woman who, in cloak and veil, stood with her little bag on her arm, awaiting to enter, and, astonished at the ease with which his mind lent itself to the most startling conjectures, he turned back to reassure himself by another look at his bride, when the door which had been swung open between them softly closed and he found himself shut out from her presence with a new memory and a new fear to make discord of the notes of the wedding march he was soon to hear.

A Startling Interruption.

THE Gretorex mansion was eminently adapted for a large gathering. Built since the introduction of the modern styles, it had intricacies and surprises innumerable; but it had also many and various rooms of spacious proportions opening into hallways so wide and upon staircases so ample that had the number of guests reached the full thousand that had been invited there would have been sufficient accommodation for all. So numerous indeed were the rooms on the first floor and so admirably were they disposed, it had not been found necessary to ask the guests to ascend the stairs at all. Thus it was that Dr. Cameron had met his friends on the landings, but none on the floor above, and thus it was that upon his return to the room which had been allotted to him he could pace its length for twenty minutes without an interruption. And a friend's face, a jovial word would have been so welcome! For he did not want to think, and was impatient at the solitude which forced him to do so.

When the die had been cast, when our future is decided upon, we wish to reach the culmination without delay, and Dr. Cameron, weary with many and varied emotions, only longed for the moment when amid music and bustle, the flash of lights and the murmur of voices, he should lead his young bride into the presence that would irrevocably seal their fate. For in these long and heavy minutes of waiting he had something besides his thoughts to contend with, he had impressions, a consciousness almost amounting to an intuition, that something strange, something dark, something entirely out of harmony with this scene of light and joy was taking place near him—in his sight if he could but see, in his hearing if he could but hear; at all events near him, awesomely near, as near as that closed door toward which he cast hurried and shrinking glances every time a turn in his walk brought him within view of it.

Of Common Sense.

That he had no reason, or at the most the slightest reason for this sensation did not make it any less vivid or powerful. Right or wrong it had got a strong hold upon him and swayed him so completely that if the door I have spoken of had opened at one of the moments his eye was upon it and revealed a grisly skeleton standing on its threshold he would not have felt the shock as much as he did the ringing burst of melody that now and then soared up from the violins below. Yet in his heart he knew that he was but the fool of his imagination and that nothing more serious than the rearranging of a lock of hair or the buttoning on of a refractory pair of gloves by the commonplace hand of the woman he had seen enter there would be going on in this room his fancy peopled with shapes of fear and despair.

For he was a man of common sense and knew the fashionable world well and was moreover quite aware as a physician how far a man's imagination can carry him when his nerves have been unstrung by a series of such potent sensations as had visited him in the last four hours. Let that door once open and the bride step forth and all would be hope and cheer again. He knew it even while he was shuddering over the conviction that it had opened, and that a hand had been thrust out in a gesture of silent appeal and as quickly again withdrawn.

The coming of the servant with the articles necessary to complete his toilet was like cold water dashed upon a man heated with fever. It righted him immediately. As he tied his necktie and fastened his gloves he felt himself to be more a dreamer of nightmares, but Dr. Cameron, known throughout all the city for his practical common sense and sound judgment. He even laughed in his old, easy fashion as he peered down the hall and saw the servant who had waited upon him walk up and knock with the utmost assurance on the door he had been so long and fearfully watching. Nor did he feel himself to have been any the less a fool when in a moment later he beheld it open and caught a glimpse of his bride's white veil and sweeping train as she gave her answer to the man and then waited with the door half shut for the summons to descend. As he had promised himself it would be, all was cheer and hope again; nor in the bustle of preparation that presently followed did he become conscious of a thought out of harmony with the scene till, suddenly, as he was half way down the stairs, he felt his bride lean a little heavily on his arm, and, turning to look at her, perceived not a woman, not an automaton even, but a specter, whose glassy eyes, fixed upon vacancy, froze the blood in his veins.

What Did It Mean?

What did it mean? Was she mad or was she—— He did not stop to finish his thought; he clutched her by the arm and gently but firmly spoke her name. A shiver seemed to go through her, then she turned her head and slowly, painfully, under his gaze her lips took on the semblance of a smile so forced, so meaningless, that he stopped her where she was and, pointing to the surging sea of faces below, exclaimed:

"They are waiting for us; the minister has his book open, and your parents are already standing on each side of him; but if you do not wish to marry me, if there is any impediment in the way, or if you feel I can not be to you the husband you desire, say so, and we will turn back. No moment is too late before the minister has uttered the final words."

But her eyes, which had opened fearfully as he began to speak, closed softly as he finished, and murmuring coldly, "Let us proceed," she stepped down another stair.

He followed her and spoke again.

"I can not go on, Genevieve," he persisted, "till you assure me of one thing. Is your heart mine? Stands there no other man between us whose memory makes this moment frightful to you? If there is——"

"There is not," came from her lips, now showing less pallid under this questioning. "I am ill, fearfully ill; that is all."

He looked at her. He had known sickness which had changed a person's whole aspect in less time than had passed since he saw her blooming and brilliant a half hour before. And such might have attacked her, he could not tell.

"Are you too ill to go on?" he asked.

"No."

"You can bear the effort and excitement?"

Friendship is to be valued for what there is in it, not for what can be got ten out of it.—Trumbull.

Let friendship creep gently to a height; if it runs to it, it may run itself out of breath.

The strength of friendship consists more in liking the same things than in liking each other.

There is no folly equal to throwing away friendship in a world where friendship is so rare.

It is a fine thing to be yourself, and a true friend loves you most when you are?

Think less of your right to demand service from friendship and more of your sacred duty to give to it

To be a hero, trust yourself—to be a martyr, trust the world—and if you are an idealist, trust your friend.

When your friend disappoints you it hurts—but the agony is bitter when you find yourself failing your own ideal of friendship.

Inviting Callers

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED,
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

MANY little questions are coming up constantly in the minds of people who are in search of the correct thing in manners. Small problems which are puzzling need to be solved.

For instance, a young woman or girl may be uncertain whether she should ask a man to call or wait for a request from him. Now, in social life, the rule is well understood that a woman has the right to choose who may be admitted to her house, and this rule should be kept in mind in a decision about asking a man to call or withholding that privilege. A woman does not, therefore, hasten to ask a man to call who has just been introduced to her, and certainly does not if she knows very little about him. If she should do so she would seem very eager for his society, as well as rather injudicious in her selection of friends.

In the world of society a mother would usually know most of the young men whom her daughter would meet. They belong, for the most part, to families known to each other. When it is possible the invitation to call may be made by a girl's mother, who might say, informally, "We are always at home on Thursday afternoons," or "We like to have our friends come in on Sunday afternoons, and shall be glad to see you." A remark of this sort gives ease in every direction.

A man therefore understands that he should wait to be given the privilege of calling. He should not ask a girl if he may call to see her unless he has some good reason to think that the suggestion might come from him, but he should know her quite well before making it.

Another reason why a girl should not be in haste to ask a man to call is that if he should prove indifferent to the privilege granted she has the unpleasant sensation that he is not anxious for her society.

If a man has been introduced to a girl at the house of intimate friends, and there is reason to believe that he is a desirable acquaintance, an exception may be made to the general rule of not asking him to call after a first meeting or conversation. In a case of this sort the young people may have heard much of each other and may become on a friendly footing quickly. The important thing is for a girl to be careful in her selection of friends. Of course, it is only respectful for a man to wish to be introduced to a girl's parents and there should be no delay about this.

It is not correct for a girl to urge a man to call who has failed to appreciate the courtesy offered, nor is it advisable to seem so anxious for his attentions as to name a time for him to come when he has not even inquired when he might find her at home.

In large cities evening visits are out of fashion.

The Head Waitress

By HANK.

"WHAT'S the manager looking so chesty about, Louise?" asked the Steady Customer of the Head Waitress in the Cafe d'Enfant.

"A little girl stranger slipped into his home yesterday," she replied, "and, believe me, she was some cherub. Nine and a quarter pounds."

"Gee! No wonder Mr. Flakes is all puffed up," said the Steady Customer. "And what are they going to name little Miss Flakes?"

"Miss Snow Flakes would be a hit," said the Head Waitress.

The Steady Customer chuckled.

"My, but you're getting facetious, Louise," he said.

"It's Harmless."

"I'm going to look that word up," she replied, "and if it means what I think it means, I'll land you over the head with a plate of steamed hash."

"It's harmless," said the Steady Customer, "but tell me more about the manager's new arrival."

"Well, when he came in this morning," she said, "the telephone started ringing every five minutes with some ooze of his friends on it, all wanting to congratulate him. Later on he was called down into the basement to inspect the fresh baked pies and sinkers, and the assistant manager had to answer the phone. Every time he went to it some voice would say, 'Hello, Pop!' while some started to sing, 'Here Comes My Daddy Now,' until the assistant manager got so mad that he nearly bit a piece out of the receiver."

"Some folks can't take a joke," said the Steady Customer.

"No," replied the Head Waitress. "But, all joking aside, I do admire Mr. Flakes. He's a home man. As soon as he's through here he beats it straight to the fireside and don't make any stops on the way, either. That's the kind of a bloke that could cop my young affections any time. But I guess all of them guys is married, because the only legible ones I ever seen either had a permanent distillery breath or chicken fever."

"What does Marie think about it?" asked the Steady Customer.

"She's tickled to death, too," said the Head Waitress. "She thinks Mr. Flakes is great. He's so kind to her. Any time she has a date he always lets her off for an hour so she can doll up and put on her glad rags."

"Well, Marie," said the Steady Customer as he paid his check at the cashier's desk, "I hear Dame Fortune has knocked on the manager's door."

"Yes," said Marie, "it's great, but I'll bet he's glad she didn't knock more than once at a time."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

Chapter XII.

THE day following the evening on which Craig had taken her to the opera seemed to Mary Danforth different from any other day she had ever passed. She had heard much of dual personality, but she had never before had the sensation of possessing in her own being two distinct persons. One, the sensible, cool-headed working creature, went through the usual routine of daily duties. The other—the true inner self—found time between tasks requiring thought and concentration to remember the events of last night; the look in Craig's eyes, the touch of his lips upon her hand at parting. She no longer chided herself for thinking of this man. She knew now that she could not help thinking of him. She did not know that she loved him, but she was sure that he cared for her, and the knowledge brought with it a new kind of happiness.

The evening meal in the Danforth home was served earlier than usual to-day, and Mary ate it alone. It was supper instead of dinner. It was the cook's "evening out," so the waitress prepared the repast. Mr. and Mrs. Danforth were dining out with another elderly couple, and, as Mary was to remain at home, she had suggested that Jennie, the waitress, serve a simple early supper and then be allowed to have the evening to herself.

"Why should she stay at home when her work is done just because it is not her regular "day out?" she asked of her mother. "Girls of all classes like recreation. I know that I do."

Her mother smiled acquiescence of the suggestion. "Certainly, dear," she returned, "if you don't mind having your supper at 6 o'clock, there is no reason why Jennie may not be allowed the evening off."

Thus it came about that the sunset was still shining through the living room windows when Mary, her supper over, sat in an easy chair, watching the western glow across the river. She was vaguely happy, too happy to try to analyze her feelings. She was not lonely, for she had her work to do, yet she felt a disinclination to begin it just yet. She would wait until darkness made it advisable to turn on the lights. Meanwhile she would have this quiet hour for thinking. She sighed with content at the idea. So engrossed was she in her thoughts that she sprang to her feet with a gasp when the telephone bell rang, and she hurried to reply to its summons. The boy at the switchboard downstairs announced:

"Mr. Craig's calling, please, ma'am."

"Send him up," Mary ordered in a voice that was a little unsteady in spite of her efforts to make it firm.

Why should he be coming at this early hour of the evening? And why had he not informed her that he was going to call? In the few moments that elapsed before the ring at the door told of the presence of her caller, Mary had time to congratulate herself that she had put on before supper a pretty tea-gown. Few women are so absorbed in soul struggles or heart yearnings that they fail to consider how they look when a guest arrives. This girl glanced hastily in the mirror as she went through the hall to open the door for the young man, who started in surprise in seeing her instead of the maid who usually admitted him.

"You expected to see Jennie, you see me!" Mary laughed. Then she hurried on to explain the maid's absence, and that her parents were also out, talking against time of trifling matters because of the consciousness that the man was waiting for an opportunity to say something of importance. But at last he spoke.

"I am going West to-night," he announced without preamble. "A telegram from the firm calls me home. There are some changes being made in the office and I am wanted. I could not go without tiling you goodbye."

The girl felt the color recede from her face, and for a moment the only words she could find were "Going to-night?" She heard herself repeating them dully, stupidly. She and Craig were standing, for he had told his news as soon as he entered the living room. She looked away from him across the river at the hills on the Jersey shore. The glory seemed to have gone out of the sky.

Craig spoke again, this time more softly. "Mary," he said, laying his hand on her clasped hands, "I am coming back soon if you will let me. Can't you tell me that you are sorry I am going now?"

She said nothing, but she clasped her hands together more closely in an effort at self-control, and, seeing this, the man drew her to him with a sudden gesture of tenderness.

"Dear," he said, "I love you very dearly. Won't you try to love me a little?"

"I don't know," Mary whispered, but as she dropped her head upon his shoulder for a moment before disengaging herself from his encircling arm, the man was almost satisfied.

Before Gordon Craig left a half hour later, he had told Mary Danforth that he would return for her answer in June. He had explained that it would be several years befre his business would warrant his marrying, but he wanted her permission to work and wait for her.

"I am coming back to see you graduate, dear," he said with a whimsical smile. "The firm wants me to come East once more before midsummer, and I will try to make it the last week in June. Then you will tell me what I want to know—won't you, Mary?"

He bent his head to catch her low reply.

"Perhaps I will," murmured the girl. But the look in her eyes as she raised them to his said more than her words.

The Gold Coin

THEY picked up his mangled body at the foot of the cliff. In his pocket was a letter.

"To-day I went to meet you, child, when you came home from the office. You like so much to have me come and meet you these bright summer evenings, when it is still daylight at 8 o'clock. But you do not like me to call for you on dark winter evenings. You are so full of loving care for me, child.

"On the corner of Bergstrasse I stopped to wait for you. From this corner I can see the big office building in which you are working. I stood looking toward the door anticipating the moment when you came out.

"The clock in the church tower struck 8 and filled the air with the sound of its chimes and suddenly the thought struck me: To-day is the last day of the month, when you receive your month's salary. This will make you come a little later.

"Then a stylishly dressed young lady went by, tall and straight and handsome. I recognized her face under the big hat: It was Grete Allmers, your former friend and schoolmate. Now she is Grete Allmers no longer, for she has married a rich husband, whose name I forget. She saw me, too, and nodded her head with a friendly smile, though she is a fine lady and I am only a poor old man. I followed her with my eyes. She looked so proud, so young and vigorou sthat it was a pleasure just to look at her. And then I saw you coming out of the door and run almost into the arms of your friend. Grete Allmers laughed and there was a happiness in her voice, and you smiled as you often smile. And then, quite suddenly I saw something I had never seen before. A mother, perhaps, sees such things coming, a father does not see them until they are there. I saw that you are no longer young, child, and that you have dark shadows underneath your eyes and that the eyes themselves are not as bright as before. That your lips are no longer red and that there are lines running from your nose to your mouth. Never, child, did I see this before. I never noticed that time put new lines into your face, but now I suddenly discovered though I saw how bitter was your smile compared to your friend's happy young laughter. You and she are the same age, still she looked the same as always, while you had aged. You came toward me. You were happy and smiled. And I—I looked at your smile, child, as I have never looked before.

The Coin.

"Was the evening long or did it pass quickly? I do not know. Then we said "Good night," and when I came into my room I found, what I have found every month in all these years, your gold coin. When you, seven years ago, got your present good position and for the first time brought home your salary, you came to me, your eyes beaming with joy, and said: "Look, father, what a lot of money I am making. I won't need nearly all of it. What does your little housekeeper cost? We are only two people. Now, please, take this for yourself—for some little thing you might want. Do take it for my sake. And I took it, not for the sake of the ten marks, but for the light of happiness in your eyes. And since then the same thing has happened every month—when I have come into my little room I have found your little gold coin. You never wanted me to thank you for it. My thanks were to be the spending of the money. And I have spent some of it, because you have watched me too closely to put all aside, but I spent far from all of it. Many of your gold coins are still lying in a drawer of my desk.

"When I looked at the gold coin tonight I suddenly understood what had been struggling within me all night. It was as if an iron gate were suddenly opened and the whole pack of thoughts that had been struggling inside as if in a cage were suddenly released and rushed at me.

His Return.

"Golden coins—that is all you have received in return for your youth, miserable gold coins. You have done things in an office which scores of people could do just as well, your young life was nothing but a small part of a dead machine.

"You have not married. No husband has enjoyed your youth. No children have come to you to keep you young.

"All that remains of your youth are a heap of golden coins.

"Oh, my child, this is what has happened and I have not seen it happen. It is as if the seven years had suddenly acquired voices that shout at me. Until now they have been silent, and have hidden themselves in the darkness, but now they rush at me, a dreadful host, and their shrieks resound in my ears.

"A painter who understood to paint pictures only, but not to sell them! A pitiful, perhaps a heroic figure—then came the paralytic stroke, and the hero become a martyr. Was it then really so? Was it perhaps not quite different. You have not only made the necessary money to provide for us both, you have nursed me, you have kept our little home neat and attractive without any help, you have cooked our meals, you have sewed and worked.

"Never in my life have I sold a painting below my price. I could never cheapen my art. And now a voice within me shouts that I have always valued myself too highly; far too highly, I must die now. I have no right to live, child. You will suffer with me at first; I know how you will suffer, because you love me. But that suffering was bound to come some time anyway, and there are sufferings that come too late. Your salary will be more than big enough for you, now that you have nobody to share it. You will have no money troubles. You will not have to work like a slave before and after office hours. You will travel and see things that will make your eyes bright once more and make your smile young again.

"You know that I love the path across the Ottersberg Mountains. I go there very seldom, because you are afraid something might happen to me. It is a dangerous path, with a deep abyss on one side and no railing. Several accidents have happened there.

"But it will be hard, very hard, at the last moment. The gold coin I found here in my room to-night I shall take with me and look at it before * * * Then I shall in turn be strong enough to do it."

THE MEMBERS OF THE CIRCLE DREW SHRINKINGLY AWAY AS IF AFRAID, UNTIL SOMEONE ASKED, "WHAT IS THE MATTER? IS THIS CHARLES D. ISAACSON, OR IS IT SOME OTHER COME IN CLAIRVOYANT POSSESSION?"

THEN I BEGAN TO SPEAK. SLOWLY AND SLIGHTLY RASPING, AND AS IF WITH GREAT DIFFICULTY, I SAID: "THIS IS FORSTER—DAVID FORSTER. DO YOU NOT KNOW ME? LAWYER. ONCE OF MANCHESTER, ENGLAND.

FINE FAMILY. FRIEND OF THE NOBILITY. HANDSOMEST MAN OF MY TIME IN MY YOUNGER DAYS AND POPULAR WITH THE LADIES. AH, I HAD THE LADIES. I PASSED OUT AT NINETY YEARS—RESPECTED AND LOVED. HAVE YOU NEVER HEARD OF ME?"

By Charles D. Isaacson.

(Copyright, 1913, International News Service.)

OFTENTIMES a medium loses her own personality and becomes for the time being another individual—so many are led to believe. That is to say, her spirit goes out of her body, floats temporarily in the atmosphere, goodness knows where, while some long deceased person occupies her material frame and discourses through her lip. Mrs. Piper, a famous clairvoyant of the last century, often permitted a mythical "Dr. Phinuit" this privilege, and Mrs. Pepper was very kindly to an Indian maid, "Bright Eyes," as many will well remember, through the reports of a recent lawsuit. At such times their voices would completely change, and to all intents and purposes they were different people.

I have no opinions to offer on the truth or falsity of such experiments. I only know what I have done along the very same lines. And I have been told that some of the things that I have accomplished have far outdone any recorded of them, and were decidedly more convincing. (I am informing you that every so-called manifestation to my credit was founded on nothing outside of my own imagination and trickery.)

He Would Try.

I had often been asked by my followers if I had ever permitted my body to be occupied in clairvoyancy. I had not, but I would try—it was my purpose to leave no field of mystery untouched.

One night I was seated with my circle, talking quietly and slowly. It was winter, and the faint moonlight streaks on the snow outside looked like vagrant ghosts of other days. A low light glimmered from one end of our room and reflected a ghastly yellow glare on my face. I had been asked a question, which I was about to answer, when I pressed my hand suddenly to my heart with a quick, short gasp. Instantly all were close about me. "What's the matter?" "Aren't you well?" "Speak out, please."

I answered not a word. My body began to twitch and shake, my eyes closed, and I lay back on the sofa where they had taken me, motionless, as if dead. Someone sprinkled my forehead with water, others rubbed my hands until finally my eyes opened. Slowly I sat up, looked queerly about me, walked with shambling gait and bent shoulders like an old man, to the mantelpiece, examining with curious manner the familiar objects in the room.

The members of the circle drew shrinkingly away as if afraid, until someone asked, "What is the matter? Is this Charles D. Isaacson, or is it some other, come in clairvoyant possession?"

Got Him At Last.

Then I began to speak. Slowly and slightly rasping, and as if with great difficulty, I said: "This is Forster—David Forster. Do you not know me? Lawyer. Once of Manchester, England. Fine family. Friend of the nobility. Handsomest man of my time in my younger days and popular with the ladies. Ah, I had the ladies. I passed out at 90 years—respected and loved. Have you never heard of me?"

And I advanced to one of the women, tickled her under the chin as I chuckled.

"Ah, you're a fine set here, you are. Fine women, fine women. Smart men. Clever medium, that Isaacson—I caught him this time, though, didn't I? He's been keeping me out for the damdest time. I got 'im this time, all right."

So I went on, conversing with my friends, talking about Forster, his past life, his friends, his present existence; about myself, how I had been fighting him and how he had finally succeeded in beating me; about the members of the circle and intimate points about the private life of each, which he claimed to have witnessed himself.

Then I was taken again with a spasm—coming to—as myself.

"What did you think of that experiment?" I was asked.

"Don't know anything about it," I replied, to the growing astonishment of all.

Since that time David Forster has returned many times—in fact, he has been what might be called the counterpart of "Dr. Phinuit" and "Bright Eyes." He has come at every call and told us marvelous stories of the past, of the present beyond the grave, and of the future.

Nor has he been the only one whom they thought, ousted me from my body in clairvoyant trance. On Washington's birthday, the father of his country delivered a long speech. Charles Dickens gave us the synopsis of a novel. A crazy Indian frightened everyone with his native war-whoops and dance. Dr. Johnson gave a very masterly discussion on decadent literature. One gentleman gave a long message in French, and still another amused us with a curious English description mingled with a conglomeration of Italian and Spanish. Paganini, the great violinist of ghoulish memory, came in and asked for a violin. He played what he called a new melody, but if anyone listening had been a student of music he would have recognized it as the famous "Devil's Trill," which, I had carefully studied for several weeks previous to making the experiment.

Several women had "taken possession" and my voice had been very carefully changed to suit each case. But perhaps the greatest sensation of all was when there came Sir Henry Irving, the English actor, most artistic of all his time, who recited his favorite number, "The Dream of Eugene Aram," bringing tears to the eyes of many of my listeners.

Very Impressive.

At another time I described in detail a place far distant, giving names and dates, providing a very impressive example of clairvoyancy:

"I am in a cemetery," I began in the person of an old Dutch settler of New Amsterdam. "There are many tombstones and many beautiful trees. Come with me and I will show you where my body lies. We go in the main entrance by a church. Here is my grave and on it the name, Von Glahn. Farther on, within a plot where many lie, we look over the railing, and there is a small headstone, on which appears the name, Washington Irving."

The message extended over a full evening, telling everything about the old Dutch cemetery of Tarrytown—the estates nearby—the bridge—the streets and stores. Several members of the circle traveled up there to corroborate or disprove what they had heard.

Oh, it's a shame that people will be such ninnies. Hadn't I been there a week before to make sure that nothing was said that wasn't right to the finest detail!

Jim Flynn, who meets Gunboat Smith in a 10-round bout at the Garden A. C., New York, on August 8, is training harder for this battle than for any bout in which he has taken part for several years. "I realize that a win for me over Smith will place me in line for a title match," said Flynn, "and on that account I want to be in tip-top shape when I meet him."

Jack Britton will make his next fight against Frankie Burns at Denver on August 11. This information comes to us in a letter from Danny Morgan, manager of the Chicago lightweight.

Los Angeles fans are giving Jack White a good chance to defeat Johnny Dundee when the pair clash at Tom McCarey's arena on August 12. Dundee and White met about two months ago, and although Dundee was given the verdict after 20 rounds of hard milling, Jack claims he was not in the best of shape for the fray, as he took the match on five days' notice.

Jimmy Johnson, who sent Harry Stone, the New York lightweight, and Harry Thomas, the English welterweight, to Australia for fights several months ago, received word yesterday that Thomas knocked out Billy Elliott in nine rounds, and that Stone lost a decision to Billy Russell in twenty rounds. Both scraps took place on July 19.

When Kid Williams reaches New York en route from Los Angeles, it is expected that he will be called upon to meet Frankie Burns, the Jersey City bantamweight. Ever since Frankie held Coulon to a draw at Kenosha, Wis., about a month ago, he has been after a match with the Baltimore boy.

Terry Nelson, the Greek lightweight, is in good shape for his ten-round mill with Young Seymour at Marietta on Saturday night. Terry says he will go after bouts with some of the tough 133-pounders if he succeeds in defeating Seymour.

Charlie White is certainly one popular fighter around local sporting circles. Fans are still talking about the clean-cut fighting tactics he used against Abel. Charlie had a good chance to hit Abel when he had his back turned in the second round of their recent go, but waited until Jake turned completely around before dealing out the final wallop.

Ad Wolgast continues to chase Willie Ritchie in an effort to drag the champion into the ring with him again. Ritchie left yesterday morning for Frisco, but Wolgast left two hours later, hoping to corner Willie and force him to sign articles for a return scrap.

Kid Duke showed the white feather last night when he refused to go on with Kid Brooks in their scheduled finish bout. Brooks was willing to meet Duke and settle for once and all time who is the better of the two, but Duke claimed they could not get any place to stage the go. It looked like a case of cold feet on Duke's part.

Vedder Sitton Hurls No-Hit, No-Run Game

TROY, N. Y., Aug. 1.—P. Vedder Sitton, former Atlanta pitcher, now with the Troy club, of the New York State League, shut Wilkesbarre out without a run or hit yesterday afternoon. Not one of the visiting players reached second base, and only three reached first, each on a base on balls.

Sitton received brilliant support.

Sitton is one of those ball players whom the finger of fate seems to touch at widely separated intervals, and with something like a caress.

He is remembered around the Southern League as the chap who helped to win two pennants in a single year, and came within a game of making it three.

In 1908, Sitton's work on the slab was responsible for the pennant in the Sally League. Then he went to Nashville, and pitched the final game of the season, on which the pennant depended, beating Breitenstein of New Orleans, 1 to 0. Then the youngster went to Cleveland, making its best attempt to win an American League pennant. But Cleveland lost out in the last pair of games.

Since then Sitton has been drifting about the country, pitching grand ball in flashes and streaks.

SWARTZ'S BROTHER HURT; MAY CALL HARRY AWAY

Harry Swartz, the popular motor rider who has been thrilling local fans at Jack Prince's saucer, may have to leave for Denver within the next 24 hours. His brother, Eddie Swartz, was badly injured in a motorcycle race there last Saturday afternoon, and is not expected to live.

Harry is ready to leave the minute he receives a wire. All the local riders and fans are pulling hard for Eddie to pull through. He is the most popular rider in the Middle West, and had expected to come here to ride in the fall.

$2,000 RAISED BY FANS IN AMERICUS FOR TEAM

AMERICUS, Aug. 1.—Two thousand dollars subscribed by enthusiastic Americus fans in mass meeting insures the maintenance of the Americus baseball team throughout the season. The amount raised in mass meeting cancels all outstanding indebtedness and insures the expense account throughout August. Americus fans never fail to respond to such calls.

PELS GET TWO PLAYERS IN THREE-CORNERED DEAL

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Aug. 1.—Pitcher Stevenson and Outfielder McKillen, purchased from the South Michigan League, were released to the Pelicans to-day. Stevenson and McKillen join the Pels at Memphis.

MRS. SCHMITZ WINS FIRST ROUND OF NET TOURNEY

WOODMERE, N. Y., Aug. 1.—Fresh from winning the Westchester County tennis championship, Mrs. Frederick C. Schmitz defeated Miss Margaret Grove in the opening round of the Woodmere County Club tournament for women here yesterday by the score of 6-4, 6-1.

Play in the second round will be continued to-day.

Bill Bailey Placed On Ineligible List

Bill Bailey, plucky Cracker outfielder, has been placed on the ineligible list by the management, for the next ten days, and at the expiration of that time it is probable he will be released, if waivers have been obtained. This move was made necessary by the signing of Harry Holland, the Tech third baseman.

Bailey had been unfortunate all season. He has suffered from pains in his side, and a pitched ball, striking him in the same place during the New Orleans series, tore loose a couple of ribs and practically disabled him.

Bailey expects to return to his home in a few days and will play no more ball this season.

LEOPARDS AND ARMY POLO TEAMS IN FINAL GAME

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 1.—The Cooperstown Leopards and the army polo teams will meet tomorrow in the final game for the army and navy cups by virtue of their victory in the semi-final games at the point Judith Country Clubs field here yesterday.

Aided by a handicap of three goals, the army scored a victory over the Sand Pipers in the semi-final matches by the score of 12 1-4 to 10 1-2. In another thrilling contest the Cooperstown four defeated Point Judith 11 3-4 to 7.

MATTY OUT TO BAG 30 GAMES THIS SEASON

By Sam Crane.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 1.—Christy Mathewson, who was quite an old fellow in baseball as players go several years before Charlie Ebbets declared that the game was only in its infancy, finds it necessary to step out and give a real exhibition of the art of pitching every now and then to convince some folks that he has not gone into decay.

Matty is not usually prone to amassing records. He discovered some time back in the dark ages of the game that a well-preserved arm, protected from the strain of getting records, paid dividends longer than one that flashed all its best stuff in a short time and then went out like a flame on a wet stick. But if these records persist in forcing themselves upon him, he will not purposely step aside to avoid them.

The Old Master is out to bag 30 victories this season. This is not a record by any means, for Matty himself has done better several times in the years gone by, but for a man pitching in his thirteenth year in the big league, it is strong evidence that he is still there or thereabouts.

MEETING TO-NIGHT TO FORM ANGLERS' CLUB

The first meeting of the prospective Atlanta Anglers' Club is to be held at 8 o'clock to-night at the Yancey Hardware Company, 134 Peachtree street. Dr. Allan Fogle and C. P. Watson have made the arrangements for the meeting and request all who are interested in the promotion of angling in this vicinity to attend.

Mr. Fogle says that either Piedmont or Lakewood would make an ideal place for fly-casting tournaments, which are among the prettiest sporting events to be seen anywhere to-day. The ultimate object of the club would be affiliation with the national organization. Mr. Watson, of the Yancey Hardware Company, is answering all inquiries concerning the prospective club.

CARDINAL OWNER WILL TRADE ALL HIS PLAYERS

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1.—President Schuyler P. Britton, of the Cardinals, is on the warpath and in an endeavor to strengthen that club to-day declared he would trade every member of the club except Manager Miller Huggins. It means that Ed Konetchy, Harry Sallee, Bob Harmon, Charley O'Leary and recruits will be swapped if there is a chance to strengthen the club.

Whether any trade will be made is not known, but President Britton announced that negotiations have been opened with the Giants, Reds and other clubs. The tumble in to eighth place for the first time in years is too much for President Britton and Manager Huggins.

MAY INCREASE FEDERAL LEAGUE TO SIXTEEN CLUBS

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—Directors of the Federal League go into an important session here to-day. Two propositions, one to make the Federal Baseball League an eight-club affair, and another to make it a twelve or sixteen-club league, a sort of tandem league, with an Eastern and Western division, will be discussed.

Baseball men in New York, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Brooklyn, Detroit, Milwaukee and Cincinnati, who have petitioned for admission, are anxious to get action, it is said. Many other cities seek admission, and magnates have announced they will deposit the $10,000 necessary to insure their finishing the season.

THREE PLAYERS LET OUT.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Aug. 1.—Manager Leever, of the Kansas City Federal League team, to-day released Pitcher Hauser, Catcher Pettit and Third Baseman McGuire.

A bandit placed a gatling gun against a stranger's brow.
The stranger merely smiled at him and said: "Pooh, Pooh, for thou!
Pooh, Pooh for thou, and likewise
Fudge and also Pish and Tush!
I do not fear the gatling gun that stares me in the mush,
For I have been in baseball parks
where peanut merchants ply,
And I have sat there unafraid and looked them in the eye,
And though they poked me in the slats and gave me bitter pain,
And though they walked upon my corns, they tortured me in vain.
What chance have you, an amateur to make me tremble now?
Again I say Pooh, Pooh, and Tush
and likewise Fudge for thou!"
The bandit slowly went his way, and sore at heart was he.
"What chance is there," he sadly said
"for bush league guys like me?"

Quoth the London Daily Express: "The monotony of defeat becomes depressing." This sounds as if it were written by a baseball scribe in St. Louis.

Frank Navin is one of the few magnates who have the interests of the public at heart. Realizing that the good citizens of Detroit wanted some regular baseball, he staged a game between Buffalo and Providence.

It is said that Bill Carrigan will be given a free hand in Boston. In other words, he may do as he pleases, as long as he pleases J. McAleer.

A baseball manager these days is almost as sure of his job as a President of Mexico.

Ever and anon a scout unearths what he calls a slugging outfielder, but he fails to inform us whether said outfielder slugs the ball, the umpire or his fellow athletes.

OUR BLUE LAWS.

Mother, may I go out to swim?
Yes, my darling daughter,
But wear a skirt and an overcoat
When you go in the water.

It is hoped that none of the Giant pitchers will attempt to bean the Great Zim. If Mr. Zim were hit on the head with sufficient force, it would sprain his ankle.

"Boxers Seek Work," quoth a headline, but it fails to tell us whom they seek to work.

As a wise old gent once remarked, a man is known by the guys he hangs out with. After consorting with Tom Jones for a few years, Ad Wolgast bets $25,000 a throw as if he really meant it.

Just to show that he is a versatile manager, Joe Tinker occasionally loses two games a day instead of one.

Even if Horace Fogel's new league does not pan out, he can make a good living by hiring out as a model in a phonograph factory.

Sitting in his Morris chair in New York, Jim Corbett hands us a vivid description of the Williams-Ledoux conflict in Los Angeles, thereby demonstrating that he is the greatest long distance eyewitness in captivity.

HUMAN NATURE.

Were I a baseball magnate
And owned a team or two,
I'd hunt the golden kale, I fear,
And walk upon the public's ear
The same as magnates do.

No, Rudolph; there is no truth in the report that Roger Bresnahan and John Evers will double up in a vaudeville stunt next winter.

White and Whitney to Mix Here

Castro Starts "Regular" Club

By Left Hook.

CIPRIANO CASTRO, an exiled personage, was a rank bush leaguer compared to his nephew, Count Lou Castro, when it came to promoting. Cipriano tried to promote matters down in Venezuela, but he couldn't get away with it. Not so with Count Lou.

Count Lou got it into his bonnet that boxing could be made to pay in this hustling burg. The Count believes in high-class affairs, high-class clubhouse, high-class mixers and a high-class location.

Result:

Charley White will meet Frank Whitney in a ten-round bout here on the evening of August 13.

On the same program will be two other high-class battles. In one, Mike Saul will endeavor to show Eddie Hanlon where he gets off. In the other, Kid Young will try to avenge a recent beating by turning the tables on Charley Lee.

The bouts will be staged at the Ponce DeLeon skating rink.

The ring will be adorned with plush ropes and highly-polished brass posts.

The Count will referee himself, and will be decorated in a Tuxedo.

* * *

ALL of which proves our assertion that the Count is going to show his uncle up. Cipriano never got away with anything as big as this.

And on Labor Day the Count plans to send the winner of the White-Whitney scrap right back at Jack Britton. Within two or three months he believes he will have a championship battle here.

* * *

AS for the main bout, let us whisper that it is by far the classiest ever offered Atlanta fans. White is a near champion. He made a tremendous hit here when he stopped Jake Abel in less than two rounds.

Whitney is the most popular boxer who ever displayed wares here. He is tough and rugged, and will give the Chicagoan a merry time of it for ten rounds.

Both boys will be here within a few days. They want to become acclimated, and realize that they must have at least ten days within the portals of the city to get right.

THE skating rink is a mammoth place. Castro, therefore, will put on all of his shows at popular prices.

And it is an ideal spot for bouts, especially during the hot months. The building is situated on a knoll, and a breeze always blows through it. It is a semi-open affair of a place. In the winter the Count will board up the sides and put in a steam-heating outfit.

Milt Saul, of the street railway company, has promised the Count perfect car service to and from the club. As soon as the last bout is over, a string of cars will be lined up in front of the club ready to take the fans home.

* * *

THREE cheers for Count Castro. He is going to put Atlanta on the boxing map.

LARGEST RESIDENCE

The largest private residence in the world is the winter palace of the Czar of Russia at St. Petersburg.

The enormous proportions of the palace are made evident from the fact that in one room alone the entire Atlanta courthouse could be sheltered without inconvenience.

There are seven hundred rooms in the greatest of all Russian palaces. It is said that at one time 7,000 soldiers were quartered under its roof.

Neither the present occupant nor any of the former rulers of Russia have ever seen all the rooms of this edifice. Yet, despite its tremendous size, the palace contains treasures of architectural beauty.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Business Houses Due Soon for Peachtree

Huntley Subdivision on McBurney Lot—$500,000 Concern Organizes and Is Seeking Location.

Stores will soon go up at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets on property bought some months ago by Mrs. Lena Swift Huntley. This is the old E. P. McBurney place, and it has been cut into 25-foot store lots for the erection of business houses. The present tenant, Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, it was reported Friday, had been given notice that the house would not be rented after the fall.

This neighborhood is due to have more improvements later on. The owners of the northeast corner of Peachtree and Sixth streets—John G. and B. Frank Bell and Wallace Boyd—have had separate bonds for title executed on the M. L. Bates place, and are expected either to subdivide or improve. Four business lots will be 25 by 100 on Peachtree and two will be 45 by 100 on Sixth street.

The Raoul homestead across the street will probably be torn down before a great while. Mrs. Mary W. Raoul, the owner and present occupant, has bought a large lot in Druid Hills and will build there.

The old Ryan place at the southeast corner of Peachtree and Seventh streets passed into the hands of Clyde L. King and others last December, and this is also said to be marked for subdivision. This lot is 100 by 200 feet.

There has been considerable trading on the place of Dr. J. Scott Todd on the east side of Peachtree between the Bates and Ryan homes, and the home of Dr. Joseph Jacobs was put up for sale, but later withdrawn from the market.

Announcement that John D. Little anticipates encroachments on his handsome place at the northwest corner of Peachtree and Eighth streets and will build on Pace's Ferry road emphasises the anxiety which pioneer residents feel over the advance of business. Among the residents in the neighborhood of the proposed Huntley improvement are Christopher L. Stoney, General R. K. Evans, Junius G. Oglesby, Jr., Frank Hawkins, Mrs. Louise Calhoun, Joseph Cooper and others.

Organizing $500,000 Concern.

A new $500,000 concern for the manufacture of farming implements is being organized in Atlanta, and real estate men are looking for a desirable site for it with railroad frontage.

This is the Barwick Implement company, which has applied to the Superior Court for a charter througs Smith & Hastings, attorneys. The incorporators are J. P. Armstrong, of Richmond County, and J. W. Barwick and Garnett McMillan, of Fulton.

Install Renting Department.

Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents, will soon install a renting department in connection with their sales and loan business and publish a weekly rent bulletin.

Realty Men on Move.

Shelby Smith, chairman of the Board of County Commissioners and a leading realty man, returned to Atlanta Thursday and was in his office Friday after a vacation of two weeks. He will presid at the meeting of the commissioners at the courthouse Saturday morning, when some important business is to be transacted. The monthly meeting of the board is due Wednesday, August 6.

Frank Adair, of the Forrest & George Adair Real Estate Agency, has returned from Europe. J. H. Ewings and E. S. Rankin, of the Smith & Ewing Agency, are leaving Friday for New York, where they will go to bring capital to Atlanta.

Harris G. White, Charles P. Glover and S. B. Turman are expected to return Monday from the convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges at Winnipeg.

Ornamental Work Rushed.

Workmen are busy completing the ornamental terra cotta job on the Healey Building, and should be able to go ahead in a week with the exterior walls above the second floor. The Healy Building is shaping up nicely and in a month very little of the steel work will be seen.

drive, add room and repair house. Day work.

$100—Walter Echols, 714 West North avenue underpin dwelling. Light & Sanders.

$125—J. A. Bradford, 110 Jett street, build porch and make repairs. Day work.

$2,500—L. O. Kimberly, Arlington street, one-story frame dwelling. Day work.

Tuesday Sales Day.

Tuesday is legal sales day at the county courthouse, and there will be several interesting offerings, starting at 10 o'clock. Forrest & George Adair will sell No. 111 Whitehall Terrace, a two-story, 7-room frame dwelling on a 42 by 108 foot lot. This property is to be sold to wind up the estate of Mrs. Victoria A. Foster. It rents for $25 a month. There is a $1,000 mortgage at 7 per cent maturing September 1, 1918, which must be assumed by the purchaser, the balance to be in cash.

The Greene Realty Company will sell for the estate of the late Dominico Gussi the southwest corner of East Fair and Fraser streets, 67 by 90 feet, on terms of half cash and the balance in one and two years, at 7 per cent. There are three houses and a store on the lot.

Setting Back Dwellings.

Several small houses which have been close to the sidewalk on the Roswell Road at Buckhead are being rolled back some distance from the thoroughfare. This move has been made by the owners of the property to improve the looks of the neighborhood and also in anticipation of the proposed widening of the road.

Interesting Deeds Filed.

Among warranty deeds filed Thursday was a paper from A. W. Van Hoose, president of Shorter College, Rome, to C. J. Sheehan, on Arthur avenue, 94 feet west of Courtland street, 50 by 90 feet, for $18,000, and from Harry K. Dunning to J. L. Womack the northwest corner of Oakland avenue and Moseley street, fronting 126 feet on the latter street, for $29,850.

Roxborough Road Underpass.

E. Rivers, J. Lee Barnes, John Aldredge, Harris Jobson and others owning property on the Roxborough road are seeking to have the county build an underpass under the Southern Railway where the Roxborough road now crosses at grade. The Southern is double tracking at this point and the idea is to make the other improvement while the railroad is making his own.

There is an underpass of this character on Piedmont avenue near Dr. J. W. Mayson's place, and the Roxborough citizens want one at their crossing for safety and convenience.

Effect of Glover Election.

Real estate men heard discussing the election of Charles P. Glover to the vice-presidency of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges were of the opinion Friday that Mr. Glover's elevation was a providential thing in that it would probably result in bringing the realty men to Atlanta in 1916.

It has been pointed out that Mr. Glover will be in line for the presidency next year and that he will be complimented by the delegates in the above manner. Several loyal real estate men believe that Memphis will now withdraw in favor of Atlanta.

BULLISH REPORT BOOSTS COTTON

U. S. Figures Were Very Surprising and Drive Shorts to Cover Despite Texas Rains.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—On the strength of cables, the cotton market opened steady to-day, with first prices at a net advance of 2 to 5 points from last night's close, and was sustained in the early trading by scattered covering ahead of the Government report, due at noon.

From many sections of Texas showers were reported and it was colder, with indications pointing for more rains within the next forty-eight hours. However, the market remained very steady, with trading very light. There was no feature of importance.

During the forenoon shorts became heavy buyers; also some of the larger spot interests, resulting in August advancing 10 points to 11.65, while other positions increased their early gain 1 to 3 points.

The Government flashed its July condition report promptly at noon, giving percentage of the condition of the growing crop at 79.6 per cent, as compared with 81.8 a month ago, and 76.5 per cent for July in 1912. The report was construed as bullish, being considerably under expectations, which indicates that the people have been fooled on account of the cleanness of this crop, and it will require perfect seasons from now on to make the large yield required. New crop positions were under heavy demand from strong sources. October, December and January were the strongest options on the list. New crop advanced 10 to 12 points from the opening within fifteen minutes after the report was published. August held steady around 11.80. Offerings were light and scattered.

At the close the market was barely steady with prices at a net advance of 9 to 14 points from the final quotations of Thursday.

Following are 1 p. m. bids in New York: August, 11.78; October, 11.31; January, 11.29; December, 11.29; March, 11.29.

Following are 12 p. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.60; October, 11.36; January, 11.33; December, 11.33; March, 11.42.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 2.—Cables attributed the recovery to the anticipation of a bullish bureau condition. Our market was quiet with October around 11.30 up to the time of the Bureau publication at 11 o'clock. Good prospects for more rain in Texas acted as a check to short covering on the fear of a low report.

There was a rumor of labor troubles having set in in Lancashire and mills about to close in the Oldham district.

The Government gave 79.6 as the condition to July 25. The market advanced to 11.38 for October soon after its issuance.

ENORMOUS TRADE IN CORN; BIG GAIN

Buyers Take Profits, But Offerings Are Quickly Absorbed. Bad Crop News Factor.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red ....84¾@86
Corn—No. 2 ....69½
Oats—No. 2 ....39½@40½

CHICAGO, Aug. 1.—There was a sensational market in corn again today with gains of 1 3-4 to 2 1-4 cents, and resting spots within 1-8@1-4c of the best prices reached. The Oklahoma August report on corn as wired by King, of Toledo, showed a crop condition of over 41, compared with 83 a month ago. The drouth in that country was the cause of this sensational deterioration. A year ago the condition was 73 and last October it was 67. The July condition of the government was 87, which indicated a crop of 50,000,000 more than that of a year ago. Advices received from Nebraska report that 60 per cent of that State will not raise enough corn to feed it.

Wheat closed 1 to 1 3-8c better and oats were pj 1 to 1 1-4. Cash sales of wheat were 102,000 bushels; corn, 115,000 bushels and oats 160,000 bushels.

Provisions were fractionally higher all around, but the volume of trade was rather small.

Funds for Southern Banks Promotes Early Buying—Damage to Corn Causes Hesitancy.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—The response to the news that the Government is prepared to supply funds for crop moving purposes was not as vigorous at the opening of the stock market to-day as had been expected. Gains ranging from ¼ to ½ were made in nearly all the important issues, but part of these advances were lost later on moderate selling. Canadian Pacific was exceptionally weak, declining a point.

With the exception of Southern Pacific shares, which were unsettled, American Railways ruled firm on the London market.

The curb market was steady.

How Would a Term in Jail Impress This Judge?

What Effect Would It Have Upon Him? Would It Make Him Realize That the Constitution of the United States Possesses Authority Bigger Than His Own?

(Copyright, 1913.)

First let us point out that some of our judges take themselves a little too seriously.

There are among them, fortunately, men of high character and ability. These, let us hope, are a majority.

But the public is not bewildered or dazed by a gown of black silk which some judges wear on the bench. In fact, these days the public has come to look more closely at the judges and refuse to take too seriously their estimate of their own importance.

And now let us come to the interesting case of a person called A. B. Pittman, who is a judge in Tennessee.

The news reports tell us that this interesting Pittman individual put in jail a newspaper editor, Gilbert D. Raine, of the News Scimitar, because, if you please, Mr. Raine had published in his newspaper an article that the judge had told him NOT to print.

The judge in sending this man to jail did not get the opinion of a jury or of other judges.

He simply had said to the editor of the newspaper, "You must not print such an article." And when the editor printed it he put him in jail.

We assume that this judge is personally honest and that the main trouble with him is that he hasn't read the Constitution of the United States and doesn't realize that a two-penny judge is a smaller factor in this nation than the Constitution.

If the judge had read the Constitution he would know that it says something about liberty of the press.

And he would know that those that wrote the Constitution, which unfortunately provides a pretty easy way for dishonest men to get on the bench, never intended that judges should be allowed to edit newspapers in advance.

We assume, as we have said, that this judge happens to be an honest man personally, that he is not a grafter, doesn't take bribes, isn't hired by a corporation, wasn't taken out of a corporation law office and put on the bench—in fact, that he is not the type of judge that USUALLY is found objecting to publication of the truth.

But, Judge Pittman, suppose that you WERE that kind of a dishonest judge.

Suppose you DID belong to the kind of grafting class occasionally found wrapped up in black silk.

And suppose an editor intended to print the truth about you and about your graft.

How simple it would be to forbid the publication of the article and to prevent its publication by threatening to lock up the man who printed it!

Would not that be a very easy way to keep your story and an account of what you had done out of the newspapers and thus TO SAVE YOUR OWN SKIN?

Are you not afraid that, immaculately honest as YOU are, in sentencing a man to jail for printing what you don't want in his paper, some other judge might take the hint and use the power that you have abused to prevent by threats of imprisonment the publication of truth concerning his own misdeeds!

Don't you think, Judge Pittman, that it is a more serious offense for a judge, taking the salary of the people, to violate the Constitution of the United States than it is for the editor of a newspaper to print something that YOU don't approve.

Do you think that man should be put in jail merely because he did what YOU said he must not do?

What would you think if it were said to you that YOU must be put in jail FOR DOING WHAT THE CONSTITUTION SAYS YOU MUST NOT DO?

What effect do you think a few months in jail would have on YOU and your views of the Constitution?

Don't you suppose it would be an excellent thing if the people of your State and of all the States had the right of RECALL, which would enable them to take from the bench, repudiate AND STOP THE PAY of judges like yourself who appear to lack appreciation of the Constitution of the United States?

Egmont and Horn

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

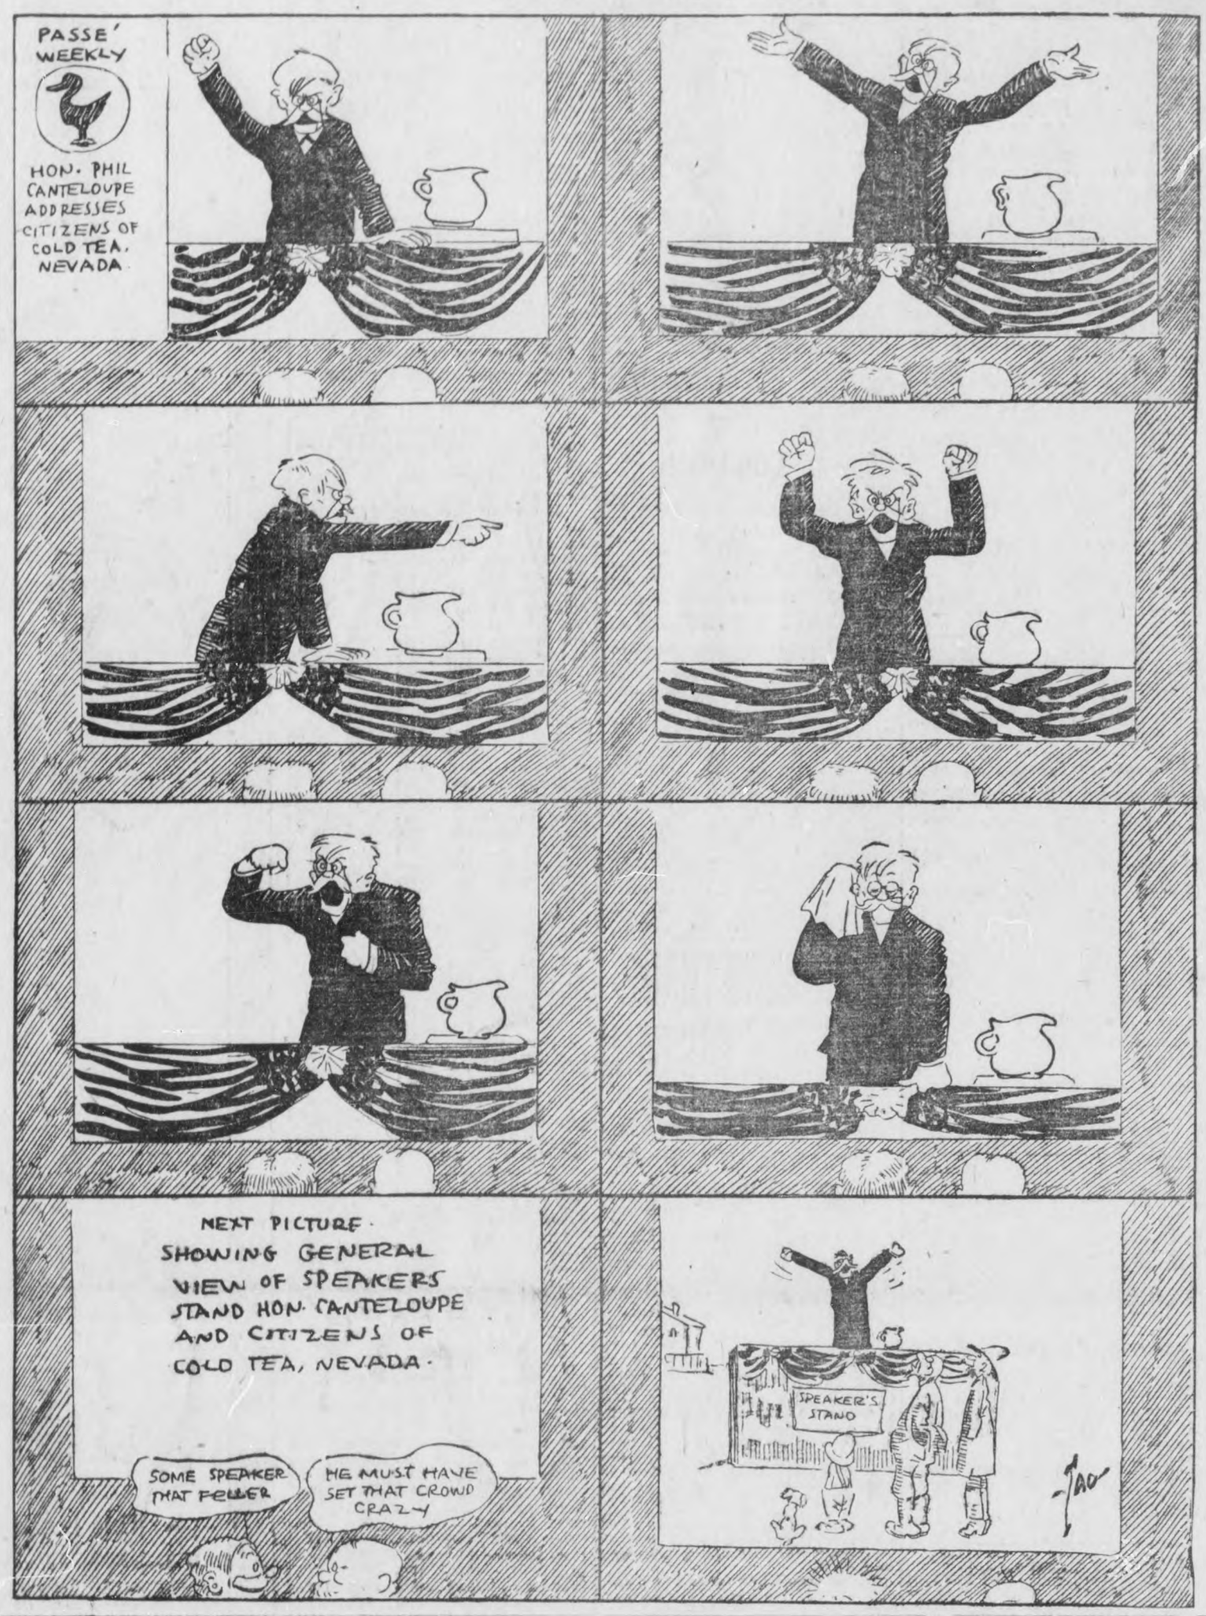

THE execution in the great square at Brussels, of Egmont and Horne three hundred and forty-five years ago, was one of the minor tragedies of history out of which, sometimes, there come tremendous consequences. Egmont, apart from the fact that he had very "blue" blood and a whole lot of "rank" and money, amounted to but little as a world force; while Horn was at best but a mediocrity; yet on account of the flagrant injustice of the charges that were trumped up against them by old Alva and the cold-blooded fashion in which they were executed, there resulted a state of mind in the Netherlands that was to work mightily for the good of humanity in all lands and ages.

The story of Egmont and Horn is too long to tell here, but those who do not already know it may find it told to perfection in Motley's "Rise of the Dutch Republic." It is enough here to note the fact that in consequence of the judicial murder of Egmont and Horn there came about the political unification of the Netherlands which enabled William the Silent to lay the foundations for the little republic which has written its name so large and enduring in the annals of the race.

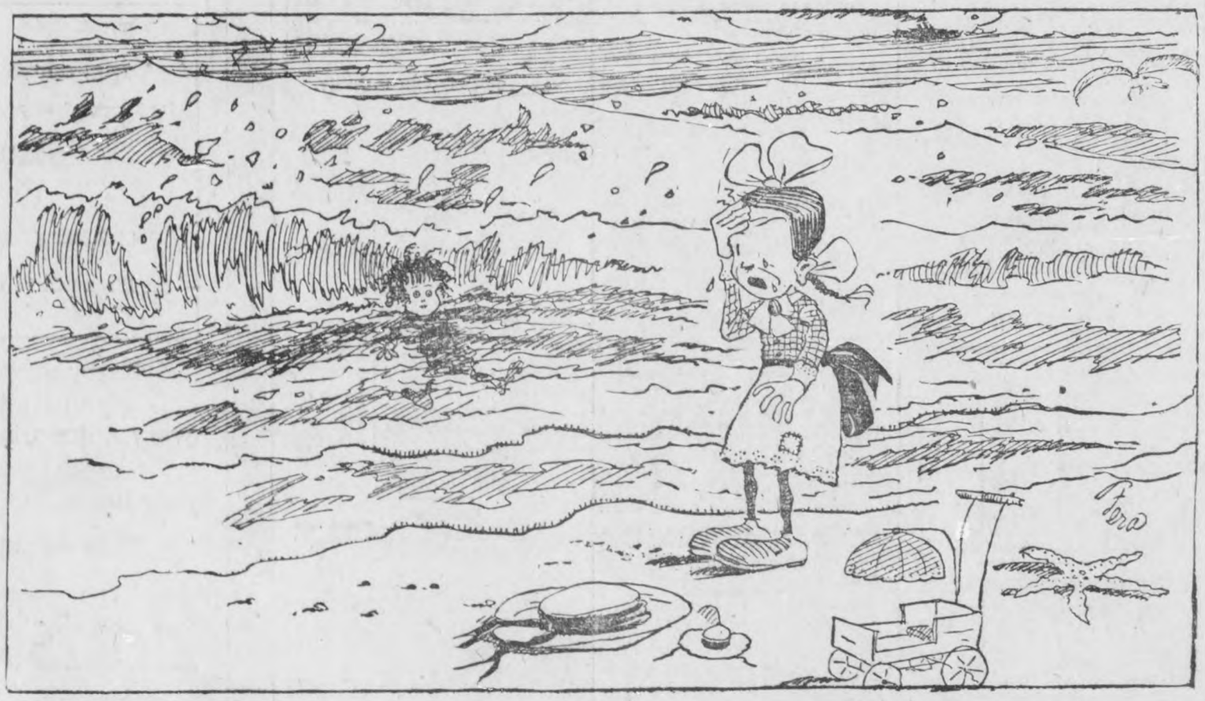

"Like things of another world," wrote a distinguished contemporary, "seem the cries, lamentations and just compassion which all the people of Brussels, noble or ignoble, feel for the barbarous tyranny of this Nero of an Alva;" and out of that feeling was born the opposition to Philip and his henchmen which made possible the Dutch republic.

In his iniquitous attempt to throttle the liberty of the Hollanders Philip overreached himself, permitted his favorite, the Duke of Alva, to gratify his personal spite by the murder of Egmont and Horn, and in so doing played into the hand of the very cause he hated and was trying to overthrow. Thus may we see how true it is that oftentimes in this world good comes out of evil, and out of the ashes of Ignorance and Bigotry the flower of Freedom and Progress.

The Little Dramas of Nature.

Country Offers Amateur Naturalists of Animal Life as Absorbing and Fascinating Study as Ever Staged in Any Theater of the Universe—Studies of Nature Make Life More Interesting and the Mind Richer.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS

I WISH I could persuade everybody who is going to take a vacation anywhere in the country this summer to become an amateur naturalist. You needn't study books nor pursue the subject scientifically nor systematically unless you want to, but just simply keep your eyes and ears open. Leave your gun at home, lest it tempt you to murder some innocent creature, but take an opera-glass in your pocket if convenient.

The stage of nature is full of actors and actresses playing dramas of absorbing interest and offering spectacles as fascinating and beautiful as any that ever the electric lights of the theater shone upon.

The trouble with most people who seek rest or recreation in the country is that they think only of automobile rides, tennis, golf, fishing and garden parties, and neglect the delightful little sights that are all about them. Birds are really more interesting than golf balls, and the charm of a brook is not summed up in the trout that spring at your bait.

Charms of Nature.

If a list were made, not of the greatest but of the happiest, men who have lived, it seems to me that Gilbert White, of Selborne, would stand near the head, because of the delight that he found in simply watching the little dramas of nature about him—a delight which he succeeded in transmitting, through his wonderful book, to many generations of his successors on the earth. He wrote only that one little book, and he talked only of birds, bees, wasps, fish, trees, storms, springs, ponds, glow-worms, squirrels—and one old tortoise—but what he wrote will be read with avidity after a million novels have been forgotten.

Consider only the pleasure the instruction, the philosophy and the delight that he got from that tortoise, which he made the most famous turtle in all history and whose shell is preserved, on Gilbert White's account, in the British National Museum.

The tortoise turns up at unexpected junctures in many parts of the book. When you have got a little taste of his quality, you look for him as you look for the appearances of Hamlet in the play. When the dandelions are starring the meadows, up comes the tortoise out of his mud bed. He is covered with a shell that could bear the weight of a cart wheel, and yet he pulls in his head and runs for shelter at the slightest sprinkling of rain! A sultry March day bring him out, like a hibernating fly buzzing round a Christmas hearth, but a touch of returning frost sends him scurrying under ground. A golden day in November plays another trick upon his instinct, and out he comes from the mud, and hobbles to the feet of a good old lady whom he has known for thirty years.

Age Will Bring Wisdom.

But he is only a youth yet, for the chelonian span of life covers a century or more, and if he were older, perhaps he would be wiser, and not let the vagaries of the season fool him.

Gilbert White studies all has movements, gets at all his secrets, admires his sagacity, and wonders at his deliberate movements when he begins to dig his winter bed in a swamp, for, "the motion of its legs is ridiculously slow, little exceeding the hour-hand of a clock!"

White made the acquaintance of this tortoise at a friend's house in Sussex, and whenever he went there, looked him up or saw where he was sleeping. Finally he bought him, dug him out of his hibernaculum, or winter dormitory, hissing with anger at being disturbed, and carried him in a box of earth, 80 miles by post-chaises, and put him in his own garden. It does one's heart good to see how delighted the old naturalist was with his bargain. He thought as much of that tortoise as you might of a pet dog—perhaps more.

Then began a little life drama before an appreciative spectator.

You Can Enjoy Nature.

To the reader's regret, Gilbert White gives only brief glimpses of it in his book. You see the tortoise sitting comfortably under a cabbage leaf when the sun is too hot in midsummer; you catch a sight of him careened up against a southward-facing wall in early autumn to catch every feeble ray of warmth on his back, and, finally, you see him stealing out of the garden by back ways, eluding the eyes of the gardener and of his master, to keep a tryst in some neighbor's field, for Cupid's darts could penetrate even his hard shell!

Everybody might be a Gilbert White in a small way, and it is certain that anybody who tries to be will find the world a pleasanter place to live in and his mind richer for the experience.

THE PRICE HE PAID

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by American-Journal-Examiner.

I SAID I would have my fling,
And do what a young man may;
And I didn't believe a thing
That the parsons have to say.
I didn't believe in a God
That gives us blood like fire,
Then flings us into hell because
We answer the call of desire.

And I said: "Religion is rot,
And the laws of the world are nil;
For the bad man is he who is caught
And cannot foot his bill.
And there is no place called hell;
And heaven is only a truth,
When a man has his way with a maid,
In the fresh keen hour of youth.

"And money can buy us grace,
If it rings on the plate of the church:
And money can neatly erase
Each sign of a sinful smirch."
For I saw men everywhere,
Hotfooting the road of vice;
And women and preachers smiled on them
As long as they paid the price.

So I had my joy of life:
I went the pace of the town;
And then I took me a wife,
And started to settle down.

I had gold enough and to spare
For all of the simple joys
That belong with a house and a home
And a brood of girls and boys

I married a girl with health
And virtue and spotless fame.
I gave in exchange my wealth
And a proud old family name.
And I gave her the love of a heart
Grown sated and sick of sin!
My deal with the devil was all cleaned up,
And the last bill handed in.

She was going to bring me a child,
And when in labor she cried,
With love and fear I was wild—
But now I wish she had died.
For the son she bore me was blind
And crippled and weak and sore!
And his mother was left a wreck.
It was so she settled my score.

I said I must have my fling,
And they knew the path I would go;
Yet no one told me a thing
Of what I needed to know.
Folks talk too much of a soul
From heavenly joys debarred—
And not enough of the babes unborn,
By the sins of their fathers scarred.
