DEFENSE OF FRANK BEGINS

Experts Called to Attack Dr. Harris' Testimony

HUERTA TO DEPORT ENVOY LIND

Mexican President Declares U. S. Representative Must Bear Recognition of New Regime.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7.—John Lind, now on his way to Mexico City as special representative of the United States, will not be received by President Huerta unless he presents credentials from the President of the United States, accompanied by recognition of the present government of Mexico.

Official announcement of this was made to-day by President Huerta. The statement was delivered to Charge O'Shaughnessy at the American Embassy by Manuel Garza Aldape, Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico. It was also sent to Washington and to the powers of Europe.

Lind, Huerta's announcement said, will be expelled from the country as an undesirable alien unless he goes before the Mexican government and explains his official character and intentions or else brings official recognition of the Huerta administration from the Wilson Administration in Washington.

This is the boldest and most belligerent course yet taken by Huerta, and if the Mexican President carries out his threat Mexico will have accomplished what, in the eyes of international usuage, usually constitutes a casus belli.

In accord with the new aggressive policy of the Mexican government a delegation will wait upon Mr. Lind upon his arrival in this city, probably Saturday, and the attitude of the Mexican government toward the United States will be outlined then in unmistakable terms. The United States battleship carrying Mr. Lind is expected at Vera Cruz to-morrow night.

Must Bear Credentials.

The following official statement was issued to the press to-day by Senor Aldape:

The Mexican Department of Foreign Affairs has sent a note to Nelson O'Shaughnessy, charge d'affairs of the United States, stating by order of the President that, if Mr. John Lind, who, the Mexican government is informed, is to come to Mexico intrusted with a mission from President Wilson, does not establish in due manner his official character before the Mexican chancellery, or if he is not the bearer of recognition of the Mexican government by that of the United States, his sojourn in this Republic will not be grateful not satisfactory to this government.

This was the first time that Huerta formally recognized Mr. Lind as an Ambassador from the United States President.

To some extent the action of Huerta has the approval of some of the Americans here because it establishes plainly the position of the Mexican Government. Otherwise the suspense attending the coming of Mr. Lind and the consequences which may follow would only be prolonged.

In addition to coming as a special

Senator Vardaman Advocates Lynching Of Negro Assailants

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Lynching for negroes who commit crimes upon women was unreservedly advocated last night by Senator Vardaman, of Mississippi, in a speech before an audience composed for the most part of women.

Senator Vardaman said that no person with a spark of manhood would want to see a woman who had been the victim of such an attack dragged through the horrors of a court trial.

Speaking of race segregation in street cars, the Senator declared it his belief that many of the crimes of the negroes have their inception as the result of some negro sitting next to a white woman in a street car. He said that if there is objection to segregating the negroes, then he is in favor of segregating the white people and making it a misdemeanor for negroes to infringe on their rights.

Married 7 Months, She Doesn't Know Jealous Spouse Yet

When Recorded Pro Tem. Preston Thursday asked Mrs. R. L. Bradley, No. 70 Bartow street, how long she had known her husband, the young woman smiled and replied:

"I don't know him yet."

Mrs. Bradley explained that she has been married but seven months and that the unfounded jealousy and ungovernable temper of her husband have caused her considerable trouble.

Judge Preston advised Bradley to go into a closet and pray whenever he felt one of his "spells" coming on. He then placed the husband on probation.

'Hedging' Charged to Democratic Senators

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Charging the Democrats with "hedging" and with being doubtful of the success of their tariff program, Senator Warren, of Wyoming, criticised statements made by Democratic Senators to the effect that Republican Senators were in a conspiracy to bring about hard times, during the consideration or following the passage of the pending tariff bill.

Senator Warren said that he had received thousands of letters during the last three months containing expressions of fears for industries of this country should the Democratic tariff bill become law.

Poems of an Accused Murderess Grip Paris

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—So great has become the public demand for the poetical works of Mme. Crespy, who is on trial at Agen charged with murdering Abbe Lachau, a young priest, her sweetheart, that the printers are preparing several new editions. A verdict may be reached in the murder trial to-day.

It has developed that Mme. Crespy fell in love with the young priest while she was confessing indiscretions which resulted in her husband securing a divorce.

$250,000 Gem Theft Clew Is Unearthed

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Declaring his operatives have evidence that jewels worth $250,000 were taken in the recent robbery of the mansion of John E. Hanan at Narragansett Pier, R. I. and that a large part of the loot was recently offered for sale to a New York dealer in gems, Samuel Samwick, head of a detective agency, said to-day that an arrest is expected within 24 hours that will go far toward solving the mystery.

The sale fell through because the person wanted more than the jeweler was willing to pay.

BILL TO AID TEACHERS KILLED

House Defeats Measure Providing Election on Special Levy to Pay Tutors.

Deaf to the appeals of the country schoolteachers of the State, who have not been paid one cent for more than six months, the Georgia House of Representatives on Thursday morning overwhelmingly defeated a constitutional amendment submitting to the voters of the State a proposition for a special tax levy of 1 mill in 1915 and 1-2 mill in 1916.

The revenue derived from both levies was to be added to the common school fund, and would, advocates of the bill claim, have relieved conditions that exist at present under which the State has permitted its schoolteachers to go unpaid.

The vote was: Ayes, 70; nays, 99. It lacked 53 votes of receiving the requisite two-thirds majority.

Called Slap at Slaton.

Besides being a denial of the request of the schoolteachers that they be paid what is due them, the action of the House in defeating the constitutional amendment is construed as a direct slap at Governor Slaton, inasmuch as the additional tax levy is advocated in his platform, and he has made a special request that the bill be passed, allowing the people to decide whether the teachers shall be paid.

The House by its action put itself on record as being opposed to any measure that will provide for the payment of the teachers.

The defeat of the Governor's constitutional amendment Thursday was accomplished by the same combine that defeated his two bills Wednesday afternoon and which has declared it will fight to the bitter end all efforts to pass measures favored by Speaker Burwell and the Governor.

Hardeman Leads Foes.

The fight against the bill was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who declared he was opposed to it because it raised the limit of taxation. Among those who spoke in favor of the bill were Fullbright, of Burke County; Gower, of Crisp; Wall, of Elbert; McMichael, of Marion; Wimberly, of Bibb, and Wheatley, of Sumter.

Prior to the defeat of his constitutional amendment bill Governor Slaton secured the enactment of the first of his measures that the Legislature has seen fit to pass. It was the inheritance tax bill, providing for taxation of legacies ranging from 1 per cent on $5,000 to 6 per cent on $1,000,000. The vote was 135 to 13. An amendment proposd by Greene, of Houston, that all inheritances of whatever amount be taxed was lost.

The House also passed a resolution authorizing the Governor to borrow any amount up to $500,000 necessary to supply the deficit in the State's revenues. The vote was 113 to 0.

Dixie Mayor Shot In Battle in Africa

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 7.—Major Charles S. Young, U. S. A., in charge of the military expedition sent to Liberia by the United States to train the Liberian army in modern warfare, was shot in the right arm and seriously wounded while leading Liberian in a battle with one of the fierce tribes of the interior. A letter from Major Wilson Ballard, of Louisville, told of the fray.

Young has been ordered to his home in Green County until he recovers from the wound and "black fever" which followed.

Butt of Ram Kills Tennessee Woman

COOKEVILLE, TENN., Aug. 7.—Mrs. George Choat, wife of a farmer, is dead to-day, the result of being butted by a vicious ram.

She entered a pasture to herd the sheep when the animal attacked her, striking her with its head with great force.

ROSSER AND ARNOLD SMILING AT THEIR "FIGHTING FACES"

TRIPPE AND GIRL GO TO STOCKADE

Salesman Placed on Probation and Typist Are Arrested Together in Macon.

A. M. Trippe, No. 74 Doane street, a salesman, and Miss Beatrice Renfroe, a young typist, both of whom figured in the police spotlight a few weeks ago, Thursday morning were each sentenced by Recorder Pro Tem. Preston to serve fifty days in the city stockade.

Mrs. Trippe, who is the mother of three small children, was in court, but made no statement.

Trippe and the young typist were brought back to Atlanta from Macon early Thursday by Assistant Probation Officer R. L. Hollingsworth.

When they were arraigned the first time, Trippe promised to forget his affinity and support his wife and children, and was placed on probation. Miss Renfroe was sent to the Martha Home. Two or three nights later, she made her escape and went to Macon. Trippe joined her there a week ago.

MACON, Aug. 7.—A. M. Trippe, an Atlanta traveling man, and Miss Beatrice Renfroe, a stenographer, who have been living together here, were taken to Atlanta this morning by Assistant Probation Officer Hillingsworth.

They were arrested yesterday upon the request of Chief Beavers, of Atlanta.

When confronted by Hollingsworth, Trippe asked: "Well, Hollingsworth, how are my wife and babies?"

Jockey Alleges Rich Clubman Stole Wife

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Charges that his pretty wife was "wickedly stolen" from him were made in a declaration filed to-day by Allen Aubuchon, a jockey, who has won laurels on every big race track in the United States, against E. C. Frady, treasurer of the Cole Motor Car Co., and wealthy Chicago clubman.

Jockey Aubuchon demanded $25,000. He charged that Frady began stealing his wife's affections two years ago

DALTON DISAPPOINTS COURT CROWD; ROSSER CALLS DR. L. W. CHILDS

Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold began an assault Thursday noon upon the structure of evidence erected by the State against Leo M. Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan.

It was the first opporunity the defense had been given to employ offensive tactics in the grim battle for Frank's life.

The testimony of Dr. H. F. Harris, who had just left the stand, was made the object of the first battering attack of Frank's determined lawyers.

As Dr. Harris left the stand at 12 o'clock Solicitor Dorsey announced that the State rested.

Dr. L. W. Childs, a physician and surgeon, immediately was called by the defense.

His first testimony of importance, if it was believed by the jury, served utterly to demolish the most sensational declaration of Dr. Harris, who startled his hearers last Friday by announcing with every appearance of certainty that Mary Phagan came to her death probably within 30 minutes of the time she ate her dinner April 26, positively within 45 minutes. Dr. Harris stated that he knew because the cabbage he found in the gorl's stomach hardly had been affected by the digestive juices.

Cabbage No Key to Time of Death.

Attorney Arnold showed Dr. Childs the specimen of cabbage from the Phagan girl's stomach.

The medical expert examined it and said:

"I have seen cabbage less changed by the digestive juices than that which had been in a person's stomach for 12 hours."

Dr. Childs continued his rebuttal of the testimony of Dr. Harris by saying that it was impossible to tell within hours how long any of the carbo-hydrates, of which cabbage is one, have been in the human stomach.

The digestive processes on carbo-hydrates, he declared, are practically nil while this class of foods is in the stomach. Cabbage, for example, may remain in the stomach for hours with little change from the digestive juices. The digestion, for the most part, occurs after the cabbage has passed into the small intestines, the physician said.

Dr. Harris' estimate, he declared, was only a guess.

He characterized in the same manner Dr. Harris' declaration that the blow Mary Phagan received on the back of the head caused unconsciousness.

Arnold's Hypothetical Question.

Arnold propounded to his witness a hypothetical question based on the circumstances under which Mary Phagan's body was exhumed and examined nine days after burial.

"If, under these circumstances," said Arnold, "there was found a wound on the back of her head which one physician said was 1½ inches long and another said was 2¼ inches, and there was found no fracture of the skull or injury to the brain, and only a drop of blood which exerted no pressure on the brain, would any physician be justified in saying that the person receiving the blow was rendered unconscious?"

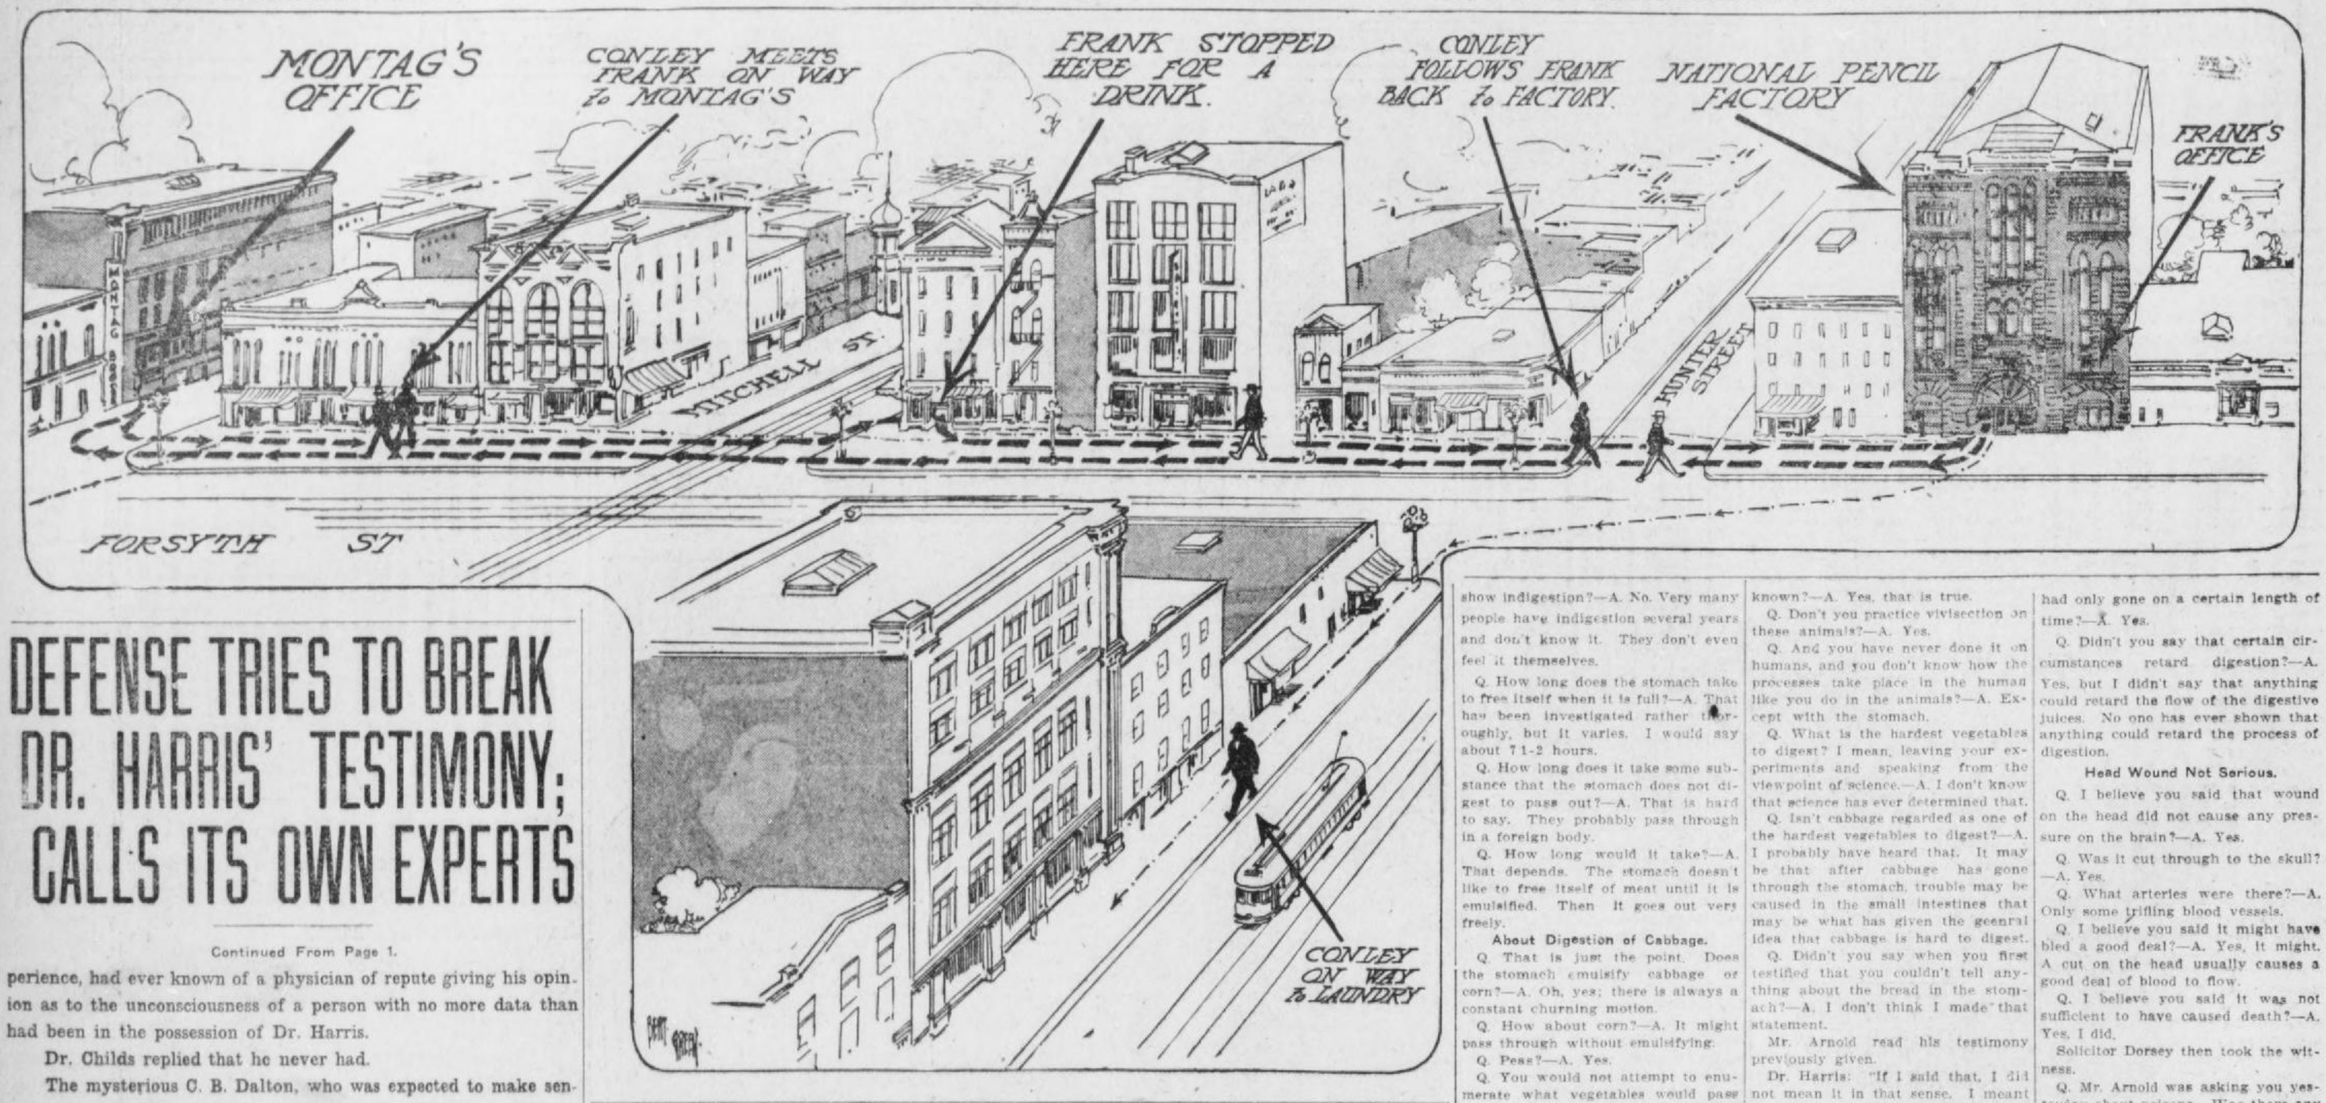

"He would have had to guess one way or the other," said Dr. Childs. "There was absolutely no way to tell whether the blow caused unconsciousness."

Arnold also brought the startling testimony that a wound made from one to three hours after death has the same appearance as a wound shortly before death.

This statement was in direct contradiction of Dr. Harris' testimony and will be used by the defense in strengthening its theory of the manner in which the factory girl came to her death.

After he had reviewed some of the important bits of Dr. Harris' testimony and had put into the record Dr. Childs' testimony in rebuttal, Arnold asked the witness if he, in all his medical experience, had ever known of a physician of repute giving his opinion as to the unconsciousness of a person with no more data than had been in the possession of Dr. Harris.

Dr. Childs replied that he never had.

The mysterious C. B. Dalton, who was expected to make sensational revelations of incidents in which Leo Frank was alleged to have participated in the National Pencil Factory, proved a very tame and commonplace witness when he was called Thursday.

The most that Dalton could say was that, on several of his visits to the factory, he had seen women in Frank's office. He told of no compromising situations. He was not even able to identify the women. He did not know whether or not they were members of Frank's own family. All that he knew was that they did not appear to be stenographers as he never saw them writing.

Dalton, when he was questioned by Luther Rosser, was not even sure of his own birthplace. He thought it was somewhere in Laurens County. He explained his presence by saying that he had gone to the factory with a Miss Daisy Hopkins. He said that he saw Frank in the office with two or three women, and that cool drinks generally were in evidence. On one occasion he said Frank and his visitors were drinking beer.

Detective Rosser on Stand.

Detective Bass Rosser was on the witness stand for a few minutes and was questioned briefly. He testified that when he saw Mrs. Arthur White the Monday after the crime she failed to tell him that she had seen a negro in the factory the Saturday the girl was killed. He said he did not get possession of this information until May 6 or 7. It is the contention of the State that the defense suppressed these facts.

At the conclusion of Detective Rosser's testimony, Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was prepared to rest as soon as Dr. H. F. Harris had completed the testimony which was interrupted by adjournment Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Harris was unable to appear when court opened at 9 o'clock. The prosecution had nothing more to present at 9:45 and a recess was taken until Dr. Harris arrived at 11:10.

Reuben Arnold began at once on a cross-examination of Dr. Harris as soon as the physician took the stand. He forced Dr. Harris to say that there is much uncertainty in drawing conclusions about digestive functions and their time limitations.

Solicitor Dorsey also asked for the submission of the National Pencil Company's cash book and bank book before he rested his case. This was agreed to by Frank's lawyers.

One of the most interesting pieces of evidence for the purpose of demonstration in the possession of the defense is a large-sized model of the National Pencil Company constructed on an accurate scale.

Frank chatted with his wife and mother in the intermission while the court was awaiting Dr. Harris, and a little later engaged in conversation with his attorneys. Dr. Childs entered the court-room and talked several minutes with the defendant.

Mr. Arnold said:

"Further than this witness I don't know what line we will pursue at present."

"Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?" was the first question the Solicitor asked Dalton.

Mr. Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor," he said, "we want it understood that we object to this testimony—all of it."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

"Well, we want our objection recorded," said Rosser.

Dorsey continued his questioning.

"Do you know Leo Frank and Jim Conley?" continued the Solicitor. A. Yes; I know them both.

Q. Were you ever in the factory of the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes; two or three times.

Q. Did you ever go to Frank's office with Miss Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes.

Was in Basement.

Q. Was Frank there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever go down in the basement?—A. Yes.

The witness then pointed out on the diagram the spot he was in in the basement.

Q. Did you ever see Conley on those visits?—A. Yes; and one time I saw another negro, a watchman.

Q. Did Frank know you were in the basement?—A. He knew I was in the factory. I don't know whether he knew I was in the basement or not.

Dorsey then turned the witness over to the defense for the cross-examination.

"When was the first time you saw Frank at the pencil factory?" asked Mr. Rosser.

"Last fall some time."

Q. Where was Frank at that time?—A. At his office.

Q. Who was in there with him?—A. Some ladies.

Q. Were there any other men in there with him?—A. No; he was the only man.

Q. Who was you with?—A. Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Q. Do you know the names of the ladies in the office with Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went to the basement.

Q. Was Miss Daisy with you?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you go to the factory again?—A. Right before Christmas.

Q. Who introduced you to Frank?—A. Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Q. She just said to Mr. Frank, "This is my friend, Mr. Dalton," did she?—A. Yes.

Went to Basement.

Q. You were never in his office after Christmas?—A. No.

Q. When you went into the factory with Miss Daisy, you went down to the basement with her, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go down into the basement?—A. We went down the ladder by the elevator.

Q. Where did you go in the basement?—A. Right to where there were some boxes in the little room in the rear.

Q. Where did you live last year?—A. No. 337 East Hunter street.

Q. Who did you work for?—A. Mr. Heflin, a contractor.

Q. Where did you work after that?—A. With Captain John McGinnis.

Q. What time did you see Frank in his office?—A. Some time between 2 and 3 o'clock.

Q. Were the windows up?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see any curtains?—A. No, but the office was very light.

Q. There were two windows in each office, weren't there?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether there was anyone else in the factory when you saw Mr. Frank?—A. Yes; the negroes were there.

Saw Negro Watchman.

Q. What time at night was it when the night watchman was there?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it a negro watchman?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that this year?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in Walton County?—A. I lived there twenty years.

Q. How long were you away from there?—A. I went to Lawrenceville for about a year.

Q. How long ago?—A. I don't know. I forget just how long ago it was.

Q. Did you ever go with anyone to the pencil factory except Miss Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes. I used to go to the Busy Bee and wait for the factory to close to walk home with the girls.

Q. Can you name the girls?—A. Yes: Miss Laura Atkinson and a Miss Laura Smith, of No. 148 South Pryor street.

Q. Do you go there any more?—A. No; I haven't been to the Busy Bee in a long time.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I don't know.

Q. When you first woke up, where were you?—A. Somewhere in Walton County.

Gave Conley Money.

Q. As a matter of fact, you know where your family lived when you were born, don't you?—A. Somewhere near Lawrenceville.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Did you ever give Jim Conley anything?—A. Sometimes I would give him a quarter and sometimes 50 cents. Sometimes they would have cold drinks, and sometimes they would have beer.

Rosser took the witness again.

Q. When did you see beer there?—A. On Saturday afternoons—I don't remember the dates.

Q. Can you name specifically any time last fall that you went there?—A. Not the day, but it was some time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Frank would have the cold drinks on a waiter in his office.

Can't Give Women's Names.

Q. And that is as definite as you can fix it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know the women besides the ones you name?—A. No.

Q. Can you describe them?—A. No. "Come down."

City Detective S. L. Rosser took the stand.

Q. Since April 26, have you been engaged in this case?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Mrs. Arthur White subsequent to that date?—A. Yes.

Q. At what time?—A. Monday, April 28.

Q. Did she say anything about seeing a negro at the pencil factory Saturday?—A. No.

Q. What was the first time she mentioned to you seeing a negro at the factory?—A. May 6.

"I want to record an objection to that, your honor," said Rosser.

Rosser took the witness.

She Made Statement.

Q. Did you ask her?—A. No; but she made a statement.

Dorsey took the witness on redirect.

Q. Did you take anything to Dr. Claude Smith?—A. Yes; some chips.

Q. Are these the chips?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you make a search of the areaway areound the elevator?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find anything like this (showing the bludgeon alleged to have been found by the Pinkertons)?—A. No.

Q. Would you have found it?—A. Yes.

Attorney Rosser took the witness again.

Q. Don't you know this roller has been in that factory two years?—A. It may have been, but it was not on the first floor when we made our search.

State Wins Ruling.

Q. You made a good search?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know these are the same chips?—A. Yes, I am sure of that.

The witness was excused.

Dorsey addressed the court:

"I don't know whether we tendered that bloody shirt or not. If we did not, I want to tender it now. I also want to enter these chips."

Attorney Rosser:

"They haven't been identified."

"They were identified by Detective Starnes and Chief Beavers," said Dorsey.

Judge Roan ruled that he would let them go to the jury.

Dorsey:

State's Case Nearly Finished.

"Now, I want the cash book and the bank book of the National Pencil Company."

Arnold said they would be furnished.

Dorsey:

"I want it understood as soon as Dr. Harris is able to complete his testimony the State is ready to rest its case."

"Mr. Dorsey," said Arnold, "will you tell Mr. Dalton not to leave. We may want to recall him."

Judge Roan declared a recess until Dr. Harris could reach the court. He said it would be about 10 o'clock.

Dalton Recalled for Moment.

Dorsey recalled the witness.

Q. Were you ever in the pencil factory with Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go to the factory with her?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was Frank?—A. In his office.

Q. Where did you go?—A. In the basement.

Q. Did he know you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Conley know you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. Who else?—A. The night watchman at one time.

Court then had a recess until Dr. H. F. Harris, who was excused from the witness stand Wednesday on account of illness, could arrive in court. The recess lasted for more than an hour. Dr. Harris, when he arrived upon the stand, was questioned upon cross-examination by Attorney Reuben Arnold.

Q. Unfavorable circumstances sometimes retard digestion, don't they?—A. Well, that is a very grave matter, and there is so little data on the subject it is hard to answer.

About External Circumstances.

Q. You would not say then that external circumstances, some undue mental excitement, might delay digestion?—A. I really don't know. There was an old Roman proverb that a person should take a walk after eating. Others say sleeping after a meal aids digestion.

Q. Then there is no set rule for digestion? Everybody is a rule unto themselves?—A. Not altogether. The average normal stomach is about the same in digestion.

Q. There is no indication on the outside of the body that would indicate how far digestion has gone?—A. None whatever.

Q. Don't the pulse or temperature show indigestion?—A. No. Very many people have indigestion several years and don't know it. They don't even feel it themselves.

Q. How long does the stomach take to free itself when it is full?—A. That has been investigated rather thoroughly, but it varies. I would say about 7 1-2 hours.

Q. How long does it take some substance that the stomach does not digest to pass out?—A. That is hard to say. They probably pass through in a foreign body.

Q. How long would it take?—A. That depends. The stomach doesn't like to free itself of meat until it is emulsified. Then it goes out very freely.

About Digestion of Cabbage.

Q. That is just the point. Does the stomach emulsify cabbage or corn?—A. Oh, yes; there is always a constant churning motion.

Q. How about corn?—A. It might pass through without emulsifying.

Q. Peas?—A. Yes.

Q. You would not attempt to enumerate what vegetables would pass through the stomach to the intestines? A. No, I would not.

Q. Is it not a fact that the first knowledge of digestion comes from that Canadian case?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not a fact that the only experiments before that time were made on rabbits and other animals for vegetables, and animals for meat? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any animal that eats everything that man does?—A. Yes, the swine.

Q. Any other?—A. I rather think the cat does.

Q. Well, isn't the wildcat a carnivorous animal strictly?—A. I don't know. I never associated with one.

Q. You will admit that the experiments along this line are very limited with the exception of that Canadian case?—A. Yes.

Processes Not All Understood.

Q. It is practically in its infancy?—A. Well, I would not say that. We are fairly familiar with the various juices and the process of digestion. But there is still much to learn.

Q. Just what part does the mouth and saliva play in connection with the stomach and the gastric juices, and the lower bowels? Is not, this something that is not definitely known?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Don't you practice vivisection on these animals?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have never done it on humans, and you don't know how the processes take place in the human like you do in the animals?—A. Except with the stomach.

Q. What is the hardest vegetables to digest? I mean, leaving your experiments and speaking from the viewpoint of science.—A. I don't know that science has ever determined that.

Q. Isn't cabbage regarded as one of the hardest vegetables to digest?—A. I probably have heard that. It may be that after cabbage has gone through the stomach, trouble may be caused in the small intestines that may be what has given the geenral idea that cabbage is hard to digest.

Q. Didn't you say when you first testified that you couldn't tell anything about the bread in the stomach?—A. I don't think I made that statement.

Mr. Arnold read his testimony previously given.

Dr. Harris: "If I said that, I did not mean it in that sense. I meant that you could tell nothing about it by observing with the naked eye."

Q. You said it was impossible to state absolutely how long that cabbage had been in Mary Phagan's stomach?—A. I meant I could not state within a minute.

Q. Could you tell within two minutes?—A. No, not within 3, or 4, or 5. Probably not within 10 minutes. But I could tell that it was somewhere between 30 and 45 minutes.

Q. Doesn't it all depend on how much digestion is delayed?—A. To an extent.

Q. All you are attempting to say, then, is that the process of digestion had only gone on a certain length of time?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you say that certain circumstances retard digestion?—A. Yes, but I didn't say that anything could retard the flow of the digestive juices. No one has ever shown that anything could retard the process of digestion.

Head Wound Not Serious.

Q. I believe you said that wound on the head did not cause any pressure on the brain?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it cut through to the skull?—A. Yes.

Q. What arteries were there?—A. Only some trifling blood vessels.

Q. I believe you said it might have bled a good deal?—A. Yes, it might. A cut on the head usually causes a good deal of blood to flow.

Q. I believe you said it was not sufficient to have caused death?—A. Yes, I did.

Solicitor Dorsey then took the witness.

Q. Mr. Arnold was asking you yesterday about poisons. Was there any evidence on the mucous membrane of poisons?—A. There could not have been any irritant poisons. Their evidence is always unmistakable.

Dr. Harris was excused.

Dorsey addressed the court: "Your honor, I wish to tender these samples of cabbage as evidence."

Arnold—We want to object to all except that taken from Mary Phagan.

JIM CONLEY, THE EBONY CHEVALIER OF CRIME, IS DARKTOWN'S OWN HERO

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Now that James Conley has been dismissed from the Frank trial, now that he has stood safely the fire of Mr. Rosser's most exhaustive grilling, what of him?

If Frank is convicted, Conley subsequently will be convicted, no doubt, of being an accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder—and that will mean three years, at most, in the penitentiary.

After that—when the Frank trial, more or less, has been forgotten—Conley will be at liberty to come back amongst the people of Atlanta.

Not far from Five Points, a little due east along one of the big thoroughfares meeting there, there is a negro bootblack who now and then, when he is on the job, which frequently he isn't, gives me a "shine" so much to my liking that it brings me back on other days.

He is a sort of Jim Conley negro—at least, he has a smattering of education, an ingratiating air, and is polite, particularly when it pays him to be.

Quite without previous design, I stopped at this negro's stand Wednesday afternoon, and it was not long before he mentioned the famous trial. He having started the conversation, I asked him a few questions—and his replies, given herein in part, rather set me to thinking.

"Complimented on All Sides."

"George," I said—not that I know his name is George, but that it so happens I address negroes unknown of name that way—"what do your friends down on Decatur street think of Jim Conley's story over yonder in the big court? Rather clever, negro, Jim, eh?" said I to this bootblack.

"Well, boss, dat Mr. Rosser ain't made nothing on Jim yit, is he?" replied George.

I ventured the opinion that Mr. Rosser failed, at least, to make Jim out so many different kinds of a liar that his story might not stick in spots.

"Well, boss," continued my bureau of information, "dem niggers down on Decatur street, dey ain't talking of nothing but Jim Conley. He's de most talked about nigger anywhere, I guess. I hears him complimented on all sides!"

"In other words, Jim's a sort of hero along Decatur street nowadays?" said I.

"Yassir, dat's it—Jim's a hero. Niggers all talking about him. He done got de best of de smartest of 'um. Nobody can't fool er nigger like Jim!"

Hero Around "Butt In" Bar.

I presume, too, that something of the same condition prevails over on Peters street—particularly in the neighborhood of the "Butt In" bar over there.

You remember the "Butt In" boozorium in Peters street is the one wherein Conley filled up rather freely on beer, the morning of the Phagan murder, also on beer mixed with wine.

The "Butt In", it also will be recalled, is where Conley obtained a "double-header" beer—"double-headers" being the order of the day always in the "Butt In;" there being, perhaps, some subtly humorous connection between "Butt In" and "double-header!"

It Is Not Improbable.

It is not improbable that many a foaming "double-header" has been dumped into dusky citizens along the way of the "Butt In" of late—in honor of Jim, and the way he "done got de best of de smartest of um, over dar in de big court!"

If Jim Conley ever gets back to Decatur street, and hereafter he be permitted to tread the primrose way of the "Butt In" bar over on Peters, in all probability the drinks will not cost him anything for many days.

The proprietor of the "Butt In" doubtless right now would scorn to take Mr. Conley's honest money—the violent presumption being that Jim ever had, or ever will have, that kind of money—even for "double-headers."

Jim has just passed through the fire. And he got through, his reputation more or less damaged for truthfulness, to be sure, but not utterly shattered beyond patching up in such wise that it might be worked one more time, at least, if necessary.

True, Conley already had been in jail seven times that he admits of, and several times more that he can not recall precisely, and that had served to make him something of a hero in darkest Darktown; but Jim's involuntary residence in durance vile heretofore has been in police circles and mere county chaingangs exclusively. So that didn't make him a particularly big hero—albeit it made him a hero not altogether to be sneezed at!

Now, however, Jim has been in "de big court," tangled all up in a murder case, suspected by some of being a principal to the murder, indeed, but cleverly side-stepping that too deadly peril—and his name has been in all the newspapers hundreds of times, and his picture dozens of times, and before he gets through with it, he will be decorated by the State's majesty in stripes—but the latter not so long that it will seriously inconvenience anybody, particularly Jim!

All in all, Jims' a real hero in darkest Darktown, at last—a real ebony chevalier of crime—and those brethren who frequent the "Butt Ins" and the "Butt Outs," and booze dispensaries of like persuasion will bow down and worship Jim—for, in their philosophy, of such as Jim is the Decatur street "kingdom of heaven."

Ruling Generally Approved.

The general impression seems to be that Judge Roan did the right thing in permitting the Conley story to go to the jury in its entirety, inasmuch as it had gone in deadly part, anyway.

Perhaps the evidence fixing upon Leo Frank another crime than the one he stands charged with under the present indictment was, primarily, inadmissible, but there was no way to relieve the jury of the charge Conley made, and it would have been hardly fair either to the jury, the court and even to the defendant, to cut the story off there.

If the State is able to sustain its terrible charge against Frank, it perhaps is common sense now to let it proceed to the corroborating of Conley, if it can corroborate him.

To have left Conley's charge neither contradicted nor corroborated—that would merely have resulted in its probable corroroboration in the minds of the public, if not elsewhere.

The things Conley said to the Frank jury can not be said and then forgotten.

It would have been folly to have ASKED the jury to forget—it would have been imposing upon it an impossible mental task.

Other Charge as Serious.

If it so be that error was committed in not ruling out the story, a new trial will be granted, on appeal, in the event of Frank's conviction—and the trial next time undoubtedly will proceed without this particular evidence in.

The State can, if it fails to sustain eventually its charge of murder, still move against Frank, if it so elects, in the other direction—which crime, under the Code, is quite as serious as murder.

One may feel the injustice of flinging at Frank, while on trial for murder, another capital charge—still, since the additional charge was admitted, with protest, as an original proposition few people will contend strenuously that the State should not be permitted to proceed to the conclusion of a line of evidence begun without protest.

I have heard Judge Roan's ruling discussed about town last night, and to-day, and I heard few who find fault in it.

Indeed, as matter of simple justice to Frank, no less than to the State—and it will not do to forget that the State has large rights at stake in this matter—it seems common sense and elementary justice that the State, having made its awful charge, be required either to corroborate it or not.

That appears to be the public attitude in the matter.

PROSECUTOR DORSEY SNAPPED IN ACTION

This shows the Solicitor in an argument at the Frank trial.

ROAN'S RULING HEAVY BLOW TO DEFENSE

Judge Declined to Order Out of Record Any of Jim Conley's Testimony.

Judge Roan administered a severe blow to the defense Wednesday when he ruled that all of Conley's story should stand, although portions of it, he acknowledged, would have been inadmissible had objection been made at the time the testimony was offered.

It was a particularly difficult allegation to combat. Unlike many allegations, it was exactly as hard to fight in the event it was false as in case it was founded on fact.

Judge Roan said in regard to the testimony of Dalton that he did not know what it was to be and that he would allow it to be presented so that he might rule on its admissibility as it came up.

Solicitor Dorsey put the final rivet in his case so far as it rested upon the testimony of Conley when at the close of his redirect examination of the negro he brought to light the State's theory of the disposition that had been made of the Phagan girl's mesh bag.

Practically no mention of the mesh bag had been made during the week and a half of the trial. The only reference made to it was in the examination of Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of the slain girl, and of the officers who visited the scene of the crime immediately after police headquarters was called by the negro nightwatchman, Newt Lee.

Tells of Mesh Bag.

Mrs. Coleman testified that Mary left home with the mesh bag in her hand. The detectives and policemen all testified that they were able to find no trace of it either the morning after the crime or in the search that had been conducted since then.

"Did you ever see the murdered girl's mesh bag?" Dorsey asked Conley, just as it appeared that he had finished his questioning.

"Yes, sah, I see it," Conley replied.

"Where was it?"

"It was right on Mr. Frank's desk when I went in there to write the notes."

"Did you see what became of it?"

"Yes, sah; Mr. Frank went and put it in his safe."

Conley left the stand at 11:10 o'clock still sticking to his charge that Leo Frank killed the Phagan girl and that, at Frank's direction, he (Conley) assisted in the disposal of the body. He had been on the stand fifteen and one-half hours and under the grilling cross-examination of Luther Rosser for more than thirteen hours.

Practically the only addition he made to his story as it appeared in his direct examination was his declaration that while he was writing the murder notes Frank took the pencil out of his hand and then an instant later made him rub out the "s" he had written as he spelled out "negros." Conley said he wrote the note at first:

"A long tall black negros did this by hisself."

A long argument over the admissibility of Conley's testimony in regard to Frank's alleged conduct with women previous to the murder of Mary Phagan took place after the jury had been sent from the courtroom at noon. Court recessed before the arguments were concluded, and the debate was resumed in the afternoon.

Reuben Arnold cited opinions from courts in States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but his arguments were unavailing and the decision went against the defense. There was a murmur of applause and a stamping of feet.

Arnold instantly was on his feet with a motion for a mistrial, but he realized at once that the jury was not present and withdrew the motion. He threatened, however, to make a motion that the courtroom be cleared if such a demonstration occurred again.

Dr. Harris Recalled.

Dr. Harris was recalled to complete the testimony which he was giving when he collapsed on the stand the Friday before. He repeated his assertion as to the time Mary Phagan came to her death after eating dinner at her home in Bellwood Saturday shortly before noon.

"I can say with almost absolute certainty," he declared, "that this little girl was killed within 30 or 40 minutes after she ate her meal that day."

He refused, under cross-examination, to change his testimony in the least in respect to the cause of death.

"It was easily apparent that strangulation was the cause," he declared.

"An examination of the lungs was unnecessary and even useless because of the embalming preparation that had been employed. It was plainly evident that the rope had been placed about the girl's neck before death and the deep indentation showed that it was sufficient to choke off her breath and cause death within a brief time."

Although Arnold was unable to make the physician alter the statement of his opinion, he obtained an admission that a blow on the head sufficient to cause death might immediately precede garroting and still the same manifestations of strangulation exist.

Dr. Harris, however, did not believe that the blow on Mary Phagan's head was enough to cause death. He said that the blow was not severe and that, aside from a little spot of blood on the brain which could not have caused any pressure, the brain was entirely normal.

Attorney Arnold in the latter part of the afternoon session engaged in an exhaustive and highly technical examination of the witness in regard to the action of the digestive juices, the percentages, that were present in Mary Phagan's stomach and the tests that were made for poisons.

FORSYTH NEGRO'S CABIN DYNAMITED

John Woolsey Suffers Broken Leg When Blown Through the Roof of House.

CUMMING, Aug. 7.—John Woolsey, the only negro in Forsyth County, was blown out of bed through the roof of his cabin, eight miles north of Cumming, and suffered a broken leg, when dynamite was set off under the house, according to information that has reached Cumming. The dynamiting took place on the farm of Wyley Smith. The dynamiters cut all telephone wires into that part of the county, which prevented the news reaching here sooner. Woolsey was hurried out of the county to Gainesville by Smith.

The negro had moved to the Smith place just a few days ago. He was warned to leave the county and Smith was warned to get rid of him. Neither took heed. The dynamiting resulted. The cabin occupied by Woolsey was completely wrecked.

Industrial Workers of the World planning the strike, contemplates calling out the dock workers at Two Harbors, Mich.; Superior, Wis.; Ashland, Wis.; Marquette, Mich., and Escanaba, Mich.

MOVE TEST FARM, COMMITTEES ASK

Senate and House Bodies in Joint Meeting Agree to Favor the Ellis Bill.

The bill introduced into the House by Representative Ellis of Tift County to remove the Georgia Experiment Station from Griffin, Ga., to the Southern part of the State, will be recommended for passage by both the Senate Committee on Agriculture and the House Committee No. 2 on Agriculture.

The favorable report on the bill was prepared at a joint meeting of the committees Wednesday afternoon. The bill has been favorably considered once by the Senate Committee, which later voted to reconsider its action when pressure was brought to bear. The House Committee had not acted prior to the Wednesday meeting.

The report is expected to precipitate a fight in the House. It is regarded as unlikely that any definite action on the bill will be taken at this session of the Legislature. Members of the General Assembly who advocate Griffin as the place for the station have been active in their fight on the bill.

The meeting Wednesday was attended by many adherents of Griffin, and a number of those who want the station removed to South Georgia, as well as several who desire its removal to Athens.

Among those who addressed the meeting were Dr. A. C. True, of the Agricultural Department of Washington, who has supervision over all State experiment stations, and Commissioner of Agriculture J. D. Price. Dr. True said the removal of the station would not affect the Federal appropriation. Mr. Price advocated the present location.

Battlefield of 1763 To Be Memorial Park

GREENSBURG, PA., Aug. 7.—At the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the battle of Bushy Run, one of the principal engagements of the French and Indian war here, a movement was started to obtain 25 acres of the famous battlefield for a memorial park, and to erect a bronze statue with a large bronze tablet to Colonel Henry Bouquet.

The historical and patriotic societies of Pennsylvania are behind the movement.

TRIAL AS VARIED AS VAUDEVILLE EXHIBITION

Every Change in Chromatic Scale Rung — All Georgia Types Seen in Court.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Every change in the chromatic scale has been rung in the Frank trial. With the single exception of the skyrocket oratory that will mark the last stage of the trial, everything that has ever been done in the trial of a criminal case has been enacted in the fight to fix on the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory the guilt of the murder of Mary Phagan.

There has been comedy. There has been tragedy. There has been periods as dull as a hookworm victim. There have been occasions as startling as the feat of a circus daredevil. There have been pathos and performances worthy of a clown. The somber has been mixed with the gay until the entire trial seems the work of a futurist artist who has had a hard night with the drinking cups before he started the painting.

Jim Conley was on the stand something like sixteen hours. His story was a ragtime composition, with the weirdest syncopations, and then came Dr. Harris right on his heels and gave evidence full of soundness and learnedness. To the spectators it seemed that they had just heard "Alexander's Ragtime Band" played and then a Bach fugue for an encore.

One Simple, Other Complex.

Conley's story was as simple in words as "Old Black Joe," while Dr. Harris' was as complex as a Wagnerian overture.

Jim Conley spoke in terms of the street, of the near-beer saloon, of the blind alley crap game. Dr. Harris spoke in the language of the laboratory and the library.

Jim Conley could not enunciate a word of more than one syllable. Dr. Harris was as polysyllabic as the word "heterogeneous." And the spectators had to gasp after the shift.

Conley's story, while it was as full of contradictions as a hive is of bees, was as easy to understand as a baby's "da-da" is to a fond parent. Dr. Harris evidence was as loaded with medical lore as a physician's library.

And, although it seems impossible, there is more still to come. Before the trial has ended practically every type that Georgia knows will have been paraded in the courtroom.

Types Seen in Court.

Right now, the spectators have seen the scholarly defendant whose court attitude is still an enigma—as unsolvable as the crime with which he is charged. There are his loving mother and his devoted wife.

Here is the massive figure of Luther Rosser, attacking every opponent with a battleax ferocity. Here is the erudite Arnold, with rapier thrusts to send in the death blow when the enemy is beaten down by the more direct assault of his ally.

Here is the young Solicitor, struggling against tremendous odds, upsetting tradition by fighting Rosser with his own weapons, burning Arnold with his own fire.

Here is his learned associate, quick to grasp a point as a drowning man is a straw.

Here are factory girls and business men. Here are the comical figure of Newt Lee and the sinister figure of Jim Conley. Here are the learned scientist and the sleuth hound.

It seems that everything has been shown, but still there will be more. It is impossible that Rosser and Arnold will not show something just as novel and bizarre as the State has presented.

Color for a Dickens.

There is Mincey to come with his startling story—Mincey, as typical of the red clay soil of the Cracker country as peanuts and watermelons; Mincey, so typically the country school teacher that he will have to carry a rod of hickory and a blueback speller to the stand to feel at home while he is giving his evidence.

And there will be a lot more.

Tragic as is the trial, it has been Atlanta's greatest vaudeville show. Dickens could have spent one week in Judge Roan's courtroom and written four novels around the types he saw listening to and playing parts in the drama that hovers around the life and death of a little girl of the factory.

FRANK DEFENSE OPENS WITH ATTACK ON DR. HARRIS' EVIDENCE

Dalton Corroborates Jim Conley's Story of Women Calling at Pencil Factory

OPINIONS AS TO TIME OF GIRL'S DEATH GUESSES, IS DR. CHILDS' TESTIMONY

We don't want to argue it. We just want to be recorded as objecting.

Judge Roan permitted all of the samples to go in.

Solicitor Dorsey asked for the bank book and the cash book of the National Pencil Company. They had not been secured.

Dorsey—We will rest our case, anyway.

The State rested its case exactly at 12 o'clock.

Dr. L. W. Childs, a prominent young surgeon of Atlanta, was the first witness called by the defense.

Attorney Arnold questioned Dr. Childs.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Surgery and general medicine.

Q. Where did you graduate?—A. University of Michigan in 1906.

Q. Where did you practice?—A. I was first assistant at the Michigan University Hospital.

Q. How long have you been in Atlanta?—A. About five years.

Q. A body is found at 3 o'clock in the morning. It is not embalmed until 10 o'clock that morning. It is dug up nine days later and a cut is found in back of the head. There is only a drop of blood found on the skull. There was no pressure on the brain. Could a physician have said whether that blow produced unconsciousness? A. He might hazard a guess. He could not tell.

Calls Opinion Mere Guess.

Q. The presence of a drop of blood would have had nothing to do with it? A. Absolutely nothing. There was no pressure, you said.

Q. No pressure at all.—A. Then its effect was negligible.

Q. Now is there any way for a doctor telling definitely whether or not that blow caused unconsciousness?—A. I should say it would be a guess.

Q. Is it possible to tell whether a wound or cut such as I have described with the appearance of blood was inflicted before or after death?—A. If it was inflicted in from one to three hours after death it would have the appearance of having been inflicted just before death.

Q. Would you say that such a wound as I have described could have been inflicted one hour after death?—A. It would practically be a guess to say so.

Q. Would the fact that this body had been embalmed and buried for nine days add to the difficulties of making an examination or not?—A. It would greatly add to the difficulties.

Q. Have you ever heard of a case on record when an opinion on unconsciousness and the length of time the person was unconscious before death was placed on what data we have?—A. Absolutely no.

Blows Often Cause Death.

Q. Have you heard of cases of blows on the head causing death without fracturing the skull?—A. Yes. I have seen several cases of sandbagging where the person would die of concussion of the brain and there would only be a slight swelling where the blow had been struck.

Q. Then there is absolutely no way of telling the exact result of a blow on the head after a post-mortem held nine days after interment?—A. No.

Q. What class of food does cabbage come in?—A. Carbohydrates.

Q. Are they considered hard to digest?—A. As such they are not, but in cabbage the carbohydrate is mixed with cellulose, a woody fiber on which the digestive juices have practically no effect, therefore, it is very hard.

Q. Look at this sample (Arnold showed the witness the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach). Was that well masticated?—A. Not very well.

Q. Isn't it a fact that cooked cabbage is harder to digest than raw cabbage?—A. Yes; raw cabbage is the easiest of all forms of cabbage to digest.

Cabbage in Digestive State.

Q. What part does the saliva play? A. It acts on the carbohydrates.

Q. What part of the cabbage is the carbohydrates?—A. Seven or eight per cent.

Q. So saliva only affects that part of the cabbage?—A. Yes.

Q. Does the stomach do anything about digesting cabbage?—A. The muscular effect—the churning—might break it up to some extent.

Q. So the juices of the stomach instead of digesting cabbage merely retard it?—A. Yes.

Q. Then where is cabbage really digested?—A. In the small intestines.

Q. How long would it take boiled cabbage to pass out of the stomach? A. About four and one-half hours.

Q. Then when it goes out of the stomach it is really undigested, is it not?—A. Yes. It may pass out of the body entirely in the undigested form.

Digestion Easily Retarded.

Q. Are there not a great many things that retard digestion?—A. Yes, the psychic causes—fright, anger and sudden mental excitement—materially retard it.

Q. Would walking retard it?—A. Yes, if the walking was immediately after the meal, digestion would be retarded. These other causes might totally stop digestion.

Q. Isn't it a fact that you might find substances in a stomach that had laid there quite a while and practically no digestive action had begun?—A. Yes, if the psychic influence had taken place.

Q. Don't stomachs differ as much as minds?—A. Yes. To understand a stomach you must study it as an individual.

Mr. Arnold held up a sample of cabbage taken from the Phagan girl's stomach.

Q. Would you hazard a guess that this cabbage had only been in a stomach one half hour before death—?A. I would not.

Q. Why?—A. For the reasons I have stated. The cause of the psychic influences—I know not of—that might have been brought to bear and because of the varying effects of stomachs on such a substance.

Denies Accurate Opinions.

Q. Do you think a doctor could give an accurate scientific opinion by making such a statement?—A. I do not.

Q. How long would you say it was possible for cabbage like this to stay in the stomach?—A. I have seen cabbage less digested than that which had been in the stomach for twelve hours.

Q. When the process of digestion begins, it begins very slowly, doesn't it?—A. Yes, it is really indeterminate. It has not advanced very far when the food goes to the stomach.

Q. How long would it take wheat bread?—A. I would say about two and one-half hours.

Q. Then solids like cabbage and wheat bread would be at least two and one-half hours passing out of the stomach, would they not?—A. Yes.

At this point court was adjourned until 2 o'clock.

TRIAL EXPERTS CONFLICT ON TIME OF GIRL'S DEATH

Here is a sample of the testimony of Dr. Harris, for the State, given Wednesday afternoon, and conflicting evidence given for th edefense by Dr. Child's on Thursday:

Dr. Harris said:

"I want to state that the amount of secretive juice in this stomach was considerably less than would have collected in an hour. The hydrochloride acid had not been in long enough to become free. The amount of confined hydroclordic was 32 degrees. In a normal stomach, the amount would have been 55 or 60 degrees. It was just about the amount one would have supposed to have collected in half an hour or 35 to 40 minutes. I can say with absolute certainty that she was unconscious within 30 or 40 minutes after she ate the cabbage."

Shortly after the defense opened Mr. Arnold held up a sample of cabbage taken from the Phagan girl's stomach.

Q. Would you hazard a guess that this cabbage had only been in a stomach one-half hour before death?—A. I would not.

Q. Why?—A. For the reasons I have stated. The cause of the psychic influences I know not of that might have been brought to bear and because of the varying effects of stomachs on such a substance.

Q. Do you think a doctor could give an accurate scientific opinion by making such a statement?—A. I do not.

CLARK ATTACKS WILSON'S POLICY

Senate Hears Administration Severely Criticised for Mexican Situation.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Hot debate on the attitude of the Wilson Administration toward Mexico broke out in the Senate to-day when Senator Clarke, of Wyoming, called up his resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate the condition of Americans in Mexico and report definite facts to the Senate.

Senator Bacon asked that the resolution be referred to the Foreign Relations Committee. "I can not, in view of present conditions, consent," said Senator Clarke. "The Senate has been trying for years to get information. The people want to know something definite. For months past we have had a standing army of from 15,000 to 20,000 men on the border as evidence of disturbed conditions, yet neither the present nor the past Administration has given us information. Our only information comes through newspapers or from friends in Mexico. Every Senator here has received telegrams or letters from friends in Mexico.

"The Administration has a policy, probably, but we do not know what it is. The President has sent his third confidential agent to Mexico, but the Senate has no information whatever. The Senate ought to investigate on its own initiative just as other departments have investigated. Why shouldn't we have information and why not have had it long ago? If we had had it there are American citizens who would be alive to-day, and there are hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of American property which would not have been destroyed. No question is more important before the United States to-day than the condition of its citizens abroad. No man is now so poor as he who owes allegiance to America. We have had the humiliating report that our citizens abroad have appealed to other Ambassadors for protection."

Senator Bacon declared that the Clarke resolution should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations before the Senate acted on it.

"I don't wish to go into the Mexican situation at this time," said Senator Bacon. "It would not be to the best interests of the country. Time will come when we must go into conditions in Mexico, but this Mexican question will not be settled in a day or in a week or in a much longer time, and Senators will have an opportunity later to express themselves. We stand in the face of an unspeakable danger. We desire peace in Mexico and an orderly government set up there, and Americans safeguarded. There are two ways in which this may be brought about, if we are to take a hand in it. One way is to attempt, through peaceful measures, to bring about an orderly government, and the other way by the strong arm. Who will say that the latter way should not be the very last to be resorted to by the United States?

"The present purpose of the Administration is to endeavor to bring about the best results through peaceful measures."

Judge Cooper, Noted In Alabama, Dies

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 7.—W. H. Cooper, Probate Judge of Calhoun County, died in a Birmingham hospital Thursday morning, following an operation for cancer of the stomach. The body will be brought back here for burial.

Judge Cooper's ancestors came over in the Phoenix with Oglethorpe and the family has long been active in affairs in Alabama and Georgia. Both Judge Cooper and his father were members of the Alabama Legislature.

Governor O'Neal will appoint Judge Cooper's successor. He was elected last year over J. J. Arnold, who was appointed while a member of the Legislature by the Governor to succeed E. F. Crook, who resigned on account of illness.

FALLS 3 STORIES IN SLEEP.

CHARLESTON, Aug. 7.—Neal Rowe, a plumber, dreamed that his wife asked him to get her a drink of water. He seized a convenient jar and walked out of a third story window, falling to the yard below. His head was injured, but otherwise he was unhurt.

CAN'T REBUILD COMPRESS.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 7.—The Riverside Compress will be unable to rebuild in time to do any business this year. At least this is the opinion of L. G. Doughty, president of the $100,000 concern which was burned to the ground here yesterday.

Light Money Causes Reduction of Fines

EUFAULA, Aug. 7.—The tight money market is providing a boon to offenders in the city police court. In eight cases this morning Mayor Mercey cut the fines as previously assessed practically in half.

"Money is too scarce just now to place fines at the same figures as during the winter," said the Mayor as he cut them down as low as $2.70.

CARPENTER KNOCKS OUT WILLIAMS IN FOURTH

VICHY, FRANCE, Aug. 7.—Georges Carpentier, the light heavyweight champion of France, to-day knocked out Williams, an English heavyweight, in the fourth round.

Carpentier is considering a bout with Jack Johnson, the negro heavyweight champion of the world, who recently left the United States after he had been convicted of white slavery.

Carpentier said to-day that he would probably meet Johnson if the inducements were sufficiently large.

SCHOOL CHANGES URGED.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 7.—Advocating increased school facilities on Rose Hill and in the northern part of the city in general, and suggesting the present High School building be turned into a grade school and an academic high school established on the grounds of the Columbus Industrial High School, the report of the president of the Board of Trustees of the Columbus Public Schools has been sent to Council.

RIDGE STOPS WILSON.

NEW LONDON, CONN., Aug. 7.—Danny Ridge, of New York, knocked out Billy Wilson in the fifth round of a scheduled ten-round bout here last night.

Indictment Found in Postal Fraud Case

GADSDEN, Aug. 7.—The Federal Grand Jury to-day returned a true bill against E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne oil promoter, for using the mail to defraud. There are 47 counts.

Whether Drew will be tried at this term of court is to be determined at the completion of the session to-day.

The indictment was returned in a partial report of the Grand Jury, that body not yet having completed its work. A mistrial resulted in the case of Oscar Ponder, charged with violating the white slave act.

RITCHIE IS LOSING PRESTIGE BY POLICY

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7.—Willie Ritchie has lost much of his following here and there are no few fans who are of the belief now that Billy Nolan spoke the truth when he declared that Ritchie would not tackle tough game unless forced into it.

The champion's unwillingness to take on Tommy Murphy and his acceptance of Freddie Welsh instead, and in a strange land, has caused this belief to win favor.

WHITE SOX IN FOR A $6,000 PITCHER NOW

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Rankin Johnson, star pitcher of the Syracuse club will be sold to the Chicago White Sox within the next 48 hours. It is understood that the sale price is $6,000. Other clubs are after him.

SENATE REFUSES TO RECONSIDER MANSION SALE

President Anderson Casts Deciding Vote—Bills Abolishing Atlanta J. P. Courts Passed.

The Georgia Senate refused Thursday morning after a heated debate to reconsider the Stark bill providing for the appointment of a commissioner to dispose of the Governor's Mansion; agreed to reconsider the joint resolution looking to the release of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, which was defeated Wednesday afternoon, and passed two bills of importance, the first providing for the election of United States Senators by the people so as to cnform with the Federal amendment, and the second making the wife a competent but not compelable witness against the husband.

The effort to have the Senate reconsider its action in defeating the bill looking to the disposition of the Governor's Mansion precipitated debate even sicier than that indulged in Wednesday afternoon.

Senator McGregor, of the Nineteenth, created a sensation when he charged that the "Andrew Carnegie of the South" had bought up all the property in the neighborhood of the Governor's Mansion and now evidently wanted that.

Anderson Breaks Tie.

"I don't want to see one man buy up the whole State of Georgia," he said.

The proposed commission, consisting of the Governor, the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, three Representatives and two Senators, the Senator declared further, was composed of human beings, "and human being are always susceptible to influence," he added.

The motion to reconsider was finally lost 22 to 21, President Anderson breaking the tie by voting against the measure, inasmuch as he was one of the members of the proposed commission.

The motion to reconsider the Western and Atlantic Railroad lease resolution was passed unanimously by the Senate, and, upon motion of Senator Sweat, author of the original bill, was recommended to the General Judiciary Committee.

In addition to the two general bills the Senate Thursday morning passed two important House bills. One provided for the creation of a municipal court in Atlanta by abolishing the present justice courts, justices of the peace and constables, and the other raises the tax on corporations.

State Farm Removal Opposed.

According to Senator Miller, of the Finance Committee, the State Treasury will receive approximately $48,000 more than it now receives by this bill. A companion House bill providing for the increase in the tax on bottling beverages was also passed.

Senator Hule's bill providing for an increase of State Senatorial Districts, adding sixteen Senators to the present membership, was being debated when the Senate adjourned at 1 o'clock.

The Senate Agricultural Committee Thursday reported unfavorably on the bill providing for the removal of the experiment station from Griffin.

Among the new bills introduced in the Senate Thursday morning was one by Senator Elkins, of the Fifteenth, providing for the protection of birds and fish.

Alderman Accused Of Wasting Funds

COLUMBUS, Aug. 7.—A mild sensation was created in the semi-monthly meeting of Girard Council, when Mayor Marchant announced he had excused Alderman Tillman from further service on the Street Committee, because he had undertaken a job that would cost the city $1,000 more than necessary, because he had not taken the precaution to get competitive prices.

The charge of Mayor Marchant brought forth a tart reply from Alderman Tillman.

TELEGRAPHER BANKRUPT.

Allen C. Travis, a telegrapher, Thursday filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy. He admitted liabilities of $479.13, with no assets.

K. of C. Vote Not to Move Headquarters

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—The Knights of Columbus at the thirty-first annual convention to-day voted down the plan to remove the national headquarters of the order from New Haven, Conn., to Washington.

Those who favored the plan declared that, if the headquarters were moved, a $1,000,000 home would be erected at the National Capital.

Barrow Appointed Customs Collector

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The President to-day sent to the Senate the following nominations:

Madison R. Smith, of Missouri, to be Minister to Haiti, and David C. Barrow, Jr., of Georgia, to be Collector of Customs for the District of Georgia.

REAPER BLADE SLASHES MAN.

ANNISTON, Aug. 7.—Lee Wells, a merchant of Anniston, Ala., was seriously injured yesterday by a mowing machine being operated on the farm of his brother, W. L. Wells, near here. He was stading near when a team took fright, jerking the blades against his leg, almost severing it.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

We have in our possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that we think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So we have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write us for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and we are convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

We think we owe it to our fellowmen to send them a copy in confidence, so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop dragging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what we believe is the quickest acting restorative, upbuilding SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quickly and quickly. Just drop us a line like this: Interstate Remedy Co., 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and we will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but we send it entirely free.

CABAL TO BLOCK SLATON TAX ACT IS CHARGED TO 'DRYS' AND REFORM FOES

The "dry" members of the House of Representatives and those members who oppose the enactment of tax reform measures have formed a combine to defeat all bills introduced or favored by Speaker Burwell, because the Speaker ruled that the resolution of Mr. Kidd, of Baker, ordering the Temperance Committee to report the Hixon-Searcy (Webb) bill back to the House was out of order Wednesday morning, after Wohlwender, of Muscogee, had held up the business of the House for an entire day with a filibuster.

The formation of the combine is virtually a defiance of Governor John M. Slaton and a refusal to accede to his wishes that tax reform measures and bills putting the taxation system of the State on a business basis be passed. It is a dare to the Governor to veto the House appropriation bill or call an extra session, both of which the Governor has said he will do if the House does not enact tax reform measures or keep its appropriations within the estimated revenues of the State.

Plan to Resurrect Bill.

In addition to trying to defeat the bills of Speaker Burwell and Governor Slaton, the combine will make every effort possible to resurrect the Hixon-Searcy Senate bill from the pigeonhole to which it has been consigned by the Temperance Committee. Mr. Kidd, the apparent author of the resolution which met such an inglorious finish Wednesday morning, declared that he will try to introduce his resolution at the first opportunity.

"We intend to try in every way possible to get the bill out of the committee and before the House at this session," said Mr. Kidd. "I intend to offer my resolution again, and if I can not do that we will try to find some other means of combating the enemies of the bill. We were not treated right by the Speaker when he ruled my resolution out of order. We are prepared to fight for our rights, and if the bill can not come up for the consideration of this House there are a lot of other measures that will receive scant consideration at the hands of the friends of the measure.

Organized Fight on Burwell.

"We intend to defeat every measure offered or favored by Speaker Burwell or the men who aided in the defeat of the resolution ordering the Temperance Committee to report back the Hixon-Searcy bill. Burwell's bills have no chance of passing this House during the present session. I have nothing personally against any of the Speaker's bills, but we are going to get even for the treatment we got during the consideration of my resolution and for not being given a chance to pass, or at least attempt to pass, the Webb bill that passed the Senate."

The combination of the "dry" forces and those opposed to tax revision was formed the day before the introduction of Mr. Kidd's resolution. Mr. Wohlwender, who started and carried through a successful filibuster, declared Wednesday that the resolution was drawn up by Barry Wright, of Floyd County, one of the prohibition leaders. It was the result of a combination formed at that time between Mr. Wright and other temperance leaders and Messrs. Stovall, of Elbert; Sheppard, of Sumter, and other members who have consistently opposed tax reform measures.

Unite Against Tax Reform.

It was agreed, it is generally understood, that the enemies of tax reform were to support the Kidd resolution on condition that the prohibition members aid them in their efforts to prevent the passage of tax bills. The idea was this:

If the Hixon-Searcy bill were brought out from the committee and consideration of it begun by the House, it would precipitate a "wet" and "dry" fight pure and simple. Debate would naturally wax fast and furious, and the members who oppose tax reform measures figured that the discussion of the bill would occupy the time of the House until adjournment, or at least create such a spirit of unrest and antagonism that the ranks of the tax reformers would be broken.

Then, when Speaker Burwell ruled the Kidd resolution out of order on the grounds that it asked a physical impossibility of the Temperance Committee, the strength of the combine was directed against the presiding officer of the House and his bills, and the bills of others that he favored, and the bills of the other members who opposed the resolution.

Controls Half of House.

The combine at present controls probably half the votes of the House, and renders impossible the passage of any measure that requires a two-thirds vote, and makes exceedingly difficult the passage of any measure requiring even a bare majority. Wednesday afternoon the combine displayed strength enough to defeat two of Speaker Burwell's bills, both constitutional amendments requiring a two-thirds majority to carry. They were administration bills, and the word has been passed among the members of the House that Governor Slaton favored them and desired that they be enacted. Both were overwhelmingly defeated.

The first bill to feel the strength of the combine was Burwell's measure submitting to the qualified voters of the State a proposition to amend the constitution so that the school levy of any one year should not exceed 2 1-2 mills, in addition to the regular school fund provided by the Constitution.

Two of His Measures Beaten.

Though the Speaker himself took the floor and explained the purpose of the bill—that it was merely one of a series of bills designed to place the State on a sound business basis—the bill was defeated by a vote of 106 to 67, lacking by 17 votes the necessary two-thirds majority. The other administration bill, a companion bill to the one defeated first, submitted a proposition that the annual levy for pensions should not exceed 1 1-2 mills. It was defeated, the vote being 79 to 79. It lacked 44 votes of having a two-thirds majority.

Unless the combine can be broken, the result will be that little or no legislation of importance will be enacted during the balance of the session. It means that the Legislature, having already attained the name by doing less than any Legislature in years, will go down in history as a Legislature that did absolutely nothing of importance.

Want to Live Long? Tackle Hardships

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Hardships cause long life, Lord Strathcona, the "grand old man of England and Canada," who celebrated his 93d birthday yesterday, declared so to-day.

"No man's life has been filled with more hardships than mine," he declared, "and yet I am happy and healthy and believe that I will live to be 100. My early experiences in Canada were filled with the hardest kind of work, and I have never gone out of my way to avoid stress, nor distress, either, for that matter.

Stern Policewoman Makes Masher Move

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—"Policeman" Alice Clements, one of the ten newly appointed women police officers, today reported the first police duty any of the ten have performed. She drove a "masher" from a street corner where he was annoying passing women and girls.

Display of her police star and a threat to arrest him if he did not obey her order to move on were sufficient to urge the man from the corner.

Bulgars Prepare To Turn on Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 7.—A third war is imminent in the Balkans, according to a report which was current here to-day during the final stages of the peace conference. A telegram from Sofia intimated strongly that Bulgaria would independently declare war on Turkey after her army is relieved of present operations against her former allies.

Dreams He's in War And Shoots Himself

WARREN, OHIO, Aug. 7.—While dreaming about a Balkan war battle, witnessed in a moving picture theater early in the evening, William H. Grace early to-day reached under his pillow, secured his loaded revolver and shot and killed himself.

Mrs. Grace said her husband had been muttering in his sleep about the Balkan war.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

On Face and Head. Was Very Disfigured. Hair Fell Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Falmouth, Ky. — "Two years ago I was troubled with skin and scalp troubles. I would have pimples that would break out and form sores on my face and head with terrible itching. The eczema on my face and head itched and burned and when I scratched it, it made sores and I was very disfigured for the time being. My head became so sore I could not touch it with a comb; it became a mass of sores. My hair fell out gradually.

"After trying several remedies without much benefit a friend that had been cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment told me and I decided to try them. I was afflicted about a year before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after using them three weeks I was getting better and in less than three months, after using eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and five boxes of Cuticura Ointment, I was completely cured of eczema." (Signed) Frank Vastine, Dec. 12, 1912.

If you wish a skin clear of pimples, blackheads and other annoying eruptions, hands soft and white, hair live and glossy, and scalp free from dandruff and itching, begin to-day the regular use of Cuticura Soap for the toilet, bath and shampoo, assisted by occasional light applications of Cuticura Ointment. No other method is so agreeable or economical. Sold everywhere. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Bullard Bound Over As Slayer of Spain

WAYCROSS, Aug. 7.—Following a long hearing before Justice C. H. Smith, Tom Bullard, 20 years old, held for the murder of Mack Spain, near Waycross, a month ago, was bound over to-day for action by the Grand Jury. One of the witnesses testified that Bullard tried to get him to kill Spain. The defense contended that the remark was made in fun.

The plea of suicide was not introduced but probably will figure in Bullard's trial if he is indicted by the Grand Jury.

CAFE ORDER ENDS BUBBLE ROMANCE

Vain Longing for Filet Mignon Causes Rich Paul Picard's Bride to File Suit.

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—The iridescent bubble of romance in the whirlwind courtship and marriage of Paul Picard, Jr., and Miss Stella Griffin was punctured by a quarrel over an order of filet mignon and an extra charge of 30 cents on the bride's dinner check. To-day Mrs. Picard employed an attorney to file suit for divorce.

Two weeks ago at the Hotel Knickerbocker in New York the couple met. They went to a baseball game at the Polo Grounds. Miss Griffin bet on the Giants and won. The next day they were married.

Coming to Chicago Picard, Jr., and his bride went to the fashionable Hotel Virginia, and Paul Picard, Sr., installed them in the adjoining suite. For years the parents of Paul, Jr., have been socially prominent in Chicago. Their wealth originated in France. Not long ago Paul Picard, Jr., inherited a considerable fortune from a French grandfather.

Mrs. Paul Picard, Jr., said her husband was sober the first two nights after their marriage. Since then, she said, he has not been free from the influence of liquor. She said she, her husband and his parents were eating the 75-cent table de hote dinner of the hotel when she had a craving for filet mignon. It was not on the bill of fare. It cost 30 cents extra.

The elder Picard, she said, refused to pay the extra charge and humiliated her. That was the final straw, she said.

Life of U. S. Rifles Is 10 Years, Say Experts

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The present model of rifle used by the United States should have a life of usefulness at least ten years, in the opinion of ordnance officers and a determined effort is being made to prevent the condemnation of thousands of rifles that are turned in as worn out when they are really serviceable.

A circular issued to-day declares that one of these rifles should be capable of firing 8,000 to 13,000 rounds before becoming so worn as to become inaccurate.

Atlanta Team Defeats Soldiers by Score of 2 to 1 in First Match of Sport De Luxe.

With nearly 1,000 pretty girls looking on and applauding, polo, the game de luxe of society, was given its Atlanta premiere at Fort McPherson Wednesday afternoon, and Thursday it was the all-absorbing topic of conversation among the society folk, especially the younger ones, who were thrilled with the riding and dash of the players.

The crowd that saw the Atlanta team defeat the Fort McPherson team, 2 to 1, was one of the largest that has ever been on the parade grounds at the army post. Scores of automobiles lined the sides of the playing field, and a tally-ho filled with hilarious young people added color and gayety to the scene.

The preliminaries, a tug of war on horses and wrestling on horseback, thrilled the spectators. Eight privates, four on a side, engaged in the tug of war. No saddles were used. Private Veotick, Todd, Purdue and Houston dragged Privates Flynn, Williams, Pryde and Reynolds from their horses three times in succession.

Wrestling Bouts Exciting.

The same men engaged in the wrestling on horseback. The contest between Todd and Reynolds was long and strenuous. Purdue and Flynn were evenly matched and it was nip and tuck all the way through. The match between George Veotick and John Pryle was applauded warmly. Pryle finally threw his adversary. At one time their horses galloped the entire length of the field while the wrestlers struggled.

Owing to some misunderstanding, four of the polo contestants failed to appear and the game was called at 4:30 with two men on a side instead of four. J. O. Seamon and F. A. Savage represented Atlanta, while T. C. Miller and Milton Wise represented Fort McPherson. After ten minutes of strenuous play the Atlanta team succeeded in driving the ball through the fort goal twice in quick succession. Not long afterward Milton Wise scored for the Fort.

More Matches Are Planned.

Dr. John A. McLeay, who refereed the game, stated that the exhibition was merely for the purpose of giving Atlanta a sample of what real polo would be like.

"The players are a little out of practice," said he, "but after the newness wears off should be able to give a better account of themselves."

No admission was charged, as this is against the law when Government property is used. It is expected that more games will be arranged.

Shiny Berlin Streets Amaze U. S. Tourists

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, Aug. 7.—American tourists here have succumbed to the cleanliness of Berlin, which they believe is unsurpassed.

"When I rode over the asphalt pavements the night I arrived," said one to-day, "I thought they were glass, so shiny and smoth were they."

The visitors also are impressed with the power-driven street cleaners, which flush and then wipe the streets, making them as clean as a kitchen floor.

Smokes in Dynamite Warehouse-That's All

OSYKA, MISS., Aug. 7.—The entire town of Osyka was shaken, Sid Taylor, 18 years old, was blown to pieces and three other persons were hurt by the explosion of 200 pounds of dynamite to-day.

Taylor entered a warehouse with a lighted cigarette in his mouth. One of his legs was found nearly a quarter of a mile away.

TRADE IS CALLED GREAT POWER FOR UPLIFT

Dixie Merchants Hear Stirring Addresses—Organization and Advertising Emphasized.

Business is a developer of character; business is a science; the great rewards of the future are for business men, and to them the world must look for the economic development which shall eradicate poverty, disease and crime.

These are the messages given by the speakers at the Southern Merchants' Convention Thursday.

It was the second day's session and Wednesday was a holiday for the delegates. Thursday night, at the Piedmont Driving Club, a reception will be held, the delegates going out in special cars which leave from the Equitable Building.

There will be another meeting Friday at which store management will be the theme.

Delegates are in Atlanta from Georgia, the Carolinas, Alabama and Florida. Key West men are the "travelers" of the gathering, having come the greatest distance.

Commerce Builds Character.

W. W. Orr, the first speaker on Thursday, lauded commerce as the means of developing the highest type of character and the keenest intellect. He cited Marshall Field, Harry Selfridge, John Wanamaker and John B. Stetson as examples, and who gave generously of their time, money and thought for aiding the uplift of their employees. He said:

"Marshall Field turned out fourteen junior partners as millionaries. Selfridge employs 10,000 persons who esteem it a privilege to be allowed to work under the ideal conditions he has created. Wanamaker conducts a school for boys and girls, and makes their promotion dependent on school progress as well as efficient work in his store."

Norman Johnson, editor of a Virginia trade publication, declared the merchant to-day must study his business closer than ever before. He urged organization extension.

He has no sympathy for the merchant who wails about the inroads of the catalogue houses.

"If you would climb down off the dry goods box, stop whittling, and go after business with good, hot letters, you would get the trade the mail order houses now get. You can undersell them," he asserted.

Emphasize Need of Advertising.

He spoke of the growth of jobbing in the South, giving as an instance the increase in the number of dry goods wholesalers from 25 to 195 in twenty years.

W. P. Riley, of Evergreen, Ala., talked about combating the catalogue houses.

Paul T. Harbor, of Commerce, Ga., editor of a newspaper, took "Aggressive Advertising" as his theme.

J. H. McGhee, of Lawrenceville, Ga., led the "Open Parliament" discussion.

"Advertising is an absolute essential to the local merchant," he declared. "We must turn trade from the mail order houses back to the local dealer through the greatest advertising campaign the country ever has seen."

'13' Is Happy Omen to Miss Wilson as Bride

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Lovers of the mystic have discovered the letters in the name of Miss Jessie Wilson's fiance, Francis B. Sayre, number thirteen. Therefore, Miss Wilson will not only be the daughter of the "Lucky Thirteen President," and the thirteenth White House bride, but have as a husband a man about whose career thirteen appears an alluring halo.

Washington society hopes the wedding will take place November 13. It may be stated Miss Wilson will not have thirteen bridesmaids.

Fleet 'Takes' Brest France's 'Gibraltar'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The French Government was thrown into consternation to-day by the unprecedented feat of a submarine flotilla in penetrating the supposed impregnable harbor at Brest.

The fleet crawled through the water under the very guns of the great forts guarding the approach to the harbor and despite the use of every scientific device known to modern warfare, got through undetected.

Abstainers Pray for Aid in Fighting Drink

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—With a solemn high mass celebrated in the cathedral by Bishop McCort, the national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America was opened here.

The scene was an impressive and significant one as the total abstainers knelt to ask a blessing upon their work in spreading the gospel of total abstinence from strong drink and combating the curse of drunkenness.

SEVERE QUAKE RECORDED.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The Georgetown University observatory announced to-day that a severe earthquake shock was recorded there last night. It is estimated to have been about 4,000 miles from Washington.

NEGRO BOY THIEF CAUGHT.

Two negro boys were seen robbing a saloon at No. 230 Decatur street early Thursday. The police made a quick run to the saloon and caught Jim Thomas, 14, at the back door. The other boy, who was acting as "lookout," escaped.

AVIATOR CODY IS KILLED IN FALL IN ENGLAND

Plunges One Thousand Feet to Death With Passenger—Sons See Tragedy.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ALDERSHOT, ENG., Aug. 7.—Colonel Samuel F. Cody, a former citizen of the United States and one of the most famous aviators in the world, and a passenger were killed here to-day while testing a new aeroplane over the military aerodrome.

These two fatalities bring the aviation death list up to 305.

Colonel Cody was one of the pioneer airmen and was commissioned by the British Government to build up the aviation corps of the Imperial army, which he fulfilled to the perfect satisfaction of the War Office. Cody was a relative of William F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody, and in appearance he resembled the famous American.

Protested Taking Passenger.

The name of the passenger who was killed with Colonel Cody was Evans. The aviator protested against any one accompanying him, saying that he was going to try out a new machine and the risk would be great. Evans was insistent and finally Cody relented.

After a "grass-cutting" circuit Cody shot the machine upward and soon the car was 1,000 feet in the air. Spectators on the field saw the machine begin to wabble as though one of the planes had buckled. Suddenly it turned over on its side and plunged downward. With a crash the machine struck the earth and the petrol tank burst, scattering the fuel over the bodies of the two men.

Cody and Evans were picked up and rushed to a hospital in the cantonments, but the spark of life already had been extinguished.

How He Got His Title.

The manner in which Cody got his title of "Colonel" is interesting. Shortly after King George ascended the throne he wrote a note of congratulation to Cody for some air feats he had performed and called him "Colonel" Cody, evidently confusing him with "Buffalo Bill." The aviator seized the opportunity to acquire a title and since had styled himself Colonel Cody.

Last August Cody won the British army flying tests, taking $25,000 in prizes.

Before taking up aviation Cody was an aeronaut of note and once made a balloon flight over London.

He planned a trip to India in an aeroplane-balloon of his own invention, but his death cuts off all plans for the future. Cody is survived by a widow, who, like her husband, has always been fond of excitement and adventure. She was the first woman in England to make a flight in an aeroplane and is herself an accomplished air car driver.

Colonel Cody came to England from the United States about ten years ago and became a naturalized British subject.

The ill-fated machine was of Cody's own construction and he had intended to attempt a flight across the Atlantic ocean in it.

Two sons of the dead aviator witnessed the tragedy. One of them rushed forward and threw himself on his father's body.

Medical examination showed that Cody's neck had been broken while one arm and several ribs were fractured. One rib had punctured the lung.

Chicago 'Trilby' Has Most Perfect Foot

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The center of attraction and interest at the meeting of the National Association of Chiropodists at the Hotel Marlborough to-day was the American "Trilby," personified in Miss Clara S. Houston, of Chicago.

Seated in an extremely business-like looking office, Miss Houston exposed for the benefit of visitors her well-shaped foot, which by all experts has been unanimously declared the most perfect in America.

Calls Mosquito King Of Disease Carriers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Mosquitoes were to-day branded the "king disease carriers" of the insect world by Dr. Nelson Du Val Breicht, formerly of the Public Health Service.

Besides their implements of torture, these insects carry about with them germs of leprosy, yellow fever, malaria, breakbone fever, typhoid and five other brands of malady. Dr. Breicht awarded the gnat second honors as a disease carrier.

AMERICANS SHOT IN SACKING OF DURANGO

Stores Belonging to Foreigners Burned by Rebels—Women and Girls Attacked.

investigator, Mr. Lind is commissioned to act as a peacemaker between the leaders of the various revolutionary factions, but it is doubtful if Huerta will allow an alien to act in such a capacity.

Huerta Has New Slogan.

"Mexican affairs for Mexicans," was the laconic remark made by President Huerta to-day to his followers in Congress who called at the National Palace.

Previous to the statement issued to-day by the Mexican Minister, the United States Embassy had received the following note from Secretary of State Bryan:

You may say to the Mexican Foreign Minister that Governor Lind comes to Mexico on a mission of peace, and that President Wilson feels that his presence there will contribute toward a settlement of existing difficulties.

The Mexican Government should await the President's communication and not give weight to misrepresentations published in sensational newspapers.

Not only in this city but throughout the entire republic increased antagonism toward Americans is being shown. Huerta and his advisers believe that if war should be declared it would result in making a unit of all the revolutionary bands so that a solid front could be presented against any foreign foe.

Within the past seven months the Government has placed orders for 100,000 rifles and a commensurate supply of ammunition, as well as mountain and field guns.

President Wilson Will Not Tolerate Insult to Lind.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The American Government and the Huerta government apparently have locked horns over the status which John Lind, the President's special envoy to Mexico, will have when he arrives at the Mexican capital.

Reports from Mexico City show that General Huerta is preparing what officials term a "grandstand" play over the coming of Lind, in an effort to force the latter into an embarrassing position.

Administration officials say that the sensational statement emanating from Huerta to-day is in the nature of a blind, by which he hopes to scare the United States Government out of an aggressive campaign for mediation. They laugh at reports that Mr. Lind will not be treated by Huerta with due respect when he reaches Mexico City.

Anxious as is the President to keep hands off Mexico, officials say he will not tolerate any premeditated humiliation to his personal representative.

Secretary of State Bryan declined to comment in any way upon the reports from Mexico City to-day concerning the decision of President Huerta to bar Governor Lind from Mexico. The Secretary said that the State Department has not been informed of his intended action and that, even if it were informed of it, the United States Government could not take a decisive move until after the personal representative of the President has actually been deported from Mexico or otherwise denied by President Huerta's government.

Senator Bacon, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, refused to make any comment on the ultimatum issued by the Mexican Foreign Minister.

Americans Shot in Sacking of Durango.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—M. A. Leach, a business man of San Francisco, told Secretary of State Bryan to-day a thrilling story of the sacking of the city of Durango by Revolutionists on June 18, which he witnessed.

The entire city was looted, he says, and German, French and American stores were burned, entailing a property loss of more than $5,000,000.

Scores of Mexicans were shot down and dragged through the streets.

Roger Palmer, an Englishman, employed by the Mexican National Railway, was killed because he failed to open a safe.

Carlos Bombrandis, mining man, and L. W. Elder, both Americans, were wounded by a bomb used to force the doors of the McDonald Institute, where many of the foreigners had assembled for protection.

H. W. Stepp, an American civil engineer, was shot through the leg because he failed to deliver 500 pesos he did not have.

Leach says a number of women sought safety in the archbishop's palace but the bishop was taken prisoner and held for ransom of half a million pesos. Hundreds of women and girls were outraged.

Special Envoy Leaves Galveston on Battleship.

GALVESTON, Aug. 7.—John E. Lind, special representative of President Woodrow Wilson, sailed at 10 o'clock this morning on the battleship New Hampshire for Vera Cruz, Mexico. From Vera Cruz he will go direct to Mexico City to lay the message of President Wilson before President Huerta of Mexico.

Former Governor Lind was accompanied by Mrs. Lind. They were delayed by a railroad wreck. A special interurban electric car brought them from Houston.

At the outskirts of the city an automobile was waiting. Mr. and Mrs. Lind entered the machine and were driven to the water front. A tender from the battleship took them to the vessel, anchored four miles out.

On board the special envoy refused to see visitors. On the way from the interurban to the water front Governor Lind consented to see newspaper men.

"I do not know how long I will remain in Mexico," he said. "I do not expect to be offered the permanent Ambassadorship, and if I am, the offer will be declined. My mission in Mexico has already, I believe, been well defined, and I will communicate with no one except the President."

When told of President Huerta's statements as appearing in press dispatches to-day, Governor Lind said he could form no opinion on this matter until thoroughly acquainted with all the facts in the case. Further than that he refused to comment.

Before departing from Galveston, Governor Lind was in communication with the State Department at Washington.

Scholar Says Devil Designed New Styles

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Current fashions in women's gowns are incentives to immorality, according to Professor Allan Hoben, of the University of Chicago School of Divinity, at the Sunday school institute in session at the university. The latest styles, he said, were the devil's designs.

"For any woman to be well dressed to-day," he said, "is for her to be measurably harmful. Women have distracted attention from their faces to their forms. This is distinctly unfortunate."

Militants Active as Mrs. Pankhurst Sinks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ABERGAVENNY, ENG., Aug. 7.—Militant suffragettes burned a cricket pavilion and a hayrick near here to-day.

Before the pavilion had been fired a big banner was stretched on poles near by, on which was the inscription: "Just to Remind You That Mrs. Pankhurst Is Dying."

STAID OLD NORWICH, TOO.

NORWICH, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Following the appearance here of women wearing a skirt slit to the knees and with nothing under it but flesh-colored tights, Mayor Silas W. Berry has ordered the arrest of any woman who wears the slashed garment.

ALL SAMEE MEN.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 7.—Mayor Bading has declared that the women of Milwaukee may wear any kind of bathing suit as long as they wear as much as the men do.

SECOND MOVE TO RESCUE WEBB BILL FAILS

Resolution, Backed by Anti-Slaton Forces in the House, Ruled Out of Order.

A second attempt to rescue the Hixon-Searcy (Webb) bill from the subcommittee to which it has been assigned by the Temperance Committee, was made Thursday morning by Representative Kidd, of Baker County, backed by the combine of the dry and anti-tax reform forces that has declared war on the Speaker and the Governor.

The attempt, which if it had been success would have effectually blocked legislation, was frustrated by Speaker Burwell, who ruled that Mr. Kidd's resolution calling out the bill could not be introduced under the rules of the day. The resolution was prevented from getting to the desk of the Clerk only by about ten minutes. Shortly after the House convened Blackburn introduced an "order of the day," which failed to provide for the introduction of resolutions. Five minutes later Kidd tried to introduce his resolution.

"Resolutions can not be introduced at this time," said Speaker Burwell.

"This is a privilege resolution," Mr. Kidd insisted.

"It makes no difference what kind of a resolution it is," replied the Speaker. "The order of the day has been adopted and resolutions can not be introduced."

The following bills were introduced into the House Thursday morning:

By Wheatley, of Sumter—A bill to appropriate $13,286.80 to pay for work already done on the State Capitol and the Executive Mansion, and work that is to be done.

By Hart, of Warren; Allen, of Blasscock, and Turner, of Bulloch—A bill regulating the inspection of asylums, sanitariums and convents.

Negro Sentenced to Death for Attack

WAYCROSS, Aug. 7.—For attacking a white woman at Homerville early this year, Lige Lane, a negro, will hang at Homerville September 10. He was sentenced at a special session of the Clinch Superior Court to-day by Judge T. A. Parker.

Lane's motion for a new trial was refused by Judge Parker and the Court's position upheld by the Supreme Court.

SEA WATERSPOUTS SEEN.

CHARLESTON, Aug. 7.—Three huge water spouts formed at Rockville forty miles from Charleston, afforded several thousand visitors attending the annual Sea Island yacht races, a rare marine spectacle. The spouts were visible for 30 minutes.

Masons' Convention Opens in Gainesville

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 7.—The Masons of the Ninth Congressional District are in annual convention here. Sixty-nine lodges are represented by 100 delegates.

The address by Thomas H. Jeffries, of Atlanta, Past Grand Master, was a public part of the program at Brenau Auditorium Wednesday.

On the stage was Colonel John E. Redwine, of Gainesville, one of the oldest Masons in Georgia. He has held many offices of honor. He is about 80 years old.

Dr. J. C. Bennett, of Jefferson, presided. Business and secret sessions were held, with initiation. A trolley ride to the river with a watermelon cutting was one feature of the entertainment.

Convent for Negro Girls Opened Here

Catholics of Atlanta will tender a welcome Friday afternoon from 5 to 7 to four Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament, who arrived in Atlanta some days ago to take charge of the Catholic school for negro children, 102 North Boulevard.

The school was built by the Fathers of the African Mission and was opened in October, 1912. A convent for negro girls will be opened by the four sisters and the public will be shown through the school and convent for the first time Friday.

After the welcome there will be a benediction of the Blessed Sacrament at the Church of Our Lady of Lourdes.

K. of C. Debate on $1,000,000 Offices

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—A proposition to move the national headquarters from New Haven, Conn., to Washington and erect a $1,000,000 building at the Capital was the principal subject for consideration at the closing business session to-day of the thirty-first annual convention of the Knights of Columbus. It was predicted the proposition would be defeated as the various councils have rejected the measure in a semi-referendum vote.

Changes in the insurance laws also were considered. One plan was to reduce the assessment paid by the older members, and the other was to issue a paid-up policy to all members who are 70 years old.

Man's Plea in Court Is Heard for Block

SANTA MONICA, CAL., Aug. 7.—E. C. Shapiro, held on a charge of passing a worthless check, pleaded his case before Judge G. Edwin Brown with such vigor that he was heard half a block from the court room. Despite the vocal strength of his plea, Shapiro was held to answer before the Superior Court.

The Numbers 4, 11, 21 in Georgia

When you have destroyed the boy's pride and honor,
When you have killed the soul of the girl,
This year,
Next year to adopt
Probation and a home for the wayward
Will not help them or their mothers.
For those now in need we plead.

Cholera serum for hogs has been provided.

Good!

Protection for cows from the tick—

Fine!

Expert knowledge of bugs and chemicals to save and foster our crops—

Splendid!

Higher education for men and boys—

Excellent!

But the miserable—the unfortunate—those who are slipping down into the slime which underlies—what of these?

In one home lives a mother. Her boy cut four stalks of sugarcane and with another boy stole them from a field.

Your court and ours fined them forty dollars apiece.

They were strangers, one nineteen and the other twenty. They had thirty cents between them and no friends. Eight months in our chaingang was their sentence for not having forty dollars each. A minister found them in stripes at Christmas. He got them out. Their parents had not known of their plight.

IS THIS RIGHT? You can—you will prevent the recurrence of such cases. Pass the Probation Bill. Give your Judge the power to save first offenders.

E. C. Branson of the Normal College at Athens states that crime has increased in Georgia since 1880 approximately twice as fast as the population.

Think of this. Then consider Illinois.

In that State, commitments have decreased forty per cent in the ten years since the adoption of the Indeterminate Sentence, despite the great increase of population. Half of the States have incorporated the Indeterminate Sentence in their laws.

Its aim is "to retain the convict in prison until he is fitted for freedom, making such fitness for freedom the condition precedent of his release."

IT WILL ENCOURAGE ROAD BUILDING.

To the fear of the lash it adds the far greater incentive, the hope of winning freedom by good work.

Senate Bill No. 11 provides for Probation. Senate Bill No. 21 covers the Indeterminate Sentence. The Senate has passed both of them without opposition. And the Judiciary Committee of the House has again favorably reported both Bills for passage in the House.

To incorporate them into the laws of Georgia only an opportunity for a vote in the House is needed.

With them goes House Bill No. 4. This provides the home for wayward girls. They to-day are the pressing problem in our courts. They are prisoners. Yet you would not place them in the chaingang or with hardened criminals.

Since you will not do that with a boy under sixteen for whom you provide a home, you can scarcely do it with a girl.

And yet the State has to care for them.

While providing serum for sick hogs, and a tick cure for cattle, and horticulture and entomology for our fields, and college training for our boys, surely you will provide for these, our girls.

The Prison Commission urges this. The Appropriations Committee and the Penitentiary Committee report favorably House Bill No. 4.

THESE NUMBERS, 4, 11 and 21, entitle these bills to a hearing.

But more than this, the meaning of these measures to Georgia and the unfortunate—that there is nothing in them for any one excepting the miserable at the bottom of the pit—these facts make certain, we believe, that they will be heard and made the law of our State.

Stop and think of the homes they touch.

And you will urge and give them the right of way.

Remember the purpose of the Crucified—

Jesus died, not alone that you might live, but "to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death."

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE MEN AND RELIGION FORWARD MOVEMENT

SENATE AWAITS BILL PROVIDING TAX REFORM

Miller-Anderson Measure Creating Office of State Assessor Expected to Pass Monday.

The Senate Finance Committee will take the firing line Friday in an effort to have the upper House pass a tax equalization bill revolutionizing the present State taxing methods. The bill, drawn by Chairman Miller and President Anderson, has been agreed upon by the Finance Committee and will be reported upon favorably Friday morning, and probably will be passed not later than Monday.

The bill provides for a State Tax Assessor to be appointed by the Governor for a term of six years, who shall determine if the counties are returning a just amount of taxable property. He will have all the powers outlined for the proposed State Tax Commission.

Should the State Tax Assessor and the county boards fail to agree the bill provides that a hearing may be held before an arbitration board of three members, one to be appointed by the County Board, one by the State Tax Assessor and the third by the Governor. The county boards are to consist of three members.

County Treasurers Hit.

Wednesday afternoon two important bills were passed; the first by Senator Stark providing for the permanent registration of voters, and the other by Senator Watts, giving to counties the option to abolish the office of County Treasurer.

The bill providing for the appointment of a special commission to dispose of the present Governor's mansion was defeated by the close vote of 21 to 19 after a heated debate.

Senator McNeill declared the bill gave too much power to the commission, as $500,000 of the State's money was involved. Senator Harrell declared that a lobby of land dealers favoring the bill had existed a long time.

New Registration Bill Passes.

Senator Stark's permanent registration bill was passed after a vigorous fight by Senator Harrell who declared the measure would tear down the registration laws which keep the negro from voting.

In reply Senator Miller assured the Senate that there were sufficient provisions in the bill to eliminate the negro vote just as it is eliminated now. Senator Burtz's amendment, which was passed, provides that the voter shall be entitled to permanent registration unless registered under the provisions of subsections 1 and 2 of paragraph 4, section of the Code of 1910.

These clauses qualify for voting the Civil War and the Indian war, the Civil War and the Indian Wars, and all persons legally descended from these.

Airman's Aide Sues Him for Losing Race

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., Aug. 7.—Roy F. Donaldson, who entered the recent international elimination balloon race at Kansas City, was the defendant today in an unusual suit, the aftermath of Donaldson's mishap in the air race.

Emery F. Lanning, who was aide to Donaldson, filed suit for the return of $150 he contributed as his share of the expenses of the flight. Lanning asserts Donaldson became afflicted with "cold feet." Donaldson in return states Lanning spoiled the flight by dropping several bags of ballast when he was trying to correct a mistake he (Lanning) made.

SAVANNAH EAGLE HONORED.

SAVANNAH, Aug. 7.—Colonel William L. Grayson, of Savannah, who has been active in the affairs of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, has been nominated for Grand Chaplain at the annual convention now in session in Baltimore.

ONION IS A STRONG NAME!

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Edward D. Onion got permission from Justice Guy to change his name to Bartlett, on the plea that his right name brought upon him "jokes, banter and sarcasm."

Tax Losses Cut to Less Than $50,000

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 7.—Lying on her deathbed, Mrs. J. K. McCloud, of Charleston, S. C., widow of a Confederate soldier, admitted to-day to J. A. Rector, an attorney of St. Louis, that she had secured thousands of dollars from Confederate organizations of the South posing as a widow of the late J. K. Alcorn, former Governor and United States Senator of Mississippi.

Mrs. McCloud, who is 90 years of age, operated as an imposter in practically every city in the South. Attorney Rector is a grandson of the late Governor Alcorn and tracked the woman all over the South.

Cartersville Pays Sam Jones Tribute

CARTERSVILLE, Aug. 7.—To-morrow will be Sam Jones Memorial Day at Sam Jones Tabernacle. The 10 o'clock service will be given up to the life and work of the evangelist. Talks will be made by "Gypsy" Smith, Bob Jones and John Callahan. This is one of the feature services of the meeting and will be an annual affair.

To-morrow afternoon services will be held at which negro people will have an opportunity to pay tribute to the famous revivalist, who was a great friend of the race.

Non-union Men May Prolong Mine Strike

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 7.—Indications to-day were that the strike of 18,000 copper miners in the Calumet region would be prolonged.

The non-union miners are united now and are demanding the same concessions from the operators as the striking union men. They wanted an eight-hour day and a minimum wage of $3.

Dinner Dance at Club.

Each Thursday evening the dinner dances at the Capital City Country Club are becoming more popular. Already several parties have been planned for the regular dinner dance, and fully 200 people will dine on the attractive veranda and terrace.

One of the largest parties will be that given by Mr. and Mrs. George Forrester in compliment to Mrs. Everett Ginn, of Winchester, Mass., who is spending August with her sister, Mrs. Laura Wyatt. Mr. and Mrs. Forrester's guests will include Mrs. Ginn, Mr. and Mrs. Rutherford Lipscomb, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lipscomb, of Athens; Miss Eugenia Richardson and Mr. Robert Forrester.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Paxon give a swimming party in the afternoon, after which they will have dinner and later enjoy the dance. In this party there will be twelve guests.

Dr. and Mrs. Bates Block will be among those entertaining. The guest of honor of this party will be Miss Anna Lowry Eason, of Lenoir, Tenn., who is visiting Miss Emma Lowry Freeman. Besides Miss Eason and Miss Freeman, the guests will be Miss Alice May Freeman, Mr. Arthur Clarke, Mr. Walter Nash and Mr. James Ragan.

Mr. and Mrs. George Brown will entertain a party of eight for Miss Mary Brown and Miss Jessie McKee, who has just returned from Europe. Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McKee will be their guests also.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sciple will have a few friends as their guests.

Others entertaining parties are Mr. and Mrs. William Kiser, Messrs. Lee Harvey, S. C. Flemming, A. S. Watson, Joseph Brown Connally, J. M. Moore, Winter Alfriend, Edward Alfriend and William Dickey.

Mrs. Glover Hostess.

Mrs. H. B. Glover entertained at an informal luncheon Thursday at her home on Seventh street. As she is going away to live, this affair was in the form of a farewell party to her friends. The table was decorated with roses and covers were laid for six.

The Ten Club.

The Ten Club will be entertained by Judge Joseph H. Lumpkin Saturday at the East Lake Country Club, in honor of Dr. William Warren Landrum, of Louisville, the past, present and ever-will-be czar of the club.

Members of the club will leave at 3:30 in hte afternoon. A committee consisting of Mr. W. W. Orr and Professor M. L. Brittain have arranged an exceedingly interesting program. In addition to the members of the club, Judge Lumpkin has invited the following, and each has accepted his invitation:

Governor John M. Slaton, Judge Arthur G. Powell, Dr. E. L. Connally and Mr. Henry H. Cabaniss.

Tallyho Ride.

Miss Ruth Moody will entertain at a tallyho party Thursday evening for Miss Louise des Vergers, the guest of Mrs. W. A. Wimbish, and for Mrs. King, who is with Mrs. John Ryan for the summer.

The guests will be Misses Edith Hammond, Josephine Stoney, Elizabeth Morgan, Eleanor Macey, Mary Adelaide Caverly, Penelope Clarke, Lula Black, Marguerite Olson, Elizabeth Evans, Mamie Kirkpatrick, Mary Bowen and her guest, Margaret Lowman, of Birmingham; Louise Ryan, Marquis Ritch, Messrs. For Mr. and Mrs. Paxon.

Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Brown entertained at an informal dinner Wednesday evening at their home on Piedmont avenue for Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Paxon, whose marriage was a recent event.

Besides Mr. and Mrs. Paxon the guests were Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connally.

Afternoon Reception.

Mrs. William Fambrough and Miss Marie Norris entertained at an afternoon reception Thursday in compliment to Miss Minnie Fambrough, of Boston, the guest of Mrs. Fambrough, and Miss Marie Beatie, of New York, the guest of Miss Norris.

The house was elaborately decorated with yellow flowers. Punch was served on the porch by Misses Lillie Tipton and Winnie Ison.

Assisting in the entertainment of the guests were Misses Edith Norris, Margaret Farnsworth, Allene Parryman, Charisie McClain, Irene Bennet, Eugenia Jarrard, Alma Norris, Mrs. J. C. Norris, Mrs. A. L. Norris and Miss Marian Fambrough, of Rock Mart, Ga.

About 100 guests called between the hours of 5 o'clock and 7 o'clock.

For Mrs. Hall.

Mrs. J. T. Harrison will entertain at a shower on Friday afternoon for Mrs. Ethel B. Hall, whose wedding to Mr. Wilson Brown, of Mississippi, will be an event of August 14.

About 100 guests have been invited.

Mrs. Loveman Hostess.

Mr. Bert A. Loveman entertained at a bridge luncheon Thursday morning; twelve guests were present.

For Miss Harrison.

Mrs. Spencer Atkinson entertained at bridge Thursday afternoon for her niece, Miss Mary Virginia Harrison, of Brunswick.

The house was artistically decorated with brilliant colored flowers, marigolds, gladioli and asters. The dining room table had as its centerpiece a basket of white asters, and here all the details were in white.

The score cards were hand painted in flowers and were tied with lavender bows.

The prizes were a French print and a bridge set. Twenty girls were present.

Church Holds Candy Sale.

The ladies of Wesley Memorial Church will hold a cake and candy sale at Kenny's Tea Store Saturday, for the benefit of the church fund.

COLUMBUS WATER PURE.

COLUMBUS, Aug. 7.—In the midst of the waterworks controversy in Columbus, when some have attempted to make it appear that there is an epidemic of typhoid fever, a report of the analysis of the water has been received from Ray C. Werner, of Atlanta, State analyst, showing that it is pure and wholesome.

SEEK TO JOIN CIVIC BODIES.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 7.—An unsuccessful effort has been made here to combine the Chamber of Commerce and the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association. It is believed, however, that soon the two organizations will be combined.

An Outclearing of One Hundred Seventy-Five Dresses

Dresses of Cotton Crepes and Voiles, Linens, Silk Foulards and Poplins and Black China Silks

The Most Drastic Pricing We Have Done This Season

A wonderfully attractive collection of dresses, styled and fashioned in ways that were charming enough to win them a place in our ready-to-wear section.

However, we are putting the good ship in shape for its fall voyage---which, alone, accounts for the pricing. But it is no time nor occasion for the whys and wherefores of such prices, the prices themselves tell the big facts---women of Atlanta will know what to expect of a Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. sale wherein the former prices and sale prices differ as these do.

At 8:30, then, to-morrow!

$2.19 For $5.75 to $7.50 Linen Dresses

Forty-seven of these.

Of French linen in tans, browns, blues, lavenders—about all colors—and various styles, trimmed with folds and bands of contrasting colors and buttons, some have lace-trimmed collars.

$5.00 For $10.00 to $21.75 Lingerie Dresses

Seventy-seven of these:

Splendid choosing here—a number of these have been in the house but a few days. Of sheer soft lingerie cloth, plain and striped crepe and voile, made attractive with rich laces and embroideries. White and white touched with colors.

$9.75 For $16.95 to $25.00 Dresses

In all there are thirty-one of these. Dresses of black China silks, of foulards, of crepe de chines, of nets and laces and of cotton crepes—these hand-embroidered. Too many different models to attempt picturing them. See them! Not one was less than $16.95, and from that to $25.00.

$11.95 For New $15.00 Silk Dresses

Both Silk and Cotton Dresses.

Twenty new Fall dresses of soft and gracefully draping silk poplins have been added to this outclearing. Why? Because we would! Rather simple but elegant affairs showing many style points to be in favor this fall—you will like them. Choose from Copenhagen, navy, gray, lavender and black.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"WITH no prices on the menu!" repeated Helen in amazement. "Then they can charge us anything they please!"

"That's the idea. Most of the smart places in Paris never price their food. They're supposed to cater to people who are concerned only with the quality of the dishes—not with the price."

"But, Warren, WE don't want to go to such a place! I'd be so worried about what the check was going to be—I couldn't eat a thing."

"Well we're going to one right now for dinner—Cafe D'Armenonville. One of the show places in the Bois. You'll see more smart Parisians there than you've seen yet. While we're over here we're going to do Paris. What difference does a few dollars make one way or the other?"

"But, dear, I'm not dressed for a pretentious place."

"Well, put on something light then—anything will do. They don't expect Americans to dress much. They think we all come from a sort of wild and woolly West. All they want is our money."

"Well, I don't think we've got so much," laughed Helen. "Not enough to go to a place where they don't price their food."

"Guess we can stand it for once. Hurry up—it's almost 7."

A little later they left the hotel. Outside Warren raised his cane at a passing taxi.

Warren Determined.

"Of course we've got to have a cab," impatiently, as Helen made her usual protest. "It's the only way you can get to that place. Now, you leave this to me. We're going to Armenonville's to-night, and we're going to do the thing right. Hang the expense!"

When Warren started out in this spirit Helen knew it was useless to try to curb him. He was in the mood to spend money—and he was going to spend it. She leaned back in the cab with a sigh of resignation.

But as this was Helen's first drive through the Champs Elysees, she soon forgot everything else in the beauty of the scene.

Under the trees, along the drive, were chairs and tables, mostly deserted now. But from the gay gowns of the few people who still lingered Helen could imagine what it must have been an hour earlier.

"I'll not have the time, but you ought to come out to the Bois some afternoon for tea," suggested Warren. "Nothing like it in the world. There's Armenonville's through there," pointing to a mass of brilliant lights glimmering through a grove of trees.

Cabs, taxies and victorias were lined up three and four abreast in the wide graveled driveways before this famous restaurant.

"But we're not going to keep this taxi?" asked Helen anxiously, as they waited their turn to draw up before the entrance.

"That's just what we're going to do," snapped Warren. "We'll not take any chances of getting one when we're through."

To order dinner from an unpriced menu, and to feel that a taxi was industriously ticking up the francs—the evening held little prospect of pleasure for Helen.

Warren led the way through the spacious hallway to the garden beyond. The place was like fairyland, with banks of red geraniums, a gleaming fountain, and ropes of colored lights festooned through trees and shrubbery. There must have been a hundred or more tables on the lawn, yet all were taken, and a group of people were waiting.

"You stay here." Warren strode off determinedly after a headwaiter.

Helen's gaze followed him anxiously. She saw him slip some money into the hand of the suave Frenchman, and a moment later they were being seated at one of the few tables that had been "reserved."

"Warren, I thought you didn't believe in bribing headwaiters?"

"Well, you've got to do it here. This is a show place, I tell you, and you've got to come across. We'd have stood there all night without a table if I hadn't forked up."

Helen's first concern was in the menu—a large card with a fantastically decorated border of lobsters and crabs. She had hoped all along that Warren was wrong and that the prices would be given, but there was not a single figure. This bill of fare was to show only what you could get—not what you would have to pay for it.

"Oh, dear, just order one or two things! I'm not very hungry—and you had luncheon, didn't you?"

But Warren only glowered at her, and gave his order to the waiter by checking off with his pencil some of the dishes with the longest and, as Helen thought, most expensive looking French names.

"Now, see here," when the waiter had gone, "this isn't so bad as you think. The theory of this is that they charge in proportion to what you order. For instance, if you only have a roast and a salad, you pay more proportionately for those two dishes than you would if you had four or five. That's fair enough."

"Well, if that's their method, then why don't they put down the prices and deduct a certain percentage when you order a number of things? Wouldn't that be a good idea for any restaurant? Think how much more people would order if they felt they were getting a discount."

"Huh! Sort of on the principle of five cents apiece, six for a quarter!" grinned Warren.

"But don't you see people WOULD order more," insisted Helen, growing enthusiastic over her idea. "I'm sure any of the big New York restaurants would coin money on that plan."

"Better try to sell 'em the idea when you get back," scoffed Warren. "They might pay you something for it."

"Well, they might!" defiantly.

Just then a striking beauty, in a clinging white gown and a drooping leghorn hat with red popples, swept by, leaving a trail of perfume.

"Dear, some of the gowns ARE beautiful," mused Helen, now giving herself up to a study of the place.

A Pretty Girl.

"Not a bad-looking girl over there in yellow," commented Warren.

"I was just going to speak of her—that's the most WONDERFUL gown!"

The girl was dark and slender, with heavy brown hair drawn low into a simple coil on her neck. Her dress was of pale yellow chiffon, with brown fringe; her hat of the same chiffon was wreathed with yellow-petaled, brown-eyed daisies, and the streamers of brown velvet ribbon were knotted under her chin.

Most of the hats had either ties or streamers, with the trimming placed at some daring angle. While they must have looked very extreme in the shop windows, they were charming on the women who wore them.

"After all, the French women DO know how to wear their clothes."

"The ones you see here ought to," was Warren's comment. "That's about their only job."

"Dear, I haven't any idea what I'm eating," Helen exclaimed suddenly.

"Well, it's good, isn't it? That's sweetbread with truffles and wine sauce, en casserole—one of their specialties here. Only place in Paris you can get it like this."

But to Helen the food was always secondary to the atmosphere of the place and the people. And now she absent-mindedly ate her dinner, intent upon the scene about her.

"A woman never has any palate," grumbled Warren. "This dish is a work of art. There's a smoothness and flavor to this sauce that you wouldn't get anywhere else in the world. But you don't appreciate it! A dinner like this is wasted on any woman."

"Why, dear, that isn't fair," indignantly. "I think it's delicious, and I'm eating every bit of it."

A Treat.

"Oh, you're eating it, but might as well be eating corned beef hash in a dairy lunch room. I tell you this is a treat! No wonder the chef who made that sauce didn't want a price put on it. You can't price a thing like that any more than you can price a rare picture," enthused Warren, growing eloquent under the influence of the vintage wine.

Even Helen forgot her dread of the check and became enthusiastic when the waiter served the fruits au champagne. It was a tall glass dish of cut fruit, wonderful strawberries, cherries, pineapples and peaches floating in an iced syrup of blended wines and cordials.

When later the check was brought face down on a plate, instinctively Helen leaned forward to see the total. But Warren took it up quickly, glanced over the items, drew a crisp note from his wallet and laid it over the check. Helen was not familiar enough with French money to know the amount of the note, nor could she tell by the change returned.

"Dear, how much was that check?" unable to keep back the question.

"Well, I've paid it, haven't I? And it was a blamed good dinner. Now we'll have no harangues over expenses this evening. Come on—let's see if we can find that cab."

The cab! Helen had wholly forgotten that the cab was waiting—and they had been there almost three hours!

Warren located their driver and in a few moments they were whirling back through the Champs Elysees, now more beautiful than ever with the lights gleaming through the dark trees, and with every now and then a glimpse of the Seine and its jeweled bridges.

But the charm of all this was lost on Helen. She was not leaning back and enjoying the beauty of the drive. Instead she was sitting bolt upright, every muscle strained, as she tensely tried to figure out how much that dinner and the three hours' wait of the cab must have cost.

LIFE'S STRUGGLE WITH ILLNESS

Miss Stewart Tells How She Suffered from 16 to 45 years old—How Finally Cured.

EUPHEMIA, OHIO.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister, and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicine was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old, and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I can not tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off every month, and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blessed with excellent health for a woman of my age, and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse, and being wholly self-supporting I can not overestimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing since I was 52 years old. I have recommended the Compound so many with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss Evelyn Adelia Stewart, Euphemia, Ohio.

The Brighter Side of Turkey Trotting

An Expert's Advice of How This Famous Dance Can Be Purged of All Objectionable Features.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

THE new school of turkey trotting has brought into existence two groups of rabid partisans—those who do the dance and know how jolly is the dancing, and those who look on and see how shocking is the prancing. And meanwhile turkey trotting is so earnestly done that it seems in a fair way to be done to death—and a fallow field for humorists will thus become sterile and barren of little jokes like the famous, "She is more trotted against than trotting."

In our age of specialization, turkey trotting is not sufficiently specialized, and every little freak step that wriggles its way into life masquerades under the one name or that of some barnyard or menagerie relative. There is a brighter side to turkey trotting; there is a possibility of having it become a dance as well regulated as the two-step, and yet free to express the true dancing joy-of-living of the partners who merrily whirl through its mazes.

For confirmation of this theory, while in New York I went to Leon Errol, the clever originator of "turkish trottishness," one of the features of the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1913," and with clever Stella Chatelaine, the partner of dances and of life to help him, Mr. Errol showed me how you should and how you shouldn't do the "trot."

Correct Position.

"Here is the correct position for learning the trot," said Mr. Errol, illustrating the while. "The girl places her hands on the shoulders of her partner. The man places one hand under the elbow of his partner and his bent elbow under her other arm. In this position every sway of a partner who knows the dance throws the shoulders of the other partner into the proper swing; not a wriggle or a suggestive movement, but the sway-in- to music that is the natural expression used in all dances that are a real expression of joy set to music instead of conventional ballroom steps.

"If you want to see the art of dancing, naturally you go to see Genee, and you enjoy without any thought of spending years in trying to master the art of dancing as she has done.

"But when you go to see the modern, up-to-date dancing of the stage, you have a weather eye on learning to do it, too—and springing a new step at the next cabaret you favor. Here are three things to remember about stage dancing—It consists of tempo, a trick step and a bit of acting to catch the eye. In comedy dancing like mine, the tempo is very quick—whirlingly rapid without a break in its movements, that fairly pile up on top of one another. Then there is the trick step worked out to be as different as possible, and finally the comic element to make it go with the audience.

Allow For Freedom.

"The amateur turkey trotter must copy the first two parts of stage turkey trotting, and avoid the acting like grim death.

"Don't play to the gallery—don't do an exaggerated step and fairly revel in the idea that the people are looking at you in admiring wonder. They are probably wondering all right—how you can be so vulgar or so foolish.

"Take a refined position that leaves at least a foot of space between the partners and allow for freedom of motion. Holding your partner too closely not only makes the dance suggestive, and gives too much chance to the critical enemies of turkey trotting to get in their work, but makes it impossible for the amateur to dance with the graceful free sway that is the chief beauty of turkey trotting.

"Then with a clear picture in your mind of what you want to do, work out a step. Sometimes Miss Chatelaine and I see little children dancing to an organ grinder's tunes on the streets—that suggests a step—and we may spend as much as two hours in working out the one step.

"Turkey trotting demands a free yet firm position that lets the partners work together; an absolute feeling for time, and ability to follow the music without a break; the utmost patience in working out a step, and ability and imagination to work out little trick steps that will add to the mere sway that is the basis of all turkey trotting and allied dances.

"We must always keep in mind that this is a dance in which shoulders count. In the now sedate waltz, the position of arm-around-waist used to be considered rather risque—well, you don't have to assume that position if you are going to trot correctly. The position I suggest—girl's arms on man's shoulders, and man's arms used as levers under girl's elbows, is staid, respectable and guaranteed to produce graceful rhythmical trotting.

"As in other departments of life, and dancing," concluded Mr. Errol, "there is a right way and there is a wrong way. But the right way to turkey trot is pleasing to observe and pleasing to do. If the amateur will assume the position I teach and practice one step at a time patiently and in faithful effort to keep in perfect rhythm with the music, he will soon find himself able to do a modern dance without a shade of vulgarity and without a trace of amateurish ill-at-easeness."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WE got a other new white hired gurl, her naim is Vera. Ma sed it is a pritty naim, but I think it is a funny naim for a hired gurl. Hired gurls used to be called Bridget & Nora & thay was good hired gurls, too. But things is different now. The last three hired gurls we had was Marguerite & Sylvia & Belladonna, & now we have Vera. She is vary pritty. Pa sed she had dreemy eyes & Ma sed it was from sleeping too sound that her eyes was dreemy.

Vera is riteing a play. She wuddent tell Pa & Ma that she was riteing it, but she toald me so I promised her that I wuddent say a word to Pa & Ma. The naim of the play is Alone in Milledgeville, & it tells about a butiful young gurl that fell in luv with a keeper in the Milledgeville insane asilum. He was a vilyun. The gurl goes to Milledgeville to see him beekaus he had toald her that he owned a grate big estate. He took the gurl to the asilum & toald her that all the insane peepul thare was his servants. She beleeved him at first and then the horrible truth dawned on her. Then she sed in poetry to the vilyun:

You have me at yure mercy here
Of that there ain't no doubt;
I think I shall go laghouse, deer,
If you don't git me out.
I'd rather be a peasant's bride
& housekeep in a hut
Than wed a chump in this here dump
& get to be a nut.

Then Vera toald me that finished the first act. The curtain goes down wen she is reading them lines to the vilyun. The second act is the same as the first, in the asilum. One of the pashunts thare isent crazy at all, he is a rich young man wich is beeing kep in thare so his relatives can git all his munny. He falls in luv with the poor gurl wich is being held thare by the vilyun & tells her that they will find some way to escape. She looked up into his eyes & reesited a other peece of poetry. She was all the time reesiting poetry she rote, Vera toald me. Vera sed that the longer the heroine stayed in the asilum the moar poetry she rote. She looked up into the eyes of the hero & reesited.

Oh yes, I will fly away with you
And marry you for luv.
Yure munny all can stay with you,
I have no use for it, duv.
But what if you mite be insane
& not what you represent?
Then to this place I wud return
& be sorry I ever had went.

If you are reely sane, my own,
Our lives will pleasant be.
But if sum nite I'd heer you groan
I'd hide away from thee.
It is a awful, haunting feer
To feer one's husband is dippy,
& if I ever see you thus
I'll jump in the Mississippi.

The last act isent finished yet, Vera toald me. She is pritty smart for a hired gurl. She says wen she gits rich I can marry her wen I grow up.

Excused.

Bob—Will you take a ticket in this raffle for a poor widow——

Simp—Nix. I wouldn't have any use for a poor widow if I won.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

NOT WORTH YOUR WORRY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and recently met a young man about the same age. He made quite an impression upon me and we have met by appointment a few times. Last week I happened to misunderstand a date the young man made in his letter and disappointed him. Now he is angry, and although I tried to explain the matter to him, he will not believe my excuse. I am quite heartbroken over it. RAY.

Your humble attitude doesn't do you credit. You did no wrong and owed neither apology nor explanation. Please, for your own sake, let the matter end here, and if he attempts to see you, refuse.

THERE COULD BE NO OBJECTION.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 16, and have a friend two years my senior. His birthday is quite near and I would like to know if it is proper for me to send him a birthday card, so as to let him know I think of him. ANXIOUS.

A cordial little note, wishing him many happy returns, will prove your friendship.

You are so young; will you promise me to regard no man as more than a friend for a few years longer?

CERTAINLY NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am deeply in love with a young man 21 years old. I meet him often and he gives me hints that he loves me, but he also tells me he hasn't courage to propose. Now please tell me how I should act. Should I tell him that I love him or not? HILDA.

The girl worth having is worth asking for. Tell him so the next time he hints. Also hint that there are other men not quite so slow. But save your avowal of love until he has earned it.

THE DIFFERENCE IMMATERIAL

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a girl four years my senior, which difference in our ages seems to stand between us. I have tried in every way possible to convince her of my love, but so far have not succeeded. I do not believe I can ever be happy without her. E.

You do not state your age. If you are old enough to marry, her four years seniority should be no bar.

I am convinced she refuses you because she does not love you. Be persistent in your devotion, and if that does not melt her heart, try giving your attention to some other girl.

CERTAINLY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am eighteen and am keeping company with a young man for the past year. Now this young man's folks live out of town and invited me to their home. Should I accept their invitation? A. B. S.

If the invitation is from his mother I would have you accept by all means. It will mean a great deal to your future happiness to get on good terms with them, and the visit may give you an enlightening view of your lover. I hope it will prove favorable.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

On Fancy's Wings.

A sweet young thing in white fluttered toward the aeroplane mechanic, and resolutely took possession of him, asking all those usual senseless questions that now have become the common lot of aviators and their assistants.

But this particular assistant—and who can wonder; was not the sweet young thing in white a damsel quite adorable?—strove bravely to satisfy the curiosity of his fair inquirer; and explained with remarkable clearness the working of a monoplane.

Still, there is a limit even to the patience shown by susceptible man toward charming maid.

"Tell me," inquired the sweet young thing in white, "what happens when your engine stops in the air? Can't you come down?"

"That's just the trouble," sighed the mechanic, mastered by his sense of the ridiculous. "D'you know, there are a dozen or so airmen now stranded above France. Their engines have stopped; they can't get down, and they are starving to death!"

Later she learned the truth. So ended what might have been a romance.

CHAPTER XV.

THERE is a numbing quality to all sudden and great sorrow. Psychologists tell us that the mind is so dazed by the shock of grief that it can not grasp the fearful truth in all its details. Whatever causes this partial insensibility, we are thankful for it.

Mary Danforth was like one stunned during the days that followed her father's death. She listened in stony silence while the facts of his seizure were related to her. He had come up from the office, and after dinner dressed to go to her graduation exercises, but had dropped to the floor as he started to leave the apartment, and in five minutes stopped breathing. He had never regained consciousness.

This was no time for subterfuges, and Mrs. Danforth was soon made acquainted with the state of affairs between her daughter and Gordon Craig. She was told that no formal engagement existed, but that the pair loved each other and were going to wait for each other until such time as they were ready to marry. The bereaved wife, made suddenly old by the great sorrow of her life, clung to the young man, and sobbed out her woe and her trust in him.

"I have found a son," she said at last. "God bless you, dear boy!"

Craig bent his tall head to kiss her pale cheek. "I shall try to be worthy of your daughter," he whispered, "and of your confidence in me."

He remained in New York for a week. The changes in his business, of which he told Mary, would keep him from the road hereafter, another man having been deputed to travel for his firm, while he was to remain at the home office.

"Hard times have hit us as well as the rest of the world," he said regretfully, "and matters do not look as bright as they did. But I shall stick to one job and shall hope for a salary that will warrant my marrying in a year or two. Heaven speed the time!"

And Mary was not ashamed to add a sincere "Amen!" to this hope.

It was on the day after the funeral that the mother and the daughter learned that, added to the loss of husband and father, another trouble had befallen them. Investigation of Mr. Danforth's affairs brought to light the fact that his business was in a desperate condition and that he had lived right up to his income. His lawyer told the two women the painful truth that when the funeral expenses were paid and a few bills that Mr. Danforth had contracted were settled the pair would be well-nigh penniless except for a small life insurance the deceased had carried in favor of his wife.

"Your husband took that Western trip on the chance of saving the day," the lawyer explained to the widow. "He hoped to put a business deal through out there, but he failed. I think the disappointment, coupled with the dread of what was before him, hastened his death."

"He did it all for us," Mary told Craig. "He lived just to make us happy. He wanted us to have a pretty home and all that we wanted, and he could not bear to tell us that we must part with these things. Now I can see why he was taken from us. It would have broken his heart had he lived to see us lose what we have been accustomed to."

Mary spoke firmly, yet gently. "I am going to work, mother," she asserted. "No, do not look distressed at the idea! It is what father would wish—what he always told me I must be prepared to do if the need arose."

"It will not be for long," Craig reminded the mother. "I hope that matters will go so well with me that I can come for you and Mary soon. Then we three will have a little home of our own."

"I could not accept it even from Gordon," remarked Mrs. Danforth later to her daughter, "if I did not have that insurance money of my own."

The daughter said nothing. She could not bear to tell her unsophisticated mother what a little way the money, of which she spoke so confidently, would go. The income from it would not support one woman, no matter how economical she might be, and the girl knew the principal would be drawn upon gradually until it was all gone. And then?

"I will be able to support her myself," she thought bravely. "She shall use as little of her own money as possible. I would not want her to be entirely dependent upon Gordon—even though he is willing to care for her. I must get to work at once."

The place she secured was not a brilliant one, but she had not expected that it would be. She was engaged as stenographer and typewriter to a kindly, middle-aged real estate agent. He had a small office and her salary matched the office. But what else could a beginner hope for?

Thus it came about that when Gordon Craig turned his face westward again he knew that the girl he loved was the sole dependence of her widowed mother. His heart ached when he remembered that the pretty home must be given up, and the handsome furniture sold—except such pieces as the two lonely women would need to furnish the tiny flat they would take in an unfashionable part of town. He longed to stay and help them.

"But my job won't wait for me!" he muttered with a bitter sign. "If I were only rich!"

Which exclamation is such a common one that it is hardly worth recording.

Barber—Poor Jim has been sent to an asylum.

Victim (in the chair)—Who is Jim?

"Jim is my twin brother, sir. Jim has long been brooding over the hard times, an' I suppose he finally got crazy."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. He and me has worked side by side for years, and we were so alike we couldn't tell each other apart. We both brooded, too. No money in this business now."

"What's the reason?"

"Prices too low. Unless a customer takes a shampoo it doesn't pay to shave or hair-cut. Poor Jim! I caught him trying to cut a customer's throat because he refused a shampoo, so I had to have the poor fellow locked up. Makes me sad. Sometimes I feel sorry I didn't let him slash all he wanted to. It might have saved his reason. Shampoo, sir?"

"Yes!"

It was Pat's first day in the sawmill, and his duties consisted of working the circular saw. The foreman directed him as to its use, then left him in order to attend to some pressing matter. Having occasion, however, to pass Pat's way again, he was somewhat annoyed to see him standing idly surveying his hand.

"Well, what's wrong?" he said sharply.

"Sure and begorra I've lost a finger," replied Pat.

"How did it happen?" inquired the foreman.

"Sure, I was jist doin' like this when—bejabbers! There's anither one off!"

The daughter of the house had just returned from a visit to her cousins, during which she had become engaged to a rising young man whom she had met at the home of her relatives. To her mother she was extolling the virtues of her intended.

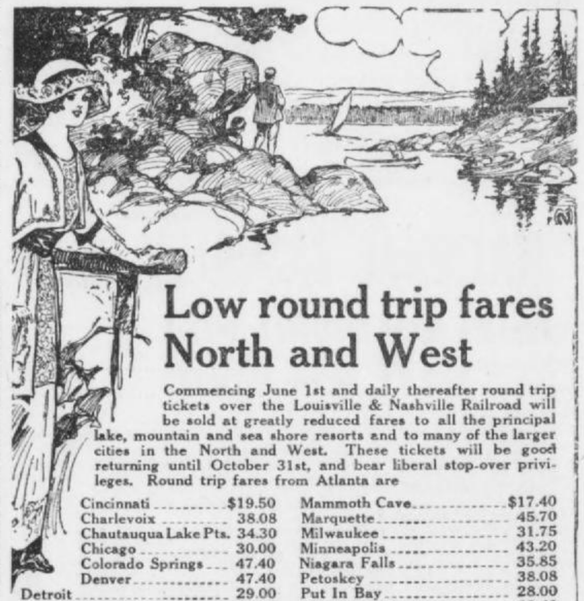

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "he's just grand! So square, so upright, so highly polished. Why, even in his notes there is such a sympathetic tone that sometimes I wonder if I am not reading the music of the gods!"

"Mercy's sake, child!" interrupted mother, "are you talking about a young man or a piano?"

"I want you to put up some wall paper I have bought," said the country clergyman, meeting the local man-of-all-work. "When can you do it?"

"Well, sir," he exclaimed, "you see, I'm rather busy just now. I hung Mrs. S—— yesterday; I'm hanging your church warden to-day; but, if it's convenient, I'll drop round and hang your reverence on Wednesday."

Daysey Mayme And Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE two pillow cushions, which, with the Honorable Lysander John Appleton, Kin Commissioner General of the United States, compose the Pillow Cushion Club, sat stiff, upright and unbending in their corners, waiting for the meeting to begin.

It was a joy for the speaker of the evening to look at them. So well-stuffed, so self-satisfied, so blank of expression: they looked like women whose sole ambition in life is to keep their figures, and who place all their hope in a straight-front corset.

Lysander John gave them an encouraging smile. "My wife and daughter," he said, "who spend most of their time from home reading papers on How to Make Home Life Beautiful, never had audiences more intelligent and appreciative than mine. Ladies, I thank you!

"I have delved into Emerson, I have wandered through Carlyle, and I have failed to find any problems more serious than those I will submit tonight. As members of the Pillow Cushion Club we must grapple with these questions. We must never again shirk our share of the burden of the world's progress.

"Doubt, my dear audience, if my wife and daughter at any of their various clubs in the past month have wrestled with more vital questions than those I will lay before you this evening.

"First. How soon after an article is borrowed is it proper to go over with an excuse demanding its return?

"If a friend buys an automobile can it be construed as a gentle hint if you buy yourself an automobile coat?

"When a man's family consists of himself and wife, and he buys a four-passenger car, does that indicate a kind, generous disposition, or a desire to escape being bored to death by riding alone with his wife?

"If either must be slighted in a meal, the soup or the pudding, which should it be? In other words, is it wiser to smooth down the bristles of temperamental man by starting him feeling good at a meal, or to finish him feeling satisfied?

"Is it economical and proper these hard times to bury a woman's false hair with her, when, with a little change in the color, her husband's next wife might wear it?

"My next problem," he concluded "is one which will not permit of our speedy adjournment if we attempt to solve it. It is this: How many different ways are there for a man to act the fool?"

'Phone or Wire.

The following letter appears in a Boston newspaper:

Sir—I called at your editorial rooms yesterday, entering the outer chamber. The boy was absent. On the door, which was closed, leading to the sanctum sanctorium, was a sign, "No Admittance." On the wall next to the door was another sign, "No Loitering Here." The question is, what's a feller to do? F. H. L.

"I hear you're going to marry Archie Bluebloud, Diana. Is it true?" asked one young society woman of another.

"Marry him? I should think not! What on earth could I do with the man? He can't ride, he can't play tennis, golf, nor, for that matter, can he even drive a motor car!"

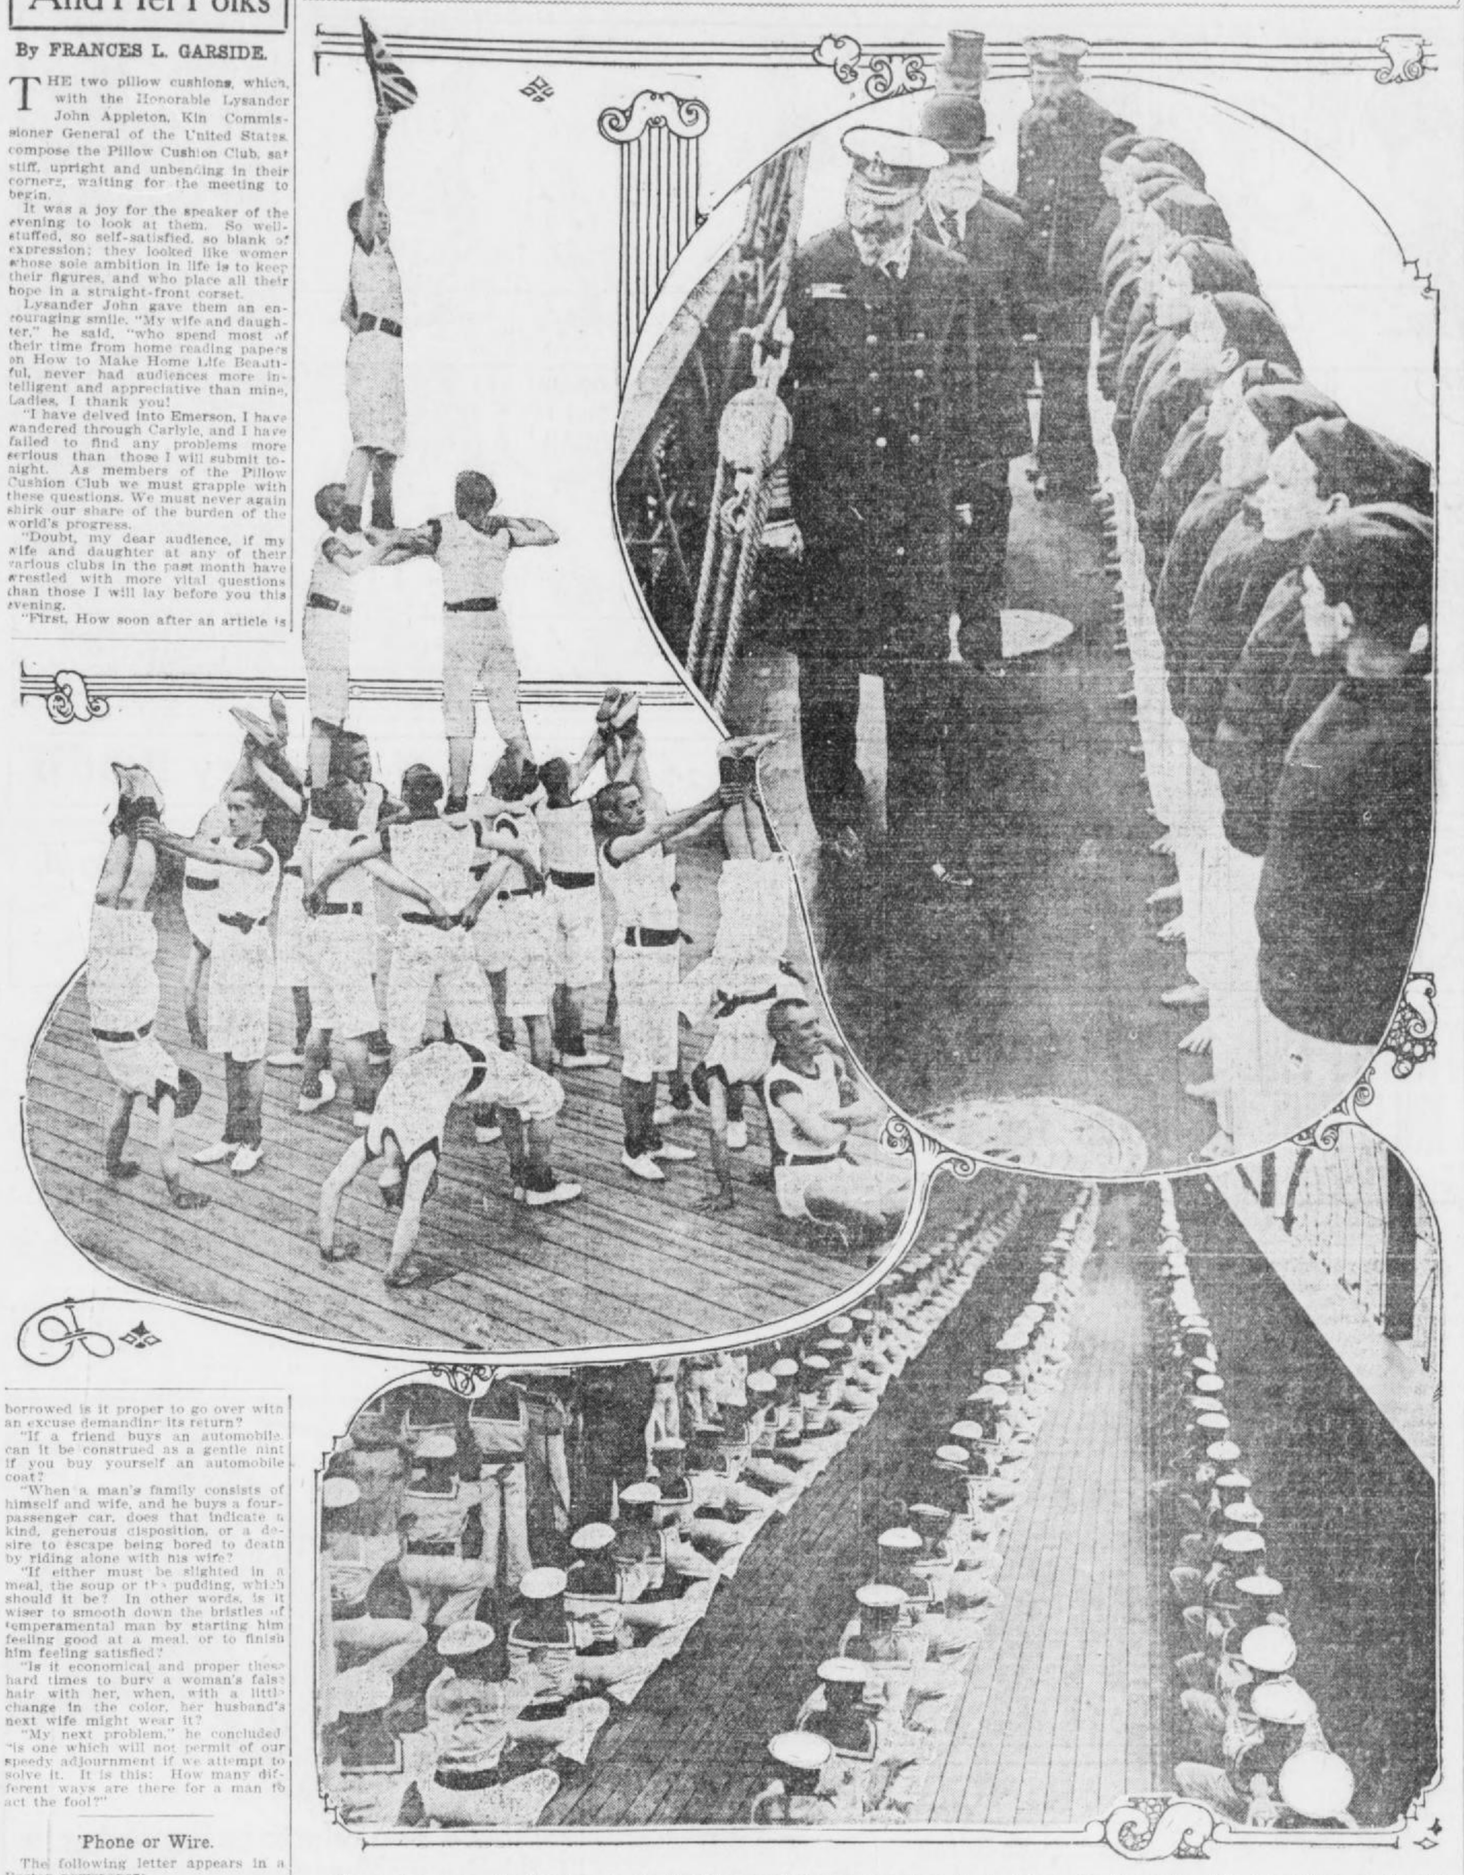

"Oh," said the friend, "but he can swim beautifully, you know."

"Swim, indeed! Now, I ask you, would you like a husband you had to keep in an aquarium?"

How England Trains Her Boys for Naval Fighting Men

The pictures are of sailor boys in the British navy being reviewed on the training ship Exmouth. The top picture on the left shows them in a gymnastic display in which they have agility that a circus acrobat might envy. On the right on top the picture shows Prince Louis, of Battenberg, inspecting the boys, while the bottom picture shows a movement in the gymnastic drill.

FROM LUCILE'S DIARY

AUNT RACHEL has been staying with us on her way home from California, and I have passed a good deal of time with her, as I am exceedingly fond of her. I really think I am her favorite niece. One morning when I was helping her dress—I love to pay her little attentions—I found that there were no buttonholes in the new lingerie blouse she had intended to wear.

"Dear me!" I said. "We must get Cousin Fannie to rectify this at once. She'll be delighted to make the buttonholes for you."

"Why don't you make them for me, Lucile?" asked Aunt Rachel.

"Why, you see——" I began, and then hesitated.

"Yes, I see, Lucile," Aunt Rachel said. "You don't count buttonhole-making among your accomplishments. In my day a young woman was not considered well bred if she could not make a perfect buttonhole."

"You make me quite ashamed of my shortcomings," I told her. "You see, Cousin Fannie has always been rather proud of her beautiful buttonholes, and it would have seemed like infringing on her rights if I had taken to making them, too. Dear Cousin Fannie is a little sensitive, and I don't like to hurt her feelings."

"It's quite possible that she would like you to share her glory," Aunt Rachel remarked. "If you wish to learn, I'll agree to make it right with Fannie."

That afternoon I went to Cousin Fannie's room and asked her to give me a lesson in making buttonholes.

"I'm awfully busy, Lucile," she said, "for I'm trying to finish this waist that Aunt Rachel gave me the silk for. I wish to wear it to-night at the settlement reception. If you have buttonholes to make I'll be glad to do them for you to-morrow."

I felt so disappointed that I said: "Aunt Rachel criticises me because I don't know how to make buttonholes, and you won't take the time to teach me. I did so wish to learn this afternoon." I could scarcely restrain my tears as I spoke.

"Why, Lucile, if you are so much in earnest about it of course I'll show you how," said Cousin Fannie.

So we went to work. I made buttonhole after buttonhole all afternoon, for I was determined if I made them at all to excel. Cousin Fannie told me that evening that with a little more practice I should soon equal her. So I kept at it every spare minute for two days until I felt competent to make the buttonholes in Aunt Rachel's blouse. When she saw them she was so surprised and delighted at my skill that she immediately offered to buy me the perfectly charming chiffon set that I had been talking to her about.

I was so enchanted at owning the coveted set that I made an occasion to wear it by calling on Gertrude Bates the very day I received it.

She was busy with the dressmaker, but I sat quite a while chatting until her brother, Carl, came home. I was just going when Gertrude remarked that the little silk coat which was being made was all done but the three large buttonholes. I offered to make them.

"Why, do you know how to make buttonholes?" she exclaimed.

I replied by taking the garment and setting to work with a nonchalance that I was amused to see alarmed her.

"Well, you're a wonder," said Carl when I had made a buttonhole and he had examined it. "I don't believe my tailor could beat this."

As it was growing late, I suggested that Gertrude allow me to take the coat home and finish the buttonholes the next day.

Rather Tired.

I was rather tired the next morning, as I had been sewing so much more than I was accustomed to do, so I asked Cousin Fannie to make the two remaining buttonholes in Gertrude's coat. She works so rapidly that I knew it would be no trouble to her. I was glad to have them done, for George Reguier called up on the phone and asked me to go out to his tennis club that afternoon.

As I had so suitable wrap, I wore Gertrude's fascinating little coat. I thought she would be glad to have me wear it after all the work I had done for her. I was astonished when I saw her walking toward me across the courts, for I naturally supposed she was at home with the dressmaker.

"This is a jolly surprise," I said gayly, trying to make room for her on the bench.

"It's certainly a surprise," she replied coldly, and, looking fixedly at the jacket, she passed on.

I explained to George she must be suffering from one of her severe headaches, for I could not bear to have him think any friend of mine would be so rude.

Although I sent her the coat by parcel post the next day, I have not had a single word of acknowledgment or thanks from her. Gertrude, I fear, does not number gratitude among her graces.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Let me see it," cried she, and Mr. Gryce, greatly pleased at the success of his trick, handed her the picture of Genevieve Gretorex, satisfied that if this good woman continued to find it like the Mildred Farley she had mentioned, he should find that Mildred Farley was the name the young woman he had himself first taken for the original of this picture, and in whose fate despite his reason and his years he had found himself so much interested that he had come here at this late hour of the night to learn her name, and if possible, her dwelling place.

His success surpassed his hopes. The old lady looked at the picture, shook her head and looked again.

Somewhat Different.

"How these photographs can deceive?" cried she. "If I had not stopped to look at this twice, I would have sworn it was Mildred Farley's face, but I see now that she wears her hair quite different, and that she is older and much better dressed than Mildred could ever hope to be. Nevertheless, there is a very striking similarity, and I should like to see Miss—— Miss——"

"Handscombe," put in the detective.

"——and Mildred together. It would be a pleasing study." And she stared long and earnestly at the picture, winding up with: "I should like to show it to Mildred."

This was putting herself exactly in the position desired by Mr. Gryce.

"You can do so," he observed, "if you do not have to carry it far nor keep it long. Does Mildred live anywhere near you? Can you see her to-night?"

"She lives in my fourth story front room, sir; Mildred Farley is one of my boarders."

Mr. Gryce stroked his trembling right knee with a very loving hand. "One of your boarders," he repeated. "She is doubtless then upstairs asleep."

"No, poor girl, no. She is a dressmaker and sometimes does not close her eyes till 1 o'clock at night. She is not asleep, but come to think of it, she is not in the house at all. She went away for a short vacation a few days ago, and though she promised to be home this afternoon, I believe she did not come. It has always been my hope that Dr. Molesworth would marry her. She is a lovely girl and he is a very fine man. Why, then, shouldn't they come together?"

"And what you makes you think they will not? Why shouldn't it be she he is going to marry?"

"Why? Because they would have told me. He knows and she knows there is nothing I wish so much. It would be preposterous for them to keep it to themselves after all I have said. No, if Dr. Molesworth is going to marry any one (and I don't believe yet he is), it must be some ridiculous chit of a girl he has met away from here; and—Mildred——why, Lena!"

This exclamation was caused by the appearance at the door of a young girl who the moment she saw Mr. Gryce, shrank back and started to run away.

But the emphatic "Lena!" stopped her, and in a moment the old lady was in the hall; a whispered conference ensued, followed by the re-entrance of the good woman with a note in her hand.

"Well, I never!" she exclaimed, looking first at the letter she held and then at the feeble figure of the old man who had risen with well feigned indifference as if to go. 'A note from Dr. Molesworth, which he left on purpose for me! and that girl forgot to give it to me till now! What can he have to say!" And breaking the seal, she read the few enclosed lines with a growing wonder that ended in the joyous exclamation of "Good gracious, it is Mildred, after all! He is going to marry her to-night, and bring her home to-morrow. Well, I will give up. Never a word to me about it, and I so fond of them both! I don't understand it, folks are so queer." And she fluttered to and fro in ill-disguised joy, talking and muttering to herself, while Mr. Gryce pulled his muffler about him and began to move slowly toward the door.

"I declare," she broke in, as her attention was recalled to him by this movement, "it does seem a pity for you to go out again into the cold. If you think you would be better here, I have an empty room." But at this moment a carriage was heard to stop before the door, and, startled into a new train of thought by this unwonted occurrence, she moved towards the front windows, exclaiming: "I do believe they have come now!"

A Tragedy.

But at her first glance through the curtains she drew back with a frightened air, and crying, "Oh, what can this mean!" hurried towards the door with every sign of intense agitation.

Mr. Gryce at once took her place at the window, but he did not look out, for at that moment a man's voice was heard in the hall, and the wary detective thought it prudent to resume his role of the self-absorbed, semi-oblivious old man whose infirmities were so engrossing he had neither eyes nor ears for what went on about him. It was well he did so, for in another moment his imperturbality received a great shock by the certainly unlooked-for entrance of two men bearing a burden which, at one glance, showed itself to be the inert form of a young woman. From the appearance of one of these he judged him to be Dr. Molesworth. They were followed by the landlady, crying and wringing her hands.

"Mildred! Mildred! What has happened to you, poor girl!" came in piercing tones from the latter, as the sad burden, having been deposited on a sofa, she approached, and drew aside the cloak which had hitherto concealed the face.

"O God! how pale she is; how cold! Doctor, has she only fainted or is she—"

"Dead," came from his lips in deep and thrilling tones, while his gaze sought the landlady's face and rested there with an intentness he might not have displayed had he noticed the old manmumbling and chattering to himself in a corner.

"And what has killed her? What has destroyed my poor girl, the very night you hoped to marry her?"

"Shall I tell you?" The doctor had waved the man aside who had assisted him in his fearful task, and now stood with folded arms side by side with the landlady, looking down upon the still, set face which, with the blue robe that enshrouded the form, were already so well known to the watching detective. "She preferred this bridal to the one I had planned for her. Now you know all." And with just one more deep and searching look at the landlady's startled face, he walked up to his assistant.

"That is all," said he. "I will do the rest. The coroner will probably be here soon and—who are you?"

This was aid to a small, slight man who at this moment appeared in the doorway.

"I am a detective, sir," was the reply, and he was doubtless going to say more, but he caught an unexpected sight of Mr. Gryce, and paused in some confusion. He had recognized a superior.

As for Mr. Gryce himself he had scarcely noticed the young man; he was too intent upon the doctor who, at the utterance of the word detective, had wheeled suddenly about with the evident intention of hiding his surprise. But a mirror hung opposite him, and in this the watchful eye of Mr. Gryce detected such an expression of uncontrollable shock and anxiety that he inwardly congratulated himself over the curiosity which had drawn him to this house.

The confusion, if there was such, in the physician's mind, was but momentary. In an instant he turned and confronting the intruder, asked with some severity:

"And what work is there for a detective here? The young lady has taken poison and is dead. I have notified the coroner——"

"Pardon me," interrupted the other, with every appearance of humility and respect. "I have come from the coroner. I am only a messenger and my errand is to say that as he can not come until morning it might relieve you to have me to stop here and see that there is no interference with the remains. It is a common duty and it is not the first time I have performed it."

A Word of Protest.

"But it is nobody's duty to watch over this poor girl's body but myself," broke in the landlady, with hearty indignation. "Do you forget that it is a woman and a lady you are talking about, and do you think I will stand by and see any man, much less a stranger, take the place which only one of her own sex should occupy? She is no relative of mine, but I loved her and—doctor, you have some regard for her memory, I am sure; send that man away; he has already been here too long."

And with a care that was almost motherly in its tenderness, she drew the end of the cloak once again over the poor dead face, dropping a tear as she did so, which was not unseen by Mr. Gryce if it was unappreciated by the stern and bitter-souled physician.

"But, madam"—that stranger began.

"Stop!" cried Dr. Molesworth, "I will explain to her." And in a few words he told her how in cases of violent death, it was thought advisable for the Coroner to see the victim as soon after decease as possible, and when, as in this case, circumstances demanded delay, no one, not even a mother could rightfully interfere with whatever surveillance the Coroner thought it his duty to impose. So you will let this man stay here, and I will stay, too; for it is as much my wish as yours that every respect should be shown the one whom living I honored sufficiently to wish to make my wife."

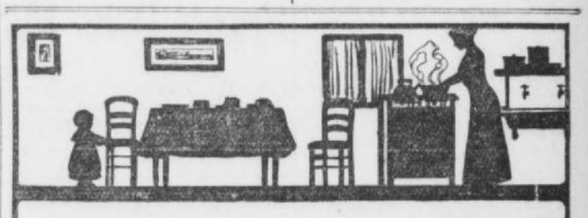

The landlady shook her head with an aggressive air, but made no further protest. Dr. Molesworth pointed to a chair and the representative of the Coroner sat down; then while the former glanced at Mr. Gryce, who had just caught his attention, a slight noise was heard in the hall and a second stranger entered.

"What does this mean?" angrily cried the doctor. "Is it possible that the front door has been left open?" And brusquely pushing by the newcomer, he shut the offending door and then coming back, asked his business of the last arrival.

The fellow, who was slimmer than the other and much more dapper, pulled a small book and pencil from his pocket. It was enough. Dr. Molesworth recognized a reporter, and gave his irritation full play.

"You are intruding," cried he. "This is a private house and no one asked you to enter. As for the calamity which has occurred, learn of it how and where you will; I shall tell you nothing."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

EVANS ADVISES BOYS TO CADDY ON GOLF LINKS

By Chick Evans.

MY business takes me to many offices throughout the city, and these little visits bring many interesting experiences. Not long ago, as I was entering a certain office, the boy near the door looked squarely at me for a moment, then brightened up and said: "Hello, Chick, don't you remember me? I caddied for you at Wheaton and you called me Walter." It was a very pleasant memory that the boy evoked and in a moment he was recalling some particular lucky shot that I had played and long ago forgotten. It was a great pleasure to me to be remembered by this young boy and it was a double pleasure to bring to mind once more a very happy occasion.

This little incident, however, merely leads to a subject very near to my heart—the future of the little caddie, for this boy is not the only caddie that I have met in offices in my tramps about the city. What becomes of the caddy when the short, too short, period of his school days is past and he must desert the links for other employment?

Caddie's Work Healthful.

I do not think that there can be a better all-around employment for the small boy than caddying. It is wholesome, outdoor work, and has brought health to many a delicate boy. Almost every other form of labor is injurious to the small boy, and, of course, caddy bags can be cruelly heavy, but as a rule, the player with a heavy bag does not choose a small caddy. The caddy enjoys fresh air and interest in a game which are all the advantages of play. It has always seemed to me that it is more interesting to carry a bag full of clubs when a fine golf match is in progress than to occupy a good seat at a game of baseball or football. From a physical point of view it is certainly better for a boy to tramp happily over yielding turf than to sit in cramped attitude on crowded stands to watch other men exercise. The caddy is really a part of the game; he has the same exercise as his employer; he sees the play and is interested, and is frequently consulted as to choice of club. Furthermore, he has the advantage of association with the members of the golf club, and these members are usually the leading business and professional men of the community.

Most of Them "Making Good."

There is a general belief that club members are dissipated, mere club rounders, in fact. My experience flatly contradicts this. The influence of the golf links is wholesome, physically and morally, and the boy fully enjoys its advantages. When the time comes for the caddy to go to work he usually obtains his first job through the good offices of a club member. I should not like to think that the majority of caddies become professionals, good as that work is, and I believe that only a small percentage do so. It is easy to trace from caddy to office boy, but in higher positions the caddy identity is sometimes hidden. I believe, however, that caddies are to be found in every walk of life, and I am sure that they are "making good."

White Sees Whitney Work Out

Frank Dons Mitts With Packey

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 7.—Has Charley White, pound for pound the best boxer in the game today, put one over on Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter from Cedar Rapids, Iowa? This is the question fans who were at O'Connell's gymnasium yesterday are asking around sporting circles to-day. Whitney and White meet in Atlanta next Wednesday.

Several hundred fans saw Whitney and McFarland box three rounds at breakneck speed yesterday. They were also aware of the fact that Charley was an interested spectator. Probably every one in the gymnasium, with the exception of Whitney, knew this. Maybe, if Frank had known White was present he would have ceased in his grind. But, nevertheless, he didn't and the battle Whitney and McFarland put up was worth any one's time.

* * *

THE two boys had a merry battle. They mixed it at close quarters and boxed at long range. Packey wanted the work-out, as he is training for a busy fall campaign. Whitney is a rough and tough scrapper. Just the kind McFarland likes to work with. The rounds were full of action and the crowd was on its feet during several stages of the combat.

Two glaring eyes kept watching every move made by the boy from Cedar Rapids. These same eyes also noticed that McFarland, who knows White's style of boxing better than any other ringman in the world, was mixing it with Whitney. He also was aware of the fact that Whitney's defense was kept high and that Packey was having the time of his life trying to get home his left hook.

* * *

NOW, every one knows that Charley's best blow is his left hook, followed by a right cross. Whether White beats Whitney or not the writer does not care to predict. But one thing is certain, and that is that Charley will have the time of his life hitting Whitney with this punch.

Whitney knows White's style, and he has solved a defense for the Chicago boy's favorite wallop. Charley saw Whitney box yesterday. Frank didn't know it. He showed everything he had in his scrap with Packey, and White was present to pick up a few pointers. When Whitney jumped out of the ring it was the first time he knew that his coming opponent was an interested spectator. But Frank is not one of those who worries over things of this kind. He simply smiled and stated that he would stroll over to Lewis' gymnasium to-morrow and watch Charley in action.

* * *

WHEN White left the gymnasium many of those who were present thought he was bound for home. White evidently wanted them to think so, but he had another errand on. Charley does his boxing at Lewis' gymnasium and that was where he was bound for. The writer knows Charley like a book and thought it best to take a trip to the "gym" and see just what the Chicago boy was going to put over.

Just as we surmised, Charley picked up "Special Delivery" Hirsch, a tough lightweight, on his way to work out, and it wasn't many more minutes before he was hard at work. And it was not long before Hirsch threw up the gloves in disgust. But the blow that made Hirsch quit was not a left hook to the jaw. It was a left to the stomach. It did not take Charley long to find out that he would have to perfect some other punch if he hoped to defeat Whitney. He wanted to try out a new punch, and it is dollars to doughnuts that it will be the left to the stomach instead of a left hook to the jaw that Mr. White uses against Whitney in Atlanta on August 13.

TWENTY-FIVE MILE RACE AT SAUCER FRIDAY

A TWENTY-FIVE-MILE race is to be the feature event of a swell-looking program that Jack Prince has scheduled at his saucer Friday night. All ten of the famous riders now here will start, and the way their machines are traveling these days it is almost a cinch that a new record will be established for the distance.

This race is for the championship of the South. Richards wants that title, so does McNeil and all the others. And an Atlanta boy, Harry Glenn, has a fine chance of copping this event, too. Harry showed marked improvement last Tuesday night, and he ought to be even better Friday.

By the way, Glenn is to be seen in another match race. He hasn't been defeated yet in a two-handed, or rather a two-machine event. But in George Lockner he is going up against a real racer this time. It will be a two-mile affair, two best heats in three.

The Motordrome Purse will open the card. There will be three heats of one mile and a final of two miles.

Following is the complete program for Friday night:

First Event.

Motordrome Purse (qualifying heats, one mile; final, two miles; winners of trial heats and second man in fastest heat to qualify). First Heat—Richards, Lockner, Graves.

Second Event.

Motordrome Purse—Second Heat—Glenn, Renel, Swartz.

Third Event.

Motordrome Purse—Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis, Luther, Shields.

Fourth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

(Two-mile heats; two best in three.)

Fifth Event.

Motordrome Purse—Final heat.

Sixth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

Seventh Event.

Invitation Race—Distance, 5 miles. Open to all comers.

Eighth Event.

Special Match Race—Third heat, if necessary.

Ninth Event.

Twenty-five-mile race for championship of the South—Graves, Swartz, Shields, Lockner, Richards, Luther, Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

GRIFFIN AND STRACHM QUALIFY FOR NET TITLE

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Clarence Griffin and John Strachm, of San Francisco, will meet Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas Bunday for the national tennis championship in doubles at Newport, R. I., on August 18. They won this right by defeating in straight sets Gustave Touchard and W. M. Washburn, of New York, Eastern tennis champions. The scores in the games yesterday at Onwentsia were 6-1, 8-6 and 6-4. The Easterners were outplayed and outgeneraled in every game.

FITTERY IN NO-HIT GAME.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 7.—Jake Fittery, pitcher for the Evansville club, of the Central League, yesterday shut out Terre Haute, not allowing a hit during the nine innings. Only four local players reached first, and two went to second, where they were left.

Baby Cross a Real Boxing Fan

Roots for Pa to Capture Title

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Baby Cross is a boxing fan.

She is not familiar with left hooks and right uppercuts, but she does know her daddy is going to be the next lightweight champion of the world. And all one needs to be convinced is a two-minute talk with her.

Cross has won many friends through his earnest work in the ring, but he has no more enthusiastic admirer than his little daughter. "When daddy is champion" she will reach the mecca of all her dreams, and plans for that day fill many of her waking hours.

Of course, she never has seen daddy in a real battle, but often during training work she and her mother are at the ringside watching him in his practice bouts. She is fond of the rope skipping and weight pulling, and always is interested in the boxing which forms part of the daily program, but most of all she loves the frolic with daddy after his strenuous work is done, and the kiss which is sure to follow the fun.

Baby Has Warm Friends.

Many who have seen Cross work will be glad to see him lightweight champion if he attains that honor, but happiest and proudest of all will be his baby daughter.

Baby Cross was at her father's training camp while he prepared for his bouts with "Bud" Anderson and Matty Baldwin. The New Yorker won both contests, and he says that in future his little daughter will have to accompany him on his tours of the country. In this way he believes that he will never be defeated.

Cross is not the first boxer who has visited the coast that has had a baby daughter for a mascot. Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, has two baby mascots and they are always at his training camp when he is preparing for a match. It is a pretty picture to see the Cleveland boy playing on the white sand at Venice with his two children while his young wife sits near by.

Cross has hopes of securing a bout with Champion Willie Ritchie. Leach claims that he would be able to defeat the Frisco boy over the 20-round route. He declares that he would surely knock out the champion if he could land his famous right-hand punch which has flattened many a famous ringman.

May Battle Joe Rivers.

If Cross does not get a date with Ritchie, he will probably be signed to clash with Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight.

Rivers is a favorite on the coast, even though he was beaten by Ritchie, and he would be a big drawing card if pitted against a boxer of Cross' ability.

In the meantime, Baby Cross is rooting for her dad to become champion. And maybe she wouldn't be glad if Leach would permit her to see a regular ring bout. But the hard-hitting lightweight says that the baby's charm might be broken if she occupied a ringside seat.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Charley White, the Chicago sensation, who meets Frank Whitney at the Auditorium-Armory on August 13, is doing his training at Nate Lewis's gymnasium in Chicago. Charley plans to arrive in Atlanta Saturday morning, one day later than Whitney.

* * *

This will give the fans several days to look over the rival lightweights. Both boys will complete their training grind here. Whitney will work at the Atlanta Athletic Club, while White is expected to train at Ponce DeLeon ball park.

* * *

Despite the fact that Gunboat Smith has won every fight in which he has participated in the past year, experts predict defeat for him when he tackles Jim Flynn on next Friday night at Madison Square Garden, New York. Most of the experts claim that Flynn's experience will bring him home a winner over the Easterner.

* * *

Both Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers were sidetracked by Willie Ritchie. The champion has decided to defend his title against Freddie Welsh in a 20-round engagement at Vancouver on September 1.

* * *

Wolgast, however, appears to be the big loser. The Mexican has signed articles to meet Leach Cross in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles, and it would not surprise many to see this bout draw as much money as the Ritchie-Welsh set-to. On the other hand, Wolgast must now look for a suitable opponent to meet.

Jack Dillon, of Indianapolis, and "Knockout" Brown, of Chicago, may wage battle soon. Nate Lewis, manager of Brown, writes from Chicago that he has signed his protege to box Dillon at Indianapolis. The bout will take place some time next month at Terre Haute, Ind. They have agreed to weigh 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Mike Glover, the Boston lightweight, is earnestly striving to get a match with Jack Britton. The former showed much class in his recent mills in the "Bean Town" city.

* * *

Packey McFarland wants it to be known that there is no chance to drag him into the welterweight class. He says he is able to do 135 pounds and will continue to box at that weight.

* * *

Jack White has been made an even money bet against Johnny Dundee for the 20-round clash at Los Angeles on August 12. Since Joe Levy has taken hold of Jack he has shown a 50 per cent improvement.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT BY PROXY.

A rhymster sat at his type machine
And wrote him a gladsome lay
Of fish that gleam in the woodland stream
And leap in the silver spray.
He sang of musky and bass and trout
And his little canoe of birch,
But the only fish he had ever pulled out
Was a little anemic perch.

He sang a song of the virgin wood,
Of the forest old and sere
Where the hunters creep in the runways deep
And wait for the nimble deer.
He sang of the moose that he longed to pot
As it called in its far-flung tones,
But the only thing he ever shot
Was a pair of the rolling bones.

He sang a song of the bounding main
Where the gulls and the mermaids play,
Of the whistling gale and the bulging sail
And the tang of the drifting spray.
He sang of the joy as he lightly tripped
O'er the sea on his bounding bark,
But the only boat he had ever skipped
Was a rowboat in Piedmont Park.

SPEED.

Old Joe Dunn smote it to the fence,
It was an awful bingle,
And by a burst of fearful speed
He almost made a single.

The president of the Federal League has retired on account of overwork, but there is no truth in the rumor that he was overworked in the act of counting gate receipts.

While there are skeptical persons who do not believe that Mr. Dunn is fast, it is a well-known fact that he can cling faster to a base than any athlete in baseball.

We are indebted to the Federal League for the custom of granting magnates an occasional leave of absence. If the practice only spreads to the National League all will be well.

Old King Cole looms up like a world beater in the American Association. So, also, did Laverne Chappell.

TILLIS SELLS MONTGOMERY BALL CLUB

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 7.—It was announced here last night that Richard Tillis, owner of the Montgomery Baseball club's franchise, has sold out to an organization of business men, headed by M. P. Wilcox.

The price was reported as $12,800. The transfer of ownership took place at once.

This is taken to mean that Montgomery will remain indefinitely in the Southern League. The new owners are popular here, and it also is expected that there will be a considerable revival of interest among local fans.

Obstinate Acne Quickly Yields

Fine Remedy That Clears Skin of Pimples on Cheeks, Temples, Sides of Nose and Chin.

Acne attacks the glandular structure of the skin, more particularly those tiny glands that secrete fat.

And it is here that S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, is most active in its influence.

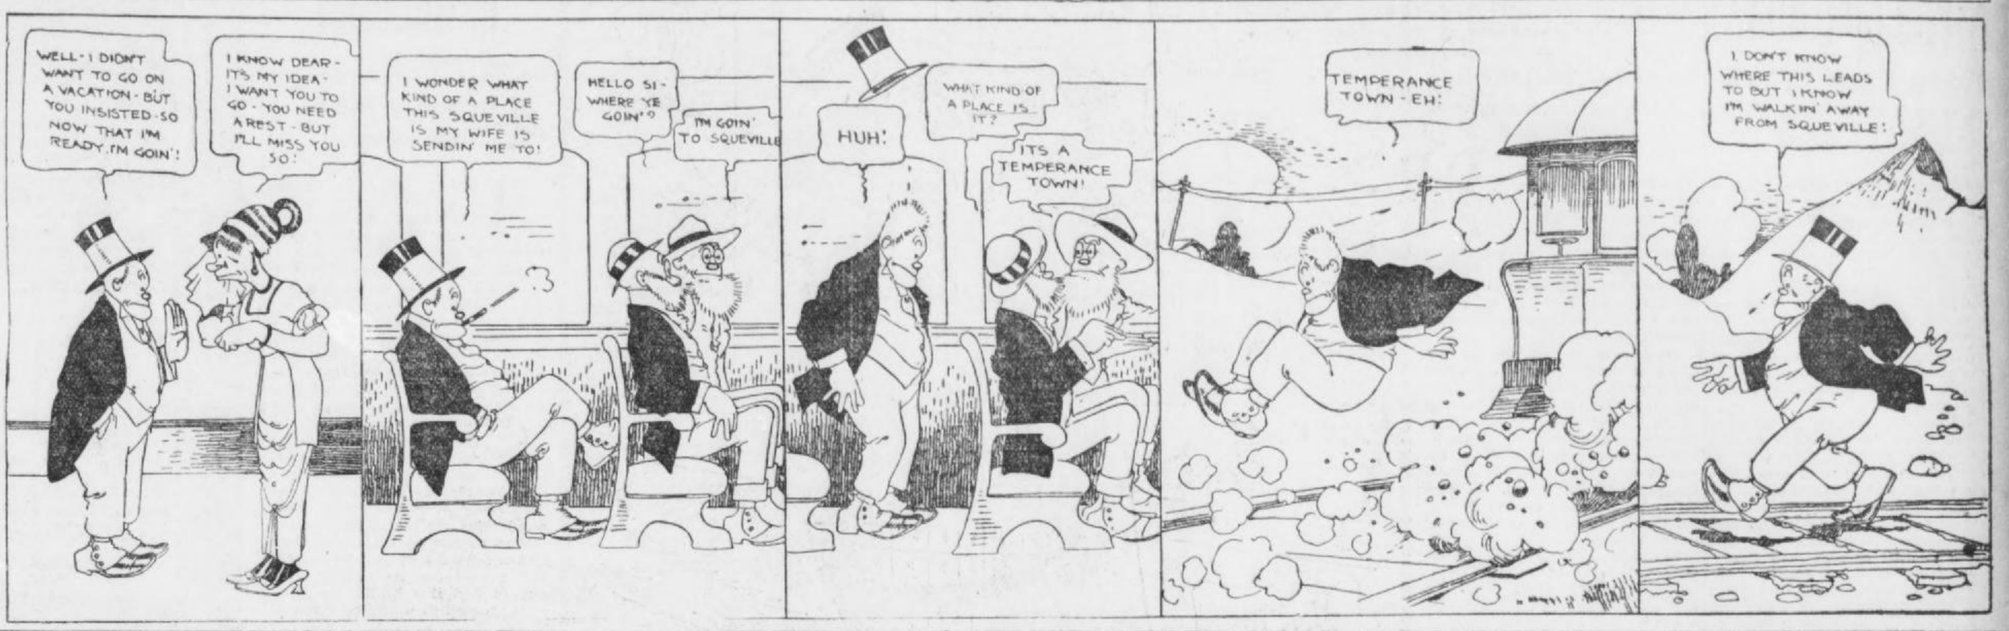

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. the purpose of which it is to stimulate the cells in the tissues that thus select from the blood the nutriment that makes new skin and thus eliminates all irritants, acids and parasites that inflame the glands. There is a natural tendency of the fine network of blood vessels in the skin to throw off impurities, but where a persistent inflammatory process has invaded the skin, the natural repair work of the blood is interfered with. It requires the stimulating activity of S. S. S. to overcome such morbid conditions. If you have been troubled with acne, do not despair of a cure.

You can get S. S. S. in any drug store, but insist upon having it. The great Swift Laboratory in Atlanta, Ga., prepares this famous blood purifier, and you should take no chance by permitting anyone to recommend a substitute. And if your blood condition is such that you would like to consult a specialist freely, address the Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Company, 181 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Speaking of That Diaphanous Stuff

Even Break With the Lookouts

Giants and Sox May Play Here

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE more vindication of the theory that the conventional manner of prorating a double-header is for each side to take one.

It was largely a matter of pitchers. In the first game Joe Conzelman wasn't quite so good as Floyd Kroh, and in the aftermath, Gilbert Price plus Elliott Dent, had a thin edge on Howell and Coveleskie.

The fact that the tall Pole was summoned again from the lumber yard testifies to the gentle affection for the Crackers that abounds in the shadow of Lookout Mountain.

The Tabasco Kid was doing his durndest to beat us all two of the games.

And quite properly.

Let's trim 'em fighting, or get trimmed the same way.

That's what makes baseball worth while.

WE are going to have some distinguished company in a few days, Ted Sullivan, one-time Southern Leaguer and now managing director of the Giants-White Sox world tour, is in New Orleans to-day arranging a lease on the Pelicans' ball park for an exhibition game late in October.

Mr. Sullivan expects to visit Birmingham and Mobile on a similar mission. And then he is coming to Atlanta.

Would Atlanta fans care to watch the White Sox and the Giants play ball?

We pause for no answer.

* * *

MAJOR CALLAWAY, home again from Chattanooga, says he hasn't heard anything about the proposed visitation, but doesn't see anything in the way of pulling it off. The president of the Crackers fancies there should be no trouble in arranging to let the big leaguers have Ponce DeLeon Park as a battle ground.

And he is of the opinion that it would be some considerable drawing card.

* * *

IT is rumored that Jud Daley, left fielder for the Vols, may wear an Atlanta uniform soon. The understanding hereabout is indefinite, and Bill Smith probably will make the decision while in Nashville on the series beginning to-day.

Daley is a good ball player and is very popular in Atlanta, but it appears unlikely that the Atlanta club will take him on if anything substantial has to be paid for him.

If it comes about that Judson is available for his stipend alone, he may but into the present series against his old friends.

HERE'S one we lamp from up Syracuse-way, in the New York State League:

An umpire named Harrison had a tumultuous run-in with a ball player working under the entire misnomer of Good. Good had tried to steal third and was tagged when about fifteen feet off the bag.

True to his reputation, Good let out an awful yelp and the fans answered the call of the wild.

"You're out of the game!" the umpire ordered.

Good declined to see it that way.

"Get out of the lot," was the next command.

Good stayed where he was as if he had taken root.

Harrison called a big cop, standing in the crowd near the bleachers.

"Take that man off the field," he directed.

The cop shook his head. "Nope," he said firmly.

Harrison was outraged. "You won't?" he roared, "And why not?"

"He wasn't out," said the cop. And he stuck to it.

ONCE more is the eternal and Emersonian law of compensation glutted with justification.

For weeks the sport columns have echoed with the piteous roars of F. Chance, sometime Peerless Leader. It seems Mr. Chance swapped Hal Chase for Zelder and Borton, of the White Sox, with the idea that Rollie was sound in wind and limb and his sidekick able to swing on the pill like a garden gate.

We gather from the twittering that Mr. Zelder was afflicted with a bunion and had to do his running on one side, while Mr. Borton's batting resembled the performance of the oldest inhabitant of the Soldiers' Home killing flies with a newspaper.

So.

But now comes Mr. Callahan, who lately paid $18,500 in Comiskey coin and White Sox players for Larry Chappelle.

"He's got a warped knee and a kink in his hip," wails Jimmy, "and he had 'em when I got him!"

Mr. Chance should lie awake nights and grieve.

Great Tribute Paid Hal Chase by Harry Lord, of White Sox

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Harry Lord, the White Sox captain, discussing first basemen to-day, paid a great tribute to Hal Chase. Here is what the third baseman of the White Sox has to say about the former Yankee player:

"Chase will save any infielder thirty errors in a season if the pair would work together through the year. Look what Chase did for me in the one game at St. Louis. I would have had two black marks to my discredit on that day. The papers would have said Lord's errors were responsible for the White Sox losing to the Browns 6 to 3, or something like that. With Chase over there we don't have to worry. We can field the ball, shut our eyes, and make a throw, and he will get it some way or other."

And all the other dope that deals

With gate receipts, percentages,

His friends were filled with gloom.
With sorrow did they cast him
Into a padded room.
He'd asked: "Is there a sport guy
Not out for the mazuma?"

NO CHANCE FOR LAJOIE TO LEAVE NAPS, SAYS BARNARD

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Aug. 7.—An absolute denial of the rumor that Chicago, Boston and Cleveland teams are arranging a three-cornered deal which will take Second Baseman Lajoie away from Cleveland was made to-day by E. S. Barnard, vice president of the Naps. Manager Birmingham, of the Cleveland team, wired from Philadelphia saying he had no trade under way for Lajoie.

ALLIS STARTED PLAYING GOLF WHEN 5 YRS. OLD

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Ned Allis, who was runner-up in the Western Golf Association at Chicago and is the sensation in the Western golf world, began to play golf when he was only five years old, taking part in a tournament that year, with his father as tutor. It was not until four or five years ago, however, that Ned began to come to the front with the older men.

His first public performance of consequence was in an invitation tournament held by the Milwaukee Country Club in which he met Harold Wyatt, of Fond du Lac. The two youngsters then only 17 years old, gave the fastest exhibition of match play of the entire tournament.

Allis is a very fine putter, as may be seen by the fact that in his match against R. A. Gardner, ex-national champion, in the semi-final at Homewood, Allis had only 27 puts for the 18 holes of the morning round.

To learn how a golfer's game may improve in a few months one has but to consult the United States Golf Association's handicap rating list for 1913. There Allis is placed among the handicap five men. Among the others in the five list are Devereux Lord, the three-time winner of The Brooklyn Eagle trophy; R. T. Allen, Fox Hills; Chisholm Beach, Fox Hills; S. D. Bowers, Brooklawn; T. V. Bermingham, Wykagyl; James R. Hyde, South Shore; Phillip Carter, Nassau, Metropolitan junior champion; Max R. Marston, Baltusrol, interscholastic champion; C. H. Seely, ex-Metropolitan champion, and others. Allis would more likely be handicapped at 2, or 3, at least.

The only time that Metropolitan District golfers have seen the quality of Allis' golf was at Lakewood, N. J., on April 17-19, last. Here Allis just fell outside the medal prize in the qualifying round by a single stroke, tying with Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, at 78, while H. K. Kerr, South Shore, got the best card with a 77.

Allis lasted till the semi-final, when he was defeated by Horace C. Cook, of Trenton, the youthful player from Trenton, N. J., who, in the afternoon final with Travis, held the former international champion at evens till a penalty stroke at the seventeenth hole threw him off his game on the home hole, the match going to Travis by two up. On his way to the semi-final Allis had beaten J. F. Shanley, the best of the Deal players.

Since Allis first swung a club at the age of five, he has been carefully coached by his father, Louis Allis, who firmly believes that his boy will some day be the premier amateur golfer of the world.

Love or Dent Will Pitch To-day

Slow Fielding Cost One Game

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 7.—Love or Elliott Dent, life-saver in yesterday's second game, will be shot at the Vols this afternoon, with Chapman back of the wood. Dent looked great in his one and one-third innings yesterday, and Love seems to have got over his slight touch of illness.

The Crackers got an even break in the twin bill yesterday and also on the series at Chattanooga. Joe Conzelman lost the first game, 4 to 2, and it ought to have been a shut-out for him. Manush was in right field and misjudged two long fly balls, one of which went for a triple and the other for a home run.

We had no luck at bat. Twice with the bases full and only one down, Dunn hit into a double play. Chapman was sent in to bat for Conselman in the ninth and whaled a home run far over the fence, but nobody was on the towpath.

In the second game we got to Grimes early and got a nice lead. Howell came on and pitched well until he was taken out for a pinch hitter. Then we had another chance at the Big Pole, and we nicked him for two runs, which won the game. Price pitched well until the eighth when a savage batting rally chased him from the rubber. Elliott Dent stopped the Vole and saved the game.

We play here four games, including the disputed one, which probably will be played Sunday. Harry Holland batted for a percentage of .500 yesterday. He looks better every day, and is stinging the ball hard. All he lacks is a little experience, and he is getting that fast.

PRESIDENT WILSON WANTS 'SQUARE DEAL' FROM 'UMPS'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—President Wilson wants a "square deal" from baseball umpires, should they have occasion to pass upon his political decisions. He told George Hildebrand and "Billy" Evans so in an interview at the White House. Hildebrand and Evans are arbiters of the American League. They promised to grant the President's request.

CHURCH HEALERS BEGIN FIGHT ON MEDICAL BILL

Christian Scientists Take Campaign Into the House After Defeat in Senate.

Christian Scientists have begun a campaign against those provisions of the Medical Practice bill regulating their methods for healing in Georgia. The Senate has passed the bill and it is expected to come before the House soon. An amendment to the bill framed by Christian Scientists failed in the Senate by three votes.

The amendment is worded similar to the one President Taft added to the Medical Practice bill for the Canal Zone at the request of Christian Scientists there.

Edward H. Carman, of Atlanta, president of the Christian Science State Publication Committee, has sent to Christian Scientists all over Georgia a letter which says in part:

"Get influential members of your church to go to three or four of their good friends—influential men—get them to write or wire their Representative in the lower House of the Legislature asking them to support the following amendment which will be offered to the Medical Practice bill when it comes up:

This act shall not apply to any person who ministers to or treats the sick or suffering by mental or spiritual means, whether gratuitously or for compensation, and without the use of any drug or material remedy.

Mr. Carman Thursday refused to comment on the subject, saying he preferred not to even have it known that Christian Scientists felt any anxiety over the passage of the bill.

It is understood, however, that if the bill is passed without the amendment Christian Scientists will at once declare it unconstitutional and will cite as their authority the Constitution of the United States.

Diving Suit Nearly Coffin for Inventor

SANTA MONICA, CAL., Aug. 7.—Tom Yamishi, from Japan, invented a rubber diving suit which, at its trial dive this afternoon, sprung a leak and nearly formed a coffin for the inventor.

J. L. Green, in a rowboat, picked up the Japanese as he was sinking and towed him ashore. After being rolled on a barrel, the inventor left for home.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

At the Forsyth.

At the cool and busy Forsyth Theater this week a seven-act bill is offered that contains a splendid mixture of variety. Every act is making good its indorsement. The Eight Berlin Madcaps, eight bewitching young misses, dance themselves into their audiences' hearts and execute some clever acrobatics.

VanHoven, in his dippy magician act, is met with roars of laughter from the start until the finish of his act. His antics on the stage with two little boys, whom he selects from the audience to assist him in a trick, creates one spasm of laughter after another. Robert Everest has the best monkey act seen on a local stage.

BILL WITHDRAWS TWO PER CENT U. S. BONDS

Senator Owen Offers Plan to Increase Gold Reserve and to Unify Currency.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—A bill providing for increasing the gold reserve in the redemption division of the Treasury, retiring the 2 per cent bonds and unifying the currency issues of the United States, was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

The measure provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, as gold certificates come into the Treasury or subtreasuries of the United States, to have them canceled and the gold represented by such certificates transferred to the redemption division. In place of these canceled gold certificates, the Secretary is to issue treasury notes of the United States, redeemable in gold at the Treasury.

The Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, when requested to do so by national banks having outstanding national bank notes secured by 2 per cent bonds, to purchase these bonds at par and accrued interest, and to assume the redemption at par of the bank notes secured by these bonds, charging the amount of the notes against the proceeds of the 2 per cent bonds and paying the balance in cash to the national banks.

These 2 per cent bonds shall then be canceled, and a like amount of twenty-year 3 per cent bonds shall be placed in the redemption division and the annual interest on them credited to the funds of the redemption division.

When the national bank notes the redemption of which has been assumed shall come into the Treasury they shall be canceled and retired and in place of these notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue treasury notes in like amount.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Castro Is Denounced By His Namesake

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Cipriano Castro, the would-be dictator of Venezuela, is not a real Castro, or even a gentleman, according to Victor Clta Castro, who reached here on the French liner La Lorraine, and who shouted indignation from all directions when delayed for a time by federal officials in the belief that he was a possible ally of the redoubtable Cipriano.

"I know why you are keeping me here," he said. "You think I am going to participate in the revolt down there. You wound me; you pierce my heart with your words. Oh, vile! He is a peon and a peddler; not a Castro or a gentleman."

Colorado Women Are Asking More Offices

DENVER, Aug. 7.—The victory of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young and the uprising of Chicago women in her behalf have aroused Chicago women voters, who state they will demand their full share of State and city offices.

Find Girls Lost in Snow on Mt. Rainier

TACOMA, WASH., Aug. 7.—Lost in the snow on the Cowlitz trail on Mount Rainier, two school teachers, Miss Kitty Roberts, of Washington, D. C., and Miss Bernice Royce, of San Francisco, were found by rescuers too exhausted to walk.

"SOME SEASON---BELIEVE THE DOC"

Tells How It Feels to Face Death by Rabies

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Facing death from rabies is a grim ordeal. This is the feeling expressed by Elsie Parish, noted writer of children's verses, who confidently awaits the outcome of treatment begun to forestall infection to which she laid herself open by sucking the wounds of two little girls who had been bitten by a rabid dog.

"Did you ever read an improbable story and then say to yourself that it couldn't have happened?" asked Miss Parish. "That's the way I feel. Of course, there is a horror in it all, but I just say, feeling as I do now, that I just know I'm not going to die."

Appeals to Wilson To Save His Teeth

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Dr. John Grant Lyman, Federal prisoner, charged with misusing the mails, has made an appeal to President Wilson for a hasty trial.

In a night lettergram sent to Washington the physician complained that his teeth have become worn to a razor edge and he is unable to masticate his food.

BROUGHTON RIVAL OF KING IN LONDON

"In London you hear of but two people—King George and Dr. Len G. Broughton—and possibly you hear a little more of the latter than you do of the former," said W. S. Witham, Atlanta banker and church worker, in an address at the Wesley Memorial Church Wednesday night.

The subject of his address was the "Impression of Zurich," and he told of a trip through Europe in connection with the International Sunday School Convention. He declared that Broughton was following out the same line of work which he carried on in Atlanta; that he spoke fearlessly of things politic, and was the most talked of man in the English Capital.

Mr. Witham was discussing the praising of a man's virtues while he lived, and remarked that the trend of the times now is to praise the living more than the dead.

"Why, more people visit the tomb of Pasteur than they do Napoleon's. It is the man who lives for his country who is getting the praise of the world to-day, not the man who dies for it."

Catholic Women To Oppose 'The Cause'

BUFFALO, Aug. 7.—Organization of a Catholic women's league that proposes to counteract the radical tendencies of the women's movement, including their demand for the ballot, marked to-day's session of the German Roman Catholic Central Verein.

"The femininist movement," said Mrs. Joseph Frey, honorary president, "is being promoted by women whose views are decidedly Pagan. If their demands were to be realized the Christian family would cease to exist, and woman's condition would lapse into paganism."

Sues as Wife Turns Tango Gown Model

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 7.—Pasquale L. Montani, a musician, says in a divorce complaint filed to-day that his wife told him she preferred to be a living model in a tango gown than live with him.

He says he is fully able to provide for her, but she became a model in a downtown department store, wearing a tango gown which he says in his complaint "is designed to display the leg from the ankle to the knee."

Bedridden 27 Years, Ossified Author Dies

WELLINGTON, MO., Aug. 7.—Thomas F. Lockhart, who spent 27 years in bed, practically in one position, is dead here. His joints were ossified so that he could move only his right shoulder and the middle joints of two fingers.

He wrote many books, among them an autobiography, which brought him enough to pay for a nurse.

Town Terrorized by Fatal Gun Battle

VALDOSTA, Aug. 7.—C. W. Cobb, the Hazlehurt real estate dealer who was seriously wounded in a fight with the Crawford brothers at Moniac, Ga., is doing well. It is believed now he will recover.

The fight, over a realty deal, occurred in the woods some distance from the town, and a report received here to-day from Moniac says that J. M. Crawford, who was shot dead by Cobb, and Cobb, apparently dead, were left out all night, the people in the town being afraid to go out and make an investigation. Another report that a Coroner's jury had rendered a verdict justifying Cobb could not be confirmed to-day.

Society Couple Divide House in Quarantine

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Mr. and Mrs. Hobart C. Chatfield-Taylor, leaders in the social set of Chicago and prominent in Eastern social circles, are living apart.

The separation is temporary, for it is believed Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor will have recovered from the chickenpox and be released from quarantine within a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor divided their mansion so that half the house belongs to Mrs. Chatfield-Taylor. The husband retained the other half and he meets social and business friends there.

Georgia Slayer Freed By 'Unwritten Law'

SAVANNAH, Aug. 7.—Another homicide was justified under the "unwritten law" here when a jury last night acquitted Lathrop George of the charge of murdering Henry McClellan, who was shot and killed while lying in the bedroom of Mrs. Fannie George, wife of the defendant.

George claimed self-defense in a personal statement to the court, saying McClellan was about to attack him when the fatal shot was fired, but his counsel relied almost entirely upon the theory of justification.

Accused Swindlers Face 28 Warrants

GREENSBORO, Aug. 7.—D. E. Moorefield and G. W. Bishop, arrested in Arcadia, Fla., on charges of cheating and swindling, are in the custody of Sheriff E. C. Hixon, of Greene County.

They arrived this morning, two beautiful women accompanying them.

Twenty-eight warrants await them after Greene County is through.

Justice Is Dispensed From Rail Fence Top

SPOKANE, Aug. 7.—Too busy harvesting to go to his office, Justice of Peace H. H. Wilson to-day sat on the fence of his farm at Medical Lake, heard a youth plead guilty and fined him $50 and costs for taking liquor into prohibition territory.

LONG LOST NANA FOUND IN HOME OF MORGAN

Manuscript of Zola Novel Sought For Years for French Government.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—A nation-wide hunt by an American correspondent of Mme. Zola for the manuscript of Emile Zola's novel of Paris gutter life "Nana" has resulted in finding the original copy of this story in the J. P. Morgan collection in this city. "Nana" is the only one of the Zola manuscripts that is not in the possession of the French Government. The others were given by Mme. Zola. Neither she nor the collectors for the Government have yet been informed where the "Nana" manuscript is.

Government Owns Others.

J. P. Morgan said yesterday that the manuscript was in his collection and that according to his records it was the only one not owned by the Government of France. Mme. Zola was looking for the manuscript and that no request for it had ever come to him from the French Government or the widow of the novelist. Mr. Morgan said that he did not know what his attitude would be if such a request should be made. It probably will be made to Mr. Morgan within a few days by Guyot Cameron, formerly professor of French in Princeton University, who has been commissioned by Mme. Zola to locate the manuscript.

An Old Friend of the Zolas.

Mr. Cameron formely lived in Paris and is an old friend of the Zola family. His search began several years ago with scant clues. The proprietor of a book-shop in Paris remembered having sold the manuscript to an American, and that was about all Mr. Cameron had to work on. He made an exhaustive investigation in this country by correspondence and personal search among dealers and private collectors in various cities; but the discovery finally came when a friend told Mr. Cameron that he had seen the "Nana" manuscript listed in the Morgan collection in a foreign paper at the time of the death of J. P. Morgan, Sr.

He will write the story of its discovery to Mme. Zola and ill probably ask Mr. Morgan for the manuscript in her behalf.

U. S. Leads Europe In Child Welfare Work

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—"American obstetrical methods and child welfare work in general were shown by the papers and discussions at the infant mortality conference just ended in London to be superior to those of England," said Dr. Julius H. Hess, of Chicago, to-day. "Indeed, our child welfare work now surpasses that in Germany, where such work had its origin.

"The methods in the British colonies are also in advance of those in Europe."

Bullfrogs Imported; Skins Used in Purses

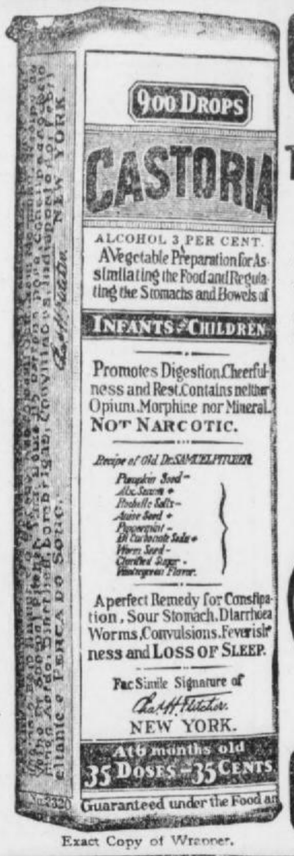

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7.—Eighteen big mountain frogs have been brought here from the Philippines by Dr. F. M. McAllister, ship's surgeon on the Korea. He will give them to the Park Commission for propagation in Stow Lake.

The mouse-colored skin, mottled with spots of darker hue, may be used for the manufacture of women's purses and chatelaine sacks.

The frogs are edlicate in spite of their size, and five died on the voyage.

WOMAN DRIVES CAB.

Still In The Lead

For over fifteen years Grape-Nuts, the pioneer health cereal, has had no equal, either in flavour or nutrition.

Thousands of families use it regularly because

Grape-Nuts

Has qualities which make it the ideal food—

Delicious Flavour,
Rich Nourishment,
Quick Preparation,

and withal, easily digested.

Grape-Nuts and cream, in place of heavy, indigestible food, helps to make one cooler and more comfortable on hot days; and builds body and brain in a way that gives zest and energy.

"There's a Reason" for Grape-Nuts

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

STRONG WORDS
From a Doctor with 40 Years Experience.

"In my 40 years' experience as a teacher and practitioner along hygienic lines," says a Calif. physician, "I have never found a food to compare with Grape-Nuts for the benefit of the general health of all classes of people.

"I have recommended Grape-Nuts for a number of years to patients with the greatest success and every year's experience makes me more enthusiastic regarding its use.

"I make it a rule to always recommend Grape-Nuts, and Postum in place of coffee, when giving my patients instructions as to diet, for I know both Grape-Nuts and Postum can be digested by anyone.

"As for myself, when engaged in much mental work my diet twice a day consists of Grape-Nuts and rich cream. I find it just the thing to build up and keep the brain in good working order.

"In addition, Grape-Nuts always keeps the digestive organs in a perfect, healthy tone." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Strong endorsements like the above from physicians all over the country have stamped Grape-Nuts the most scientific food in the world.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Lease Business Waking Up.

The approach of autumn always causes extensive preparations for renting and leasing. Some of the most important leases in the city expire September 1 and October 1 and renewals will be in order, or new locations will be taken. Other concerns' leases are up at the end of the year.

The renting business also takes on a roseate hue in the fall. People away at summer resorts are returning by hundreds and changes of residence are in order for a large part of them. Local agencies are accordingly preparing for the rush. Some agencies are extending. Porter & Swift and Hurt & Cone, for instance, have recently installed renting departments.

ZACHRY HEARING IS POSTPONED BY SLATON

Augusta Attorney Denies Blease's Right to Ask Extradition for Alleged Kidnaping.

Declaring that Governor Blease, of South Carolina, was acting under no legal right whatever in demanding his extradition from Georgia, P. B. Zachry, of Harlem, charged with kidnaping his own child in Columbia, S. C., called upon Governor Slaton Thursday morning to arrange for the hearing which will be held Monday morning. Governor Slaton changed the time of the hearing from Friday until Monday upon the request of Mr. Zachry.

Mr. Zachry declared he would fight the requisition to the last ditch. He will be represented at the hearing by Hamilton Phinizy and C. Henry Cohen, of Augusta, and John T. West, of Thomson. The requisition papers of Governor Blease probably will be the only testimony offered by the plaintiffs.

Mr. Zachry told a graphic story of the case Thursday morning. He had been awarded the two children four times, he declared, when Mrs. Zachry left with them on the very day that the Superior Court judge in Augusta upheld the decision of the ordinary favorable to Zachry.

Sued In South Carolina.

It was then, he declared further, that he took his automobile and hastened to South Carolina, where he entered suit again for the children in the Columbia court.

"I did not want to make out requisition papers for Mrs. Zachry," declared Mr. Zachry, "because I do not believe in fighting a woman in that way. That is the reason I instituted court proceedings in South Carolina.

"When I entered the courtroom there was my little daughter Frances, the older of the two, and the first thing she said was 'Hello, papa, are you going to take me?' She always was fond of me and she was the one I wanted. However, according to a previous agreement with Mrs. Zachry, I allowed even this one to visit her mother once a month."

Friends Rally to Aid Him.

Following the decision of Judge Gary awarding the children to him as claimed, Mr. Zachry declared he took the older, just three years of age, in his automobile and started for Georgia. Several times on the way, he says, he was warned that he was being followed, and at a bride near the Georgia line he was fully prepared for interference by the South Carolina authorities acting under orders of Governor Blease.

"They would not have stopped me, though," declared Mr. Zachry, "for I was bound for Georgia with my little girl, and I meant to get there at all odds."

Mr. Zachry is a prominent attorney in Augusta and resides in Harlem, a suburb. Less than a week ago, when Governor Blease demanded the extradition of Zachry, a host of friends of the latter held a mass meeting in Augusta and sent a telegram to Governor Blease requesting a hearing before any decision was made.

Dog Catcher, Tags Too, Are All Ready

The city dog catcher starts on his annual round Monday and all dogs caught without a tag will be placed in the pound.

30 Kansas Towns Suffering for Water

TOPEKA, Aug. 7.—The month of July, 1913, was the second driest month since the local weather bureau was established 30 years ago.

Kansas streams that have never been known to go dry are dry now. More than 30 Kansas towns have been compelled to shut off all water for lawns.

Charter Election Is Plan of Legislature

The proposed new charter for Atlanta, including the previsions for the initiative, referendum and recall of heads of departments, and the limitation of the recorder's power, will be submitted to the people, according to an agreement reached by the House and Senate committee Thursday.

According to this agreement the charter as a whole will be submitted to the people first and the question of the referendum and recall, as well as the limitation of the recorder's power, will be submitted separately.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 7.—Texas at the present time and Oklahoma are dry and hot. This put the market up early, but experts were able to find Gulf storm or other disturbance somewhere, and on their assurance of rain some time in the near future prices declined a few points. It is a dull, pointless market that waits on the weather. Without rain and with the present high temperatures continued considerable deterioration will take place in the Southwest, but if rains come, the situation will be entirely different. Eastern belt reports are brilliant.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: We continue to advise caution as to short sales around the 11c level.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: Spinners have not become anxious as yet.

Miller & Co.: Everything depends upon climatic conditions in the Southwest.

Logan & Bryan: We believe that it may be well not to press the selling side too closely, for as indicated in our advices of to-day shorts displayed some nervousness and were disposed to reduce lines pending further developments in the western belt.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The indications are that there will be showers within the next 36 hours in the Lake region, the Ohio Valley, Virginia, North Carolina and Florida. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair. Temperatures will rise slowly in the Lake region and the Ohio Valley to-night and the North Atlantic States Friday.

Forecast.

Forecast till 8 p. m. Friday:

Georgia—Generally fair, except local showers.

Virginia and North Carolina—Showers to-night or Friday.

South Carolina—Probably fair to-night and Friday.

Florida—Showers to-night or Friday.

Alabama and Mississippi—Fair, except showers in extreme south portions to-night or Friday.

Tennessee—Fair to-night and probably Friday.

Louisiana—Fair in north and west; showers in south portion to-night or Friday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Friday.

COTTON EASIER ON PROMISE OF RAINS

Both Elements Hesitate Pending Texas Weather Outlook—Sentiment Continues Bearish.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Continued dry weather over Texas and Oklahoma led to further buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than the closing quotations of Wednesday. August made the best gain. There was a great deal of warehouse buying. After the call further bullish advices relative to the weather were received and prices advanced still further.

There was na rain shown on the map which was an incentive for buying, but there is disturbance in the Gulf, which or not the local experts are correct in their predictions. The volume of trading was small and the range was very narrow throughout the early session.

The detailed weather record showed temperatures ranging from 100 to 107 degrees and no rain. The temperatures were not so high in the eastern belt and very little rain was shown. These high temperatures are causing uneasiness among the bear forces and some short covering was in evidence about noon. On the other hand, the bull element hesitated when the ring, Wall street and uptown crowd sold the market off a few points. Should rain materialize in the Western belt between now and Sunday undoubtedly it will promote sufficient selling to send the market back into last week's low level.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New York: August, 11.72; October, 11.15; December, 11.12; January, 11.02; March, 11.12.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 7.—Liverpool came in about 2 points lower than due on futures, but shows larger spot sales; total 10,000 bales at 6 points higher quotations. The map shows a generally fair belt. Temperatures entirely normal, except somewhat above in Arkansas and Tennessee. The disturbance in the Gulf remained stationary, holding forth additional promise for a change in the weather in the west.

The market opened at unchanged figures, but soon rallied a few points on the buying in anticipation of a better demand possibly from Europe on the conclusion of peace. The advance was checked by prospects of more favorable weather in the west.

August in New York showed additional strength on a report that 10,000 bales export room had been engaged and that the stock would be reduced to the low figure of 18,000 bales.

The market eased after the close of Liverpool to 12.15 for October, with trading small and waiting for news of weather developments in the west.

COTTON GOSSIP

Bulls are afraid.

* * *

The market after the call was sold on forecast of increasing cloudiness in Arkansas and predictions of local weather experts of rain in the next three days for the western belt. The ring crowd were apparently the leading sellers. Montgomery, Dick Bros., Mitchell and Wilson led the buying and bid the market up. Very little cotton was offered at the outset. Weld was reported a good buyer; also the South and West were booked as buyers.

* * *

On the call, Gifford and Schill bought August. Hentz and Rothschild sold. Starr, Rothschild and Lehman bought October. Shantz, Norden and Mitchell sold. Flinn, Starr and Gifford bought December. Shantz, Norden, Burnett and Hentz sold. Starr and Shearson bought January. Rothschild and Bashford sold.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says:

"According to the bears, yesterday's advance was a revival of last week's price boom, which week-end rains had interfered with. According to the bulls, the talent has begun to realize the danger of selling short, because of the continued need of rain in the west, and also because of the approach of a showdown on the Clarke and Smith bills affecting cotton contract trading.

"Meanwhile, the market is very narrow, and a light excess of buying or selling orders serves to move values a little way. Damage reports are beginning to come in from the west in sufficient number to cause some concern, and the Gulf storm, which big-yield men now depend on to bring rains to Texas, is only in process of formation and may not form at all. Dry weather advices are causing some shorts to cover.

"Yesterday experters and forward sellers received some inquiries from Europe for supplies, but very little business was reported done."

SHOW MANUFACTURED PRODUCTS.

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 7.—A suggestion made some time ago, which looks as if it will be turned into a reality, is that an exhibit of the manufactured products of Columbus be gathered at some central point in the city, and kept on exhibition the year around, in order that visitors to Columbus might have an opportunity to see something of the wide variety of articles made here.

Woman Admits She Defrauded Veterans

County tax returns received at the office of the Comptroller General Thursday cut the total losses from more than $1,000,000 to less than $500,000.

Among the counties show increases are Chathahoochee, Liberty, Bryan, Ware (with a gain alone of $546,349) and Washington Counties. Only one county reporting Thursday showed a loss.

STOCKS DULL BUT ARE VERY STRONG

Report of Peace Abroad Causes Steady Buying of Big Issues by Strong Concerns.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Texas Company was the most prominent feature at the opening of the stock market to-day, advancing 2 points to 115. However, nearly all issues were higher following the lead of the foreign markets, which were up on reports of re-established peace in the Balkans.

Among the gains in the New York market were: Amalgamated Copper, ⅝; Steel common, ¼; Western Maryland, ¼; Utah Copper, ⅛; Union Pacific, ⅝; Southern Railway, ¼; Reading, ¾; Pennsylvania, ⅝; New York, New Haven and Hartford, ¼; Missouri Pacific, ⅛; Katy, ⅝; Car Foundry, ⅛; Great Northern preferred, ¼; Erie, ¼; Chino Copper, ⅝.

Canadian Pacific shaded ½, while American Sugar Refining lost the same amount.

At the end of half an hour Union Pacific was up 1 point.

The transfer books for subscription of Union Pacific close to-day, but the Stock Exchange ruled that sales of the issue during the morning would not be ex-rights, but that a due bill would be given for rights because the company did not announce the price, at which Southern Pacific cert

The "Why" of the South's Greatest Sunday Paper

SIX days we labor and do all our work.
And Sunday we rest—and catch step with the world.
That is, most of us.

Most of us work six days in the week. Most of us work pretty hard. Most of us are tired when night comes.

That is a good, healthy state of affairs, and it keeps us out of mischief.

But it doesn't give us much chance to keep pace with things outside our own little march. And sometimes that is in lock-step.

And that answers the query, "Why is a Sunday paper?"

The Sunday paper tells us that there is something stirring outside of Atlanta; that there are other States than the Empire State of the South; other nations than the Union; other continents than America; other worlds than the earth.

The Sunday paper tells us about other people than the kind we know so well; other professions, other aims, other thoughts and creeds.

The Sunday paper marks the time by which we catch step with all the world.

Depending, of course, largely on the kind and scope of the Sunday paper.

Which brings us to The Sunday American in general, and the next Sunday American in particular.

Starting with Atlanta—for that's where a lot of us live—the next Sunday American will have the freshest and fullest possible news of America's great murder case—the Frank trial. There will be pictures. Special features will be covered by special writers. The news will be handled frankly and honestly—and fully.

But there are other things than the Frank trial.

Polly Peachtree and her inimitable comment and gossip of society—you don't know Polly Peachtree, do you? No—but you read her sprightly gossip and you wonder—and so do people over all the South. Polly Peachtree is an institution.

Well, and that brings on the fashions, and the frills, and all the dainty arabesques (or is that architectural?) of feminine apparel. With pictures. Don't forget the pictures.

Then the drama.

Reviews and criticisms of the new plays which, probably owing to the season, haven't been produced yet, or possibly even written; gossip of stageland and its people, the wonderful people that to most of us live and move and have their being in the golden country back of the footlights. We always like to hear of something that connects them with our own little work-a-day world. And we are treated to such anecdotes quite frequently in the Sunday paper.

Sports—pennant chases in our own league; in the Big Show; boxing and gossip of the padded square; racing, golf, tennis—all handled by experts, trained to keep ever an eye on the Main Chance; to play up a world event for what it is worth; to value truly the importance of local news. There's O. B. Keeler, Charles Dryden, W. J. McBeth, "Tick" Tichenor, J. W. Heisman, Innis Brown, Damon Runyon, W. S. Farnsworth, Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton and George E. Phair, who are known from coast to coast in the respective lines.

In the lighter vein the comics contribute the bit of nonsense now and then, traditionally relished by the "best of men"—who, after all, probably are just plain folks like us, who have a soft spot in our hearts (art critics say in our heads) for the quaint conceits of Powers and Fisher and the rest. When you're tired, you know, a series of pictures is mighty easy to read, and the point isn't easy to miss.

But if you're serious, you can find what other people think in the editorials; you can match your ideas against theirs—and you're the judge. Clashing opinions sharpen wits. It's fine exercise for the mind.

Or turn to a serial novel. You'll find the latest and best in The Sunday American. Just now it's "Adam's Clay," by Cosmo Hamilton. Pretty soon it will be "The Plot for a Pennant," and you baseball fans might guess the author—Hugh Fullerton. You know what that means. But they all are the freshest and the best that can be had.

And the cable service and the news of all the world.

That might be the headliner of all. No other service has the far-reaching tentacles—the "feelers" that touch this old mud-ball at every point, and gather that which is new and strange and worthy, to tell it with spirit and truth in the Sunday paper.

For next Sunday features—"Art or the Woman?" A brilliant consideration of Ida Rubenstein, the strange, fiery Russian dancer who has cast her spell on the flower of the artists, the composers and the dramatists of our time. And then the strange case of Alfred Vanderbilt, frozen out of American society, finding on his return with his new wife to Newport that his first wife is the leader in a social ostracism the most rigid in history.

Then there will be another proof that truth can be stranger than fiction in the narrative of the cruel lover who tried to frighten into his arms a belle of our Southland—and by a horror in the guise of a monster frog.

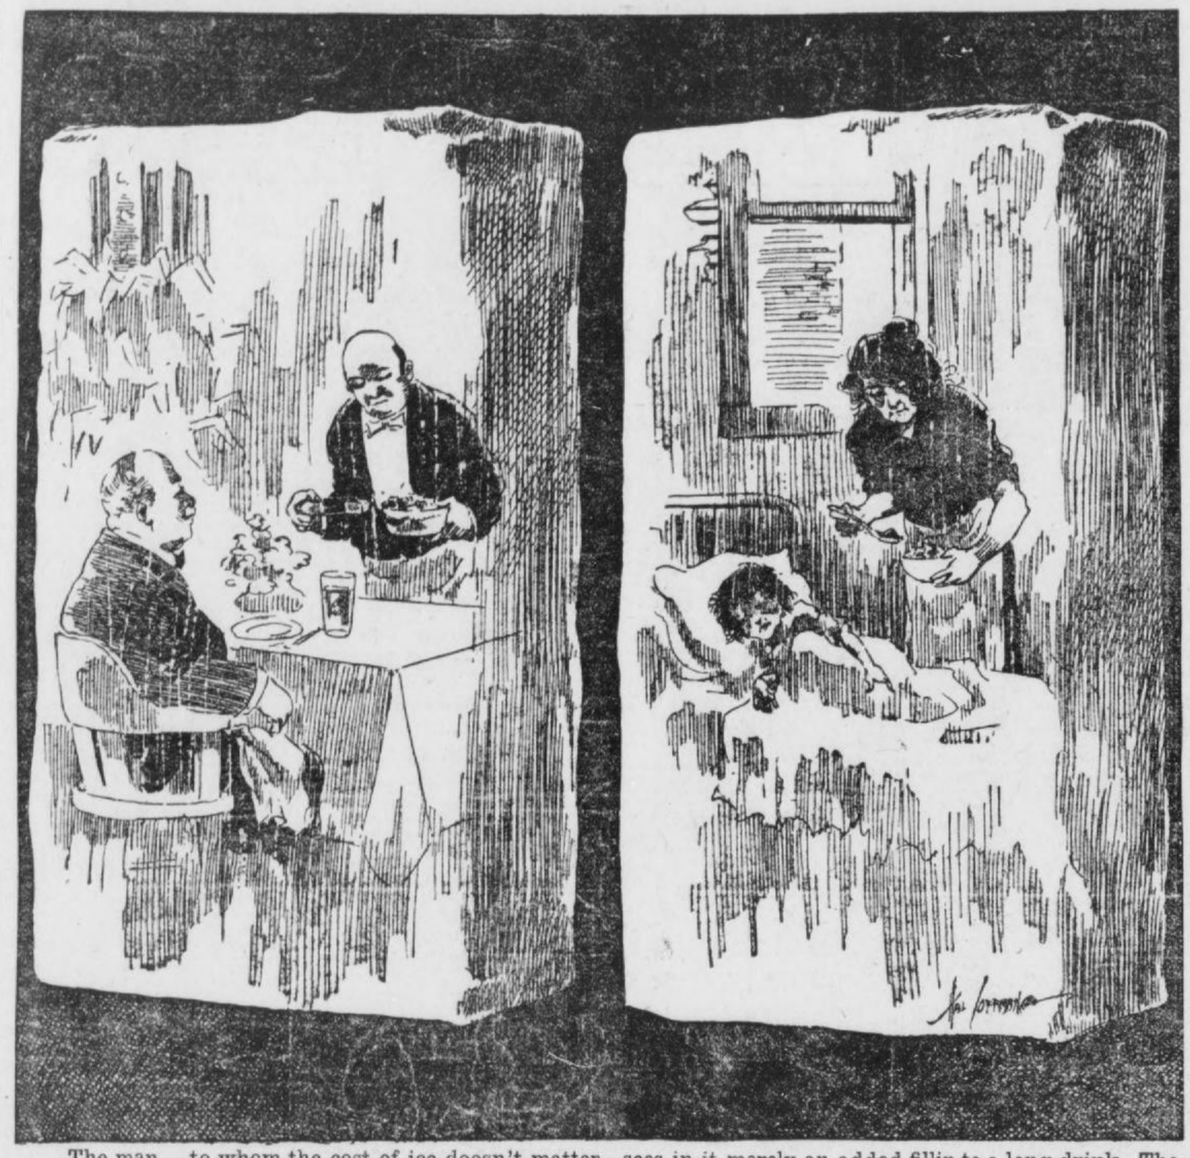

And what else? Well, King George of England has a quaint idea of destroying "American frivolity" by imposing old-fashioned and outrageous duties on the members of his court—the good King desiring to "sober it down." And Madame Cavalieri explains beauty hints—she really ought to know, you know—and a scientist tells how a child becomes a man, and a psychologist details his discovery of why lovers can't help quarreling.

By way of contrast, Sophie Lyons, queen of the burglars, tells why crime doesn't pay, and Lady Duff Gordon produces an essay on mannish tendencies in women's dress, notably waistcoats, a Parisian fancy.

It's all in The Sunday American. And with it the news of all the earth.

And that's how we catch step with the world, on Sunday.

The Pictures in the Ice

The man— to whom the cost of ice doesn't matter—sees in it merely an added fillip to a long drink. The woman—to whom the cost of ice is a heart-breaking matter—sees in it relief, perhaps life itself, for her child, sweltering in the poor cottage which they call home.

A Glimpse of the Cowed Women of Japan

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

MARIAN COX has recently written her reminiscences of Japan, and Mitchell Kennerley has published them under the title of "The Man-Made Woman of Japan." The picturesque pen of Mrs. Cox gives us a striking chronicle, and I take from it the following:

"The easiest way to arrive at a conception of the Japanese woman is to think of every quality directly contrary to the qualities of the typical American woman, and to see her as the embodiment of these. She is as docile as the American woman is aggressive; as demure as the American is flamboyant; as modest as the American is impudent; as humble as the American is snobbish; as conservative as the American is faddish; as reticent as the American is effusive.

"There is no romance between the sexes in Japan. The relation is either crude and businesslike in marriage, or unmentionable and bestial out of marriage. No wonder there is no word in the Japanese language which can be translated as 'love' in our language. The only love that can be spoken or written of in Japan is the filial. There are no words of endearment for lovers, nor for husband and wife. Marriage is without courtship; courtship without kisses, caresses or pet names.

Loveless Women.

"No Japanese knight has ever performed a deed of valor for the love of a woman. No Japanese poet has ever written a poem of 'love' that could be read to a pure woman. These people have put all their refinement into their etiquette of life, and so have had none left for the elmental facts of life; they have put all their imagination in a hair-splitting epicureanism, and so have had none left with which they might dignify humanity's greatest passion. When the Japanese nation evolves the kiss of man and woman she may cease to be a mimicker and become a molder of civilization.

"In reading of the loveless, kissless, woman-denouncing Japanese, one might believe him austerely chaste, puritanical, the true ascetic; and to those unversed in the duality of human nature it comes with a shock of surprise to learn that, on the contrary, his ruthless immorality and licentiousness are notorious and the scandal of Japan.

"There is one feature of this so unique and so illustrative of the vicious outgrowths of man's lopsided civilizations that it has a claim upon the interest of every student of Japan or of human nature; the institution of the Yoshiwara.

"Classified with our 'white slave traffic' and the sordid evils that nightly stalk Broadway, Piccadilly and the Parisian boulevard, it yet differs from them all in certain elements which make it the most sickening and tragic exhibition the world affords of the human injustice and shame accorded women in civilizations made strictly of the men, for the men, by the men.

"At a temple in Nikko there is a famous picture of three monkeys, 'one with his hands covering his eyes, which means see no evil; another with hands covering ears, which means hear no evil; the other with hands covering mouth, which means speak no evil. This is evidently the Buddhistic formula for peace on earth, good will to men; but, thanks to the men who have not observed it, humanity has evolved from some of its barbarities, and most of the barbarities that exist to-day endure because women have been too long and thoroughly trained by men—to see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil.

With Official Sanction.

"No one can understand the Japanese people until he has seen the menagerielike spectacle of that portion of its womankind whom they place outside of human rights in a hideous travesty of human dignity. In the dusk of every evening, just as the temple bells are pealing forth their summons to the strange gods of Nippon, this spectacle begins: women, girls—the majority mere children in appearance—file into cages which open onto the streets, exactly like the cages in a zoo, and sit for hours behind those wooden bars like merchandise for sale, with an aureole of tortoise shell combs around their heads and bedecked in garish splendor of attire. The spectacle arouses disgust and scorn until one learns the hidden springs behind this system of woman-sale, and then there comes only pity.

"The Government has placed its sanction upon this institution; 'thus sayeth the law' is more powerful in Japan than in any other civilized country. So the idea has been perpetuated among the people that parents have a moral (because legal) right to dispose of their daughters to their own advantage, and the inmates of the Yoshiwara are sold by their parents or adopted parents when too young and ignorant to understand the nature of the transaction or the ghastly future it will bring. But even if she knew, the Japanese daughter is as powerless to resist the parental will as her brother, the soldier, would be to resist the will of his Emperor. As we know, she is taught filial devotion as her religion.

Agitation Going On.

"It is not true, as has been so frequently stated, that unchastity does not dishonor a woman in Japan. Even these slaves of the Yoshiwara, involuntary victims, are treated as below human kind. Until a few years ago they had no chance of escape from what even the Japanese call 'the bitter sea of misery.' When there were runaways, the law authorized their capture, punishment and return to their keepers. That there were many runaways we can believe when we learn that the average number of suicides among these girls throughout the land was 40 and 50 a month.

"During the past four years there has been a lively agitation in Japan for a complete change in its social and moral system. The leaders of public opinion proclaim that something is radically wrong, but do not seem to know what it is that must be changed, nor just what new laws to enact—for more laws is the masculine solution to every difficulty."

The Secret of Prayer

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

For he who climbs to make his prayer
Meets half way the descending grace.
—Elsa Barker in British Review.

THIS is the secret of all prayers
That in God's sight have worth;
They must be uttered from the stairs
That wind away from earth.
And he who mounts to speak the word,
He shall be heard, he shall be heard.

And he who will not leave himself,
But stays down with his cares
(Or with his thoughts of power and pelf),
Though loud and loud his prayers,
Beyond earth's dome of arching skies
They shall not rise, they shall not rise.

Oh ye, who seek for strength and power,
Seek first some quiet spot,
And fashion, through a silent hour,
Your stairway, thought by thought.
Then climb, and pray to God on high.
He shall reply, He shall reply.

A Ringing Alarm to the Farmer

He Quotes President Charles S. Barrett, of the Farmers' Union, Regarding Foreign Ownership of Cotton Fields in the South.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

IF any man thinks that the millions of American farmers are asleep or indifferent to economic changes and passing events, that man is mistaken.

On the tariff, on the currency, on farm credits, and on the outside investments in agriculture every farmer is reading, thinking—and preparing to vote!

Even if the farmer were ignorant or apathetic upon public questions, he has wise and watchful leaders who, upon the watchtower, are sounding continually the bugles of advance or the alarms of retreat.

Among the ablest of these is Charles Barrett, president of the Farmers' Union, with two and a half million enrolled members—perhaps the most popular and influential of all American farmers.

Foreign Ownership.

I asked this great farmer recently if he wished to use the far-reaching columns of the Hearst newspapers to sound any new counsel to the American farmer. And he promptly responded:

"Yes; I never omit an opportunity to use that vast newspaper circulation to speak for my people.

"I have something now to say about the alien or foreign ownership of our lands, particularly those lands in the South adaptable to cotton. I have said that the steady reach of foreigners after that imperial staple was an alarming development! I believed years ago that this was a serious menace, and now I am sure of it.

"Now, listen, you scoffers and unbelievers. Do you know that between twelve and thirteen million acres of the finest cotton lands in the South are now owned outright by foreign individuals and corporations? Do you know that agents of these foreign individuals and corporations are constantly working to get more millions of acres of the cream of cotton lands? Do you know that foreign spinners are sending men here to be educated in our agricultural colleges and schools to take charge of these broad acres, cultivate and raise cotton to ship to spinners in England, France and other foreign countries?

Our Richest Heritage.

"Do you think deep and sense what this means? Do you know that it means the actual production of cotton in the South on farms owned and cultivated by foreigners, and whose product will go direct to their mills in England, France and other countries? In plain words, we are sitting supinely by while foreign capital and corporations are taking our oldest, richest and greatest heritage right from under our noses.

"Time may not be far distant when our own people, the men who have raised and supplied the world with its cotton for generations, will be restricted absolutely to the home market. Sounds scary, and I want it to sound so, for it is time to get scared.

"This is a vital question which I would thank the Hearst newspapers and other great conservators of American interests to help our people to solve."

Life as Seen in the Movies

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

FIRST we see Harold folding Susie in his arms. In the background is the train that is to take Harold to the West, where he will make his fortune, after which he will return and make Susie the happiest girl in the world. In the background is George sneering like the plotting villain we know him to be the moment we set eyes on him. The conductor, who has been very patient, gives the signal. Harold climbs aboard at the last minute.

The Telegram.

Next we behold George and Susie speeding homeward in George's six-cylinder car. George is talking in what looks like a low, earnest voice, but Susie refuses to be interested. Suddenly he pulls from his pocket a telegram. Susie sits up suddenly. And well she may. For the film announces that the contents of the telegram are to the effect that Harold has gone to the West to marry another. What other we do not yet know.

We now behold Susie weeping at a desk in a room so full of furniture that no burglar could get halfway across it without waking up all the people in the next block. In her little hand she holds the telegram for a time, then tears it spitefully into bits that flutter out on the breeze that is blowing the Valenciennes curtains in twelve windows. George enters. He looks at the fragmentary telegram and sneers. Then he looks at Susie and smiles. Presently he engages in more low, earnest conversation, and you judge he is describing his yacht, his bank account and his country place at Mamaroneck. But Susie shrinks from these things.

"At Last!"

But evidently George knows more of Susie's disposition than we do. He points to the telegram and sneers, this time for three seconds. Susie sits bolt upright and thinks. Then she rises and paces the floor, deftly threading her way in and out among the furniture like a guide in the North Woods. At last she nods her head, but when George approaches enthusiastically she shakes it.

Here in the West, which is denoted by a lonely cabin in a stone quarry, is Harold. He is sitting by a fire examining nuggets. Evidently none of them is good for much but concrete work. But now he leans forward intently and examines one. Reaching for the only article of wardrobe in evidence, a coat, he dashes madly from the room and we next behold him entering an opening in the stone quarry through which trickles a rivulet. Bending over the rivulet, he picks up more nuggets. "At last" are the words we see plainly on his lips. They are subsequently verified by the text on the screen.

Harold re-enters the lonely cabin, and carefully hangs the coat on the same nail. A rough, unshaved person enters and hands him a letter. He opens it. His face clouds. Bad news from home, we conjecture. Right. Mighty bad news. Harold is being invited to Susie's wedding and George is going to be the bridegroom.

Throwing the newly found nugget out of the window, Harold hurriedly leaves the room.

Harold to the Rescue.

Here comes the Overland Limited. Nearer and nearer till we fear it will collide with the audience. But across the track suddenly darts a man waving a campaign hat. It is Harold. Will he be run over? No. The train stops. Harold climbs on. The train moves into nothingness just as we duck to avoid being hit by the pilot.

At the same old station Harold alights. He commandeers an automobile, and, taking the wheel, departs while the owner indignantly shakes his fist after him.

Same room, full of same furniture, but further embellished with a wedding bell and a minister. Enter Harold from one door and Susie from another. Harold steps forward just as George enters from a third. Susie, being in something of a dilemma, gets out of it neatly by fainting. George attempts to sneer, but doesn't get away with it. The .44 Harold has in his hand interferes. Evidently there are explanations. Susie's father, a gentleman with a limousine body, comes in and revives her. George, discovering that his fake telegram has been exposed, sneers for the last time and goes out a window. Harold folds Susie to his stalwart breast. The minister steps forward and the play is done.

STATE ENDS CASE AGAINST FRANK

Dalton Corroborates Jim Conley's Story

HUERTA TO DEPORT ENVOY LIND

Mexican President Declares U. S. Representative Must Bear Recognition of New Regime.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 7.—John Lind, now on his way to Mexico City as special representative of the United States, will not be received by President Huerta unless he presents credentials from the President of the United States, accompanied by recognition of the present government of Mexico.

Official announcement of this was made to-day by President Huerta. The statement was delivered to Charge O'Shaughnessy at the American Embassy by Manuel Garza Aldape, Acting Minister of Foreign Affairs of Mexico. It was also sent to Washington and to the powers of Europe.

Lind, Huerta's announcement said, will be expelled from the country as an undesirable alien unless he goes before the Mexican government and explains his official character and intentions or else brings official recognition of the Huerta administration from the Wilson Administration in Washington.

This is the boldest and most belligerent course yet taken by Huerta, and if the Mexican President carries out his threat Mexico will have accomplished what, in the eyes of international usuage, usually constitutes a casus belli.

In accord with the new aggressive policy of the Mexican government a delegation will wait upon Mr. Lind upon his arrival in this city, probably Saturday, and the attitude of the Mexican government toward the United States will be outlined then in unmistakable terms. The United States battleship carrying Mr. Lind is expected at Vera Cruz to-morrow night.

Must Bear Credentials.

The following official statement was issued to the press to-day by Senor Aldape:

The Mexican Department of Foreign Affairs has sent a note to Nelson O'Shaughnessy, charge d'affairs of the United States, stating by order of the President that, if Mr. John Lind, who, the Mexican government is informed, is to come to Mexico intrusted with a mission from President Wilson, does not establish in due manner his official character before the Mexican chancellery, or if he is not the bearer of recognition of the Mexican government by that of the United States, his sojourn in this Republic will not be grateful not satisfactory to this government.

This was the first time that Huerta formally recognized Mr. Lind as an Ambassador from the United States President.

To some extent the action of Huerta has the approval of some of the Americans here because it establishes plainly the position of the Mexican Government. Otherwise the suspense attending the coming of Mr. Lind and the consequences which may follow would only be prolonged.

In addition to coming as a special

Sues as Wife Turns Tango Gown Model

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 7.—Pasquale L. Montani, a musician, says in a divorce complaint filed to-day that his wife told him she preferred to be a living model in a tango gown than live with him.

He says he is fully able to provide for her, but she became a model in a downtown department store, wearing a tango gown which he says in his complaint "is designed to display the leg from the ankle to the knee."

Appeals to Wilson To Save His Teeth

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Dr. John Grant Lyman, Federal prisoner, charged with misusing the mails, has made an appeal to President Wilson for a hasty trial.

In a night lettergram sent to Washington the physician complained that his teeth have become worn to a razor edge and he is unable to masticate his food.

Colorado Women Are Asking More Offices

DENVER, Aug. 7.—The victory of Mrs. Ella Flagg Young and the uprising of Chicago women in her behalf have aroused Chicago women voters, who state they will demand their full share of State and city offices.

Chicago 'Trilby' Has Most Perfect Foot

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The center of attraction and interest at the meeting of the National Association of Chiropodists at the Hotel Marlborough to-day was the American "Trilby," personified in Miss Clara S. Houston, of Chicago.

Seated in an extremely business-like looking office, Miss Houston exposed for the benefit of visitors her well-shaped foot, which by all experts has been unanimously declared the most perfect in America.

Calls Mosquito King Of Disease Carriers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Mosquitoes were to-day branded the "king disease carriers" of the insect world by Dr. Nelson Du Val Breicht, formerly of the Public Health Service.

Besides their implements of torture, these insects carry about with them germs of leprosy, yellow fever, malaria, breakbone fever, typhoid and five other brands of malady. Dr. Breicht awarded the gnat second honors as a disease carrier.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 7.—Mayor Bading has declared that the women of Milwaukee may wear any kind of bathing suit as long as they wear as much as the men do.

ANTI-SLATON COMBINE IS CHARGED

'Drys,' Reported Allied With Tax Reform Foes to Defeat Governor's Bills, Hold Whip Hand.

The "dry" members of the House of Representatives and those members who oppose the enactment of tax reform measures have formed a combine to defeat all bills introduced or favored by Speaker Burwell, because the Speaker ruled that the resolution of Mr. Kidd, of Baker, ordering the Temperance Committee to report the Hixon-Searcy (Webb) bill back to the House was out of order Wednesday morning, after Wohlwender, of Muscogee, had held up the business of the House for an entire day with a filibuster.

The formation of the combine is virtually a defiance of Governor John M. Slaton and a refusal to accede to his wishes that tax reform measures and bills putting the taxation system of the State on a business basis be passed. It is a dare to the Governor to veto the House appropriation bill or call an extra session, both of which the Governor has said he will do if the House does not enact tax reform measures or keep its appropriations within the estimated revenues of the State.

Plan to Resurrect Bill.

In addition to trying to defeat the bills of Speaker Burwell and Governor Slaton, the combine will make every effort possible to resurrect the Hixon-Searcy Senate bill from the pigeonhole to which it has been consigned by the Temperance Committee. Mr. Kidd, the apparent author of the resolution which met such an inglorious finish Wednesday morning, declared that he will try to introduce his resolution at the first opportunity.

"We intend to try in every way possible to get the bill out of the committee and before the House at this session," said Mr. Kidd. "I intend to offer my resolution again, and if I can not do that we will try to find some other means of combating the enemies of the bill. We were not treated right by the Speaker when he ruled my resolution out of order. We are prepared to fight for our rights, and if the bill can not come up for the consideration of this House there are a lot of other measures that will receive scant consideration at the hands of the friends of the measure.

Organized Fight on Burwell.

"We intend to defeat every measure offered or favored by Speaker Burwell or the men who aided in the defeat of the resolution ordering the Temperance Committee to report back the Hixon-Searcy bill. Burwell's bills have no chance of passing this House during the present session. I have nothing personally against any of the Speaker's bills, but we are going to get even for the treatment we got during the consideration of my resolution and for not being given a chance to pass, or at least attempt to pass, the Webb bill that passed the Senate."

The combination of the "dry" forces and those opposed to tax revision was formed the day before the introduction of Mr. Kidd's resolution. Mr. Wohlwender, who started and carried through a successful filibuster, declared Wednesday that the resolution was drawn up by Barry Wright, of Floyd County, one of the prohibition leaders. It was the result of a combination formed at that time between Mr. Wright and other temperance leaders and Messrs. Stovall, of Elbert; Sheppard, of Sumter, and other members who have consistently opposed tax reform measures.

Unite Against Tax Reform.

It was agreed, it is generally understood, that the enemies of tax reform were to support the Kidd resolution on condition that the prohibition members aid them in their efforts to

CODY, NOTED AVIATOR, IS KILLED

Plunges One Thousand Feet to Death With Passenger in Test Flight in England.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ALDERSHOT, ENG., Aug. 7.—Colonel Samuel F. Cody, a former citizen of the United States and one of the most famous aviators in the world, and a passenger were killed here to-day while testing a new aeroplane over the military aerodrome.

These two fatalities bring the aviation death list up to 305.

Colonel Cody was one of the pioneer airmen and was commissioned by the British Government to build up the aviation corps of the Imperial army, which he fulfilled to the perfect satisfaction of the War Office. Cody was a relative of William F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody, and in appearance he resembled the famous American.

Protested Taking Passenger.

The name of the passenger who was killed with Colonel Cody was Evans. The aviator protested against any one accompanying him, saying that he was going to try out a new machine and the risk would be great. Evans was insistent and finally Cody relented.

After a "grass-cutting" circuit Cody shot the machine upward and soon the car was 1,000 feet in the air. Spectators on the field saw the machine begin to wabble as though one of the planes had buckled. Suddenly it turned over on its side and plunged downward. With a crash the machine struck the earth and the petrol tank burst, scattering the fuel over the bodies of the two men.

Cody and Evans were picked up and rushed to a hospital in the cantonments, but the spark of life already had been extinguished.

How He Got His Title.

The manner in which Cody got his title of "Colonel" is interesting. Shortly after King George ascended the throne he wrote a note of congratulation to Cody for some air feats he had performed and called him "Colonel" Cody, evidently confusing him with "Buffalo Bill." The aviator seized the opportunity to acquire a title and since had styled himself Colonel Cody.

Last August Cody won the British army flying tests, taking $25,000 in prizes.

Before taking up aviation Cody was an aeronaut of note and once made a balloon flight over London.

He planned a trip to India in an aeroplane-balloon of his own invention, but his death cuts off all plans for the future. Cody is survived by a widow, who, like her husband, has always been fond of excitement and adventure. She was the first woman in England to make a flight in an aeroplane and is herself an accomplished air car driver.

Colonel Cody came to England from the United States about ten years ago and became a naturalized British subject.

The ill-fated machine was of Cody's own construction and he had intended to attempt a flight across the Atlantic ocean in it.

Two sons of the dead aviator witnessed the tragedy. One of them rushed forward and threw himself on his father's body.

Medical examination showed that Cody's neck had been broken while one arm and several ribs were fractured. One rib had punctured the lung.

Man's Plea in Court Is Heard for Block

SANTA MONICA, CAL., Aug. 7.—E. C. Shapiro, held on a charge of passing a worthless check, pleaded his case before Judge G. Edwin Brown with such vigor that he was heard half a block from the court room. Despite the vocal strength of his plea, Shapiro was held to answer before the Superior Court.

Castro Is Denounced By His Namesake

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Cipriano Castro, the would-be dictator of Venezuela, is not a real Castro, or even a gentleman, according to Victor Cita Castro, who reached here on the French liner La Lorraine, and who shouted indignation from all directions when delayed for a time by federal officials in the belief that he was a possible ally of the redoubtable Cipriano.

"I know why you are keeping me here," he said. "You think I am going to participate in the revolt down there. You wound me; you pierce my heart with your words. Oh, vile! He is a peon and a peddler; not a Castro or a gentleman."

Tells How It Feels to Face Death by Rabies

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Facing death from rabies is a grim ordeal. This is the feeling expressed by Elsie Parish, noted writer of children's verses, who confidently awaits the outcome of treatment begun to forestall infection to which she laid herself open by sucking the wounds of two little girls who had been bitten by a rabid dog.

"Did you ever read an improbable story and then say to yourself that it couldn't have happened?" asked Miss Parish. "That's the way I feel. Of course, there is a horror in it all, but I just say, feeling as I do now, that I just know I'm not going to die."

Catholic Women To Oppose 'The Cause'

BUFFALO, Aug. 7.—Organization of a Catholic women's league that proposes to counteract the radical tendencies of the women's movement, including their demand for the ballot, marked to-day's session of the German Roman Catholic Central Verein.

"The femininist movement," said Mrs. Joseph Frey, honorary president, "is being promoted by women whose views are decidedly Pagan. If their demands were to be realized the Christian family would cease to exist and woman's condition would lapse into paganism."

U. S. Leads Europe In Child Welfare Work

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—"American obstetrical methods and child welfare work in general were shown by the papers and discussions at the infant mortality conference just ended in London to be superior to those of England," said Dr. Julius H. Hess, of Chicago, to-day. "Indeed, our child welfare work now surpasses that in Germany, where such work had its origin.

"The methods in the British colonies are also in advance of those in Europe."

Bullfrogs Imported; Skins Used in Purses

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7.—Eighteen big mountain frogs have been brought here from the Philippines by Dr. F. M. McAllister, ship's surgeon on the Korea. He will give them to the Park Commission for propagation in Stow Lake.

The mouse-colored skin, mottled with spots of darker hue, may be used for the manufacture of women's purses and chatelaine sacks.

The frogs are edilicate in spite of their size, and five died on the voyage.

Find Girls Lost in Snow on Mt. Rainier

DR. CHILDS IS CALLED BY DEFENSE TO REBUT DR. HARRIS' EVIDENCE

With the cross-examination of Dr. H. F. Harris, the State Thursday afternoon rested its case against Leo M. Frank accused of the murder of Mary Phagan.

Dr. L. W. Childs was called by the defense as its first witness to rebut the testimony of Dr. Harris.

The mysterious C. B. Dalton, who was expected to make sensational revelations of incidents in which Leo Frank was alleged to have participated in the National Pencil Factory, proved a very tame and commonplace witness when he was called Thursday.

The most that Dalton could say was that, on several of his visits to the factory, he had seen women in Frank's office. He told of no compromising situations. He was not even able to identify the women. He did not know whether or not they were members of Frank's own family. All that he knew was that they did not appear to be stenographers as he never saw them writing.

Dalton, when he was questioned by Luther Rosser, was not even sure of his own birthplace. He thought it was somewhere in Laurens County. He explained his presence by saying that he had gone to the factory with a Miss Daisy Hopkins. He said that he saw Frank in the office with two or three women, and that cool drinks generally were in evidence. On one occasion he said Frank and his visitors were drinking beer.

Detective Rosser on Stand.

Detective Bass Rosser was on the witness stand for a few minutes and was questioned briefly. He testified that when he saw Mrs. Arthur White the Monday after the crime she failed to tell him that she had seen a negro in the factory the Saturday the girl was killed. He said he did not get possession of this information until May 6 or 7. It is the contention of the State that the defense suppressed these facts.

At the conclusion of Detective Rosser's testimony, Solicitor Dorsey announced that he was prepared to rest as soon as Dr. H. F. Harris had completed the testimony which was interrupted by adjournment Wednesday afternoon. Dr. Harris was unable to appear when court opened at 9 o'clock. The prosecution had nothing more to present at 9:45 and a recess was taken until Dr. Harris arrived at 11:10.

Reuben Arnold began at once on a cross-examination of Dr. Harris as soon as the physician took the stand. He forced Dr. Harris to say that there is much uncertainty in drawing conclusions about digestive functions and their time limitations.

Solicitor Dorsey also asked for the submission of the National Pencil Company's cash book and bank book before he rested his case. This was agreed to by Frank's lawyers.

The defense announced that its first witness probably would be Dr L. W. Childs, who would be called to start an immediat attack upon the testimony presented by Dr. Harris.

Dr. Childs to Combat Harris Story.

Dr. Childs is a physician and surgeon and was expected to testify in regard to the wounds on Mary Phagan's body, as well as in respect to the certainty with which the lapse of time between a person's eating and his death may be determined.

One of the most interesting pieces of evidence for the purpose of demonstration in the possession of the defense is a large size model of the National Pencil Company constructed on an accurate scale.

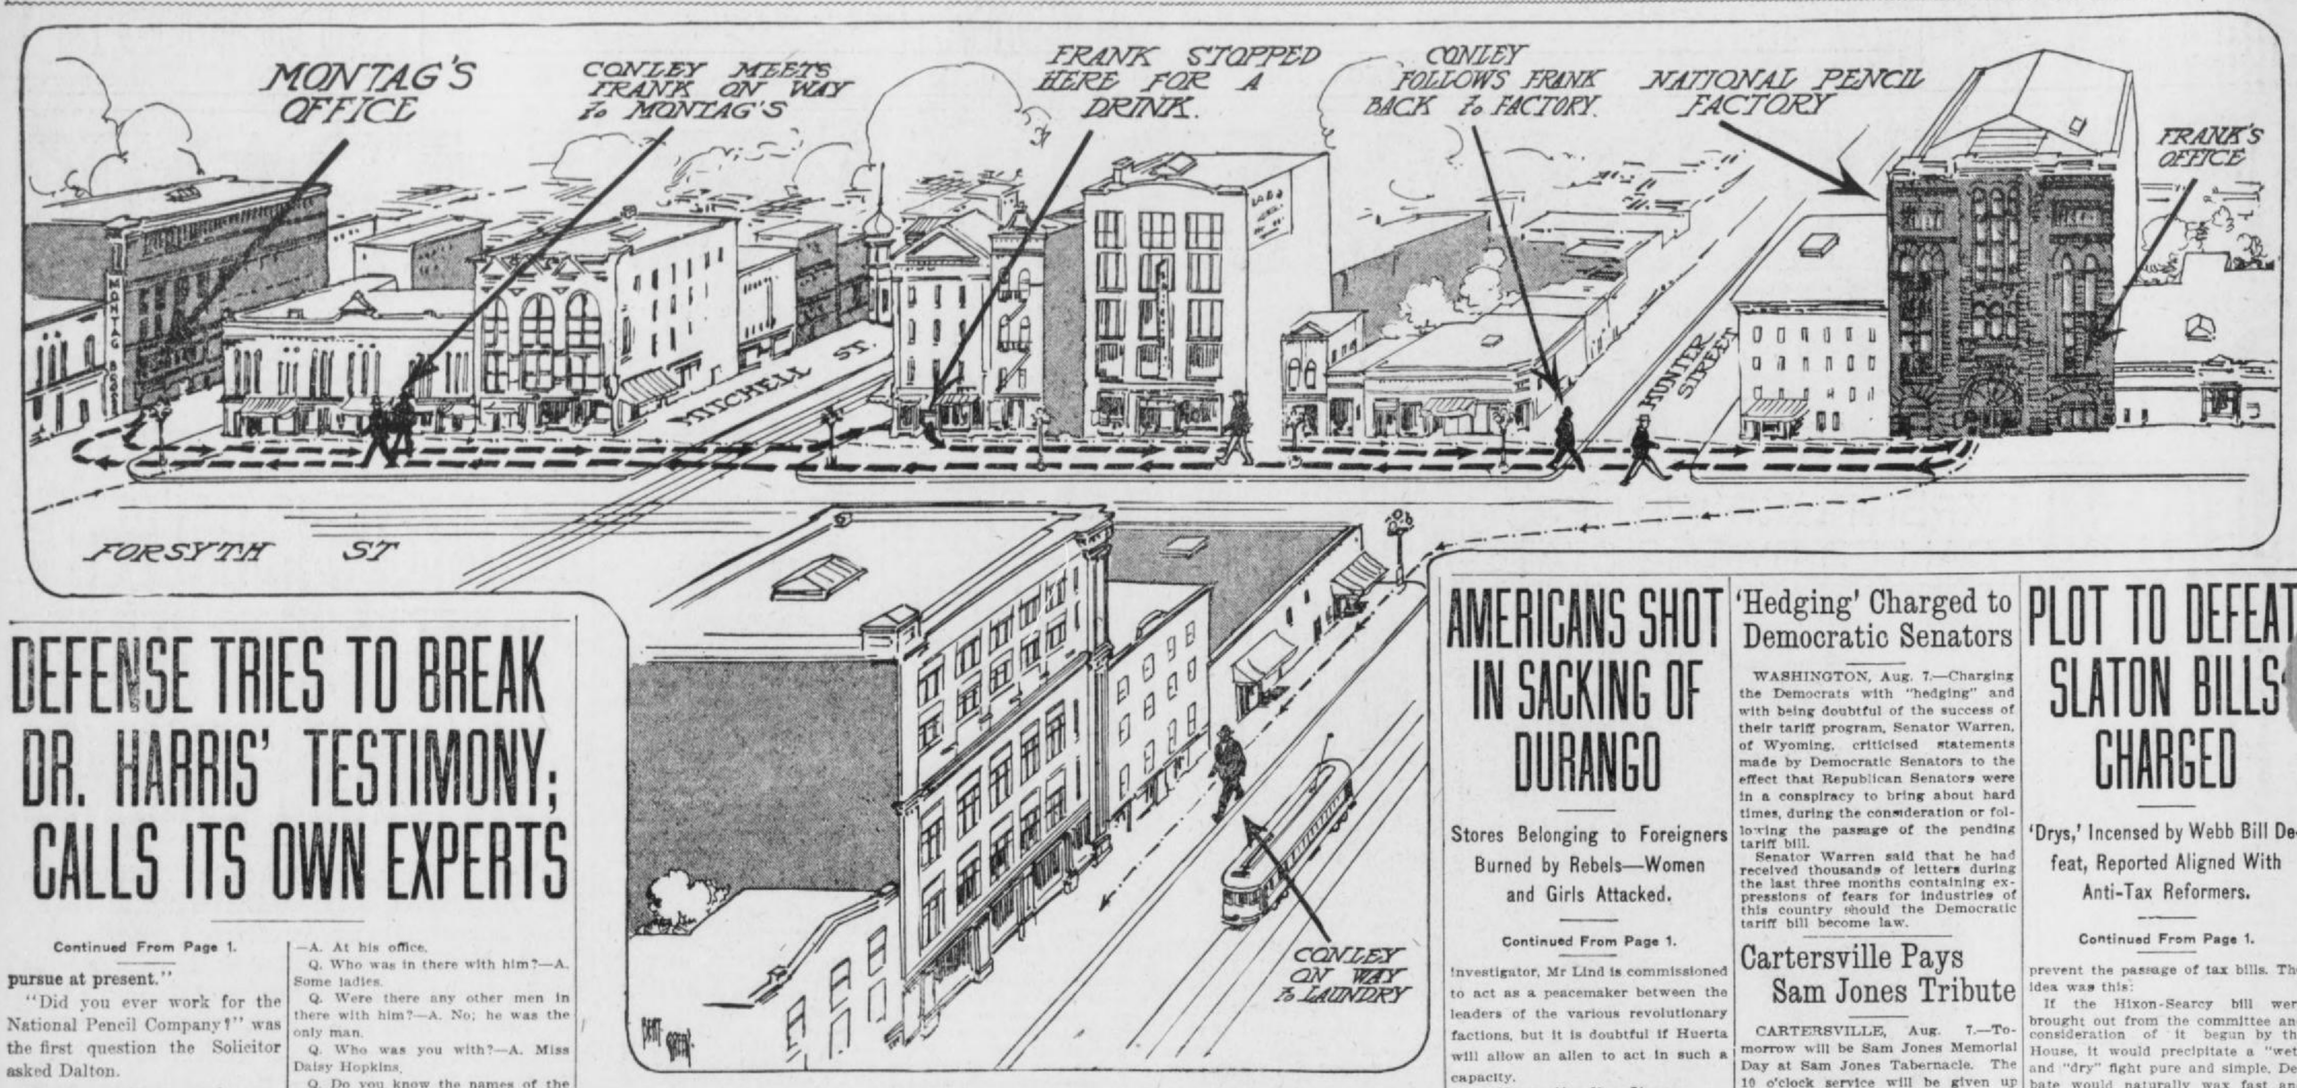

Frank chatted with his wife and mother in the intermission while the court was awaiting Dr. Harris, and a little later engaged in conversation with his attorneys. Dr. Childs entered the courtroom and talked several minutes with the defendant.

Attorney Rosser said that he would turn over the direct examination of the defense's witnesses to Arnold. Mr. Arnold said that the defense's first witness would be Dr. Leo A. Childs, who would give expert testimony in rebuttal of such testimony offered by the State.

Mr. Arnold said:

"Further than this witness I don't know what line we will pursue at present."

"Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?" was the first question the Solicitor asked Dalton.

Mr. Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor," he said, "we want it understood that we object to this testimony—all of it."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

"Well, we want our objection recorded," said Rosser.

Dorsey continued his questioning.

"Do you know Leo Frank and Jim Conley?" continued the Solicitor. A. Yes; I know them both.

Q. Were you ever in the factory of the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes; two or three times.

Q. Did you ever go to Frank's office with Miss Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes.

Was in Basement.

Q. Was Frank there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever go down in the basement?—A. Yes.

The witness then pointed out on the diagram the spot he was in in the basement.

Q. Did you ever see Conley on those visits?—A. Yes; and one time I saw another negro, a watchman.

Q. Did Frank know you were in the basement?—A. He knew I was in the factory. I don't know whether he knew I was in the basement or not.

Dorsey then turned the witness over to the defense for the cross-examination.

"When was the first time you saw Frank at the pencil factory?" asked Mr. Rosser.

"Last fall some time."

Q. Where was Frank at that time?—A. At his office.

Q. Who was in there with him?—A. Some ladies.

Q. Were there any other men in there with him?—A. No; he was the only man.

Q. Who was you with?—A. Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Q. Do you know the names of the ladies in the office with Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went to the basement.

Q. Was Miss Daisy with you?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you go to the factory again?—A. Right before Christmas.

Q. Who introduced you to Frank?—A. Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Q. She just said to Mr. Frank, "This is my friend, Mr. Dalton," did she?—A. Yes.

Went to Basement.

Q. You were never in his office after Christmas?—A. No.

Q. When you went into the factory with Miss Daisy, you went down to the basement with her, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you go down into the basement?—A. We went down the ladder by the elevator.

Q. Where did you go in the basement?—A. Right to where there were some boxes in the little room in the rear.

Q. Where did you live last year?—A. No. 337 East Hunter street.

Q. Who did you work for?—A. Mr. Heflin, a contractor.

Q. Where did you work after that?—A. With Captain John McGinnis.

Q. What time did you see Frank in his office?—A. Some time between 2 and 3 o'clock.

Q. Were the windows up?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you see any curtains?—A. No, but the office was very light.

Q. There were two windows in each office, weren't there?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know whether there was anyone else in the factory when you saw Mr. Frank?—A. Yes; the negroes were there.

Saw Negro Watchman.

Q. What time at night was it when the night watchman was there?—A. I don't know.

Q. Was it a negro watchman?—A. Yes.

Q. Was that this year?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in Walton County?—A. I lived there twenty years.

Q. How long were you away from there?—A. I went to Lawrenceville for about a year.

Q. How long ago?—A. I don't know. I forget just how long ago it was.

Q. Did you ever go with anyone to the pencil factory except Miss Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes. I used to go to the Busy Bee and wait for the factory to close to walk home with the girls.

Q. Can you name the girls?—A. Yes; Miss Laura Atkinson and a Miss Laura Smith, of No. 148 South Pryor street.

Q. Do you go there any more?—A. No; I haven't been to the Busy Bee in a long time.

Q. Where were you born?—A. I don't know.

Q. When you first woke up, where were you?—A. Somewhere in Walton County.

Gave Conley Money.

Q. As a matter of fact, you know where your family lived when you were born, don't you?—A. Somewhere near Lawrenceville.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Did you ever give Jim Conley anything?—A. Sometimes I would give him a quarter and sometimes 50 cents. Sometimes they would have cold drinks, and sometimes they would have beer.

Rosser took the witness again.

Q. When did you see beer there?—A. On Saturday afternoons—I don't remember the dates.

Q. Can you name specifically any time last fall that you went there?—A. Not the day, but it was some time after 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Mr. Frank would have the cold drinks on a waiter in his office.

Can't Give Women's Names.

Q. And that is as definite as you can fix it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you know the women besides the ones you name?—A. No.

Q. Can you describe them?—A. No. "Come down."

City Detective S. L. Rosser took the stand.

Q. Since April 26, have you been engaged in this case?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you visit Mrs. Arthur White subsequent to that date?—A. Yes.

Q. At what time?—A. Monday, April 28.

Q. Did she say anything about seeing a negro at the pencil factory Saturday?—A. No.

Q. What was the first time she mentioned to you seeing a negro at the factory?—A. May 6.

"I want to record an objection to that, your honor," said Rosser.

Rosser took the witness.

She Made Statement.

Q. Did you ask her?—A. No; but she made a statement.

Dorsey took the witness on redirect.

Q. Did you take anything to Dr. Claude Smith?—A. Yes; some chips.

Q. Are these the chips?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you make a search of the areaway around the elevator?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find anything like this (showing the bludgeon alleged to have been found by the Pinkertons)?—A. No.

Q. Would you have found it?—A. Yes.

Attorney Rosser took the witness again.

Q. Don't you know this roller has been in that factory two years?—A. It may have been, but it was not on the first floor when we made our search.

State Wins Ruling.

Q. You made a good search?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know these are the same chips?—A. Yes, I am sure of that.

The witness was excused.

Dorsey addressed the court:

"I don't know whether we tendered that bloody shirt or not. If we did not, I want to tender it now. I also want to enter these chips."

Attorney Rosser:

"They haven't been identified."

"They were identified by Detective Starnes and Chief Beavers," said Dorsey.

Judge Roan ruled that he would let them go to the jury.

Dorsey:

State's Case Nearly Finished.

"Now, I want the cash book and the bank book of the National Pencil Company."

Arnold said they would be furnished.

Dorsey:

"I want it understood as soon as Dr. Harris is able to complete his testimony the State is ready to rest its case."

"Mr. Dorsey," said Arnold, "will you tell Mr. Dalton not to leave. We may want to recall him."

Judge Roan declared a recess until Dr. Harris could reach the court. He said it would be about 10 o'clock.

Dalton Recalled for Moment.

Dorsey recalled the witness.

Q. Were you ever in the pencil factory with Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you go to the factory with her?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was Frank?—A. In his office.

Q. Where did you go?—A. In the basement.

Q. Did he know you were there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Conley know you were there? A. Yes.

Q. Who else?—A. The night watchman at one time.

Court then had a recess until Dr. H. F. Harris, who was excused from the witness stand Wednesday on account of illness, could arrive in court. The recess lasted for more than an hour. Dr. Harris, when he arrived upon the stand, was questioned upon cross-examination by Attorney Reuben Arnold.

Q. Unfavorable circumstances sometimes retard digestion, don't they?—A. Well, that is a very grave matter, and there is so little data on the subject it is hard to answer.

About External Circumstances.

Q. You would not say then that external circumstances, some undue mental excitement, might delay digestion?—A. I really don't know. There was an old Roman proverb that a person should take a walk after eating. Others say sleeping after a meal aids digestion.

Q. Then there is no set rule for digestion? Everybody is a rule unto themselves?—A. Not altogether. The average normal stomach is about the same in digestion.

Q. There is no indication on the outside of the body that would indicate how far digestion has gone?—A. None whatever.

Q. Don't the pulse or temperature show indigestion?—A. No. Very many people have indigestion several years and don't know it. They don't even feel it themselves.

Q. How long does the stomach take to free itself when it is full?—A. That has been investigated rather thoroughly, but it varies. I would say about 7 1-2 hours.

Q. How long does it take some substance that the stomach does not digest to pass out?—A. That is hard to say. They probably pass through in a foreign body.

Q. How long would it take?—A. That depends. The stomach doesn't like to free itself of meat until it is emulsified. Then it goes out very freely.

About Digestion of Cabbage.

Q. That is just the point. Does the stomach emulsify cabbage or corn?—A. Oh, yes; there is always a constant churning motion.

Q. How about corn?—A. It might pass through without emulsifying.

Q. Peas?—A. Yes.

Q. You would not attempt to enumerate what vegetables would pass through the stomach to the intestines? A. No, I would not.

Q. Is it not a fact that the first knowledge of digestion comes from that Canadian case?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not a fact that the only experiments before that time were made on rabbits and other animals for vegetables, and animals for meat? A. Yes.

Q. Is there any animal that eats everything that man does?—A. Yes, the swine.

Q. Any other?—A. I rather think the cat does.

Q. Well, isn't the wildcat a carnivorous animal strictly?—A. I don't know. I never associated with one.

Q. You will admit that the experiments along this line are very limited with the exception of that Canadian case?—A. Yes.

Processes Not All Understood.

Q. It is practically in its infancy?—A. Well, I would not say that. We are fairly familiar with the various juices and the process of digestion. But there is still much to learn.

Q. Just what part does the mouth and saliva play in connection with the stomach and the gastric juices, and the lower bowels? Is not this something that is not definitely known?—A. Yes, that is true.

Q. Don't you practice vivisection on these animals?—A. Yes.

Q. And you have never done it on humans, and you don't know how the processes take place in the human like you do in the animals?—A. Except with the stomach.

Q. What is the hardest vegetables to digest? I mean, leaving your experiments and speaking from the viewpoint of science.—A. I don't know that science has ever determined that.

Q. Isn't cabbage regarded as one of the hardest vegetables to digest?—A. I probably have heard that. It may be that after cabbage has gone through the stomach, trouble may be caused in the small intestines that may be what has given the geenral idea that cabbage is hard to digest.

Q. Didn't you say when you first testified that you couldn't tell anything about the bread in the stomach?—A. I don't think I made that statement.

Mr. Arnold read his testimony previously given.

Dr. Harris: "If I said that, I did not mean it in that sense. I meant that you could tell nothing about it by observing with the naked eye."

Q. You said it was impossible to state absolutely how long that cabbage had been in Mary Phagan's stomach?—A. I meant I could not state within a minute.

Q. Could you tell within two minutes?—A. No, not within 3, or 4, or 5. Probably not within 10 minutes. But I could tell that it was somewhere between 30 and 45 minutes.

Q. Doesn't it all depend on how much digestion is delayed?—A. To an extent.

Q. All you are attempting to say, then, is that the process of digestion had only gone on a certain length of time?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you say that certain circumstances retard digestion?—A. Yes, but I didn't say that anything could retard the flow of the digestive juices. No one has ever shown that anything could retard the process of digestion.

$250,000 Gem Theft Clew Is Unearthed

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Declaring his operatives have evidence that jewels worth $250,000 were taken in the recent robbery of the mansion of John E. Hanan at Narragansett Pier, R. I., and that a large part of the loot was recently offered for sale to a New York dealer in gems, Samuel Samwick, head of a detective agency, said to-day that an arrest is expected within 24 hours that will go far toward solving the mystery.

The sale fell through because the person wanted more than the jeweler was willing to pay.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

On Face and Head. Was Very Disfigured, Hair Fell Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Falmouth, Ky. — "Two years ago I was troubled with skin and scalp troubles. I would have pimples that would break out and form sores on my face and head with terrible itching. The eczema on my face and head itched and burned and when I scratched it, it made sores and I was very disfigured for the time being. My head became so sore I could not touch it with a comb; it became a mass of sores. My hair fell out gradually.

"After trying several remedies without much benefit a friend that had been cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment told me and I decided to try them. I was afflicted about a year before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after using them three weeks I was getting better and in less than three months, after using eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and five boxes of Cuticura Ointment, I was completely cured of eczema." (Signed) Frank Vastine, Dec. 12, 1912.

If you wish a skin clear of pimples, blackheads and other annoying eruptions, hands soft and white, hair live and glossy, and scalp free from dandruff and itching, begin to-day the regular use of Cuticura Soap for the toilet, bath and shampoo, assisted by occasional light applications of Cuticura Ointment. No other method is so agreeable or economical. Sold everywhere. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

investigator, Mr Lind is commissioned to act as a peacemaker between the leaders of the various revolutionary factions, but it is doubtful if Huerta will allow an alien to act in such a capacity.

Huerta Has New Slogan.

"Mexican affairs for Mexicans," was the laconic remark made by President Huerta to-day to his followers in Congress who called at the national palace.

Previous to the statement issued to-day by the Mexican Minister, the United States Embassy had received the following note from Secretary of State Bryan:

You may say to the Mexican Foreign Minister that Governor Lind comes to Mexico on a mission of peace, and that President Wilson feels that his presence there will contribute toward a settlement of existing difficulties.

The Mexican Government should await the President's ocmmunication and not give weight to misrepresentations published in sensational newspapers

Not only in this city but throughout the entire republic increased antagonism toward Americans is being shown Huerta and his advisers believe that if war should be declared it would have the result in making a unit of all the revolutionary bands so that a solid front could be presented against any foreign foe.

Within the past seven months the Government has placed orders for 100,000 rifles and a commensurate supply of ammunition, as well as mountain and field guns.

Steel, Not Grape-Juice To Back U. S. Policy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The first show of hostility to Special Envoy Lind, the President's personal representative, now speeding on his way to Mexico, came from Mexico City to-day from unofficial sources, and confirmed some of the early suspicions of Washington officials.

It was expected that General Huerta would make some move to block the movement toward mediation with the Constitutionalists, which has been devised by President Wilson.

If the de facto government, however, should deliberately aim to poison Mexican public opinion against the good offices of the United States even before the arrival of Mr. Lind, President Wilson will realize that he has been dealing too justly with General Huerta and that a more drastic policy is required.

If the Federalists decline to take Mr. Lind's mission seriously, the President will find his well-intentioned plan of restoring peace in Mexico blocked in advance.

General Huerta probably will find that, if he thus insults the White House, there will be steel in American foreign policy, as well as "grape juice."

The White House is cognizant of the fact that it can, with the exercise of a little diplomatic pressure, oust General Huerta from the Presidency in a short time. It is this club which the United States may wield before intervention becomes a possibility. If Mr. Lind is to go to Mexico City with the entire capital hostile to him before his arrival, owing to Huerta's influence, officials believe the United States will not be slow to adopt retaliatory measures.

Secretary of State Bryan received to-day a telegram from Mr. Lind stating that he arrived at Galveston at 5 o'clock this morning, and expected to sail on the New Hampshire for Vera Cruz at 9 o'clock. It is expected that he will arrive at Vera Cruz to-morrow night.

Americans Shot in Sacking of Durango.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—M. A. Leach, a business man of San Francisco, told Secretary of State Bryan to-day a thrilling story of the sacking of the city of Durango by Revolutionists on June 18, which he witnessed.

The entire city was looted, he says, and German, French and American stores were burned, entailing a property loss of more than $5,000,000.

Scores of Mexicans were shot down and dragged through the streets.

Roger Palmer, an Englishman, employed by the Mexican National Railway, was killed because he failed to open a safe.

Carlos Bombrandis, mining man, and L. W. Elder, both Americans, were wounded by a bomb used to force the doors of the McDonald Institute, where many of the foreigners had assembled for protection.

H. W. Stepp, an American civil engineer, was shot through the leg because he failed to deliver 500 pesos he did not have.

Leach says a number of women sought safety in the archbishop's palace but the bishop was taken prisoner and held for ransom of half a million pesos. Hundreds of women and girls were outraged.

'Hedging' Charged to Democratic Senators

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Charging the Democrats with "hedging" and with being doubtful of the success of their tariff program, Senator Warren, of Wyoming, criticised statements made by Democratic Senators to the effect that Republican Senators were in a conspiracy to bring about hard times, during the consideration or following the passage of the pending tariff bill.

Senator Warren said that he had received thousands of letters during the last three months containing expressions of fears for industries of this country should the Democratic tariff bill become law.

Cartersville Pays Sam Jones Tribute

CARTERSVILLE, Aug. 7.—Tomorrow will be Sam Jones Memorial Day at Sam Jones Tabernacle. The 10 o'clock service will be given up to the life and work of the evangelist. Talks will be made by "Gypsy" Smith, Bob Jones and John Callahan. This is one of the feature services of the meeting and will be an annual affair.

To-morrow afternoon services will be held at which negro people will have an opportunity to pay tribute to the famous revivalist, who was a great friend of the race.

Poems of an Accused Murderess Grip Paris

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—So great has become the public demand for the poetical works of Mme. Crespy, who is on trial at Agen charged with murdering Abbe Lachau, a young priest, her sweetheart, that the printers are preparing several new editions. A verdict may be reached in the murder trial to-day.

It has developed that Mme. Crespy fell in love with the young priest while she was confessing indiscretions which resulted in her husband securing a divorce.

prevent the passage of tax bills. The idea was this:

If the Hixon-Searcy bill were brought out from the committee and consideration of it begun by the House, it would precipitate a "wet" and "dry" fight pure and simple. Debate would naturally wax fast and furious, and the members who oppose tax reform measures figured that the discussion of the bill would occupy the time of the House until adjournment, or at least create such a spirit of unrest and antagonism that the ranks of the tax reformers would be broken.

Then, when Speaker Burwell ruled the Kidd resolution out of order on the grounds that it asked a physical impossibility of the Temperance Committee, the strength of the combine was directed against the presiding officer of the House and his bills, and the bills of others that he favored, and the bills of the other members who opposed the resolution.

Controls Half of House.

The combine at present controls probably half the votes of the House, and renders impossible the passage of any measure that requires a two-thirds vote, and makes exceedingly difficult the passage of any measure requiring even a bare majority. Wednesday afternoon the combine displayed strength enough to defeat two of Speaker Burwell's bills, both constitutional amendments requiring a two-thirds majority to carry. They were administration bills, and the word has been passed among the members of the House that Governor Slaton favored them and desired that they be enacted. Both were overwhelmingly defeated.

The first bill to feel the strength of the combine was Burwell's measure submitting to the qualified voters of the State a proposition to amend the constitution so that the school levy of any one year should not exceed 2 1-2 mills, in addition to the regular school fund provided by the Constitution.

Two of His Measures Beaten.

Though the Speaker himself took the floor and explained the purpose of the bill—that it was merely one of a series of bills designed to place the State on a sound business basis—the bill was defeated by a vote of 106 to 67, lacking by 17 votes the necessary two-thirds majority. The other administration bill, a companion bill to the one defeated first, submitted a proposition that the annual levy for pensions should not exceed 1 1-2 mills. It was defeated, the vote being 79 to 79. It lacked 44 votes of having a two-thirds majority.

Unless the combine can be broken, the result will be that little or no legislation of importance will be enacted during the balance of the session. It means that the Legislature, having already attained the name by doing less than any Legislature in years, will go down in history as a Legislature that did absolutely nothing of importance.

JIM CONLEY, THE EBONY CHEVALIER OF CRIME, IS DARKTOWN'S OWN HERO

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Now that James Conley has been dismissed from the Frank trial, now that he has stood safely the fire of Mr. Rosser's most exhaustive grilling, what of him?

If Frank is convicted, Conley subsequently will be convicted, no doubt, of being an accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder—and that will mean three years, at most, in the penitentiary.

After that—when the Frank trial, more or less, has been forgotten—Conley will be at liberty to come back amongst the people of Atlanta.

Not far from Five Points, a little due east along one of the big thoroughfares meeting there, there is a negro bootblack who now and then, when he is on the job, which frequently he isn't, gives me a "shine" so much to my liking that it brings me back on other days.

He is a sort of Jim Conley negro—at least, he has a smattering of education, an ingratiating air, and is polite, particularly when it pays him to be.

Quite without previous design, I stopped at this negro's stand Wednesday afternoon, and it was not long before he mentioned the famous trial. He having started the conversation, I asked him a few questions—and his replies, given herein in part, rather set me to thinking.

"Complimented on All Sides."

"George," I said—not that I know his name is George, but that it so happens I address negroes unknown of name that way—"what do your friends down on Decatur street think of Jim Conley's story over yonder in the big court? Rather clever, negro, Jim, eh?" said I to this bootblack.

"Well, boss, dat Mr. Rosser ain't made nothing on Jim yit, is he?" replied George.

I ventured the opinion that Mr. Rosser failed, at least, to make Jim out so many different kinds of a liar that his story might not stick in spots.

"Well, boss," continued my bureau of information, "dem niggers down on Decatur street, dey ain't talking of nothing but Jim Conley. He's de most talked about nigger anywhere, I guess. I hears him complimented on all sides!"

"In other words, Jim's a sort of hero along Decatur street nowadays?" said I.

"Yassir, dat's it—Jim's a hero. Niggers all talking about him. He done got de best of de smartest of 'um. Nobody can't fool er nigger like Jim!"

Hero Around "Butt In" Bar.

I presume, too, that something of the same condition prevails over on Peters street—particularly in the neighborhood of the "Butt In" bar over there.

You remember the "Butt In" boozorium in Peters street is the one wherein Conley filled up rather freely on beer, the morning of the Phagan murder, also on beer mixed with wine.

The "Butt In", it also will be recalled, is where Conley obtained a "double-header" beer—"double-headers" being the order of the day always in the "Butt In;" there being, perhaps, some subtly humorous connection between "Butt In" and "double-header!"

It Is Not Improbable.

It is not improbable that many a foaming "double-header" has been dumped into dusky citizens along the way of the "Butt In" of late—in honor of Jim, and the way he "done got de best of de smartest of um, over dar in de big court!"

If Jim Conley ever gets back to Decatur street, and hereafter he be permitted to tread the primrose way of the "Butt In" bar over on Peters, in all probability the drinks will not cost him anything for many days.

The proprietor of the "Butt In" doubtless right now would scorn to take Mr. Conley's honest money—the violent presumption being that Jim ever had, or ever will have, that kind of money—even for "double-headers."

Jim has just passed through the fire. And he got through, his reputation more or less damaged for truthfulness, to be sure, but not utterly shattered beyond patching up in such wise that it might be worked one more time, at least, if necessary.

True, Conley already had been in jail seven times that he admits of, and several times more that he can not recall precisely, and that had served to make him something of a hero in darkest Darktown; but Jim's involuntary residence in durance vile heretofore has been in police circles and mere county chaingangs exclusively. So that didn't make him a particularly big hero—albeit it made him a hero not altogether to be sneezed at!

Now, however, Jim has been in "de big court," tangled all up in a murder case, suspected by some of being a principal to the murder, indeed, but cleverly side-stepping that too deadly peril—and his name has been in all the newspapers hundreds of times, and his picture dozens of times, and before he gets through with it, he will be decorated by the State's majesty in stripes—but the latter not so long that it will seriously inconvenience anybody, particularly Jim!

All in all, Jims' a real hero in darkest Darktown, at last—a real ebony chevalier of crime—and those brethren who frequent the "Butt Ins" and the "Butt Outs," and booze dispensaries of like persuasion will bow down and worship Jim—for, in their philosophy, of such as Jim is the Decatur street "kingdom of heaven."

Ruling Generally Approved.

The general impression seems to be that Judge Roan did the right thing in permitting the Conley story to go to the jury in its entirety, inasmuch as it had gone in deadly part, anyway.

Perhaps the evidence fixing upon Leo Frank another crime than the one he stands charged with under the present indictment was, primarily, inadmissible, but there was no way to relieve the jury of the charge Conley made, and it would have been hardly fair either to the jury, the court and even to the defendant, to cut the story off there.

If the State is able to sustain its terrible charge against Frank, it perhaps is common sense now to let it proceed to the corroborating of Conley, if it can corroborate him.

To have left Conley's charge neither contradicted nor corroborated—that would merely have resulted in its probable corroroboration in the minds of the public, if not elsewhere.

The things Conley said to the Frank jury can not be said and then forgotten.

It would have been folly to have ASKED the jury to forget—it would have been imposing upon it an impossible mental task.

Other Charge as Serious.

If it so be that error was committed in not ruling out the story, a new trial will be granted, on appeal, in the event of Frank's conviction—and the trial next time undoubtedly will proceed without this particular evidence in.

The State can, if it fails to sustain eventually its charge of murder, still move against Frank, if it so elects, in the other direction—which crime, under the Code, is quite as serious as murder.

One may feel the injustice of flinging at Frank, while on trial for murder, another capital charge—still, since the additional charge was admitted, with protest, as an original proposition few people will contend strenuously that the State should not be permitted to proceed to the conclusion of a line of evidence begun without protest.

I have heard Judge Roan's ruling discussed about town last night, and to-day, and I heard few who find fault in it.

Indeed, as matter of simple justice to Frank, no less than to the State—and it will not do to forget that the State has large rights at stake in this matter—it seems common sense and elementary justice that the State, having made its awful charge, be required either to corroborate it or not.

That apepars to be the public attitude in the matter.

TRIAL AS VARIED AS VAUDEVILLE EXHIBITION

Every Change in Chromatic Scale Rung — All Georgia Types Seen in Court.

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Every change in the chromatic scale has been rung in the Frank trial. With the single exception of the skyrocket oratory that will mark the last stage of the trial, everything that has ever been done in the trial of a criminal case has been enacted in the fight to fix on the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory the guilt of the murder of Mary Phagan.

There has been comedy. There has been tragedy. There has been periods as dull as a hookworm victim. There have been occasions as startling as the feat of a circus daredevil. There have been pathos and performances worthy of a clown. The somber has been mixed with the gay until the entire trial seems the work of a futurist artist who has had a hard night with the drinking cups before he started the painting.

Jim Conley was on the stand something like sixteen hours. His story was a ragtime composition, with the weirdest syncopations, and then came Dr. Harris right on his heels and gave evidence full of soundness and learnedness. To the spectators it seemed that they had just heard "Alexander's Ragtime Band" played and then a Bach fugue for an encore.

One Simple, Other Complex.

Conley's story was as simple in words as "Old Black Joe," while Dr. Harris' was as complex as a Wagnerian overture.

Jim Conley spoke in terms of the street, of the near-beer saloon, of the blind alley crap game. Dr. Harris spoke in the language of the laboratory and the library.

Jim Conley could not enunciate a word of more than one syllable. Dr. Harris was as polysyllabic as the word "heterogeneous." And the spectators had to gasp after the shift.

Conley's story, while it was as full of contradictions as a hive is of bees, was as easy to understand as a baby's "da-da" is to a fond parent. Dr. Harris evidence was as loaded with medical lore as a physician's library.

And, although it seems impossible, there is more still to come. Before the trial has ended practically every type that Georgia knows will have been paraded in the courtroom.

Types Seen in Court.

Right now, the spectators have seen the scholarly defendant whose court attitude is still an enigma—as unsolvable as the crime with which he is charged. There are his loving mother and his devoted wife.

Here is the massive figure of Luther Rosser, attacking every opponent with a battleax ferocity. Here is the erudite Arnold, with rapier thrusts to send in the death blow when the enemy is beaten down by the more direct assault of his ally.

Here is the young Solicitor, struggling against tremendous odds, upsetting tradition by fighting Rosser with his own weapons, burning Arnold with his own fire.

Here is his learned associate, quick to grasp a point as a drowning man is a straw.

Here are factory girls and business men. Here are the comical figure of Newt Lee and the sinister figure of Jim Conley. Here are the learned scientist and the sleuth hound.

It seems that everything has been shown, but still there will be more. It is impossible that Rosser and Arnold will not show something just as novel and bizarre as the State has presented.

Color for a Dickens.

There is Mincey to come with his startling story—Mincey, as typical of the red clay soil of the Cracker country as peanuts and watermelons; Mincey, so typically the country school teacher that he will have to carry a rod of hickory and a blueback speller to the stand to feel at home while he is giving his evidence.

And there will be a lot more.

Tragic as is the trial, it has been Atlanta's greatest vaudeville show. Dickens could have spent one week in Judge Roan's courtroom and written four novels around the types he saw listening to and playing parts in the drama that hovers around the life and death of a little girl of the factory.

ROAN'S RULING HEAVY BLOW TO DEFENSE

Judge Roan administered a severe blow to the defense Wednesday when he ruled that all of Conley's story should stand, although portions of it, he acknowledged, would have been inadmissible had objection been made at the time the testimony was offered.

Judge to Rule as Case Proceeds.

It was a particularly difficult allegation to combat. Unlike many allegations, it was exactly as hard to fight in the event it was false as in case it was founded on fact.

Judge Roan said in regard to the testimony of Dalton that he did not know what it was to be and that he would allow it to be presented so that he might rule on its admissibility as it came up.

Solicitor Dorsey put the final rivet in his case so far as it rested upon the testimony of Conley when at the close of his redirect examination of the negro he brought to light the State's theory of the disposition that had been made of the Phagan girl's mesh bag.

Practically no mention of the mesh bag had been made during the week and a half of the trial. The only reference made to it was in the examination of Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of the slain girl, and of the officers who visited the scene of the crime immediately after police headquarters was called by the negro nightwatchman, Newt Lee.

Tells of Mesh Bag.

Mrs. Coleman testified that Mary left home with the mesh bag in her hand. The detectives and policemen all testified that they were able to find no trace of it either the morning after the crime or in the search that had been conducted since then.

"Did you ever see the murdered girl's mesh bag?" Dorsey asked Conley, just as it appeared that he had finished his questioning.

"Yes, sah, I see it," Conley replied.

"Where was it?"

"It was right on Mr. Frank's desk when I went in there to write the notes."

"Did you see what became of it?"

"Yes, sah; Mr. Frank went and put it in his safe."

Conley left the stand at 11:10 o'clock still sticking to his charge that Leo Frank killed the Phagan girl and that, at Frank's direction, he (Conley) assisted in the disposal of the body. He had been on the stand fifteen and one-half hours and under the grilling cross-examination of Luther Rosser for more than thirteen hours.

Practically the only addition he made to his story as it appeared in his direct examination was his declaration that while he was writing the murder notes Frank took the pencil out of his hand and then an instant later made him rub out the "s" he had written as he spelled out "negros." Conley said he wrote the note at first:

"A long tall black negros did this by hisself."

A long argument over the admissibility of Conley's testimony in regard to Frank's alleged conduct with women previous to the murder of Mary Phagan took place after the jury had been sent from the courtroom at noon. Court recessed before the arguments were concluded, and the debate was resumed in the afternoon.

Reuben Arnold cited opinions from courts in States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but his arguments were unavailing and the decision went against the defense. There was a murmur of applause and a stamping of feet.

Arnold instantly was on his feet with a motion for a mistrial, but he realized at once that the jury was not present and withdrew the motion. He threatened, however, to make a motion that the courtroom be cleared if such a demonstration occurred again.

Dr. Harris Recalled.

Dr. Harris was recalled to complete the testimony which he was giving when he collapsed on the stand the Friday before. He repeated his assertion as to the time Mary Phagan came to her death after eating dinner at her home in Bellwood Saturday shortly before noon.

"I can say with almost absolute certainty," he declared, "that this little girl was killed within 30 or 40 minutes after she ate her meal that day."

He refused, under cross-examination, to change his testimony in the least in respect to the cause of death.

"It was easily apparent that strangulation was the cause," he declared.

"An examination of the lungs was unnecessary and even useless because of the embalming preparation that had been employed. It was plainly evident that the rope had been placed about the girl's neck before death and the deep indentation showed that it was sufficient to choke off her breath and cause death within a brief time."

Blow Not Fatal, He Says.

Although Arnold was unable to make the physician alter the statement of his opinion, he obtained an admission that a blow on the head sufficient to cause death might immediately precede garroting and still the same manifestations of strangulation exist.

Dr. Harris, however, did not believe that the blow on Mary Phagan's head was enough to cause death. He said that the blow was not severe and that, aside from a little spot of blood on the brain which could not have caused any pressure, the brain was entirely normal.

Attorney Arnold in the latter part of the afternoon session engaged in an exhaustive and highly technical examination of the witness in regard to the action of the digestive juices, the percentages that were present in Mary Phagan's stomach and the tests that were made for poisons.

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"WITH no prices on the menu!" repeated Helen in amazement. "Then they can charge us anything they please?"

"That's the idea. Most of the smart places in Paris never price their food. They're supposed to cater to people who are concerned only with the quality of the dishes—not with the price."

"But, Warren, WE don't want to go to such a place! I'd be so worried about what the check was going to be—I couldn't eat a thing."

"Well we're going to one right now for dinner—Cafe D'Armenonville. One of the show places in the Bois. You'll see more smart Parisians there than you've seen yet. While we're over here we're going to do Paris. What difference does a few dollars make one way or the other?"

"But, dear, I'm not dressed for a pretentious place."

"Well, put on something light then—anything will do. They don't expect Americans to dress much. They think we all come from a sort of wild and woolly West. All they want is our money."

"Well, I don't think we've got so much," laughed Helen. "Not enough to go to a place where they don't price their food."

"Guess we can stand it for once. Hurry up—it's almost 7."

A little later they left the hotel. Outside Warren raised his cane at a passing taxi.

Warren Determined.

"Of course we've got to have a cab," impatiently, as Helen made her usual protest. "It's the only way you can get to that place. Now, you leave this to me. We're going to Armenonville's to-night, and we're going to do the thing right. Hang the expense!"

When Warren started out in this spirit Helen knew it was useless to try to curb him. He was in the mood to spend money—and he was going to spend it. She leaned back in the cab with a sigh of resignation.

But as this was Helen's first drive through the Champs Elysees, she soon forgot everything else in the beauty of the scene.

Under the trees, along the drive, were chairs and tables, mostly deserted now. But from the gay gowns of the few people who still lingered Helen could imagine what it must have been an hour earlier.

"I'll not have the time, but you ought to come out to the Bois some afternoon for tea," suggested Warren. "Nothing like it in the world. There's Armenonville's through there," pointing to a mass of brilliant lights glimmering through a grove of trees.

Cabs, taxies and victorias were lined up three and four abreast in the wide graveled driveways before this famous restaurant.

"But we're not going to keep this taxi?" asked Helen anxiously, as they waited their turn to draw up before the entrance.

"That's just what we're going to do," snapped Warren. "We'll not take any chances of getting one when we're through."

To order dinner from an unpriced menu, and to feel that a taxi was industriously ticking up the francs—the evening held little prospect of pleasure for Helen.

Warren led the way through the spacious hallway to the garden beyond. The place was like fairyland, with banks of red geraniums, a gleaming fountain, and ropes of colored lights festooned through trees and shrubbery. There must have been a hundred or more tables on the lawn, yet all were taken, and a group of people were waiting.

"You stay here." Warren strode off determinedly after a headwaiter.

Helen's gaze followed him anxiously. She saw him slip some money into the hand of the suave Frenchman, and a moment later they were being seated at one of the few tables that had been "reserved."

"Warren, I thought you didn't believe in bribing headwaiters?"

"Well, you've got to do it here. This is a show place, I tell you, and you've got to come across. We'd have stood there all night without a table if I hadn't forked up."

Helen's first concern was in the menu—a large card with a fantastically decorated border of lobsters and crabs. She had hoped all along that Warren was wrong and that the prices would be given, but there was not a single figure. This bill of fare was to show only what you could get—not what you would have to pay for it.

"Oh, dear, just order one or two things! I'm not very hungry—and you had luncheon, didn't you?"

But Warren only glowered at her, and gave his order to the waiter by checking off with his pencil some of the dishes with the longest and, as Helen thought, most expensive looking French names.

"Now, see here," when the waiter had gone, "this isn't so bad as you think. The theory of this is that they charge in proportion to what you order. For instance, if you only have a roast and a salad, you pay more proportionately for those two dishes than you would if you had four or five. That's fair enough."

"Well, if that's their method, then why don't they put down the prices and deduct a certain percentage when you order a number of things? Wouldn't that be a good idea for any restaurant? Think how much more people would order if they felt they were getting a discount."

"Huh! Sort of on the principle of five cents apiece, six for a quarter!" grinned Warren.

"But don't you see people WOULD order more," insisted Helen, growing enthusiastic over her idea. "I'm sure any of the big New York restaurants would coin money on that plan."

"Better try to sell 'em the idea when you get back," scoffed Warren. "They might pay you something for it."

"Well, they might!" defiantly.

Just then a striking beauty, in a clinging white gown and a drooping leghorn hat with red poppies, swept by, leaving a trail of perfume.

"Dear, some of the gowns ARE beautiful," mused Helen, now giving herself up to a study of the place.

A Pretty Girl.

"Not a bad-looking girl over there in yellow," commented Warren.

"I was just going to speak of her—that's the most WONDERFUL gown!"

The girl was dark and slender, with heavy brown hair drawn low into a simple coil on her neck. Her dress was of pale yellow chiffon, with brown fringe; her hat of the same chiffon was wreathed with yellow-petaled, brown-eyed daisies, and the streamers of brown velvet ribbon were knotted under her chin.

Most of the hats had either ties or streamers, with the trimming placed at some daring angle. While they must have looked very extreme in the shop windows, they were charming on the women who wore them.

"After all, the French women DO know how to wear their clothes."

"The ones you see here ought to," was Warren's comment. "That's about their only job."

"Dear, I haven't any idea what I'm eating," Helen exclaimed suddenly.

"Well, it's good, isn't it? That's sweetbread with truffles and wine sauce, en casserole—one of their specialties here. Only place in Paris you can get it like this."

But to Helen the food was always secondary to the atmosphere of the place and the people. And now she absent-mindedly ate her dinner, intent upon the scene about her.

"A woman never has any palate," grumbled Warren. "This dish is a work of art. There's a smoothness and flavor to this sauce that you wouldn't get anywhere else in the world. But you don't appreciate it! A dinner like this is wasted on any woman."

"Why, dear, that isn't fair," indignantly. "I think it's delicious, and I'm eating every bit of it."

A Treat.

"Oh, you're eating it, but might as well be eating corned beef hash in a dairy lunch room. I tell you this is a treat! No wonder the chef who made that sauce didn't want a price put on it. You can't price a thing like that any more than you can price a rare picture," enthused Warren, growing eloquent under the influence of the vintage wine.

Even Helen forgot her dread of the check and became enthusiastic when the waiter served the fruits au champagne. It was a tall glass dish of cut fruit, wonderful strawberries, cherries, pineapples and peaches floating in an iced syrup of blended wines and cordials.

When later the check was brought face down on a plate, instinctively Helen leaned forward to see the total. But Warren took it up quickly, glanced over the items, drew a crisp note from his wallet and laid it over the check. Helen was not familiar enough with French money to know the amount of the note, nor could she tell by the change returned.

"Dear, how much was that check?" unable to keep back the question.

"Well, I've paid it, haven't I? And it was a blamed good dinner. Now we'll have no harangues over expenses this evening. Come on—let's see if we can find that cab."

The cab! Helen had wholly forgotten that the cab was waiting—and they had been there almost three hours!

Warren located their driver and in a few moments they were whirling back through the Champs Elysees, now more beautiful than ever with the lights gleaming through the dark trees, and with every now and then a glimpse of the Seine and its jeweled bridges.

But the charm of all this was lost on Helen. She was not leaning back and enjoying the beauty of the drive. Instead she was sitting bolt upright, every muscle strained, as she tensely tried to figure out how much that dinner and the three hours' wait of the cab must have cost.

LIFE'S STRUGGLE WITH ILLNESS

Miss Stewart Tells How She Suffered from 16 to 45 years old—How Finally Cured.

EUPHEMIA, OHIO.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister, and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicine was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old, and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I can not tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off every month, and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blessed with excellent health for a woman of my age, and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse, and being wholly self-supporting I can not overestimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing since I was 52 years old. I have recommended the Compound to many with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss Evelyn Adella Stewart, Euphemia, Ohio.

The Brighter Side of Turkey Trotting

An Expert's Advice of How This Famous Dance Can Be Purged of All Objectionable Features.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

THE new school of turkey trotting has brought into existence two groups of rabid partisans—those who do the dance and know how jolly is the dancing, and those who look on and see how shocking is the prancing. And meanwhile turkey trotting is so earnestly done that it seems in a fair way to be done to death—and a fallow field for humorists will thus become sterile and barren of little jokes like the famous, "She is more trotted against than trotting."

In our age of specialization, turkey trotting is not sufficiently specialized, and every little freak step that wriggles its way into life masquerades under the one name or that of some barnyard or menageric relative. There is a brighter side to turkey trotting; there is a possibility of having it become a dance as well regulated as the two-step, and yet free to express the true dancing joy-of-living of the partners who merrily whirl through its mazes.

For confirmation of this theory, while in New York I went to Leon Errol, the clever originator of "turkish trottishness," one of the features of the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1913," and with clever Stella Chatelaine, the partner of dances and of life to help him, Mr. Errol showed me how you should and how you shouldn't do the "trot."

Correct Position.

"Here is the correct position for learning the trot," said Mr. Erroll, illustrating the while. "The girl places her hands on the shoulders of her partner. The man places one hand under the elbow of his partner and his bent elbow under her other arm. In this position every sway of a partner who knows the dance throws the shoulders of the other partner into the proper swing; not a wriggle or a suggestive movement, but the swaying to music that is the natural expression used in all dances that are a real expression of joy set to music instead of conventional ballroom steps.

"If you want to see the art of dancing, naturally you go to see Genee, and you enjoy without any thought of spending years in trying to master the art of dancing as she has done.

"But when you go to see the modern, up-to-date dancing of the stage you have a weather eye on learning to do it, too—and springing a new step at the next cabaret you favor. Here are three things to remember about stage dancing—it consists of tempo, a trick step and a bit of acting to catch the eye. In comedy dancing like mine, the tempo is very quick—whirlingly rapid without a break in its movements, that fairly pile up on top of one another. Then there is the trick step worked out to be as different as possible, and finally the comic element to make it go with the audience.

Allow For Freedom.

"The amateur turkey trotter must copy the first two parts of stage turkey trotting, and avoid the acting like grim death.

"Don't play to the gallery—don't do an exaggerated step and fairly revel in the idea that the people are looking at you in admiring wonder. They are probably wondering all right—how you can be so vulgar or so foolish.

"Take a refined position that leaves at least a foot of space between the partners and allow for freedom of motion. Holding your partner too closely not only makes the dance suggestive, and gives too much chance to the critical enemies of turkey trotting to get in their work, but makes it impossible for the amateur to dance with the graceful free sway that is the chief beauty of turkey trotting.

"Then with a clear picture in your mind of what you want to do, work out a step. Sometimes Miss Chatelaine and I see little children dancing to an organ grinder's tunes on the streets—that suggests a step—and we may spend as much as two hours in working out the one step.

"Turkey trotting demands a free yet firm position that lets the partners work together; an absolute feeling for time, and ability to follow the music without a break; the utmost patience in working out a step, and ability and imagination to work out little trick steps that will add to the mere sway that is the basis of all turkey trotting and allied dances.

"We must always keep in mind that this is a dance in which shoulders count. In the now sedate waltz, the position of arm-around-waist used to be considered rather risque—well, you don't have to assume that position if you are going to trot correctly. The position I suggest—girl's arms on man's shoulders, and man's arms used as levers under girl's elbows, is staid, respectable and guaranteed to produce graceful rhythmical trotting.

"As in other departments of life, and dancing," concluded Mr. Errol, "there is a right way and there is a wrong way. But the right way to turkey trot is pleasing to observe and pleasing to do. If the amateur will assume the position I teach and practice one step at a time patiently and in faithful effort to keep in perfect rhythm with the music, he will soon find himself able to do a modern dance without a shade of vulgarity and without a trace of amateurish ill-at-easeness."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WE got a other new white hired gurl, her naim is Vera. Ma sed it is a pritty naim, but I think it is a funny naim for a hired gurl. Hired gurls used to be called Bridget & Nora & thay was good hired gurls, too. But things is different now. The last three hired gurls we had was Marguerite & Sylvia & Belladonna, & now we have Vera. She is vary pritty. Pa sed she had dreemy eyes & Ma sed it was from sleeping too round that her eyes was dreemy.

Vera is riteing a play. She wuddent tell Pa & Ma that she was riteing it, but she toald me so I promised her that I wuddent say a word to Pa & Ma. The naim of the play is Alone in Milledgeville, & it tells about a butiful young gurl that fell in luv with a keeper in the Milledgeville insane asilum. He was a vilyun. The gurl goes to Milledgeville to see him beekaus he had toald her that he owned a grate big estate. He took the gurl to the asilum & toald her that all the insane peepul there was his servants. She believed him at first and then the horribel truth dawned on her. Then she sed in poetry to the vilyun:

You have me at yure mercy here
Of that there ain't no doubt;
I think I shall go bughouse, deer,
If you don't git me out.
I'd rather be a peasant's bride
& housekeep in a hut
Than wed a chump in this here dump
& get to be a nut.

Then Vera toald me that finished the first act. The curtain goes down wen she is reading them lines to the vilyun. The second act is the saim as the first, in the asilum. One of the pashunts there isent crazy at all, he is a rich young man wich is beeing kep in there so his relatives can git all his munny. He falls in luv with the poor gurl wich is being held there by the vilyun & tells her that they will find some way to escape. She looked up into his eyes & reezited a other peece of poetry. She was all the time reesiting poetry she rote, Vera toald me. Vera sed that the longer the heroine stayed in the asilum the moar poetry she rote. She looked up into the eyes of the hero & reesited.

Oh yes, I will flu away with you
And marry you for luv,
Yure munny all can stay with you,
I have no use for it, duv.
But what if you mite be insane
& not what you represent?
Then to this place I wud return
& be sorry I ever had went.

If you are reely sane, my own,
Our lives will pleasant be,
But if sum nite I'd heer you groan
I'd hide away from thee.
It is a awful, haunting feer
To feer one's husband is dippy,
& if I ever see you thus
I'll jump in the Mississippi.

The last act isent finished yet, Vera toald me. She is pritty smart for a hired gurl. She says wen she gits rich I can marry her wen I grow up.

Excused.

Bob—Will you take a ticket in this raffle for a poor widow——

Simp—Nix. I wouldn't have any use for a poor widow if I won.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

NOT WORTH YOUR WORRY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and recently met a young man about the same age. He made quite an impression upon me and we have met by appointment a few times. Last week I happened to misunderstand a date the young man made in his letter and disappointed him. Now he is angry, and although I tried to explain the matter to him, he will not believe my excuse. I am quite heartbroken over it. RAY.

Your humble attitude doesn't do you credit. You did no wrong and owed neither apology nor explanation. Please, for your own sake, let the matter end here, and if he attempts to see you, refuse.

THERE COULD BE NO OBJECTION.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 16, and have a friend two years my senior. His birthday is quite near and I would like to know if it is proper for me to send him a birthday card, so as to let him know I think of him. ANXIOUS.

A cordial little note, wishing him many happy returns, will prove your friendship.

You are so young; will you promise me to regard no man as more than a friend for a few years longer?

CERTAINLY NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am deeply in love with a young man 21 years old. I meet him often and he gives me hints that he loves me, but he also tells me he hasn't courage to propose. Now please tell me how I should act. Should I tell him that I love him or not? HILDA.

The girl worth having is worth asking for. Tell him so the next time he hints. Also hint that there are other men not quite so slow. But save your avowal of love until he has earned it.

THE DIFFERENCE IMMATERIAL

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a girl four years my senior, which difference in our ages seems to stand between us. I have tried in every way possible to convince her of my love, but so far have not succeeded. I do not believe I can ever be happy without her. E.

You do not state your age. If you are old enough to marry, her four years seniority should be no bar.

I am convinced she refuses you because she does not love you. Be persistent in your devotion, and if that does not melt her heart, try giving your atention to some other girl.

CERTAINLY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am eighteen and am keeping company with a young man for the past year. Now this young man's folks live out of town and invited me to their home. Should I accept their invitation? A. B. S.

If the invitation is from his mother I would have you accept by all means. It will mean a great deal to your future happiness to get on good terms with them, and the visit may give you an enlightening view of your lover. I hope it will prove favorable.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

On Fancy's Wings.

A sweet young thing in white fluttered toward the aeroplane mechanic, and resolutely took possession of him, asking all those usual senseless questions that now have become the common lot of aviators and their assistants.

But this particular assistant—and who can wonder; was not the sweet young thing in white a damsel quite adorable?—strove bravely to satisfy the curiosity of his fair inquirer; and explained with remarkable clearness the working of a monoplane.

Still, there is a limit even to the patience shown by susceptible man toward charming maid.

"Tell me," inquired the sweet young thing in white, "what happens when your engine stops in the air? Can't you come down?"

"That's just the trouble," sighed the mechanic, mastered by his sense of the ridiculous. "D'you know, there are a dozen or so airmen now stranded above France. Their engines have stopped; they can't get down, and they are starving to death!"

Later she learned the truth. She ended what might have been a romance.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XV.

THERE is a numbing quality to all sudden and great sorrow. Psychologists tell us that the mind is so dazed by the shock of grief that it can not grasp the fearful truth in all its details. Whatever causes this partial insensibility, we are thankful for it.

Mary Danforth was like one stunned during the days that followed her father's death. She listened in stony silence while the facts of his seizure were related to her. He had come up from the office, and after dinner dressed to go to her graduation exercises, but had dropped to the floor as he started to leave the apartment, and in five minutes stopped breathing. He had never regained consciousness.

This was no time for subterfuges, and Mrs. Danforth was soon made acquainted with the state of affairs between her daughter and Gordon Craig. She was told that no formal engagement existed, but that the pair loved each other and were going to wait for each other until such time as they were ready to marry. The bereaved wife, made suddenly old by the great sorrow of her life, clung to the young man, and sobbed out her woe and her trust in him.

"I have found a son," she said at last. "God bless you, dear boy!"

Craig bent his tall head to kiss her pale cheek. "I shall try to be worthy of your daughter," he whispered, "and of your confidence in me."

He remained in New York for a week. The changes in his business, of which he told Mary, would keep him from the road hereafter, another man having been deputed to travel for his firm, while he was to remain at the home office.

"Hard times have hit us as well as the rest of the world," he said regretfully, "and matters do not look as bright as they did. But I shall stick to one job and shall hope for a salary that will warrant my marrying in a year or two. Heaven speed the time!"

And Mary was not ashamed to add a sincere "Amen!" to this hope.

It was on the day after the funeral that the mother and the daughter learned that, added to the loss of husband and father, another trouble had befallen them. Investigation of Mr. Danforth's affairs brought to light the fact that his business was in a desperate condition and that he had lived right up to his income. His lawyer told the two women the painful truth that when the funeral expenses were paid and a few bills that Mr. Danforth had contracted were settled the pair would be well-nigh penniless except for a small life insurance the deceased had carried in favor of his wife.

"Your husband took that Western trip on the chance of saving the day," the lawyer explained to the widow. "He hoped to put a business deal through out there, but he failed. I think the disappointment, coupled with the dread of what was before him, hastened his death."

"He did it all for us," Mary told Craig. "He lived just to make us happy. He wanted us to have a pretty home and all that we wanted, and he could not bear to tell us that we must part with these things. Now I can see why he was taken from us. It would have broken his heart had he lived to see us lose what we have been accustomed to."

Mary spoke firmly, yet gently. "I am going to work, mother," she asserted. "No, do not look distressed at the idea! It is what father would wish—what he always told me I must be prepared to do if the need arose."

"It will not be for long," Craig reminded the mother. "I hope that matters will go so well with me that I can come for you and Mary soon. Then we three will have a little home of our own."

"I could not accept it even from Gordon," remarked Mrs Danforth later to her daughter, "if I did not have that insurance money of my own."

The daughter said nothing. She could not bear to tell her unsophisticated mother what a little way the money, of which she spoke so confidently, would go. The income from it would not support one woman, no matter how economical she might be, and the girl knew the principal would be drawn upon gradually until it was all gone. And then?

"I will be able to support her myself," she thought bravely. "She shall use as little of her own money as possible. I would not want her to be entirely dependent upon Gordon—even though he is willing to care for her. I must get to work at once."

The place she secured was not a brilliant one, but she had not expected that it would be. She was engaged as stenographer and typewriter to a kindly, middle-aged real estate agent. He had a small office and her salary matched the office. But what else could a beginner hope for?

Thus it came about that when Gordon Craig turned his face westward again he knew that the girl he loved was the sole dependence of her widowed mother. His heart ached when he remembered that the pretty home must be given up, and the handsome furniture sold—except such pieces as the two lonely women would need to furnish the tiny flat they would take in an unfashionable part of town. He longed to stay and help them.

"But my job won't wait for me!" he muttered with a bitter sign. "If I were only rich!"

Which exclamation is such a common one that it is hardly worth recording.

Barber—Poor Jim has been sent to an asylum.

Victim (in the chair)—Who is Jim?

"Jim is my twin brother, sir. Jim has long been brooding over the hard times, an' I suppose he finally got crazy."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. He and me has worked side by side for years, and we were so alike we couldn't tell each other apart. We both brooded, too. No money in this business now."

"What's the reason?"

"Prices too low. Unless a customer takes a shampoo it doesn't pay to shave or hair-cut. Poor Jim! I caught him trying to cut a customer's throat because he refused a shampoo, so I had to have the poor fellow locked up. Makes me sad. Sometimes I feel sorry I didn't let him slash all he wanted to. It might have saved his reason. Shampoo, sir?"

"Yes!"

It was Pat's first day in the sawmill, and his duties consisted of working the circular saw. The foreman directed him as to its use, then left him in order to attend to some pressing matter. Having occasion, however, to pass Pat's way again, he was somewhat annoyed to see him standing idly surveying his hand.

"Well, what's wrong?" he said sharply.

"Sure and begorra I've lost a finger," replied Pat.

"How did it happen?" inquired the foreman.

"Sure, I was jist doin' like this when—bejabbers! There's anither one off!"

The daughter of the house had just returned from a visit to her cousins, during which she had become engaged to a rising young man whom she had met at the home of her relatives. To her mother she was extolling the virtues of her intended.

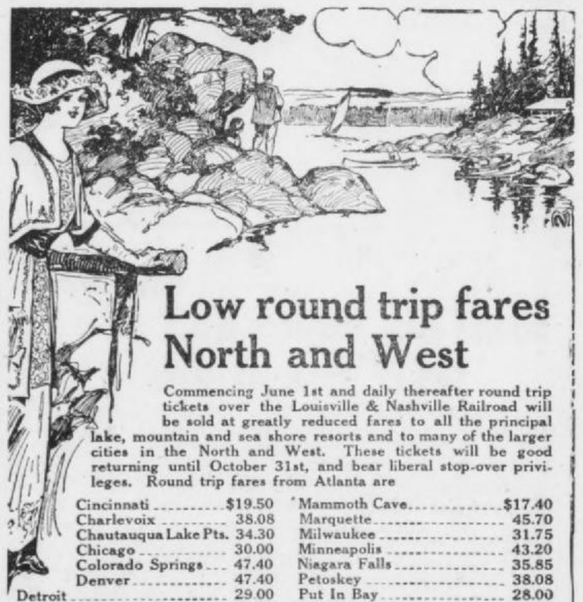

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "he's just grand! So square, so upright, so highly polished. Why, even in his notes there is such a sympathetic tone that sometimes I wonder if I am not reading the music of the gods!"

"Mercy's sake, child!" interrupted mother, "are you talking about a young man or a piano?"

"I want you to put up some wall paper I have bought," said the country clergyman, meeting the local man-of-all-work. "When can you do it?"

"Well, sir," he exclaimed, "you see, I'm rather busy just now. I hung Mrs. S—— yesterday; I'm hanging your church warden to-day; but, if it's convenient, I'll drop round and hang your reverence on Wednesday."

Daysey Mayme And Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE two pillow cushions, which, with the Honorable Lysander John Appleton, Kin Commissioner General of the United States, compose the Pillow Cushion Club, sat stiff, upright and unbending in their corners, waiting for the meeting to begin.

It was a joy for the speaker of the evening to look at them. So well-stuffed, so self-satisfied, so blank of expression; they looked like women whose sole ambition in life is to keep their figures, and who place all their hope in a straight-front corset.

Lysander John gave them an encouraging smile. "My wife and daughter," he said, "who spend most of their time from home reading papers on How to Make Home Life Beautiful, never had audiences more intelligent and appreciative than mine, Ladies, I thank you!

"I have delved into Emerson, I have wandered through Carlyle, and I have failed to find any problems more serious than those I will submit tonight. As members of the Pillow Cushion Club we must grapple with these questions. We must never again shirk our share of the burden of the world's progress.

"Doubt, my dear audience, if my wife and daughter at any of their various clubs in the past month have wrestled with more vital questions than those I will lay before you this evening.

"First, How soon after an article is borrowed is it proper to go over with an excuse demanding its return?

"If a friend buys an automobile, can it be construed as a gentle hint if you buy yourself an automobile coat?

"When a man's family consists of himself and wife, and he buys a four-passenger car, does that indicate a kind, generous disposition, or a desire to escape being bored to death by riding alone with his wife?

"If either must be slighted in a meal, the soup or the pudding, which should it be? In other words, is it wiser to smooth down the bristles of temperamental man by starting him feeling good at a meal, or to finish him feeling satisfied?

"Is it economical and proper these hard times to bury a woman's false hair with her, when, with a little change in the color, her husband's next wife might wear it?

"My next problem," he concluded "is one which will not permit of our speedy adjournment if we attempt to solve it. It is this: How many different ways are there for a man to act the fool?"

'Phone or Wire.

The following letter appears in a Boston newspaper:

Sir—I called at your editorial rooms yesterday, entering the outer chamber. The boy was absent. On the door, which was closed, leading to the sanctum sanctorium, was a sign, "No Admittance." On the wall next to the door was another sign, "No Loitering Here." The question is, what's a feller to do? F. H. L.

"I hear you're going to marry Archie Blueblood, Diana. Is it true?" asked one young society woman of another.

"Marry him? I should think not! What on earth could I do with the man? He can't ride, he can't play tennis, golf, nor, for that matter, can he even drive a motor car!"

"Oh," said the friend, "but he can swim beautifully, you know."

"Swim, indeed! Now, I ask you, would you like a husband you had to keep in an aquarium?"

FROM LUCILE'S DIARY

AUNT RACHEL has been staying with us on her way home from California, and I have passed a good deal of time with her, as I am exceedingly fond of her. I really think I am her favorite niece. One morning when I was helping her dress—I love to pay her little attentions—I found that there were no buttonholes in the new lingerie blouse she had intended to wear.

"Dear me!" I said "We must get Cousin Fannie to rectify this at once. She'll be delighted to make the buttonholes for you."

"Why don't you make them for me, Lucile?" asked Aunt Rachel.

"Why, you see——" I began, and then hesitated.

"Yes, I see, Lucile," Aunt Rachel said. "You don't count buttonhole-making among your accomplishments. In my day a young woman was not considered well bred if she could not make a perfect buttonhole."

"You make me quite ashamed of my shortcomings," I told her. "You see, Cousin Fannie has always been rather proud of her beautiful buttonholes, and it would have seemed like infringing on her rights if I had taken to making them, too. Dear Cousin Fannie is a little sensitive, and I don't like to hurt her feelings."

"It's quite possible that she would like you to share her glory," Aunt Rachel remarked. "If you wish to learn, I'll agree to make it right with Fannie."

That afternoon I went to Cousin Fannie's room and asked her to give me a lesson in making buttonholes.

"I'm awfully busy, Lucile," she said, "for I'm trying to finish this waist that Aunt Rachel gave me the silk for. I wish to wear it to-night at the settlement reception. If you have buttonholes to make I'll be glad to do them for you to-morrow."

I felt so disappointed that I said: "Aunt Rachel criticises me because I don't know how to make buttonholes, and you won't take the time to teach me. I did so wish to learn this afternoon." I could scarcely restrain my tears as I spoke.

"Why, Lucile, if you are so much in earnest about it of course I'll show you how," said Cousin Fannie.

So we went to work. I made buttonhole after buttonhole all afternoon, for I was determined if I made them at all to excel. Cousin Fannie told me that evening that with a little more practice I should soon equal her. So I kept at it every spare minute for two days until I felt competent to make the buttonholes in Aunt Rachel's blouse. When she saw them she was so surprised and delighted at my skill that she immediately offered to buy me the perfectly charming chiffon set that I had been talking to her about.

I was so enchanted at owning the coveted set that I made an occasion to wear it by calling on Gertrude Bates the very day I received it.

She was busy with the dressmaker, but I sat quite a while chatting until her brother, Carl, came home. I was just going when Gertrude remarked that the little silk coat which was being made was all done but the three large buttonholes. I offered to make them.

"Why, do you know how to make buttonholes?" she exclaimed.

I replied by taking the garment and setting to work with a nonchalance that I was amused to see alarmed her.

"Well, you're a wonder," said Carl when I had made a buttonhole and he had examined it. "I don't believe my tailor could beat this."

As it was growing late, I suggested that Gertrude allow me to take the coat home and finish the buttonholes the next day.

Rather Tired.

I was rather tired the next morning, as I had been sewing so much more than I was accustomed to do, so I asked Cousin Fannie to make the two remaining buttonholes in Gertrude's coat. She works so rapidly that I knew it would be no trouble to her. I was glad to have them done, for George Requier called up on the phone and asked me to go out to his tennis club that afternoon.

As I had so suitable wrap, I wore Gertrude's fascinating little coat. I thought she would be glad to have me wear it after all the work I had done for her. I was astonished when I saw her walking toward me across the courts, for I naturally supposed she was at home with the dressmaker.

"This is a jolly surprise," I said gayly, trying to make room for her on the bench.

"It's certainly a surprise," she replied coldly, and, looking fixedly at the jacket, she passed on.

I explained to George she must be suffering from one of her severe headaches, for I could not bear to have him think any friend of mine would be so rude.

Although I sent her the coat by parcel post the next day, I have not had a single word of acknowledgment or thanks from her. Gertrude, I fear, does not number gratitude among her graces.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Let me see it," cried she, and Mr. Gryce, greatly pleased at the success of his trick, handed her the picture of Genevieve Gretorex, satisfied that if this good woman continued to find it like the Mildred Farley she had mentioned, he should find that Mildred Farley was the name the young woman he had himself first taken for the original of this picture, and in whose fate despite his reason and his years he had found himself so much interested that he had come here at this late hour of the night to learn her name, and if possible, her dwelling place.

His success surpassed his hopes. The old lady looked at the picture, shook her head and looked again.

Somewhat Different.

"How these photographs can deceive?" cried she. "If I had not stopped to look at this twice, I would have sworn it was Mildred Farley's face, but I see now that she wears her hair quite different, and that she is older and much better dressed than Mildred could ever hope to be. Nevertheless, there is a very striking similarity, and I should like to see Miss—— Miss——"

"Handscombe," put in the detective.

"——and Mildred together. It would be a pleasing study." And she stared long and earnestly at the picture, winding up with: "I should like to show it to Mildred."

This was putting herself exactly in the position desired by Mr. Gryce.

"You can do so," he observed, "if you do not have to carry it far nor keep it long. Does Mildred live anywhere near you? Can you see her to-night?"

"She lives in my fourth story front room, sir; Mildred Farley is one of my boarders."

Mr. Gryce stroked his trembling right knee with a very loving hand. "One of your boarders," he repeated. "She is doubtless then upstairs asleep."

"No, poor girl, no. She is a dressmaker and sometimes does not close her eyes till 1 o'clock at night. She is not asleep, but come to think of it, she is not in the house at all. She went away for a short vacation a few days ago, and though she promised to be home this afternoon, I believe she did not come. It has always been my hope that Dr. Molesworth would marry her. She is a lovely girl and he is a very fine man. Why, then, shouldn't they come together?"

"And what you makes you think they will not? Why shouldn't it be she he is going to marry?"

"Why? Because they would have told me. He knows and she knows there is nothing I wish so much. It would be preposterous for them to keep it to themselves after all I have said. No, if Dr. Molesworth is going to marry any one (and I don't believe yet he is), it must be some ridiculous chit of a girl he has met away from here; and—Mildred——why, Lena!"

This exclamation was caused by the appearance at the door of a young girl who the moment she saw Mr. Gryce, shrank back and started to run away.

But the emphatic "Lena!" stopped her, and in a moment the old lady was in the hall; a whispered conference ensued, followed by the re-entrance of the good woman with a note in her hand.

"Well, I never!" she exclaimed, looking first at the letter she held and then at the feeble figure of the old man who had risen with well feigned indifference as if to go. ' A note from Dr. Molesworth, which he left on purpose for me! and that girl forgot to give it to me till now! What can he have to say!" And breaking the seal, she read the few enclosed lines with a growing wonder that ended in the joyous exclamation of "Good gracious, it is Mildred, after all! He is going to marry her to-night, and bring her home to-morrow. Well, I will give up. Never a word to me about it, and I so fond of them both! I don't understand it, folks are so queer." And she fluttered to and fro in ill-disguised joy, talking and muttering to herself, while Mr. Gryce pulled his muffler about him and began to move slowly toward the door.

"I declare," she broke in, as her attention was recalled to him by this movement, "it does seem a pity for you to go out again into the cold. If you think you would be better here, I have an empty room." But at this moment a carriage was heard to stop before the door, and, startled into a new train of thought by this unwonted occurrence, she moved towards the front windows, exclaiming: "I do believe they have come now!"

A Tragedy.

But at her first glance through the curtains she drew back with a frightened air, and crying, "Oh, what can this mean!" hurried towards the door with every sign of intense agitation.

Mr. Gryce at once took her place at the window, but he did not look out, for at that moment a man's voice was heard in the hall, and the wary detective thought it prudent to resume his role of the self-absorbed, semi-oblivious old man whose infirmities were so engrossing he had neither eyes nor ears for what went on about him. It was well he did so, for in another moment his imperturbability received a great shock by the certainly unlooked-for entrance of two men bearing a burden which, at one glance, showed itself to be the inert form of a young woman. From the appearance of one of these he judged him to be Dr. Molesworth. They were followed by the landlady, crying and wringing her hands.

"Mildred! Mildred! What has happened to you, poor girl!" came in piercing tones from the latter, as the sad burden, having been deposited on a sofa, she approached, and drew aside the cloak which had hitherto concealed the face.

"O God! how pale she is; how cold! Doctor, has she only fainted or is she—"

"Dead," came from his lips in deep and thrilling tones, while his gaze sought the landlady's face and rested there with an intentness he might not have displayed had he noticed the old manmumbling and chattering to himself in a corner.

"And what has killed her? What has destroyed my poor girl, the very night you hoped to marry her?"

"Shall I tell you?" The doctor had waved the man aside who had assisted him in his fearful task, and now stood with folded arms side by side with the landlady, looking down upon the still, set face which, with the blue robe that enshrouded the form, were already so well known to the watching detective. "She preferred this bridal to the one I had planned for her. Now you know all." And with just one more deep and searching look at the landlady's startled face, he walked up to his assistant.

"That is all," said he, "I will do the rest. The coroner will probably be here soon and—who are you?"

This was aid to a small, slight man who at this moment appeared in the doorway.

"I am a detective, sir," was the reply, and he was doubtless going to say more, but he caught an unexpected sight of Mr Gryce, and paused in some confusion. He had recognized a superior.

As for Mr. Gryce himself he had scarcely noticed the young man; he was too intent upon the doctor who at the utterance of the word detective, had wheeled suddenly about wth the evident intentfon of hiding his surprise. But a mirror hung oposite him, and in this the watchful eye of Mr. Gryce detected such an expression of uncontrollable shock and anxiety that he inwardly congratulated himself over the curiosity which had drawn him to this house.

The confusion, if there was such, in the physician's mind, was but momentary. In an instant he turned and confronting the intruder, asked with some severity:

"And what work is there for a detective here? The young lady has taken poison and is dead. I have notified the coroner——"

"Pardon me," interrupted the other, with every appearance of humility and respect. "I have come from the coroner. I am only a messenger and my errand is to say that as he can not come until morning it might relieve you to have me to stop here and see that there is no interference with the remains. It is a common duty and it is not the first time I have performed it."

A Word of Protest.

"But it is nobody's duty to watch over this poor girl's body but myself," broke in the landlady, with hearty indignation. "Do you forget that it is a woman and a lady you are talking about and do you think I will stand by and see any man, much less a stranger, take the place which only one of her own sex should occupy? She is no relative of mine, but I loved her and—doctor, you have some regard for her memory, I am sure; send that man away; he has already been here too long."

And with a care that was almost motherly in its tenderness, she drew the end of the cloak once again over the poor dead face, dropping a tear as she did so, which was not unseen by Mr. Gryce if it was unappreciated by the stern and bitter-souled physician.

"But, madam"—that stranger began.

"Stop!" cried Dr. Molesworth, "I will explain to her." And in a few words he told her how in cases of violent death, it was thought advisable for the Coroner to see the victim as soon after decease as possible, and when, as in this case, circumstances demanded delay, no one, not even a mother could rightfully interfere with whatever surveillance the Coroner thought it his duty to impose. So you will let this man stay here, and I will stay, too; for it is as much my wish as yours that every respect should be shown the one whom living I honored sufficiently to wish to make my wife."

The landlady shook her head with an aggressive air, but made no further protest. Dr. Molesworth pointed to a chair and the representative of the Coroner sat down; then while the former glanced at Mr. Gryce, who had just caught his attention, a slight noise was heard in the hall and a second stranger entered.

"What does this mean?" angrily cried the doctor. "Is it possible that the front door has been left open?" And brusquely pushing by the newcomer, he shut the offending door and then coming back, asked his business of the last arrival.

The fellow, who was slimmer than the other and much more dapper, pulled a small book and pencil from his pocket. It was enough. Dr. Molesworth recognized a reporter, and gave his irritation full play.

"You are intruding," cried he. "This is a private house and no one asked you to enter. As for the calamity which has occurred, learn of it how and where you will; I shall tell you nothing."

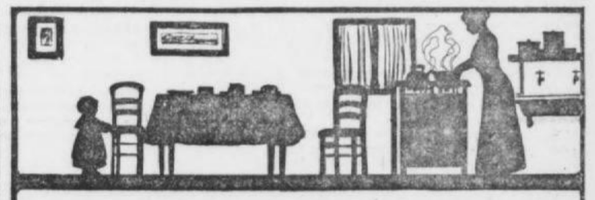

To Be Continued To-morrow.

EVANS ADVISES BOYS TO CADDY ON GOLF LINKS

By Chick Evans.

MY business takes me to many offices throughout the city, and these little visits bring many interesting experiences. Not long ago, as I was entering a certain office, the boy near the door looked squarely at me for a moment, then brightened up and said: "Hello, Chick, don't you remember me? I caddied for you at Wheaton, and you called me Walter." It was a very pleasant memory that the boy evoked and in a moment he was recalling some particular lucky shot that I had played and long ago forgotten. It was a great pleasure to me to be remembered by this young boy and it was a double pleasure to bring to mind once more a very happy occasion.

This little incident, however, merely leads to a subject very near to my heart—the future of the little caddie, for this boy is not the only caddie that I have met in offices in my tramps about the city. What becomes of the caddy when the short, too short, period of his school days is past and he must desert the links for other employment?

Caddie's Work Healthful.

I do not think that there can be a better all-around employment for the small boy than caddying. It is wholesome, outdoor work, and has brought health to many a delicate boy. Almost every other form of labor is injurious to the small boy, and, of course, caddy bags can be cruelly heavy, but as a rule, the player with a heavy bag does not choose a small caddy. The caddy enjoys fresh air and interest in a game which are all the advantages of play. It has always seemed to me that it is more interesting to carry a bag full of clubs when a fine golf match is in progress than to occupy a good seat at a game of baseball or football. From a physical point of view it is certainly better for a boy to tramp happily over yielding turf than to sit in cramped attitude on crowded stands to watch other men exercise. The caddy is really a part of the game; he has the same exercise as his employer; he sees the play and is interested, and is frequently consulted as to choice of club. Furthermore, he has the advantage of association with the members of the golf club, and these members are usually the leading business and professional men of the community.

Most of Them "Making Good."

There is a general belief that club members are dissipated, mere club rounders, in fact. My experience flatly contradicts this. The influence of the golf links is wholesome, physically and morally, and the boy fully enjoys its advantages. When the time comes for the caddy to go to work he usually obtains his first job through the good offices of a club member. I should not like to think that the majority of caddies become professionals, good as that work is, and I believe that only a small percentage do so. It is easy to trace from caddy to office boy, but in higher positions the caddy identity is sometimes hidden. I believe, however, that caddies are to be found in every walk of life, and I am sure that they are "making good."

White Sees Whitney Work Out

Frank Dons Mitts With Packey

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 7.—Has Charley White, pound for pound the best boxer in the game today, put one over on Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter from Cedar Rapids, Iowa? This is the question fans who were at O'Connell's gymnasium yesterday are asking around sporting circles to-day. Whitney and White meet in Atlanta next Wednesday.

Several hundred fans saw Whitney and McFarland box three rounds at breakneck speed yesterday. They were also aware of the fact that Charley was an interested spectator. Probably every one in the gymnasium, with the exception of Whitney, knew this. Maybe, if Frank had known White was present he would have ceased in his grind. But, nevertheless, he didn't and the battle Whitney and McFarland put up was worth any one's time.

* * *

THE two boys had a merry battle. They mixed it at close quarters and boxed at long range. Packey wanted the work-out, as he is training for a busy fall campaign. Whitney is a rough and tough scrapper, just the kind McFarland likes to work with. The rounds were full of action and the crowd was on its feet during several stages of the combat.

Two glaring eyes kept watching every move made by the boy from Cedar Rapids. These same eyes also noticed that McFarland, who knows White's style of boxing better than any other ringman in the world, was mixing it with Whitney. He also was aware of the fact that Whitney's defense was kept high and that Packey was having the time of his life trying to get home his left hook.

* * *

NOW, every one knows that Charley's best blow is his left hook, followed by a right cross. Whether White beats Whitney or not the writer does not care to predict. But one thing is certain, and that is that Charley will have the time of his life hitting Whitney with this punch.

Whitney knows White's style, and he has solved a defense for the Chicago boy's favorite wallop. Charley saw Whitney box yesterday. Frank didn't know it. He showed everything he had in his scrap with Packey, and White was present to pick up a few pointers. When Whitney jumped out of the ring it was the first time he knew that his coming opponent was an interested spectator. But Frank is not one of those who worries over things of this kind. He simply smiled and stated that he would stroll over to Lewis' gymnasium to-morrow and watch Charley in action.

* * *

WHEN White left the gymnasium many of those who were present thought he was bound for home. White evidently wanted them to think so, but he had another errand on. Charley does his boxing at Lewis' gymnasium and that was where he was bound for. The writer knows Charley like a book and thought it best to take a trip to the "gym" and see just what the Chicago boy was going to put over.

Just as we surmised, Charley picked up "Special Delivery" Hirsch, a tough lightweight, on his way to work out, and it wasn't many more minutes before he was hard at work. And it was not long before Hirsch threw up the gloves in disgust. But the blow that made Hirsch quit was not a left hook to the jaw. It was a left to the stomach. It did not take Charley long to find out that he would have to perfect some other punch if he hoped to defeat Whitney. He wanted to try out a new punch, and it is dollars to doughnuts that it will be the left to the stomach instead of a left hook to the jaw that Mr. White uses against Whitney in Atlanta on August 13.

TWENTY-FIVE-MILE RACE AT SAUCER FRIDAY

A TWENTY-FIVE-MILE race is to be the feature event of a swell-looking program that Jack Prince has scheduled at his saucer Friday night. All ten of the famous riders now here will start, and the way their machines are traveling these days it is almost a cinch that a new record will be established for the distance.

This race is for the championship of the South. Richards wants that title, so does McNeil and all the others. And an Atlanta boy, Harry Glenn, has a fine chance of copping this event, too. Harry showed marked improvement last Tuesday night, and he ought to be even better Friday.

By the way, Glenn is to be seen in another match race. He hasn't been defeated yet in a two-handed, or rather a two-machine event. But in George Lockner he is going up against a real racer this time. It will be a two-mile affair, two best heats in three.

The Motordrome Purse will open the card. There will be three heats of one mile and a final of two miles.

Following is the complete program for Friday night:

First Event.

Motordrome Purse (qualifying heats, one mile; final, two miles; winners of trial heats and second man in fastest heat to qualify). First Heat—Richards, Lockner, Graves.

Second Event.

Motordrome Purse—Second Heat—Glenn, Renel, Swartz.

Third Event.

Motordrome Purse—Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis, Luther, Shields.

Fourth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

(Two-mile heats; two best in three.)

Fifth Event.

Motordrome Purse—Final heat.

Sixth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

Seventh Event.

Invitation Race—Distance, 5 miles. Open to all comers.

Eighth Event.

Special Match Race—Third heat, if necessary.

Ninth Event.

Twenty-five-mile race for championship of the South—Graves, Swartz, Shields, Lockner, Richards, Luther, Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

GRIFFIN AND STRACHM QUALIFY FOR NET TITLE

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Clarence Griffin and John Strachm, of San Francisco, will meet Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas Bundsay for the national tennis championship in doubles at Newport, R. I., on August 18. They won this right by defeating [illegible] straight sets Gustave Chard and W. M. Washburn, of New York, Eastern tennis champions. The scores in the games yesterday at Cowantsia were 8-1, 8-6 and 6-4. The Easterners were outplayed and outgeneraled in every game.

FITTERY IN NO-HIT GAME.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 7.—Jake Fittery, pitcher for the Evansville club, of the Central League, yesterday shut out Terre Haute, not allowing a hit during the nine innings. Only four local players reached first, and two went to second, where they were left.

Baby Cross a Real Boxing Fan

Roots for Pa to Capture Title

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Baby Cross is a boxing fan.

She is not familiar with left hooks and right uppercuts, but she does know her daddy is going to be the next lightweight champion of the world. And all one needs to be convinced is a two-minute talk with her.

Cross has won many friends through his earnest work in the ring, but he has no more enthusiastic admirer than his little daughter. "When daddy is champion" she will reach the mecca of all her dreams, and plans for that day fill many of her waking hours.

Of course, she never has seen daddy in a real battle, but often during training work she and her mother are at the ringside watching him in his practice bouts. She is fond of the rope skipping and weight pulling, and always is interested in the boxing which forms part of the daily program, but most of all she loves the frolic with daddy after his strenuous work is done, and the kiss which is sure to follow the fun.

Baby Has Warm Friends.

Many who have seen Cross work will be glad to see him lightweight champion if he attains that honor, but happiest and proudest of all will be his baby daughter.

Baby Cross was at her father's training camp while he prepared for his bouts with "Bud" Anderson and Matty Baldwin. The New Yorker won both contests, and he says that in future his little daughter will have to accompany him on his tours of the country. In this way he believes that he will never be defeated.

Cross is not the first boxer who has visited the coast that has had a baby daughter for a mascot. Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, has two baby mascots and they are always at his training camp when he is preparing for a match. It is a pretty picture to see the Cleveland boy playing on the white sand at Venice with his two children while his young wife sits near by.

Cross has hopes of securing a bout with Champion Willie Ritchie. Leach claims that he would be able to defeat the Frisco boy over the 20-round route. He declares that he would surely knock out the champion if he could land his famous right-hand punch which has flattened many a famous ringman.

May Battle Joe Rivers.

If Cross does not get a date with Ritchie, he will probably be signed to clash with Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight.

Rivers is a favorite on the coast, even though he was beaten by Ritchie, and he would be a big drawing card if pitted against a boxer of Cross' ability.

In the meantime, Baby Cross is rooting for her dad to become champion. And maybe she wouldn't be glad if Leach would permit her to see a regular ring bout. But the hard-hitting lightweight says that the baby's charm might be broken if she occupied a ringside seat.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Charley White, the Chicago sensation, who meets Frank Whitney at the Auditorium-Armory on August 13, is doing his training at Nate Lewis's gymnasium in Chicago. Charley plans to arrive in Atlanta Saturday morning, one day later than Whitney.

* * *

This will give the fans several days to look over the rival lightweights. Both boys will complete their training grind here. Whitney will work at the Atlanta Athletic Club, while White is expected to train at Ponce DeLeon ball park.

* * *

Despite the fact that Gunboat Smith has won every fight in which he has participated in the past year, experts predict defeat for him when he tackles Jim Flynn on next Friday night at Madison Square Garden, New York. Most of the experts claim that Flynn's experience will bring him home a winner over the Easterner.

* * *

Both Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers were sidetracked by Willie Ritchie. The champion has decided to defend his title against Freddie Welsh in a 20-round engagement at Vancouver on September 1.

* * *

Wolgast, however, appears to be the big loser. The Mexican has signed articles to meet Leach Cross in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles, and it would not surprise many to see this bout draw as much money as the Ritchie-Welsh set-to. On the other hand, Wolgast must now look for a suitable opponent to meet.

Jack Dillon, of Indianapolis, and "Knockout" Brown, of Chicago, may wage battle soon. Nate Lewis, manager of Brown, writes from Chicago that he has signed his protege to box Dillon at Indianapolis. The bout will take place some time next month at Terre Haute, Ind. They have agreed to weigh 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Mike Glover, the Boston lightweight, is earnestly striving to get a match with Jack Britton. The former showed much class in his recent mills in the "Bean Town" city.

* * *

Puckey McFarland wants it to be known that there is no chance to drag him into the welterweight class. He says he is able to do 135 pounds and will continue to box at that weight.

* * *

Jack White has been made an even money bet against Johnny Dundee for the 20-round clash at Los Angeles on August 12. Since Joe Levy has taken hold of Jack he has shown a 50 per cent improvement.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

SPORT BY PROXY.

A rhymster sat at his type machine
And wrote him a gladsome lay
Of fish that gleam in the woodland stream
And leap in the silver spray.
He sang of musky and bass and trout
And his little canoe of birch,
But the only fish he had ever pulled out
Was a little anemic perch.

He sang a song of the virgin wood,
Of the forest old and sere
Where the hunters creep in the runways deep
And wait for the nimble deer.
He sang of the moose that he longed to pot
As it called in its far-flung tones,
But the only thing he ever shot
Was a pair of the rolling bones.

He sang a song of the bounding main
Where the gulls and the mermaids play,
Of the whistling gale and the bulging sail
And the tang of the drifting spray.
He sang of the joy as he lightly tripped
O'er the sea on his bounding bark,
But the only boat he had ever skipped
Was a rowboat in Piedmont Park.

SPEED.

Old Joe Dunn smote it to the fence,
It was an awful bingle,
And by a burst of fearful speed
He almost made a single.

The president of the Federal League has retired on account of overwork, but there is no truth in the rumor that he was overworked in the act of counting gate receipts.

While there are skeptical persons who do not believe that Mr. Dunn is fast, it is a well-known fact that he can cling faster to a base than any athlete in baseball.

We are indebted to the Federal League for the custom of granting magnates an occasional leave of absence. If the practice only spreads to the National League all will be well.

Old King Cole looms up like a world beater in the American Association. So, also, did Laverne Chappell.

TILLIS SELLS MONTGOMERY BALL CLUB

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 7.—It was announced here last night that Richard Tillis, owner of the Montgomery Baseball club's franchise, has sold out to an organization of business men, headed by M. P. Wilcox.

The price was reported as $12,800. The transfer of ownership took place at once.

This is taken to mean that Montgomery will remain indefinitely in the Southern League. The new owners are popular here, and it also is expected that there will be a considerable revival of interest among local fans.

Obstinate Acne Quickly Yields

Fine Remedy That Clears Skin of Pimples on Cheeks, Temples, Sides of Nose and Chin.

Acne attacks the glandular structure of the skin, more particularly those tiny glands that secrete fat.

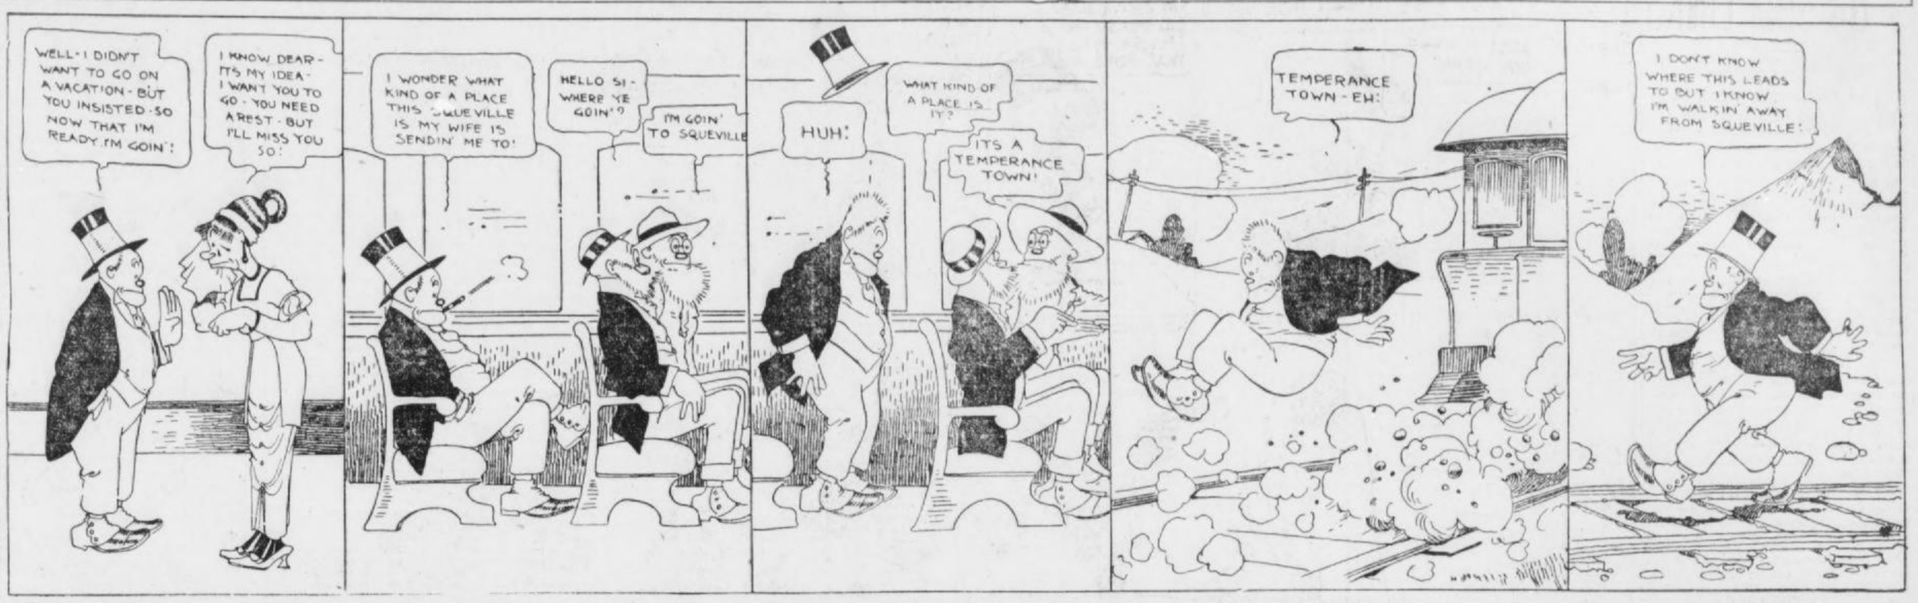

And it is here that S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, is most active in its influence.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. the purpose of which it is to stimulate the cells in the tissues that thus select from the blood the nutriment that makes new skin and thus eliminates all irritants, acids and parasites that inflame the glands. There is a natural tendency of the fine network of blood vessels in the skin to throw off impurities, but where a persistent inflammatory process has invaded the skin, the natural repair work of the blood is interfered with. It requires the stimulating activity of S. S. S. to overcome such morbid conditions. If you have been troubled with acne, do not despair of a cure.

You can get S. S. S. in any drug store, but insist upon having it. The great Swift Laboratory in Atlanta, Ga., prepares this famous blood purifier, and you should take no chance by permitting anyone to recommend a substitute. And if your blood condition is such that you would like to consult a specialist freely, address the Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Company, 181 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Speaking of That Diaphanous Stuff

Even Break With the Lookouts

Giants and Sox May Play Here

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE more vindication of the theory that the conventional manner of prorating a doubleheader is for each side to take one.

It was largely a matter of pitchers. In the first game Joe Conzelman wasn't quite so good as Floyd Kroh, and in the aftermath, Gilbert Price plus Elliott Dent, had a thin edge on Howell and Coveleskie.

The fact that the tall Pole was summoned again from the lumber yard testifies to the gentle affection for the Crackers that abounds in the shadow of Lookout Mountain.

The Tabasco Kid was doing his durndest to beat us all two of the games.

And quite properly.

Let's trim 'em fighting, or get trimmed the same way.

That's what makes baseball worth while.

* * *

WE are going to have some distinguished company in a few days, Ted Sullivan, one-time Southern Leaguer and now managing director of the Giants-White Sox world tour, is in New Orleans to-day arranging a lease on the Pelicans' ball park for an exhibition game late in October.

Mr. Sullivan expects to visit Birmingham and Mobile on a similar mission. And then he is coming to Atlanta.

Would Atlanta fans care to watch the White Sox and the Giants play ball?

We pause for no answer.

* * *

MAJOR CALLAWAY, home again from Chattanooga, says he hasn't heard anything about the proposed visitation, but doesn't see anything in the way of pulling it off. The president of the Crackers fancies there should be no trouble in arranging to let the big leaguers have Ponce DeLeon Park as a battle ground.

And he is of the opinion that it would be some considerable drawing card.

* * *

IT is rumored that Jud Daley, left fielder for the Vols, may wear an Atlanta uniform soon. The understanding hereabout is indefinite, and Bill Smith probably will make the decision while in Nashville on the series beginning to-day.

Daley is a good ball player and is very popular in Atlanta, but it appears unlikely that the Atlanta club will take him on if anything substantial has to be paid for him.

If it comes about that Judson is available for his stipend alone, he may but into the present series against his old friends.

HERE'S one we lamp from up Syracuse-way, in the New York State League:

An umpire named Harrison had a tumultuous run-in with a ball player working under the entire misnomer of Good. Good had tried to steal third and was tagged when about fifteen feet off the bag.

True to his reputation, Good let out an awful yelp and the fans answered the call of the wild.

"You're out of the game!" the umpire ordered.

Good declined to see it that way.

"Get out of the lot," was the next command.

Good stayed where he was as if he had taken root.

Harrison called a big cop, standing in the crowd near the bleachers.

"Take that man off the field," he directed.

The cop shook his head. "Nope," he said firmly.

Harrison was outraged. "You won't?" he roared, "And why not?"

"He wasn't out," said the cop. And he stuck to it.

ONCE more is the eternal and Emersonian law of compensation glutted with justification.

For weeks the sport columns have echoed with the piteous roars of F. Chance, sometime Peerless Leader. It seems Mr. Chance swapped Hal Chase for Zeider and Borton, of the White Sox, with the idea that Rollie was sound in wind and limb and his sidekick able to swing on the pill like a garden gate.

We gather from the twittering that Mr. Zeider was afflicted with a bunion and had to do his running on one side, while Mr. Borton's batting resembled the performance of the oldest inhabitant of the Soldiers' Home killing flies with a newspaper.

So.

But now comes Mr. Callahan, who lately paid $18,500 in Comiskey coin and White Sox players for Larry Chappelle.

"He's got a warped knee and a kink in his hip," wails Jimmy, "and he had 'em when I got him!"

Mr. Chance should lie awake nights and grieve.

Great Tribute Paid Hal Chase by Harry Lord, of White Sox

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Harry Lord, the White Sox captain, discussing first basemen to-day, paid a great tribute to Hal Chase. Here is what the third baseman of the White Sox has to say about the former Yankee player:

"Chase will save any infielder thirty errors in a season if the pair would work together through the year. Look what Chase did for me in the one game at St. Louis. I would have had two black marks to my discredit on that day. The papers would have said Lord's errors were responsible for the White Sox losing to the Browns 6 to 3, or something like that. With Chase over there we don't have to worry. We can field the ball, shut our eyes, and make a throw and he will get it some way or other."

PLAIN NUTTY.

He'd seen upon the sport page
The way that Ty Cobb collars,
And all the other dope that deals
With betting odds and dollars;
With gate receipts, percentages,
Expenses, kicks and hollers.

And then he put a question;
His friends were filled with gloom.
With sorrow did they cast him
Into a padded room.
He'd asked: "Is there a sport guy
Not out for the mazuma?"

NO CHANCE FOR LAJOIE TO LEAVE NAPS, SAYS BARNARD

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Aug. 7.—An absolute denial of the rumor that Chicago, Boston and Cleveland teams are arranging a three-cornered deal which will take Second Baseman Lajoie away from Cleveland was made to-day by E. S. Barnard, Vice President of the Naps, Manager Birmingham, of the Cleveland team, wired from Philadelphia saying he had no trade under way for Lajoie.

ALLIS STARTED PLAYING GOLF WHEN 5 YRS. OLD

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Ned Allis, who was runner-up in the Western Golf Association at Chicago and is the sensation in the Western golf world, began to play golf when he was only five years old, taking part in a tournament that year, with his father as tutor. It was not until four or five years ago, however, that Ned began to come to the front with the older men.

His first public performance of consequence was in an invitation tournament held by the Milwaukee Country Club in which he met Harold Wyatt, of Fond du Lac. The two youngsters then only 17 years old, gave the fastest exhibition of match play of the entire tournament.

Allis is a very fine putter, as may be seen by the fact that in his match against R. A. Gardner, ex-national champion, in the semi-final at Homewood, Allis had only 27 puts for the 18 holes of the morning round.

To learn how a golfer's game may improve in a few months one has but to consult the United States Golf Association's handicap rating list for 1913. There Allis is placed among the handicap five men. Among the others in the five list are Devereux Lord, the three-time winner of The Brooklyn Eagle trophy; R. T. Allen, Fox Hills; Chisholm Beach, Fox Hills; S. D. Bowers, Brooklawn; T. V. Bermingham, Wykagyl; James R. Hyde, South Shore; Philip Carter, Nassau, Metropolitan junior champion; Max R. Marston, Ballusrol, interscholastic champion; C. H. Seely, ex-Metropolitan champion, and others. Allis would more likely be handicapped at 2, or 3, at least.

The only time that Metropolitan District golfers have seen the quality of Allis' golf was at Lakewood, N. J., on April 17-19, last. Here Allis just fell outside the medal prize in the qualifying round by a single stroke, tying with Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, at 78, while H. K. Kerr, South Shore, got the best card with a 77.

Allis lasted till the semi-final, when he was defeated by Horace C. Cook, of Trenton, the youthful player from Trenton, N. J., who, in the afternoon final with Travis, held the former international champion at evens till a penalty stroke at the seventeenth hole threw him off his game on the home hole, the match going to Travis by two up. On his way to the semi-final Allis had beaten J. F. Shanley, the best of the Deal players.

Since Allis first swung a club at the age of five, he has been carefully coached by his father, Louis Allis, who firmly believes that his boy will some day be the premier amateur golfer of the world.

Love or Dent Will Pitch To-day

Slow Fielding Cost One Game

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 7.—Love or Elliott Dent, life-saver in yesterday's second game, will be shot at the Vols this afternoon, with Chapman back of the wood. Dent looked great in his one and one-third innings yesterday, and Love seems to have got over his slight touch of illness.

The Crackers got an even break in the twin bill yesterday and also on the series at Chattanooga. Joe Conzelman lost the first game, 4 to 2, and it ought to have been a shut-out for him. Manush was in right field and misjudged two long fly balls, one of which went for a triple and the other for a home run.

We had no luck at bat. Twice with the bases full and only one down, Dunn hit into a double play. Chapman was sent in to bat for Conzelman in the ninth and whaled a home run far over the fence, but nobody was on the towpath.

In the second game we got to Grimes early and got a nice lead. Howell came on and pitched well until he was taken out for a pinch hitter. Then we had another chance at the Big Pole, and we nicked him for two runs, which won the game. Price pitched well until the eighth when a savage batting rally chased him from the rubber. Elliott Dent stopped the Vole and saved the game.

We play here four games, including the disputed one, which probably will be played Sunday. Harry Holland batted for a percentage of .500 yesterday. He looks better every day, and is stinging the ball hard. All he lacks is a little experience, and he is getting that fast.

SENATE AWAITS BILL PROVIDING TAX REFORM

Miller-Anderson Measure Creating Office of State Assessor Expected to Pass Monday.

The Senate Finance Committee will take the dring line Friday in an effort to have the upper House pass a tax equalization bill revolutionizing the present State taxing methods. The bill, drawn by Chairman Miller and President Anderson, has been agreed upon by the Finance Committee and will be reported upon favorably Friday morning, and probably will be passed not later than Monday.

The bill provides for a State Tax Assessor to be appointed by the Governor for a term of six years, who shall determine if the counties are returning a just amount of taxable property. He will have all the powers outlined for the proposed State Tax Commission.

Should the State Tax Assessor and the county boards fail to agree the bill provides that a hearing may be held before an arbitration board of tree members, one to be appointed by the County Board, one by the State Tax Assessor and the third by the Governor. The county boards are to consist of three members.

County Treasurers Hit.

Wednesday afternoon two important bills were passed; the first by Senator Stark providing for the permanent registration of voters, and the other by Senator Watts, giving to counties the option to abolish the office of County Treasurer.

The bill providing for the appointment of a special commission to dispose of the present Governor's mansion was defeated by the close vote of 21 to 19 after a heated debate.

Senator McNeill declared the bill gave too much power to the commission, as $500,000 of the State's money was involved. Senator Harrell declared that a lobby of land dealers favoring the bill had existed a long time.

New Registration Bill Passes.

Senator Stark's permanent registration bill was passed after a vigorous fight by Senator Harrell who declared the measure would tear down the registration laws which keep the negro from voting.

In reply Senator Miller assured the Senate that there were sufficient provisions in the bill to eliminate the negro vote just as it is eliminated now. Senator Burtz's amendment, which was passed, provides that the voter shall be entitled to permanent registration unless registered under the provisions of subsections 1 and 2 of paragraph 4, section of the Code of 1910.

These clauses qualify for voting the Civil War and the Indian war, the Civil War and the Indian Wars, and all persons legally descended from these.

Masons' Convention Opens in Gainesville

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 7.—The Masons of the Ninth Congressional District are in annual convention here. Sixty-nine lodges are represented by 100 delegates.

The address by Thomas H. Jeffries, of Atlanta, Past Grand Master, was a public part of the program at Brenau Auditorium Wednesday.

On the stage was Colonel John E. Redwine, of Gainesville, one of the oldest Masons in Georgia. He has held many offices of honor. He is about 80 years old.

Dr. J. C. Bennett, of Jefferson, presided. Business and secret sessions were held, with initiation. A trolley ride to the river with a watermelon cutting was one feature of the entertainment.

Scholar Says Devil Designed New Styles

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Current fashions in women's gowns are incentives to immorality, according to Professor Allan Hoben, of the University of Chicago School of Divinity, at the Sunday school institute in session at the university. The latest styles, he said, were the devil's designs.

"For any woman to be well dressed to-day," he said, "is for her to be measurably harmful. Women have distracted attention from their faces to their forms. This is distinctly unfortunate."

I. W. W. Leaders Plan Great Lakes Strike

DULUTH, Aug. 7.—One of the most widespread strikes ever attempted by Great Lakes dock workers was in prospect to-day. Plans were being formed to extend the strike from all the docks in Duluth to the ore shipping points in Wisconsin and Michigan.

Industrial Workers of the World planning the strike, contemplated calling out the dock workers at Two Harbors, Mich.; Superior, Wis.; Ashland, Wis.; Marquette, Mich., and Escanaba, Mich.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 7.—The ankle watch is the latest fad of the smart set.

Fifteen of them were observed last night at a gay masquerade in the Point Judith Country Club.

"SOME SEASON---BELIEVE THE DOC"

K. of C. Debate on $1,000,000 Offices

BOSTON, Aug. 7.—A proposition to move the national headquarters from New Haven, Conn., to Washington and erect a $1,000,000 building at the Capital was the principal subject for consideration at the closing business session to-day of the thirty-first annual convention of the Knights of Columbus. It was predicted the proposition would be defeated as the various councils have rejected the measure in a semi-referendum vote.

Changes in the insurance laws also were considered. One plan was to reduce the assessment paid by the older members, and the other was to issue a paid-up policy to all members who are 70 years old.

Militants Active as Mrs. Pankhurst Sinks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ABERGAVENNY, ENG., Aug. 7.—Militant suffragettes burned a cricket pavilion and a hayrick near here to-day.

Before the pavilion had been fired a big banner was stretched on poles near by, on which was the inscription: "Just to Remind You That Mrs. Pankhurst Is Dying."

BROUGHTON RIVAL OF KING IN LONDON

"In London you hear of but two people—King George and Dr. Len G. Broughton—and possibly you hear a little more of the latter than you do of the former," said W. S. Witham, Atlanta banker and church worker, in an address at the Wesley Memorial Church Wednesday night.

The subject of his address was the "Impression of Zurich," and he told of a trip through Europe in connection with the International Sunday School Convention. He declared that Broughton was following out the same line of work which he carried on in Atlanta; that he spoke fearlessly of things politic, and was the most talked of man in the English Capital.

Mr. Witham was discussing the praising of a man's virtues while he lived, and remarked that the trend of the times now is to praise the living more than the dead.

"Why, more people visit the tomb of Pasteur than they do Napoleon's. It is the man who lives for his country who is getting the praise of the world to-day, not the man who dies for it."

Fleet 'Takes' Brest France's 'Gibraltar'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The French Government was thrown into consternation to-day by the unprecedented feat of a submarine flotilla in penetrating the supposed impregnable harbor at Brest.

The fleet crawled through the water under the very guns of the great forts guarding the approach to the harbor and despite the use of every scientific device known to modern warfare, got through undetected.

Abstainers Pray for Aid in Fighting Drink

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—With a solemn high mass celebrated in the cathedral by Bishop McCort, the national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America was opened here.

The scene was an impressive and significant one as the total abstainers knelt to ask a blessing upon their work in spreading the gospel of total abstinence from strong drink and combating the curse of drunkenness.

Still In The Lead

For over fifteen years Grape-Nuts, the pioneer health cereal, has had no equal, either in flavour or nutrition.

Thousands of families use it regularly because

Grape-Nuts

Has qualities which make it the ideal food—

Delicious Flavour,
Rich Nourishment,
Quick Preparation,

and withal, easily digested.

Grape-Nuts and cream, in place of heavy, indigestible food, helps to make one cooler and more comfortable on hot days; and builds body and brain in a way that gives zest and energy.

"There's a Reason" for Grape-Nuts

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

STRONG WORDS
From a Doctor with 40 Years Experience.

"In my 40 years' experience as a teacher and practitioner along hygienic lines," says a Calif. physician, "I have never found a food to compare with Grape-Nuts for the benefit of the general health of all classes of people.

"I have recommended Grape-Nuts for a number of years to patients with the greatest success and every year's experience makes me more enthusiastic regarding its use.

"I make it a rule to always recommend Grape-Nuts, and Postum in place of coffee, when giving my patients instructions as to diet, for I know both Grape-Nuts and Postum can be digested by anyone.

"As for myself, when engaged in much mental work my diet twice a day consists of Grape-Nuts and rich cream. I find it just the thing to build up and keep the brain in good working order.

"In addition, Grape-Nuts always keeps the digestive organs in a perfect, healthy tone." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Strong endorsements like the above from physicians all over the country have stamped Grape-Nuts the most scientific food in the world.

CHURCH HEALERS BEGIN FIGHT ON MEDICAL BILL

Christian Scientists Take Campaign Into the House After Defeat in Senate.

Christian Scientists have begun a campaign against those provisions of the Medical Practice bill regulating their methods for healing in Georgia. The Senate has passed the bill and it is expected to come before the House soon. An amendment to the bill framed by Christian Scientists failed in the Senate by three votes.

The amendment is worded similar to the one President Taft added to the Medical Practice bill for the Canal Zone at the request of Christian Scientists there.

Edward H. Carman, of Atlanta, president of the Christian Science State Publication Committee, has sent to Christian Scientists all over Georgia a letter which says in part:

"Get influential members of your church to go to three or four of their good friends—influential men—get them to write or wire their Representative in the lower House of the Legislature asking them to support the following amendment which will be offered to the Medical Practice bill when it comes up:

This act shall not apply to any person who ministers to or treats the sick or suffering by mental or spiritual means, whether gratuitously or for compensation, and without the use of any drug or material remedy.

Mr. Carman Thursday refused to comment on the subject, saying he preferred not to even have it known that Christian Scientists felt any anxiety over the passage of the bill.

It is understood, however, that if the bill is passed without the amendment Christian Scientists will at once declare it unconstitutional and will cite as their authority the Constitution of the United States.

'13' Is Happy Omen to Miss Wilson as Bride

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Lovers of the mystic have discovered the letters in the name of Miss Jessie Wilson's fiance, Francis B. Sayre, number thirteen. Therefore, Miss Wilson will not only be the daughter of the "Lucky Thirteen President," and the thirteenth White House bride, but have as a husband a man about whose career thirteen appears an alluring halo.

Washington society hopes the wedding will take place November 13. It may be stated Miss Wilson will not have thirteen bridesmaids.

BILL WITHDRAWS TWO PER CENT U. S. BONDS

Senator Owen Offers Plan to Increase Gold Reserve and to Unify Currency.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—A bill providing for increasing the gold reserve in the redemption division of the Treasury, retiring the 2 per cent bonds and unifying the currency issues of the United States, was introduced in the Senate to-day by Senator Owen, of Oklahoma, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee.

The measure provides that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed, as gold certificates come into the Treasury or subtreasuries of the United States, to have them canceled and the gold represented by such certificates transferred to the redemption division. In place of these canceled gold certificates, the Secretary is to issue treasury notes of the United States, redeemable in gold at the Treasury.

The Secretary is authorized, in his discretion, when requested to do so by national banks having outstanding national bank notes secured by 2 per cent bonds, to purchase these bonds at par and accrued interest, and to assume the redemption at par of the bank notes secured by these bonds, charging the amount of the notes against the proceeds of the 2 per cent bonds and paying the balance in cash to the national banks.

These 2 per cent bonds shall then be canceled, and a like amount of twenty-year 3 per cent bonds shall be placed in the redemption division and the annual interest on them credited to the funds of the redemption division.

When the national bank notes the redemption of which has been assumed shall come into the Treasury they shall be canceled and retired and in place of these notes the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue treasury notes in like amount.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

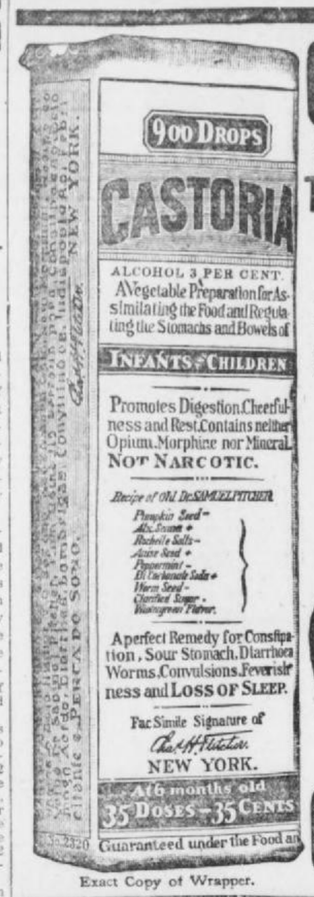

Dreams He's in War And Shoots Himself

WARREN, OHIO, Aug. 7.—While dreaming about a Balkan war battle, witnessed in a moving picture theater early in the evening, William H. Grace early to-day reached under his pillow, secured his loaded revolver and shot and killed himself.

Mrs. Grace said her husband had been muttering in his sleep about the Balkan war.

Realty Convention Comes to Atlanta, Thinks S. B. Turman

First Delegate Returns Home—Widening for Mayson and Turner Ferry Road—Business Good.

S. B. Turman, of the real estate firm of Turman, Black & Calhoun, has returned from the convention of real estate men at Winnipeg and expresses the belief that the election of Charles P. Glover to the vice presidency of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will mean that Atlanta will land the ninth annual convention of realty men in 1916.

"Harris G. White, president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, presented Atlanta's invitation," declared Mr. Turman, "and many of the delegates told us that they would gladly support Atlanta. Most of these were Southern and Western delegates, the former pledging their support on account of loyalty to a sister city and the latter desiring to come because most of them had never been to this section before. Winnipeg is also with us.

"I am confident that we will win the convention. I left Winnipeg for Duluth a day before the adjournment of the convention and don't know whether or not Memphis invited the realty men.

"We had a great convention and I was very much pleased over the work of the national association."

Mr. White and Mr. Glover are returning to Atlanta by steamer and are expected to arrive Sunday or Monday.

County Commissioners Meet.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of County Commissioners in the Thrower Building Wednesday proved to be of considerable interest in real estate circles. Four or five delegations of property owners, probably 100 people in all, appeared to present various petitions for improvements.

The board voted to widen the Mayson and Turner Ferry road for a distance of about two miles in the Center Hill section, and to extend Hemphill avenue from the waterworks station to Pace's Ferry road. The former was already on the summer program. A large delegation of Center Hill residents appeared. The latter is considered an important work because of the amount of territory opened up.

Plans for resurfacing several city streets were also presented.

Work has piled up on the board, due to the fact that Chairman Smith has been away on a vacation, and the further fact that accumulated business of the past month was brought before the commissioners.

Peachtree Interest Sold.

Clarence Knowles has bought from Paul Goldsmith an undivided one-third interest in a 100 by 562 foot lot on Peachtree road, 640 feet northeast of Piedmont avenue, for $1,750, or at the rate of $53 a front foot. Mr. Goldsmith sold another third to Bryan M. Grant May 31, 1912, and is keeping the remaining third for himself.

Sees Good Times Ahead.

Gid Hanna, the well-known real estate trader from Oakland City, has returned from a trip to Gwinnett and Rockdale Counties, and declares that crop conditions are the best he has ever seen. "With a fine crop and plenty of Government money to move it," asserted Mr. Hanna, "I can see nothing but great activity this fall in all lines of business. Secretary McAdoo seems to have smoked out the people who are holding money, and I look for normal conditions in local real estate. Everything points that way."

Plans for Two Houses.

A. J. & H. F. West have completed plans for two 2-story frame residences on the west side of Williams street, near West Tenth street, to cost $8,000 each. This neighborhood has been opened up in the last few years and now has a number of attractive homes.

Lakewood for Exposition.

Charles I. Branan and others of the local Park Board have a plan for using Lakewood for future expositions or fairs that it may be deemed advisable to hold. The question came up before the Park Board at its monthly meeting Tuesday at the City Hall, when Lakewood concessions were considered. The members of the board seemed to be of the opinion that no further privileges should be sold until it was decided whether or not the park could be profitably used for exposition purposes.

Since Piedmont Park was divested of its exposition trimmings the city has had no place save Lakewood to hold fairs.

Attractive New Building Type.

A new type of business building has appeared in Atlanta, and it is proving beneficial to tenants who want short term leases on vacant central property. This is a low steel affair of moderate cost that presents the appearance of a permanent structure, yet which can be moved on short notice. Investors are managing to get a rental of $200 a month out of a string of these shops in downtown districts.

Four such buildings have been erected at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue and Equitable place by Andrew Gust, who purchased them from local representatives of portable steel shops. Mr. Gust has leased two compartments and expects to announce more leases shortly. Each store occupies a frontage of about 20 feet, and is 20 to 25 feet deep.

LONG LOST NANA FOUND IN HOME OF MORGAN

Manuscript of Zola Novel Sought For Years for French Government.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—A nation-wide hunt by an American correspondent of Mme. Zola for the manuscript of Emile Zola's novel of Paris gutter life "Nana" has resulted in finding the original copy of this story in the J. P. Morgan collection in this city. "Nana" is the only one of the Zola manuscripts that is not in the possession of the French Government. The others were given by Mme. Zola. Neither she nor the collectors for the Government have yet been informed where the "Nana" manuscript is.

Government Owns Others.

J. P. Morgan said yesterday that the manuscript was in his collection and that according to his records it was the only one not owned by the Government of France. Mme. Zola was looking for the manuscript and that no request for it had ever come to him from the French Government or the widow of the novelist. Mr. Morgan said that he did not know what his attitude would be if such a request should be made. It probably will be made to Mr. Morgan within a few days by Guyot Cameron, formerly professor of French in Princeton University, who has been commissioned by Mme. Zola to locate the manuscript.

An Old Friend of the Zolas.

Mr. Cameron formely lived in Paris and is an old friend of the Zola family. His search began several years ago with scant clues. The proprietor of a book-shop in Paris remembered having sold the manuscript to an American, and that was about all Mr. Cameron had to work on. He made an exhaustive investigation in this country by correspondence and personal search among dealers and private collectors in various cities; but the discovery finally came when a friend told Mr. Cameron that he had seen the "Nana" manuscript listed in the Morgan collection in a foreign paper at the time of the death of J. P. Morgan, Sr.

He will write the story of its discovery to Mme. Zola and ill probably ask Mr. Morgan for the manuscript in her behalf.

Diving Suit Nearly Coffin for Inventor

SANTA MONICA, CAL., Aug 7.—Tom Yamishi, from Japan,' invented a rubber diving suit which, at its trial dive this afternoon, sprung a leak and nearly formed a coffin for the inventor.

J. L. Green, in a rowboat, picked up the Japanese as he was sinking and towed him ashore. After being rolled on a barrel, the inventor left for home.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

At the Forsyth.

At the cool and busy Forsyth Theater this week a seven-act bill is offered that contains a splendid mixture of variety. Every act is making good its indorsement. The Eight Berlin Madcaps, eight bewitching young misses, dance themselves into their audiences' hearts and execute some clever acrobatics.

Vanfloven, in his dippy magician act, is met with roars of laughter from the start until the finish of his act. His antics on the stage with two little boys, whom he selects from the audience to assist him in a trick, creates one spasm of laughter after another. Robert Everest has the best monkey act seen on a local stage.

At the Grand.

Hundreds of new patrons are finding their way into the comfortable, roomy, safe, clean and cool Grand, where the new established motion picture policy is meeting with the regular patronage of a pleased clientele. Everything in the way of convenience has been done to make the Grand delightful.

WOMAN DRIVES CAB.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Continued dry weather over Texas and Oklahoma led to further buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 5 points higher than the closing quotations of Wednesday. August made the best gain. There was a great deal of warehouse buying. After the call further bullish advices relative to the weather were received and prices advanced still further.

There was no rains shown on the map, which was an incentive for buying, but there is disturbance in the Gulf, which local weather experts claim may bring rain in the next two days over the Western belt. This is causing hesitancy on the part of bulls to buy aggressively. Every one seemed to await the noon detailed weather report to see how high the temperatures may run and whether or not the local experts are correct in their predictions. The volume of trading was small and the range was very narrow throughout the early session.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: August, 11.72; October, 11.15; December, 11.12; January, 11.02; March, 11.12.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.45; October, 11.20; December, 11.17; January, 11.18; March, 11.28.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: We continue to advise caution as to short sales around the 11c level.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: Spinners have not become anxious as yet.

Miller & Co.: Everything depends upon climatic conditions in the Southwest.

Logan & Bryan: We believe that it may be well not to press the selling side too closely, for as indicated in our advices of to-day shorts displayed some nervousness and were disposed to reduce lines pending further developments in the western belt.

Want to Live Long? Tackle Hardships

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—Hardships cause long life, Lord Strathcona, the "grand old man of England and Canada," who celebrated his 93d birthday yesterday, declared so to-day.

"No man's life has been filled with more hardships than mine," he declared, "and yet I am happy and healthy and believe that I will live to be 100. My early experiences in Canada were filled with the hardest kind of work, and I have never gone out of my way to avoid stress, nor distress, either, for that matter.

Bullard Bound Over As Slayer of Spain

WAYCROSS, Aug. 7.—Following a long hearing before Justice C. H. Smith, Tom Bullard, 20 years old, held for the murder of Mack Spain, near Waycross, a month ago, was bound over to-day for action by the Grand Jury. One of the witnesses testified that Bullard tried to get him to kill Spain. The defense contended that the remark was made in fun.

The plea of suicide was not introduced but probably will figure in Bullard's trial if he is indicted by the Grand Jury.

Bulgars Prepare To Turn on Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 7.—A third war is imminent in the Balkans, according to a report which was current here to-day during the final stages of the peace conference. A telegram from Sofia intimated strongly that Bulgaria would independently declare war on Turkey after her army is relieved of present operations against her former allies.

Smokes in Dynamite Warehouse-That's All

OSYKA, MISS., Aug. 7.—The entire town of Osyka was shaken, Sid Taylor, 18 years old, was blown to pieces and three other persons were hurt by the explosion of 200 pounds of dynamite to-day.

Taylor entered a warehouse with a lighted cigarette in his mouth. One of his legs was found nearly a quarter of a mile away.

SHOOTING TRIO UNDER BOND.

VALDOSTA, Aug. 7.—R. S. Williams, Bob Williams and S. Jernigan, accused of shooting up the town of Howell, in Lowndes County, and threatening the life of the marshal, Ben Wetherington, were remanded to jail by Judge W. E. Thomas under a bond of $5,000 to keep the peace.

Shiny Berlin Streets Amaze U. S. Tourists

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, Aug. 7.—American tourists here have succumbed to the cleanliness of Berlin, which they believe is unsurpassed.

"When I rode over the asphalt pavements the night I arrived," said one to-day, "I thought they were glass, so shiny and smoth were they."

The visitors also are impressed with the power-driven street cleaners, which flush and then wine the streets, making them as clean as a kitchen floor.

The market after the call was sold on forecast of increasing cloudiness in Arkansas and predictions of local weather experts of rain in the next three days for the western belt. The ring crowd were apparently the leading sellers. Montgomery, Dick Bros., Mitchell and Wilson led the buying and bid the market up. Very little cotton was offered at the outset. Weld was reported a good buyer; also the South and West were booked as buyers.

* * *

On the call, Gifford and Schill bought August. Hentz and Rothschild sold. Starr, Rothschild and Lehman bought October. Shantz, Norden and Mitchell sold. Flinn, Starr and Gifford bought December. Shantz, Norden, Burnett and Hentz sold. Starr and Shearson bought January. Rothschild and Bashford sold.

Government records show that temperature average over Oklahoma is 104 degrees and for Texas 100 degrees, with eleven stations 100, two stations 102 and five stations 104 degrees.

Heavy rains in Gainesville, Fla., 1.10 inches; average belt, .05; temperatures, 96 to 72 degrees.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says:

"According to the bears, yesterday's advance was a revival of last week's price boom, which week-end rains had interfered with. According to the bulls, the talent has begun to realize the danger of selling short, because of the continued need of rain in the west, and also because of the approach of a showdown on the Clarke and Smith bills affecting cotton contract trading.

"Meanwhile, the market is very narrow, and a light excess of buying or selling orders serves to move values a little way. Damage reports are beginning to come in from the west in sufficient number to cause some concern, and the Gulf storm, which big-yield men now depend on to bring rains to Texas, is only in process of formation and may not form at all. Dry weather advices are causing some shorts to cover.

"Yesterday exporters and forward sellers received some inquiries from Europe for supplies, but very little business was reported done."

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Texas Company was the most prominent feature at the opening of the stock market to-day, advancing 2 points to 115. However, nearly all issues were higher following the lead of the foreign markets, which were up on reports of re-established peace in the Balkans.

Among the gains in the New York market were: Amalgamated Copper, ⅝; Steel common, ¾; Western Maryland, ¼; Utah Copper, ⅛; Union Pacific, ⅝; Southern Railway, ¼; Reading, ⅛; Pennsylvania, ⅜; New York, New Haven and Hartford, ¼; Missouri Pacific, ⅛; Katy, ⅜; Car Foundry, ⅛; Great Northern preferred, ¼; Erie, ¼; Chino Copper, ⅜.

Canadian Pacific shaded ⅛, while American Sugar Refining lost the same amount.

At the end of half an hour Union Pacific was up 1 point.

The transfer books for subscription of Union Pacific close to-day, but the Stock Exchange ruled that sales of the issue during the morning would not be ex-rights, but that a due bill would be given for rights because the company did not announce the price, at which Southern Pacific certificates of interest would be offered.

The curb was strong.

Americans in London were steady in a narrow range.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Holders of all grains indulged in liberal selling at the beginning of the session of the Board of Trade this morning and values showed sharp recessions in consequence. Corn led the other markets in the matter of losses, the decline in this cereal amounting to 1 to 1⅛. Rains were reported in the northern half of the belt, the section visited yesterday, and this was largely responsible for the throwing over of lines by longs. Slight recoveries were made from the initial decline on covering by shorts.

The selling of wheat was not as pronounced as seen in the corn market, and losses in this line were ⅜c to ½c. Rains were reported in our own, as well as the Canadian, Northwest, but they were not sufficient to prevent harvesting. Liverpool market was ⅛d higher, being influenced by steady American cables of yesterday and rainy weather in the Volga region of Russia. These were partially offset in the big English market by a weak opening at Paris and generally favorable weather for harvest in Europe.

Oats showed losses of ⅛c to ⅝c from the weakness in corn the principal influence.

There was little doing in the provision market at the opening and the range of prices was quite irregular. The hog market was reported as steady to a shade higher.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "Sentiment in wheat is mostly bearish as viewed by local traders on the big receipts and light export business. Shrewd operators, however, only selling on bulges, and say that caution should be used so long as the bull movement in corn continues. While a majority of corn traders are bullish, there are a number who are afraid to follow the advance much further, because prices are unprecedentedly high for this season for December and May. There is a good deal of spreading between corn and wheat, the latter being sold and corn bought on the carrying charge theory.

Life of U. S. Rifles Is 10 Years, Say Experts

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The present model of rifle used by the United States should have a life of usefulness at least ten years, in the opinion of ordnance officers and a determined effort is being made to prevent the condemnation of thousands of rifles that are turned in as worn out when they are really serviceable.

A circular issued to-day declares that one of these rifles should be capable of firing 8,000 to 13,000 rounds before becoming so worn as to become inaccurate.

The "Why" of the South's Greatest Sunday Paper

SIX days we labor and do all our work.

And Sunday we rest—and catch step with the world.

That is, most of us.

Most of us work six days in the week. Most of us work pretty hard. Most of us are tired when night comes.

That is a good, healthy state of affairs, and it keeps us out of mischief.

But it doesn't give us much chance to keep pace with things outside our own little march. And sometimes that is in lock-step.

And that answers the query, "Why is a Sunday paper?"

The Sunday paper tells us that there is something stirring outside of Atlanta; that there are other States than the Empire State of the South; other nations than the Union; other continents than America; other worlds than the earth.

The Sunday paper tells us about other people than the kind we know so well; other professions, other aims, other thoughts and creeds.

The Sunday paper marks the time by which we catch step with all the world.

Depending, of course, largely on the kind and scope of the Sunday paper.

Which brings us to The Sunday American in general, and the next Sunday American in particular.

Starting with Atlanta—for that's where a lot of us live—the next Sunday American will have the freshest and fullest possible news of America's great murder case—the Frank trial. There will be pictures. Special features will be covered by special writers. The news will be handled frankly and honestly—and fully.

But there are other things than the Frank trial.

Polly Peachtree and her inimitable comment and gossip of society—you don't know Polly Peachtree, do you? No—but you read her sprightly gossip and you wonder—and so do people over all the South. Polly Peachtree is an institution.

Well, and that brings on the fashions, and the frills, and all the dainty arabesques (or is that architectural?) of feminine apparel. With pictures. Don't forget the pictures.

Then the drama.

Reviews and criticisms of the new plays which, probably owing to the season, haven't been produced yet, or possibly even written; gossip of stageland and its people, the wonderful people that to most of us live and move and have their being in the golden country back of the footlights. We always like to hear of something that connects them with our own little work-a-day world. And we are treated to such anecdotes quite frequently in the Sunday paper.

Sports—pennant chases in our own league; in the Big Show; boxing and gossip of the padded square; racing, golf, tennis—all handled by experts, trained to keep ever an eye on the Main Chance; to play up a world event for what it is worth; to value truly the importance of local news. There's O. B. Keeler, Charles Dryden, W. J. McBeth, "Tick" Tichenor, J. W. Heisman, Innis Brown, Damon Runyon, W. S. Farnsworth, Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton and George E. Phair, who are known from coast to coast in the respective lines.

In the lighter vein the comics contribute the bit of nonsense now and then, traditionally relished by the "best of men"—who, after all, probably are just plain folks like us, who have a soft spot in our hearts (art critics say in our heads) for the quaint conceits of Powers and Fisher and the rest. When you're tired, you know, a series of pictures is mighty easy to read, and the point isn't easy to miss.

But if you're serious, you can find what other people think in the editorials; you can match your ideas against theirs—and you're the judge. Clashing opinions sharpen wits. It's fine exercise for the mind.

Or turn to a serial novel. You'll find the latest and best in The Sunday American. Just now it's "Adam's Clay," by Cosmo Hamilton. Pretty soon it will be "The Plot for a Pennant," and you baseball fans might guess the author—Hugh Fullerton. You know what that means. But they all are the freshest and the best that can be had.

And the cable service and the news of all the world.

That might be the headliner of all. No other service has the far-reaching tentacles—the "feelers" that touch this old mud-ball at every point, and gather that which is new and strange and worthy, to tell it with spirit and truth in the Sunday paper.

For next Sunday features—"Art or the Woman?" A brilliant consideration of Ida Rubenstein, the strange, fiery Russian dancer who has cast her spell on the flower of the artists, the composers and the dramatists of our time. And then the strange case of Alfred Vanderbilt, frozen out of American society, finding on his return with his new wife to Newport that his first wife is the leader in a social ostracism the most rigid in history.

Then there will be another proof that truth can be stranger than fiction in the narrative of the cruel lover who tried to frighten into his arms a belle of our Southland—and by a horror in the guise of a monster frog.

And what else? Well, King George of England has a quaint idea of destroying "American frivolity" by imposing old-fashioned and outrageous duties on the members of his court—the good King desiring to "sober it down." And Madame Cavalieri explains beauty hints—she really ought to know, you know—and a scientist tells how a child becomes a man, and a psychologist details his discovery of why lovers can't help quarreling.

By way of contrast, Sophie Lyons, queen of the burglars, tells why crime doesn't pay, and Lady Duff Gordon produces an essay on mannish tendencies in women's dress, notably waistcoats, a Parisian fancy.

It's all in The Sunday American. And with it the news of all the earth.

And that's how we catch step with the world, on Sunday.

The Pictures in the Ice

The man—to whom the cost of ice doesn't matter—sees in it merely an added fillip to a long drink. The woman—to whom the cost of ice is a heart-breaking matter—sees in it relief, perhaps life itself, for her child, sweltering in the poor cottage which they call home.

A Glimpse of the Cowed Women of Japan

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

MARIAN COX has recently written her reminiscences of Japan, and Mitchell Kennerley has published them under the title of "The Man-Made Woman of Japan." The picturesque pen of Mrs. Cox gives us a striking chronicle, and I take from it the following:

"The easiest way to arrive at a conception of the Japanese woman is to think of every quality directly contrary to the qualities of the typical American woman, and to see her as the embodiment of these. She is as docile as the American woman is aggressive; as demure as the American is flamboyant; as modest as the American is impudent; as humble as the American is snobbish; as conservative as the American is faddish; as reticent as the American is effusive.

"There is no romance between the sexes in Japan. The relation is either crude and businesslike in marriage, or unmentionable and bestial out of marriage. No wonder there is no word in the Japanese language which can be translated as 'love' in our language. The only love that can be spoken or written of in Japan is the filial. There are no words of endearment for lovers, nor for husband and wife. Marriage is without courtship; courtship without kisses, caresses or pet names.

Loveless Women.

"No Japanese knight has ever performed a deed of valor for the love of a woman. No Japanese poet has ever written a poem of 'love' that could be read to a pure woman. These people have put all their refinement into their etiquette of life, and so have had none left for the elmental facts of life; they have put all their imagination in a hair-splitting epicureanism, and so have had none left with which they might dignify humanity's greatest passion. When the Japanese nation evolves the kiss of man and woman she may cease to be a mimicker and become a molder of civilization.

"In reading of the loveless, kissless, woman-denouncing Japanese, one might believe him austerely chaste, puritanical, the true ascetic; and to those unversed in the duality of human nature it comes with a shock of surprise to learn that, on the contrary, his ruthless immorality and licentiousness are notorious and the scandal of Japan.

"There is one feature of this so unique and so illustrative of the vicious outgrowths of man's lopsided civilizations that it has a claim upon the interest of every student of Japan or of human nature; the institution of the Yoshiwara.

"Classified with our 'white slave traffic' and the sordid evils that nightly stalk Broadway, Piccadilly and the Parisian boulevard, it yet differs from them all in certain elements which make it the most sickening and tragic exhibition the world affords of the human injustice and shame accorded women in civilizations made strictly of the men, for the men, by the men.

"At a temple in Nikko there is a famous picture of three monkeys, one with his hands covering his eyes, which means see no evil; another with hands covering ears, which means hear no evil; the other with hands covering mouth, which means speak no evil. This is evidently the Buddhistic formula for peace on earth, good will to men; but, thanks to the men who have not observed it, humanity has evolved from some of its barbarities, and most of the barbarities that exist to-day endure because women have been too long and thoroughly trained by men—to see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil.

With Official Sanction.

"No one can understand the Japanese people until he has seen the menagerielike spectacle of that portion of its womankind whom they place outside of human rights in a hideous travesty of human dignity. In the dusk of every evening, just as the temple bells are pealing forth their summons to the strange gods of Nippon, this spectacle begins: women, girls—the majority mere children in appearance—file into cages which open onto the streets, exactly like the cages in a zoo, and sit for hours behind those wooden bars like merchandise for sale, with an aureole of tortoise shell combs around their heads and bedecked in garish splendor of attire. The spectacle arouses disgust and scorn until one learns the hidden springs behind this system of woman-sale, and then there comes only pity.

"The Government has placed its sanction upon this institution; 'thus sayeth the law' is more powerful in Japan than in any other civilized country. So the idea has been perpetuated among the people that parents have a moral (because legal) right to dispose of their daughters to their own advantage, and the inmates of the Yoshiwara are sold by their parents or adopted parents when too young and ignorant to understand the nature of the transaction or the ghastly future it will bring. But even if she knew, the Japanese daughter is as powerless to resist the parental will as her brother, the soldier, would be to resist the will of his Emperor. As we know, she is taught filial devotion as her religion.

Agitation Going On.

"It is not true, as has been so frequently stated, that unchastity does not dishonor a woman in Japan. Even these slaves of the Yoshiwara, involuntary victims, are treated as below human kind. Until a few years ago they had no chance of escape from what even the Japanese call 'the bitter sea of misery.' When there were runaways, the law authorized their capture, punishment and return to their keepers. That there were many runaways we can believe when we learn that the average number of suicides among these girls throughout the land was 40 and 50 a month.

"During the past four years there has been a lively agitation in Japan for a complete change in its social and moral system. The leaders of public opinion proclaim that something is radically wrong, but do not seem to know what it is that must be changed, nor just what new laws to enact—for more laws is the masculine solution to every difficulty."

The Secret of Prayer

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

For he who climbs to make his prayer
Meets half way the descending grace.
—Elsa Barker in British Review.

THIS is the secret of all prayers
That in God's sight have worth;
They must be uttered from the stairs
That wind away from earth.
And he who mounts to speak the word,
He shall be heard, he shall be heard.

And he who will not leave himself,
But stays down with his cares
(Or with his thoughts of power and pelf),
Though loud and loud his prayers,
Beyond earth's dome of arching skies
They shall not rise, they shall not rise.

Oh ye, who seek for strength and power,
Seek first some quiet spot,
And fashion, through a silent hour,
Your stairway, thought by thought.
Then climb, and pray to God on high.
He shall reply, He shall reply.

A Ringing Alarm to the Farmer

He Quotes President Charles S. Barrett, of the Farmers' Union, Regarding Foreign Ownership of Cotton Fields in the South.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

IF any man thinks that the millions of American farmers are asleep or indifferent to economic changes and passing events, that man is mistaken.

On the tariff, on the currency, on farm credits, and on the outside investments in agriculture every farmer is reading, thinking—and preparing to vote!

Even if the farmer were ignorant or apathetic upon public questions, he has wise and watchful leaders who, upon the watchtower, are sounding continually the bugles of advance or the alarms of retreat.

Among the ablest of these is Charles Barrett, president of the Farmers' Union, with two and a half million enrolled members—perhaps the most popular and influential of all American farmers.

Foreign Ownership.

I asked this great farmer recently if he wished to use the far-reaching columns of the Hearst newspapers to sound any new counsel to the American farmer. And he promptly responded:

"Yes; I never omit an opportunity to use that vast newspaper circulation to speak for my people.

"I have something now to say about the alien or foreign ownership of our lands, particularly those lands in the South adaptable to cotton. I have said that the steady reach of foreigners after that imperial staple was an alarming development! I believed years ago that this was a serious menace, and now I am sure of it.

"Now, listen, you scoffers and unbelievers. Do you know that between twelve and thirteen million acres of the finest cotton lands in the South are now owned outright by foreign individuals and corporations? Do you know that agents of these foreign individuals and corporations are constantly working to get more millions of acres of the cream of cotton lands? Do you know that foreign spinners are sending men here to be educated in our agricultural colleges and schools to take charge of these broad acres, cultivate and raise cotton to ship to spinners in England, France and other foreign countries?

Our Richest Heritage.

"Do you think deep and sense what this means? Do you know that it means the actual production of cotton in the South on farms owned and cultivated by foreigners, and whose product will go direct to their mills in England, France and other countries? In plain words, we are sitting supinely by while foreign capital and corporations are taking our oldest, richest and greatest heritage right from under our noses.

"Time may not be far distant when our own people, the men who have raised and supplied the world with its cotton for generations, will be restricted absolutely to the home market. Sounds scary, and I want it to sound so, for it is time to get scared.

"This is a vital question which I would thank the Hearst newspapers and other great conservators of American interests to help our people to solve."

Life as Seen in the Movies

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

FIRST we see Harold folding Susie in his arms. In the background is the train that is to take Harold to the West, where he will make his fortune, after which he will return and make Susie the happiest girl in the world. In the background is George sneering like the plotting villain we know him to be the moment we set eyes on him. The conductor, who has been very patient, gives the signal. Harold climbs aboard at the last minute.

The Telegram.

Next we behold George and Susie speeding homeward in George's six-cylinder car. George is talking in what looks like a low, earnest voice, but Susie refuses to be interested. Suddenly he pulls from his pocket a telegram. Susie sits up suddenly. And well she may. For the film announces that the contents of the telegram are to the effect that Harold has gone to the West to marry another. What other we do not yet know.

We now behold Susie weeping at a desk in a room so full of furniture that no burglar could get halfway across it without waking up all the people in the next block. In her little hand she holds the telegram for a time, then tears it spitefully into bits that flutter out on the breeze that is blowing the Valenciennes curtains in twelve windows. George enters. He looks at the fragmentary telegram and sneers. Then he looks at Susie and smiles. Presently he engages in more low, earnest conversation, and you judge he is describing his yacht, his bank account and his country place at Mamaroneck. But Susie shrinks from these things.

"At Last!"

But evidently George knows more of Susie's disposition than we do. He points to the telegram and sneers, this time for three seconds. Susie sits bolt upright and thinks. Then she rises and paces the floor, deftly threading her way in and out among the furniture like a guide in the North Woods. At last she nods her head, but when George approaches enthusiastically she shakes it.

Here in the West, which is denoted by a lonely cabin in a stone quarry, is Harold. He is sitting by a fire examining nuggets. Evidently none of them is good for much but concrete work. But now he leans forward intently and examines one. Reaching for the only article of wardrobe in evidence, a coat, he dashes madly from the room and we next behold him entering an opening in the stone quarry through which trickles a rivulet. Bending over the rivulet, he picks up more nuggets. "At last" are the words we see plainly on his lips. They are subsequently verified by the text on the screen.

Harold re-enters the lonely cabin, and carefully hangs the coat on the same nail. A rough, unshaved person enters and hands him a letter. He opens it. His face clouds. Bad news from home, we conjecture. Right. Mighty bad news. Harold is being invited to Susie's wedding and George is going to be the bridegroom.

Throwing the newly found nugget out of the window, Harold hurriedly leaves the room.

Harold to the Rescue.

Here comes the Overland Limited. Nearer and nearer till we fear it will collide with the audience. But across the track suddenly darts a man waving a campaign hat. It is Harold. Will he be run over? No. The train stops. Harold climbs on. The train moves into nothingness just as we duck to avoid being hit by the pilot.

At the same old station Harold alights. He commandeers an automobile, and, taking the wheel, departs while the owner indignantly shakes his fist after him.

Same room, full of same furniture, but further embellished with a wedding bell and a minister. Enter Harold from one door and Susie from another. Harold steps forward just as George enters from a third. Susie, being in something of a dilemma, gets out of it neatly by fainting. George attempts to sneer, but doesn't get away with it. The .44 Harold has in his hand interferes. Evidently there are explanations. Susie's father, a gentleman with a limousine body, comes in and revives her. George, discovering that his fake telegram has been exposed, sneers for the last time and goes out a window. Harold folds Susie to his stalwart breast. The minister steps forward and the play is done.

DALTON CORROBORATES JIM CONLEY

Frank's Attorneys Fight Desperately Against State's Closing Witnesses

ANTI-SLATON COMBINE IS CHARGED

'Drys,' Reported Allied With Tax Reform Foes to Defeat Governor's Bills, Hold Whip Hand.

The "dry" members of the House of Representatives and those members who oppose the enactment of tax reform measures have formed a combine to defeat all bills introduced or favored by Speaker Burwell, because the Speaker ruled that the resolution of Mr. Kidd, of Baker, ordering the Temperance Committee to report the Hixon-Searcy (Webb) bill back to the House was out of order Wednesday morning, after Wohlwender, of Muscogee, had held up the business of the House for an entire day with a filibuster.

The formation of the combine is virtually a defiance of Governor John M. Slaton and a refusal to accede to his wishes that tax reform measures and bills putting the taxation system of the State on a business basis be passed. It is a dare to the Governor to veto the House appropriation bill or call an extra session, both of which the Governor has said he will do if the House does not enact tax reform measures or keep its appropriations within the estimated revenues of the State.

Plan to Resurrect Bill.

In addition to trying to defeat the bills of Speaker Burwell and Governor Slaton, the combine will make every effort possible to resurrect the Hixon-Searcy Senate bill from the pigeonhole to which it has been consigned by the Temperance Committee. Mr. Kidd, the apparent author of the resolution which met such an inglorious finish Wednesday morning, declared that he will try to introduce his resolution at the first opportunity.

"We intend to try in every way possible to get the bill out of the committee and before the House at this session," said Mr. Kidd. "I intend to offer my resolution again, and if I can not do that we will try to find some other means of combating the enemies of the bill. We were not treated right by the Speaker when he ruled my resolution out of order. We are prepared to fight for our rights, and if the bill can not come up for the consideration of this House there are a lot of other measures that will receive scant consideration at the hands of the friends of the measure.

Organized Fight on Burwell.

"We intend to defeat every measure offered or favored by Speaker Burwell or the men who aided in the defeat of the resolution ordering the Temperance Committee to report back the Hixon-Searcy bill. Burwell's bills have no chance of passing this House during the present session. I have nothing personally against any of the Speaker's bills, but we are going to get even for the treatment we got during the consideration of my resolution and for not being given a chance to pass, or at least attempt to pass, the Webb bill that passed the Senate."

The combination of the "dry" forces and those opposed to tax revision was formed the day before the introduction of Mr. Kidd's resolution. Mr. Wohlwender, who started and carried through a successful filibuster, declared Wednesday that the resolution was drawn up by Barry Wright, of Floyd County, one of the prohibition leaders. It was the result of a combination formed at that time between Mr. Wright and other temperance leaders and Messrs. Stovall, of Elbert; Sheppard, of Sumter, and other members who have consistently opposed tax reform measures.

Unite Against Tax Reform.

It was agreed, it is generally understood, that the enemies of tax reform were to support the Kidd resolution on condition that the prohibition members aid them in their efforts to prevent the passage of tax bills. The idea was this:

If the Hixon-Searcy bill were brought out from the committee and

Castro Is Denounced By His Namesake

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Cipriano Castro, the would-be dictator of Venezuela, is not a real Castro, or even a gentleman, according to Victor Cita Castro, who reached here on the French liner La Lorraine, and who shouted indignation from all directions when delayed for a time by federal officials in the belief that he was a possible ally of the redoubtable Cipriano.

"I know why you are keeping me here," he said. "You think I am going to participate in the revolt down there. You wound me; you pierce my heart with your words. Oh, vile! He is a peon and a peddler; not a Castro or a gentleman."

Catholic Women To Oppose 'The Cause'

BUFFALO, Aug. 7.—Organization of a Catholic women's league that proposes to counteract the radical tendencies of the women's movement, including their demand for the ballot, marked to-day's session of the German Roman Catholic Central Verein.

"The femininist movement," said Mrs. Joseph Frey, honorary president, "is being promoted by women whose views are decidedly Pagan. If their demands were to be realized the Christian family would cease to exist and woman's condition would lapse into paganism."

U. S. Leads Europe In Child Welfare Work

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 7.—"American obstetrical methods and child welfare work in general were shown by the papers and discussions at the infant mortality cnference just ended in London to be superior to those of England," said Dr. Julius H. Hess, of Chicago, to-day. "Indeed, our child welfare work now surpasses that in Germany, where such work had its origin.

"The methods in the British colonies are also in advance of those in Europe."

Bullfrogs Imported; Skins Used in Purses

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 7.—Eighteen big mountain frogs have been brought here from the Philippines by Dr. F. M. McAllister, ship's surgeon on the Korea. He will give them to the Park Commission for propagation in Stow Lake.

The mouse-colored skin, mottled with spots of darker hue, may be used for the manufacture of women's cate in spite of their si SHRDL U purses and chatelaine sacks.

The frogs are edlicate in spite of their size, and five died on the voyage.

Sues as Wife Turns Tango Gown Model

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 7.—Pasquale L. Montani, a musician, says in a divorce complaint filed to-day that his wife told him she preferred to be a living model in a tango gown than live with him.

He says he is fully able to provide for her, but she became a model in a downtown department store, wearing a tango gown which he says in his complaint "is designed to display the leg from the ankle to the knee."

Appeals to Wilson To Save His Teeth

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Dr. John Grant Lyman, Federal prisoner, charged with misusing the mails, has made an appeal to President Wilson for a hasty trial.

In a night lettergram sent to Washington the physician complained that his teeth have become worn to a razor edge and he is unable to masticate his food.

Find Girls Lost in Snow on Mt. Rainier

TACOMA, WASH., Aug. 7.—Lost in the snow on the Cowlitz trail on Mount Rainier, two school teachers, Miss Kitty Roberts, of Washington, D. C., and Miss Bernice Royce, of San Francisco, were found by rescuers too exhausted to walk.

CODY, NOTED AVIATOR, IS KILLED

Plunges One Thousand Feet to Death With Passenger in Test Flight in England.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ALDERSHOT, ENG., Aug. 7.—Colonel Samuel F. Cody, a former citizen of the United States and one of the most famous aviators in the world, and a passenger were killed here to-day while testing a new aeroplane over the military aerodrome.

These two fatalities bring the aviation death list up to 305.

Colonel Cody was one of the pioneer airmen and was commissioned by the British Government to build up the aviation corps of the Imperial army, which he fulfilled to the perfect satisfaction of the War Office. Cody was a relative of William F. (Buffalo Bill) Cody, and in appearance he resembled the famous American.

Protested Taking Passenger.

The name of the passenger who was killed with Colonel Cody was Evans. The aviator protested against any one accompanying him, saying that he was going to try out a new machine and the risk would be great. Evans was insistent and finally Cody relented.

After a "grass-cutting" circuit Cody shot the machine upward and soon the car was 1,000 feet in the air. Spectators on the field saw the machine begin to wabble as though one of the planes had buckled. Suddenly it turned over on its side and plunged downward. With a crash the machine struck the earth and the petrol tank burst, scattering the fuel over the bodies of the two men.

Cody and Evans were picked up and rushed to a hospital in the cantonments, but the spark of life already had been extinguished.

How He Got His Title.

The manner in which Cody got his title of "Colonel" is interesting. Shortly after King George ascended the throne he wrote a note of congratulation to Cody for some air feats he had performed and called him "Colonel" Cody, evidently confusing him with "Buffalo Bill." The aviator seized the opportunity to acquire a title and since had styled himself Colonel Cody.

Last August Cody won the British army flying tests, taking $25,000 in prizes.

Before taking up aviation Cody was an aeronaut of note and once made a balloon flight over London.

He planned a trip to India in an aeroplane-balloon of his own invention, but his death cuts off all plans for the future. Cody is survived by a widow, who, like her husband, has always been fond of excitement and adventure. She was the first woman in England to make a flight in an aeroplane and is herself an accomplished air car driver.

Colonel Cody came to England from the United States about ten years ago and became a naturalized British subject.

Life of U. S. Rifles Is 10 Years, Say Experts

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—The present model of rifle used by the United States should have a life of usefulness at least ten years, in the opinion of ordnance officers and a determined effort is being made to prevent the condemnation of thousands of rifles that are turned in as worn out when they are really serviceable.

A circular issued to-day declares that one of these rifles should be capable of firing 8,000 to 12,000 rounds before becoming so worn as to become inaccurate.

Tells How It Feels to Face Death by Rabies

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 7.—Facing death from rabies is a grim ordeal. This is the feeling expressed by Elsie Parish, noted writer of children's verses, who confidently awaits the outcome of treatment begun to forestall infection to which she laid herself open by sucking the wounds of two little girls who had been bitten by a rabid dog.

"Did you ever read an improbable story and then say to yourself that it couldn't have happened?" asked Miss Parish. "That's the way I feel. Of course, there is a horror in it all, but I just say, feeling as I do now, that I just know I'm not going to die."

Calls Mosquito King Of Disease Carriers

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Mosquitoes were to-day branded the "king disease carriers" of the insect world by Dr. Nelson Du Val Breicht, formerly of the Public Health Service.

Besides their implements of torture, these insects carry about with them germs of leprosy, yellow fever, malaria, breakbone fever, typhoid and five other brands of malady. Dr. Breicht awarded the gnat second honors as a disease carrier.

PROSECUTOR DORSEY SNAPPED IN ACTION

This shows the Solicitor in an argument at the Frank trial.

FORSYTH NEGRO'S CABIN DYNAMITED

John Woolsey Suffers Broken Leg When Blown Through the Roof of House.

CUMMING, Aug. 7.—John Woolsey, the only negro in Forsyth County, was blown out of bed through the roof of his cabin, eight miles north of Cumming, and suffered a broken leg, when dynamite was set off under the house, according to information that has reached Cumming. The dynamiting took place on the farm of Wyley Smith. The dynamiters cut all telephone wires into that part of the county, which prevented the news reaching here sooner. Woolsey was hurried out of the county to Gainesville by Smith.

The negro had moved to the Smith place just a few days ago. He was warned to leave the county and Smith was warned to get rid of him. Neither took heed. The dynamiting resulted. The cabin occupied by Woolsey was completely wrecked.

Chicago 'Trilby' Has Most Perfect Foot

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—The center of attraction and interest at the meeting of the National Association of Chiropodists at the Hotel Marlborough to-day was the American "Trilby," personified in Miss Clara S. Houston, of Chicago.

Seated in an extremely business-like looking office, Miss Houston exposed for the benefit of visitors her well-shaped foot, which by all experts has been unanimously declared the most perfect in America.

ALL SAMEE MEN.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 7.—Mayor Bading has declared that the women of Milwaukee may wear any kind of bathing suit as long as they wear as much as the men do.

30 Kansas Towns Suffering for Water

TOPEKA, Aug. 7.—The month of July, 1913, was the second driest month since the local weather bureau was established 30 years ago.

Kansas streams that have never been known to go dry are dry now. More than 30 Kansas towns have been compelled to shut off all water for lawns.

Man's Plea in Court Is Heard for Block

SANTA MONICA, CAL., Aug. 7.—E. C. Shapiro, held on a charge of passing a worthless check, pleaded his case before Judge G. Edwin Brown with such vigor that he was heard half a block from the court room. Despite the vocal strength of his plea, Shapiro was held to answer before the Superior Court.

ARNOLD TO EXAMINE DEFENSE WITNESSES; PHYSICIAN TO BE FIRST

Court opened Thursday morning in the trial of Leo Frank with the spectators watching with the keenest interest for the first move of the defense. The prosecution had practically finished its case.

Solicitor Dorsey announced before court opened that he probably would call C. B. Dalton as his first witness as he hardly expected that Dr. Harris would be physically able to appear for the completion of his cross-examination until later in the day.

The Solicitor said that he expected to follow Dalton with Dr. Harris and would complete his case with the testimony of Detective Bass Rosser. He thought that he would conclude early in the afternoon although this was largely dependent on the length of the cross-examinations.

Dalton took the stand at 9 o'clock.

Attorney Rosser said that he would turn over the direct examination of the defense's witnesses to Arnold. Mr. Arnold said that the defense's first witness would be Dr. Leo A. Childs, who would give expert testimony in rebuttal of such testimony offered by the State.

Mr. Arnold said:

"Further than this witness I don't know what line we will pursue at present."

"Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?" was the first question the Solicitor asked Dalton.

Mr. Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor," he said, "we want it understood that we object to this testimony—all of it."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

"Well, we want our objection recorded," said Rosser.

Dorsey continued his questioning.

"Do you know Leo Frank and Jim Conley?" continued the Solicitor. A. Yes; I know them both.

Q. Were you ever in the factory of the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes; two or three times.

Q. Did you ever go to Frank's office with Miss Daisy Hopkins?—A. Yes.

Was in Basement.

Q. Was Frank there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever go down in the basement?—A. Yes.

The witness then pointed out on the diagram the spot he was in in the basement.

Q. Did you ever see Conley on those visits?—A. Yes; and one time I saw another negro, a watchman.

Q. Did Frank know you were in the basement?—A. He knew I was in the factory. I don't know whether he knew I was in the basement or not.

Dorsey then turned the witness over to the defense for the cross-examination.

A sharp fight was in prospect over the admission of Dalton's testimony. Before he was called to the stand it was announced that he would tell a story corroborating the portions of Jim Conley's testimony which the defense fought with all its might to expunge from the record, and failed.

If Conley's story of alleged moral depravity on the part of the young factory superintendent was harmful to the case of the defense, it was regarded as not unreasonable to believe that it would b doubly harmful when supported by the sworn testimony of Dalton, who was said by Conley to have been in the factory on occasions when Frank had appointments with women in his office.

Judge Roan administered a severe blow to the defense Wednesday when he ruled that all of Conley's story should stand, although portions of it, he acknowledged, would have been inadmissable had objection been made at the time the testimony was offered.

Judge to Rule as Case Proceeds.

It was a particularly difficult allegation to combat. Unlike many allegations, it was exactly as hard to fight in the event it was false as in case it was founded on fact.

Judge Roan said in regard to the testimony of Dalton that he did not know what it was to be and that he would allow it to be presented so that he might rule on its admissability as it came up.

Solicitor Dorsey put the final rivet in his case so far as it rested upon the testimony of Conley when at the close of his redirect examination of the negro he brought to light the State's theory of the disposition that had been made of the Phagan girl's meshbag.

Practically no mention of the meshbag had been made during the week and a half of the trial. The only reference made to it was in the examination of Mrs. J. W. Coleman, mother of the slain girl, and of the officers who visited the scene of the crime immediately after police headquarters was called by the negro nightwatchman, Newt Lee.

Tells of Meshbag.

Mrs. Coleman testified that Mary left home with the meshbag in her hand. The detectives and policemen all testified that they were able to find no trace of it either the morning after the crime or in the search that had been conducted since then.

"Did you ever see the murdered girl's meshbag?" Dorsey asked Conley, just as it appeared that he had finished his questioning.

"Yes, sah, I see it," Conley replied.

"Where was it?"

"It was right on Mr. Frank's desk when I went in there to write the notes."

"Did you see what became of it?"

"Yes, sah, Mr. Frank went and put it in his safe."

Conley left the stand at 11:10 o'clock still sticking to his charge that Leo Frank killed the Phagan girl and that, at Frank's direction, he (Conley) assisted in the disposal of the body. He had been on the stand fifteen and one-half hours and under the grilling cross-examination of Luther Rosser for more than thirteen hours.

Says Frank Changed Note.

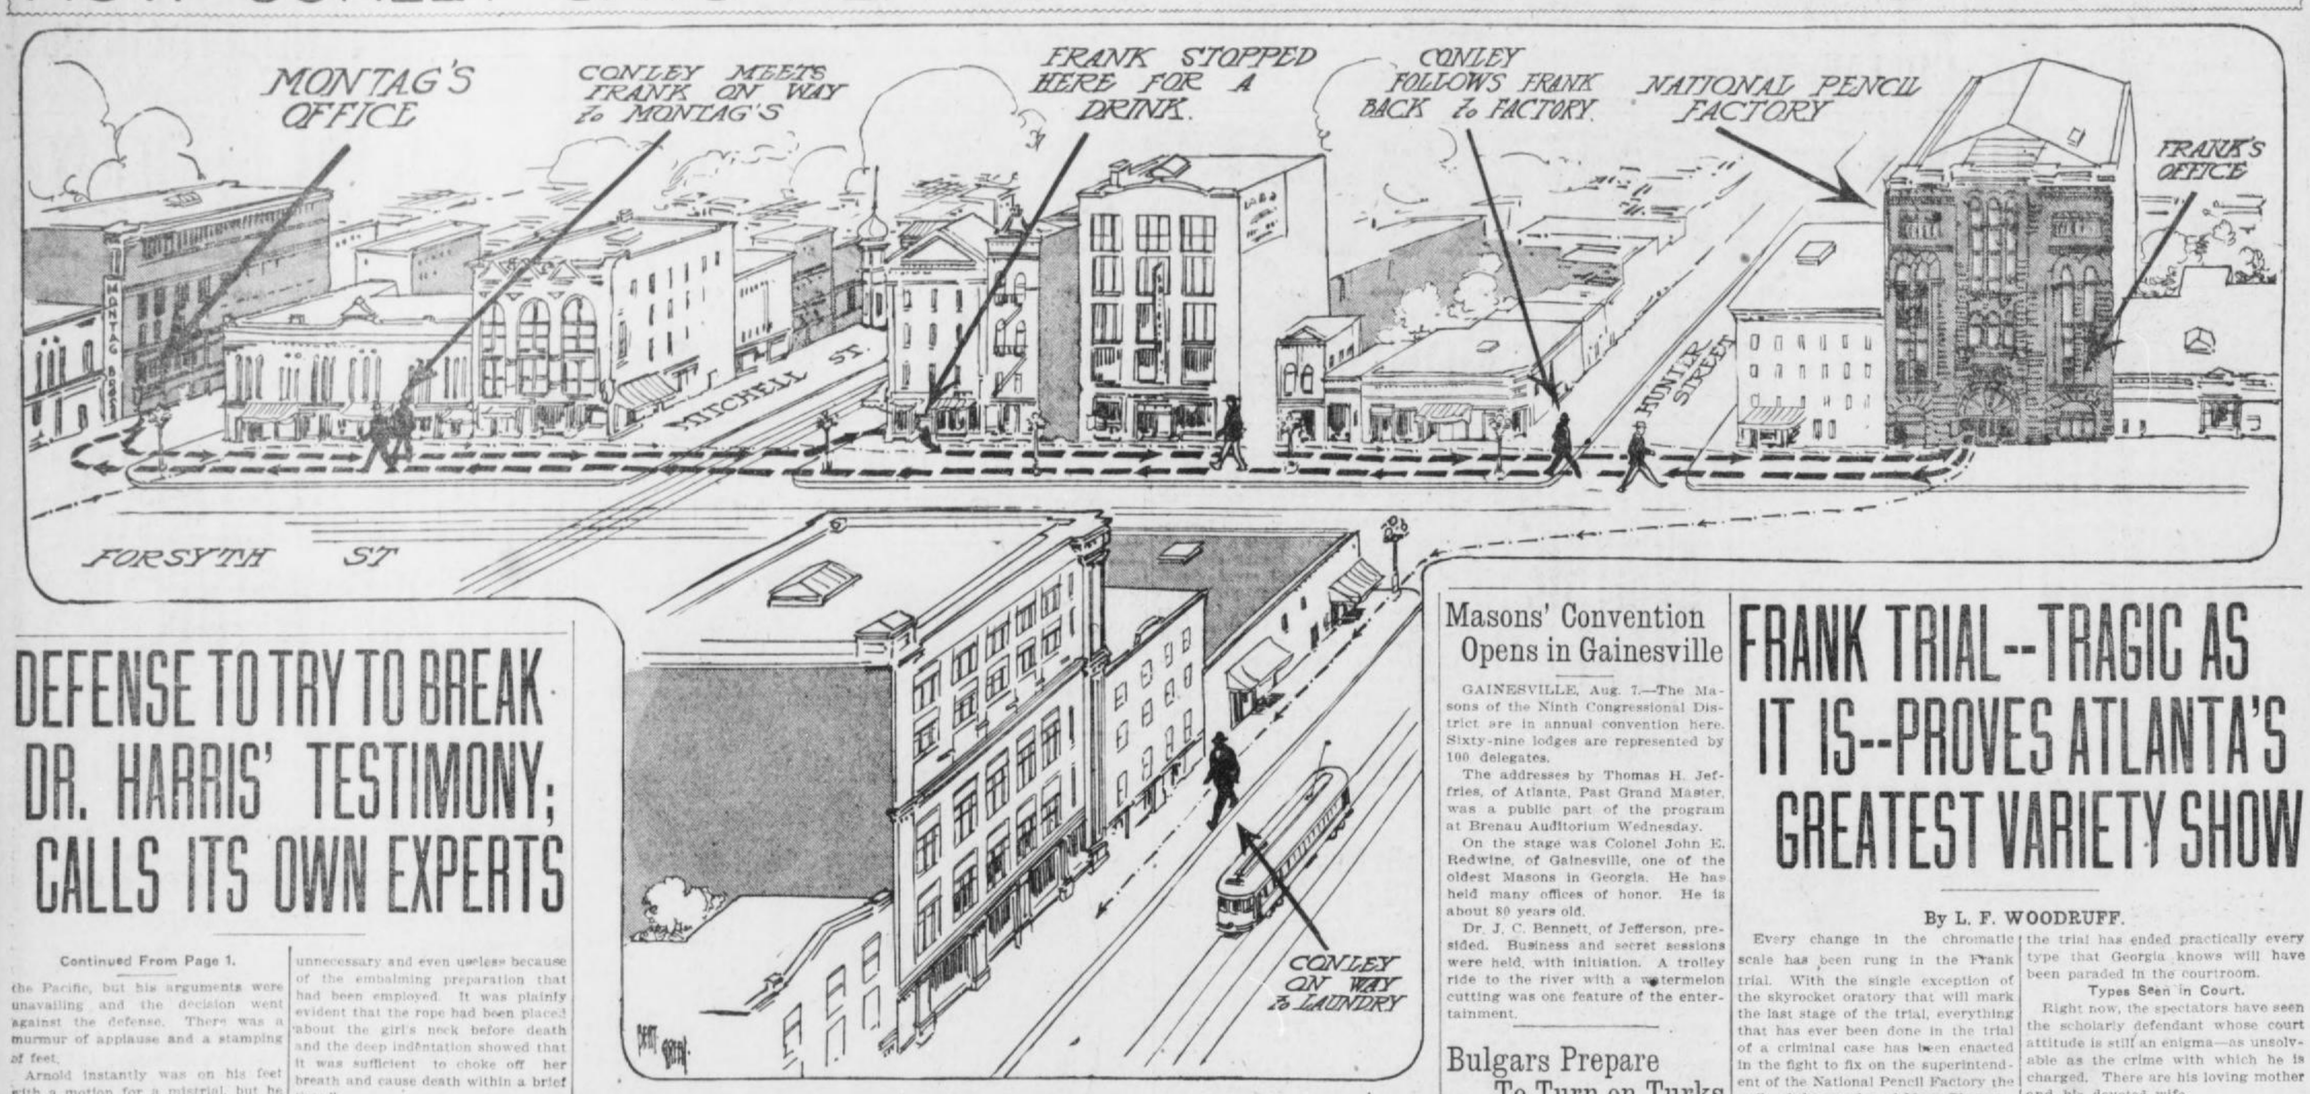

Practically the only addition he made to his story as it appeared in his direct examination was his declaration that while he was writing the murder notes Frank took the pencil out of his hand and then an instant later made him rub out the "s" he had written as he spelled out "negros." Conley said he wrote the note at first:

"A long tall black negros did this by hisself."

A long argument over the admissibility of Conley's testimony in regard to Frank's alleged conduct with women previous to the murder of Mary Phagan took place after the jury had been sent from the courtroom at noon. Court recessed before the arguments were concluded, and the debate was resumed in the afternoon.

Reuben Arnold cited opinions from courts in States from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but his arguments were unavailing and the decision went against the defense. There was a murmur of applause and a stamping of feet.

Arnold instantly was on his feet with a motion for a mistrial, but he realized at once that the jury was not present and withdrew the motion. He threatened, however, to make a motion that the courtroom be cleared if such a demonstration occurred again.

Dr. Harris Recalled.

Dr. Harris was recalled to complete the testimony which he was giving when he collapsed on the stand the Friday before. He repeated his assertion as to the time Mary Phagan came to her death after eating dinner at her home in Bellwood Saturday shortly before noon.

"I can say with almost absolute certainty," he declared, "that this little girl was killed within 30 or 40 minutes after she ate her meal that day."

He refused, under cross-examination, to change his testimony in the least in respect to the cause of death.

"It was easily apparent that strangulation was the cause," he declared.

"An examination of the lungs was unnecessary and even useless because of the embalming preparation that had been employed. It was plainly evident that the rope had been placed about the girl's neck before death and the deep indentation showed that it was sufficient to choke off her breath and cause death within a brief time."

Blow Not Fatal, He Says.

Although Arnold was unable to make the physician alter the statement of his opinion, he obtained an admission that a blow on the head sufficient to cause death might immediately precede garroting and still the same manifestations of strangulation exist.

Dr. Harris, however, did not believe that the blow on Mary Phagan's head was enough to cause death. He said that the blow was not severe and that, aside from a little spot of blood on the brain which could not have caused any pressure, the brain was entirely normal.

Attorney Arnold in the latter part of the afternoon session engaged in an exhaustive and highly technical examination of the witness in regard to the action of the digestive juices, the percentages, that were present in Mary Phagan's stomach and the tests that were made for poisons.

CHURCH HEALERS BEGIN FIGHT ON MEDICAL BILL

Christian Scientists Take Campaign Into the House After Defeat in Senate.

Christian Scientists have begun a campaign against those provisions of the Medical Practice bill regulating their methods for healing in Georgia. The Senate has passed the bill and it is expected to come before the House soon. An amendment to the bill framed by Christian Scientists failed in the Senate by three votes.

The amendment is worded similar to the one President Taft added to the Medical Practice bill for the Canal Zone at the request of Christian Scientists there.

Edward H. Carman, of Atlanta, president of the Christian Science State Publication Committee, has sent to Christian Scientists all over Georgia a letter which says in part:

"Get influential members of your church to go to three or four of their good friends—influential men—get them to write or wire their Representative in the lower House of the Legislature asking them to support the following amendment which will be offered to the Medical Practice bill when it comes up:

This act shall not apply to any person who ministers to or treats the sick or suffering by mental or spiritual means, whether gratuitously or for compensation, and without the use of any drug or material remedy.

Mr. Carman Thursday refused to comment on the subject, saying he preferred not to even have it known that Christian Scientists felt any anxiety over the passage of the bill.

It is understood, however, that if the bill is passed without the amendment Christian Scientists will at once declare it unconstitutional and will cite as their authority the Constitution of the United States.

Scholar Says Devil Designed New Styles

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Current fashions in women's gowns are incentives to immorality, according to Professor Allan Heben, of the University of Chicago School of Divinity, at the Sunday school institute in session at the university. The latest styles, he said, were the devil's designs.

"For any woman to be well-dressed to-day," he said, "is for her to be measurably harmful. Women have distracted attention from their faces to their forms. This is distinctly unfortunate."

WARREN, OHIO, Aug. 7.—While dreaming about a Balkan war battle, witnessed in a moving picture theater early in the evening, William H. Grace early to-day reached under his pillow, secured his loaded revolver and shot and killed himself.

Mrs. Grace said her husband had been muttering in his sleep about the Balkan war.

PLOT TO DEFEAT SLATON BILLS CHARGED

'Drys,' Incensed by Webb Bill Defeat, Reported Aligned With Anti-Tax Reformers.

consideration of it begun by the House, it would precipitate a "wet" and "dry" fight pure and simple. Debate would naturally wax fast and furious, and the members who oppose tax reform measures figured that the discussion of the bill would occupy the time of the House until adjournment, or at least create such a spirit of unrest and antagonism that the ranks of the tax reformers would be broken.

Then, when Speaker Burwell ruled the Kidd resolution out of order on the grounds that it asked a physical impossibility of the Temperance Committee, the strength of the combine was directed against the presiding officer of the House and his bills, and the bills of others that he favored, and the bills of the other members who opposed the resolution.

Controls Half of House.

The combine at present controls probably half the votes of the House, and renders impossible the passage of any measure that requires a two-thirds vote, and makes exceedingly difficult the passage of any measure requiring even a bare majority. Wednesday afternoon the combine displayed strength enough to defeat two of Speaker Burwell's bills, both constitutional amendments requiring a two-thirds majority to carry. They were administration bills, and the word has been passed among the members of the House that Governor Slaton favored them and desired that they be enacted. Both were overwhelmingly defeated.

The first bill to feel the strength of the combine was Burwell's measure submitting to the qualified voters of the State a proposition to amend the constitution so that the school levy of any one year should not exceed 2 1-2 mills, in addition to the regular school fund provided by the Constitution.

Two of His Measures Beaten.

Though the Speaker himself took the floor and explained the purpose of the bill—that it was merely one of a series of bills designed to place the State on a sound business basis—the bill was defeated by a vote of 106 to 67, lacking by 17 votes the necessary two-thirds majority. The other administration bill, a companion bill to the one defeated first, submitted a proposition that the annual levy for pensions should not exceed 1 1-2 mills. It was defeated, the vote being 79 to 79. It lacked 44 votes of having a two-thirds majority.

Unless the combine can be broken, the result will be that little or no legislation of importance will be enacted during the balance of the session. It means that the Legislature, having already attained the name by doing less than any Legislature in years, will go down in history as a Legislature that did absolutely nothing of importance.

Masons' Convention Opens in Gainesville

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 7.—The Masons of the Ninth Congressional District are in annual convention here. Sixty-nine lodges are represented by 100 delegates.

The addresses by Thomas H. Jeffries, of Atlanta, Past Grand Master, was a public part of the program at Brenau Auditorium Wednesday.

On the stage was Colonel John E. Redwine, of Gainesville, one of the oldest Masons in Georgia. He has held many offices of honor. He is about 80 years old.

Dr. J. C. Bennett, of Jefferson, presided. Business and secret sessions were held, with initiation. A trolley ride to the river with a watermelon cutting was one feature of the entertainment.

Bulgars Prepare To Turn on Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BUCHAREST, Aug. 7.—A third war is imminent in the Balkans, according to a report which was current here to-day during the final stages of the peace conference. A telegram from Sofia intimated strongly that Bulgaria would independently declare war on Turkey after her army is relieved of present operations against her former allies.

When to-day's session of the negotiations began notice was given that the powers would draft a resolution calling upon Turkey to give up Adrianople. This step is designed to prevent another war.

I. W. W. Leaders Plan Great Lawes Strike

DULUTH Aug. 7.—One of the most widespread strikes ever attempted by Great Lakes dock workers was in prospect to-day. Plans were being formed to extend the strike from all the docks in Duluth to the ore shipping points in Wisconsin and Michigan.

Industrial Workers of the World planning the strike, contemplated calling out the dock workers at Two Harbors, Mich.; Superior, Wis.; Ashland, Wis.; Marquette, Mich., and Escamba, Mich.

Abstainers Pray for Aid in Fighting Drink

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 7.—With a solemn high mass celebrated in the cathedral by Bishop McCort, the national convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America was opened here.

The scene was an impressive and significant one as the total abstainers knelt to ask a blessing upon their work in spreading the gospel of total abstinence from strong drink and combating the curse of drunkenness.

PARIS, Aug. 7.—The French Government was thrown into consternation to-day by the unprecedented feat of a submarine flotilla in penetrating the supposed impregnable harbor at Brest.

The fleet crawled through the water under the very guns of the great forts guarding the approach to the harbor and despite the use of every scientific device known to modern warfare, got through undetected.

FRANK TRIAL--TRAGIC AS IT IS--PROVES ATLANTA'S GREATEST VARIETY SHOW

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Every change in the chromatic scale has been rung in the Frank trial. With the single exception of the skyrocket oratory that will mark the last stage of the trial, everything that has ever been done in the trial of a criminal case has been enacted in the fight to fix on the superintendent of the National Pencil Factory the guilt of the murder of Mary Phagan.

There has been comedy. There has been tragedy. There has been periods as dull as a hookworm victim. There have been occasions as startling as the feat of a circus daredevil. There have been pathos and performances worthy of a clown. The somber has been mixed with the gay until the entire trial seems the work of a futurist artist who has had a hard night with the drinking cups before he started the painting.

Jim Conley was on the stand something like sixteen hours. His story was a ragtime composition, with the weirdest syncopations, and then came Dr. Harris right on his heels and gave evidence full of soundness and learnedness. To the spectators it seemed that they had just heard "Alexander's Ragtime Band" played and then a Bach fugue for an encore.

One Simple, Other Complex.

Conley's story was as simple in words as "Old Black Joe," while Dr. Harris' was as complex as a Wagnerian overture.

Jim Conley spoke in terms of the street, of the near-beer saloon, of the blind alley crap game. Dr. Harris spoke in the language of the laboratory and the library.

Jim Conley could not enunciate a word of more than one syllable. Dr. Harris was as polysyllabic as the word "heterogeneous." And the spectators had to gasp after the shift.

Conley's story, while it was as full of contradictions as a hive is of bees, was as easy to understand as a baby's "da-da" is to a fond parent. Dr. Harris evidence was as loaded with medical lore as a physician's library.

And, although it seems impossible, there is more still to come. Before the trial has ended practically every type that Georgia knows will have been paraded in the courtroom.

Types Seen in Court.

Right now, the spectators have seen the scholarly defendant whose court attitude is still an enigma—as unsolvable as the crime with which he is charged. There are his loving mother and his devoted wife.

Here is the massive figure of Luther Rosser, attacking every opponent with a battleax ferocity. Here is the erudite Arnold, with rapier thrusts to send in the death blow when the enemy is beaten down by the more direct assault of his ally.

Here is the young Solicitor, struggling against tremendous odds, upsetting tradition by fighting Rosser with his own weapons, burning Arnold with his own fire.

Here is his learned associate, quick to grasp a point as a drowning man is a straw.

Here are factory girls and business men. Here are the comical figure of Newt Lee and the sinister figure of Jim Conley. Here are the learned scientist and the sleuth hound.

It seems that everything has been shown, but still there will be more. It is impossible that Rosser and Arnold will not show something just as novel and bizarre as the State has presented.

Color for a Dickens.

There is Mincey to come with his startling story—Mincey, as typical of the red clay soil of the Cracker country as peanuts and watermelons; Mincey, so typically the country school teacher that he will have to carry a rod of hickory and a blueback speller to the stand to feel at home while he is giving his evidence.

And there will be a lot more.

Tragic as is the trial, it has been Atlanta's greatest vaudeville show. Dickens could have spent one week in Judge Roan's courtroom and written four novels around the types he saw listening to and playing parts in the drama that hovers around the life and death of a little girl of the factory.

JIM CONLEY, THE EBONY CHEVALIER OF CRIME, IS DARKTOWN'S OWN HERO

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Now that James Conley has been dismissed from the Frank trial, now that he has stood safely the fire of Mr. Rosser's most exhaustive grilling, what of him?

If Frank is convicted, Coiney subsequently will be convicted, no doubt, of being an accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder—and that will mean three years, at most, in the penitentiary.

After that—when the Frank trial, more or less, has been forgotten—Conley will be at liberty to come back amongst the people of Atlanta.

Not far from Five Points, a little due east along one of the big thoroughfares meeting there, there is a negro bootblack who now and then, when he is on the job, which frequently he isn't, gives me a "shine" so much to my liking that it brings me back on other days.

He is a sort of Jim Conley negro—at least, he has a smattering of education, an ingratiating air, and is polite, particularly when it pays him to be.

Quite without previous design, I stopped at this negro's stand Wednesday afternoon, and it was not long before he mentioned the famous trial. He having started the conversation, I asked him a few questions—and his replies, given herein in part, rather set me to thinking.

"Complimented on All Sides."

"George," I said—not that I know his name is George, but that it so happens I address negroes unknown of name that way—"what do your friends down on Decatur street think of Jim Conley's story over yonder in the big court? Rather clever, negro, Jim, eh?" said I to this bootblack.

"Well, boss, dat Mr. Rosser ain't made nothing on Jim yit, is he?" replied George.

I ventured the opinion that Mr. Rosser failed, at least, to make Jim out so many different kinds of a liar that his story might not stick in spots.

"Well, boss," continued my bureau of information, "dem niggers down on Decatur street, dey ain't talking of nothing but Jim Conley. He's de most talked about nigger anywhere, I guess. I hears him complimented on all sides!"

"In other words, Jim's a sort of hero along Decatur street nowadays?" said I.

"Yassir, dat's it—Jim's a hero. Niggers all talking about him. He done got de best of de smartest of 'um. Nobody can't fool er nigger like Jim!"

Hero Around "But In" Bar.

I presume, too, that something of the same condition prevails over on Peters street—particularly in the neighborhood of the "Butt In" bar over there.

You remember the "Butt In" boozorium in Peters street is the one wherein Conley filled up rather freely on beer, the morning of the Phagan murder, also on beer mixed with wine.

The "Butt In", it also will be recalled, is where Conley obtained a "double-header" beer—"double-headers" being the order of the day always in the "Butt In;" there being, perhaps, some subtly humorous connection between "Butt In" and "double-header!"

It Is Not Improbable.

It is not improbable that many a foaming "double-header" has been doumped into dusky citizens along the way of the "Butt In" of late—in honor of Jim, and the way he "done got de best of de smartest of um over dar in de big court!"

If Jim Conley ever gets back to Decatur street, and hereafter he be permitted to tread the primrose way of the "Butt In" bar over on Peters, in all probability the drinks will not cost him anything for many days.

The proprietor of the "Butt In" doubtless, right now would scorn to take Mr. Conley's honest money—the violent presumption being that Jim ever had, or ever will have, that kind of money—even for "double-headers."

Jim has just passed through the fire. And he got through, his reputation more or less damaged for truthfulness, to be sure, but not utterly shattered beyond patching up in such wise that it might be worked one more time, at least, if necessary.

"Of Such Is Negro's Heaven."

True, Conley already had been in jail seven times that he admits of, and several times more that he can not recall precisely, and that had served to make him something of a hero in darkest Darktown; but Jim's involuntary residence in durance vile heretofore has been in police circles and mere county chaingangs exclusively. So that didn't make him a particularly big hero—albeit it made him a hero not altogether to be sneezed at!

Now, however, Jim has been in "de big court," tangled all up in a murder case, suspected by some of being a principal to the murder, indeed, but cleverly side-stepping that too deadly peril—and his name has been in all the newspapers hundreds of times, and his picture dozens of times, and before he gets through with it, he will be decorated by the State's majesty, in stripes—but the latter not so long that it will seriously inconvenience anybody, particularly Jim!

All in all, Jim's real hero in darkest Darktown, at last—a real ebony chevalier of crime—and those brethren who frequent the "Butt Ins" and the "Butt Outs," and booze dispensaries of like persuasion, will bow down and worship Jim—for in their philosophy of such as Jim is the Decatur street "kingdom of heaven."

Ruling Generally Approved.

The general impression seems to be that Judge Roan did the right thing in permitting the Conley story to go to the jury in its entirety, inasmuch as it had gone in deadly part, anyway.

Perhaps the evidence fixing upon Leo Frank another crime than the one he stands charged with under the present indictment was, primarily, inadmissible, but there was no way to relieve the jury of the charge Conley made, and it would have been hardly fair either to the jury, the court and even to the defendant, to cut the story off there.

If the State is able to sustain its terrible charge against Frank, it perhaps is common sense now to let it proceed t othe corroborating of Conley, if it can corroborate him.

To have left Conley's charge neither contradicted nor corroborated—that would merely hace resulted in its probable corroroboration in the minds of the public(if not elsewhere.

The things Conley said to the Frank jury can not be said and then forgotten.

It would have been folly to have ASKED the jury to forget—it would have been imposing upon it an impossible mental task.

Other Charge as Serious.

If it so be that error was committed in not ruling out the story, a new trial will be granted, on appeal, in the event of Frank's conviction—and the trial next time undoubtedly will proceed without this particular evidence in.

The State can, if it fails to sustain eventually its charge of murder, still move against Frank, if it so elects, in the other direction—which crime, under the Code, is quite as serious as murder.

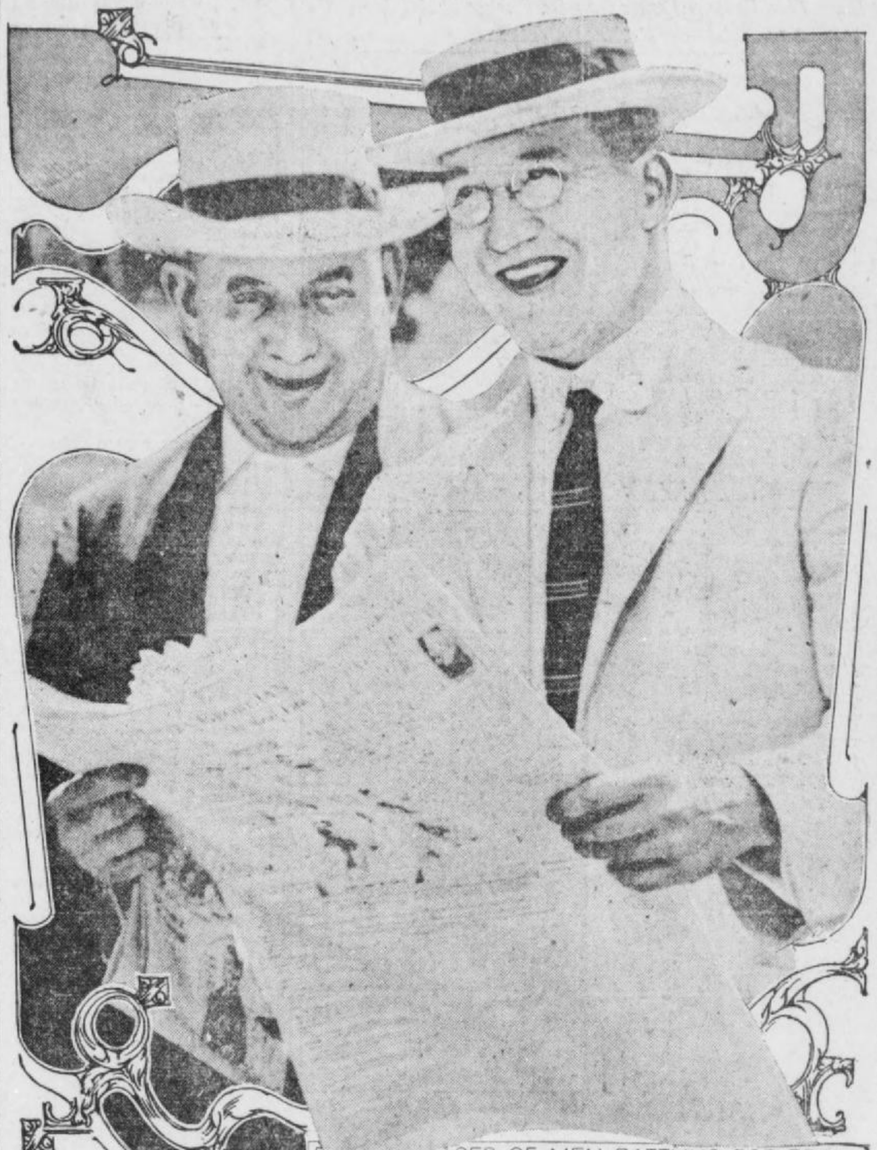

One may feel the injustice of flinging at Frank, while on trial for murder, another capital charge—still, since the additional charge was admitted, with protest, as an original proposition few people will contend strenuously that the tSate should not be permitted to proceed t the conclusion of a line of evidence begun without protest.

I have heard Judge Roan's ruling discussed about town last night, and to-day, and I heard few who find fault in it.

Indeed, as matter of simple justice to Frank, no less than to the State—and it will not do to forget that the State has large rights at stake in this matter—it seems common sense and elementary justice that the State, having made its awful charge, be required either to corroborate it or not.

That apepars to be the public attitude in the matter.

AMERICANS SHOT IN SACKING OF DURANGO

Stores Belonging to Foreigners Burned by Rebels—Women and Girls Attacked.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—M. A. Leach, a business man of San Francisco, told Secretary of State Bryan to-day a thrilling story of the sacking of the city of Durango by Revolutionists on June 18, which he witnessed.

The entire city was looted, he says, and German, French and American stores were burned, entailing a property loss of more than $5,000,000.

Scores of Mexicans were shot down and dragged through the streets.

Roger Palmer, an Englishman, employed by the Mexican National Railway, was killed because he failed to open a safe.

Carlos Bombrandis, mining man, and L. W. Elder, both Americans, were wounded by a bomb used to force the doors of the McDonald Institute, where many of the foreigners had assembled for protection.

H. W. Stepp, an American civil engineer, was shot through the leg because he failed to deliver 500 pesos he did not have.

Leach says a number of women sought safety in the archbishop's palace but the bishop was taken prisoner and held for ransom of half a million pesos. Hundreds of women and girls were outraged.

'13' Is Happy Omen to Miss Wilson as Bride

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Lovers of the mystic have discovered the letters in the name of Miss Jessie Wilson's fiance, Francis B. Sayre, number thirteen. Therefore, Miss Wilson will not only be the daughter of the "Lucky Thirteen President," and the thirteenth White House bride, but have as a husband a man about whose career thirteen appears an alluring halo.

Washington society hopes the wedding will take place November 13. It may be stated Miss Wilson will not have thirteen bridesmaids.

ECZEMA ITCHED AND BURNED

On Face and Head. Was Very Disfigured. Hair Fell Out. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Falmouth, Ky. — "Two years ago I was troubled with skin and scalp troubles. I would have pimples that would break out and form sores on my face and head with terrible itching. The eczema on my face and head itched and burned and when I scratched it, it made sores and I was very disfigured for the time being. My head became so sore I could not touch it with a comb; it became a mass of sores. My hair fell out gradually.

"After trying several remedies without much benefit a friend that had been cured by Cuticura Soap and Ointment told me and I decided to try them. I was afflicted about a year before I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and after using them three weeks I was getting better and in less than three months, after using eight cakes of Cuticura Soap and five boxes of Cuticura Ointment, I was completely cured of eczema." (Signed) Frank Vastine, Dec. 12, 1912.

If you wish a skin clear of pimples, blackheads and other annoying eruptions, hands soft and white, hair live and glossy, and scalp free from dandruff and itching, begin to-day the regular use of Cuticura Soap for the toilet, bath and shampoo, assisted by occasional light applications of Cuticura Ointment. No other method is so agreeable or economical. Sold everywhere. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"WITH no prices on the menu!" repeated Helen in amazement. "Then they can charge us anything they please?"

"That's the idea. Most of the smart places in Paris never price their food. They're supposed to cater to people who are concerned only with the quality of the dishes—not with the price."

"But, Warren, WE don't want to go to such a place! I'd be so worried about what the check was going to be—I couldn't eat a thing."

"Well we're going to one right now for dinner—Cafe D'Armenonville. One of the show places in the Bois. You'll see more smart Parisians there than you've seen yet. While we're over here we're going to do Paris. What difference does a few dollars make one way or the other?"

"But, dear, I'm not dressed for a pretentious place."

"Well, put on something light then—anything will do. They don't expect Americans to dress much. They think we all come from a sort of wild and woolly West. All they want is our money."

"Well, I don't think we've got so much," laughed Helen. "Not enough to go to a place where they don't price their food."

"Guess we can stand it for once. Hurry up—it's almost 7."

A little later they left the hotel. Outside Warren raised his cane at a passing taxi.

Warren Determined.

"Of course we've got to have a cab," impatiently, as Helen made her usual protest. "It's the only way you can get to that place. Now, you leave this to me. We're going to Armenonville's to-night, and we're going to do the thing right. Hang the expense!"

When Warren started out in this spirit Helen knew it was useless to try to curb him. He was in the mood to spend money—and he was going to spend it. She leaned back in the cab with a sigh of resignation.

But as this was Helen's first drive through the Champs Elysees, she soon forgot everything else in the beauty of the scene.

Under the trees, along the drive, were chairs and tables, mostly deserted now. But from the gay gowns of the few people who still lingered Helen could imagine what it must have been an hour earlier.

"I'll not have the time, but you ought to come out to the Bois some afternoon for tea," suggested Warren. "Nothing like it in the world. There's Armenonville's through there," pointing to a mass of brilliant lights glimmering through a grove of trees.

Cabs, taxies and victorias were lined up three and four abreast in the wide graveled driveways before this famous restaurant.

"But we're not going to keep this taxi!" asked Helen anxiously, as they waited their turn to draw up before the entrance.

"That's just what we're going to do," snapped Warren. "We'll not take any chances of getting one when we're through."

To order dinner from an unpriced menu, and to feel that a taxi was industriously ticking up the francs—the evening held little prospect of pleasure for Helen.

Warren led the way through the spacious hallway to the garden beyond. The place was like fairyland, with banks of red geraniums, a gleaming fountain, and ropes of colored lights festooned through trees and shrubbery. There must have been a hundred or more tables on the lawn, yet all were taken, and a group of people were waiting.

"You stay here." Warren strode off determinedly after a headwaiter.

Helen's gaze followed him anxiously. She saw him slip some money into the hand of the suave Frenchman, and a moment later they were being seated at one of the few tables that had been "reserved."

"Warren, I thought you didn't believe in bribing headwaiters?"

"Well, you've got to do it here. This is a show place, I tell you, and you've got to come across. We'd have stood there all night without a table if I hadn't forked up."

Helen's first concern was in the menu—a large card with a fantastically decorated border of lobsters and crabs. She had hoped all along that Warren was wrong and that the prices would be given, but there was not a single figure. This bill of fare was to show only what you could get—not what you would have to pay for it.

"Oh, dear, just order one or two things! I'm not very hungry—and you had luncheon, didn't you?"

But Warren only glowered at her, and gave his order to the waiter by checking off with his pencil some of the dishes with the longest and, as Helen thought, most expensive looking French names.

"Now, see here," when the waiter had gone, "this isn't so bad as you think. The theory of this is that they charge in proportion to what you order. For instance, if you only have a roast and a salad, you pay more proportionately for those two dishes than you would if you had four or five. That's fair enough."

"Well, if that's their method, then why don't they put down the prices and deduct a certain percentage when you order a number of things? Wouldn't that be a good idea for any restaurant? Think how much more people would order if they felt they were getting a discount."

"Huh! Sort of on the principle of five cents apiece, six for a quarter!" grinned Warren.

"But don't you see people WOULD order more," insisted Helen, growing enthusiastic over her idea. "I'm sure any of the big New York restaurants would coin money on that plan."

"Better try to sell 'em the idea when you get back," scoffed Warren. "They might pay you something for it."

"Well, they might!" defiantly.

Just then a striking beauty, in a clinging white gown and a drooping leghorn hat with red poppies, swept by, leaving a trail of perfume.

"Dear, some of the gowns ARE beautiful," mused Helen, now giving herself up to a study of the place.

A Pretty Girl.

"Not a bad-looking girl over there in yellow," commented Warren.

"I was just going to speak of her—that's the most WONDERFUL gown!"

The girl was dark and slender, with heavy brown hair drawn low into a simple coil on her neck. Her dress was of pale yellow chiffon, with brown fringe; her hat of the same chiffon was wreathed with yellow-petaled, brown-eyed daisies, and the streamers of brown velvet ribbon were knotted under her chin.

Most of the hats had either ties or streamers, with the trimming placed at some daring angle. While they must have looked very extreme in the shop windows, they were charming on the women who wore them.

"After all, the French women DO know how to wear their clothes."

"The ones you see here ought to," was Warren's comment. "That's about their only job."

"Dear, I haven't any idea what I'm eating," Helen exclaimed suddenly.

"Well, it's good, isn't it? That's sweetbread with truffles and wine sauce, en casserole—one of their specialties here. Only place in Paris you can get it like this."

But to Helen the food was always secondary to the atmosphere of the place and the people. And now she absent-mindedly ate her dinner, intent upon the scene about her.

"A woman never has any palate," grumbled Warren. "This dish is a work of art. There's a smoothness and flavor to this sauce that you wouldn't get anywhere else in the world. But you don't appreciate it! A dinner like this is wasted on any woman."

"Why, dear, that isn't fair," indignantly. "I think it's delicious, and I'm eating every bit of it."

A Treat.

"Oh, you're eating it, but might as well be eating corned beef hash in a dairy lunch room. I tell you this is a treat! No wonder the chef who made that sauce didn't want a price put on it. You can't price a thing like that any more than you can price a rare picture," enthused Warren, growing eloquent under the influence of the vintage wine.

Even Helen forgot her dread of the check and became enthusiastic when the waiter served the fruits au champagne. It was a tall glass dish of cut fruit, wonderful strawberries, cherries, pineapples and peaches floating in an iced syrup of blended wines and cordials.

When later the check was brought face down on a plate, instinctively Helen leaned forward to see the total. But Warren took it up quickly, glanced over the items, drew a crisp note from his wallet and laid it over the check. Helen was not familiar enough with French money to know the amount of the note, nor could she tell by the change returned.

"Dear, how much was that check?" unable to keep back the question.

"Well, I've paid it, haven't I? And it was a blamed good dinner. Now we'll have no harangues over expenses this evening. Come on—let's see if we can find that cab."

The cab! Helen had wholly forgotten that the cab was waiting—and they had been there almost three hours!

Warren located their driver and in a few moments they were whirling back through the Champs Elysees, now more beautiful than ever with the lights gleaming through the dark trees, and with every now and then a glimpse of the Seine and its jeweled bridges.

But the charm of all this was lost on Helen. She was not leaning back and enjoying the beauty of the drive. Instead she was sitting bolt upright, every muscle strained, as she tensely tried to figure out how much that dinner and the three hours' wait of the cab must have cost.

LIFE'S STRUGGLE WITH ILLNESS

Miss Stewart Tells How She Suffered from 16 to 45 years old—How Finally Cured.

EUPHEMIA, OHIO.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister, and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicine was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old, and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I can not tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off every month, and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blessed with excellent health for a woman of my age, and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse, and being wholly self-supporting I can not overestimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing since I was 52 years old. I have recommended the Compound to many with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss Evelyn Adelia Stewart, Euphemia, Ohio.

The Brighter Side of Turkey Trotting

An Expert's Advice of How This Famous Dance Can Be Purged of All Objectionable Features.

(Top picture) "This is a dance where shoulders count."

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

THE new school of turkey trotting has brought into existence two groups of rabid partisans—those who do the dance and know how jolly is the dancing, and those who look on and see how shocking is the prancing. And meanwhile turkey trotting is so earnestly done that it seems in a fair way to be done to death—and a fallow field for humorists will thus become sterile and barren of little jokes like the famous, "She is more trotted against than trotting."

In our age of specialization, turkey trotting is not sufficiently specialized, and every little freak step that wriggles its way into life masquerades under the one name or that of some barnyard or menageric relative. There is a brighter side to turkey trotting; there is a possibility of having it become a dance as well regulated as the two-step, and yet free to express the true dancing joy-of-living of the partners who merrily whirl through its mazes.

For confirmation of this theory, while in New York I went to Leon Errol, the clever originator of "turkish trottishness," one of the features of the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1913," and with clever Stella Chatelaine, the partner of dances and of life to help him, Mr. Errol showed me how you should and how you shouldn't do the "trot."

Correct Position.

"Here is the correct position for learning the trot," said Mr. Errol, illustrating the while. "The girl places her hands on the shoulders of her partner. The man places one hand under the elbow of his partner and his bent elbow under her other arm. In this position every sway of a partner who knows the dance throws the shoulders of the other partner into the proper swing; not a wriggle or a suggestive movement, but the swaying to music that is the natural expression used in all dances that are a real expression of joy set to music instead of conventional ballroom steps.

"If you want to see the art of dancing, naturally you go to see Genee, and you enjoy without any thought of spending years in trying to master the art of dancing as she has done.

"But when you go to see the modern, up-to-date dancing of the stage you have a weather eye on learning to do it, too—and springing a new step at the next cabaret you favor. Here are three things to remember about stage dancing—it consists of tempo, a trick step and a bit of acting to catch the eye. In comedy dancing like mine, the tempo is very quick—whirlingly rapid without a break in its movements, that fairly pile up on top of one another. Then there is the trick step worked out to be as different as possible, and finally the comic element to make it go with the audience.

Allow For Freedom.

"The amateur turkey trotter must copy the first two parts of stage turkey trotting, and avoid the acting like grim death.

"Don't play to the gallery—don't do an exaggerated step and fairly revel in the idea that the people are looking at you in admiring wonder. They are probably wondering all right—how you can be so vulgar or so foolish.

"Take a refined position that leaves at least a foot of space between the partners and allow for freedom of motion. Holding your partner too closely not only makes the dance suggestive, and gives too much chance to the critical enemies of turkey trotting to get in their work, but makes it impossible for the amateur to dance with the graceful free sway that is the chief beauty of turkey trotting.

"Then with a clear picture in your mind of what you want to do, work out a step. Sometimes Miss Chatelaine and I see little children dancing to an organ grinder's tunes on the streets—that suggests a step—and we may spend as much as two hours in working out the one step.

"Turkey trotting demands a free yet firm position that lets the partners work together; an absolute feeling for time, and ability to follow the music without a break; the utmost patience in working out a step, and ability and imagination to work out little trick steps that will add to the mere sway that is the basis of all turkey trotting and allied dances.

"We must always keep in mind that this is a dance in which shoulders count. In the now sedate waltz, the position of arm-around-waist used to be considered rather risque—well, you don't have to assume that position if you are going to trot correctly. The position I suggest—girl's arms on man's shoulders, and man's arms used as levers under girl's elbows, is staid, respectable and guaranteed to produce graceful rhythmical trotting.

"As in other departments of life, and dancing," concluded Mr. Errol, "there is a right way and there is a wrong way. But the right way to turkey trot is pleasing to observe and pleasing to do. If the amateur will assume the position I teach and practice one step at a time patiently and in faithful effort to keep in perfect rhythm with the music, he will soon find himself able to do a modern dance without a shade of vulgarity and without a trace of amateurish ill-at-easeness."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WE got a other new white hired gurl, her naim is Vera. Ma sed it is a pritty naim, but I think it is a funny naim for a hired gurl. Hired gurls used to be called Bridget & Nora & thay was good hired gurls, too. But things is different now. The last three hired gurls we had was Marguerite & Sylvia & Belladonna, & now we have Vera. She is vary pritty. Pa sed she had dreemy eyes & Ma sed it was from sleeping too sound that her eyes was dreemy.

Vera is riteing a play. She wuddent tell Pa & Ma that she was riteing it, but she toald me so I promised her that I wuddent say a word to Pa & Ma. The naim of the play is Alone in Milledgeville, & it tells about a butiful young gurl that fell in luv with a keeper in the Milledgeville insane asilum. He was a vilyun. The gurl goes to Milledgeville to see him beekaus he had toald her that he owned a grate big estate. He took the gurl to the asilum & toald her that all the insane peepul there was his servants. She beleeved him at first and then the horribel truth dawned on her. Then she sed in poetry to the vilyun:

You have me at yure mercy here
Of that there ain't no doubt;
I think I shall go bughouse, deer,
If you don't git me out.
I'd rather be a peasant's bride
& housekeep in a hut
Than wed a chump in this here dump
& get to be a nut.

Then Vera toald me that finished the first act. The curtain goes down wen she is reading them lines to the vilyun. The second act is the saim as the first, in the asilum. One of the pashunts there isent crazy at all, he is a rich young man wich is being kep in there so his relatives can git all his munny. He falls in luv with the poor gurl wich is being held thare by the vilyun & tells her that they will find some way to escape. She looked up into his eyes & reesited a other peece of poetry. She was all the time reesiting poetry she rote, Vera toald me. Vera sed that the longer the heroine stayed in the asilum the moar poetry she rote. She looked up into the eyes of the hero & reesited.

Oh yes, I will fly away with you
And marry you for luv.
Yure munny all can stay with you,
I have no use for it, duv.
But what if you mite be insane
& not what you represent?
Then to this place I wud return
& be sorry I ever had went.

If you are realy sane, my own,
Our lives will pleasant be,
But if sum nite I'd heer you groan
I'd hide away from thee.
It is a awful, haunting feer
To feer one's husband is dippy,
& if I ever see you thus
I'll jump in the Mississippi.

The last act isent finished yet, Vera toald me. She is pritty smart for a hired gurl. She says wen she gits rich I can marry her wen I grow up.

Excused.

Bob—Will you take a ticket in this raffle for a poor widow——

Simp—Nix. I wouldn't have any use for a poor widow if I won.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

NOT WORTH YOUR WORRY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and recently met a young man about the same age. He made quite an impression upon me and we have met by appointment a few times. Last week I happened to misunderstand a date the young man made in his letter and disappointed him. Now he is angry, and although I tried to explain the matter to him, he will not believe my excuse. I am quite heartbroken over it. RAY.

Your humble attitude doesn't do you credit. You did no wrong and owed neither apology nor explanation. Please, for your own sake, let the matter end here, and if he attempts to see you, refuse.

THERE COULD BE NO OBJECTION.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 16, and have a friend two years my senior. His birthday is quite near and I would like to know if it is proper for me to send him a birthday card, so as to let him know I think of him. ANXIOUS.

A cordial little note, wishing him many happy returns, will prove your friendship.

You are so young; will you promise me to regard no man as more than a friend for a few years longer?

CERTAINLY NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am deeply in love with a young man 21 years old. I meet him often and he gives me hints that he loves me, but he also tells me he hasn't courage to propose. Now please tell me how I should act. Should I tell him that I love him or not? HILDA.

The girl worth having is worth asking for. Tell him so the next time he hints. Also hint that there are other men not quite so slow. But save your avowal of love until he has earned it.

THE DIFFERENCE IMMATERIAL.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a girl four years my senior, which difference in our ages seems to stand between us. I have tried in every way possible to convince her of my love, but so far have not succeeded. I do not believe I can ever be happy without her. E.

You do not state your age. If you are old enough to marry, her four years seniority should be no bar.

I am convinced she refuses you because she does not love you. Be persistent in your devotion, and if that does not melt her heart, try giving your atention to some other girl.

CERTAINLY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am eighteen and am keeping company with a young man for the past year. Now this young man's folks live out of town and invited me to their home. Should I accept their invitation? A. B. S.

If the invitation is from his mother I would have you accept by all means. It will mean a great deal to your future happiness to get on good terms with them, and the visit may give you an enlightening view of your lover. I hope it will prove favorable.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

On Fancy's Wings.

A sweet young thing in white fluttered toward the aeroplane mechanic, and resolutely took possession of him, asking all those usual senseless questions that now have become the common lot of aviators and their assistants.

But this particular assistant—and who can wonder; was not the sweet young thing in white a damsel quite adorable?—strove bravely to satisfy the curiosity of his fair inquirer; and explained with remarkable clearness the working of a monoplane.

Still, there is a limit even to the patience shown by susceptible man toward charming maid.

"Tell me," inquired the sweet young thing in white, "what happens when your engine stops in the air? Can't you come down?"

"That's just the trouble," sighed the mechanic, mastered by his sense of the ridiculous. "D'you know, there are a dozen or so airmen now stranded above France. Their engines have stopped; they can't get down, and they are starving to death!"

Later she learned the truth. So ended what might have been a romance.

.:. One Woman's Story .:.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XV.

THERE is a numbing quality to all sudden and great sorrow. Psychologists tell us that the mind is so dazed by the shock of grief that it can not grasp the fearful truth in all its details. Whatever causes this partial insensibility, we are thankful for it.

Mary Danforth was like one stunned during the days that followed her father's death. She listened in stony silence while the facts of his seizure were related to her. He had come up from the office, and after dinner dressed to go to her graduation exercises, but had dropped to the floor as he started to leave the apartment, and in five minutes stopped breathing. He had never regained consciousness.

This was no time for subterfuges, and Mrs. Danforth was soon made acquainted with the state of affairs between her daughter and Gordon Craig. She was told that no formal engagement existed, but that the pair loved each other and were going to wait for each other until such time as they were ready to marry. The bereaved wife, made suddenly old by the great sorrow of her life, clung to the young man, and sobbed out her woe and her trust in him.

"I have found a son," she said at last. "God bless you, dear boy!"

Craig bent his tall head to kiss her pale cheek. "I shall try to be worthy of your daughter," he whispered, "and of your confidence in me."

He remained in New York for a week. The changes in his business, of which he told Mary, would keep him from the road hereafter, another man having been deputed to travel for his firm, while he was to remain at the home office.

"Hard times have hit us as well as the rest of the world," he said regretfully, "and matters do not look as bright as they did. But I shall stick to one job and shall hope for a salary that will warrant my marrying in a year or two. Heaven speed the time!"

And Mary was not ashamed to add a sincere "Amen!" to this hope.

It was on the day after the funeral that the mother and the daughter learned that, added to the loss of husband and father, another trouble had befallen them. Investigation of Mr. Danforth's affairs brought to light the fact that his business was in a desperate condition and that he had lived right up to his income. His lawyer told the two women the painful truth that when the funeral expenses were paid and a few bills that Mr. Danforth had contracted were settled the pair would be well-nigh penniless except for a small life insurance the deceased had carried in favor of his wife.

"Your husband took that Western trip on the chance of saving the day," the lawyer explained to the widow. "He hoped to put a business deal through out there, but he failed. I think the disappointment, coupled with the dread of what was before him, hastened his death."

"He did it all for us," Mary told Craig. "He lived just to make us happy. He wanted us to have a pretty home and all that we wanted, and he could not bear to tell us that we must part with these things. Now I can see why he was taken from us. It would have broken his heart had he lived to see us lose what we have been accustomed to."

Mary spoke firmly, yet gently. "I am going to work, mother," she asserted. "No, do not look distressed at the idea! It is what father would wish—what he always told me I must be prepared to do if the need arose."

"It will not be for long," Craig reminded the mother. "I hope that matters will go so well with me that I can come for you and Mary soon. Then we three will have a little home of our own."

"I could not accept it even from Gordon," remarked Mrs. Danforth later to her daughter, "if I did not have that insurance money of my own."

The daughter said nothing. She could not bear to tell her unsophisticated mother what a little way the money, of which she spoke so confidently, would go. The income from it would not support one woman, no matter how economical she might be, and the girl knew the principal would be drawn upon gradually until it was all gone. And then?

"I will be able to support her myself," she thought bravely. "She shall use as little of her own money as possible. I would not want her to be entirely dependent upon Gordon—even though he is willing to care for her. I must get to work at once."

The place she secured was not a brilliant one, but she had not expected that it would be. She was engaged as stenographer and typewriter to a kindly, middle-aged real estate agent. He had a small office and her salary matched the office. But what else could a beginner hope for?

Thus it came about that when Gordon Craig turned his face westward again he knew that the girl he loved was the sole dependence of her widowed mother. His heart ached when he remembered that the pretty home must be given up, and the handsome furniture sold—except such pieces as the two lonely women would need to furnish the tiny flat they would take in an unfashionable part of town. He longed to stay and help them.

"But my job won't wait for me!" he muttered with a bitter sign. "If I were only rich!"

Which exclamation is such a common one that it is hardly worth recording.

Barber—Poor Jim has been sent to an asylum.

Victim (in the chair)—Who is Jim?

"Jim is my twin brother, sir. Jim has long been brooding over the hard times, an' I suppose he finally got crazy."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. He and me has worked side by side for years, and we were so alike we couldn't tell each other apart. We both brooded, too. No money in this business now."

"What's the reason?"

"Prices too low. Unless a customer takes a shampoo it doesn't pay to shave or hair-cut. Poor Jim! I caught him trying to cut a customer's throat because he refused a shampoo, so I had to have the poor fellow locked up. Makes me sad. Sometimes I feel sorry I didn't let him slash all he wanted to. It might have saved his reason. Shampoo, sir?"

"Yes!"

It was Pat's first day in the sawmill, and his duties consisted of working the circular saw. The foreman directed him as to its use, then left him in order to attend to some pressing matter. Having occasion, however, to pass Pat's way again, he was somewhat annoyed to see him standing idly surveying his hand.

"Well, what's wrong?" he said sharply.

"Sure and begorra I've lost a finger," replied Pat.

"How did it happen?" inquired the foreman.

"Sure, I was jist doin' like this when—bejabbers! There's anither one off!"

The daughter of the house had just returned from a visit to her cousins, during which she had become engaged to a rising young man whom she had met at the home of her relatives. To her mother she was extolling the virtues of her intended.

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "he's just grand! So square, so upright, so highly polished. Why, even in his notes there is such a sympathetic tone that sometimes I wonder if I am not reading the music of the gods!"

"Mercy's sake, child!" interrupted mother, "are you talking about a young man or a piano?"

Daysey Mayme And Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE two pillow cushions, which, with the Honorable Lysander John Appleton, Kin Commissioner General of the United States, compose the Pillow Cushion Club, sat stiff, upright and unbending in their corners, waiting for the meeting to begin.

It was a joy for the speaker of the evening to look at them. So well-stuffed, so self-satisfied, so blank of expression; they looked like women whose sole ambition in life is to keep their figures, and who place all their hope in a straight-front corset.

Lysander John gave them an encouraging smile. "My wife and daughter," he said, "who spend most of their time from home reading papers on How to Make Home Life Beautiful, never had audiences more intelligent and appreciative than mine. Ladies, I thank you!

"I have delved into Emerson, I have wandered through Carlyle, and I have failed to find any problems more serious than those I will submit tonight. As members of the Pillow Cushion Club we must grapple with these questions. We must never again shirk our share of the burden of the world's progress.

"Doubt, my dear audience, if my wife and daughter at any of their various clubs in the past month have wrestled with more vital questions than those I will lay before you this evening.

"First. How soon after an article is borrowed is it proper to go over with an excuse demandin- its return?

"If a friend buys an automobile can it be construed as a gentle hint if you buy yourself an autromobile coat?

"When a man's family consists of himself and wife, and he buys a four-passenger car, does that indicate a kind, generous disposition, or a desire to escape being bored to death by riding alone with his wife?

"If either must be slighted in a meal, the soup or the pudding, which should it be? In other words, is it wiser to smooth down the bristles of temperamental man by starting him feeling good at a meal, or to finish him feeling satisfied?

"Is it economical and proper these hard times to bury a woman's false hair with her, when, with a little change in the color, her husband's next wife might wear it?

"My next problem," he concluded, "is one which will not permit of our speedy adjournment if we attempt to solve it. It is this: How many different ways are there for a man to act the fool?"

'Phone or Wire.

The following letter appears in a Boston newspaper:

Sir—I called at your editorial rooms yesterday, entering the outer chamber. The boy was absent. On the door, which was closed, leading to the sanctum sanctorium, was a sign, "No Admittance." On the wall next to the door was another sign, "No Loitering Here." The question is, what's a feller to do? F. H. L.

"I hear you're going to marry Archie Bluebloud, Djana. Is it true?" asked one young society woman of another.

"Marry him? I should think not! What on earth could I do with the man? He can't ride, he can't play tennis, golf, nor, for that matter, can he even drive a motor car!"

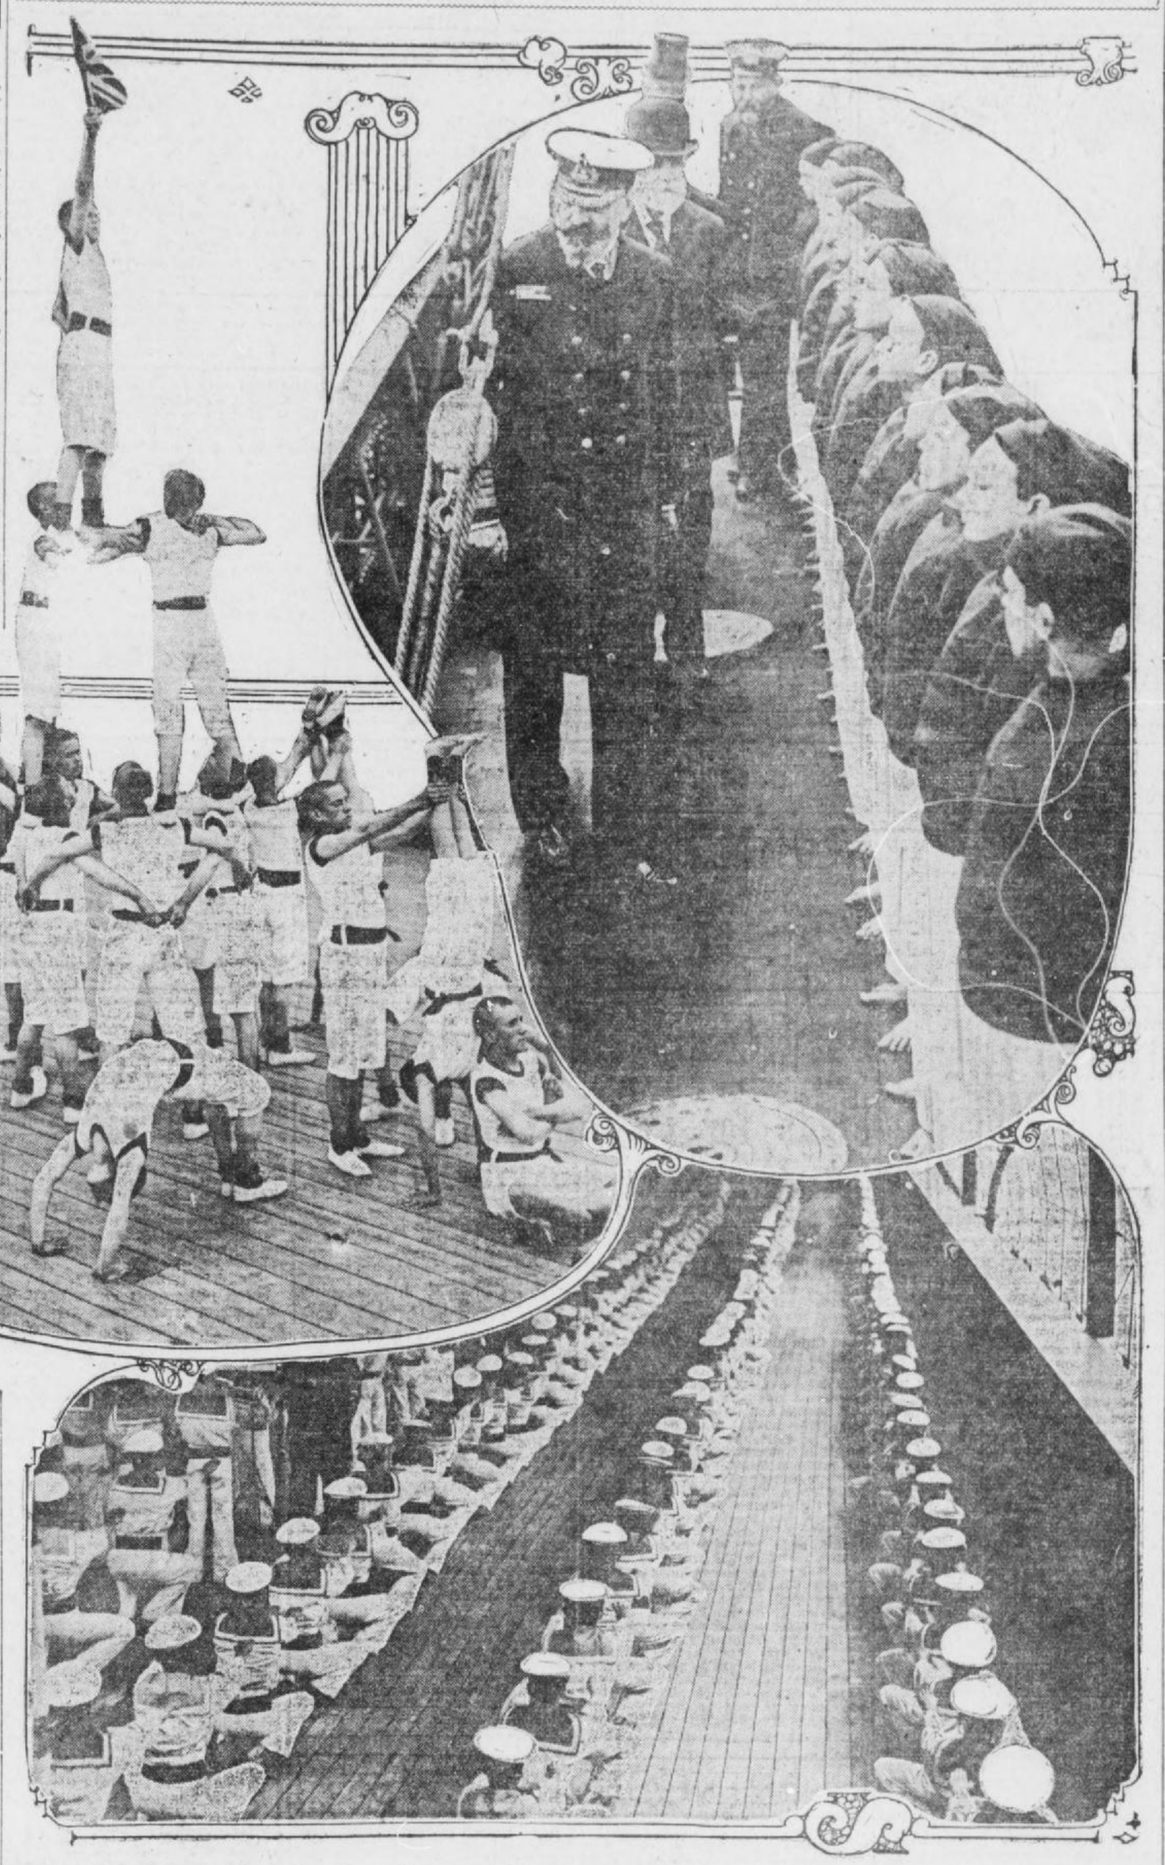

"Oh," said the friend, "but he can swim beautifully, you know."

"Swim, indeed! Now, I ask you, would you like a husband you had to keep in an aquarium?"

How England Trains Her Boys for Naval Fighting Men

The pictures are of sailor boys in the British navy being reviewed on the training ship Exmouth. The top picture on the left shows them in a gymnastic display in which they have agility that a circus acrobat might envy. On the right on top the picture shows Prince Louis, of Battenberg, inspecting the boys, while the bottom picture shows a movement in the gymnastic drill.

FROM LUCILE'S DIARY

AUNT RACHEL has been staying with us on her way home from California, and I have passed a good deal of time with her, as I am exceedingly fond of her. I really think I am her favorite niece. One morning when I was helping her dress—I love to pay her little attentions—I found that there were no buttonholes in the new lingerie blouse she had intended to wear.

"Dear me!" I said. "We must get Cousin Fannie to rectify this at once. She'll be delighted to make the buttonholes for you."

"Why don't you make them for me, Lucile?" asked Aunt Rachel.

"Why, you see——" I began, and then hesitated.

"Yes, I see, Lucile." Aunt Rachel said. "You don't count buttonhole-making among your accomplishments. In my day a young woman was not considered well bred if she could not make a perfect buttonhole."

"You make me quite ashamed of my shortcomings," I told her. "You see, Cousin Fannie has always been rather proud of her beautiful buttonholes, and it would have seemed like infringing on her rights if I had taken to making them, too. Dear Cousin Fannie is a little sensitive, and I don't like to hurt her feelings."

"It's quite possible that she would like you to share her glory," Aunt Rachel remarked. "If you wish to learn, I'll agree to make it right with Fannie."

That afternoon I went to Cousin Fannie's room and asked her to give me a lesson in making buttonholes.

"I'm awfully busy, Lucile," she said, "for I'm trying to finish this waist that Aunt Rachel gave me the silk for. I wish to wear it to-night at the settlement reception. If you have buttonholes to make I'll be glad to do them for you to-morrow."

I felt so disappointed that I said: "Aunt Rachel criticises me because I don't know how to make buttonholes, and you won't take the time to teach me. I did so wish to learn this afternoon." I could scarcely restrain my tears as I spoke.

"Why, Lucile, if you are so much in earnest about it of course I'll show you how," said Cousin Fannie.

So we went to work. I made buttonhole after buttonhole all afternoon, for I was determined if I made them at all to excel. Cousin Fannie told me that evening that with a little more practice I should soon equal her. So I kept at it every spare minute for two days until I felt competent to make the buttonholes in Aunt Rachel's blouse. When she saw them she was so surprised and delighted at my skill that she immediately offered to buy me the perfectly charming chiffon set that I had been talking to her about.

I was so enchanted at owning the coveted set that I made an occasion to wear it by calling on Gertrude Bates the very day I received it.

She was busy with the dressmaker, but I sat quite a while chatting until her brother, Carl, came home. I was just going when Gertrude remarked that the little silk coat which was being made was all done but the three large buttonholes. I offered to make them.

"Why, do you know how to make buttonholes?" she exclaimed.

I replied by taking the garment and setting to work with a nonchalance that I was amused to see alarmed her.

"Well, you're a wonder," said Carl when I had made a buttonhole and he had examined it. "I don't believe my tailor could beat this."

As it was growing late, I suggested that Gertrude allow me to take the coat home and finish the buttonholes the next day.

Rather Tired.

I was rather tired the next morning, as I had been sewing so much more than I was accustomed to do, so I asked Cousin Fannie to make the two remaining buttonholes in Gertrude's coat. She works so rapidly that I knew it would be no trouble to her. I was glad to have them done, for George Requier called up on the phone and asked me to go out to his tennis club that afternoon.

As I had so suitable wrap, I wore Gertrude's fascinating little coat. I thought she would be glad to have me wear it after all the work I had done for her. I was astonished when I saw her walking toward me across the courts, for I naturally supposed she was at home with the dressmaker.

"This is a jolly surprise," I said gayly, trying to make room for her on the bench.

"It's certainly a surprise," she replied coldly, and, looking fixedly at the jacket, she passed on.

I explained to George she must be suffering from one of her severe headaches, for I could not bear to have him think any friend of mine would be so rude.

Although I sent her the coat by parcel post the next day, I have not had a single word of acknowledgment or thanks from her. Gertrude, I fear, does not number gratitude among her graces.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Let me see it," cried she, and Mr. Gryce, greatly pleased at the success of his trick, handed her the picture of Genevieve Gretorex, satisfied that if this good woman continued to find it like the Mildred Farley she had mentioned, he should find that Mildred Farley was the name the young woman he had himself first taken for the original of this picture, and in whose fate despite his reason and his years he had found himself so much interested that he had come here at this late hour of the night to learn her name, and if possible, her dwelling place.

His success surpassed his hopes. The old lady looked at the picture, shook her head and looked again.

Somewhat Different.

"How these photographs can deceive?" cried she. "If I had not stopped to look at this twice, I would have sworn it was Mildred Farley's face, but I see how that she wears her hair quite different, and that she is older and much better dressed than Mildred could ever hope to be. Nevertheless, there is a very striking similarity, and I should like to see Miss—— Miss——"

"Handscombe," put in the detective.

"——and Mildred together. It would be a pleasing study." And she stared long and earnestly at the picture, winding up with: "I should like to show it to Mildred."

This was putting herself exactly in the position desired by Mr. Gryce.

"You can do so," he observed, "if you do not have to carry it far nor keep it long. Does Mildred live anywhere near you? Can you see her to-night?"

"She lives in my fourth story front room, sir; Mildred Farley is one of my boarders."

Mr. Gryce stroked his trembling right knee with a very loving hand. "One of your boarders," he repeated. "She is doubtless then upstairs asleep."

"No, poor girl, no. She is a dressmaker and sometimes does not close her eyes till 1 o'clock at night. She is not asleep, but come to think of it, she is not in the house at all. She went away for a short vacation a few days ago, and though she promised to be home this afternoon, I believe she did not come. It has always been my hope that Dr. Molesworth would marry her. She is a lovely girl and he is a very fine man. Why, then, shouldn't they come together?"

"And what you makes you think they will not? Why shouldn't it be she he is going to marry?"

"Why? Because they would have told me. He knows and she knows there is nothing I wish so much. It would be preposterous for them to keep it to themselves after all I have said. No, if Dr. Molesworth is going to marry any one (and I don't believe yet he is), it must be some ridiculous chit of a girl he has met away from here; and—Mildred——why, Lena!"

This exclamation was caused by the appearance at the door of a young girl who the moment she saw Mr. Gryce, shrank back and started to run away.

But the emphatic "Lena!" stopped her, and in a moment the old lady was in the hall; a whispered conference ensued, followed by the re-entrance of the good woman with a note in her hand.

"Well, I never!" she exclaimed, looking first at the letter she held and then at the feeble figure of the old man who had risen with well feigned indifference as if to go. ' A note from Dr. Molesworth, which he left on purpose for me! and that girl forgot to give it to me till now! What can he have to say!" And breaking the seal, she read the few enclosed lines with a growing wonder that ended in the joyous exclamation of "Good gracious, it is Mildred, after all! He is going to marry her to-night, and bring her home to-morrow. Well, I will give up. Never a word to me about it, and I so fond of them both! I don't understand it, folks are so queer." And she fluttered to and fro in ill-disguised joy, talking and muttering to herself, while Mr. Gryce pulled his muffler about him and began to move slowly toward the door.

"I declare," she broke in, as her attention was recalled to him by this movement, "it does seem a pity for you to go out again into the cold. If you think you would be better here, I have an empty room." But at this moment a carriage was heard to stop before the door, and, startled into a new train of thought by this unwonted occurrence, she moved towards the front windows, exclaiming: "I do believe they have come now!"

A Tragedy.

But at her first glance through the curtains she drew back with a frightened air, and crying, "Oh, what can this mean!" hurried towards the door with every sign of intense agitation.

Mr. Gryce at once took her place at the window, but he did not look out, for at that moment a man's voice was heard in the hall, and the wary detective thought it prudent to resume his role of the self-absorbed, semi-oblivious old man whose infirmities were so engrossing he had neither eyes nor ears for what went on about him. It was well he did so, for in another moment his imperturbability received a great shock by the certainly unlooked-for entrance of two men bearing a burden which, at one glance, showed itself to be the inert form of a young woman. From the appearance of one of these he judged him to be Dr. Molesworth. They were followed by the landlady, crying and wringing her hands.

"Mildred! Mildred! What has happened to you, poor girl!" came in piercing tones from the latter, as the sad burden, having been deposited on a sofa, she approached, and drew aside the cloak which had hitherto concealed the face.

"O God! how pale she is; how cold! Doctor, has she only fainted or is she—"

"Dead," came from his lips in deep and thrilling tones, while his gaze sought the landlady's face and rested there with an intentness he might not have displayed had he noticed the old manmumbling and chattering to himself in a corner.

"And what has killed her? What has destroyed my poor girl, the very night you hoped to marry her?"

"Shall I tell you?" The doctor had waved the man aside who had assisted him in his fearful task, and now stood with folded arms side by side with the landlady, looking down upon the still, set face which, with the blue robe that enshrouded the form, were already so well known to the watching detective. "She preferred this bridal to the one I had planned for her. Now you know all." And with just one more deep and searching look at the landlady's startled face, he walked up to his assistant.

"That is all," said he, "I will do the rest. The coroner will probably be here soon and—who are you?"

This was aid to a small, slight man who at this moment appeared in the doorway.

"I am a detective, sir," was the reply, and he was doubtless going to say more, but he caught an unexpected sight of Mr. Gryce, and paused in some confusion. He had recognized a superior.

As for Mr. Gryce himself he had scarcely noticed the young man; he was too intent upon the doctor who, at the utterance of the word detective, had wheeled suddenly about with the evident intention of hiding his surprise. But a mirror hung opposite him, and in this the watchful eye of Mr. Gryce detected such an expression of uncontrollable shock and anxiety that he inwardly congratulated himself over the curiosity which had drawn him to this house.

The confusion, if there was such, in the physician's mind, was but momentary. In an instant he turned and confronting the intruder, asked with some severity:

"And what work is there for a detective here? The young lady has taken poison and is dead. I have notified the coroner——"

"Pardon me," interrupted the other, with every appearance of humility and respect. "I have come from the coroner. I am only a messenger and my errand is to say that as he can not come until morning it might relieve you to have me to stop here and see that there is no interference with the remains. It is a common duty and it is not the first time I have performed it."

A Word of Protest.

"But it is nobody's duty to watch over this poor girl's body but myself," broke in the landlady, with hearty indignation. "Do you forget that it is a woman and a lady you are talking about, and do you think I will stand by and see any man, much less a stranger, take the place which only one of her own sex should occupy? She is no relative of mine, but I loved her and—doctor, you have some regard for her memory, I am sure; send that man away; he has already been here too long."

And with a care that was almost motherly in its tenderness, she drew the end of the cloak once again over the poor dead face, dropping a tear as she did so, which was not unseen by Mr. Gryce if it was unappreciated by the stern and bitter-souled physician.

"But, madam"—that stranger began.

"Stop!" cried Dr. Molesworth, "I will explain to her." And in a few words he told her how in cases of violent death, it was thought advisable for the Coroner to see the victim as soon after decease as possible, and when, as in this case, circumstances demanded delay, no one, not even a mother could rightfully interfere with whatever surveillance the Coroner thought it his duty to impose. So you will let this man stay here, and I will stay, too; for it is as much my wish as yours that every respect should be shown the one whom living I honored sufficiently to wish to make my wife."

The landlady shook her head with an aggressive air, but made no further protest. Dr. Molesworth pointed to a chair and the representative of the Coroner sat down; then while the former glanced at Mr. Gryce, who had just caught his attention, a slight noise was heard in the hall and a second stranger entered.

"What does this mean?" angrily cried the doctor. "Is it possible that the front door has been left open?" And brusquely pushing by the newcomer, he shut the offending door and then coming back, asked his business of the last arrival.

The fellow, who was slimmer than the other and much more dapper, pulled a small book and pencil from his pocket. It was enough. Dr. Molesworth recognized a reporter, and gave his irritation full play.

"You are intruding," cried he. "This is a private house and no one asked you to enter. As for the calamity which has occurred, learn of it how and where you will; I shall tell you nothing."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

EVANS ADVISES BOYS TO CADDY ON GOLF LINKS

By Chick Evans.

My business takes me to many offices throughout the city, and these little visits bring many interesting experiences. Not long ago, as I was entering a certain office, the boy near the door looked squarely at me for a moment, then brightened up and said: "Hello, Chick, don't you remember me? I caddied for you at Wheaton and you called me Walter." It was a very pleasant memory that the boy evoked and in a moment he was recalling some particular lucky shot that I had played and long ago forgotten. It was a great pleasure to me to be remembered by this young boy and it was a double pleasure to bring to mind once more a very happy occasion.

This little incident, however, merely leads to a subject very near to my heart—the future of the little caddie, for this boy is not the only caddie that I have met in offices in my tramps about the city. What becomes of the caddy when the short, too short, period of his school days is past and he must desert the links for other employment?

Caddie's Work Healthful.

I do not think that there can be a better all-around employment for the small boy than caddying. It is wholesome, outdoor work, and has brought health to many a delicate boy. Almost every other form of labor is injurious to the small boy, and, of course, caddy bags can be cruelly heavy, but, as a rule, the player with a heavy bag does not choose a small caddy. The caddy enjoys fresh air and interest in a game which are all the advantages of play. It has always seemed to me that it is more interesting to carry a bag full of clubs when a fine golf match is in progress than to occupy a good seat at a game of baseball or football. From a physical point of view it is certainly better for a boy to tramp happily over yielding turf than to sit in cramped attitude on crowded stands to watch other men exercise. The caddy is really a part of the game; he has the same exercise as his employer; he sees the play and is interested, and is frequently consulted as to choice of club. Furthermore, he has the advantage of association with the members of the golf club, and these members are usually the leading business and professional men of the community.

Most of Them "Making Good."

There is a general belief that club members are dissipated, mere club rounders, in fact. My experience flatly contradicts this. The influence of the golf links is wholesome, physically and morally, and the boy fully enjoys its advantages. When the time comes for the caddy to go to work he usually obtains his first job through the good offices of a club member. I should not like to think that the majority of caddies become professionals, good as that work is, and I believe that only a small percentage do so. It is easy to trace from caddy to office boy, but in higher positions the caddy identity is sometimes hidden. I believe, however, that caddies are to be found in every walk of life, and I am sure that they are "making good."

White Sees Whitney Work Out

Frank Dons Mitts With Packey

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 7.—Has Charley White, pound for pound the best boxer in the game today, put one over on Frank Whitney, the fighting carpenter from Cedar Rapids, Iowa? This is the question fans who were at O'Connell's gymnasium yesterday are asking around sporting circles to-day. Whitney and White meet in Atlanta next Wednesday.

Several hundred fans saw Whitney and McFarland box three rounds at breakneck speed yesterday. They were also aware of the fact that Charley was an interested spectator. Probably every one in the gymnasium, with the exception of Whitney, knew this. Maybe, if Frank had known White was present he would have ceased in his grind. But, nevertheless, he didn't and the battle Whitney and McFarland put up was worth any one's time.

* * *

THE two boys had a merry battle. They mixed it at close quarters and boxed at long range. Packey wanted the work-out, as he is training for a busy fall campaign. Whitney is a rough and tough scrapper, just the kind McFarland likes to work with. The rounds were full of action and the crowd was on its feet during several stages of the combat.

Two glaring eyes kept watching every move made by the boy from Cedar Rapids. These same eyes also noticed that McFarland, who knows White's style of boxing better than any other ringman in the world, was mixing it with Whitney. He also was aware of the fact that Whitney's defense was kept high and that Packey was having the time of his life trying to get home his left hook.

* * *

NOW, every one knows that Charley's best blow is his left hook, followed by a right cross. Whether White beats Whitney or not the writer does not care to predict. But one thing is certain, and that is that Charley will have the time of his life hitting Whitney with this punch.

Whitney knows White's style, and he has solved a defense for the Chicago boy's favorite wallop. Charley saw Whitney box yesterday. Frank didn't know it. He showed everything he had in his scrap with Packey, and White was present to pick up a few pointers. When Whitney jumped out of the ring it was the first time he knew that his coming opponent was an interested spectator. But Frank is not one of those who worries over things of this kind. He simply smiled and stated that he would stroll over to Lewis' gymnasium to-morrow and watch Charley in action.

* * *

WHEN White left the gymnasium many of those who were present thought he was bound for home. White evidently wanted them to think so, but he had another errand on. Charley does his boxing at Lewis' gymnasium and that was where he was bound for. The writer knows Charley like a book and thought it best to take a trip to the "gym" and see just what the Chicago boy was going to put over.

Just as we surmised, Charley picked up "Special Delivery" Hirsch, a tough lightweight, on his way to work out, and it wasn't many more minutes before he was hard at work. And it was not long before Hirsch threw up the gloves in disgust. But the blow that made Hirsch quit was not a left hook to the jaw. It was a left to the stomach. It did not take Charley long to find out that he would have to perfect some other punch if he hoped to defeat Whitney. He wanted to try out a new punch, and it is dollars to doughnuts that it will be the left to the stomach instead of a left hook to the jaw that Mr. White uses against Whitney in Atlanta on August 13.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT BY PROXY.

A rhymster sat at his type machine
And wrote him a gladsome lay
Of fish that gleam in the woodland stream
And leap in the silver spray.
He sang of musky and bass and trout
And his little canoe of birch,
But the only fish he had ever pulled out
Was a little anemic perch.

He sang a song of the virgin wood,
Of the forest old and sere
Where the hunters creep in the runways deep
And wait for the nimble deer.
He sang of the moose that he longed to pot
As it called in its far-flung tones,
But the only thing he ever shot
Was a pair of the rolling bones.

He sang a song of the bounding main
Where the gulls and the mermaids play,
Of the whistling gale and the bulging sail
And the tang of the drifting spray.
He sang of the joy as he lightly tripped
O'er the sea on his bounding bark,
But the only boat he had ever skipped
Was a rowboat in Piedmont Park.

The rush for shelter in the American League is due to the rumor that Jimmy Callahan intends to perpetrate another trade. But as for Mrs. Havenor, she should be annoyed, as it were.

Frank Chance avers that he will stick with the Yanks until they bust into the first division. Mr. Chance evidently expects to live a long time.

Cleveland comes to the front with a yacht called the Psammiad II. One of the beauties of the said Psammiad II is that a yachtsman can always prove his sobriety by pronouncing it.

SPEED.

Old Joe Dunn smote it to the fence,
It was an awful bingle,
And by a burst of fearful speed
He almost made a single.

The president of the Federal League has retired on account of overwork, but there is no truth in the rumor that he was overworked in the act of counting gate receipts.

While there are skeptical persons who do not believe that Mr. Dunn is fast, it is a well-known fact that he can cling faster to a base than any athlete in baseball.

We are indebted to the Federal League for the custom of granting magnates an occasional leave of absence. If the practice only spreads to the National League all will be well.

Old King Cole looms up like a world beater in the American Association. So, also, did Laverne Chappell.

TWENTY-FIVE-MILE RACE AT SAUCER FRIDAY

A TWENTY-FIVE-MILE race is to be the feature event of a swell-looking program that Jack Prince has scheduled at his saucer Friday night. All ten of the famous riders now here will start, and the way their machines are traveling these days it is almost a cinch that a new record will be established for the distance.

This race is for the championship of the South. Richards wants that title, so does McNeil and all the others. And an Atlanta boy, Harry Glenn, has a fine chance of copping this event, too. Harry showed marked improvement last Tuesday night, and he ought to be even better Friday.

By the way, Glenn is to be seen in another match race. He hasn't been defeated yet in a two-handed, or rather a two-machine event. But in George Lockner he is going up against a real racer this time. It will be a two-mile affair, two best heats in three.

The Motordrome Purse will open the card. There will be three heats of one mile and a final of two miles.

Following is the complete program for Friday night:

First Event.

Motordrome Purse (qualifying heats, one mile; final, two miles; winners of trial heats and second man in fastest heat to qualify). First Heat—Richards, Lockner, Graves.

Second Event.

Motordrome Purse—Second Heat—Glenn, Renel, Swartz.

Third Event.

Motordrome Purse—Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis, Luther, Shields.

Fourth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

(Two-mile heats; two best in three.)

Fifth Event.

Motordrome Purse—Final heat.

Sixth Event.

Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

Seventh Event.

Invitation Race—Distance, 5 miles. Open to all comers.

Eighth Event.

Special Match Race—Third heat, if necessary.

Ninth Event.

Twenty-five-mile race for championship of the South—Graves, Swartz, Shields, Lockner, Richards, Luther, Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

GRIFFIN AND STRACHM QUALIFY FOR NET TITLE

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Clarence Griffin and John Strachm, of San Francisco, will meet Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas Bunday for the national tennis championship in doubles at Newport, R. I., on August 18. They won this right by defeating in straight sets Gustave Richard and W. M. Washburn, of New York, Eastern tennis champions. The scores in the games yesterday at Onwentsia were 6-1, 8-6 and 6-4. The Easterners were outplayed and outgeneraled in every game.

FITTERY IN NO-HIT GAME.

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 7.—Jake Fittery, pitcher for the Evansville club, of the Central League, yesterday shut out Terre Haute, not allowing a hit during the nine innings. Only four local players reached first, and two went to second, where they were left.

Baby Cross a Real Boxing Fan

Roots for Pa to Capture Title

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 7.—Baby Cross is a boxing fan.

She is not familiar with left hooks and right uppercuts, but she does know her daddy is going to be the next lightweight champion of the world. And all one needs to be convinced is a two-minute talk with her.

Cross has won many friends through his earnest work in the ring, but he has no more enthusiastic admirer than his little daughter. "When daddy is champion" she will reach the mecca of all her dreams, and plans for that day fill many of her waking hours.

Of course, she never has seen daddy in a real battle, but often during training work she and her mother are at the ringside watching him in his practice bouts. She is fond of the rope skipping and weight pulling, and always is interested in the boxing which forms part of the daily program, but most of all she loves the frolic with daddy after his strenuous work is done, and the kiss which is sure to follow the fun.

Baby Has Warm Friends.

Many who have seen Cross work will be glad to see him lightweight champion if he attains that honor, but happiest and proudest of all will be his baby daughter.

Baby Cross was at her father's training camp while he prepared for his bouts with "Bud" Anderson and Matty Baldwin. The New Yorker won both contests, and he says that in future his little daughter will have to accompany him on his tours of the country. In this way he believes that he will never be defeated.

Cross is not the first boxer who has visited the coast that has had a baby daughter for a mascot. Johnny Kilbane, the featherweight champion, has two baby mascots and they are always at his training camp when he is preparing for a match. It is a pretty picture to see the Cleveland boy playing on the white sand at Venice with his two children while his young wife sits near by.

Cross has hopes of securing a bout with Champion Willie Ritchie. Leach claims that he would be able to defeat the Frisco boy over the 20-round route. He declares that he would surely knock out the champion if he could land his famous right-hand punch which has flattened many a famous ringman.

May Battle Joe Rivers.

If Cross does not get a date with Ritchie, he will probably be signed to clash with Joe Rivers, the Mexican lightweight.

Rivers is a favorite on the coast, even though he was beaten by Ritchie, and he would be a big drawing card if pitted against a boxer of Cross' ability.

In the meantime, Baby Cross is rooting for her dad to become champion. And maybe she wouldn't be glad if Leach would permit her to see a regular ring bout. But the hard-hitting lightweight says that the baby's charm might be broken if she occupied a ringside seat.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Charley White, the Chicago sensation, who meets Frank Whitney at the Auditorium-Armory on August 13, is doing his training at Nate Lewis's gymnasium in Chicago. Charley plans to arrive in Atlanta Saturday morning, one day later than Whitney.

* * *

This will give the fans several days to look over the rival lightweights. Both boys will complete their training grind here. Whitney will work at the Atlanta Athletic Club, while White is expected to train at Ponce DeLeon ball park.

* * *

Despite the fact that Gunboat Smith has won every fight in which he has participated in the past year, experts predict defeat for him when he tackles Jim Flynn on next Friday night at Madison Square Garden, New York. Most of the experts claim that Flynn's experience will bring him home a winner over the Easterner.

* * *

Both Ad Wolgast and Joe Rivers were sidetracked by Willie Ritchie. The champion has decided to defend his title against Freddie Welsh in a 20-round engagement at Vancouver on September 1.

* * *

Wolgast, however, appears to be the big loser. The Mexican has signed articles to meet Leach Cross in Tom McCarey's arena at Los Angeles, and it would not surprise many to see this bout draw as much money as the Ritchie-Welsh set-to. On the other hand, Wolgast must now look for a suitable opponent to meet.

Jack Dillon, of Indianapolis, and "Knockout" Brown, of Chicago, may wage battle soon. Nate Lewis, manager of Brown, writes from Chicago that he has signed his protege to box Dillon at Indianapolis. The bout will take place some time next month at Terre Haute, Ind. They have agreed to weigh 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Mike Glover, the Boston lightweight, is earnestly striving to get a match with Jack Britton. The former showed much class in his recent mills in the "Bean Town" city.

* * *

Packey McFarland wants it to be known that there is no chance to drag him into the welterweight class. He says he is able to do 135 pounds and will continue to box at that weight.

* * *

Jack White has been made an even money bet against Johnny Dundee for the 20-round clash at Los Angeles on August 12. Since Joe Levy has taken hold of Jack he has shown a 50 per cent improvement.

Out-of-Town Fans Buy Boxing Tickets

Three hundred seats have been taken by out-of-towners for the Whitney bout which takes place at the Auditorium-Armory next Wednesday night. One hundred and twenty-five of these have been secured by Macon fans. The other 175 are well scattered throughout other neighboring cities and towns.

The tickets went on sale this morning at Shepherd's Segar store, corner of Edgewood and Pryor.

REDS PURCHASE INFIELDER.

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 7.—Second Baseman John Rawlings, of Victoria, B. C., Northwestern League, was sold yesterday to the Cincinnati team, of the National League, for $2,000. Rawlings will report to Cincinnati next spring.

ED WALSH TO HAVE ARM EXAMINED AT YOUNGSTOWN

CHICAGO, Aug. 7.—Ed Walsh, star pitcher of of Chicago American League club, left yesterday to visit a specialist at Youngstown, Ohio, where he will undergo an examination to ascertain whether his career as twirler is at an end. His last apearance with the White Sox was in Chicago July 19, when he was obliged to retire after pitching two innings against the Philadelphia Athletics. He declared that if he finds himself unable to pitch again, he will make an effort to become an outfielder.

SCHWARTZ RELEASES TWO.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 7.—Manager Schwartz, of the Nashville club, announced last night that Infielder Bob Baumgardner had been sold to the New Haven club, of the Connecticut League, while Infielder Dave Bunting has been given his unconditional release.

TILLIS SELLS MONTGOMERY BALL CLUB

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 7.—It was announced here last night that Richard Tillis, owner of the Montgomery Baseball club's franchise, has sold out to an organization of business men, headed by M. P. Wilcox.

The price was reported as $12,800. The transfer of ownership took place at once.

This is taken to mean that Montgomery will remain indefinitely in the Southern League. The new owners are popular here, and it also is expected that there will be a considerable revival of interest among local fans.

Obstinate Acne Quickly Yields

Fine Remedy That Clears Skin of Pimples on Cheeks, Temples, Sides of Nose and Chin.

Acne attacks the glandular structure of the skin, more particularly those tiny glands that secrete fat.

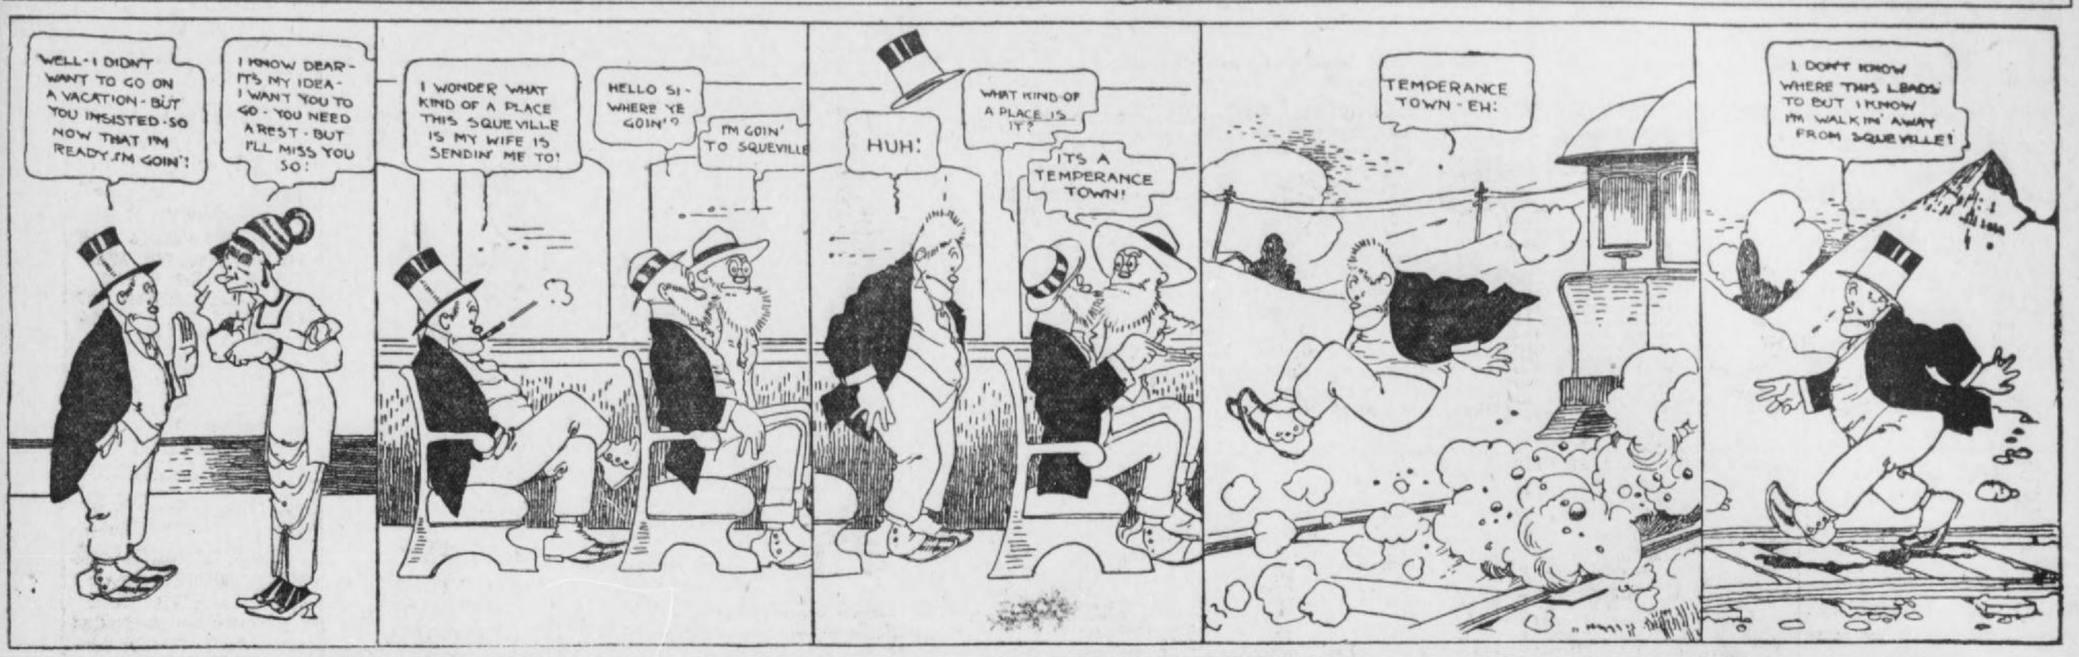

And it is here that S. S. S., the famous blood purifier, is most active in its influence.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. the purpose of which it is to stimulate the cells in the tissues that thus select from the blood the nutriment that makes new skin and thus eliminates all irritants, acids and parasites that inflame the glands. There is a natural tendency of the fine network of blood vessels in the skin to throw off impurities, but where a persistent inflammatory process has invaded the skin, the natural repair work of the blood is interfered with. It requires the stimulating activity of S. S. S. to overcome such morbid conditions. If you have been troubled with acne, do not despair of a cure.

You can get S. S. S. in any drug store, but insist upon having it. The great Swift Laboratory in Atlanta, Ga., prepares this famous blood purifier, and you should take no chance by permitting anyone to recommend a substitute. And if your blood condition is such that you would like to consult a specialist freely, address the Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Company, 181 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Speaking of That Diaphanous Stuff

Even Break With the Lookouts

Giants and Sox May Play Here

By O. B. Keeler.

ONE more vindication of the theory that the conventional manner of prorating a doubleheader is for each side to take one.

It was largely a matter of pitchers. In the first game Joe Conzelman wasn't quite so good as Floyd Kroh, and in the aftermath, Gilbert Price plus Elliott Dent, had a thin edge on Howell and Coveleskie.

The fact that the tall Pole was summoned again from the lumber yard testifies to the gentle affection for the Crackers that abounds in the shadow of Lookout Mountain.

The Tabasco Kid was doing his durndest to beat us all two of the games.

And quite properly.

Let's trim 'em fighting, or get trimmed the same way.

That's what makes baseball worth while.

* * *

WE are going to have some distinguished company in a few days, Ted Sullivan, one-time Southern Leaguer and now managing director of the Giants-White Sox world tour, is in New Orleans to-day arranging a lease on the Pelicans' ball park for an exhibition game late in October.

Mr. Sullivan expects to visit Birmingham and Mobile on a similar mission. And then he is coming to Atlanta.

Would Atlanta fans care to watch the White Sox and the Giants play ball?

We pause for no answer.

* * *

MAJOR CALLAWAY, home again from Chattanooga, says he hasn't heard anything about the proposed visitation, but doesn't see anything in the way of pulling it off. The president of the Crackers fancies there should be no trouble in arranging to let the big leaguers have Ponce DeLeon Park as a battle ground.

And he is of the opinion that it would be some considerable drawing card.

* * *

IT is rumored that Jud Daley, left fielder for the Vols, may wear an Atlanta uniform soon. The understanding hereabout is indefinite, and Bill Smith probably will make the decision while in Nashville on the series beginning to-day.

Daley is a good ball player and is very popular in Atlanta, but it appears unlikely that the Atlanta club will take him on if anything substantial has to be paid for him.

If it comes about that Judson is available for his stipend alone, he may but into the present series against his old friends.

* * *

HERE'S one we lamp from up Syracuse-way, in the New York State League:

An umpire named Harrison had a tumultuous run-in with a ball player working under the entire misnomer of Good. Good had tried to steal third and was tagged when about fifteen feet off the bag.

True to his reputation, Good let out an awful yelp and the fans answered the call of the wild.

"You're out of the game!" the umpire ordered.

Good declined to see it that way.

"Get out of the lot," was the next command.

Good stayed where he was as if he had taken root.

Harrison called a big cop, standing in the crowd near the bleachers.

"Take that man off the field," he directed.

The cop shook his head. "Nope," he said firmly.

Harrison was outraged. "You won't?" he roared, "And why not?"

"He wasn't out," said the cop. And he stuck to it.

* * *

ONCE more is the eternal and Emersonian law of compensation glutted with justification.

For weeks the sport columns have echoed with the piteous roars of F. Chance, sometime Peerless Leader. It seems Mr. Chance swapped Hal Chase for Zeider and Borton, of the White Sox, with the idea that Rollie was sound in wind and limb and his sidekick able to swing on the pill like a garden gate.

We gather from the twittering that Mr. Zeider was afflicted with a bunion and had to do his running on one side, while Mr. Borton's batting resembled the performance of the oldest inhabitant of the Soldiers' Home killing flies with a newspaper.

So.

But now comes Mr. Callahan, who lately paid $18,500 in Comiskey coin and White Sox players for Larry Chappelle.

"He's got a warped knee and a kink in his hip," wails Jimmy, "and he had 'em when I got him!"

Mr. Chance should lie awake nights and grieve.

Great Tribute Paid Hal Chase by Harry Lord, of White Sox

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—Harry Lord, the White Sox captain, discussing first basemen to-day, paid a great tribute to Hal Chase. Here is what the third baseman of the White Sox has to say about the former Yankee player:

"Chase will save any infielder thirty errors in a season if the pair would work together through the year. Look what Chase did for me in the one game at St. Louis. I would have had two black marks to my discredit on that day. The papers would have said Lord's errors were responsible for the White Sox losing to the Browns 6 to 3, or something like that. With Chase over there we don't have to worry. We can field the ball, shut our eyes, and make a throw, and he will get it some way or other."

Sports and Such

PLAIN NUTTY.

He'd seen upon the sport page
The way that Ty Cobb collars,
And all the other dope that deals
With betting odds and dollars;
With gate receipts, percentages,
Expenses, kicks and hollers.

And then he put a question;
His friends were filled with gloom.
With sorrow did they cast him
Into a padded room.
He'd asked: "Is there a sport guy
Not out for the mazuma?"

* * *

HAVING DEMONSTRATED TO our entire satisfaction that the Pacific coast players do not play tennis properly, the Eastern experts now have nothing to do but dig up some one to beat them. Still it seems a man's size assignment.

* * *

BOTH GUNBOAT SMITH and Jim Flynn announce that they are training earnestly for their coming spear-running, but both omit to say why.

* * *

THE FIGHT PROMOTERS in Montana are breaking the law again. The Legislature having authorized fights the promoters put on Jimmy Clabby and Freddy Hicks.

YALE HAS NOT decided on her rowing system for next year. After her experience with English coaching she has apparently decided only on what system she won't use.

* * *

JOHNSON AND LANGFORD are to fight in Paris for a small fortune; not so small, either. But the French are notoriously callous about inculcating these principles of manliness and fair play in the youth of their city. They are so unrefined that they want to see a fight when they pay for one.

* * *

"THE FANS ARE plentifully supplied with amusement in the two big leagues," observes Hughey Jennings. Sure! There is the $18,000 outfielder, the Chase deal, the Browns and the Cardinals—a new laugh every day.

ENCOURAGE BY THE attendance at the opening day the turf bosses at Saratoga will extend that conference five days, feeling that the breed of horses will be immeasurably benefitted in the extra time.

THE CHAP WHO tried to swim to Sandy Hook was probably trying to catch the "four-day" boat, which leaves from that point.

NO CHANCE FOR LAJOIE TO LEAVE NAPS, SAYS BARNARD

CLEVELAND, OHIO, Aug. 7.—An absolute denial of the rumor that Chicago, Boston and Cleveland teams are arranging a three-cornered deal which will take Second Baseman Lajoie away from Cleveland was made to-day by E. S. Barnard, Vice President of the Naps. Manager Birmingham, of the Cleveland team, wired from Philadelphia saying he had no trade under way for Lajoie.

ALLIS STARTED PLAYING GOLF WHEN 5 YRS. OLD

NEW YORK, Aug. 7.—Ned Allis, who was runner-up in the Western Golf Association at Chicago and is the sensation in the Western golf world, began to play golf when he was only five years old, taking part in a tournament that year, with his father as tutor. It was not until four or five years ago, however, that Ned began to come to the front with the older men.

His first public performance of consequence was in an invitation tournament held by the Milwaukee Country Club in which he met Harold Wyatt, of Fond du Lac. The two youngsters then only 17 years old, gave the fastest exhibition of match play of the entire tournament.

Allis is a very fine putter, as may be seen by the fact that in his match against R. A. Gardner, ex-national champion, in the semi-final at Homewood, Allis had only 27 puts for the 18 holes of the morning round.

To learn how a golfer's game may improve in a few months one has but to consult the United States Golf Association's handicap rating list for 1913. There Allis is placed among the handicap five men. Among the others in the five list are Devereux Lord, the three-time winner of The Brooklyn Eagle trophy; B. T. Allen, Fox Hills; Chisholm Beach, Fox Hills; S. D. Bowers, Brooklawn; T. V. Bermingham, Wykagyl; James R. Hyde, South Shore; Philip Carter, Nassau, Metropolitan junior champion; Max R. Marston, Baltusrol, Interscholastic champion; C. H. Seely, ex-Metropolitan champion, and others. Allis would more likely be handicapped at 2, or 3, at least.

The only time that Metropolitan District golfers have seen the quality of Allis' golf was at Lakewood, N. J., on April 17-19, last. Here Allis just fell outside the medal prize in the qualifying round by a single stroke, tying with Walter J. Travis, of Garden City, at 78, while H. K. Kerr, South Shore, got the best card with a 77.

Allis lasted till the semi-final, when he was defeated by Horace C. Cook, of Trenton, the youthful player from Trenton, N. J., who, in the afternoon final with Travis, held the former international champion at evens till a penalty stroke at the seventeenth hole threw him off his game on the home hole, the match going to Travis by two up. On his way to the semi-final Allis had beaten J. F. Shanley, the best of the Deal players.

Since Allis first swung a club at the age of five, he has been carefully coached by his father, Louis Allis, who firmly believes that his boy will some day be the premier amateur golfer of the world.

BASEBALL
Diamond News and Gossip

Manager Frank Chance, of the New York Yankees, has shifted his line-up so as to send in Cook and Williams, the two recruits from the Texas League, this afternoon. Williams is a first baseman and Cook a fielder.

After breaking Marquard's winning streak, the Pittsburg Pirates jumped on Mathewson in the Pittsburg-New York game, knocking the "Old Master" out of the box.

* * *

Barney Dreyfuss, of the Pirates, has returned Kent, a pitcher, to Brooklyn.

* * *

Pitcher Johnson, of the Washington Senators, tied the season's record by winning his eleventh consecutive victory yesterday. Before Johnson pitched his team to victory against the Chicago White Sox, the record was held by his teammate, Boehling.

Love or Dent Will Pitch To-day

Slow Fielding Cost One Game

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 7.—Love or Elliott Dent, life-saver in yesterday's second game, will be shot at the Vols this afternoon, with Chapman back of the wood. Dent looked great in his one and one-third innings yesterday, and Love seems to have got over his slight touch of illness.

The Crackers got an even break in the twin bill yesterday and also on the series at Chattanooga. Joe Conzelman lost the first game, 4 to 2, and it ought to have been a shut-out for him. Manush was in right field and misjudged two long fly balls, one of which went for a triple and the other for a home run.

We had no luck at bat. Twice with the bases full and only one down, Dunn hit into a double play. Chapman was sent in to bat for Conzelman in the ninth and whaled a home run far over the fence, but nobody was on the towpath.

In the second game we got to Grimes early and got a nice lead. Howell came on and pitched well until he was taken out for a pinch hitter. Then we had another chance at the Big Pole, and we nicked him for two runs, which won the game. Price pitched well until the eighth when a savage batting rally chased him from the rubber. Elliott Dent stopped the Vole and saved the game.

We play here four games, including the disputed one, which probably will be played Sunday. Harry Holland batted for a percentage of .500 yesterday. He looks better every day, and is stinging the ball hard. All he lacks is a little experience, and he is getting that fast.

PRESIDENT WILSON WANTS "SQUARE DEAL" FOR "UMPS"

WASHINGTON, Aug. 7.—President Wilson wants a "square deal" from baseball umpires, should they have occasion to pass upon his political decisions. He told George Hildebrand and "Billy" Evans so in an interview at the White House. Hildebrand and Evans are arbiters of the American League. They promised to grant the President's request.

The Largest Diamond

The most valuable gems, among which there are some exceeding 100 carats in weight, are generally owned by royal families or treasured by governments as state jewels. One of the largest diamonds ever found is the Koh-i-noor and is owned by the royal family of England. Originally it is said to have weighed 794 carats, but it was reduced to its present size of 102 3-4 carats by repeated cutting. According to legend, it was found in England long before the Christian era, and, after having been handed down through a long line of Indian Princes, it was seized during the British invasion of the Punjab and was taken to England. Probably the largest diamond found in recent years is the DeBeers diamond, weighing 225 carats.

Realty Convention Comes to Atlanta, Thinks S. B. Turman

First Delegate Returns Home—Widening for Mayson and Turner Ferry Road—Business Good.

S. B. Turman, of the real estate firm of Turman, Black & Calhoun, has returned from the convention of real estate men at Winnipeg and expresses the belief that the election of Charles P. Glover to the vice presidency of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will mean that Atlanta will land the ninth annual convention of realty men in 1916.

"Harris G. White, president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, presented Atlanta's invitation," declared Mr. Turman, "and many of the delegates told us that they would gladly support Atlanta. Most of these were Southern and Western delegates, the former pledging their support on account of loyalty to a sister city and the latter desiring to come because most of them had never been to this section before. Winnipeg is also with us.

"I am confident that we will win the convention. I left Winnipeg for Duluth a day before the adjournment of the convention and don't know whether or not Memphis invited the realty men.

"We had a great convention and I was very much pleased over the work of the national association."

Mr. White and Mr. Glover are returning to Atlanta by steamer and are expected to arrive Sunday or Monday.

County Commissioners Meet.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of County Commissioners in the Thrower Building Wednesday proved to be of considerable interest in real estate circles. Four or five delegations of property owners, probably 100 people in all, appeared to present various petitions for improvements.

The board voted to widen the Mayson and Turner Ferry road for a distance of about two miles in the Center Hill section, and to extend Hemphill avenue from the waterworks station to Face's Ferry road. The former was already on the summer program. A large delegation of Center Hill residents appeared. The latter is considered an important work because of the amount of territory opened up.

Plans for resurfacing several city streets were also presented.

Work has piled up on the board, due to the fact that Chairman Smith has been away on a vacation, and the further fact that accumulated business of the past month was brought before the commissioners.

Peachtree Interest Sold.

Clarence Knowles has bought from Paul Goldsmith an undivided one-third interest in a 100 by 562 foot lot on Peachtree road, 640 feet northeast of Piedmont avenue, for $1,750, or at the rate of $53 a front foot. Mr. Goldsmith sold another third to Bryan M. Grant May 31, 1912, and is keeping the remaining third for himself.

Sees Good Times Ahead.

Gid Hanna, the well-known real estate trader from Oakland City, has returned from a trip to Gwinnett and Rockdale Counties, and declares that crop conditions are the best he has ever seen. "With a fine crop and plenty of Government money to move it," asserted Mr. Hanna, "I can see nothing but great activity this fall in all lines of business. Secretary McAdoo seems to have smoked out the people who are holding money, and I look for normal conditions in local real estate. Everything points that way."

Plans for Two Houses.

A. J. & H. F. West have completed plans for two 2-story frame residences on the west side of Williams street, near West Tenth street, to cost $8,000 each. This neighborhood has been opened up in the last few years and now has a number of attractive homes.

Lakewood for Exposition.

Charles I. Branan and others of the local Park Board have a plan for using Lakewood for future expositions or fairs that it may be deemed advisable to hold. The question came up before the Park Board at its monthly meeting Tuesday at the City Hall, when Lakewood concessions were considered. The members of the board seemed to be of the opinion that no further privileges should be sold until it was decided whether or not the park could be profitably used for exposition purposes.

Since Piedmont Park was divested of its exposition trimmings the city has had no place save Lakewood to hold fairs.

Attractive New Building Type.

A new type of business building has appeared in Atlanta, and it is proving beneficial to tenants who want short term leases on vacant central property. This is a low steel affair of moderate cost that presents the appearance of a permanent structure, yet which can be moved on short notice. Investors are managing to get a rental of $200 a month out of a string of these shops in downtown districts.

Four such buildings have been erected at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue and Equitable place by Andrew Gust, who purchased them from local representatives of portable steel shops. Mr. Gust has leased two compartments and expects to announce more leases shortly. Each store occupies a frontage of about 20 feet, and is 20 to 25 feet deep.

The "Why" of the South's Greatest Sunday Paper

SIX days we labor and do all our work.
And Sunday we rest—and catch step with the world.
That is, most of us.

Most of us work six days in the week. Most of us work pretty hard. Most of us are tired when night comes.

That is a good, healthy state of affairs, and it keeps us out of mischief.

But it doesn't give us much chance to keep pace with things outside our own little march. And sometimes that is in lock-step.

And that answers the query, "Why is a Sunday paper?"

The Sunday paper tells us that there is something stirring outside of Atlanta; that there are other States than the Empire State of the South; other nations than the Union; other continents than America; other worlds than the earth.

The Sunday paper tells us about other people than the kind we know so well; other professions, other aims, other thoughts and creeds.

The Sunday paper marks the time by which we catch step with all the world.

Depending, of course, largely on the kind and scope of the Sunday paper.

Which brings us to The Sunday American in general, and the next Sunday American in particular.

Starting with Atlanta—for that's where a lot of us live—the next Sunday American will have the freshest and fullest possible news of America's great murder case—the Frank trial. There will be pictures. Special features will be covered by special writers. The news will be handled frankly and honestly—and fully.

But there are other things than the Frank trial.

Polly Peachtree and her inimitable comment and gossip of society—you don't know Polly Peachtree, do you? No—but you read her sprightly gossip and you wonder—and so do people over all the South. Polly Peachtree is an institution.

Well, and that brings on the fashions, and the frills, and all the dainty arabesques (or is that architectural?) of feminine apparel. With pictures. Don't forget the pictures.

Then the drama.

Reviews and criticisms of the new plays which, probably owing to the season, haven't been produced yet, or possibly even written; gossip of stageland and its people, the wonderful people that to most of us live and move and have their being in the golden country back of the footlights. We always like to hear of something that connects them with our own little work-a-day world. And we are treated to such anecdotes quite frequently in the Sunday paper.

Sports—pennant chases in our own league; in the Big Show; boxing and gossip of the padded square; racing, golf, tennis—all handled by experts, trained to keep ever an eye on the Main Chance; to play up a world event for what it is worth; to value truly the importance of local news. There's O. B. Keeler, Charles Dryden, W. J. McBeth, "Tick" Tichenor, J. W. Heisman, Innis Brown, Damon Runyon, W. S. Farnsworth, Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton and George E. Phair, who are known from coast to coast in the respective lines.

In the lighter vein the comics contribute the bit of nonsense now and then, traditionally relished by the "best of men"—who, after all, probably are just plain folks like us, who have a soft spot in our hearts (art critics say in our heads) for the quaint conceits of Powers and Fisher and the rest. When you're tired, you know, a series of pictures is mighty easy to read, and the point isn't easy to miss.

But if you're serious, you can find what other people think in the editorials; you can match your ideas against theirs—and you're the judge. Clashing opinions sharpen wits. It's fine exercise for the mind.

Or turn to a serial novel. You'll find the latest and best in The Sunday American. Just now it's "Adam's Clay," by Cosmo Hamilton. Pretty soon it will be "The Plot for a Pennant," and you baseball fans might guess the author—Hugh Fullerton. You know what that means. But they all are the freshest and the best that can be had.

And the cable service and the news of all the world.

That might be the headliner of all. No other service has the far-reaching tentacles—the "feelers" that touch this old mud-ball at every point, and gather that which is new and strange and worthy, to tell it with spirit and truth in the Sunday paper.

For next Sunday features—"Art or the Woman?" A brilliant consideration of Ida Rubenstein, the strange, fiery Russian dancer who has cast her spell on the flower of the artists, the composers and the dramatists of our time. And then the strange case of Alfred Vanderbilt, frozen out of American society, finding on his return with his new wife to Newport that his first wife is the leader in a social ostracism the most rigid in history.

Then there will be another proof that truth can be stranger than fiction in the narrative of the cruel lover who tried to frighten into his arms a belle of our Southland—and by a horror in the guise of a monster frog.

And what else? Well, King George of England has a quaint idea of destroying "American frivolity" by imposing old-fashioned and outrageous duties on the members of his court—the good King desiring to "sober it down." And Madame Cavalieri explains beauty hints—she really ought to know, you know—and a scientist tells how a child becomes a man, and a psychologist details his discovery of why lovers can't help quarreling.

By way of contrast, Sophie Lyons, queen of the burglars, tells why crime doesn't pay, and Lady Duff Gordon produces an essay on mannish tendencies in women's dress, notably waistcoats, a Parisian fancy.

It's all in The Sunday American. And with it the news of all the earth.

And that's how we catch step with the world, on Sunday.

The Pictures in the Ice

The man— to whom the cost of ice doesn't matter—sees in it merely an added fillip to a long drink. The woman—to whom the cost of ice is a heart-breaking matter—sees in it relief, perhaps life itself, for her child, sweltering in the poor cottage which they call home.

A Glimpse of the Cowed Women of Japan

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

MARIAN COX has recently written her reminiscences of Japan, and Mitchell Kennerley has published them under the title of "The Man-Made Woman of Japan." The picturesque pen of Mrs. Cox gives us a striking chronicle, and I take from it the following:

"The easiest way to arrive at a conception of the Japanese woman is to think of every quality directly contrary to the qualities of the typical American woman, and to see her as the embodiment of these. She is as docile as the American woman is aggressive; as demure as the American is flamboyant; as modest as the American is impudent; as humble as the American is snobbish; as conservative as the American is faddish; as reticent as the American is effusive.

"There is no romance between the sexes in Japan. The relation is either crude and businesslike in marriage, or unmentionable and bestial out of marriage. No wonder there is no word in the Japanese language which can be translated as 'love' in our language. The only love that can be spoken or written of in Japan is the filial. There are no words of endearment for lovers, nor for husband and wife. Marriage is without courtship; courtship without kisses, caresses or pet names.

Loveless Women.

"No Japanese knight has ever performed a deed of valor for the love of a woman. No Japanese poet has ever written a poem of 'love' that could be read to a pure woman. These people have put all their refinement into their etiquette of life, and so have had none left for the elmental facts of life; they have put all their imagination in a hair-splitting epicureanism, and so have had none left with which they might dignify humanity's greatest passion. When the Japanese nation evolves the kiss of man and woman she may cease to be a mimicker and become a molder of civilization.

"In reading of the loveless, kissless, woman-denouncing Japanese, one might believe him austerely chaste, puritanical, the true ascetic; and to those unversed in the duality of human nature it comes with a shock of surprise to learn that, on the contrary, his ruthless immorality and licentiousness are notorious and the scandal of Japan.

"There is one feature of this so unique and so illustrative of the vicious outgrowths of man's lopsided civilizations that it has a claim upon the interest of every student of Japan or of human nature; the institution of the Yoshiwara.

"Classified with our 'white slave traffic' and the sordid evils that nightly stalk Broadway, Piccadilly and the Parisian boulevard, it yet differs from them all in certain elements which make it the most sickening and tragic exhibition the world affords of the human injustice and shame accorded women in civilizations made strictly of the men, for the men, by the men.

"At a temple in Nikko there is a famous picture of three monkeys, one with his hands covering his eyes, which means see no evil; another with hands covering ears, which means hear no evil; the other with hands covering mouth, which means speak no evil. This is evidently the Buddhistic formula for peace on earth, good will to men; but, thanks to the men who have not observed it, humanity has evolved from some of its barbarities, and most of the barbarities that exist to-day endure because women have been too long and thoroughly trained by men—to see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil.

With Official Sanction.

"No one can understand the Japanese people until he has seen the menagerielike spectacle of that portion of its womankind whom they place outside of human rights in a hideous travesty of human dignity. In the dusk of every evening, just as the temple bells are pealing forth their summons to the strange gods of Nippon, this spectacle begins: women, girls—the majority mere children in appearance—file into cages which open onto the streets, exactly like the cages in a zoo, and sit for hours behind those wooden bars like merchandise for sale, with an aureole of tortoise shell combs around their heads and bedecked in garish splendor of attire. The spectacle arouses disgust and scorn until one learns the hidden springs behind this system of woman-sale, and then there comes only pity.

"The Government has placed its sanction upon this institution; 'thus sayeth the law' is more powerful in Japan than in any other civilized country. So the idea has been perpetuated among the people that parents have a moral (because legal) right to dispose of their daughters to their own advantage, and the inmates of the Yoshiwara are sold by their parents or adopted parents when too young and ignorant to understand the nature of the transaction or the ghastly future it will bring. But even if she knew, the Japanese daughter is as powerless to resist the parental will as her brother, the soldier, would be to resist the will of his Emperor. As we know, she is taught filial devotion as her religion.

Agitation Going On.

"It is not true, as has been so frequently stated, that unchastity does not dishonor a woman in Japan. Even these slaves of the Yoshiwara, involuntary victims, are treated as below human kind. Until a few years ago they had no chance of escape from what even the Japanese call 'the bitter sea of misery.' When there were runaways, the law authorized their capture, punishment and return to their keepers. That there were many runaways we can believe when we learn that the average number of suicides among these girls throughout the land was 40 and 50 a month.

"During the past four years there has been a lively agitation in Japan for a complete change in its social and moral system. The leaders of public opinion proclaim that something is radically wrong, but do not seem to know what it is that must be changed, nor just what new laws to enact—for more laws is the masculine solution to every difficulty."

The Secret of Prayer

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

For he who climbs to make his prayer
Meets half way the descending grace.
—Elsa Barker in British Review.

THIS is the secret of all prayers
That in God's sight have worth;
They must be uttered from the stairs
That wind away from earth.
And he who mounts to speak the word,
He shall be heard, he shall be heard.

And he who will not leave himself,
But stays down with his cares
(Or with his thoughts of power and pelf),
Though loud and loud his prayers,
Beyond earth's dome of arching skies
They shall not rise, they shall not rise.

Oh ye, who seek for strength and power,
Seek first some quiet spot,
And fashion, through a silent hour,
Your stairway, thought by thought.
Then climb, and pray to God on high.
He shall reply, He shall reply.

A Ringing Alarm to the Farmer

He Quotes President Charles S. Barrett, of the Farmers' Union, Regarding Foreign Ownership of Cotton Fields in the South.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

IF any man thinks that the millions of American farmers are asleep or indifferent to economic changes and passing events, that man is mistaken.

On the tariff, on the currency, on farm credits, and on the outside investments in agriculture every farmer is reading, thinking—and preparing to vote!

Even if the farmer were ignorant or apathetic upon public questions, he has wise and watchful leaders who, upon the watchtower, are sounding continually the bugles of advance or the alarms of retreat.

Among the ablest of these is Charles Barrett, president of the Farmers' Union, with two and a half million enrolled members—perhaps the most popular and influential of all American farmers.

Foreign Ownership.

I asked this great farmer recently if he wished to use the far-reaching columns of the Hearst newspapers to sound any new counsel to the American farmer. And he promptly responded:

"Yes; I never omit an opportunity to use that vast newspaper circulation to speak for my people.

"I have something now to say about the alien or foreign ownership of our lands, particularly those lands in the South adaptable to cotton. I have said that the steady reach of foreigners after that imperial staple was an alarming development! I believed years ago that this was a serious menace, and now I am sure of it.

"Now, listen, you scoffers and unbelievers. Do you know that between twelve and thirteen million acres of the finest cotton lands in the South are now owned outright by foreign individuals and corporations? Do you know that agents of these foreign individuals and corporations are constantly working to get more millions of acres of the cream of cotton lands? Do you know that foreign spinners are sending men here to be educated in our agricultural colleges and schools to take charge of these broad acres, cultivate and raise cotton to ship to spinners in England, France and other foreign countries?

Our Richest Heritage.

"Do you think deep and sense what this means? Do you know that it means the actual production of cotton in the South on farms owned and cultivated by foreigners, and whose product will go direct to their mills in England, France and other countries? In plain words, we are sitting supinely by while foreign capital and corporations are taking our oldest, richest and greatest heritage right from under our noses.

"Time may not be far distant when our own people, the men who have raised and supplied the world with its cotton for generations, will be restricted absolutely to the home market. Sounds scary, and I want it to sound so, for it is time to get scared.

"This is a vital question which I would thank the Hearst newspapers and other great conservators of American interests to help our people to solve."

Life as Seen in the Movies

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

FIRST we see Harold folding Susie in his arms. In the background is the train that is to take Harold to the West, where he will make his fortune, after which he will return and make Susie the happiest girl in the world. In the background is George sneering like the plotting villain we know him to be the moment we set eyes on him. The conductor, who has been very patient, gives the signal. Harold climbs aboard at the last minute.

The Telegram.

Next we behold George and Susie speeding homeward in George's six-cylinder car. George is talking in what looks like a low, earnest voice, but Susie refuses to be interested. Suddenly he pulls from his pocket a telegram. Susie sits up suddenly. And well she may. For the film announces that the contents of the telegram are to the effect that Harold has gone to the West to marry another. What other we do not yet know.

We now behold Susie weeping at a desk in a room so full of furniture that no burglar could get halfway across it without waking up all the people in the next block. In her little hand she holds the telegram for a time, then tears it spitefully into bits that flutter out on the breeze that is blowing the Valenciennes curtains in twelve windows. George enters. He looks at the fragmentary telegram and sneers. Then he looks at Susie and smiles. Presently he engages in more low, earnest conversation, and you judge he is describing his yacht, his bank account and his country place at Mamaroneck. But Susie shrinks from these things.

"At Last!"

But evidently George knows more of Susie's disposition than we do. He points to the telegram and sneers, this time for three seconds. Susie sits bolt upright and thinks. Then she rises and paces the floor, deftly threading her way in and out among the furniture like a guide in the North Woods. At last she nods her head, but when George approaches enthusiastically she shakes it.

Here in the West, which is denoted by a lonely cabin in a stone quarry, is Harold. He is sitting by a fire examining nuggets. Evidently none of them is good for much but concrete work. But now he leans forward intently and examines one. Reaching for the only article of wardrobe in evidence, a coat, he dashes madly from the room and we next behold him entering an opening in the stone quarry through which trickles a rivulet. Bending over the rivulet, he picks up more nuggets. "At last" are the words we see plainly on his lips. They are subsequently verified by the text on the screen.

Harold re-enters the lonely cabin, and carefully hangs the coat on the same nail. A rough, unshaved person enters and hands him a letter. He opens it. His face clouds. Bad news from home, we conjecture. Right. Mighty bad news. Harold is being invited to Susie's wedding and George is going to be the bridegroom.

Throwing the newly found nugget out of the window, Harold hurriedly leaves the room.

Harold to the Rescue.

Here comes the Overland Limited. Nearer and nearer till we fear it will collide with the audience. But across the track suddenly darts a man waving a campaign hat. It is Harold. Will he be run over? No. The train stops. Harold climbs on. The train moves into nothingness just as we duck to avoid being hit by the pilot.

At the same old station Harold alights. He commandeers an automobile, and, taking the wheel, departs while the owner indignantly shakes his fist after him.

Same room, full of same furniture, but further embellished with a wedding bell and a minister. Enter Harold from one door and Susie from another. Harold steps forward just as George enters from a third, Susie, being in something of a dilemma, gets out of it neatly by fainting. George attempts to sneer, but doesn't get away with it. The .44 Harold has in his hand interferes. Evidently there are explanations. Susie's father, a gentleman with a limousine body, comes in and revives her. George, discovering that his fake telegram has been exposed, sneers for the last time and goes out a window. Harold folds Susie to his stalwart breast. The minister steps forward and the play is done.

JUDGE'S RULING STATE VICTORY

Dr. Harris Unshaken On Time of Girl's Death

ONE OF WITNESSES FOR DEFENSE

Mrs. Emma Freeman, who will testify for Leo Frank.

Buys an Automobile With Small Change

SELMA, Aug. 6.—Burwell Hardy has bought a brand new runabout automobile. And it is all paid for, too.

Burwell called at a local garage a day or two ago and asked the prices on machines of various sizes and types. He told the dealer he would call again next day, which he did, and asked to be driven over the city. This was done. He said that he would come again. He did next day.

Burwell told the dealer to take him out to the little store he conducts in East Selma and he would get the money. This was done and Burwell lugged out a box of money. In the box was $650 in nickels, dimes and quarters, nothing larger than a "two-bit" piece.

Girl Leads Strike Of 10,000 Knitters

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Three thousand more knitting mill operatives joined the strike here to-day, bringing the total number of strikers, mostly women, up to 10,000.

The strike is being led by Miss Jennie Persley, 20 years old.

WOULD WORK PAUPERS.

ANNISTON, Aug. 6.—Commissioner J. C. Chandler, of the County Board of Revenue, to-day submitted to the board a plan by which he believes the county's alms house can be made self-supporting by working the inmates on the farm.

Mobile Girl Is Found Helpless on Street

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 6.—Miss Marie Pollard was picked up on the streets of Montgomery at an early hour to-day in a semi-conscious condition. She is the daughter of prominent parents in Mobile, who have ordered an investigation.

The girl declared she met Leslie Brown, of Mobile, on the street, when he gave her a drink and that was the last she remembered. She was visiting in Montgomery.

ADVOCATES PIG CLUBS.

ANNISTON, Aug. 6.—N. R. Baker, State Rural Supervisor of Public Schools, addressed the Calhoun County Teachers' Institute here to-day. He urged that more attention should be paid to pig clubs along with girls' tomato clubs and boys' corn clubs.

WEST POINT GIRL WEDS.

MOBILE, Aug. 6.—Elisha D. Sasser, of Bixley, Miss. and Miss Nellie L. Simpler, of West Point, Ga., were married here to-day in the probate court by Judge Price Williams, Jr.

Probe Continues in Moose Lodge Deaths

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 6.—Mat Stradford, an electrician, told the Coroner's Jury investigating the deaths of Christopher Gustin and Donald Kenny, during their initiation into the local lodge of Moose, that he had sold the magneto used by the Moose to the local Elks' lodge, which, in turn, sold it to the Moose. He said that the magneto could have generated 2,000 volts of electricity, enough to kill a man or to send a message to Nashville. D. O. Echols, undertaker at Ensley, said that Kenny's body had a black spot on the breast when it arrived at the undertaking place the morning after lodge meeting.

Many witnesses are being examined in the investigation.

W. C. T. U. BARS SUFFRAGE.

GADSDEN, August 6.—Fearing it would cause a breach in the ranks, woman's suffrage was not permitted for discussion at a district meeting of the W. C. T. U. here to-day.

SAYS PASTOR TOOK 'HUSH' MONEY

Minister Accused of Accepting $1,500 From Own Brother, Who Was Friendly With Wife.

MACON, Aug. 6.—The Rev. E. T. Moore, a Baptist minister, at Andersonville, formerly of Macon, is charged by Attorney Oliver C. Hancock, in a suit brought in the city court of Americus, with extorting $1,500 from his own brother as a price for silence in court as to his brother's alleged intimacy with Mrs. Moore.

Mrs. Moore now is living with her parents at Eufaula, Ala., and the two children are temporarily in her custody. Rev. Mr. Moore, while here, resided in the Mercer University community and was highly esteemed both as a man and a minister.

Last year Rev. Mr. Moore obtained a divorce from his wife in the Bibb Superior Court, after a hotly contested trial. He charged her with being unfaithful. One of the alleged corespondents swore to improper relations with Mrs. Moore, who is a strikingly handsome woman of about 35 years. It is now charged that Rev. Mr. Moore found his own brother and Mrs. Moore in a compromising position and that he threatened his brother, who was about to be married, with exposure unless given $1,500.

Attorney Hancock alleges that he can prove the facts and the actual payment of the money.

This charge forms part of a suit brought for the recovery of a fee for legal services. Mr. Hancock claims that Rev. Mr. Moore has not only refused to pay him for services in procuring the divorce, but also borrowed $50 while the case was pending which he also refuses to repay.

Comer Picks Garber To Manage Campaign

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 6.—Former Governor B. B. Comer announced today that Alex M. Garber, former Attorney General of the State, would be his campaign manager. A hot campaign will be waged.

Comer and Walter D. Seed, now Lieutenant Governor and a candidate for Governor, will meet in debate Friday morning in Tuscaloosa and interesting addresses are expected. Comer and Seed are both prohibitionists. However, Comer has not been giving prohibition much attention in his campaign so far. Seed claims to be the "real prohibitionist" in the race.

8 Strikebreakers Arrive at Mobile

MOBILE, Aug. 6.—With the arrival of eight strikebreakers from New Orleans, employers say they have already half completed a victory over the striking boilermakers, machinists, ship-carpenters and caulkers. Although the men on strike watched local stations for the arrival of strikebreakers, the eight men say they reached here without the knowledge of the working crafts.

No violence has been shown by the strikers. The police have notified them that no picketing will be allowed. Employers of shipworkers and ironworkers are scouring the country for non-union help.

First Bale in Selma Sells for 16 Cents

SELMA, Aug. 6.—The first bale of cotton this season sold at auction on the Selma Cotton Exchange at noon to-day for 16 cents a pound. The W. L. Thompson Company was the buyer. The movement of the crop will become general in the next few days. Fields are now white with open staple.

Two other bales were received today at this market. The season starts ten days earlier than last year.

NAB OFFICIAL ON FORGERY CHARGE

Commissioner Drysdale, of Duval County, Accused at Jacksonville of Raising Notes.

JACKSONVILLE, Aug. 6.—At noon to-day Richard D. Drysdale, County Commissioner for the Second District of Duvall county, was arrested at the close of a session of the Board on a warrant charging forgery.

The warrant grew out of an affidavit sworn to by the firm of Coons and Golder, who allege that last May they gave to Drysdale two notes for $750 each and that he cashed the notes at the Barnett National Bank after raising them to $1,750 each.

The arrest of the popular official caused a sensation at the courthouse. Officials of the Barnett Bank stated this afternoon that the notes had been made out in blank form by firm of Coon and Golder and that Drysdale had filled them in for $1,750.

Mr. Golder, President of Coons and Golder, who signed the affidavit, stated that the notes were not made out in black form and that if held up to the light it would be seen that they had been tampered with.

Mr. Drysdale was released on a bond of $1,600.

Justice C. D. Abbott, who made out the affidavits and warrant, stated later that the affidavit was faulty in that the copy of the original note was for $1,750 instead of $750.

Miami Women War On 'Indecent' Dress

MIAMI, Aug. 6.—Women of Miami composing the Purity League have decided to wage war on slit skirts and silhouette gowns.

At a meeting of the league a resolution was adopted binding each member to act as a committee to watch for the new costumes and whenever one is seen to notify the wearer to go home and "put on something decent" on pain of being reported to the police—even though there is no city ordinance prohibiting the wearing of garments of the kind.

The women are also highly indignant because there is no ordinance regulating the hour of bedtime for youngsters, and they are preparing a monster petition to the City Council asking that body to pass a curfew law.

Miami 17 Years Old; To Celebrate Event

MIAMI, Aug. 6.—Miami, the magic city of Florida, will be seventeen years old Friday. A big celebration commemorating this event begins Thursday, to continue through Saturday.

The city was incorporated August 8, 1896, and to-day claims a population of 14,334. The first train arrived in Miami April 23, 1896, and the first permanent structure was erected that summer.

Miami celebrates her birthday every year, this time with excursion trains from Jacksonville and Key West over the Florida East Coast Railroad, the building of which made the city possible.

Postal Fraud Case Indictment Likely

GADSDEN, Aug. 6.—The Federal Grand Jury is preparing to make a report in the case of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne promoter charged with using the mails to defraud. If an indictment is returned against him he will be tried immediately.

Drew is already under conviction in one case. He was sentenced to the Federal Penitentiary at Atlanta, but took an appeal to the United States Court of Appeals. His operations have been extensive. Witnesses from Maine, Massachusetts and other Eastern States are here.

Wilson, Bryan and Daniels Will Visit Mobile in October

MOBILE, Aug. 6.—President Wilson has conditionally accepted an invitation to visit Mobile during the Southern Commercial Congress and the Panama Canal Celebration in October. Secretary of State Bryan and Secretary of the Navy Wilson have also accepted invitations.

The invitations were presented today by Governor O'Neal and a delegation of Alabama and Southern congressional representatives.

Secretary Bryan will speak on "Farther South" and Secretary Daniels on "The South and Our Navy." John Barrett, of the Pan-American Union, will discuss "What the Canal Means to Pan-America."

Georgia Boy Finds Sailor's Life Hard

TAMPA, Aug. 6.—Fifteen-year-old Emmett Smith, of Columbus, Ga., struck town this morning on the British steamer, St. Ronald, and is sure glad to be on American soil again.

He and another boy ran away from home several months ago and shipped on an Italian bark at Mobile for Rio De Janeiro, receiving treatment on the way that convinced them that the sailor's life was not their sort.

They got away from the bark at Rio and went to the American Consul, who kept the boys until young Smith got a chance to come here on the St. Ronald. He was passed into this country by Immigration Officer Whalen and has telegraphed to his father for funds.

Runaway Physician And Girl Returned

TAMPA, Aug. 6.—Dr. Guil M. Howsley, who eloped from here with his 13-year-old sister-in-law, Anita Castellanos, in November, was brought back from Corss Beck, Texas, by Deputy Sheriff Woodward to-day and will be arraigned in criminal court to answer to a charge of enticing a girl away from home for immoral purposes.

Howsley says his wife was not kind to him; that he consulted with the girl and they decided to leave. He says he did not mistreat the child.

The girl appeared in the Sheriff's office to-day wearing a child's sandals and knee skirts.

Taken to Hospital to Have Button Removed

EUFAULA, Aug. 6.—Dervine, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Mercer, of Clayton, this county, was rushed to a hospital at Montgomery to-day to have a button removed from one of her nostrils.

The child put the button in her nose while at play and has been suffering mubc pain

Her parents and local physicians were unable to remove it.

Prisoner Leaps From Police Chief's Office

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 6.—As Herbert Thomas, of Louisville, was being interrogated in the office of Chief of Police Bodeker this afternoon he attempted to escape by jumping out of a window. He missed a shed roof and fell to the sidewalk, 20 feet below. He sustained serious injuries, but will recover.

Thomas had been arrested by Detectives Cole and Goldstein.

Tubercular Persons Barred as Teachers

ANNISTON, Aug. 6.—The Calhoun County Medical Society has received a suggestion from County Health Officer R. L. Hughes that all teachers of the county be examined by health experts with special reference to tuberculosis.

Those found to be afflicted with the latter disease will be barred from teaching in the public schools.

CHILD FATALLY SCALDED.

HUNTSVILLE, Aug. 6.—Mrs. D. B. Hartman, while canning preserves at Abingdon, overturned a kettle of boiling fruit on the body of her two-year-old baby, fatally scalding the child.

DAMAGING TESTIMONY OF CONLEY MAY STAY IN, JUDGE'S DECISION

A decisive victory was scored by the State Wednesday afternoon in the bitter struggle over the admissibility of certain portions of Jim Conley's testimony which has reference to Leo Frank's alleged conduct with women visitors at the factory.

Judge Roan ruled that all of Conley's testimony should stand; he also ruled that the testimony of C. B. Dalton on the same subject insofar as it was corroborative of Conley's statements might be presented, and that he would rule on it as it came up.

Judge Roan's only ruling which favored the defense was that the proposed testimony of young George Epps was entirely inadmissible. The part of Epps' testimony to which the defense objected was that Mary Phagan had told him that she was afraid of Frank, and that Frank had tried to flirt with her.

Mistrial Talk By Arnold.

The announcement of Judge Roan's ruling was a signal for a murmer of applause and a stamping of feet about the room.

Reuben Arnold was on his feet instantly.

"Such a demonstration might easily cause a mistrial," he cried.

"The jury is not in," Solicitor Dorsey remarked.

"That makes no difference, the jury might have heard it," retorted Arnold. "If any applause like thi soccurs again I shall move that the courtroom be cleared."

Dr. H. F. Harris, who collapsed on the stand last Friday, was recalled as soon as the ruling was announced. He was able to present nothing new for more than half an hour due to the clash over the admissibility of testimony in regard to some of his scientific experiments which the State asserted had a bearing on the case.

"I say with almost absolute certainty that Mary Phagan lived not more than 30 or 45 minutes," said the medical expert, as soon as he had been recalled to the stand by Solicitor Dorsey.

Dr. Harris declared there could be no doutb as to the result of his analysis of the contents of the girl's stomach. The cabbage she had eaten had been hardly affected by the digestive juices, he said. Answering the contention of the defense that cabbage is especially hard to digest, the physician said that the biscuit the girl had eaten had progressed no further in its digestion than the cabbage.

Hot Argument Over Excluding Testimony.

The State has virtually completed its case.

It was reported during the confusion after the judge's announcement of his ruling that Reuben Arnold had made a motion for a mistrial. Mr. Arnold later explained that he had made it, and then withdrawn it because the jury was not in the room.

The fight to exclude Conley's testimony in regard to Frank's alleged conduct proved one of the exciting incidents of the morning session. The argument was still in progress when court adjourned for the noon recess. That and Conley's sensational declaration that Frank had hid the murder victim's silver-plated mesh bag, for which the detectives have been searching for months, in the safe in the factory office immediately after the crime were the features of the day.

Reuben Arnold argued that it was inadmissible because irrelevant and immaterial, and that it was a violation of the general principle in law that because A committed X last year, it can not be introduced to show that he committed X of which he is now accused.

Early Ruling Is Promised.

Combating the contention of Attorney Hooper that the objection of the defense had not been made until the lawyers for Frank had cross-examined the negro and found that they could get no reversal of statements from him, Arnold cited cases in a large number of States indicating that it is a well defined privilege that testimony may be stricken out at the instance of the defense even after the cross-examination has taken place. Judge Roan said that he would make his ruling early in the afternoon session. Colonel Arnold grew faint during the argument and got the judge's consent to talk sitting.

Attorney Rosser's manner was angry and threatening when he arose for the re-cross-examination of Jim Conley, who had testified to seeing Frank hide Mary Phagan's purse in his safe. He began at once a vicious attack on Conley's story of the mesh bag. He asked when Conley first told this remarkable tale. Conley said he couldn't remember.

"Why didn't you tell all this when you were telling 'the whole

CONLEY SAYS FRANK TOOK MARY PHAGAN'S MESH BAG

Lies Down on Floor to Show Jury How He Left Girl's Body in Cellar

NEGRO'S LONG GRILL ENDS AFTER 15 HOURS, HIS MAIN STORY STILL UNSHAKEN

truth' to the detectives?'' Rosser shouted.

The attorney apparently sought to create the impression that the mesh bag story was an afterthought, and that it was manufactured by the negro when he heard of the search the detectives were making for the bag.

On Grill Over Thirteen Hours.

When Rosser turned Conley back to Dorsey for the redirect examination, the negro had been under the grill of Rosser's cross-questioning for a total of thirteen hours. His main story of Frank's admitting the killing and of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body at Frank's direction was unshaken except by his own admissions of previous falsehoods. He had been on the stand a total of fifteen and one-half hours. Of this time the Solicitor had questioned him only about two hours.

Conley was called from the stand at 11:10 o'clock.

Conley was taken into an anteroom. He removed his coat and lit a cigarette someone had given him.

''How did you like it?'' he was asked.

''I liked it all right,'' he replied, grinning.

Sheriff Mangum then interrupted the questioning of the reporters, saying that under the judge's orders no one could speak to him.

The next moment Conley picked up a newspaper and became intently interested in the story of his own testimony.

As soon as court opened Mr. Rosser asked the judge if he was ready to hear argument on the proposition to eliminate parts of Conley's testimony. He said he was prepared to support his motion with authorities.

Judge Roan replied that he would postpone his decision until 2 o'clock.

Solicitor Dorsey declared that he had witnesses he expects to put on the stand Wednesday morning to substantiate the part of the negro's testimony in dispute. He said:

"I just want the court to understand that I am going to do this."

Judge Roan replied:

"I'll give you the benefit of whatever you bring out."

Conley was then recalled to the stand for the conclusion of his cross-examination.

Questioned About Affidavit.

Rosser's first question was:

Q. You made this statement just as I read it, didn't you, Jim?—A. Yes.

Q. It's all correct?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, Jim, you signed this statement, too, didn't you? (Showing another affidavit.)—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You made this one the day after the one I just read? Now, listen, and see if this is what you said?

Mr. Rosser read how Jim Conley for the first time told the story of carrying the body of Mary Phagan to the basement. These were the concluding words:

"The reason I have not told this before is that Mr. Frank said he would get me out, but it don't seem that he is going to get out and I have decided to tell the whole truth. I gave him back the $200. He said he would fix it all right Monday."

Q. This is what you swore, isn't it, Jim?—A. Yes, sir; I swore it.

Q. Jim, didn't Miss Carson ask you on Monday while you were working around her machine when they were going to get you, you answered that you hadn't done nothing?—A. No, sir.

Denies Alarm While Sweeping.

Q. Didn't she say that Mr. Frank was innocent and the real murderer of little Mary Phagan was the man Mrs. White saw near the steps? You dropped your broom and quit sweeping when she said that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Didn't you say to Mr. Herbert Schiff on Monday after the murder that you were afraid to go out of the factory and that you would give a million dollars to be a white man? A. I didn't say just that, but I told him if I was a white man I would go on out.

Q. He told you to get on out, asking you what you had to be afraid of?—A. Something like that.

Q. Jim, you talked with Julia Fuss on that day and asked her if she had another extra? You asked her if she got one to let you see it?—A. No, sir.

Q. She told you that Mr. Frank was innocent, didn't she? And you said he was innocent as the angels in heaven?—A. No, sir; I didn't say that.

Mr. Rosser closed the cross-examination and Solicitor Dorsey began the redirect examination.

Q. Jim, where were you in prison? A. Police headquarters.

Q. Were you ever in jail?—A. Yes.

Q. What were you charged with?—A. Just because I was washing my shirt.

Q. I mean those other times you were arrested. Were you in the county jail then?—A. No, I was in headquarters.

Rosser interrupted:

"The charges are in writing, your honor. They are the last evidence."

"It's a poor rule that doesn't work both ways," said Dorsey. "Can't we exclude this evidence?"

Judge Roan: "You can show where he was."

Q. What were you arrested for the first time?—A. I was throwing rocks.

Q. Who arrested you?—A. A police named Edmonds.

Q. The second time?—A. I was fighting.

Q. A white man or a woman?—A. No, I never had any trouble with white folks.

Q. Jim, did you try to see Mr. Frank in jail?

Rosser objected.

Judge Roan—Don't lead him, Mr. Dorsey.

Q. Did you ever see Frank after you went to the pencil factory?—A. No.

Q. Why not?

Rosser objected to the question as immaterial. Dorsey changed his question.

Last Saw Frank at Station.

Q. When was the last time you saw Frank before you saw him here?—A. Over there at the police station.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. No, he just smiled and bowed his head.

Q. When you wrote those notes, did you sit down, and, if so, where?—A. I was sitting at the desk.

Q. Where was Frank sitting?—A. At the other desk.

Attorney Rosser objected. "He went into all that before," he said.

Judge Roan—Did you, Mr. Dorsey?

"No, it is something I omitted," said Dorsey.

Q. What did Frank do when he you wrote those notes?

Rosser objected to the question as leading.

Q. Did Frank touch your pencil when you were writing?

Rosser objected again, declaring that the question was leading.

Judge Roan said the question could be asked without leading.

Q. What, if anything, did Mr. Frank do when you were writing?—A. He took the pencil out of my hand and told me to rule out that "s" on the "negro."

Q. What hour was it Friday Frank came up on the fourth floor and spoke to you?—A. About 3 o'clock.

Says Frank Took Girl's Bag.

Q. How far was it from where you were Tuesday when he told you to be a good boy?—A. Almost the same place.

Q. How far was it from the water cooler to where her body was dragged?—A. I don't know, sir.

Q. How far from the water cooler? A. I don't know.

Q. Did you ever see Mary Phagan's pocketbook or meshbag?—A. Yes, it was on the desk in Mr. Frank's office.

Q. What did he do with it?—A. He put it in the safe.

Q. How long were you in jail before you wrote for the detectives?—A. About ten or fifteen days.

Q. How long would it take Frank to go down and lock that door?—A. About one minute.

Q. Where was Frank standing when you saw the clock at four minutes to one?—A. He was standing near those stair steps.

Q. Describe that scream you heard. Rosser objected.

"He has gone into that before, your honor," he said.

The question was sustained, Judge Roan saying: "The question cannot be asked because it is reopening a long cross-examination."

Q. Jim, who has asked you the most questions, Mr. Black, Scott, Starnes and Campbell and myself or Mr. Rosser?

Tries to Show Court Grilling.

Rosser objected.

Dorsey: "Your honor, he has tried to bring out the fact that this witness has been grilled. I want to show that altogether he was not questioned as long or as much as Mr. Rosser has questioned him on the stand.

Judge Roan: "You can ask him how long he was questioned out of court, and what has gone on here is public."

Dorsey put the question again.

Q. How long was the longest you was ever questioned before you came here?—A. Mr. Scott came and got me one day and I herd him tell the turnkey it was fifteen minutes to eleven. It was dark when I got back.

Q. How long was that?—A. I'd say about three and one-half hours.

Q. How long has Mr. Rosser questioned you?

"Your honor, I want to get this answer in the records," said Dorsey.

Judge Roan: "Do you object?" looking at Mr. Rosser.

"I do," said Rosser.

"I sustain you," said the court.

Dorsey continued the questioning.

Q. Jim, how did you leave the body in the basement?—A. I left her on her side.

Lies on Floor to Answer Query.

Q. How? (Conley got down on the floor and lay on his left side, his arms against his body. After the illustration he identified a photograph of the basement and pointed out just where he left the body).

Q. Now, Jim, tell the jury in detail everything you did after you looked at the clock at 4 minutes to 1.

Rosser objected. "He has gone into that, your honor," he said.

"Have you, Mr. Dorsey?" Judge Roan asked.

"We have not gone into that detail," Dorsey replied. "We want to show the jury how long it would have taken to do the things there and how long it would have taken Frank to get to his home. Mr. Rosser has brought out this detail to draw his conclusions."

Judge Roan: "Have you asked that?"

Dorsey: "Yes."

Judge Roan: "Then I sustain the objection."

Dorsey: "That's all right, your honor. If you think the State ought not to ask these questions, it is all right with me."

Promised Help in Trouble.

Q. What kind of paper were you talking about when you spoke of green sheets?—A. That one (identifying the white note).

Q. What kind of back did it have?—A. A kind of grayish pad.

Q. What did Frank say about taking you to Brooklyn?—A. He didn't. He said he would take me away, and if I got into trouble he would get me out.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Mincey?—A. No; I saw him at police headquarters.

Q. What did he say?

Rosser objected, and the objection was sustained.

Q. That night at jail, did those newspaper men come on the inside?—A. No.

Q. What did they say? Wait a minute; I want those two men out. (Two newspaper reporters, H. W. Ross and Harllee Branch, of The Atlanta Journal, who were at the press table, retired from the courtroom.)—A. I can't remember that.

Q. Did they offer you anything at all?

Rosser objected, and was sustained. Conley had answered the question, though, declaring that nothing was offered him but a paper.

Q. That day at the factory, were you nervous or not?—A. No; I was not.

Darley Know He Could Write.

Q. What did Mr. Schiff say to you?—A. They were standing there by the clock and asked if there was a crowd at the front door. Mr. Schiff came in and I said I wish I was a white man; that I would go out from there. One man said he wished he had a pistol. Mr. Schiff said: 'They've got Mr. Frank in jail. I don't see that being white would help."

Q. Did Darley know you could write?—A. Yes.

Rosser objected. "It is immaterial," said he.

Dorsey: "We want to show that this man could write; that he was in jail several days without writing, and the detectives, the Pinkertons employed by the factory, knew he could write.

Q. Could you spell luxury?—A. Yes.

Q. Why?—A. I had to write it several times. Mr. Frank had me to write down the names of the different boxes that pencils were in, and give them to him, so that he could know when they were out.

Attorney Rosser took up the re-cross-examination:

Q. Jim, you were questioned by Mr. Dorsey and myself and all the detectives, and this morning was the first time you ever mentioned that mesh bag.—A. You didn't ask me.

Q. Do you know what I asked you yesterday?—A. Yes, sir; I remember some of the questions.

Q. What?—A. Well, I don't remember just exactly.

Q. You don't remember a single thing that has not been written down?

Dorsey objected. "He must give the witness time to answer," said he.

Q. Jim, haven't you answered my questions?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said this morning that Mr. Frank promised to get you out on bond and send you out of town?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why didn't you tell the detectives that when you told them you were telling all the truth?—A. I did tell them hep romised to get me out.

Q. Mr. Dorsey saw you seven times, didn't he?—A. Yes, sir; I think that's right.

Q. Did he take down what you said? A. He took down something the first time.

Q. How about the next times?—A. I disremember.

Q. How long have you kept up with those boxes?—A. About a year.

Conley Tries Spelling.

Q. And you wrote Mr. Frank reports on these boxes?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Would you know "luxury" if you were to see it?—A. No, sir.

Q. How did you write it for Mr. Frank, then?—A. I can write it.

Q. Can you spell it?—I can try it.

Q. Well let's hear you spell 'luxury.'

A. L-u-s-t-r-i-s.

Q. Was that the only kind of pencil boxes up there?—A. No, sir. There was Uncle Remus, Thomas Jefferson, George Washington and others.

Q. Did you write reports on them? A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let's hear you spell 'Uncle Remus.'—A. O-n-e R-i-m-e-s.

Q. Let's hear you spell 'Thomas Jefferson.'—A. T-o-m J-e-f-s-s.

Q. Let's hear you spell 'George Washington.'—A. J-o-e W-i-s-h-t-o-n.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say about your spelling?—A. He laughed.

Q. How do you spell 'C'?—A. O-x.

Q. How did you write him notes to borrow money?—A. I just wrote them.

Q. Tell me what you wrote?—A. I just said: 'Please let me have fifty cents.'

Q. When you were standing by that box talking, could Mr. Darley hear you?—A. Yes.

Q. Could Mr. Schiff?—A. Yes.

Q. Could that boy?—A. Yes.

Q. The shipping clerk?—A. Yes.

Asked If He Could Write.

Q. When you went into the office to write those notes, Mr. Frank asked you if you could write, didn't he?—A. Yes.

Rosser put the question again.

Dorsey objected to the repetition, and the objection was sustained.

Q. Messrs. Hooper and Dorsey were with you in the jail together, were they not?—A. Yes.

Q. How long?—A. Two or three hours.

Dorsey Wins Ruling.

Q. How long after April 26 was it you saw this man?—A. About a month.

Dorsey took the witness again.

Q. I want you to describe that pocketbook.—A. It was a wire-ish looking pocketbook, kind of whitish looking.

Q. Did you have anything to copy from when you wrote those words?—A. I could see the boxes.

Dorsey: "Come down, Jim."

Rosser: "Just a minute."

Q. Jim, tell me how large that pocketbook was.—A. I can't say, it was kind of folded up.

Q. Give us your best estimate.—A. It was about like this (indicating about 5 inches.)

Conley was then excused, having been on the stand since 9:45 Monday morning.

Dalton Called to Stand.

C. B. Dalton was called to the stand.

Dalton is the man Conley declared was in the factory with Frank and the women on Saturday afternoons when he watched.

Before questioning Dalton, Solicitor Dorsey obtained consent to tender the notes found by the side of the dead girl and a photograph of the basement as evidence.

Dalton came in and took the chair. He is a man of about 35 years of age rather rough in appearance. He has brown hair and overhanging brows and thin, tightly compressed lips. Solicitor Dorsey recalled him before putting any questions, and Mrs. Arthur White was called. Dorsey stated that he would call Dalton later. Dorsey questioned Mrs. White. He had Jim Conley brought back into the room.

Q. Mrs. White, look at this man right good. Do you know who he is?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see him before?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. At police headquarters.

Q. Does he compare in general size to the man you saw in the National Pencil Factory April 26? ("Put on your hat, Jim," said Dorsey to Conley.)—A. He looks more like him than any man I have seen.

Q. At the time you saw him at the police station did you identify him?—A. I did not.

Rosser objected.

Q. What did you say?

Rosser: "I object. I wasn't there."

Dorsey: "Your representative, Mr. Scott, was there."

Rosser: "I move to rule that out."

A. I said he looked more like the one than any man I have seen.

Rosser: "I move to rule it all out."

Dorsey: "We expect to show by this witness that this was the man. We want to show how he was dressed, his facial expression, etc., and we submit that it is material."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

Q. Describe the man you saw.—A. He was about the size of the one just brought before me whom I have been told is Jim Conley. He was in a dark place and I took him to be black. He had on dark clothes and I don't know whether he had on a hat or not.

Q. Wade Campbell is your brother, and Arthur White your husband, aren't they?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you tell them you saw a negro sitting in that hall?

Rosser objected.

Laughing Spectators Ousted.

The odd situation of the attorneys for the defense being in possession of the official court records was relieved when Mr. Arnold consented to them being read.

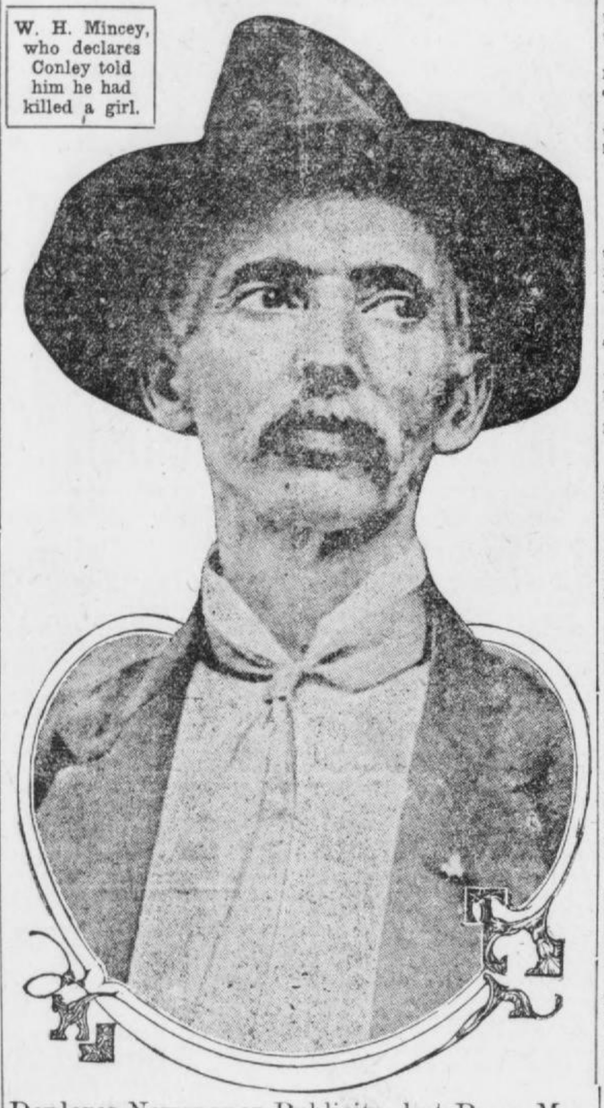

Mr. Rosser, however, found it first in his copy of the testimony of Scott.

Rosser—You were right. Harry Scott did say Mrs. White told Frank

ACCUSER OF CONLEY IS READY TO TESTIFY

W. H. Mincey, who declares Conley told him he had killed a girl.

Deplores Newspaper Publicity, but Poses Merrily for the Camera Brigade.

W. H. Mincey, the school teacher and insurance solicitor who made an affidavit that Jim Conley confessed to him that he had already killed a girl that day and didn't want to kill anyone else, was the center of attraction for the crowd on the outside of the courthouse Wednesday morning.

While deploring newspaper publicity, he readily agreed to pose for a group of newspaper photographers, assuming many poses, some of which were rather grotesque. He followed this with implicit instructions to the photographer that his picture was not to be printed in the papers.

Efforts to get him to state whether he had seen Jim Conley since his arrest proved futile. Mincey declared he would not make this statement or answer until he had taken the stand.

Mincey was located at New Salem, Ga., near Rising Fawn, in Dade County. He is teaching school there, his work being the preparation of students to enter the Martha Berry School at Rome.

"I will not talk of the case and will not tell my story until I take the stand," said Mincey. "If Jim Conley killed little Mary Phagan, I feel that it is my duty to tell of the experience I had with him that Saturday afternoon. I don't think this thing should be discussed in the newspapers, though I regard newspapers as a necessity. These matters should be left to the court hearings. It is a loss to me to be here and I trust the case will soon be over. I think, though, that it is my duty to tell what I know."

Mincey is a man of small stature with piercing eyes and a gray mustache. He wears a black felt slouch hat and a dark suit.

Ready to Rebut Mincey Story.

J. W. Boozer, a collector for Patrick & Thompson, Broad street jewelers, from whom Jim Conley purchased a watch, has been summoned as a witness by the State, but released subject to call. He is ready to give testimony to rebut the Mincey affidavit. When asked what he knew of the case, Mr. Boozer said:

"On Saturday afternoon on the day Mary Phagan was murdered, about 4:15 o'clock, I met Conley on Peters street. I asked him if he had any money and he said no, that he drew his wages on Friday evening and had spent it. He then asked me if I had not collected the installment due from Frank."

"Why should you collect from Frank?" Mr. Boozer was asked.

"We had caused the arrest of Conley several times on account of the failure to pay installments. Frank agreed that if Conley would sign the agreement he would deduct the amount of the installment from the pay of the negro each week. To this Conley assented, and I had from that time collected from Frank."

"That being the case, why did you ask the negro for the money on the Saturday mentioned?" was asked.

"I had instructions from Frank that in case I did not collect the money before 1:30 on Saturday not to come until the next week. I had several accounts due on that date and it was impossible for me to reach the pencil factory earlier."

NEGRO COOL AND UNAFRAID DESPITE FIERCE ATTACK OF DEFENSE ON HIS STORY

Jim Conley was the same cool, unafraid negro when he returned to the stand Wednesday morning in the trial of Leo Frank after almost two whole days under the cross-examination of Luther Rosser. He had passed through fire and didn't seem to mind it. He had no fear of anything that was yet to come.

Mr. Rosser might threaten him or might joke with him; it was all the same to the negro. He had tried both and had established but one thing—that Conley is a liar, and Conley admits that.

Arnold might describe him as "that miserable wretch in the witness chair;" he could gaze calmly out the window as he had done before. He didn't quite understand all those names they were calling him, anyway.

If, in all the time that Conley was under the raking fire of Rosser's cross-examination, he was disturbed in the slightest degree, it was when he was being asked about that mysterious affidavit of William H. Mincey.

The declaration of Mincey that Conley had boasted the afternoon of April 26 of killing a girl was sinister and held in it the possibility that Rosser would finish by blazing forth with a direct charge of murder against the negro. Conley moved uneasily in his seat. He refused to meet the eye of his inquisitor. He fidgeted with his hands, but with his lips he framed a denial of every damning charge contained in the document.

The ordeal soon was over. Conley regained his composure, and when court adjourned a few minutes later a grin of triumph cleft his black face almost in twain.

Attorney Sees Conley.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, provided him with supper and breakfast at the jail and talked for some time with the State's star witness. He had been prevented from holding any sort of a conference with his client the night before, and protested at this procedure at the close of court Tuesday night. Judge Roan extended him the privilege of seeing Conley. Reuben Arnold asked that an exception be entered in the record.

Conley slept between nine and ten hours and arose much refreshed.

"I'se telling the truth now," he said to a newspaper man who encountered him outside the jail. "That Mr. Rosser ain't got no chance to get me mixed up because I'm telling just what happened."

Frank occupied his usual cell on the second floor of the Tower. He was joined by his wife and mother as soon as he arrived at the courthouse.

Rosser Reads Affidavits.

Rosser asked Dorsey for the original of Conley's third affidavit. The Solicitor advised Mr. Rosser that the original had never been signed. Rosser took a copy of the affidavit, which the Solicitor said was identical with the original, and read it to Conley. It was a signed statement from the negro, in which he admitted the other two affidavits contained lies and the one which the detectives said was the last word in the great mystery.

The reading consumed nearly fifteen minutes, Rosser enunciating clearly and slowly, emphasizing every statement that differed with Conley's evidence on the stand.

Freely Admits He Lied.

All of Rosser's quiz Tuesday had only the one possible effect—that of casting suspicion in the minds of the jury of the story that Conley now is telling. He spread his lies with a lavish hand in that first affidavit he made to the detectives.

He freely admitted this and rather gloried in his prowess as a first-class liar. He lied in his second affidavit, although he maintained that this was a step nearer the truth. And in his third affidavit, which he and the detectives had joined in proclaiming "the whole truth," there were still little discrepancies and deviations from the straight path of veracity.

But this tale that he was unfolding to the jury, this was the pure, unalloyed, gospel truth. He had raised his right hand and sworn that he was going to tell the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Mr. Rosser was most unkind to throw over it a shadow of suspicion.

And the lawyer labored in vain to shake the negro's story as it had gone before the jury. Rosser midway in the Tuesday forenoon session abandoned his line of interrogation in regard to statements that Conley had made to the police and detectives and began questioning Conley directly on the crime.

Questioned Closely on Time.

He questioned him most closely in regard to the time in an effort to show conclusively to the jury that Frank and Conley did not have the opportunity to accomplish all which the negro narrated before Frank left the factory for luncheon at his home, No. 68 East Georgia avenue, at which place he arrived by 1:30 o'clock, according to the State's own witnesses.

Conley testified, under Rosser's cross-examination, that he went to the rear of the factory at Frank's direction and there found the body of the slain girl. He said that he yelled to Frank that the girl was dead and that Frank told him to bring her to the front of the factory.

Conley said that he did not know how he was going to carry the girl and he asked Frank. Frank, he said, yelled back something about getting some crocus bagging, but he did not quite understand him and walked to the front of the factory so that he could hear the superintendent better. He noticed the clock at this moment. It was four minutes of 1 o'clock.

With this time as a starting point, Rosser began to quiz the negro closely as to how long it took him to accomplish each part of the remainder of the afternoon's events.

It was plain that the negro's estimates did not coincide with what the lawyer thought they should be.

Defense's Views Evidently Differ.

"How long did it take you from the time that you came forward and looked at the clock until you had taken the body down to the cellar and was back again on the second floor, and Frank went to wash his hands?" asked Rosser.

Conley thought it was only four or five minutes. It evidently was the opinion of the defense that it should have been nearer twenty minutes, as it included rolling the body of the girl into the cloth from the cotton box, carrying it to the elevator, the wait while Conley says Frank went into the office after the key, the trip down the elevator, the carrying of the body to the rear of the basement, the disposal of the cloth and the return to the second floor.

Rosser asked how long it took Frank to wash his hands. Conley replied that it was only a minute or two. Rosser then inquired how long Frank had Conley in the closet while the two women were in his office. Conley said it was eight or ten minutes. This incident, if it is as Conley represented it, would have brought the time up to 1:12 or 1:15.

Rosser then asked how long it took Conley to write the four notes, two of which were found by the girl's dead body.

Wrote Notes in a Hurry.

"You couldn't have written those four notes inside of ten minutes to save your soul, could you, Jim?" Rosser inquired.

"Yas, sah; I think I wrote 'em in about a minute and a half," replied the negro.

"You're some rapid writer," retorted Rosser after he had called attention to the laborious scrawl.

Rosser then questioned Conley as to the time of each part of his conversation with Frank while he was in the office that afternoon. He asked him about Frank giving him the cigarettes with the money in the box, about Frank giving him the $200 roll of bills and the attendant conversation, about the conversation in respect to Conley's watch and to Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn.

While he did not make the actual computation of time, he impressed strongly on the minds of the jury that it would have been impossible for all this to have occurred in connection with the undisputed fact that Frank arrived home at or before 1:30 that afternoon.

CAN JURY OBEY IF TOLD TO FORGET BASE CHARGE?

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

"Gentlemen of the jury, having heard from James Conley, the blackest, most damning story ever told in Atlanta by one human being against another, having sat there and listened as he smudged with unspeakable scandal the defendant in this case, Leo Frank, although it is irrelevant, immaterial, and has nothing to do with this case, you will kindly forget it, being on your oaths as jurymen to consider the evidence declared competent!"

And the jury, being like most other juries, in one way and another, and having heard all the things as aforesaid, will promptly proceed to do as instructed about forgetting it—NOT!

I have heard juries told too many times to "forget" things—such, for instance, as that there is no such thing as "unwritten law" in this land of the free and home of the brave—and I have seen too many times those very same juries proceed to "forget"—NOT!

Juries are, after all, composed of mere human beings, and things such as Conley said to the Frank jury can NOT be forgotten, and will NOT be disregarded by the average jury.

Merely Question of Belief.

It is merely a queston of whether the jury BELIEVES the negro!

There was something infinitely pathetic in the situation Tuesday, when court met in the afternoon.

For one thing, it brought to the cheeks of the defendant's wife, always and ever at his side, the first tears I yet have seen fall from her eyes.

She has borne herself with amazing fortitude thus far—the wonder is that she has not long ago collapsed.

When Reuben Arnold, moving to strike from the record the vile story of Jim Conley, paused a second before reading the exact words he desired expunged, looked a moment in the direction of the defendant's wife, and said, with no show of the spectacular whatever, "Your honor, I would prefer not to read this in the presence of these two ladies, and I therefore pass it to your honor that you may read it in silence!" The moment was tense and tragic!

Weeps For First Time.

I do not know whether it was gratitude to Arnold for the kindness and consideration thus shown, whether it was realization of the weighty purpose of the motion, whether it was the first chilling breath of apprehension, or whether it was just a physical giving way that moved Mrs. Frank. Whatever it was, as Arnold passed the paper along to Judge Roan, the first tear I ever saw from the eyes of Lucile Frank trickled down her cheek and she dropped her head in her hands for a moment or two and sobbed!

Apparently there was nothing in the incident, either upon the part of Arnold or the woman, designed to be the least bit theatrical. The jury had been removed, the stage settings were wanting.

It merely was a natural and minor incident that tugged, somehow, at the heartstrings and caught at the throat.

In all the packed courtroom there were two women only—beyond that, there was a morbidly hungry crowd of men, ready to grasp greedily at anything sensational.

Arnold denied the crowd for the sake of—the women.

And now the jury has been asked to forget the damning thing that has been said to it, that has been said in the presence of the wife and the mother—and that was too vile to say a second time in the presence of the latter!

Do you think the jury WILL forget—do you think it CAN forget?

Maybe you do—I don't!

And as to Conley and his story in its entirety—the spectators in that courtroom have been looking for Conley to "break down," to fall on his knees and confess it all a lie, and all that sort of thing.

There never was any chance that Conley would do that. It should be borne in mind that to "break down" Conley's story does not necessarily mean to break down Conley—to collapse him.

The point is: Can the defense—has or will the defense—so UNDERMINE Conley's story that, through the introduction of other evidence, it eventually will fall to the ground as a mass of lies?

Slowly, but persistently, with deadly intent even if with tediousness of method, Luther Z. Rosser for more than two days has attacked the amazing and terrible story upon which the State hopes to convict Leo Frank of the murder of Mary Phagan.

Rosser has been almost maddening in his patience with the negro. He has gone over the same ground, time after time, in his efforts to get Conley's various stories adjusted to the purpose of the defense.

Conley, rapid-fire enough in direct examination, rattling off his grewsome and frightful story as if it were a recital of an altogether common thing, became quite another Conley under cross-examination.

Where but a few moments ago he had remembered most amazing and inconsequential details—such as the fact that a woman who called to see Frank on Thanksgiving Day wore a blue and white polka dotted dress, a green hat and white shoes and stockings—under cross-examination he could remember nothing at all save after the most persistent prodding.

Time and again Mr. Rosser had to go over the entire ground of an entire situation to draw from Conley one further comment upon it. Questioned on his story under both cross and direct examination, the negro was put enough in reply—on other points he was as vague as he possibly could be.

Twenty-one times Tuesday he admitted to Mr. Rosser that he had "lied." Seven times in addition to that he admitted that he had been "mistaken."

As the cross-examination progressed, too, it became evident enough that the defense is to hold the entire charge against Frank to be largely a "frame-up," with Conley as the bright and particular star about whom it revolves.

The negro said he at first refused to speak of the crime at all, and when he did speak deliberately lied because he "wished to protect Mr. Frank."

"He was my young superintendent—I would have done anything to save him," said the negro—whether with sinister cunning or genuine sincerity, the jury must say.

Showed How Negro Lied.

And yet, with Conley's own lips Rosser showed how, time and again, he deliberately lied about his movements on the fatal Saturday that was Mary Phagan's last on earth—after he had said that he had looked in vain for help from Frank, and was then determined to tell "the whole truth!"

After Conley's excuse of protecting Frank had been shattered by the negro's own "confession," he had to make three subsequent and different "confessions" before he got things shaped to his liking—and every time he readjusted his story it was changed to meet the ever bobbing up objections to the story of the day or two before.

Continuously Mr. Rosser referred to the fact, always admitted by the negro, that his various affidavits were changed "at police headquarters," in the presence of officers, "after being released from jail and carried to headquarters."

There are dozens of puzzling inconsistencies to be bridged over in Conley's story—scores of things yet to be explained and straightened out.

And yet—

In the average mind I doubt whether Conley's story has been seriously discredited in the main.

There are people who admit, readily enough—hundreds of them—that Conley is a liar, a thousand times over, a loafer, and an utterly undesirable citizen.

Doubt Slowly Crystallizing.

They will say thus and so to his disparagement, but——

Fateful, suggestive, profoundly melancholy "but" for Leo Frank!

It bespeaks a widespread and crystallizing doubt that is dangerously incompatible with Frank's hopes for life and liberty, and the restoration of his good name.

With all the undermining and incongruities of Conley's story that the most subtle ingenuity of the defense can conjure to its aid, the jury has been given a story which, if so much as 5 per cent of it sticks, likely will serve to convict.

The primary circumstances—these might be swept aside like chaff before the wind, if only Conley's story might be crushed to earth and made absurd.

But there is the story in all its abundance of sinister detail—the comings and goings of questionable men and women, the negro, time and again, on watch downstairs, responding to signals, the connivance of the negro with the white man in unnatural and perverted practices, the coming of innocent little Mary Phagan, the pattering of anxious feet above, the suppressed scream, the call to Conley for further assistance in consummating unlawful deeds with women—this time murder—the removal of the body, and the promise to pay on some subsequent day!

Will the story thus given to the jury, unless completely and altogether broken down, ever be removed from its mind entirely? And unless it is removed entirely, can Frank hope for acquittal?

If it is, in its essentials, the truth, what will the jury care about the exact time at which Conley bought some whisky on Peters street; or whether he went straight from Peters street to the laundry; or whether he remembers the mythical "woman in green who went up the factory steps," no matter how vitally important these things may be to the sustained truth of Conley's story.

Conley may lie in a dozen details of his story, he may have readjusted it continuously under the direction of Tom, Dick, or Harry, he may be everything he ought not to be—and yet, if one BIG detail in his awful story sticks in the minds of that jury, Leo Frank is undone hopelessly.

If the story Conley tells IS a lie, then it is the most inhumanly devilish, the most cunningly clever, and the most amazingly sustained lie ever told in Georgia!

Every little detail, as finally adjusted—and not then until Conley went upon the stand Monday—fits the necessities of those bent upon Frank's conviction. If it is, as the defense contends, a "frame-up," it is a diabolically smart "frame-up"—one can not escape that conclusion!

Girl's Visit Dovetails In.

Even the coming and going of Monteen Stover, the five minutes of time in which the primary circumstances might be made to dovetail into the Conley story, is cited by the witness Conley as the very period of time wherein Conley, sitting in the dark hall below, heard pattering footsteps above, the faint scream, and immediately after Miss Stover went out, the tiptoeing of Frank to the front, and then the story of the death upstairs.

Monteen Stover could not have chosen a more exact and useful moment to wander in—and yet, she heard no scream, although she did not see Frank in his office during the few minutes she remained upstairs.

If the Conley story is a lie, if it has been TOO CLEVERLY "framed up"—if and a thousand other "ifs"—what matters that?

It matters this: If it be a lie, it MUST break down, somewhere, sometime; if be the truth, it will stand against ALL the assaults made upon it!

It has come to the point where one, seeking the truth and justice and the right to all men at all times and in all circumstances, can only say he will leave it to the jury—and that the JURY will speak the TRUTH!

Crowd Set in Its Opinions

By O. B. KEELER.

The impression persists that courtroom crowds are made up in the main of two classes, as follows:

(1) People who take it for granted that any person being tried on any charge in any court is guilty, and then some.

(2) People who are constitutionally incapable of believing anybody is guilty of anything whatever.

That is one powerful impression gained at the Frank trial. It is an impression sticking out pointedly in the wake of the Thaw trial, and the Nan Patterson trial, and the Beatty trial, and the Hyde trial.

All three of the Hyde trials, in fact.

Never an Opinion Altered.

At the risk of being convicted of exaggeration in the first degree, the writer, who was rather intimately associated with the celebrated poison case, would estimate that 18,397 persons expressed in his hearing what they insisted were unalterable opinions as to the guilt or innocence of the accused physician before the jury in the first trial had been impaneled.

And of the 18,397 (estimated) not one single instance is recalled of one single opinion being altered.

The fact that the physician was convicted on his first trial made not the least difference to those who believed him innocent.

Court Ruling Mattered Not.

The fact that the Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for further trial made not the least difference to those who voted guilty.

The second and third trials, one of which resulted in an escaped juror, fleeing madly by way of a rain spout from the dread lair of the hypothetical question, and the other in a hung jury, had no perceptible effect on the factions.

Except to solidify them in their original beliefs.

One side desired to take steps at once.

The other side named men-children for the object of a persecution unparalleled since the days of Nero.

Arguments Never Will End.

And if Bennett Clark Hyde's annual trials proceed as per schedule until the year 1950, there will be hoary-headed wrangling over the same old points, by the same ancient and original wranglers, lined up the same way as when the greatest mystery of the West came to the fall of the gavel in the opening trial.

Take the Beatty Case.

There were men and women—you know some of them—who raised frantic hands to heaven, that a poor boy should thus be railroaded to his doom.

They were about set to buy mileage and travel to throw themselves and their petitions at the feet of a cruel and callous Governor.

And then Beatty confessed.

Did that still the trouble lachrymal waters?

Not precisely.

They said the poor boy's mind had been weakened by his persecution.

And if you are in a hypercritical mood or are otherwise disposed to stick pins in toy balloons, just ask your memory to inform you how many times you have heard these pronouncements since the trial of Leo M. Frank began:

First: "Well, I've been absolutely certain from the very first that Frank did it."

Second: "Well, I never have believed that Frank was guilty of that crime."

And now do you feel hypercritical?

And now do you fancy that 18,397 is an inflated estimate?

Of course, there must be a Third Estate—a well-balanced, thoughtful, cautious body. Particularly cautious, and slow of speech—mayhap in some sporadic instances slow of thought.

They are the judicial ones. They hold the balance open at both ends, to receive and weigh the testimony and the facts.

At least, they say they do.

That would be the jury, perhaps.

And some others—perhaps.

DORSEY ACCOMPLISHES AIM DESPITE BIG ODDS

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

Practically the entire case on which the State of Georgia bases its claim on the life of Leo Frank to pay for that life taken from Mary Phagan is before the jury.

Most of the remaining evidence of importance which the Solicitor General may introduce merely will be rebuttal to testimony presented by Frank's counsel.

Whether the evidence presented is strong enough to convict is a question for the jury to decide. Whether the testimony introduced by the defense will be convincing enough to cause the reasonable doubt which the law says shall make Frank a free man or whether the defense's attack on the State's case has been of sufficient strength to create a question in the minds of the jurors, time alone will tell.

But this fact remains unchallenged: Every single thing that Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey declared in advance that he would get before the jury is there now. It may not be enough to convict, but the case which the State said fastened the crime on Leo Frank has been put in evidence.

Dorsey Had Huge Task.

One by one the prosecutor has forged the links in the chain that he maintains fixes the guilt of the Phagan murder on Leo Frank and Leo Frank alone.

It has been long, tedious work. Dorsey has had to fight against considerable odds, but his work has been well done.

When the defense has its innings, the chain may be torn asunder as though struck by lightning, but that will be the work of the skilled attorneys who are fighting to save the life of the pencil factory superintendent.

Here was Dorsey's work: He had to adduce enough circumstantial evidence to corroborate the testimony of Jim Conley before his case could even be seriously considered. The unsupported word of the negro sweeper would have been about as valuable as a punctured drum. The Solicitor knew this.

First, he had to prove the venue. He had to locate Frank in the National Pencil Company factory at the time Mary Phagan was slain. He did this by the unattacked testimony of many witnesses. He did it so thoroughly that the defense has tacitly admitted that Frank was at the factory about the time he deed was supposed to have been done.

Question of Time Settled.

Then he had to prove the time. According to the State's theory the murder was committed about 12:10 on Memorial Day. Frank himself has said and his employees and his associates have testified he was there at that time. This point also is practically unchallenged.

At last came the hardest task. He had to prove that Leo Frank was the only human being in the pencil factory at that time who could have taken Mary Phagan's life.

By every witness introduced on this point it was shown that as far as human knowledge goes Leo Frank and Jim Conley were the only men in that part of the factory at that time. Either could have committed the crime. It was Dorsey's work to place the blame on Frank alone.

Newt Lee's testimony was introduced to show that Frank sent him away that afternoon. Dr. Harris' testimony tended to show that the slaying must have been done immediately after Frank had given the child her week's wage and had given it to her while they were alone. Mrs. White's testimony tended to show that Jim Conley was sitting downstairs making no attempt at flight after the time the crime is supposed to have been committed.

Then came Conley's direct evidence and the chain was practically complete.

As has been said before, this chain may not stand the acid test of the defense's attack. It may not be strong enough even unattacked to convince the jury that Frank is responsible for Mary Phagan's death.

But it is what Dorsey went out to get before the jury. He has done it.

And he has done it practically unaided. The valuable assistance he had reason to believe he would receive from the police department has been more or less missing. In fact, the greatest blows to the State's case have been delivered by detectives, supposedly expert witnesses who have been unable to withstand the cross-fire of Luther Rosser.

The case has meant a lot to Dorsey, and right now, with the thrilling battle approaching its final stages, Dorsey stands out as big and commanding a figure as the brilliant lawyers against whom he is arrayed.

He may lose his case, but if he does he will come out with reputation enhanced.

DEFENSE GIVES UP FUTILE EFFORT TO BATTER DOWN SWEEPER'S MAIN CHARGE

about seeing this negro Monday after the crime.

Several spectators were put out of the courtroom for laughing at Mr. Rosser's admission of the error.

Rosser—I will say it is the first time that you have been right. Your honor, we object. It is immaterial what time this witness made known the fact unless they go further and show she was delayed through the influence of Frank.

The objection was overruled.

Lawyers Clash.

Dorsey—Your honor, I have already shown that Leo Frank knew on Monday, April 28, that she saw this negro there, and that it was May 7 before the State got into possession of this fact.

Rosser—I say that no such evidence has been introduced.

Dorsey—Call for the record of Harry Scott's evidence.

Rosser—I say he has not introduced this evidence, and he saws he has. If your honor can not remember some of the things that happen here we are perfectly helpless.

Stenographer Parry was called. He said he was taking the testimony for Mr. Arnold and he wanted Mr. Arnold's consent before reading it.

Q. When did you report it to anyone else?

Rosser objected.

Dorsey—I want to show who it was who first reported to detectives of the State of Georgia.

The objection was overruled.

Q. When did you report it?—A. May 27.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You never declined to tell anybody?—A. No.

Q. I want to refresh your memory. Didn't you tell Wade Campbell you saw the negro when you went up?—A. No.

Q. Didn't you tell Wade Campbell that when you came down you heard voice?—A. No; that was when I went up.

The witness was excused.

Sheriff C. W. Mangum was then called to the stand. Dorsey questioned him.

Q. Were you at the jail when Jim Conley was brought there?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Frank about seeing Conley?

Rosser—I object.

Dorsey—We want to show that this white man wouldn't see this ignorant negro, his accuser. Can I ask the question?

Judge Roan—Go ahead.

Frank Didn't Want to See Police.

A. Chief Beavers, Chief Lanford, Harry Scott, Detective Black and Jim Conley came down and wanted to see Frank. I asked Frank if he wanted to see them. He said no; that his lawyer was not there and he had nobody to defend him.

Rosser took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Mr. Frank knew who was there, didn't he?—A. Yes.

Sheriff Mangum was excused, and Solicitor Dorsey called for Mrs. W. J. Coleman and George Epps. Neither answered.

Dorsey—We have got two propositions, and there will be objections to them. They are Dalton and Epps. When we finish with them we only have one more witness—Dr. Harris. We can't get him until 2 o'clock, and we would like to get that argument over.

Judge Roan sent the jury from the room and admonished the attorneys to give only the authorities and not to argue the points.

Dorsey—First, we don't want any evidence taken out that has already gone in. Second, we want to substantiate what Jim Conley said. Third, we want to bring out what Mary Phagan told George Epps on her way to the factory that Saturday, about Frank making eyes at her, and that she was afraid of him.

Attorney Arnold began his argument of objection by reading authorities. He declared he would include all three propositions in one argument.

Defense Compiles Authorities.

During Mr. Arnold's argument, Mr. Rosser climbed up in the witness chair in which Jim Conley sat during the thirteen hours Mr. Rosser was firing questions at him.

Arnold—Do we have to move to rule it out at the time it is presented? My friend, Mr. Leonard Haas, has compiled the authorities, and for this work he is one of the most reliable men I know of.

Arnold then asked the court's permission to remain seated while addressing it, as he was feeling hot and faint. He was allowed to do so. Judge Roan spoke to Solicitor Dorsey and his associates:

"What do you say, gentlemen?"

Dorsey—It looks this way: If this evidence goes in on Conley's testimony unsubstantiated, I can see how it might appear to the advantage of the defense. They can go out fishing, and if they catch something, they don't want to throw it back. They drew out the relation and association of Conley and Frank. Now they can't diminish it; they slept over their rights.

Mr. Arnold, interrupting Mr. Dorsey, read a few more authorities.

"Not Character Evidence," Says Dorsey.

Judge Roan—Mr. Dorsey, how can you differentiate this evidence from character evidence? The defense must bring his character in.

Dorsey—No, it is not character evidence. I know I can't bring his character in. If I convict him, of course, I want to hold him. I am not afraid of the higher court reversing your honor.

Roan interrupted—No, I am not either. I don't care anything about that.

Roan then declared court adjourned until 2 o'clock, without any ruling on the questions at bar having been made.

Argument is Resumed.

Court reconvened at 2 o'clock and with the jury still out, Solicitor Dorsey continued his argument on the admissability of the evidence that was stopped by adjournment at the noon recess.

The Solicitor read first a Supreme Court decision in which the defense waived its right to object by not so doing when the evidence was given. He cited a number of Georgia State cases. He declared that proof of another crime, if necessarily an independent crime, was admissable provided it was intended to illustrate the state of the defendant's mind at the time this crime was committed, and the fact that it was a crime did not make it inadmissable, therefore as an original proposition he declared that it was admissable.

"Shall we go on with the other objection," the Solicitor then asked Judge Roan.

"Yes," answered Judge Roan.

Dorsey Cites Example.

Dorsey: "We object to any evidence that is already in being ruled out because we expect to introduce other evidence to substantiate it. Now about the evidence of George Epps. Here is a case. (Dorsey here referred to an authority) in which a man was living with a woman as his wife. She left him and as heard to say she was afraid. This man was later murdered and this man was ... on trial for the crime. The man who heard the remark she made ... it being afraid was permitted to testify. Now we want to show that when little Mary Phagan was on her way to the factory where she met her death, she expressed a fear of this defendant. It is a circumstance that points to this man's guilt."

Attorney Hooper here took up the argument.

"The court desires that we be brief," he said, "and I promise to be brief. I will confine myself to the laws of Georgia, for that, I understand, is what controls this court and not decisions from Missouri or California.

"The Supreme Court of Georgia has held several times that it would not reverse a lower court on a decision unless the objection was made at the time the evidence was submitted.

Dr. H. F. Harris, secretary of the State Board of Health, who testified that Mary Phagan died within half an hour after eating cabbage, was recalled by the State.

Defense Witness Excused.

At this moment, Attorney Rosser interrupted to state that one of the defense's witnesses wished to be excused on account of the death of a relative. This was W. T. Hollis, whose relative, J. L. Adair, of Dallas, Ga., was killed by falling off a street car on Marietta street. The witness was excused and promised to be back in court by Friday morning.

Dorsey then took up the examination of Dr. Harris.

Q. What branch in medicine is yours? What special branch?—A. Diagnosis and chemistry.

Q. Why did you say Mary Phagan came to her death from strangulation?—A An examination showed that cause to have been the only probable one for death.

Blow Inflicted During Life.

Q. Was that blow on the head given before death?—A. It had every evidence of having been inflicted during life.

Q. Was there any evidence on the windpipe or larynx of strangulation?—A. No. That is, very little.

Q. Are there usually traces in cases of this kind?—A. No.

Q. Did you see the windpipe?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see the lungs?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you notice anything about them?—A. No. They would not have shown anything on account of the embalming fluid.

Dorsey turned to Mr. Arnold: "Give me that baseball bat."

The stick found near where the negro had been sitting on the first floor of the factory was given the Solicitor.

Q. Could this have produced that cut on the back of the head?—A. In my opinion it could not have. The cut was too sharp.

Cabbage Question Again Arises.

Q. Now coming to the stomach?—A. I might preface my remarks by saying that some ten or fifteen years ago someone suggested to me that the idea of the indigestibility of cabbage was because it usually was cooked with meats. I conducted some experiments. I discovered with some healthy stomachs with bread and cabbage was practically the same as with bread and water."

"I object," said Attorney Rosser, "for him to state the results of his efforts as scientific facts."

"I was just explaining," Dr. Harris interrupted——

"Now, Dr. Harris, let me talk just a minute," Rosser interrupted.

Judge Roan said: "I rule that you can testify, if you are alone in the scientific world on that subject."

Harris said: "I can find no data on that subject and I made the investigation myself. I found that most ideas about digesting cabbage were erroneous when taken with bread alone. Now, I have some exits——"

Rosser Has Real Stomach.

Rosser interrupted again: "I object to these experiments of his. They are not admissible," the attorney declared. "If I ate that cabbage, I would have it in my stomach to-morrow morning, and I have a stomach that will digest leather and nails and almost anything else."

Judge Roan ruled: "He can state that he gave cabbage to whom he thought was a normal man with certain results. Let him state only the science of the thing. That alone is admissible."

Tells of Remarkable Test.

Judge Roan then told the witness to go ahead.

Attorney Arnold was on his feet immediately. "Your honor, if he means that he is going to show experiments on the same sort of stomach as Mary Phagan's," Arnold shouted, "that is different, but you know that it is not fair to compare the stomachs of grown men with little girls. There are also differences in the manner of cooking."

Dr. Harris said: "I have made the conditions as near parallel as possible. I had Mary Phagan's mother cook the cabbage and one of the persons I experimented on was a girl about her age. I know her stomach was normal."

"Arnold said: "There are no two stomachs in the world alike."

Harris continued: "Some years ago I made experiments on twenty or thirty persons."

Rosser said: "I object to what he did twenty or thirty years ago, and I object to his argumentative idea."

Judge Roan said: "The witness might not be argumentative."

Rosser's Opinion of Scientist.

Rosser said: "I insist that these examinations might be vitally different. How can he tell the exact nature of these things? How can he experiment except upon the same subject and except upon the same stomach?"

Judge Roan said: "But he is a scientist."

Rosser said: "Oh, bosh! I have always thought that these doctors were guessing."

Roan said: "Proceed, Dr. Harris."

Dr. Harris continued:

"Well, the digestion takes from 38 to 70 minutes in the cabbage found in Mary Phagan's stomach. I found that even the most minute particles had not gone through the process of digestion. In fact, it was plainly noticeable to the naked eye that there was practically no digestion. Even in an hour's time there is digestion and it is well advanced. As a matter of greater importance——"

Rosser said: "I object to 'a matter of greater importance,'"

Rosser overruled the objection.

Dr. Harris launched into a technical discussion as to the amount of cabbage in the stomach and intestines.

Rosser said: "I object to that, he is making an argument. It is nothing more nor less than a stump speech."

Judge Roan said: "He is giving his opinion. Continue, Dr. Harris."

Certain Death Came Soon.

Harris said: "I want to state that the amount of secretive juice in this stomach was considerably less than would have collected in an hour. The hydrochloride acid had not been in long enough to become free. The amount of confined hydrochloric was 32 degrees. In a normal stomach, the amount would have been 55 or 60 degrees. It was just about the amount one would have supposed to have collected in half an hour or 35 to 40 minutes. I can say with absolute certainty that she was unconscious within 30 or 40 minutes after she ate the cabbage."

Dorsey then questioned the witness.

Q. Do you know whether or not the failure to digest this cabbage was due to indigestion?—A. No sir, that stomach was normal. The gastric juices were there.

Q. What about the glands?—A. The glands were the principal part of the stomach—they were all there.

Q. Was the digestion progressing favorably?—A. Yes, it was normal and stopped by whatever happened.

Bread in Like State.

Q. Was the examination microscopic?—A. Yes. It was made with the best instrument possible to procure.

Q. How about the stage of digestion of the bread? Did it show to the same extent?—A. Exactly the same.

Q. Suppose that large piece of cabbage had have been chewed up fine? Would it have had any effect on the digestive process?—A. Not the slightest.

Arnold took the witness on the cross-examination.

Q. When did you make this examination?—A. May 5.

Q. Did Dorsey request you not to make the result of your examination public?—A. Yes.

Kept Promise of Secrecy.

Q. Did you keep your promise in this respect?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he ask you as Solicitor General or personally?—A. He did not state. I did it because I liked him personally.

Q. What part of the body did he ask you to examine?—A. None. He just asked me to make an examination and find out all I could.

Q. How did you know the girl died by strangulation?—It was plainly discernible.

Q. Externally?—A. Yes. The marks were on the throat.

Q. Could not the same marks be made if the rope was placed around the neck of a dying person?—A. Yes, the heart were still beating.

Q. How long does it take for a person to die by strangulation?—A. There is no special time.

Tells of Strangulation Effects.

Q. Isn't it true that the time required for a person to strangle is from 20 to 30 minutes?—A. There are different times, all according to the circumstances.

Q. Isn't drowning strangulation?—A. One form.

O. Isn't the effect just the same?—A. There are different effects on the body.

Q. But strangulation is simply cutting off oxygen from the lungs?—A. Yes, but there are different forms in strangulation by choking; there are poisons which gain control. In drowning entirely different elements enter which produce an entirely different state of the body.

Q. What is the average time it takes a person to die from strangulation?—A. I don't know.

Q. Haven't statistics been compiled?—A. Well, it is practically impossible to tell when life leaves the body. I saw a man once who was pulled out of the water with his heart still beating, but he was not breathing and we failed to revive him.

Q. He was alive, wasn't he?—A. I don't know.

Made Tests for Poisons.

Q. You say you were going to examine for poison—what kind of poison?—A. Alkaloids.

Q. That's vegetable poison? Why didn't you examine for poison like arsenic?—A. The undertaker had told me he used some of the metal poisons in embalming the body.

Q. How did you know what he had used?—A. I sent for him and he told me.

Q. Did he give you that valuable formula he was so secretive about here?—A. Yes. I guess he thought better of me.

Q. How far did you continue this examination?—A. When I failed to find any alkaloids, I gave it up.

Q. You tested for opium?—A. Yes.

Q. Opium has about twenty-three alkaloids?—A. Yes.

Q. What test did you use?—A. The usual test—the color test.

Q. How much did you find?—A. None.

Q. How much of the contents of the stomach did you use in your test for alkaloids?—A. I made a number of tests. I can't say just how many.

Q. As much as that half a glass of water?—A. About half of that.

Q. Were the contents liquid or solid?—A. Both.

Q. Did you make a poison test before the others?—A. Simultaneously.

Made Eight Tests.

Q. Into how many parts did you divide the contents of the stomach?—A. As many as were necessary—I don't remember.

Q. Did you say you had six or eight tests going at the same time as to the digestibility of the food? Why did you make eight?—A. Because that many were necessary.

Q. Will you explain those tests?

Dr. Harris went into an elaborate technical explanation of the various stages of the tests. Mr. Arnold appeared to be unable to understand a number of the words used. Turning to the stenographer he said: "This is very important—I just want to know if you are getting it. I don't quite understand it." The stenographer replied that he had taken the testimony down.

Q. In all this testing you made you were attempting to ascertain the amount of hydrochloric acid in the stomach?—A. Yes.

Q. How much was that?—A. Eleven-one hundredths of fifteen drops.

Q. That would amount to about a drop and a half, wouldn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. How much free hydrochloric acid did you find?—A. None.

Q. What is gastric juice?—A. It is a juice secreted in the stomach.

Function of Pepsin.

Q. Is hydrochloric acid to be found in gastric juice?—A. Yes, one of its most important ingredients.

Q What is the most important ingredient?—A. Pepsin.

Q. What is the effect of hydrochloric acid on pepsin?—A. It brings it out.

Q. What amount of hydrochloric acid did you find in the stomach?—A. Thirty-two degrees.

Q. What is the normal amount in a normal man's stomach?—A. Fifty-six degrees.

Q. What was the relative amount of pepsin in her stomach as compared to the amount of hydrochloric acid?—A. We have no test for determining the exact amount of pepsin.

Q. What is the third most important ingredient in the gastric juice?—A. There is none of importance.

Q. But there is water?—A. Oh, yes, there is water. We might say that gastric juice is composed of hydrochloric acid, pepsin and water. In fact, a solution of those three ingredients could be made and taken and digest the food as well as the gastric juice found in the stomach.

Q. That is the reason people sometimes take pepsin?—A. Yes.

Nothing Else in Stomach.

Q. These experiments were made on live subjects? How about experiments on corpses?—A. That would be very clumsy.

Q. Why?—A. The difficulty in getting bodies with the proper food mixtures in them.

Q. Did you examine the small intestine in this case?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you find?—A. Practically nothing.

Q. Did you save any of the contents of the stomach?—A. No.

Q. All you preserved was this cabbage in this bottle?—A. Yes.

Q. You didn't analyze these particular leaves?—A. No. I took these out just as I started my examination.

Q. Did you find anything besides bread and cabbage?—A. Absolutely nothing.

Q. Did you find any of the cabbage chewed?—A. Yes, a good deal of it.

Q. How did you know it was cabbage. Tell me its chemical analysis?—A. I have a book with some 47 analyses of cabbage. Just for a general idea you might say 90 per cent water and 10 per cent solid.

Cabbages Vary, He Says.

Q. Do individual cabbages vary?—A. I would say so from these analyses. Give me that book over there and I will show you.

Arnold said: "No, I wouldn't care for that."

Dorsey said: "He's got a right to explain."

Roan ruled with the Solicitor, but on the insistence of Mr. Arnold, Harris did not go into the explanation.

Q. What juice flows through the mouth?—A. Saliva.

Q. That is a great aid to digestion, isn't it?—A. Well, that's a question as to just how much it really counts.

Q. Doctors disagree about that like they do about everything else?—A. Well a number of analyses have been made and some doctors hold to one theory and some to others.

At this point Dr. Harris asked if the examination could stop. The attorneys agreed that it might stop for the afternoon, and Detective Starnes was called to the stand. Dorsey took the witness.

Q. At the request of Dr. Harris, did you get a cabbage and take it to Mrs. Coleman and ask her to cook it like the one she cooked on the day Mary Phagan was killed?—A. Yes.

Mrs. Coleman was called to the stand and substantiated Starnes' statement, and declared that she cooked the cabbage.

C. C. Dalton was then called to the stand but upon the request of jurymen, court was adjourned for the day to reconvene at 9 o'clock Thursday morning. Dr. Harris probably will be called to the stand again Thursday.

Girl Is Run Down by Auto on Whitehall

A small girl, who refused to give her name, was knocked down and badly bruised by an automobile driven by Lewis Carhart, on Whitehall street, in front of Rich Brothers' store about noon Wednesday. The child was taken into Cone's store and her bruises bandaged, and then put in a cab and taken home.

Eyewitnesses to the accident say it was unavoidable. The car was going slowly and the girl ran in front of it before it could be stopped. No arrest was made.

Mothers' Testimony Binds Over Man Who Cruelly Beat Son

Several mothers appeared in police court Wednesday to testify that J. S. Newman, 41 Gaskill street, Tuesday brutally beat his 11-year-old boy, Joe Newman, with a board.

The mothers declared they would never think of whipping a child as severely as Newman did.

Newman insisted that the boy deserved a good thrashing, and quoted "spare the rod and spoil the child."

Judge Preston, declaring it one of the worst case that had come to his notice, bound the father over to the State courts in bond of $300.

Kills Man Who Held Her Captive in Woods

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 6.—Mabel Farmer, 16, shot and killed Henry Blanz to-day when he threatened her life because she would not elope with him.

The girl told the police after the shooting that Blanz forced her to leave her home and remain with him for twelve hours in the woods.

Detroit Wins Cut In Street Car Fare

DETROIT, MICH., Aug. 6.—A compromise in the city's fight for 3-cent street car fares was effected to-day when the Detroit United Railway agreed to sell seven tickets for 25 cents, after an automobile firm offered the city the use of 1,000 automobiles in case the company refused to operate its cars.

A strike of employees, held off by a promise of arbitration, is threatened unless the company's arbitrator agrees with the union's representative upon a third arbitrator within 24 hours.

Woman Injured in Chicago Race Riot

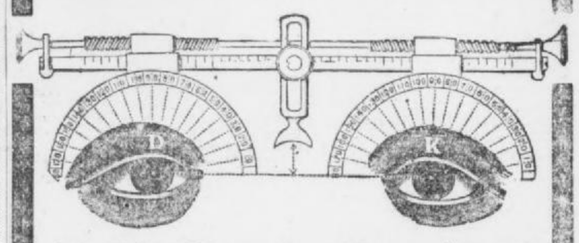

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—Mrs. Mary A. Barrett was in a serious condition to-day as the result of a riot between whites and negroes on a street car.

The trouble was caused by a remark of a negro directed at one of the white passengers.

HOUSE BILL PUTS TAX ON AUTOS FOR ROADS

Opponents "Poke Fun" in Effort to Defeat It—Urge License for Baby Carriage.

The bill of the House Ways and Means Committee providing for a State registration tax of $5 on automobiles was passed by the House Wednesday morning, 107 to 64, after a fight that raged since Monday morning.

The original bill provided that the funds obtained by the tax should go into the general fund of the State. An amendment offered by McMichael, of Marion County, diverting the proceeds of the tax into the State road fund, was carried, and the purposes of the Ways and Means Committee in presenting the bill to provide more revenue for the general expenses of the State were defeated.

Would Tax Baby Carts.

The opponents of the bill, led by Stovall, of Elbert, and Sheppard, of Sumter, tried to defeat the bill by poking fun at it. To that end half a dozen amendments were offered of a facetious nature, but all were voted down.

Oliver, of Quitman, wanted to amend the bill to tax wagons and buggies in relation to their "horse-power;" Smith, of Fulton County, wanted to amend the bill to place a tax of $1 on all goats and wagons, and Estes, of Lincoln, offered an amendment that placed a tax on ox carts and baby carriages.

Other amendments included those by Lee, of Wilkinson, who wanted to double the tax; Culpepper, of Meriwether, to require two license numbers instead of one, and Myrick, of Chatham, that the autoist register his number with the clerk of his town.

School Tax Bill Up.

Consideration of the bill offering to the voters a constitutional amendment limiting the levy for school purposes to two and one-half mills was begun immediately after the passage of the automobile tax bill, and was in progress when the House adjourned at 1 o'clock. It will be continued at the afternoon session.

The bill for the constitutional amendment was offered by Speaker Burwell, and has the indorsement of the Administration. The Speaker took the floor and spoke for half an hour urging the passage of the bill.

Others who spoke on the bill at the morning session were Representatives Stovall, of Elbert, who opposed it; Shuptrine, of Chatham, who favored it; Fullbright, of Floyd, who is in favor of the measure; Meadows, of Wayne, who opposes it, and Barry Wright, of Floyd, who is against the bill. Mr. Wright had the floor when the House adjourned.

Third Term Given Head of the K. of C.

BOSTON, Aug. 6.—Supreme Knight James A. Flaherty, of Philadelphia, to-day was re-elected by acclamation for a third term at the thirty-first national convention of the Knights of Columbus.

DOCK WORKERS STRIKE.

DULUTH, MINN., Aug. 6.—Six hundred dock workers and shore workers employed by lake shipping companies went on strike to-day.

Fulton Legislators Asked to Supplant County Fee System

By unanimous vote the Board of County Commissioners passed a resolution Wednesday requesting the local representatives in the Legislature to draft a bill abolishing fees for county officials and substituting the salary system. The board instructed the clerk, Henry M. Wood, to prepare a copy of the bill and present it at once to the legislators.

At previous meetings of the board various officials had appeared to protest against the proposed change, but this time there was no protest.

The board heard from several delegations with petitions for street improvements. Those present were Chairman Shelby Smith and Commissioners S. B. Turman, Clifford L. Anderson, W. Tom Winn and Tull C. Waters.

Southern Railway Agents Convene at Georgian Terrace

The first session of the fifteenth annual meeting of the Southern Railway Agents' Association began Wednesday in the main dining room of the Georgian Terrace Hotel. Addresses of welcome were made by Mayor Woodward and W. L. Moore, president of the Chamber of Commerce. A reply was made by President Walker of the Agents' Association.

Routine business was disposed of, and short discussions of topics of interest to the agents followed. More than one hundred agents, representing the largest stations of the Southern Railway system, are here for the meeting, which will last through Friday.

Officers of the association are C. G. Walker, Louisville, Ky., president; E. J. Coffey, East St. Louis, Ill., vice president; D. L. Bryan, Augusta, Ga., treasurer, and W. J. Townsend, Columbia, S. C., secretary. J. M. Fagan is chairman of the executive committee.

Dr. O'Kelly Has Not Accepted Mercer Job

SAVANNAH, Aug. 6.—According to J. G. McCall, of Quitman, chairman of the committee named to elect a president of Mercer University, Dr. T. W. O'Reilly, of Raleigh, N. C., has not accepted the position, which has, however, been tendered him.

McCall says he now fears that Dr. O'Kelly will not accept.

Americans in Mexico City Declare Removal of Envoy Wilson Was a Mistake.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 6.—Prominent members of the American colony today expressed the opinion that the administration at Washington had made a mistake in removing Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson at this time.

President Wilson's action in sending John Lind, former Governor of Minnesota, here on a special mission has given Provisional President Huerta another excuse to protest against outside interference. That Huerta is becoming exceedingly angry at the Washington Government is evident.

Two unofficial envoys have been sent here within the past six months to study the situation and to report to President Wilson on actual conditions and their presence has piqued Huerta.

Jingoes are making capital out of the present status of affairs by declaring that the United States is afraid of Mexico and will not make any move which would inflame the populace.

Lind Will Investigate Charges Against Envoy.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6—One of the first duties devolving on former Governor Lind of Minnesota, when he arrives at Mexico City as personal representative of President Wilson, will be to check certain features of the report by Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson and to find out whether certain charges made against the former envoy have any foundation.

It is expected that Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy will aid in ascertaining how American influence in the Mexican Captal has been used for the past two years.

At Vera Cruz he will confer with Admiral Fletcher, who will report on conditions in Frontera, Tampico and other points on the east coast. Mr. Lind desires to strip his mind of all possible misinformation he may have acquired through inspired sources before taking any action.

The special envoy will leave Galveston to-morrow on the battleship New Hampshire, it was announced at the Navy Department to-day, and it is expected he will be in Vera Cruz within 36 hours and in Mexico City within 48 hours after he leaves the Texas port.

Sidney Dell, Once Atlanta Attorney, Dead in California

News has been received in Atlanta of the death July 24 near Los Angeles of Sidney Dell, once a leading attorney and prominent Mason in Atlanta. Mr. Dell's wife found him dead in bed. The funeral was held July 28 from the residence in Glendale, near Los Angeles.

Mr. Dell was in Atlanta about the same time that Woodrow Wilson was here, but left soon afterward for the West to seek his fortune. He was elected mayor of Portland and missed, by only a few votes, election to the governorship of Oregon. He went to Washington State and thence, twenty years ago, to Los Angeles.

He claimed to have discovered the right of Los Angeles to tide lands at the harbor worth $50,000,000, which the city gained through the courts. Mr. Dell sought a fee for his services but he never was rewarded.

Among lodgemates of Mr. Dell in Atlanta were General A. J. West and other well-known citizens, who remember Mr. Dell as an unusually brilliant attorney and champion of municipal rights.

The Social Sword

An event of Wednesday afternoon which interests society is the polo match to be played on the parade ground at Fort McPherson.

As this is the first polo match played in Atlanta everyone is anticipating great sport. A team representing the Atlanta Polo Club will meet that of the Seventeenth Infantry, the game to be refereed by Colonel M. E. Carthew-Yorstoun. The army team has a group of pretty girls as sponsors; these being Misses Myrt Hancock, Tommie Hancock, Aline Fielder, Lyda Nash, Louise Bradbury, Mary Carl Hurst, Reble Wilkins, Elise Brown and Virginia Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Jenkins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Winecoff and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Freeman, of Greenville, Ga., to chaperone the party of young women.

Many well-known people are interested in the introduction of polo in Atlanta's social and sporting world. Officially connected with the game of Wednesday afternoon are: Robert Maddox, timer; Wilmer Moore, scorer; Clark Howell and James R. Gray, goal judges. Dr. J. A. McLeay has been active in arranging for the polo match.

Wife of Governor Trammell Here.

Mrs. Park Trammell, wife of Governor Trammell of Florida, and her sister, Miss Emma Trammell, are guests of Mrs. Fred Williams for the week. The house was artistically decorated with bright garden flowers.

About 50 guests were present.

U. D. C. Scholarship.

The Atlanta Chapter, U. D. C., announces, through the chairman, Mrs. T. T. Stevens, two valuable scholarships to be given for the coming school year. These include a scholarship in Miss Woodberry's School for Girls, a full four-year collegiate course, including languages; also a scholarship in Miss Hanna's School for Girls, this to be either in the primary or academic departments. Applicants for these scholarships must be descendants of Confederate veterans and in every way worthy. Applications should be made at once to Mrs. T. T. Stevens, No. 450 Luckie street; phone Ivy 324.

Philathea Social.

The College Park Baptist Philathea Class was delightfully entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Camp on Thursday evening, July 31. There also were present several Baraca boys and others. Games were played, refreshments served, and the evening was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

Members of the Philathea class present were Misses Ophelia West, Lottie Dewel, Mattie Camp, Daisy Wilhelt, Anne Lamar, Pauline Trimble, Hazel Foley, Ethel Martin, Nealie Liveoak, Elva Crenshaw, Hettie Cochran, Mrs. Carl Cook and Mrs. T. L. Camp. Others present were Miss Margaret Terry, the Rev. A. F. O'Kelley, Messrs. T. L. Camp, John Hale, Looney Liveoak, Frank Longino, John Jackson, Bernard Smith and Thomas Camp.

For Miss Hazen.

Tuesday evening Messrs. Tyler Waller and Prince Webster gave a swimming party at East Lake for Miss Mildred Hazen, of Orange, N. J., who is the guest of Miss Mignon McCarty. Miss Virginius Hitt chaperoned the party.

Among the guests were Misses Mildred Hazen, Mignon McCarty, Helen Woolfork, guest of Mrs. Hitt; Nancy Prince, Passie May Ottley, Nell Prince, Emma Kate Amorous, Messrs. Tyler Waller, Prince Webster, Moultrie Hitt, Curry Moon, George McCarty, Archie Lee, Gilbert Stout and R. C. C. Black.

Miss Helen Jones entertained at tea at the Piedmont Club Wednesday afternoon in compliment to Miss Mildred Hazen. Tea was served on the terrace, and the table had as its decoration a rustic basket of gay colored flowers.

Miss Jones received her guests wearing yellow crepe with the little coat effect of charmeuse with a blouse of shadow lace.

Miss Buckner, who is visiting Miss Jones, was gowned in mustard-colored crepe with a wide girdle of purple satin.

Twelve girls were guests on this informal occasion.

Surprise Party.

Mrs. George Adair gave a surprise party for her son, Perry Adair, Tuesday evening at their home in Druid Hills in celebration of his fifteenth birthday.

The house was decorated with garden flowers and after a buffet supper dancing was enjoyed.

Among the guests were Misses Annie Bates, Madeline Cullough, Julia Murphey, Ann Patterson, Irene King, Mildred Dobbs, Elizabeth Millard, Margaret Whitman, Quill Orme, Jr., Junius Millard, George Eckford, Earle Eckford, Thomas Hull, Lynn Adams and Perry Day.

For House Party Guests.

Mrs. Robert Hayes is entertaining a house party at her home in Cleburne avenue. The party includes Misses Gladys Tappan, of White Plains; Mattie Cheaves, of Montezuma; Zaretta Estes, of Decatur, and Mary Wolcott, of Boston, Ga.

Tuesday evening Mrs. Hayes gave an al fresco party in compliment to her guests.

Miss Alline Perryman will entertain at bridge Friday evening for the visitors and Miss Willie Belle Mauck will give an informal evening party for them Thursday.

Wheeler-Dabney.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Avery Wheeler announce the marriage of their daughter, Margaret Ann, to Mr. Morde Jefferson Dabney on Sunday, July 20.

Mr. and Mrs. Dabney are with Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Fussell in Inman Park.

For Mrs. Block.

Colonel and Mrs. Robert Lowry entertained at dinner at the Piedmont Club Tuesday evening in compliment to Mrs. Bates Block, whose birthday it was. It also was the birthday of Mr. L. H. Beck, one of the guests, and appropriate toasts were proposed to each.

The table had as its centerpiece a basket of pink roses, and all the minor details were in pink.

Colonel and Mrs. Peel Entertain.

Colonel and Mrs. William L. Peel gave a dinner Tuesday evening at their home, "Woodbine."

The guests were seated at a long table on the terrace of the garden under a pergola hung with lanterns and decorated with growing vines, and the garden itself was fragrant with many flowering plants.

Sixteen guests were invited.

For Mrs. Salmon's Guests.

Mrs. Charles Salmon entertained at an informal luncheon at the Hotel Ansley in honor of her guests, Miss Agnes Vining, of Savannah, and Miss Pearl Vining, of Covington, Ga. Another affair on Wednesday afternoon was a porch party given by Miss Annie Furgerson in honor of Mrs. Salmon's guests.

300 Factory Women Gamble on Baseball

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 3.—Three hundred women gamblers, working in mills and spending their money on baseball pools, have been counted by Detective Charles Lee, head of the vice squad here. Harry Reed has been held in bail by Magistrate Coward, having been charged with operating a pool.

Lee says 1,800 persons gambled on ball games in Reed's place each week, most of whom were women. The chances cost 25 cents each.

China Picks Cornell Grad to Replace Wu

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PEKIN, CHINA, Aug. 6.—The government, according to latest information, intends to appoint Alfred Sze, a Cornell graduate, as Minister to Washington. It planned to make Wu Tingfang Ambassador, but the American Government did not agree to raise the status of the legation here and this necessitated the nomination of a junior.

Mr. Sze was nominated Minister to Washington in 1911, but did not go to his post on account of the revolution.

ATLANTA IS 16TH CITY IN U. S. IN PARCEL POST

Remarkable Increase in Volume of Mail Here Arouses Favorable Comment in Washington.

Postmaster Hugh McKee declared Wednesday that the large increase in the amount of mail handled in the Atlanta postoffice was the subject of favorable comment in Washington among department officials.

During the past year more than 50,000,000 letters, not including newspapers and periodicals were stamped or canceled in the Atlanta postoffice This is an increase over the previous year of about 15,000,000 letters.

Showing the progressive spirit of Atlanta merchants in taking advantage of the new parcel post, Mr. McKee said: "We are handling more than 7,000 parcel post packages per day, which is more than are handled in Louisville, Indianapolis and other cities twice the size of Atlanta. The Atlanta office ranks sixteenth in the number of parcel post packages handled in the United States.

"Here in the postoffice we have a chance to keep close tab on Atlanta's activity and correspondence, and I will say that the growth in mail business since I came into office has been marvelous, and scarcely seems believable when you compare the books of previous years with the fiscal year just ended."

Empire Life Plans 20-Story Building

AUGUSTA, Aug. 6.—Meetings of the building committee of The Empire Life Insurance Company were held here yesterday and to-day to decide on plans and specifications for the new building upon which work will start here on October 1. It is understood the building will be twenty stories.

The members of the committee are W. W. Reid, Atlanta; M. P. Pope, Washington, and H. C. Lorick, H. H. Stafford and C. E. Whitney, Augusta.

CHILD DIES IN VINEGAR.

PARIS, ILL., Aug. 6.—Failing head foremost into an 8-gallon jar of vinegar, Lester David, aged 2 years, son of George David, a farmer, was drowned before his mother could rescue him.

Voliva in Power at Zion City Bars Rum, Drugs and Tobacco

ZION CITY, ILL., Aug. 6.—A city free from beer, whisky, drugs and tobacco was planned to-day by Wilbur Glenn Voliva, successor of John Alexander Dowie as the head of Zion City. Voliva's followers dominate the City Council. Counting the women voters of the city, his forces can reelect its own city officers at the next election.

Beer wagons passing through the streets of Zion City will be prohibited the use of the streets after the passage of an ordinance Voliva was preparing to-day.

The ordinance will give city authorities the right to go into a man's own home and arrest him for using tobacco.

No drug store will be permitted within the city limits after the adoption of the ordinance.

French Want Trading Base North of Canal

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—The commission sent by the French Government to study the effect upon French commerce of the opening of the Panama Canal reports unfavorably upon the establishment of a commercial base either on Guadaloupe or Martinique. These French possessions in the West Indies are too far south of the regular Panama route, says the commission, and shippers will rather coal in Porto Rico or Cuba.

Lieutenant Hallier, representing the Minister of Marine, recommends, however, the establishment of a naval station at Fort DeFrance, Martinique.

Bankrupt Town Has To Let 'Skeeters Nip

HACKETTSTOWN, N. J., Aug. 6. Invaded by a swarm of mosquitoes, this town is too poor to fight them.

The Board of Health asked the Council for $1,000 to fight the pests, and the Council replied that it could not make the appropriation.

CHANGE IN MILITIA LAWS IS OPPOSED

The House Committee on Military Affairs put its members on record Wednesday morning as upholding the present military laws of the State, which give the militia supreme authority during riots and other disturbances, when it reported unfavorably the bills introduced by Mr. Slade of Muscogee. Mr. Slade's bills repealed the act of 1912, and re-established the act of 1910, making the militia subservient to the civil authorities.

Mr. Slade, dissatisfied with the action of the committee, served notice that he will ask the unanimous consent of the House that his bills be placed on the calendar for consideration.

Chairman Spence, of the Military Affairs Committee, stated that he will endeavor to get the members of his committee together Wednesday afternoon for a reopening of the Augusta investigation. He stated that both sides of the trouble will be heard. Several witnesses from Augusta have been requested to attend the meeting and Adjutant Gneral Nash and several militia officers also will be present.

Mr. Spence several times has expressed his opinion that a legislative investigation of the Augusta trouble is useless.

Beware, Poseurs, of 'Soul Photos'

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 6.—"With the development of 'soul photography,'" the latest addition to the picture maker's are, says Miss Emma Gerhard, "the modern photographer will vie with the old masters in producing pictures that will live forever.

"It is wholly a matter of art," said Miss Gerhard. "It consists of bringing out in the subject what is really in him or her, not in making an artificial reproduction of his features and clothes.

"Every human being is constantly posing. There are a thousand and one little superficial things about every man and woman which cover up the real self, and these things overshadow all else in photographs."

PARDON DENIED HAWTHORNE BY M'REYNOLDS

Attorney General Ignores Recommendation of Board Which Made Special Inquiry.

Despite the fact that the Federal Pardon Board strongly recommended after a thorough investigation, that pardons be granted to Julian Hawthorne and Dr. William J. Morton, who are imprisoned in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary on charges of using the mails to defraud in the sale of mining stocks, Attorney General McReynolds has issued a statement from Washington that he has decided to override the recommendations of the board and refuse clemency to the two men.

The action of McReynolds is almost unprecedented in the history of the Department of Justice. The Board of Pardons made the Hawthorne case a subject of thorough and exhaustive investigation. It came to Atlanta and went into every detail of the case. At the end of the investigation it made the Hawthorne case the subject of a special report and a special recommendation for clemency. It had been intimated that the writer had been the scapegoat for others.

Mr. McReynolds' excuse for refusing to grant a pardon to Hawthorne is that he and Dr. Morton have been shown enough leniency.

It is generally understood that one result of Mr. McReynolds' actions in the Hawthorne case will be the redoubling of the efforts of the writer's friends and the case may be taken to President Wilson.

Under the ruling of the Attorney General, Hawthorne and Morton must remain in prison until October. The trial judge, in sentencing them, dated their terms back a year and a day, and their time will be up in about two months.

Deputy Warden Hawk, of the Federal Prison, stated Wednesday morning that the prison authorities have as yet received no formal notification that a pardon had been refused Hawthorne. He stated, however, that it is not usual for them to do so. They are notified when a pardon has been granted, but never when one has been refused.

FOUR KILLED IN WRECK CAUSED BY WASHOUT

L. and N. Freight Engine Submerged—Three of Train Crew and Negro Tramp Perish.

Imprisoned in a locomotive submerged under fifteen feet of water, three members of the crew and a negro tramp met death early Wednesday morning when the Louisville and Nashville freight train No. 5, southbound, ran into a washout a few miles north of Marietta.

The dead are S. K. Farris, the engineer; Fireman Shenell and Brakeman R. P. Merrell, all of Etowah, and the unknown negro.

The wreck was on the Western and Atlantic tracks near Noonday station, and, according to Superintendent J. L. McCollum, was caused by the washout.

The embankment gave way before the engine pulling 30 cars, and the locomotive was thrown into the gully, twelve cars piling on it. Part of the train crew, including Conductor J. L. Brenenizer, was in the caboose on the rear and escaped.

The wrecked train was coming to Atlanta, due here at 7:25 a. m.

Forest Fire Imperils Cape Cod Villages

HYANNIS, MASS., Aug. 6.—With more than forty square miles of Cape Cod timber devastated by a roaring forest fire that has caused a loss of more than $250,000, the fate of this town and nearby villages hung in the balance to-day.

Summer residents have placed automobiles at the disposal of the fire fighters and touring cars and limousines are transporting gallons of water.

Mrs. Anna E. Ham is the name by which the new postmaster is known to her friends.

JOYNER'S SLAYER ELUDES CAPTURE

Screven County Negro Completely Disappears After Tragedy Near Sylvania—Six Arrests.

SYLVANIA, Aug. 6.—Cleveland Michael, the slayer of Dine Joyner, a Screven County farmer, is still uncaptured, no clew whatever being found that would suggest the whereabouts of the murderer. Dogs from the Bulloch County chaingang were put on the trail, but it was too cold for them to make any headway. Men were stationed at all bridges across the Ogeechee River, as it was thought he would make an effort to reach Bulloch, where he has relatives.

A full description of this negro has been published and pictures of him are in the hands of officers in adjoining counties. Six other negroes that were thought to have been plotting with Michael to kill Joyner are in jail here.

More than 500 persons attended the funeral of Joyner at Friendship Church.

JUSTICE AND MERCY IN GEORGIA

"A bruised reed shall he not break.
"And the smoking flax shall he not quench."---Isaiah 42:3.
"I will have mercy."---Matt. 11:17.

Justice and mercy for the friendless!

The Senate, without a dissenting vote, has passed the bill providing for Probation.

With only three men voting against it, the Senate has also passed the bill providing for the Indeterminate Sentence.

These two bills are now before the House, having been favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee.

And yesterday, Tuesday, CHAIRMAN WHEATLEY saved the Girls' Reformatory from oblivion; he called a special meeting of the Committee on Appropriations to consider the Jones-Mills Bill; THE RESULT, it is believed, will be the building of the Reformatory for Girls in Georgia.

Representatives GRIFFIN, GREENE of Houston and BERRY, members of the sub-committee that considered the original bill and reported it back carrying an appropriation of $30,000.00 to the committee for action, spoke in favor of it.

Messrs. CONNOR and METHVIN advocated its adoption.

JOHN Y. SMITH of Fulton then moved that the Committee report favorably the bill as amended.

In favoring this motion, CHAIRMAN WHEATLEY explained that he had favored the bill from the beginning.

Both the Chairman and the members of the Committee recognize the APPALLING AND IMMEDIATE NEED for the Reformatory for Girls; they unanimously adopted the motion recommending that the bill, carrying an appropriation of $30,000.00, be passed.

The Prison Commission has urged that the home be built, pointing out that Georgia has no place in which to handle wayward and delinquent girls. And the Penitentiary Committee has also without a dissenting vote recommended the passage of the Jones-Mills Bill providing for the Home.

Remember! This home is not to deal with the hardened woman of the streets, but with children.

To-day if a GIRL OF ELEVEN, TWELVE OR FOURTEEN gets in trouble, there is no place in Georgia either to protect or help her.

This shame is unendurable. To-day seventy-five girls under sixteen years old known to us are without a place.

What will YOU do?

No man has opposed—and it is believed that no man can or will oppose—the bill either in the House or the Senate.

To-day Georgia looks to the Rules Committee of the House.

SPEAKER BURWELL, who is ex-officio its Chairman, and BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, and the men serving with them in the Committee on Rules, namely Messrs. HARDEMAN, MILLER, NUNNALLY, PAULK of Berrien, REDWINE, RHODES, SHUPTRINE, SLADE AND RAGLAND, are to decide whether or not the State will take care of her delinquent and wayward girls—

Whether or not the State shall have Probation and the Indeterminate Sentence—

Whether or not Georgia will take her stand with her Sister States in giving Justice and Mercy to the unfortunate.

Those who know these men believe that they will NOT KILL, but WILL HELP to pass these measures.

Those who know Georgia believe that the men of the House and of the Senate will gladly give the brief time necessary to make these bills the law of Georgia.

They harm no one. But they help the helpless.

They mean life to many a home in Georgia where worse than death—dishonor and shame—will reign if these bills are not enacted into laws at this session of the Legislature.

What will you do?

CRASH FATAL TO 2 LAID TO BAD AUTO BRAKE

Car Rolled Into Train's Path, Declares J. P. Heard, Whose Wife and Son Were Killed.

Struck by a Southern Railway train when their automobile went dead on the tracks of a crossing a mile north of McDonough, Ga., late Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. Emma Heard, wife of J. P. Heard, of Vienna, Ga., and her ten-year-old son, Lio Lindon Heard, were killed.

Mr. Heard leaped from the car when he saw it would be impossible to escape the crash, and escaped with a few bruises. Mrs. Heard and her son were caught in the cowcatcher of the locomotive and dragged 50 feet.

The bodies of Mrs. Heard and her son were taken to Vienna. The funeral will be held there Wednesday afternoon. They were well known in Atlanta, and many friends of the family here will attend the funeral.

Mrs. Heard was Miss Emma Lashley, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lashley, and was a leader in the social life of her community. She is survived by her husband, who is a son of the late Senator Heard and president of the Heard Banking Company, and her parents.

Mr. Heard Tells of Accident.

Statements made Wednesday morning by Mr. Heard and J. L. Mable, engineer of the train, indicate that the accident was unavoidable and was the result of the failure of the emergency brake of the automobile.

"My wife, my son Lindon and myself left our home in Vienna, in my two-passenger roadster," said Mr. Heard, "to attend the motorcycle races in Atlanta. We passed through McDonough about 2 o'clock. Ten minutes later we passed over the brow of a long steep hill that leads down to the railroad tracks. A train can not be seen until the crossing is almost reached. We were only a few yards from the track when Mrs. Heard saw the train coming and shouted.

"We were going about 25 miles an hour. I at once shut off my engine and applied the brake, but it failed to work. Seeing that a collision was unavoidable, I leaped from the car and shouted for Mrs. Heard and my son to do likewise. They were probably too frightened to do so. The next thing I remember was hearing their screams as the train struck them."

Engineer Gives His Version.

Engineer Mable declared that when he saw the automobile he applied air-brakes, but the crossing was too near for the air to take effect before the automobile was struck.

"I was running about 25 miles an hour and the crossing was about a hundred yards ahead of me when I saw the automobile. The car was running as fast as my train, and had plenty of time to cross the tracks in front of me.

"When the machine got to within about ten yards of the track, it slowed down and rolled up until the front wheels of the car were on the tracks. Then it stopped. I at once applied the airbrakes, but too late to have any appreciable effect on the speed of the train."

Life Insurance Men Dine; Name Delegates

Atlanta members of the National Association of Life Underwriters enjoyed an informal banquet at Hotel Ansley Tuesday night and elected delegates to the annual convention of the organization in Atlantic City in September.

The delegates are F. W. Burr, J. H. Byrley, Paul H. Dobbins, W. R. Hawkins, R. F. Shedden and A. C. Newell. The following alternates were named: R. L. Foreman, Oscar Palmour, W. R. Hawkins, J. M. Skinner and R. J. Guinn.

Isadore Duncan's Motor Is Wrecked

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Isadora Duncan gave proof of her stoicism the other night when her chauffeur flung her car at full speed in pitch darkness against the closed barriers of a railway crossing at Mondragon village.

Instead of jumping out, under the stress of the ghastly memories of her children's fate, she remained in her seat and a little later reached Orange practically unhurt.

Gerard Threatens to Quit as Ambassador

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, Aug. 6.—Justice James W. Gerard, of New York, the Ambassador to Germany, after inspecting all the available houses in Berlin, says that unless he succeeds in finding a place adapted to the requirements of himself, his family and the embassy, he was seriously considering declining the post of Ambassador.

He has been unable to find quarters, although he is willing to pay for them out of his private means.

'September Morn' Is 'Art' in Augusta

AUGUSTA, Aug. 6.—"September Morn" has made her appearance in Augusta. Many prints of the painting may be seen in a local bookstore window, but no arrest of the proprietor has been made or threatened arrest.

Augusta takes "September Morn" as a matter of course. The people here deem her graceful and the fact that she is minus a wardrobe does not cause any young girl to blush, for all have seen reproductions of real art before.

How and Why to Eat Watermelon

Cool, but do not chill Mr. Melon.

Cut it lengthwise, not in round slices.

Save the seeds, make "watermelon tea."

Use your teeth—not knives or forks.

Watermelon is refreshing and good for the stomach and kidneys.

P. S.—These tips are furnished by the "champeen" melon-eaters of Congress.

HOWARD ONE OF 8 BEST MELON EATERS

Georgia Congressman Right Up in Race for "Champeen" Title in Capitol Cafes.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—State secrets on statesmen's appetites, and particularly watermelons during the present height of the watermelon season, were divulged to-day. The divulger is R. J. Martyn, "boss" of the Capitol Cafes.

Twenty big, fat watermelons are consumed by Congressmen every day, according to "Chef" Martyn. Representative Henry D. Clayton, of Alabama, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, is the acknowledged "champeen" watermelon eater. He gets outside of from one to three big slices daily.

Other watermelon "fanatics" who appear to be crowding Clayton for the title are Representative Mann, of Illinois; Sereno Payne, of New York; Sims, of Tennessee; Dietrick, of Massachusetts; Austin, of Tennessee; Stedman, of North Carolina, and Howard, of Georgia.

Approached on his watermelon prowess, Clayton gave the following panegyric:

"Watermelon beats ice cream or lemonade all hollow as a cool refreshment. It is the most luscious, refreshing fruit possible to be secured in summer.

"Some people eat salt on watermelon. That is a mistake. Salt militates against its palatability and digestibility. I take mine straight.

"Watermelon is a splendid diuretic. It cleanses the whole digestive system.

"Watermelon seed tea is an old Southern remedy for kidney trouble.

"I don't care for thick-rind striped melons. I don't like the hybrids between the Georgie 'rattlesnake' melon and the 'scaly bark.' Some of these are a cross between a guinea melon and a horse gourd.

"The best melon grown is in Alabama, with a thin rind, a whitish melon. Lead me to them any time."

RICH MEN RULE CHURCH, SAYS RICHMOND

Morgan Held House of Rishops in Hollow of Hand, Asserts Episcopalian Rector.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 6.—"Our House of Bishops is led in tow by Wall street. The lat J. P. Morgan was the power behind Bishop Greer, and he held our House of Bishops in the hollow of his hand.

"The cathedral on Morningside Heights is a standing monument to our New York corrupt money power. It is the embodiment of ecclesiastical snobbery, spiritual frippery and moral incompetency.

"Since the day of Bishop Potter the diocese of New York has been in control of half a dozen plutocrats. In Philadelphia the Episcopal Church is 'run' by a few rich men. They control the Bishop (Rhinelander), who, in mental ability, personal authority and moral aggressiveness is not, by any means, a great man.

"August Belmont is at the head of our race track gamblers. His career is one of the worst careers for an American youth to imitate. Yet he is prominent in the Church of the Ascension on lower Fifth avenue."

The foregoing quotations are from a sermon delivered in St. John's Episcopal Church by the rector, the Rev. George Chalmers Richmond.

"In most of the large parishes of the Episcopal Church throughout the country we find men like Belmont and the late J. P. Morgan, who curb the spiritual influence of the clergy, make them timid, and in the end cause them to shrivel up morally. Men in humble circumstances distrust our sincerity. The Episcopal Church is not sincere in its present assumed attitude toward labor.

"My own ecclesiastical superior, Bishop Rhinelander, was elected two years ago," said Mr. Richmond, "largely through the push and pull of Wall street interests, corporation lawyers and social idlers, together with a few of our clergy among whom towered pre-eminently the Rev. Father Mortimer, of the 'High Church gang,' who has since been disposed from the ministry for gross immorality."

'Country-Bred Folks' Meet at Grant Park

The Country Collective Society will hold a meeting in the main pavilion in Grant Park Wednesday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

The membership of the Society is made up of country-bred persons residing in and around Atlanta. It was organized to promote better friendship among the members, and to preserve the tradition of ante-bellum days in Dixie.

It is proposed to erect a log cabin in Grant Park and furnish it with old-fashioned articles. R. D. Hawkins is president and Robert P. Martin secretary.

Merchants on Tour Of Factories While Committees Work

Much detail work is yet to be accomplished in the organization of the Southern merchants' convention.

Wednesday will be devoted to work by the various committees, and an inspection of Atlanta's factories and stores by delegates and visitors.

A great deal of important work relating to crops, credit, stock questions and co-operation will come before the convention starting Thursday morning.

Adventists Report On Publishing Work

FORT VALLEY, Aug. 6.—The report of the publishing work of the denomination was the feature of to-day's business session of the Georgia Conference of Seventh-day Adventists which is meeting here in its ten-day annual encampment.

This report showed that the publishing work had grown from one small printing house worth $652, with five employees, printing two periodicals in one language in 1862, to 39 publishing houses, worth $1,175,082, with 610 employees, printing 126 periodicals in 71 languages in 1912.

Banker Gets 5 Years For Embezzlement

MOULTRIE, Aug. 6.—The jury trying J. H. Cason, former cashier of the Bank of Crossland, for embezzling more than $7,000, returned a verdict of guilty. He was sentenced by Judge Thomas to five years in the penitentiary. G. F. Clark, president of the Crossland Bank, and Assistant State Bank Examiner Anderson, of Atlanta, were the principal witnesses for the prosecution.

It was with difficulty that Cason kept from collapsing as he stood up to hear his sentence. While making his statement to the jury he wept freely.

K. of C. Plan Change In Insurance Rates

BOSTON, Aug. 6.—The election of officers and the reports of the supreme officers featured the two business sessions of the delegates to the Knights of Columbus' thirty-first annual convention to-day. The sessions were held at Hotel Somerset.

Important also among the probable actions of the delegates at to-day's sessions is the changing of the insurance laws so the assessments may rest more easily on the older members.

Aero Manufacturer Fails for $6,000,000

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—Extravagent living and speculation in the silk trade were declared to-day to have caused the downfall of Armand Duperdessin, who was arrested yesterday on the charge of fraudulently raising millions of dollars for the extension of his aeroplane factory.

M. Duperdessin's liabilities amount to $6,000,000, whereas his assets are given at only $2,000,000.

COL. J. P. WILLIAMS DIES AT HIS HOME

Railroad and College Leader, Soldier and Philanthropist Was 70 Years Old.

Captain Jesse P. Williams, one of the best known men in Georgia, died at his home, 478 Peachtree street, Tuesday. He was 70 years old.

Captain Williams formerly operated one of the South's largest naval stores at Savannah. About seven years ago he suffered a stroke of paralysis, and retired from active life, though he attended to his business affairs until the very last. He was president and principal owner of the Georgia, Florida and Southern Railroad.

Captain Williams was born in Wayne County, N. C. He attended the University of Virginia in the late fifties, going to Washington in company with other students of that institution to see Abraham Lincoln inaugurated. When Fort Sumter was fired upon he left the University and enlisted in the Twentieth North Carolina as a private, later rising to the rank of captain.

For many years he was president of the Boards of Trustees of Emory College, to which institution he gave two handsome buildings. He was a deeply religious man, and a steward in the Trinity Methodist Church.

Surviving Captain Williams are his wife; four sisters, Mrs. James Ezzell and Mrs. Olive B. Parks, Misses Hattie and Edith Taylor, of Mount Olive, N. C., and two brothers, Charles and George Williams, all of Mount Olive.

Funeral services will be held at the resident at 11 o'clock Thursday morning. J. E. Dickey, president of Emory College, will officiate, assisted by Bishop Candler. Interment will be at West View.

Cotton Schedule Is Scored by Lippit

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—Declaring that the schedules in the Democratic tariff bill relating to cotton, silk and wool are "capricious and illogical," Senator Lippitt, of Rhode Island, to-day advocated as substitute provisions the Dingley law rates with a horizontal reduction of 20 per cent.

"I believe the cotton manufacturers as a rule are willing to try the experiment of a reduction in the tariff," said Senator Lippitt. "They protest against revision."

FULTON COUNTY TO HAVE A CARD INDEX

Industrial Survey Ordered by the Chamber of Commerce To Be Best in United States.

Plans for an industrial survey of Fulton County, which will be one of the largest and most complete ever made in the United States, are now being formulated by the industrial and statistical bureau of the Chamber of Commerce. The work will be done by W. H. Leahy, chairman of the bureau, under the supervision of the committee, which is composed of J. R. Smith, E. H. Shaw, M. R. Wilkinson, V. H. Kriegshaber, W. T. Winn, A. R. Colcord, A. A. Floyd, David Woodward, W. R. Collier, and Wilmer L. Moore.

The work of Mr. Leahy and the committee will be to compile data, in card index form, of all manufacturing plants in the county, their output, source of raw material, cost of labor and production, number of employees and the payrolls, and the freight rates on raw materials and finished products.

A complete survey of all banking institutions and commercial enterprises will be made, and data will be obtained on all Southern headquarters of big corporations located in Atlanta and the truck gardening about the city.

The results of the survey will be published in a pamphlet which will be revised monthly. Other pamphlets relating to the commercial and industrial life of Atlanta will be published. Permission will be asked to place a large board in each railway station, on which will be written statistics of Atlanta for the information of travelers.

Portugal's President Not Dead, Says Lisbon

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 6.—The reported death of President Ariaga, of Portugal, published in the morning newspapers here, is denied in a dispatch received from Lisbon at noon.

Senhor Ariaga is ill of a kidney ailment.

Largest Fire Chief In World Is Dead

PADUCAH, KY., Aug. 6.—James Wood, president of the International Association of Fire Chiefs, is dead here.

He was the largest fire chief in the world, weighing 325 pounds.

President Asked to Visit 2 Dixie States

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—Senators Fletcher, of Florida, and Williams, of Mississippi, and Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, called on President Wilson to-day to invite him to visit their States should he conclude to make a Southern trip this fall.

The President said he would be glad to accept their hospitality should he make the trip. Senator Fletcher especially desires the President to visit Jacksonville, and Senator Williams brought a delegation from Meridian with him.

Mrs. Longstreet in A Rest Sanitarium

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 6.—Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, former postmaster at Gainesville, is under treatment in the sanitarium of Dr. J. H. Lowney here.

The long fight waged by Mrs. Longstreet to retain her commission as postmaster and the part she has taken in politics brought about a breakdown which required rest and medical attention.

Nobleman Sought by Matchmakers Weds

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 6.—Lord Rocksavage, heir of the Marquis of Cholmondeley and known in society as "the enigma of matchmaking mothers," ceased to be a riddle to-day when he was married to Miss Sybl Sassoon, an heiress and a leader in the young Bohemian set. Lord Rocksavage is very rich, while his bride is accredited with having a fortune of $10,000,000 in her own right. They were quietly married at a registry office.

'Wilsonade' Routs Bryan Grape Juice

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—"Wilsonade," the new Capital drink, made of orange juice and plain water, has completely routed Bryan grape juice out of Washington.

President Wilson is sponsor for the new drink, and it is prepared especially for him in the White House kitchen each morning. A dash of powdered sugar may be added if desired.

"Nothing Succeeds Like Circulation"

DRY SUPPORTERS ARE BEATEN BY FILIBUSTER

Resolution to Report the Hixon-Searcy Liquor Bill Defeated. Tax Plot Charged.

The filibuster in the House against the resolution of Kidd, of Baker, which instructed the Temperance Committee to report back the Hixon-Searcy bill for action, and by which Wohlwender, of Muscogee, consumed the entire time of the House Tuesday, came to an end Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock with victory resting with the forces against the bill.

In response to a point of order raised by Stewart, of Coffee, Speaker Burwell ruled that Kidd's resolution was not in order for consideration Wednesday, and the efforts of the temperance forces to force a hearing on the bill were therefore in vain.

The point raised by Mr. Stewart was that, inasmuch as the resolution was introduced Tuesday and specifically called upon the Temperance Committee to report the bill back "to-morrow," it was asking the committee to perform a physical impossibility, and was therefore not in order.

Wright Objects to Decision.

Wright, of Floyd, who is generally credited with being behind Mr. Kidd in the introduction of the resolution, protested vigorously against the decision of the Speaker.

"Doesn't the Speaker intend to hear those who favor this resolution?" he demanded.

"You are out of order," the Speaker replied. "The resolution has been ruled out of order, and is not now under discussion."

Representative Wohlwender, backed by Myrick and Shuptrine, of Chatham; Nunnally, of Floyd, and others of the anti-dry forces, appeared when the House convened to-day determined to continue the filibuster until Mr. Kidd consented to withdraw his resolution. This Mr. Kidd and the temperance cohorts absolutely refused to do.

Stewart Then Finds Loophole.

Conferences between the prohis and the antis were numerous, but barren of result, and it looked as though the filibuster would continue, with the anti-dry people holding the whip hand indefinitely, when Mr. Stewart found the loophole through which the resolution was riddled.

The effect of the resolution and the filibuster has been to draw the line sharply between the anti-dry and the temperance forces, and to smother the more important question of tax revision. The victory of the antis precludes the possibility of the Searcy bill getting a hearing at this session, inasmuch as the Rules Committee takes charge and no resolutions similar to the Kidd resolution can be introduced.

Claims Anti-Tax Plot.

Mr. Wohlwender, whose strong lungs and determination defeated the resolution, voiced the opinion Wednesday morning that the resolution was an outgrowth of the tax revision fight.

"Sheppard, of Sumter; Stovall, of Elbert, and the others who are fighting tax revision were behind the resolution," declared Mr. Wohlwender. "They hoped to get that bill brought out because they knew if the House once got busy on it no tax measures could be passed at this session."

Chicago Suburb in Anti-Negro Uprising

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—The uprising in the fashionable suburb of Wilmette against negro residents there reached its crest to-day, and many servants and chauffeurs were out of jobs.

The town board is considering a memorial directed against a real estate firm which is accused of encouragfng negro emigration.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

At the Grand.

Motion pictures at the Grand have become decidedly popular. It is predicted that in the very near future the fad of going to the Grand to see the movies will be one of the daily matters of routine with thousands of people. The fact that the big building is cool, clean and safe, has added a healthy influence to people who want to see what is new in motion pictures wih every convenience. The schedule of performances this week is from 2:30 until 5:15 each afternoon, and from 8:30 until 10:15 at night.

The Forsyth.

There is a splendid vaudeville entertainment at the Forsyth this week, despite the fact there is no feature headliner. It just happened that the Keith people were in position to secure the seven special acts, and each one has registered the sort of hit that has crowded the Forsyth at four performances, and built up an advance sale that has not very often been equalled. The hits are very evenly distributed.

At the Bijou.

The Bijou seems to improve the class of its entertainment each succeeding week. During the past ten weeks the popular theater has been devoted to popular priced musical comedies and each week has seen an improvement over the former, but the present week Lew Cantor's musical farce entitled "Along the Pike" is by far the most pretentious production that has been presented so far.

WANT AD GIVES GIRL START IN WORLD

Contestant Relates Story of How She Climbed, and Now She Knows Advertising Pays.

"I know I can secure want ads by the hundred, for I know what a want ad will do," said one young woman contestant when she entered The Georgian's want ad competition and started out to win an automobile or a trip to California. "I've had experience."

"I'll tell you," replied the young woman. "It lifted me from a $5 a week job to one at $12 and afterward to $15. I'm resting now for the summer and putting in my spare time on the contest.

"I was just beginning stenography when I found my first position. I started in at $5 a week, and though I kept improving in my work the boss just wouldn't give me a raise. He said he could get plenty of girls at that price. I had almost given up.

"One afternoon when he was away I was reading The Georgian and my eye happened to meet the 'Help Wanted, Female,' column. I had never taken interest in want ads before. But right under my nose was a little ad—'Wanted—a good stenographer. Salary $12.'

"I put on my hat, shut up my desk and went after that job, and got it. That's what a want ad did for me. And I can tell others what want ads will do, for I have confidence, and that goes a long way."

The contestants are rolling up votes right along, and those who are thinking of entering and winning first prize had better hurry. There is yet time to enter and get a start, but it will not pay to delay entering.

If You Don't Drink Do Not Read This

LEAVENWORTH, KANS., Aug. 6. Henderson Hasty, of Easton, a small town near here, was stripped, plastered with a coat of warm tar and his face painted green last night by a party of citizens, determined to enforce observance of the prohibition law. Hasty was found asleep beside a road in Easton.

That he would sign the pledge is said to have been his declaration when he awoke.

Society Girl Now a $3 Millinery Clerk

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 5.—Miss Delphine Force, a pretty society girl and daughter of wealthy parents, is now a millinery apprentice at $3 a week and says she likes the work. She recently quit society pleasures to become a professional cook.

Miss Force plans to be a teacher of demestic science at Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass., in the Fall, where millinery is part of the curriculum.

Gainesville Plans Ban on Cigarettes

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 6.—Several hundred citizens of Gainesville have petitioned City Council to pass an ordinance making it unlawful for any child under 16 years of age to smoke cigarettes at any place except at the homes of parents or guardians.

It is thought the ordinance will be passed.

BATTLE WITH MOONSHINERS.

LEXINGTON, Aug. 6.—George W. Castel and Sherman Lewis, deputy United States marshals, engaged in a battle with moonshiners in Morgan County, Kentucky, to-day. Lewis was shot in the arm by John Kidd. Marion Kidd was wounded and captured. A 35-gallon still and a lot of beer and whisky were destroyed.

Grandma Talks About Babies

Has a Large Circle of Listeners Who Profit by Her Wisdom and Experience.

In almost any settled community there is a grandma who knows Mother's Friend. Not only is she reminiscent of her own experience, but it was through her recommendation that so many young, expectant mothers derived the comfort and blessing of this famous remedy.

Mother's Friend is applied externally to the abdomen, stomach and breasts, allays all pain, avoids all nausea, and prevents caking of the breasts.

It is quickly and wonderfully penetrating, permits the muscles to expand without the strain on the ligaments and prepares the system so thoroughly that the crisis is passed almost without the slightest distress. Thus there need be no such thing as dread or fear.

No better nor more cheering advice can be given the expectant mother than to suggest the use of Mother's Friend. She will take courage from the beginning. The days will be cheerful, the nights restful. Thus the health is preserved, the mind is in repose and the period is an unending one of quiet, joyful anticipation.

You can obtain Mother's Friend of any druggist at $1 a bottle. Do not forget nor neglect to be supplied with this greatest remedy ever devised for motherhood. It is unfailing. Write at once to Bradfield Regulator Company, 123 Lamar Building, Atlanta, Ga., for their very interesting and instructive book of advice for expectant mothers.

Asks Special Judge To Hear Demurrer

COLUMBUS, Aug. 6.—Alleging that Hugh M. Mooty, a former bookkeeper for the Beehive, a large dry goods establishment in Columbus, is not a resident of Muscogee County, but of Fulton County, and that the Superior Court of this county has no jurisdiction over his affairs, his attorneys have asked for the appointment of a special judge to sit when their demurrer to a recent decision is heard.

Judge Gilbert held that the Clerk of Superior Court should name the judge, but Clerk Marcus held that as the litigation is before Judge Littlejohn, of the Americus circuit, he would refuse to name another jurist.

$1,200 GIVEN FOR BIG COTTON SHOW

Crushers Donate Fourth of the Amount Needed — Committees etG Promises of Support.

With $1,200, one-fourth of the amount needed, contributed by the Cotton Seed Crushers of Georgia, plans for a permanent exhibit of cotton products which it is proposed to establish in the new Champer of Commerce building have received an impetus that bids fair to carry the project through. Other lines lines of the cotton industry of the State will be asked to contribute an amount in proportion to their importance, and it is thought the entire amount will be raised within a few weeks.

The gift of the Crushers was made through their chairman, W. M. Hutchinson, at a meeting late Tuesday afternoon of the cotton products committee of the Atlanta Manufacturers' Exposition Committee, of which Mell R. Wilkinson is chairman. The meeting was addressed by Mayor Woodward, Commissioner of Agriculture J. D. Price, Wilmer L. Moore, S. A. Carter and others.

Special committees for each branch of the cotton industry will be named Wednesday. These committees will confer with respresentatives of each line, including fertilizers, the textile industry, the cotton oil industry and ginning, and it will be determined to just what extent the movement for an exhibit will be supported.

Trots and Tangos Boon to Chiropodist

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—The turkey trot and the tango are to the chiropodists equal to the goose that laid the golden eggs, says Miss Clara Houston, of Chicago, the "girl with the perfect foot." Miss Houston, herself a chiropodist, says:

"Those dances put an unaccustomed strain on the toes and instep and since they started women have been flocking to chiropodists in droves to have their feet made over. I hope the craze lasts, but I would never dance any of those dances myself. I think too much of my feet."

BIRMINGHAMERS MAKE A HIT HERE

Atlanta Rotary Club Fills Members of Alabama Organization With Good Cheer.

The Birmingham Rotary Club, 32 strong, entrained at midnight Tuesday for the Alabama village, chuck full of the good cheer provided for them by the Atlanta Rotary Club, and joyful over the day spent in the Gate City.

Purely social was the visit of the Birminghamers, though the spirit of enthusiasm displayed augurs well for the growth of both clubs. Reaching Atlanta at 12:40, they were met by a delegation of fifteen members of the local club and escorted to Hotel Ansley, where they were entertained at lunchon. The afternoon was spent in sightseeing, the places of business of many of the members of the Atlanta Rotary Club coming in for an inspection.

At 7 o'clock the party went to the Capital City Club, where several hours were spent in good fellowship. The festivities broke up shortly before midnight, to enable the visitors to catch the train.

The modesty of Atlanta's business men was illustrated in the opening address of President Hubert Anderson. He described the speaker he was to introduce in flowery terms. He made of him the perfect man and the originator of all things great in Atlanta, and said: "Gentlemen, it is my honor to introduce to you—"

Instantly every member of the Atlanta Rotary Club was on his feet bowing and speaking. The laughter which followed is undoubtedly being heard on Twentieth street in Birmingham to-day.

23 Church 'Drones' Ousted by Elders

STOCKTON, CAL., Aug. 6.—Twenty-three members were forcibly removed from the First Baptist Church, of this city, last night by the deacons because of negligence in attending church.

No specific charge was made against any individual, but all of them were referred to as "drones" and guilty of "indifference and non-attendance."

IMPROVEMENT AT 'PEN' FARM URGED

Senate Committee Frames Recommendations After Inspecting Milledgeville Institution.

Following a visit to the State Prison Farm at Milledgeville Saturday the Senate Penitentiary Committee of which Senator Tarver, of the Forty-third, is chairman, will make several recommendations for improvement to the Senate.

One of these will be a recommendation for the construction of an annex to the present dormitory for negroes. Another provides for a waterworks system in the women's building.

There is a possibility also that the question of the present location of the prison farm will be considered with a view to removal, although this movement is not indorsed by a majority of the committee.

A further recommendation which probably will be made relates to the separation of the boys' reformatory from the prison farm.

Senator Tarver declared Tuesday that in his opinion this feature of the prison farm was bad, as the younger boys, although separated from the convicts, are sufficiently close to be influenced by the depressing influences of convict life.

Nine members of the Senate committee and one member from the House made the trip to Milledgeville.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"WITH no prices on the menu!" repeated Helen in amazement. "Then they can charge us anything they please?"

"That's the idea. Most of the smart places in Paris never price their food. They're supposed to cater to people who are concerned only with the quality of the dishes—not with the price."

"But, Warren, WE don't want to go to such a place! I'd be so worried about what the check was going to be—I couldn't eat a thing."

"Well we're going to one right now for dinner—Cafe D'Armenonville. One of the show places in the Bois. You'll see more smart Parisians there than you've seen yet. While we're over here we're going to do Paris. What difference does a few dollars make one way or the other?"

"But, dear, I'm not dressed for a pretentious place."

"Well, put on something light then—anything will do. They don't expect Americans to dress much. They think we all come from a sort of wild and woolly West. All they want is our money."

"Well, I don't think we've got so much," laughed Helen. "Not enough to go to a place where they don't price their food."

"Guess we can stand it for once. Hurry up—it's almost 7."

A little later they left the hotel. Outside Warren raised his cane at a passing taxi.

Warren Determined.

"Of course we've got to have a cab," impatiently, as Helen made her usual protest. "It's the only way you can get to that place. Now, you leave this to me. We're going to Armenonville's to-night, and we're going to do the thing right. Hang the expense!"

When Warren started out in this spirit Helen knew it was useless to try to curb him. He was in the mood to spend money—and he was going to spend it. She leaned back in the cab with a sigh of resignation.

But as this was Helen's first drive through the Champs Elysees, she soon forgot everything else in the beauty of the scene.

Under the trees, along the drive, were chairs and tables, mostly deserted now. But from the gay gowns of the few people who still lingered Helen could imagine what it must have been an hour earlier.

"I'll not have the time, but you ought to come out to the Bois some afternoon for tea," suggested Warren. "Nothing like it in the world. There's Armenonville's through there," pointing to a mass of brilliant lights glimmering through a grove of trees.

Cabs, taxies and victorias were lined up three and four abreast in the wide graveled driveways before this famous restaurant.

"But we're not going to keep this taxi?" asked Helen anxiously, as they waited their turn to draw up before the entrance.

"That's just what we're going to do," snapped Warren. "We'll not take any chances of getting one when we're through."

To order dinner from an unpriced menu, and to feel that a taxi was industriously ticking up the francs—the evening held little prospect of pleasure for Helen.

Warren led the way through the spacious hallway to the garden beyond. The place was like fairyland, with banks of red geraniums, a gleaming fountain, and ropes of colored lights festooned through trees and shrubbery. There must have been a hundred or more tables on the lawn, yet all were taken, and a group of people were waiting.

"You stay here," Warren strode off determinedly after a headwaiter.

Helen's gaze followed him anxiously. She saw him slip some money into the hand of the suave Frenchman, and a moment later they were being seated at one of the few tables that had been "reserved."

"Warren, I thought you didn't believe in bribing headwaiters?"

"Well, you've got to do it here. This is a show place, I tell you, and you've got to come across. We'd have stood there all night without a table if I hadn't forked up."

Helen's first concern was in the menu—a large card with a fantastically decorated border of lobsters and crabs. She had hoped all along that Warren was wrong and that the prices would be given, but there was not a single figure. This bill of fare was to show only what you could get—not what you would have to pay for it.

"Oh, dear, just order one or two things! I'm not very hungry—and you had luncheon, didn't you?"

But Warren only glowered at her, and gave his order to the waiter by checking off with his pencil some of the dishes with the longest and, as Helen thought, most expensive looking French names.

"Now, see here," when the waiter had gone, "this isn't so bad as you think. The theory of this is that they charge in proportion to what you order. For instance, if you only have a roast and a salad, you pay more proportionately for those two dishes than you would if you had four or five. That's fair enough."

"Well, if that's their method, then why don't they put down the prices and deduct a certain percentage when you order a number of things? Wouldn't that be a good idea for any restaurant? Think how much more people would order if they felt they were getting a discount."

"Huh! Sort of on the principle of five cents apiece, six for a quarter!" grinned Warren.

"But don't you see people WOULD order more," insisted Helen, growing enthusiastic over her idea. "I'm sure any of the big New York restaurants would coin money on that plan."

"Better try to sell 'em the idea when you get back," scoffed Warren. "They might pay you something for it."

"Well, they might!" defiantly.

Just then a striking beauty, in a clinging white gown and a drooping leghorn hat with red poppies, swept by, leaving a trail of perfume.

"Dear, some of the gowns ARE beautiful," mused Helen, now giving herself up to a study of the place.

A Pretty Girl.

"Not a bad-looking girl over there in yellow," commented Warren.

"I was just going to speak of her—that's the most WONDERFUL gown!"

The girl was dark and slender, with heavy brown hair drawn low into a simple coil on her neck. Her dress was of pale yellow chiffon, with brown fringe; her hat of the same chiffon was wreathed with yellow-petaled, brown-eyed daisies, and the streamers of brown velvet ribbon were knotted under her chin.

Most of the hats had either ties or streamers, with the trimming placed at some daring angle. While they must have looked very extreme in the shop windows, they were charming on the women who wore them.

"After all, the French women DO know how to wear their clothes."

"The ones you see here ought to," was Warren's comment. "That's about their only job."

"Dear, I haven't any idea what I'm eating," Helen exclaimed suddenly.

"Well, it's good, isn't it? That's sweetbread with truffles and wine sauce, en casserole—one of their specialties here. Only place in Paris you can get it like this."

But to Helen the food was always secondary to the atmosphere of the place and the people. And now she absent-mindedly ate her dinner, intent upon the scene about her.

"A woman never has any palate," grumbled Warren. "This dish is a work of art. There's a smoothness and flavor to this sauce that you wouldn't get anywhere else in the world. But you don't appreciate it! A dinner like this is wasted on any woman."

"Why, dear, that isn't fair," indignantly. "I think it's delicious, and I'm eating every bit of it."

A Treat.

"Oh, you're eating it, but might as well be eating corned beef hash in a dairy lunch room. I tell you this is a treat! No wonder the chef who made that sauce didn't want a price put on it. You can't price a thing like that any more than you can price a rare picture," enthused Warren, growing eloquent under the influence of the vintage wine.

Even Helen forgot her dread of the check and became enthusiastic when the waiter served the fruits au champagne. It was a tall glass dish of cut fruit, wonderful strawberries, cherries, pineapples and peaches floating in an iced syrup of blended wines and cordials.

When later the check was brought face down on a plate, instinctively Helen leaned forward to see the total. But Warren took it up quickly, glanced over the items, drew a crisp note from his wallet and laid it over the check. Helen was not familiar enough with French money to know the amount of the note, nor could she tell by the change returned.

"Dear, how much was that check?" unable to keep back the question.

"Well, I've paid it, haven't I? And it was a blamed good dinner. Now we'll have no harangues over expenses this evening. Come on—let's see if we can find that cab."

The cab! Helen had wholly forgotten that the cab was waiting—and they had been there almost three hours!

Warren located their driver and in a few moments they were whirling back through the Champs Elysees, now more beautiful than ever with the lights gleaming through the dark trees, and with every now and then a glimpse of the Seine and its jeweled bridges.

But the charm of all this was lost on Helen. She was not leaning back and enjoying the beauty of the drive. Instead she was sitting bolt upright, every muscle strained, as she tensely tried to figure out how much that dinner and the three hours' wait of the cab must have cost.

LIFE'S STRUGGLE WITH ILLNESS

Miss Stewart Tells How She Suffered from 16 to 45 years old—How Finally Cured.

EUPHEMIA, OHIO.—"Because of total ignorance of how to care for myself when verging into womanhood, and from taking cold when going to school, I suffered from a displacement, and each month I had severe pains and nausea which always meant a lay-off from work for two to four days from the time I was 16 years old.

"I went to Kansas to live with my sister, and while there a doctor told me of the Pinkham remedies but I did not use them then as my faith in patent medicine was limited. After my sister died I came home to Ohio to live and that has been my home for the last 18 years.

"The Change of Life came when I was 47 years old, and about this time I saw my physical condition plainly described in one of your advertisements. Then I began using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I can not tell you or any one the relief it gave me in the first three months. It put me right where I need not lay off every month, and during the last 18 years I have not paid out two dollars to a doctor, and have been blessed with excellent health for a woman of my age, and I can thank Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for it.

"Since the Change of Life is over I have been a maternity nurse, and being wholly self-supporting I can not overestimate the value of good health. I have now earned a comfortable little home just by sewing and nursing since I was 52 years old. I have recommended the Compound to many with good results, as it is excellent to take before and after childbirth."—Miss Evelyn Adelia Stewart, Euphemia, Ohio.

The Brighter Side of Turkey Trotting

An Expert's Advice of How This Famous Dance Can Be Purged of All Objectionable Features.

(Top picture) "This is a dance where shoulders count."
(Bottom picture) "There should be a foot of space between partners."

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

THE new school of turkey trotting has brought into existence two groups of rabid partisans—those who do the dance and know how jolly is the dancing, and those who look on and see how shocking is the prancing. And meanwhile turkey trotting is so earnestly done that it seems in a fair way to be done to death—and a fallow field for humorists will thus become sterile and barren of little jokes like the famous, "She is more trotted against than trotting."

In our age of specialization, turkey trotting is not sufficiently specialized, and every little freak step that wriggles its way into life masquerades under the one name or that of some barnyard or menagerie relative. There is a brighter side to turkey trotting; there is a possibility of having it become a dance as well regulated as the two-step, and yet free to express the true dancing joy-of-living of the partners who merrily whirl through its mazes.

For confirmation of this theory, while in New York I went to Leon Errol, the clever originator of "turkish trottishness," one of the features of the Ziegfeld "Follies of 1913," and with clever Stella Chatelaine, the partner of dances and of life to help him, Mr. Errol showed me how you should and how you shouldn't do the "trot."

Correct Position.

"Here is the correct position for learning the trot," said Mr. Errol, illustrating the while. "The girl places her hands on the shoulders of her partner. The man places one hand under the elbow of his partner and his bent elbow under her other arm. In this position every sway of a partner who knows the dance throws the shoulders of the other partner into the proper swing; not a wriggle or a suggestive movement, but the swaying to music that is the natural expression used in all dances that are a real expression of joy set to music instead of conventional ballroom steps.

"If you want to see the art of dancing, naturally you go to see Genee, and you enjoy without any thought of spending years in trying to master the art of dancing as she has done.

"But when you go to see the modern, up-to-date dancing of the stage you have a weather eye on learning to do it, too—and springing a new step at the next cabaret you favor. Here are three things to remember about stage dancing—it consists of tempo, a trick step and a bit of acting to catch the eye. In comedy dancing like mine, the tempo is very quick—whirlingly rapid without a break in its movements, that fairly pile up on top of one another. Then there is the trick step worked out to be as different as possible, and finally the comic element to make it go with the audience.

Allow For Freedom.

"The amateur turkey trotter must copy the first two parts of stage turkey trotting, and avoid the acting like grim death.

"Don't play to the gallery—don't do an exaggerated step and fairly revel in the idea that the people are looking at you in admiring wonder. They are probably wondering all right—how you can be so vulgar or so foolish.

"Take a refined position that leaves at least a foot of space between the partners and allow for freedom of motion. Holding your partner too closely not only makes the dance suggestive, and gives too much chance to the critical enemies of turkey trotting to get in their work, but makes it impossible for the amateur to dance with the graceful free sway that is the chief beauty of turkey trotting.

"Then with a clear picture in your mind of what you want to do, work out a step. Sometimes Miss Chatelaine and I see little children dancing to an organ grinder's tunes on the streets—that suggests a step—and we may spend as much as two hours in working out the one step.

"Turkey trotting demands a free yet firm position that lets the partners work together; an absolute feeling for time, and ability to follow the music without a break; the utmost patience in working out a step, and ability and imagination to work out little trick steps that will add to the mere sway that is the basis of all turkey trotting and allied dances.

"We must always keep in mind that this is a dance in which shoulders count. In the now sedate waltz, the position of arm-around-waist used to be considered rather risque—well, you don't have to assume that position if you are going to trot correctly. The position I suggest—girl's arms on man's shoulders, and man's arms used as levers under girl's elbows, is staid, respectable and guaranteed to produce graceful rhythmical trotting.

"As in other departments of life, and dancing," concluded Mr. Errol, "there is a right way and there is a wrong way. But the right way to turkey trot is pleasing to observe and pleasing to do. If the amateur will assume the position I teach and practice one step at a time patiently and in faithful effort to keep in perfect rhythm with the music, he will soon find himself able to do a modern dance without a shade of vulgarity and without a trace of amateurish ill-at-easeness."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

WE got a other new white hired guri, her naim is Vera. Ma sed it is a pritty naim, but I think it is a funny naim for a hired gurl. Hired gurls used to be called Bridget & Nora & thay was good hired gurls, too. But things is different now. The last three hired gurls we had was Marguerite & Sylvia & Belladonna, & now we have Vera. She is vary pritty. Pa sed she had dreemy eyes & Ma sed it was from sleeping too sound that her eyes was dreemy.

Vera is riteing a play. She wuddent tell Pa & Ma that she was riteing it, but she toald me so I promised her that I wuddent say a word to Pa & Ma. The naim of the play is Alone in Milledgeville, & it tells about a butiful young gurl that fell in luv with a keeper in the Milledgeville insane asilum. He was a vilyun. The gurl goes to Milledgeville to see him beekaus he had toald her that he owned a grate big estate. He took the gurl to the asilum & toald her that all the insane peepul thare was his servants. She beleeved him at first and then the horriblel truth dawned on her. Then she sed in poetry to the vilyun:

You have me at yure mercy here
Of that thare ain't no doubt;
I think I shall go bughouse, deer,
If you don't git me out.
I'd rather be a peasant's bride
& housekeep in a hut
Than wed a chump in this here dump
& get to be a nut.

Then Vera toald me that finished the first act. The curtain goes down wen she is reading them lines to the vilyun. The second act is the saim as the first, in the asilum. One of the pashunts thare isent crazy at all, he is a rich young man wich is beeing kep in thare so his relatives can git all his munny. He falls in luv with the poor gurl wich is being held thare by the vilyun & tells her that they will find some way to escape. She looked up into his eyes & reesited a other peece of poetry. She was all the time reesiting poetry she rote, Vera toald me. Vera sed that the longer the heroine stayed in the asilum the moar poetry she rote. She looked up into the eyes of the hero & reesited.

Oh yes, I will fly away with you
And marry you for luv.
Yure munny all can stay with you,
I have no use for it, duv.
But what if you mite be insane
& not what you represent?
Then to this place I wud return
& be sorry I ever had went.

If you are realy sane, my own,
Our lives will pleasant be,
But if sum nite I'd heer you groan
I'd hide away from thee.
It is a awful, haunting feer
To feer one's husband is dippy,
& if I ever see you thus
I'll jump in the Mississippi.

The last act isent finished yet, Vera toald me. She is pritty smart for a hired gurl. She says wen she gits rich I can marry her wen I grow up.

Excused.

Bob—Will you take a ticket in this raffle for a poor widow——

Simp—Nix. I wouldn't have any use for a poor widow if I won.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

NOT WORTH YOUR WORRY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and recently met a young man about the same age. He made quite an impression upon me and we have met by appointment a few times. Last week I happened to misunderstand a date the young man made in his letter and disappointed him. Now he is angry, and although I tried to explain the matter to him, he will not believe my excuse. I am quite heartbroken over it. RAY.

Your humble attitude doesn't do you credit. You did no wrong and owed neither apology nor explanation. Please, for your own sake, let the matter end here, and if he attempts to see you, refuse.

THERE COULD BE NO OBJECTION.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 16, and have a friend two years my senior. His birthday is quite near and I would like to know if it is proper for me to send him a birthday card, so as to let him know I think of him. ANXIOUS.

A cordial little note, wishing him many happy returns, will prove your friendship.

You are so young; will you promise me to regard no man as more than a friend for a few years longer?

CERTAINLY NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am deeply in love with a young man 21 years old. I meet him often and he gives me hints that he loves me, but he also tells me he hasn't courage to propose. Now please tell me how I should act. Should I tell him that I love him or not? HILDA.

The girl worth having is worth asking for. Tell him so the next time he hints. Also hint that there are other men not quite so slow. But save your avowal of love until he has earned it.

THE DIFFERENCE IMMATERIAL.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am in love with a girl four years my senior, which difference in our ages seems to stand between us. I have tried in every way possible to convince her of my love, but so far have not succeeded. I do not believe I can ever be happy without her. E.

You do not state your age. If you are old enough to marry, her four years seniority should be no bar.

I am convinced she refuses you because she does not love you. Be persistent in your devotion, and if that does not melt her heart, try giving your atention to some other girl.

CERTAINLY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am eighteen and am keeping company with a young man for the past year. Now this young man's folks live out of town and invited me to their home. Should I accept their invitation? A. B. S.

If the invitation is from his mother I would have you accept by all means. It will mean a great deal to your future happiness to get on good terms with them, and the visit may give you an enlightening view of your lover. I hope it will prove favorable.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

On Fancy's Wings.

A sweet young thing in white fluttered toward the aeroplane mechanic, and resolutely took possession of him, asking all those usual senseless questions that now have become the common lot of aviators and their assistants.

But this particular assistant—and who can wonder; was not the sweet young thing in white a damsel quite adorable?—strove bravely to satisfy the curiosity of his fair inquirer; and explained with remarkable clearness the working of a monoplane.

Still, there is a limit even to the patience shown by susceptible man toward charming maid.

"Tell me," inquired the sweet young thing in white, "what happens when your engine stops in the air? Can't you come down?"

"That's just the trouble," sighed the mechanic, mastered by his sense of the ridiculous. "D'you know, there are a dozen or so airmen now stranded above France. Their engines have stopped; they can't get down, and they are starving to death!"

Later she learned the truth. So ended what might have been a romance.

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XV.

THERE is a numbing quality to all sudden and great sorrow. Psychologists tell us that the mind is so dazed by the shock of grief that it can not grasp the fearful truth in all its details. Whatever causes this partial insensibility, we are thankful for it.

Mary Danforth was like one stunned during the days that followed her father's death. She listened in stony silence while the facts of his seizure were related to her. He had come up from the office, and after dinner dressed to go to her graduation exercises, but had dropped to the floor as he started to leave the apartment, and in five minutes stopped breathing. He had never regained consciousness.

This was no time for subterfuges, and Mrs. Danforth was soon made acquainted with the state of affairs between her daughter and Gordon Craig. She was told that no formal engagement existed, but that the pair loved each other and were going to wait for each other until such time as they were ready to marry. The bereaved wife, made suddenly old by the great sorrow of her life, clung to the young man, and sobbed out her woe and her trust in him.

"I have found a son," she said at last. "God bless you, dear boy!"

Craig bent his tall head to kiss her pale cheek. "I shall try to be worthy of your daughter," he whispered, "and of your confidence in me."

He remained in New York for a week. The changes in his business, of which he told Mary, would keep him from the road hereafter, another man having been deputed to travel for his firm, while he was to remain at the home office.

"Hard times have hit us as well as the rest of the world," he said regretfully, "and matters do not look as bright as they did. But I shall stick to one job and shall hope for a salary that will warrant my marrying in a year or two. Heaven speed the time!"

And Mary was not ashamed to add a sincere "Amen!" to this hope.

It was on the day after the funeral that the mother and the daughter learned that, added to the loss of husband and father, another trouble had befallen them. Investigation of Mr. Danforth's affairs brought to light the fact that his business was in a desperate condition and that he had lived right up to his income. His lawyer told the two women the painful truth that when the funeral expenses were paid and a few bills that Mr. Danforth had contracted were settled the pair would be well-nigh penniless except for a small life insurance the deceased had carried in favor of his wife.

"Your husband took that Western trip on the chance of saving the day," the lawyer explained to the widow. "He hoped to put a business deal through out there, but he failed. I think the disappointment, coupled with the dread of what was before him, hastened his death."

"He did it all for us," Mary told Craig. "He lived just to make us happy. He wanted us to have a pretty home and all that we wanted, and he could not bear to tell us that we must part with these things. Now I can see why he was taken from us. It would have broken his heart had he lived to see us lose what we have been accustomed to."

Mary spoke firmly, yet gently. "I am going to work, mother," she asserted. "No, do not look distressed at the idea! It is what father would wish—what he always told me I must be prepared to do if the need arose."

"It will not be for long," Craig reminded the mother. "I hope that matters will go so well with me that I can come for you and Mary soon. Then we three will have a little home of our own."

"I could not accept it even from Gordon," remarked Mrs Danforth later to her daughter, "if I did not have that insurance money of my own."

The daughter said nothing. She could not bear to tell her unsophisticated mother what a little way the money, of which she spoke so confidently, would go. The income from it would not support one woman, no matter how economical she might be, and the girl knew the principal would be drawn upon gradually until it was all gone. And then?

"I will be able to support her myself," she thought bravely. "She shall use as little of her own money as possible. I would not want her to be entirely dependent upon Gordon—even though he is willing to care for her. I must get to work at once."

The place she secured was not a brilliant one, but she had not expected that it would be. She was engaged as stenographer and typewriter to a kindly, middle-aged real estate agent. He had a small office and her salary matched the office. But what else could a beginner hope for?

Thus it came about that when Gordon Craig turned his face westward again he knew that the girl he loved was the sole dependence of her widowed mother. His heart ached when he remembered that the pretty home must be given up, and the handsome furniture sold—except such pieces as the two lonely women would need to furnish the tiny flat they would take in an unfashionable part of town. He longed to stay and help them.

"But my job won't wait for me!" he muttered with a bitter sign. "If I were only rich!"

Which exclamation is such a common one that it is hardly worth recording.

Barber—Poor Jim has been sent to an asylum.

Victim (in the chair)—Who is Jim?

"Jim is my twin brother, sir. Jim has long been brooding over the hard times, an' I suppose he finally got crazy."

"Is that so?"

"Yes. He and me has worked side by side for years, and we were so alike we couldn't tell each other apart. We both brooded, too. No money in this business now."

"What's the reason?"

"Prices too low. Unless a customer takes a shampoo it doesn't pay to shave or hair-cut. Poor Jim! I caught him trying to cut a customer's throat because he refused a shampoo, so I had to have the poor fellow locked up. Makes me sad. Sometimes I feel sorry I didn't let him slash all he wanted to. It might have saved his reason. Shampoo, sir?"

"Yes!"

It was Pat's first day in the sawmill, and his duties consisted of working the circular saw. The foreman directed him as to its use, then left him in order to attend to some pressing matter. Having occasion, however, to pass Pat's way again, he was somewhat annoyed to see him standing idly surveying his hand.

"Well, what's wrong?" he said sharply.

"Sure and begorra I've lost a finger," replied Pat.

"How did it happen?" inquired the foreman.

"Sure, I was jist doin' like this when—bejabbers! There's anither one off!"

The daughter of the house had just returned from a visit to her cousins, during which she had become engaged to a rising young man whom she had met at the home of her relatives. To her mother she was extolling the virtues of her intended.

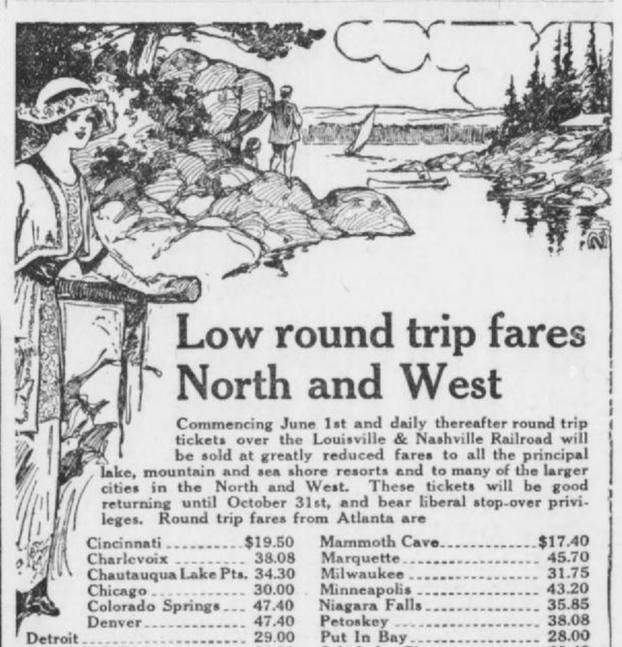

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "he's just grand! So square, so upright, so highly polished. Why, even in his notes there is such a sympathetic tone that sometimes I wonder if I am not reading the music of the gods!"

"Mercy's sake, child!" interrupted mother, "are you talking about a young man or a piano?"

"I want you to put up some wall paper I have bought," said the country clergyman, meeting the local man-of-all-work. "When can you do it?"

"Well, sir," he exclaimed, "you see, I'm rather busy just now. I hung Mrs. S—— yesterday; I'm hanging your church warden to-day; but, if it's convenient, I'll drop round and hang your reverence on Wednesday."

Daysey Mayme And Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THE two pillow cushions, which, with the Honorable Lysander John Appleton, Kin Commissioner General of the United States, compose the Pillow Cushion Club, sat stiff, upright and unbending in their corners, waiting for the meeting to begin.

It was a joy for the speaker of the evening to look at them. So well-stuffed, so self-satisfied, so blank of expression; they looked like women whose sole ambition in life is to keep their figures, and who place all their hope in a straight-front corset.

Lysander John gave them an encouraging smile. "My wife and daughter," he said, "who spend most of their time from home reading papers on How to Make Home Life Beautiful, never had audiences more intelligent and appreciative than mine, Ladies, I thank you!

"I have delved into Emerson, I have wandered through Carlyle, and I have failed to find any problems more serious than those I will submit tonight. As members of the Pillow Cushion Club we must grapple with these questions. We must never again shirk our share of the burden of the world's progress.

"Doubt, my dear audience, if my wife and daughter at any of their various clubs in the past month have wrestled with more vital questions than those I will lay before you this evening.

"First, How soon after an article is borrowed is it proper to go over with an excuse demanding its return?

"If a friend buys an automobile, can it be construed as a gentle hint if you buy yourself an automobile coat?

"When a man's family consists of himself and wife, and he buys a four-passenger car, does that indicate a kind, generous disposition, or a desire to escape being bored to death by riding alone with his wife?

"If either must be slighted in a meal, the soup or the pudding, which should it be? In other words, is it wiser to smooth down the bristles of temperamental man by starting him feeling good at a meal, or to finish him feeling satisfied?

"Is it economical and proper these hard times to bury a woman's false hair with her, when, with a little change in the color, her husband's next wife might wear it?

"My next problem," he concluded "is one which will not permit of our speedy adjournment if we attempt to solve it. It is this: How many different ways are there for a man to act the fool?"

'Phone or Wire.

The following letter appears in a Boston newspaper:

Sir—I called at your editorial rooms yesterday, entering the outer chamber. The boy was absent. On the door, which was closed, leading to the sanctum sanctorium, was a sign, "No Admittance." On the wall next to the door was another sign, "No Loitering Here." The question is, what's a feller to do? F. H. L.

"I hear you're going to marry Archie Blueblood, Diana. Is it true?" asked one young society woman of another.

"Marry him? I should think not! What on earth could I do with the man? He can't ride, he can't play tennis, golf, nor, for that matter, can he even drive a motor car!"

"Oh," said the friend, "but he can swim beautifully, you know."

"Swim, indeed! Now, I ask you, would you like a husband you had to keep in an aquarium?"

FROM LUCILE'S DIARY

AUNT RACHEL has been staying with us on her way home from California, and I have passed a good deal of time with her, as I am exceedingly fond of her. I really think I am her favorite niece. One morning when I was helping her dress—I love to pay her little attentions—I found that there were no buttonholes in the new lingerie blouse she had intended to wear.

"Dear me!" I said. "We must get Cousin Fannie to rectify this at once. She'll be delighted to make the buttonholes for you."

"Why don't you make them for me, Lucile?" asked Aunt Rachel.

"Why, you see——" I began, and then hesitated.

"Yes, I see, Lucile," Aunt Rachel said. "You don't count buttonhole-making among your accomplishments. In my day a young woman was not considered well bred if she could not make a perfect buttonhole."

"You make me quite ashamed of my shortcomings," I told her. "You see, Cousin Fannie has always been rather proud of her beautiful buttonholes, and it would have seemed like infringing on her rights if I had taken to making them, too. Dear Cousin Fannie is a little sensitive, and I don't like to hurt her feelings."

"It's quite possible that she would like you to share her glory," Aunt Rachel remarked. "If you wish to learn, I'll agree to make it right with Fannie."

That afternoon I went to Cousin Fannie's room and asked her to give me a lesson in making buttonholes.

"I'm awfully busy, Lucile," she said, "for I'm trying to finish this waist that Aunt Rachel gave me the silk for. I wish to wear it to-night at the settlement reception. If you have buttonholes to make I'll be glad to do them for you to-morrow."

I felt so disappointed that I said: "Aunt Rachel criticises me because I don't know how to make buttonholes, and you won't take the time to teach me. I did so wish to learn this afternoon." I could scarcely restrain my tears as I spoke.

"Why, Lucile, if you are so much in earnest about it of course I'll show you how," said Cousin Fannie.

So we went to work. I made buttonhole after buttonhole all afternoon, for I was determined if I made them at all to excel. Cousin Fannie told me that evening that with a little more practice I should soon equal her. So I kept at it every spare minute for two days until I felt competent to make the buttonholes in Aunt Rachel's blouse. When she saw them she was so surprised and delighted at my skill that she immediately offered to buy me the perfectly charming chiffon set that I had been talking to her about.

I was so enchanted at owning the coveted set that I made an occasion to wear it by calling on Gertrude Bates the very day I received it.

She was busy with the dressmaker, but I sat quite a while chatting until her brother, Carl, came home. I was just going when Gertrude remarked that the little silk coat which was being made was all done but the three large buttonholes. I offered to make them.

"Why, do you know how to make buttonholes?" she exclaimed.

I replied by taking the garment and setting to work with a nonchalance that I was amused to see alarmed her.

"Well, you're a wonder," said Carl when I had made a buttonhole and he had examined it. "I don't believe my tailor could beat this."

As it was growing late, I suggested that Gertrude allow me to take the coat home and finish the buttonholes the next day.

Rather Tired.

I was rather tired the next morning, as I had been sewing so much more than I was accustomed to do, so I asked Cousin Fannie to make the two remaining buttonholes in Gertrude's coat. She works so rapidly that I knew it would be no trouble to her. I was glad to have them done, for George Requier called up on the phone and asked me to go out to his tennis club that afternoon.

As I had so suitable wrap, I wore Gertrude's fascinating little coat. I thought she would be glad to have me wear it after all the work I had done for her. I was astonished when I saw her walking toward me across the courts, for I naturally supposed she was at home with the dressmaker.

"This is a jolly surprise," I said gayly, trying to make room for her on the bench.

"It's certainly a surprise," she replied coldly, and, looking fixedly at the jacket, she passed on.

I explained to George she must be suffering from one of her severe headaches, for I could not bear to have him think any friend of mine would be so rude.

Although I sent her the coat by parcel post the next day, I have not had a single word of acknowledgment or thanks from her. Gertrude, I fear, does not number gratitude among her graces.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Let me see it," cried she, and Mr. Gryce, greatly pleased at the success of his trick, handed her the picture of Genevieve Gretorex, satisfied that if this good woman continued to find it like the Mildred Farley she had mentioned, he should find that Mildred Farley was the name the young woman he had himself first taken for the original of this picture, and in whose fate despite his reason and his years he had found himself so much interested that he had come here at this late hour of the night to learn her name, and if possible, her dwelling place.

His success surpassed his hopes. The old lady looked at the picture, shook her head and looked again.

Somewhat Different.

"How these photographs can deceive?" cried she. "If I had not stopped to look at this twice, I would have sworn it was Mildred Farley's face, but I see now that she wears her hair quite different, and that she is older and much better dressed than Mildred could ever hope to be. Nevertheless, there is a very striking similarity, and I should like to see Miss—— Miss——"

"Handscombe," put in the detective.

"——and Mildred together. It would be a pleasing study." And she stared long and earnestly at the picture, winding up with: "I should like to show it to Mildred."

This was putting herself exactly in the position desired by Mr. Gryce.

"You can do so," he observed, "if you do not have to carry it far nor keep it long. Does Mildred live anywhere near you? Can you see her tonight?"

"She lives in my fourth story front room, sir; Mildred Farley is one of my boarders."

Mr. Gryce stroked his trembling right knee with a very loving hand. "One of your boarders," he repeated. "She is doubtless then upstairs asleep."

"No, poor girl, no. She is a dressmaker and sometimes does not close her eyes till 1 o'clock at night. She is not asleep, but come to think of it, she is not in the house at all. She went away for a short vacation a few days ago, and though she promised to be home this afternoon, I believe she did not come. It has always been my hope that Dr. Molesworth would marry her. She is a lovely girl and he is a very fine man. Why, then, shouldn't they come together?"

"And what you makes you think they will not? Why shouldn't it be she he is going to marry?"

"Why? Because they would have told me. He knows and she knows there is nothing I wish so much. It would be preposterous for them to keep it to themselves after all I have said. No, if Dr. Molesworth is going to marry any one (and I don't believe yet he is), it must be some ridiculous chit of a girl he has met away from here; and—Mildred——why, Lena!"

This exclamation was caused by the appearance at the door of a young girl who the moment she saw Mr. Gryce, shrank back and started to run away. But the emphatic "Lena!" stopped her, and in a moment the old lady was in the hall; a whispered conference ensued, followed by the re-entrance of the good woman with a note in her hand.

"Well, I never!" she exclaimed, looking first at the letter she held and then at the feeble figure of the old man who had risen with well feigned indifference as if to go. "A note from Dr. Molesworth, which he left on purpose for me! and that girl forgot to give it to me till now! What can he have to say!" And breaking the seal, she read the few enclosed lines with a growing wonder that ended in the joyous exclamation of "Good gracious, it is Mildred, after all! He is going to marry her to-night, and bring her home to-morrow. Well, I will give up. Never a word to me about it, and I so fond of them both! I don't understand it, folks are so queer." And she fluttered to and fro in ill-disguised joy, talking and muttering to herself, while Mr. Gryce pulled his muffler about him and began to move slowly toward the door.

"I declare," she broke in, as her attention was recalled to him by this movement, "it does seem a pity for you to go out again into the cold. If you think you would be better here, I have an empty room." But at this moment a carriage was heard to stop before the door, and, startled into a new train of thought by this unwonted occurrence, she moved towards the front windows, exclaiming: "I do believe they have come now!"

A Tragedy.

But at her first glance through the curtains she drew back with a frightened air, and crying, "Oh, what can this mean!" hurried towards the door with every sign of intense agitation.

Mr. Gryce at once took her place at the window, but he did not look out, for at that moment a man's voice was heard in the hall, and the wary detective thought it prudent to resume his role of the self-absorbed, semi-oblivious old man whose infirmities were so engrossing he had neither eyes nor ears for what went on about him. It was well he did so, for in another moment his imperturbality received a great shock by the certainly unlooked-for entrance of two men bearing a burden which, at one glance, showed itself to be the inert form of a young woman. From the appearance of one of these he judged him to be Dr. Molesworth. They were followed by the landlady, crying and wringing her hands.

"Mildred! Mildred! What has happened to you, poor girl!" came in piercing tones from the latter, as the sad burden, having been deposited on a sofa, she approached, and drew aside the cloak which had hitherto concealed the face.

"O God! how pale she is; how cold! Doctor, has she only fainted or is she—"

"Dead," came from his lips in deep and thrilling tones, while his gaze sought the landlady's face and rested there with an intentness he might not have displayed had he noticed the old manmumbling and chattering to himself in a corner.

"And what has killed her? What has destroyed my poor girl, the very night you hoped to marry her?"

"Shall I tell you?" The doctor had waved the man aside who had assisted him in his fearful task, and now stood with folded arms side by side with the landlady, looking down upon the still, set face which, with the blue robe that enshrouded the form, were already so well known to the watching detective. "She preferred this bridal to the one I had planned for her. Now you know all." And with just one more deep and searching look at the landlady's startled face, he walked up to his assistant.

"That is all," said he, "I will do the rest. The coroner will probably be here soon and—who are you?"

This was aid to a small, slight man who at this moment appeared in the doorway.

"I am a detective, sir," was the reply, and he was doubtless going to say more, but he caught an unexpected sight of Mr Gryce, and paused in some confusion. He had recognized a superior.

As for Mr. Gryce himself he had scarcely noticed the young man; he was too intent upon the doctor who at the utterance of the word detective, had wheeled suddenly about wth the evident intention of hiding his surprise. But a mirror hung oposite him, and in this the watchful eye of Mr. Gryce detected such an expression of uncontrollable shock and anxiety that he inwardly congratulated himself over the curiosity which had drawn him to this house.

The confusion, if there was such, in the physician's mind, was but momentary. In an instant he turned and confronting the intruder, asked with some severity:

"And what work is there for a detective here? The young lady has taken poison and is dead. I have notified the coroner——"

"Pardon me," interrupted the other, with every appearance of humility and respect. "I have come from the coroner. I am only a messenger and my errand is to say that as he can not come until morning it might relieve you to have me to stop here and see that there is no interference with the remains. It is a common duty and it is not the first time I have performed it."

A Word of Protest.

"But it is nobody's duty to watch over this poor girl's body but myself," broke in the landlady, with hearty indignation. "Do you forget that it is a woman and a lady you are talking about and do you think I will stand by and see any man, much less a stranger, take the place which only one of her own sex should occupy? She is no relative of mine, but I loved her and—doctor, you have some regard for her memory, I am sure; send that man away; he has already been here too long."

And with a care that was almost motherly in its tenderness, she drew the end of the cloak once again over the poor dead face, dropping a tear as she did so, which was not unseen by Mr. Gryce if it was unappreciated by the stern and bitter-souled physician.

"But, madam"—that stranger began.

"Stop!" cried Dr. Molesworth, "I will explain to her." And in a few words he told her how in cases of violent death, it was thought advisable for the Coroner to see the victim as soon after decease as possible, and when, as in this case, circumstances demanded delay, no one, not even a mother could rightfully interfere with whatever surveillance the Coroner thought it his duty to impose. So you will let this man stay here, and I will stay, too; for it is as much my wish as yours that every respect should be shown the one whom living I honored sufficiently to wish to make my wife."

The landlady shook her head with an aggressive air, but made no further protest. Dr. Molesworth pointed to a chair and the representative of the Coroner sat down; then while the former glanced at Mr. Gryce, who had just caught his attention, a slight noise was heard in the hall and a second stranger entered.

"What does this mean?" angrily cried the doctor. "Is it possible that the front door has been left open?" And brusquely pushing by the newcomer, he shut the offending door and then coming back, asked his business of the last arrival.

The fellow, who was slimmer than the other and much more dapper, pulled a small book and pencil from his pocket. It was enough. Dr. Molesworth recognized a reporter, and gave his irritation full play.

"You are intruding," cried he. "This is a private house and no one asked you to enter. As for the calamity which has occurred, learn of it how and where you will; I shall tell you nothing."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

'Wilson White' for Male Dress Rules

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6.—White is the proper color for men who want to be up-to-the-minute in their dress at the National Capital.

The tropical raiment was adopted by the President one day when the mercury was trying to hit the sky. The next day Secretary Bryan made his debut, and within 48 hours "Wilson white" was the fad. The material may be anything from silk to duck.

JAKE STAHL MAY SUCCEED CALLAHAN AS HEAD OF SOX

BOSTON, Aug. 6.—A rumor was industriously circulated in local baseball circles to-day to the effect that Jake Stahl, former manager of the Red Sox, is scheduled to succeed Jimmy Callahan as manager of the Chicago White Sox, at the close of the present year. Stahl has been spending the summer, since his dismissal, at Annisquam, but could not be reached there to-day. Some of Stahl's close personal friends are inclined to ridicule the idea that Stahl will return to baseball.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

VOICE FROM CHICAGO.

Welcome little drops of moisture,
Coming down in healthy flocks,
For the ball yard is deserted
And they can not trim the Sox.

Horace Fogel is in Indianapolis talking things over with the Federal League. Indianapolis has no ordinance prohibiting unnecessary noises.

The way to suppress Mrs. Pankhurst is to sentence her to watch a gang of cricketers playing a double-header.

Belgium refuses to fall for Jack Johnson, but he still has Dahomey and Abyssinia to fall back upon, in fact, his arrival in Abyssinia would cause great rejoicing—in other parts of the world.

As we perpetrate this paragraph the Naps are seven and one-half games behind the Athletics. The said Naps have fully as much show as a horse seven lengths behind Sysonby in the last quarter.

Those Naps have been playing as if they did not realize that the Fourth of July has went from our midst.

Still, it may be that they have fallen for the sane Fourth idea and refuses to blow up.

In answer to the rumor that he intends to quit, Frank Chance avers that he is satisfied with the outlook. It must be great to work for that kind of a boss.

JUMPING OFF.

It was a jilted lover and he sat with drooping frame.
Quoth he: "I do not care to live since I have lost my dame."
And so the lovelorn rummy joined the motorcycle game.

EAST MEETS WEST TO-DAY IN BIG TENNIS DOUBLES

CHICAGO, Aug. 6.—Double teams from the East and West to-day met for the final elimination in the National tennis championships. Clarence Griffin and John Strachan, of San Francisco, Pacific Coast champions, were matched against Gustave Touchard and W. M. Washburn, of New York, Eastern champions.

The winners of to-day's match will be entitled to play Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas Bundy, present National champions, at Newport, R. I., on August 18, for the 1913 doubles honors of the United States.

JACK KEATING KNOCKS OUT GALL IN THE FOURTH ROUND

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Jack Keating, the local heavyweight, knocked out George Gall, in the fourth round of a scheduled ten-round bout at the Atlantic A. C. Garden here last night. Gall was reeling around the ring helpless in the fourth round when his seconds threw up the sponge.

John Lester Johnson, the South American heavyweight, knocked out Bob Lee, a dusky-hued boxer of Brooklyn, in the third round of the semi-final bout, scheduled to go ten rounds.

AMATEUR TEAMS CLASH AT PONCE DE LEON TO-DAY

In order that the visiting merchants may see a good game of ball the Producers and Jones teams, of the Grocers' League, has transferred their game from Piedmont to Ponce DeLeon Park. Game will be called at 3:30 p. m. Admission 10 cents.

These two teams are tied in the race for the pennant in the Grocers' League and this game is sure to be a battle royal. Jones won the last game, which will make the Producers fight hard to make it a win.

NEW YORK HEARS THAT YANKEES SEEK HOFMAN

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—A report gained circulation here to-day that Artie Hofman, former Cub and Pirate, will be seen in a Yankee uniform next year.

Artie has been playing great ball since he was turned over to Nashville, of the Southern League, by the Pirates. He looks to be just as good as ever.

It is said that Chance promised Artie that he would bring him back into the big leagues if he displayed any of his old form.

SMITH IN NO-HIT GAME; ARM NOW OUT OF SPLINTS

PITTSFIELD, MASS., Aug. 6.—William I. Smith, of the Pittsfield Eastern Association Baseball Club, who took his injured arm out of splints the day before, pitched a no-hit game against Waterbury yesterday, shuting them out 3 to 0. Smith isued no passes and struck out six men. Only three Waterbury players saw first base, all on errors.

KRAZY KAT — "Come to My Lil' Arms, Mollies"

Turned Down Trade for Joe Agler

Jersey City Offered Borton for Him

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., Aug. 6.—I reckon I ought to be feeling sort of set up this morning. From what I hear, Major Frank E. Callaway, president of our ball club association, came up here to see President J. L. Lillis, of the Jersey City club, who offered him Borton, recently of the White Sox, and another player for my humble self.

They tell me Mr. Callaway turned down the offer before the deal had got beyond the debating stage.

Well, that makes me feel pretty good. I like to play ball for Atlanta, and it certainly cheers a fellow up to know he is wanted on the job. I'll just keep on doing the best I can for the Crackers and the management.

Getting back to the real business of the ball club, I want to say that we took a licking yesterday and we haven't any yelp coming. Coveleskie was right, and when he is right he is a bear. He ought to have got a shutout except for a break in the luck.

Carl Thompson, too, was in grand trim, though the Lookouts tied up the game in the ninth inning when he hit a batsman with the bases full. Then another hit batsman, an error and a base hit untied it in the tenth.

But now we have the big Pole out of the way, and with Conzelman and Price to work this afternoon, we ought to get no worse than an even break at the outside. Then we tackle the Vols, and you know they looked pretty easy last time.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Lou Castro is a busy man these days. Lou is dividing his time in eating three squares a day and getting his fighting arena in shape for his big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory on August 13. Whitney has wired Castro that he will be here Friday.

* * *

Kid Young and Mike Saul are working together for their coming bouts at the Auditorium. Young takes on Charlie Lee, while Mike will probably don the padded mitts with Eddie Hanlon. Young is developing a terrific kick in his right hand, and expects to topple Lee over long before the tenth round is reached.

* * *

Kid Wonder took a trip to The Georgian Sporting Department yesterday to inform us, that he is after a match with some local featherweight. Wonder is particularly anxious to get on with either Kid Young or Charlie Lee.

* * *

A unique situation exists in the fight game in Los Angeles. Both Joe Rivers and Ad Wolgast want to meet Willie Ritchie, and have started bidding for the match. Both boys are willing to give the champion a neat side bet.

* * *

Packey McFarland is the latest to put in a boost for Charlie White. Packey says that Charlie is without a doubt the greatest 128-pound boy in the game to-day. Joe Thomas and Jake Abel probably agree with McFarland.

* * *

They are certainly picking soft marks for Carl Morris in the West. Al Benedict, his latest victim, would be easy for a lot of Philadelphia welterweights.

* * *

Three 10-round bouts between heavyweights are to be staged at the St. Nicholas A. C., New York, to-night. Porky Flynn, of Boston, will meet Sailor White, of Newark; Frank McGuinness, the Irish heavyweight, will battle Jack Keating, of the United States Navy, and Al Kubiak is to try conclusions with Tim Logan, of Philadelphia.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, and Bobby Burns, of Dallas, Texas, have been matched to meet in a ten-round go at Omaha on September 12. If Coulon finds that he is right in this bout, he may go to the coast for a scrap with Kid Williams.

* * *

A banner house is expected to attend the Gunboat Smith-Jim Flynn set-to at New York on August 8. Both boys have been doing all their training in the Eastern City, and look to be in great shape. They are scheduled to go ten rounds.

* * *

Cyclone Thompson and Billy Hooper, colored lightweights, may be put on in one of the bouts to be held at the Auditorium-Armory on August 13. They are now dickering with Lou Castro.

* * *

Arthur Pelky and Charlie Miller may clash in a long go at Los Angeles. McCarey plans to match the pair for a September date. Tommy Burns, manager of Pelky, took the match with the understanding that if Pelky defeated Miller he was to get a fight with Gunboat Smith.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

Every town in the league around the Georgia-Alabama circuit is glad when the Opelika boys blow in. They're a bunch of collegians and gentlemanly fellows, as well as good ball players.

* * *

Everybody in the South knows Louis Hardage, recently with Vanderbilt, now playing in their left garden. "Chick" Hannan, the old Alabama star, who has just quit the game, is equally well known.

* * *

Then there is Bone, of Washington and Lee; Allen and Ragsdale, of Auburn; Cantley and others who have played on college diamonds and gridirons.

* * *

"Chick" Hannon, for years one of the best-known factors in Southern football and baseball, an all-Southern quarter and shortstop at Alabama, has said his "thirty" to active sports, although he will hereafter be assistant coach in athletics at Alabama, his alma mater.

* * *

Before he got an injured wing, resulting from a broken shoulder blade in a football game, Hannon was headed straight for the majors, if he wanted to ascend; but since that accident he has never had the old-time punch to his fling, and to-day his knowledge of the game is his chief asset. He knows that, and he can teach it.

* * *

He has made a success as coach for the Alabama Presbyterian College here, and has played good ball in the Southeastern and Georgia-Alabama despite his handicap. An operation last year failed to restore his arm to its old-time form, and for two seasons he has known that he was passing.

* * *

He is one of the many veterans who the fans sometimes knock, but love nevertheless, and in his exit there goes a gentleman of the field.

* * *

Killingsworth, the big Anniston pitcher, made a bid for a job with Opelika in the game Monday afternoon, should he ever get "canned" by Anniston. A fracas with the umpire caused the parking of three Pelicans, and Killy had to be borrowed for the emergency.

* * *

In right field he pulled down a stellar fly on the run, and when he came to the bat the last time he put Left-fielder Henry up against the fence to gather in a long swat from his own willow. Altogether, his work came near costing his teammates the game. He plays for the love of the thing, and says he forgot to pull in his punch.

PLAYERS MEET IN CHECKER TOURNEY FINALS TO-DAY

In the play which began here yesterday for the championship of the Southern Checker Association the following qualified for the final round to be played to-day: G. C. Anderson, North Carolina; R. W. Evans, J. S. Hall, J. H. Bishop, C. M. Farrar, Georgia; S. S. Hallman, B. Fishburne, South Carolina, and J. M. Allen, Jr., Knoxville, Tenn., the holder of the championship since 1911.

Allen lost three of his first four games and in order to qualify for the finals had to make perfect scores against his last five opponents.

Fuzzy Woodruff Describes Chicago Boy's First Fight in a Ring

CHARLEY WHITE'S DEBUT HOWLING SUCCESS

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

LET a man attain prominence in any field of endeavor—be it finance, politics, medicine, the law, burglary or the stage—some auld acquaintance is as sure to rise up and chirp "I knew when, etc.," as a bleacherite is to yell "win your old game, boy," when the pitcher comes to bat with the score 11 to 2 against him with two down in the ninth inning.

It ranks with "I told you so" and "let's have another" as one of the most useful phrases of conversation.

All of this is merely a preface to a "I knew him when" yarn about Charley White, the wonderful Chicago lightweight, who is to meet Frank Whitney at the Auditorium-Armory arena August 13.

White is a real championship contender now. In fact, in a lightweight division remarkable for the lack of punching power among the top-notchers, White should be regarded as easily the most dangerous man of his poundage alive.

But when I first saw Charley box, he was as unknown to fame as was Jim Conley before the Phagan mystery's first chapter was written.

If my memory serves me right, it was on Labor Day of 1908, at the old Hawthorne race track, the last of the Windy City's once glorious domain of the thoroughbreds.

That year boxing, racing and pretty much everything else was under the ban in Chicago, but on Labor Day it was announced that the unions were to hold their celebration at the old track and the lid was to be lifted for the occasion.

The bang-tails were to run in the afternoon; there would be fighting at night; handbook men would be allowed to operate unmolested. Every known gambling device was to be in operation.

* * *

A PICTURESQUE scene greeted the visitors. The union men were in the uniforms they had worn in the Labor Day parade. All of Chicago's noted sportsmen were on hand. Old Ed Corrigan walked about the plant of which he was once master much like a ghost is supposed to walk about the scenes of his triumphs.

The gamblers were busy early and late. Half a dozen bank crap games were running. There were a dozen kinds of swindles going. The old army game was being played in four or five different bird cages.

Before the day had gone far, in walked the Sheriff, and the games mysteriously vanished. But the races were run and the brew flowed freely.

The fights were to be held in the old betting shed, and right after the last race the shed was packed.

The star bout was a ten-round go between Cyclone Johnny Thompson, then a lightweight, and Eddie Tancel, a pretty husky boy of the division.

There were two preliminaries. On account of the presence of the Sheriff, the promoters were rather leery about staging the fights. Minutes passed, and then an hour. The spectators began to squirm. Finally two charitably-inclined gents started some fun by having a fist fight all their own at the ringside.

This quelled, the fighting began. The first bout was a tame wrestling affair. The second was a three-round go between two tough mugs, who wanted to continue the scrapping with bare knuckles after the final gong rang.

* * *

THE last preliminary was between Danny Goodman and an unknown kid introduced as Charley White. Yank Kenny refereed. Goodman then was a veteran, and a mighty hard man to beat. He was a corking good ring general, and knew about all there is to know of boxing.

White was pounds lighter, though Goodman weighed no more than 125 pounds. Goodman was all confidence. White was all earnestness. It was his first ring engagement against so seasoned a warrior. In the first round Goodman danced around him, working in and out, and landing lightly pretty much as he wished. But he was not hurting White, and every now and then the novice flashed a left hand out that carried death and destruction, but Goodman was never there.

The second round was about a repetition of the first. White vainly striving to land a crushing blow. The final round was fast and furious. White was on top of Goodman from the gong. Left and right were whipped out with lightning rapidity. Goodman was boxing his best, but finally a left found its way to his stomach. Goodman doubled up and all but collapsed, and the crowd was on its feet yelling.

The veteran, though, quickly covered and stalled through the remaining minute of the round. Though Goodman had landed twenty blows to White's one, the one that Charley put over evened the fight, and he was entitled to a draw.

That was his baptism of fire, and so impressive was his showing that Nate Lewis, who was at the ringside, promptly took the boy under his tutelage and started him on his climb to the championship.

* * *

I DID NOT see White box again until he met Jake Abel in the Auditorium a few weeks ago. I had always believed Abel about as clever a boy as the South boasts. I had no idea that he would knock White out, but I had no idea that White would stop him. The bout seemed destined to go the ten rounds.

But at the first gong White showed more than I have ever seen in an Atlanta ring. Abel was a toy. When White sent him crumbling to the floor in the second round, there was not a man in the house not glad that the bout ended there. It had been one-sided entirely.

In 1908 I had seen White a novice. Just five years later, if he was not a champion he was at least the most dangerous man in his division.

EMPIRE LEAGUE NOTES

Unless President Groover rescinds his action, Catcher Pierre, of the Valdosta team, will not play ball any more this season in the Empire. He has been suspended for the balance of the season for an attack on Umpire Gentle in Valdosta. In Brunswick Pierre attacked Umpire McLaughlin and was fined for the job.

* * *

President W. J. Clark, of the Waycross Association, says Waycross is going to finish first and fight it out with Valdosta for the pennant. In view of the recent additions to the Waycross team, this may not prove idle talk.

* * *

Despite the certainty of financial loss in almost all cities of the Empire this season, every member of the league is making plans for baseball next season. The experience of the first season has cost some cities a bunch of money, and it is safe to predict that every team will stay within the salary limit another year.

* * *

If Jackson, Miss., and Pensacola, Fla., arrange a post-season series, several Empire League teams will be badly crippled if players of those teams have to report for the series. Thomasville and Valdosta will suffer, as each team has strong men from the Cotton States league that want to have some more baseball.

* * *

The end of this week should see a decided change in the standing of teams in the league. Thomasville has six hard games, three with Cordele and three with Waycross. Some battles worth seeing will go down in baseball history before the week-end, mark the prediction.

* * *

Pitcher Vanderlip, who played with Waycross for some time this season, is now playing with a semi-professional team in his home city, Brooklyn. Shamus O'Brien, known as "Mickey," is signed with the Baltimore team for the remainder of the season, having been turned loose by Waycross.

* * *

Because of the recent talk of a post-season series between the pennant winners of the Southern and the South Atlantic, the talk of a series between the Empire and Sally pennant winners has died down lately. However, it is probable the games will be played.

* * *

When Nance and Leininger, both third basemen, were released by Valdosta, two clever men were cut loose. Nance succeeded Leininger, only to go for Brewster, of the Cotton States.

* * *

Red Stiles, of the Thomasville team, is probably the champion hard luck pitcher of the league. In one game he gave up but two hits and then lost, the hits gotten by his teammates failing to come in bunches.

* * *

Unless the dope slips, one of the new men to appear in the Empire this month will startle the fans by his work. Recently the player in question got six hits out of seven times up in an extra inning game, three home runs and three three-base hits being the best he could do. On the bases he is said to resemble Ty Cobb.

* * *

Brunswick is taking to Whitey Morse, according to reports from the seaport city. Morse is hitting over .300, and is popular with players and fans alike. Valdosta lost a valuable man when he was allowed to go.

* * *

The attendance trophy, which was won by Waycross on opening day, is on display in Waycross and is attracting a lot of notice.

The Americus team next season will be changed a great deal, judging by comments of the present team. Like other teams in the league, Americus has changed managers several times this season, and there are fans who dislike each manager to such an extent that the team never suits everybody.

* * *

Jack Hawkins, who played ball around Atlanta for some time, and started the Empire season as a Brunswick player, is now in left field for Valdosta. He came back to the Empire from the Cotton States League, where he batted over .300 and fielded in jam-up style. Brewster, another Cotton States player, is on third for Valdosta, succeeding Nance.

* * *

While fans in Waycross regretted the release of "Goat" Holliday, the sensational first baseman, they are delighted at the way Jones is playing the bag. Jones came from Virginia to play with Brunswick, but was not good enough for the Pilots. He made good in Waycross with a rush and fields as well as Holliday.

* * *

Franks has been signed as an outfielder for Brunswick. He was a member of the Valdosta team and is considered one of the best in the league. He had a row of some kind with Jordan and his release followed.

* * *

Lately there has been a revival of the rumor that Albany will become a member of the Empire circuit. It is said that Albany and Americus the nothing better than a scrap on the ball field, and, if for no other reason, Albany would be glad to get into the Empire.

* * *

Of all the youngsters picked up by Empire League teams this season none has developed as rapidly as Anderson, a Georgia boy, now playing third base for Waycross. He has played at short and in the field, and, with another year's experience, will undoubtedly go up. He is fast on the bases and seldom fails to swipe a base if he gets on.

* * *

Pitcher Day, of the Thomasville team, has been given another name. Handsome has given way to Steady. He has won so many close games that fans take his victories as a matter of fact.

* * *

According to the dope furnished by each member of the Empire six teams are going to finish first when the season ends August 27. If the teams don't quit getting bunched around first place it may be necessary to play off a tie for first place. Maybe such a game would not be interesting?

* * *

Of all the dope floating around in the Empire there is but one settled fact—whichever team wins the second half of the season will have to play some baseball to nose Valdosta out of the rag. It is possible Valdosta will win the second season, too—but hardly probable the way the team is playing just now.

Harry Glenn Saucer Favorite

25-Mile Grind Friday Night

HARRY GLENN is the most popular rider at Jack Prince's Motordrome these days. The wonderful improvement the local lad has made in the last few weeks has earned him the plaudits of every "bug." Last night Harry was at his best, and as a result he was given a big hand every time he showed up.

Harry won another match race, this time leading Billy Shields home in two straight heats of two miles each. And Harry made a wonderful showing in the ten-mile race also. Although he finished third, he would surely have copped first honors had the finish line been 25 yards farther off.

Harry took the pace most of the way. But he rode a heady race and figured to come through in the final sprint. On the last lap he gave his "boat" a shot of "oilzum" and drew up on Renel and Richards fast and sure, but he started his spurt just about one second too late. The finish was Renel, first; Richards, second; Glenn, third. A blanket would have covered the entire trio at the finish, however.

The next race meet will be Friday night, a 25-mile event, with ten starters, being the feature.

Following is the summary of the races held last night.

Motordrome Purse.

Heats, 1 mile; finals, 2 miles.

First Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Billy Shields, second. Time—45 seconds.

Second Heat—Tex Richards, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time—43 4-5 seconds.

Third Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Henry Lewis, second. Time—43 4-5 seconds.

Final—Jock McNeil, first; Tex Richards, second. Time—1:25 1-5.

Special Match Race.

Harry Glenn defeated Billy Shields in two straight two-mile heats. Time—1:31 3-5, 1:31.

Atlanta Sweepstakes.

Heats, 1 mile; final, 10 miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; Morty Graves, second. Time—45 seconds.

Second Heat—Harry Glenn, first; Georges Renel, second. Time—45 seconds.

Final—George Renel, first; Tex Richards, second; Harry Glenn, third. Time—7:22.

SAVANNAH CLUB RECALLS REILLY FROM AMERICUS

SAVANNAH, GA., Aug. 6.—By exercising optional rights, the Savannah Baseball Association has recalled Infielder Reilly, of the Americus club in the Empire State League, to relieve Zimmerman at second base. Owing to the terrible slump with which Zimmerman has been suffering, both in fielding and in batting, because of ill health, he has been suspended from the Indian crew temporarily. If Reilly, who was with Savannah during the early part of the season, makes good, Zimmerman will not be played again this season.

Reilly reported for duty upon the return of the Lipemen from Albany. He is easily the best player in the Empire League. He has batted at a steady clip of never less than .355 all season; has played at second, short, third base and in the outfield, and has taken care of each of these several jobs with success.

Realty Convention Comes to Atlanta, Thinks S. B. Turman

First Delegate Returns Home—Widening for Mayson and Turner Ferry Road—Business Good.

S. B. Turman, of the real estate firm of Turman, Black & Calhoun, has returned from the convention of real estate men at Winnipeg and expresses the belief that the election of Charles P. Glover to the vice presidency of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will mean that Atlanta will land the ninth annual convention of realty men in 1916.

"Harris G. White, president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, presented Atlanta's invitation," declared Mr. Turman, "and many of the delegates told us that they would gladly support Atlanta. Most of these were Southern and Western delegates, the former pledging their support on account of loyalty to a sister city and the latter desiring to come because most of them had never been to this section before. Winnipeg is also with us.

"I am confident that we will win the convention. I left Winnipeg for Duluth a day before the adjournment of the convention and don't know whether or not Memphis invited the realty men.

"We had a great convention and I was very much pleased over the work of the national association."

Mr. White and Mr. Glover are returning to Atlanta by steamer and are expected to arrive Sunday or Monday.

County Commissioners Meet.

The regular monthly meeting of the Board of County Commissioners in the Thrower Building Wednesday proved to be of considerable interest in real estate circles. Four or five delegations of property owners, probably 100 people in all, appeared to present various petitions for improvements.

The board voted to widen the Mayson and Turner Ferry road for a distance of about two miles in the Center Hill section, and to extend Hemphill avenue from the waterworks station to Pace's Ferry road. The former was already on the summer program. A large delegation of Center Hill residents appeared. The latter is considered an important work because of the amount of territory opened up.

Plans for resurfacing several city streets were also presented.

Work has piled up on the board, due to the fact that Chairman Smith has been away on a vacation, and the further fact that accumulated business of the past month was brought before the commissioners.

Peachtree Interest Sold.

Clarence Knowles has bought from Paul Goldsmith an undivided one-third interest in a 100 by 562 foot lot on Peachtree road, 640 feet northeast of Piedmont avenue, for $1,750, or at the rate of $53 a front foot. Mr. Goldsmith sold another third to Bryan M. Grant May 31, 1912, and is keeping the remaining third for himself.

Sees Good Times Ahead.

Gid Hanna, the well-known real estate trader from Oakland City, has returned from a trip to Gwinnett and Rockdale Counties, and declares that crop conditions are the best he has ever seen. "With a fine crop and plenty of Government money to move it," asserted Mr. Hanna, "I can see nothing but great activity this fall in all lines of business. Secretary McAdoo seems to have smoked out the people who are holding money, and I look for normal conditions in local real estate. Everything points that way."

Plans for Two Houses.

A. J. & H. F. West have completed plans for two 2-story frame residences on the west side of Williams street, near West Tenth street, to cost $8,000 each. This neighborhood has been opened up in the last few years and now has a number of attractive homes.

Lakewood for Exposition.

Charles I. Branan and others of the local Park Board have a plan for using Lakewood for future expositions or fairs that it may be deemed advisable to hold. The question came up before the Park Board at its monthly meeting Tuesday at the City Hall, when Lakewood concessions were considered. The members of the board seemed to be of the opinion that no further privileges should be sold until it was decided whether or not the park could be profitably used for exposition purposes.

Since Piedmont Park was divested of its exposition trimmings the city has had no place save Lakewood to hold fairs.

Attractive New Building Type.

A new type of business building has appeared in Atlanta, and it is proving beneficial to tenants who want short term leases on vacant central property. This is a low steel affair of moderate cost that presents the appearance of a permanent structure, yet which can be moved on short notice. Investors are managing to get a rental of $200 a month out of a string of these shops in downtown districts.

Four such buildings have been erected at the northeast corner of Edgewood avenue and Equitable place by Andrew Gust, who purchased them from local representatives of portable steel shops. Mr. Gust has leased two compartments and expects to announce more leases shortly. Each store occupies a frontage of about 20 feet, and is 20 to 25 foot deep.

Accused Assailants Of Farmer Give Up

CORDELE, Aug. 6.—After having eluded officers for more than a week, Harley Blanchard and John Warren, who are alleged to have waylaid Ambrose Powell, a farmer, when, he claims, he was seriously cut by Blanchard, have surrendered to the Sheriff. They were released under bonds of $500, on the charge of assault with intent to murder.

There is now a good chance of Powell's recovery.

NAVAL STORES OPERATORS PLAN TO CURTAIL OUTPUT

SAVANNAH, Aug. 6.—Georgia naval stores operators will join in the general plan for the curtailment of the output to the end that prices may be raised to a living figure. A resolution has been adopted calling upon the producers to stop chipping on August 15, which would shorten the season two months and the output reduced 25 per cent.

This action is preliminary to a general meeting of all operators to take place in Jacksonville Friday. It is proposed to lessen the output half a million barrels and wipe out the excess of rosins carried over from previous years.

TRAIN ROBBERY SUSPECTS FREED

Officials Still Searching for Men Who Held Up Mail Clerks Near Birmingham.

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 8.—Two men arrested to-day on suspicion of having held up mail clerks and robbed the registered pouches on northbound Louisville and Nashville passenger train No. 4, between Calera and Birmingham last night, were released this afternoon, after having been closely questioned by Chief of Police Bodeker. Officers are still searching for the robbers.

Chief Bodeker has detailed every available detective on the force to be on the lookout for the robbers, the local men being augmented by several railroad detectives. Chief Bodeker says the robbery undoubtedly was the work of professionals. No estimate of the loss by looting of registered mail pouches is yet available.

Express company detectives are working on the theory that the robbery was committed by men who are acquainted with operations of trains on the L. & N. and also with work in mail cars. Descriptions furnished by men who were in the car at the time of the robbery indicate that the robbers were young white men. Their masks extended from face to waist. However, in the breeze at times the features of the robbers were seen. No doubt is expressed by detectives that the men who did the work are residents of or have headquarters in Birmingham.

After the engine of the train had taken water at a tank this side of Calera the robbers boarded the mail car. Then knowing there was no stop between Calera and Birmingham, 30 miles, they went to work rifling the registered mail. At Fourteenth street, four blocks from the passenger station here, the robbers squeezed the airbrake, brought the train to a stop and jumped off. Engineer Wissenger then found the mail clerks handcuffed and tied up.

RATE ORDER KILLS OLD 'BASING' PLAN

Ruling on Georgia Cases Necessitates Change in All Southeastern Schedules.

Readjustment of all rates in the territory south of the Potomac River and east of the Mississippi will be necessary to conform to the Interstate Commerce Commission's ruling giving lower freights to LaGrange, Vienna and Carrollton, according to Watkins & Latimer, attorneys in the case.

The old basing point system, except as applied to ports and to large cities, is doomed under this decision, they say, although the Commission passed only on the three cases at hand.

Under the old system certain small towns, usually at the head of relatively unimportant rivers, have been made basing points. Rates to other towns of the same size, equidistant or nearer the Ohio River crossings or the large cities in Southeastern territory, have been given the through rate to these points, plus the local from the favored town.

The Commission holds that there is no real reason for giving such places as Cedartown, Ga., through rates, and denying them to such towns as Vienna, Carrollton and LaGrange.

The immediate result, it is believed, will be wider scattering of the small jobbing houses, and more business for the large jobbing houses in the principal cities. The saving in freights is estimated at $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 yearly.

The Commission had the case under advisement from November 11, 1911, until August 4, 1913.

Seven Seek Cordele Postmaster's Place

CORDELE, Aug. 6.—That F. G. Boatright, postmaster at Cordele, who was requested several days ago by Postmaster General Burleson to resign because of alleged negligence, will decline to comply with this request is certain.

Seven applicants for the postmastership are actively at work soliciting indorsements, many letters having been sent to Congressman Charles R. Crisp, of the Third District, who will make the recommendation. The appointment is expected to be made within a short time.

Wins Plea Against Being Tried on 13th

Mrs. Nellie Wood, who runs a store in Ormewood Park, will be tried in police court on August 14 for the reason that she objects strenuously to being tried on the 13th.

Mrs. Wood is charged with disorderly conduct, and, when her case was called Tuesday afternoon, a postponement was granted. Recorder Pro Tem Preston set the case for the 13th, but the young woman protested vigorously. She frankly told the Recorder she was "very superstitious." Any other date would suit, she said.

ABSENCE OF RAINS SENDS COTTON UP

High Cables and Dry Weather Stimulate Buying and Cause Uneasiness Among Bears.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Influenced by steady cables and an absence of rain in Texas, the cotton market opened firm to-day, with first prices at a net advance of 3 to 7 points from last night's close. In view of yesterday's break the short interest was a little nervous. This, coupled with private advices from Texas stating, notwithstanding last week's rains, more moisture is need over the Southwestern belt, resulting in prices soaring some 2 to 8 points from the initial level. The selling was very light and scattered. Shorts were good buyers. Spot interests also bought.

During the forenoon the market was steady on buying on bullish advice from Theodore Price on high temperatures in Oklahoma. High temperature there is usually the forerunner of rain.

There were some telegrams in circulation from the belt stating that there was some deterioration going on, caused by dry weather and high temperatures. Later when the noon weather report was posted, showing extremely high temperatures in the Western belt in many points stimulated the buying and caused more uneasiness among the bear forces.

The weather map complete indicates increasing cloudiness in the Northwestern quarter of the cotton belt; cooler, possibly some showers in Northwest Texas. Part cloudy over rest of the belt, except cloudy with probably some showers in the Gulf coast districts. Gulf disturbance is unchanged in position, but is likely to move West in a few days and give prospects for precipitation in Southern Texas.

While sentiment is generally bearish there is a feeling that higher prices may be expected, just now in the face of the above conditions. Whether the advance will be sustained or not depends on weather conditions over the next few days. The bulls contend that another week of dry weather in the West will cause serious damage and a stampede will follow.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net advance of 11 to 15 points from the final quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 6.—Liverpool came in about 2 points better than due on futures to-day, but quotes spots 3 points lower and sales 6,000 bales.

The weather map shows cloudy in Oklahoma, East Tennessee, part cloudy in the Atlantics, fair in rest of the belt. Indications are for increasing cloudiness; cooler weather with possibly some showers in the Northwestern quarter, part cloudy in rest of the belt, except over the Gulf districts.

The market advanced nearly 10 points in the early trading, the buying being based on high temperatures in Oklahoma, which State shows an average of 104 degrees, and absence of rain in Texas and Oklahoma. Trading, however, is small and support timid, in the fear of hedge selling, while crop prospects in Oklahoma are declining, the greater part of Texas needs relief from the drouth last week, and the danger of damage there is not yet being considered seriously. Weather and crop conditions in the Central and Eastern States are generally accepted as good.

Reports from New York and advices from there to buy would indicate the work for a reaction, which was spoiled by the good rains in central Texas during the last three days of the past week, and been resumed on the same basis of threatened drouth in the Western States.

The market held the early gain well and is steady around 11.18 for October.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: Sentiment is bearish.

Norman, Mack & Co.: We still continue to believe that it is poor business policy to follow the decline.

COTTON GOSSIP

There were rumors that freight room had been engaged for August shipment from New York stock. Liverpool is understood to be long of August and to own a good bit of the local stock according to Pearsall's.

* * *

The New York Journal of Commerce says: "Cotton goods retailers are optimistic concerning fall trade and many of them are now operating in the local market. Jobbers are asking for shipment at once of all goods due September 1, with requests that new business be booked for September delivery of a volume sufficient to take care of the goods anticipated for immediate shipment."

Riordan has been an enormous seller of new crops during the last few days. It was believed that he sold for customers of Pell. Last year at the time No rain in the West; some nice rains in North Carolina and a few light showers in Georgia. Gulf disturbance formation still there; should move westward in a few days and give prospects of precipitation over south Texas.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Liverpool's opening after the holidays was significantly low. Bulls had hoped that foreign spinners would show some concern over the Bureau condition figures promulgated Friday last when the Liverpool market began business yesterday. But they did nothing of the kind; on the contrary, absence of demand for forward cotton proved an active bearish factor. Students of the staple say there can be no question as to the existence of a large forward requirement. Why, then, is demand lacking now, when, under normal conditions, as in ordinary years, consumers cover their fall, winter and spring requirements, exporters busily engage in catering into forward commitments, the future markets suppiy the hedges and the steamships sell ocean freight room?

"To the man who searches for the cause behind every effect the answer comes easy. It is Washington's threat of prohibitive legislation. The effect of this threat is twofold, and its ramifications are both subtle and obvious. Meanwhile, the American crops are short, the volume of business light and the trade in suspense."

* * *

There were no rains shown in the weather map, which brought out a fair amount of buying early. The selling was very much scattered. Weld was principal buyer. There were some unfavorable private reports being received this morning.

Liverpool cables: "Market good on reports of drouth damage in Texas, Oklahoma. Manchester reports poor."

* * *

Map indicates cooler with some precipitation coming in from the Central grain States.

* * *

Austin, Texas, wires: "Farmers in town yesterday complaining of plant shedding and recent rains insufficient."

IRREGULARITY IN PRICE OF STOCKS

Powerful Interests Are Friendly to Constructive Side of Prices. Undertone Firm.

BY CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 6.—Trading was active at the opening of the stock market to-day, but the list was irregular and quotations showed a considerable division of sentiment. California Petroleum was again under pressure, declining ⅝ to 18⅝, while Canadian Pacific sustained the same amount of loss. Lehigh Valley sold off ⅝, but rallied and recovered most of its decline.

United States Steel common began at 61⅛, the loss of ⅛, but within half an hour was selling around 61⅝.

Illinois Central and Union Pacific showed firmness, each advancing ⅝. Later both shaded. Great Northern preferred advanced ½. American Smelting, after selling unchanged, shaded ⅛. Among the other losses were: Amalgamated Copper, ¼; New Haven, ⅜; Anaconda Copper, ¼; and Chio Copper, ¼.

Western Union Telegraph spurted, gaining a point. Southern Pacific, Reading and Northern Pacific advanced.

The curb was steady. Americans in London were firm on cablegrams placing a better construction on the United States monetary situation.

"Looks as if the advance in stocks would continue with the usual reactions that we generally have in a bull market. Believe that stocks should be bought on fair reactions, as the character of the buying this week is exceptionally good, and would indicate that powerful interests are friendly to the constructive side of prices.

"Sentiment seems to be more optimistic, public participation is increasing and general conditions favor a higher level of prices.—Potter.

In the last half of the first hour the scarcity of many issues became so pronounced as to cause a sudden stampede of shorts. Union Pacific led a brisk upward movement, advancing nearly 2 points to 152¾, while substantial fractional gains were noted in Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Reading, Great Northern preferred and Steel common.

In the late forenoon the covering movement was completed and fractional recessions were recorded throughout the list. The tone at the end of the second hour was steady.

Time money is loaning and renewing at 2¾ per cent.

Trading in Texas Company was the feature of the day. In the last hour this issue sold around 114½ for a net gain of 4¾ on the day. There were reports in Wall street that some person with inside information was buying on the strength of the forthcoming financial report of the company. Steel sold around 61⅜, for a fractional gain and other slight advances were made by Union Pacific and Erie. Reading sold off. The tone was quiet but steady.

The market closed heavy. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

The "Why" of the South's Greatest Sunday Paper

SIX days we labor and do all our work.
And Sunday we rest—and catch step with the world.
That is, most of us.

Most of us work six days in the week. Most of us work pretty hard. Most of us are tired when night comes.

That is a good, healthy state of affairs, and it keeps us out of mischief.

But it doesn't give us much chance to keep pace with things outside our own little march. And sometimes that is in lock-step.

And that answers the query, "Why is a Sunday paper?"

The Sunday paper tells us that there is something stirring outside of Atlanta; that there are other States than the Empire State of the South; other nations than the Union; other continents than America; other worlds than the earth.

The Sunday paper tells us about other people than the kind we know so well; other professions, other aims, other thoughts and creeds.

The Sunday paper marks the time by which we catch step with all the world.

Depending, of course, largely on the kind and scope of the Sunday paper.

Which brings us to The Sunday American in general, and the next Sunday American in particular.

Starting with Atlanta—for that's where a lot of us live—the next Sunday American will have the freshest and fullest possible news of America's great murder case—the Frank trial. There will be pictures. Special features will be covered by special writers. The news will be handled frankly and honestly—and fully.

But there are other things than the Frank trial.

Polly Peachtree and her inimitable comment and gossip of society—you don't know Polly Peachtree, do you? No—but you read her sprightly gossip and you wonder—and so do people over all the South. Polly Peachtree is an institution.

Well, and that brings on the fashions, and the frills, and all the dainty arabesques (or is that architectural?) of feminine apparel. With pictures. Don't forget the pictures.

Then the drama.

Reviews and criticisms of the new plays which, probably owing to the season, haven't been produced yet, or possibly even written; gossip of stageland and its people, the wonderful people that to most of us live and move and have their being in the golden country back of the footlights. We always like to hear of something that connects them with our own little work-a-day world. And we are treated to such anecdotes quite frequently in the Sunday paper.

Sports—pennant chases in our own league; in the Big Show; boxing and gossip of the padded square; racing, golf, tennis—all handled by experts, trained to keep ever an eye on the Main Chance; to play up a world event for what it is worth; to value truly the importance of local news. There's O. B. Keeler, Charles Dryden, W. J. McBeth, "Tick" Tichenor, J. W. Heisman, Innis Brown, Damon Runyon, W. S. Farnsworth, Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton and George E. Phair, who are known from coast to coast in the respective lines.

In the lighter vein the comics contribute the bit of nonsense now and then, traditionally relished by the "best of men"—who, after all, probably are just plain folks like us, who have a soft spot in our hearts (art critics say in our heads) for the quaint conceits of Powers and Fisher and the rest. When you're tired, you know, a series of pictures is mighty easy to read, and the point isn't easy to miss.

But if you're serious, you can find what other people think in the editorials; you can match your ideas against theirs—and you're the judge. Clashing opinions sharpen wits. It's fine exercise for the mind.

Or turn to a serial novel. You'll find the latest and best in The Sunday American. Just now it's "Adam's Clay," by Cosmo Hamilton. Pretty soon it will be "The Plot for a Pennant," and you baseball fans might guess the author—Hugh Fullerton. You know what that means. But they all are the freshest and the best that can be had.

And the cable service and the news of all the world.

That might be the headliner of all. No other service has the far-reaching tentacles—the "feelers" that touch this old mud-ball at every point, and gather that which is new and strange and worthy, to tell it with spirit and truth in the Sunday paper.

For next Sunday features—"Art or the Woman?" A brilliant consideration of Ida Rubenstein, the strange, fiery Russian dancer who has cast her spell on the flower of the artists, the composers and the dramatists of our time. And then the strange case of Alfred Vanderbilt, frozen out of American society, finding on his return with his new wife to Newport that his first wife is the leader in a social ostracism the most rigid in history.

Then there will be another proof that truth can be stranger than fiction in the narrative of the cruel lover who tried to frighten into his arms a belle of our Southland—and by a horror in the guise of a monster frog.

And what else? Well, King George of England has a quaint idea of destroying "American frivolity" by imposing old-fashioned and outrageous duties on the members of his court—the good King desiring to "sober it down." And Madame Cavalieri explains beauty hints—she really ought to know, you know—and a scientist tells how a child becomes a man, and a psychologist details his discovery of why lovers can't help quarreling.

By way of contrast, Sophie Lyons, queen of the burglars, tells why crime doesn't pay, and Lady Duff Gordon produces an essay on mannish tendencies in women's dress, notably waistcoats, a Parisian fancy.

It's all in The Sunday American. And with it the news of all the earth.

And that's how we catch step with the world, on Sunday.

The Pictures in the Ice

The man— to whom the cost of ice doesn't matter—sees in it merely an added fillip to a long drink. The woman—to whom the cost of ice is a heart-breaking matter—sees in it relief, perhaps life itself, for her child, sweltering in the poor cottage which they call home.

A Glimpse of the Cowed Women of Japan

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

MARIAN COX has recently written her reminiscences of Japan, and Mitchell Kennerley has published them under the title of "The Man-Made Woman of Japan." The picturesque pen of Mrs. Cox gives us a striking chronicle, and I take from it the following:

"The easiest way to arrive at a conception of the Japanese woman is to think of every quality directly contrary to the qualities of the typical American woman, and to see her as the embodiment of these. She is as docile as the American woman is aggressive; as demure as the American is flamboyant; as modest as the American is impudent; as humble as the American is snobbish; as conservative as the American is faddish; as reticent as the American is effusive.

"There is no romance between the sexes in Japan. The relation is either crude and businesslike in marriage, or unmentionable and bestial out of marriage. No wonder there is no word in the Japanese language which can be translated as 'love' in our language. The only love that can be spoken or written of in Japan is the filial. There are no words of endearment for lovers, nor for husband and wife. Marriage is without courtship; courtship without kisses, caresses or pet names.

Loveless Women.

"No Japanese knight has ever performed a deed of valor for the love of a woman. No Japanese poet has ever written a poem of 'love' that could be read to a pure woman. These people have put all their refinement into their etiquette of life, and so have had none left for the elmental facts of life; they have put all their imagination in a hair-splitting epicureanism, and so have had none left with which they might dignify humanity's greatest passion. When the Japanese nation evolves the kiss of man and woman she may cease to be a mimicker and become a molder of civilization.

"In reading of the loveless, kissless, woman-denouncing Japanese, one might believe him austerely chaste, puritanical, the true ascetic; and to those unversed in the duality of human nature it comes with a shock of surprise to learn that, on the contrary, his ruthless immorality and licentiousness are notorious and the scandal of Japan.

"There is one feature of this so unique and so illustrative of the vicious outgrowths of man's lopsided civilizations that it has a claim upon the interest of every student of Japan or of human nature; the institution of the Yoshiwara.

"Classified with our 'white slave traffic' and the sordid evils that nightly stalk Broadway, Piccadilly and the Parisian boulevard, it yet differs from them all in certain elements which make it the most sickening and tragic exhibition the world affords of the human injustice and shame accorded women in civilizations made strictly of the men, for the men, by the men.

"At a temple in Nikko there is a famous picture of three monkeys, one with his hands covering his eyes, which means see no evil; another with hands covering ears, which means hear no evil; the other with hands covering mouth, which means speak no evil. This is evidently the Buddhistic formula for peace on earth, good will to men; but, thanks to the men who have not observed it, humanity has evolved from some of its barbarities, and most of the barbarities that exist to-day endure because women have been too long and thoroughly trained by men—to see no evil, hear no evil, speak no evil.

With Official Sanction.

"No one can understand the Japanese people until he has seen the menagerielike spectacle of that portion of its womankind whom they place outside of human rights in a hideous travesty of human dignity. In the dusk of every evening, just as the temple bells are pealing forth their summons to the strange gods of Nippon, this spectacle begins: women, girls—the majority mere children in appearance—file into cages which open onto the streets, exactly like the cages in a zoo, and sit for hours behind those wooden bars like merchandise for sale, with an aureole of tortoise shell combs around their heads and bedecked in garish splendor of attire. The spectacle arouses disgust and scorn until one learns the hidden springs behind this system of woman-sale, and then there comes only pity.

"The Government has placed its sanction upon this institution: 'thus sayeth the law' is more powerful in Japan than in any other civilized country. So the idea has been perpetuated among the people that parents have a moral (because legal) right to dispose of their daughters to their own advantage, and the inmates of the Yoshiwara are sold by their parents or adopted parents when too young and ignorant to understand the nature of the transaction or the ghastly future it will bring. But even if she knew, the Japanese daughter is as powerless to resist the parental will as her brother, the soldier, would be to resist the will of his Emperor. As we know, she is taught filial devotion as her religion.

Agitation Going On.

"It is not true, as has been so frequently stated, that unchastity does not dishonor a woman in Japan. Even these slaves of the Yoshiwara, involuntary victims, are treated as below human kind. Until a few years ago they had no chance of escape from what even the Japanese call 'the bitter sea of misery.' When there were runaways, the law authorized their capture, punishment and return to their keepers. That there were many runaways we can believe when we learn that the average number of suicides among these girls throughout the land was 40 and 50 a month.

"During the past four years there has been a lively agitation in Japan for a complete change in its social and moral system. The leaders of public opinion proclaim that something is radically wrong, but do not seem to know what it is that must be changed, nor just what new laws to enact—for more laws is the masculine solution to every difficulty."

The Secret of Prayer

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

For he who climbs to make his prayer
Meets half way the descending grace.
—Elsa Barker in British Review.

THIS is the secret of all prayers
That in God's sight have worth;
They must be uttered from the stairs
That wind away from earth.
And he who mounts to speak the word,
He shall be heard, he shall be heard.

And he who will not leave himself,
But stays down with his cares
(Or with his thoughts of power and pelf),
Though loud and loud his prayers,
Beyond earth's dome of arching skies
They shall not rise, they shall not rise.

Oh ye, who seek for strength and power,
Seek first some quiet spot,
And fashion, through a silent hour,
Your stairway, thought by thought.
Then climb, and pray to God on high.
He shall reply, He shall reply.

John Temple Graves Writes on A Ringing Alarm to the Farmer

He Quotes President Charles S. Barrett, of the Farmers' Union, Regarding Foreign Ownership of Cotton Fields in the South.

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

IF any man thinks that the millions of American farmers are asleep or indifferent to economic changes and passing events, that man is mistaken.

On the tariff, on the currency, on farm credits, and on the outside investments in agriculture every farmer is reading, thinking—and preparing to vote!

Even if the farmer were ignorant or apathetic upon public questions, he has wise and watchful leaders who, upon the watchtower, are sounding continually the bugles of advance or the alarms of retreat.

Among the ablest of these is Charles Barrett, president of the Farmers' Union, with two and a half million enrolled members—perhaps the most popular and influential of all American farmers.

Foreign Ownership.

I asked this great farmer recently if he wished to use the far-reaching columns of the Hearst newspapers to sound any new counsel to the American farmer. And he promptly responded:

"Yes; I never omit an opportunity to use that vast newspaper circulation to speak for my people.

"I have something now to say about the alien or foreign ownership of our lands, particularly those lands in the South adaptable to cotton. I have said that the steady reach of foreigners after that imperial staple was an alarming development! I believed years ago that this was a serious menace, and now I am sure of it.

"Now, listen, you scoffers and unbelievers. Do you know that between twelve and thirteen million acres of the finest cotton lands in the South are now owned outright by foreign individuals and corporations? Do you know that agents of these foreign individuals and corporations are constantly working to get more millions of acres of the cream of cotton lands? Do you know that foreign spinners are sending men here to be educated in our agricultural colleges and schools to take charge of these broad acres, cultivate and raise cotton to ship to spinners in England, France and other foreign countries?

Our Richest Heritage.

"Do you think deep and sense what this means? Do you know that it means the actual production of cotton in the South on farms owned and cultivated by foreigners, and whose product will go direct to their mills in England, France and other countries? In plain words, we are sitting supinely by while foreign capital and corporations are taking our oldest, richest and greatest heritage right from under our noses.

"Time may not be far distant when our own people, the men who have raised and supplied the world with its cotton for generations, will be restricted absolutely to the home market. Sounds scary, and I want it to sound so, for it is time to get scared.

"This is a vital question which I would thank the Hearst newspapers and other great conservators of American interests to help our people to solve."

Life as Seen in the Movies

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

FIRST we see Harold folding Susie in his arms. In the background is the train that is to take Harold to the West, where he will make his fortune, after which he will return and make Susie the happiest girl in the world. In the background is George sneering like the plotting villain we know him to be the moment we set eyes on him. The conductor, who has been very patient, gives the signal. Harold climbs aboard at the last minute.

The Telegram.

Next we behold George and Susie speeding homeward in George's six-cylinder car. George is talking in what looks like a low, earnest voice, but Susie refuses to be interested. Suddenly he pulls from his pocket a telegram. Susie sits up suddenly. And well she may. For the film announces that the contents of the telegram are to the effect that Harold has gone to the West to marry another. What other we do not yet know.

We now behold Susie weeping at a desk in a room so full of furniture that no burglar could get halfway across it without waking up all the people in the next block. In her little hand she holds the telegram for a time, then tears it spitefully into bits that flutter out on the breeze that is blowing the Valenciennes curtains in twelve windows. George enters. He looks at the fragmentary telegram and sneers. Then he looks at Susie and smiles. Presently he engages in more low, earnest conversation, and you judge he is describing his yacht, his bank account and his country place at Mamaroneck. But Susie shrinks from these things.

"At Last!"

But evidently George knows more of Susie's disposition than we do. He points to the telegram and sneers, this time for three seconds. Susie sits bolt upright and thinks. Then she rises and paces the floor, deftly threading her way in and out among the furniture like a guide in the North Woods. At last she nods her head, but when George approaches enthusiastically she shakes it.

Here in the West, which is denoted by a lonely cabin in a stone quarry, is Harold. He is sitting by a fire examining nuggets. Evidently none of them is good for much but concrete work. But now he leans forward intently and examines one. Reaching for the only article of wardrobe in evidence, a coat, he dashes madly from the room and we next behold him entering an opening in the stone quarry through which trickles a rivulet. Bending over the rivulet, he picks up more nuggets. "At last" are the words we see plainly on his lips. They are subsequently verified by the text on the screen.

Harold re-enters the lonely cabin, and carefully hangs the coat on the same nail. A rough, unshaved person enters and hands him a letter. He opens it. His face clouds. Bad news from home, we conjecture. Right. Mighty bad news. Harold is being invited to Susie's wedding and George is going to be the bridegroom.

Throwing the newly found nugget out of the window, Harold hurriedly leaves the room.

Harold to the Rescue.

Here comes the Overland Limited. Nearer and nearer till we fear it will collide with the audience. But across the track suddenly darts a man waving a campaign hat. It is Harold. Will he be run over? No. The train stops. Harold climbs on. The train moves into nothingness just as we duck to avoid being hit by the pilot.

At the same old station Harold alights. He commandeers an automobile, and, taking the wheel, departs while the owner indignantly shakes his fist after him.

Same room, full of same furniture, but further embellished with a wedding bell and a minister. Enter Harold from one door and Susie from another. Harold steps forward just as George enters from a third. Susie, being in something of a dilemma, gets out of it neatly by fainting. George attempts to sneer, but doesn't get away with it. The .44 Harold has in his hand interferes. Evidently there are explanations. Susie's father, a gentleman with a limousine body, comes in and revives her. George, discovering that his fake telegram has been exposed, sneers for the last time and goes out a window. Harold folds Susie to his stalwart breast. The minister steps forward and the play is done.

Defense Fights Hard to Establish its Theory of Killing

GEN. HUERTA IS ARMING JINGOES

Hatred Against Americans in Capital Stirred by President—Lind Warned Not to Come.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The administration to-day decided to ignore entirely the note sent by President Huerta to the American government and to direct Special Envoy Lind to proceed to Mexico City without delay on his arrival at Vera Cruz to-night, unless he be held back by armed force.

"The President declines to be bluffed," stated a prominent government official to-day.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 8.—With the approval of Provisional President Huerta, arms were issued to-day to the students of the National Military Academy, who yesterday drafted a resolution praising Huerta for declaring John Lind, the special American envoy, persona non grata to the Mexican Government.

A number of residents in the American colony, who have fortunes invested in Mexico, are planning to make a demonstration Sunday when protests will be lodged against the action of President Wilson in sending a personal representative to Mexico City and urging that the Mexican Government be upheld.

Foreign Minister Aldape and other members of the Cabinet are doing all in their power to arouse the patriotism and enthusiasm of the people.

Meetings of young hot bloods, who are standing up for President Huerta in his defiance of the Stars and Stripes, are being encouraged.

Mexican secret service agents have been detailed to watch every movement that Mr. Lind makes here and the envoy will be under constant surveillance.

The newspapers to-day carried flaming stories of "Yankee interference," and warned the State Department to recall Mr. Lind from Vera Cruz and not allow him to come to Mexico City.

Direful consequences are promised if President Wilson and Secretary Bryan continue their present course of trying to settle the internal affairs of Mexico while withholding official recognition of the Huerta administration.

All the papers carry warm words of praise for Huerta and promise that he will stand like a rock in behalf of his policy of "Mexicans for Mexican affairs."

United States warships in the harbor at Vera Cruz were in wireless communication with the New Hampshire, upon which Mr. Lind, is coming, and it is expected that the New Hampshire will reach Vera Cruz about 9 o'clock to-night.

Some Would Ignore Lind.

There was a gathering of Cabinet Ministers and Huerta adherents in Congress at the National Palace to-day, at which the existing American-Mexican situation was thoroughly discussed. Some are for completely ignoring Mr. Lind, while the radicals insist that he shall be expelled un-

LATEST NEWS

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 8.—In a rear-end collision between two freight trains which occurred Friday morning on the L. and N. Railroad at Falatto, a few miles below here, Engineer P. B. Bosworth was slightly injured. The trains were derailed and traffic will be delayed some six or eight hours.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 8.—Theodore Kytka, a handwriting expert, was the first witness examined to-day in the trial of Murry I. Diggs, charged with violating the white slave law when he and Drew Caminetti took Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris from Sacramento, Cal., to Reno. Attorney Delvin obtained an admission that the deductions of handwriting experts were sometimes unreliable.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—State Department advices received from the battleship New Hampshire, via Vera Cruz to-day stated that the battleship carrying former Governor Lind will not reach Vera Cruz before to-morrow afternoon. Governor Lind, therefore, will not reach Mexico City before Sunday. No reason was given for the delay.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Secretary of State Bryan to-day issued the following statement relative to Governor Lind and his mission in Mexico:

"The statement of the Mexican Foreign Office was based on misrepresentation for which this Government is not responsible. In sending Governor Lind as adviser to the embassy, the President is entirely within his rights and this Department will not assume that his going will be regarded as unfriendly when the character of his mission is understood."

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The House to-day adjourned until Tuesday out of respect to the memory of the late Senator Johnston, of Alabama.

JOHNSTON OF ALABAMA IS DEAD

United States Senator Victim of Pneumonia After Nine Days' Illness at Capital.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Senator Joseph F. Johnston, of Alabama, died at 9 o'clock this morning at his apartment in the Brighton.

Senator Johnston had been ill for eight days, suffering from pneumonia.

As a mark of respect to the memory of Senator Johnston, the Senate adjourned almost immediately after assembling at noon.

Senator Overman offered a resolution for the appointment of a committee of Senators to take part in the funeral ceremonies and to accompany the body to Birmingham, where burial is to be made.

The Vice President appointed the following committee: Senators Bankhead, of Alabama; Bacon, Overman, Chamberlain, Hitchcock, Clarke, of Arkansas; Vardaman, Johnson, Swanson, Smith, of South Carolina; Thornton, Warren, Bristow, Gallinger, Catron, Bradley and Kenyon.

The funeral party will leave here to-night, and is expected to reach Birmingham to-morrow night. The funeral will take place Sunday morning.

Senator Joseph Forney Johnston, of Birmingham, was born in North Carolina in 1843. He served in the Confederate army from the beginning of the war to its conclusion, and was wounded four times. He rose from a private to the rank of captain, and was frequently mentioned honorably for gallant conduct.

Senator Johnston served four years as Governor of Alabama, before his election to the Senate in 1907. His first election to the Senate was to the unexpired term of Senator E. W. Pettus, deceased. He was re-elected in 1909 to his present term.

Senator Johnston's death at this time undoubtedly will bring about an acute political crisis in Alabama. His seat was being contested at the time of his death by Congressman R. P. Hobson, and the fight between them had grown very bitter. It is practically certain that Hobson will not be permitted, now that Johnston is dead, to have the succession uncontested.

There has been talk of Congressman Underwood as a candidate against Mr. Hobson, and the death of Senator Johnston likely will revive that.

His immediate successor will be named by Governor O'Neal, which means that Mr. Hobson will not get the immediate appointment.

He had been in poor health for several weeks.

Mrs. Johnston was with her husband when he died, as well as Forney Johnston, his son, who arrived from his home in Birmingham yesterday.

Mobile Offers Stevens To Fill Vacancy.

MOBILE, Aug. 8.—Mobile will ask Governor O'Neal to appoint State Senator T. M. Stevens to the vacant place in the United States Senate, caused by the death of Senator Joseph F. Johnston.

Stevens was the O'Neal administration leader at the last session of the Alabama Legislature. The man who will be appointed will not be a candidate for the place at the next election.

Immediate Election May Be Necessary.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 8.—Governor O'Neal may be compelled to call an extra session of the Alabama Legislature to order an election at once to fill the vacancy in the United States Senate, as it is generally believed at the Capitol here to-day that under the Seventeenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution the Governor has not the power to appoint a successor to the late Senator J. E. Johnston, who died in Washington to-day.

Offers $200 For Old War Engine's Whistle

DALTON, Aug. 8.—An offer of $200 for the whistle taken from the engine "General" when it was captured by Andrews' Raiders has been made to James Barry, of Dalton, who owns the whistle. He announced recently that he intended to sell it and give the money to the orphans' home at Decatur.

The offer comes from H. T. Thomason, of Clyde, Ohio, who says in his letter that one of his uncles was a member of the Federal band that undertook to escape with the famous engine.

Sues Wire Company For 'Pert' Telegram

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 8.—H. C. Furstenberg, manager of a business concern, is plaintiff in an action in which he seeks $2,000 damages from the Western Union Telegraph Company for the following message, purporting to be from his landlord, Robert Moser:

"Unless you call at once at our flat, pay arrears rent, make arrangements to take care of damage caused by your dog, yourself and wife, will swear out criminal warrant to-morrow charging you with malicious destruction of property."

The company admits transmitting the message, but denies responsibility.

Shower Routs Heat; Cool Spell Promised

The heavy downpour of rain late Thursday afternoon broke up the hot wave that for the past week has been causing Atlantans to wish they were Polar explorers. Thursday night was cool, and at 7 o'clock Friday morning the Government thermometer registered 71 degrees. At 1 o'clock it had climbed to only 84, about five degrees lower than at the same time the past several days.

Plenty of cool breezes and occasional showers will keep Friday night and Saturday comfortable, according to the official forecast.

Kansas' Heat Record 108; Missouri's 109

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 8.—Records for heat were threatened to-day following yesterday's high temperatures, which exceeded all previous marks in parts of Kansas.

At Leavenworth the highest mark reported to-day was 108. At Emporia and Ottawa the temperature reached 107.

Temperatures of 109 were recorded at Mexico, Mo., and Chickasha, Okla.

MEDICAL BILL IS PASSED, WITH AMENDMENT

After a bitter fight in which Representative Wohlwender, of Muscogee, charged under influence by advocates of the measure, the House of Represenatives Friday morning passed the Garlington medical bill, known as the medical practices act, by a vote of 121 to 3, amended so as t prevent the members of the allopathic school of medicine having a majority of the proposed State Board of Medical Examiners. The original bill provided for a board of five allopaths, two eclectics and one homeopath.

The original bill, it was alleged by its opponents, was drawn by representatives of the American Medical Association, referred to on the floor of the House as the "medical trust." It was favorably reported by the committee, and a minority report condemning the bill was offered by R. J. Arnold, of Henry County, a member of the Hygiene and Sanitation Committee.

Chairman Breaks Tie.

Representative Hardeman, of Jefferson, who occupyed the Speaker's chair during the early part of the consideration of the bill, broke a tie vote on the amendment of Conner of Spalding to add two more members to the eight provided by the original bill. The chairman's vote carried the amendment.

The bill as amended and passed provides for a State board to consist of five allopaths, three eclectics and two homeopaths, thus preventing any arbitrary ruling based on dislike of any school of medicine, save through a combination that it is thought impossible to effect. The amended bill was approved by both factions.

The bill will raise the standard of physicians in Georgia.

40 per cent. It provides that applicants for licenses as practicing physicians must have attended a recognized school of medicine for four terms of eight months each, whereas the old laws required only three terms of seven months each.

Christian Scientists Not Barred.

Prior to the discussion of the bill the impression was that it would bar Christian Scientists and mental healers. An amendment was introduced by McCarthy, of Chatham, providing for this school of healing, but it was lost. The bill, however, takes care of them in the following language:

"The provisions of this bill shall not be construed as to interfere with the practices and beliefs of any religious sect, nor with the practice of osteopaths."

Garlington, of Richmond, the author of the bill, asserted that the minority report submitted by Arnold, of Henry, was drawn by physicians opposed to the passage of the bill.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY GIVES STARTLING NEW EVIDENCE FOR FRANK

That the door leading from the entryway on the first floor of the National Pencil Factory, which had been nailed up since the first of January, was found broken open shortly after the murder of Mary Phagan was the startling testimony of N. V. Darley at the trial of Leo Frank Friday afternoon.

No testimony of this nature had been presented before and n ointimation of such a discovery had been made during the investigation of the murder mystery. Its production, if the statements remain uncontroverted, opens up th epossibility that the murderer of Mary Phagan attacked her on the first floor, broke open the door into the rear of the building and threw the body down one of two trap doors, one of which opens onto a chute and the other onto a steep stairway.

The defense did not appear to be abandoning its theory that Conley might have attacked Mary Phagan and thrown her down the leevator shaft only a few feet distant or down the scuttlehole right by the elevator. On the contrary, Reuben Arnold in questioning Darley and other witnesses emphasized the ease with which such a deed might have been accomplished. It seemed to be the effort of the defense at this time not to center upon any one theory, but to show the jurors that the negro might have perpetrated the crime and disposed of the body in any one of four or five ways.

Darley, in advancing the striking possibility that the body had been carried through the door on the first floor into the rear of the building, said that the door had been nailed up again a few days after the crime as mysteriously as it had been broken open.

Darley Suspected Conley.

Darley said that he had kept watch of employees after the murder and that his suspicion immediately had fastened upon Conley because of the negro's peculiar actions. He said he had detailed the day watchman to montain an espionage over Conley.

C. B. Dalton's story recevied a severe blow at the hands of Darley. Darley said that no negro night watchman had been employed at the factory before April, 1913. Dalton tlod of night visits at the factory prior to this time and said he was met by a negro night watchman.

Solicitor Dorsey, cross-examining Darley, made the witness admit that detectives had been in the factory after the crime and might themselves have broken open the door.

The solicitor has brought out that if the body had been thrown down the chute in the rear of the factory, it would have dropped behind a pile of boxes where it would have been more effectively hidden than where it was discovered by Newt Lee. The solicitor claimed that the trap door over the rear stairway into the basement was nailed.

The attorneys for Frank vigorously assailed Friday the stories of two of the State's of two of the State's negro witnesses, Jim Conley, the accuser of Frank, and Albert McKnight, who said he saw Frank at the Selig home Saturday afternoon, April 26.

The motorman and conductor of the street car on which Mary Phagan is believed to have come to town the day of her death both testified that they knew the girl and that she was on their car which arrived at Broad and Hunter Streets not before 12:07 o'clock. She stayed on the car, they said, until the car reached Broad and Hunter Streets, which was about 12:10 o'clock. Consequently, it would have been impossible for her to reach the factory before 12:11 or 12:12 o'clock.

If the testimony of the two street car employees is accurate, it completely upsets Jim Conley's story that he saw Mary Phagan enter the factory before Monteen Stover came in. By the Stover girl's own testimony she entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock and left at 12:10 o'clock. Thus, she had gone by the time the Phagan girl arrived.

It also serves to destroy the significance of the Stover girl's testimony that Frank was absent from his office when she arrived there. As Mary Phagan had not yet arrived, according to the testimony of the street car men, it could hardly be regarded as a suspicious circumstance that Frank was not in his office, if it develops that he really was not. The defense also contends that Miss Stover, who admits she did not enter the inner office, could have looked through the doorway without seeing Frank.

Soon after court reconvened in the afternoon, H. J. Hinchey, of No. 391 Peachtree street, manager of the South Atlanta Blow-pipe Company, appeared at the courthouse under subpen of the defense to discredit the story of Albert McKnight. McKnight testified that he was at Frank's home the afternoon of the murder and that he saw Frank board a Georgi avenue cr to return to the fctory.

Hinchey stated before he went on the stand that he was riding in his automobile on Washington street Memorial Day and at 2:15 o'clock he saw Frank get off a Washington street car at Washington and Hunter streets when the car was stalled by the parade. Frank then was on his way to the factory.

Earlier in the day the defense introduced other evidence to discredit McKnight. Photographs and blue prints of the Selig home were displayed to show that it would have been practically impossible for McKnight to see Frank at the sideboard, as the negro testified when he was on the stand.

Photos and Models Introduced.

Photographs and blue prints of the pencil factory also were put in evidence and in the afternoon a large sized model of the pencil factory, constructed on a scale of three-eights of an inch to the foot, was brought into the court room. It was made by T. H. Willett, a patternmaker, of No. 100 Highland avenue, and John Cox, an attache of Reuben Arnold's office.

The model and blue prints were submitted in an effort to demonstrate that the State's theory of the crime is unreasonable and preposterous, and to illustrate the theory that the defense holds.

Attorney Arnold, who was conducting the examination during the forenoon, sought also to throw a deep shadow of suspicion upon the story of young George Epps, ho testified that he rode uptown with Mary Phagan the day she was killed.

Matthews said that another girl was seated with Mary the latter part of the ride to town. He did not recollect that Epps was on the car at all. The motorman said that he was relieved at Broad and Marietta streets and that he sat behind Mary and her companion all the way to Hunter street. He said the two alighted at Hunter street and proceeded toward Forsyth, on which the factory is located.

This is in direct contradiction to the story of Epps, who testified that he and Mary left the car at Forsyth and Marietta streets and that he walked with her toward the factory as far as the viaduct.

Didn't See Epps.

Hollis did not remember seeing Epps on the car. He said Mary was alone when he collected her fare after the car got on English avenue. He left the car at Forsyth and Marietta streets and did not see Mary Phagan alight there.

Albert Kauffman, an architect, was called to discredit several of the State's witnesses. He had blueprints of the Selig home which he displayed to the jury to show that it was impossible for Albert McKnight to have seen from the kitchen into the dining room, as he testified he did, on the Saturday afternoon that Frank came home from the factory.

His testimony was to the effect that Monteen Stover could not have seen over the safe door into Frank's office at the time she declared she was unable to find him on her visit to the factory.

He said that there was room for several bodies to pass down the scuttle hole into the basement. He exhibited a diagram of the factory to show that Frank could have sat in his office and not been aware of anything taking place beyond the time clock—for example, anyone coming up or going down the stairs.

Miss Daisy Hopkins, who C. B. Dalton said was his companion on visits to the factory basement, was called by the defense and denied Dalton's statements.

She said she never had spoken to Frank, and that Frank never had spoken to her.

Solicitor Dorsey made an attack on her character and forced her to admit she had been in jail on a statutory charge. It was brought out, however, that she was released without trial.

Frank, for the first time during the trial, took ana ctive part in helping direct the course his case was taking. He arose from his seat several times to make suggestions to his lawyers, and at his request certain questions were put.

Before Daisy Hopkins was called Solicitor Dorsey said he wanted to ask Harry Scott one more question. Attorney Rosser said he also wanted to ask one more question of Boots Rogers, Detective J. M. Starnes and George Epps. Detective Scott was the first witness called.

Dorsey asked:

Q. Mr. Scott, how long did it take you to get Jim Conley to write after he had admitted that he could write and you dictated it to him without delay?—A. Two or three minutes.

Daisy Hopkins on Stand.

Miss Hopkins is a woman of very small features, with bright, keen eyes and wore a cotton striped dress that looked a bit too short. She wore white shoes and stockings. Mr. Arnold began the questioning:

Q. Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes, I went to work there about October 1, 1911, and quit June 1, 1912.

Q. What department?—A. Packing department.

Q. What floor?—A. Second floor.

Q. How many other girls worked there?—A. Sometimes there were as many as ten.

Q. Did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I knew him when I saw him. I saw him pass around the factory

Q. Did he ever speak to you?—A. No, never in my life

Denies Drinking in Frank's Office.

Q. Did you ever go into Frank's office and drink beer and cold drinks with other women?—A. No, I never went into his office and I don't drink.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. I know him when I see him.

Q. Did you ever speak to him?—A. I went to his home once to see his sister and spoke to him. That is the only time.

Q. Did you ever go to the pencil factory with Dalton?—A. No, I never did.

Q. Did you introduce him to Mr. Frank?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you ever go into the factory and go into the basement with Dalton?—A. No, I don't even know where the basement is. I never have been in it.

Says She Was Married.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Were you ever married?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. Redair.

Q. Who did you marry?—A. E. A. Sills.

Q. Who married you?—A. Preacher Miles.

Q. Who is your doctor?—A. Dr. Pound.

Q. What is he treating you for?—A. Stomach trouble.

Q. Were you ever in jail?—A. No.

Q. Do you know this man here, Garner, my deputy?—A. No.

Q. Did he get you out of jail?—A. No, he was along.

Q. What were you charged with?—A. Somebody told tales on me.

Q. Who brought you down here?—A. Mr. Burke.

"Bill" Smith Her Lawyer.

Arnold took the witness on the redirect.

Q. Who got you out of jail?—A. My lawyer.

Q. Did you pay anything?—A. I only paid my lawyer his fee.

Q. Who was your lawyer?—A. Mr. Bill Smith.

W. M. Mathews, motorman on the English Avenue car on which Mary Phagan is supposed to have come to town from her home, Saturday, April 26, followed Miss Hopkins on the stand.

Q. What was your run on April 26?—A. English avenue that runs to Bellwood.

Q. What time did you pass Lindsay street?—A. Ten minutes to 12.

Q. Was that on schedule?—A. Yes.

Q. Did a little girl named Mary Phagan get on at Lindsay street?—A. Yes.

Sat Behind Mary Phagan.

Q. What is the distance from Lindsay street to Broad street?—A. About two miles.

Q. What time did you get to Marietta and Broad streets?—A. At 12:07 1-2. We were on time.

Q. Do you recollect where this little girl got off?—A. At Broad and Hunter streets.

Q. What time did you reach that point?—A. About two and one-half minutes later. It took that long on account of the crowds.

Q. It took that long?—A. Yes. I was not running the car then. I was sitting behind Mary Phagan. There was a little girl on the seat with her.

Q. Where did she get off?—A. At Broad and Hunter streets.

Q. What time was it then?—A. 12:10 as near as I could recollect.

Q. Where did she go when she got off?—A. She walked to the sidewalk with the girl that was with her.

Q. Did you see this little girl get on the car?—A. Yes.

Q. Did a little boy get on the car with her?—A. No.

Didn't See Epps Boy.

Q. Do you know this little boy Epps?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he get on the car with her? A. No.

Q. He didn't sit on the seat with her?—A. No; I didn't see him.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. You said you arrived at Broad and Hunter streets at about 12:10 o'clock. Why do you say about 12:10 if you are sure of it?—A. It was about that time.

Q. Didn't you tell Detective Whitfield, of the Pinkertons, that you might have been three or four minutes ahead of schedule?—A. No.

Q. You are sure you never told him that?—A. No.

Q. How is it that you are willing to tell this jury that Mary Phagan did not get off at Marietta and Broad streets?—A. Wait a minute and I will tell you. There was an ex-conductor sitting by me. He had a pin on his coat. I took it off and leaning over to Mary Phagan I said: "Little girl, this is your picture." She said: "No, it ain't." That made me positive.

Q. Tell me how these little girls were dressed?—A. I don't remember, except they were dressed in something light.

Q. Well, tell us anything that Mary Phagan had on?—A. I don't know anything except she had on a dress and hat.

Q. Yes, she had on shoes and stockings, too?—A. Yes, and her dress was light colored.

Q. You didn't see George Epps?—A. No, I didn't see him.

Q. Would you know George Epps if you were to see him?—A. I would know him if I were to see him now.

Q. Tell me one thing about him by which you can identify him?—A. I can't remember.

Q. What color was Mary Phagan's hat?—A. It was light color.

Q. You say it was a light color. Just what color was it?—A. I don't know.

Q. What did you say light color for? Come, don't——

Arnold Calls Halt.

Attorney Arnold interrupted.

"Just wait a minute. That is not the form to question him."

"All right, I'll put the question differently," said Dorsey.

Q. Mr. Matthews, you did not observe what color her clothes were?

A. No, sir.

Q. What time did you hear about her murder?—A. Sunday morning.

Q. What time did you go down to identify her?—A. About 6:45 in the afternoon.

Q. You recognized her as the little girl you had carried down the day before?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you recognize her?—A. Well, I knew her. One day she was late and I waited for her and she said she was mad because she was late. Every time after that I would ask her if she was mad.

Fails on Color of Hat.

Attorney Arnold took the witness and showed him the dress Mary Phagan wore.

Q. Was this the dress she wore that day?—A. I am not sure, but it looks like it might have been.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness. He showed the witness Mary Phagan's hat.

Q. Is this the light hat you just now told the jury Mary Phagan had on? (The hat was of dark lavender material.)

Q. The girl you saw had on a light hat?—A. That's what I remember.

The witness was excused, and W. T. Hollis, conductor on the English avenue car on which the Phagan girl rode to town Saturday, April 26, took the witness stand. Arnold examined him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Street car conductor.

Q. Where were you on April 26?—A. On the English avenue and Cooper street line.

Q. Did you cross Lindsay street?—A. Yes.

Conductor Saw Girl.

Q. On what street?—A. Bellwood avenue.

Q. How many miles is it from this point to the heart of the city?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. What time do you leave the other end of the line?—A. On the hour, quarter and half.

Q. What time did the car that left at 15 minutes to 12 get to the city?—A. It took 22 1-2 minutes.

Q. Did the little girl get on at Lindsay street?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know her name then?—A. No.

Q. When did you see her again?—A. The next day at the morgue.

Q. Did this little boy, George Epps, get on the car and ride with her?—A. No; he was not with her when I collected the fare.

Q. Was the car crowded?—A. There were only three passengers.

Q. What time did you get to Broad and Marietta streets?—A. About 12:07 1-2.

Epps Boy Didn't Get Off.

Q. Where did you get off?—A. At Marietta and Forsyth streets.

Q. Did this little girl get off there?—A. No; I left her on the car.

Q. Did this little boy, Epps, get off there?—A. No.

Q. How long did it take to get from Broad and Marietta to Hunter street—A. About 2 1-2 minutes, as a rule.

Q. Do you recollect how she was dressed?—A. No.

Q. You don't know whether these are the clothes?—A. No; I never noticed.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. There was nothing unusual about her coming in that day, was there?—A. No.

Q. There was no particular reason why you should remember these things, is there?—A. No.

Never Ahead of Time, He Says.

Q. You don't know whether these are her clothes, or not, do you?—A. No.

Q. You always notice when anything happens to throw you off your schedule, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. But you don't pay any attention to being a few minutes ahead of time, do you?—A. We don't ever come in town ahead of time.

Q. Are you ever late?—A. Yes; sometimes.

Q. Was there anyone sitting with Mary Phagan on the car?—A. No.

Q. You didn't see a little girl sitting beside her?—A. No. When I got her fare, she was sitting alone, as I remember.

Q. She usually came down early in the morning—factory hours—didn't she?—A. Yes; she usually caught the car that gets to town at 7:07. She said she was fifteen minutes late when she caught that car, when she said she was mad.

Q. Which end of the car did she get on?—A. The front end.

Q. Which end were you on?—A. The back end.

Q. And you say you overheard a conversation between her and the motorman?—A. Yes; he asked her if she was mad, and she said yes, she was late.

Said She Was Late.

Q. She went down early in the morning, as a rule? Yet, when she said she was late, it was ten minutes to 12 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Are the cars on this line long or short?—A. Short cars.

Q. Was there any difficulty in hearing what was said on the front end when the car was standing still? A. No.

Q. No such thing as being ahead of time ever happens?—A. No, sir; it is against the rules of the company.

Attorney Hooper took the witness again.

Q. Do you mean to say that you obey the rules of the company so well that you are never ahead of time nor never a little late?—A. It isn't against the rules of the company to be late.

Q. Then you are never early—not even when going to the barn?—A. It isn't against the rules of the company to come in ahead of time when going to the barn, so long as you don't run reckless.

Q. And that day you brought Mary Phagan in was your last trip?—A. Yes.

Defense Turns Over Books.

Attorneys for the defense at this juncture turned over to the prosecution the cash book and the bank book of the National Pencil Company. Hollis was excused and Albert Kauffman, an engineer, who drew a plot and diagram of the Selig residence where Frank resided, took the stand.

He was examined by Attorney Arnold.

Q. What is your business?—A. Civil engineer.

Q. Have you made a drawing of the Selig residence on Georgia avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. Last week.

Q. Did you make a plat of the kitchen, the dining room, the reception hall, the parlor and the hall?—A. Yes.

Q. How many feet is it from the kitchen door to the passageway?—A. Fourteen feet.

Couldn't See Mirror.

Q. How wide is the passageway?—A. Two and one-half feet wide and about two feet long.

Q. Did you stand in the kitchen door and see if you could see the mirror in the dining room?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you see it?—A. No. No part of the glass was visible.

Q. Were you present when a photographer took views of the place?—A. Yes.

Q. Standing on the south side of that door, did you see the sideboard? A. Not within two or three feet of it.

Q. Have you drawn a plat of Georgia avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you draw a diagram of the block bounded by Pulliam street?—A. Yes.

Q. How far is it from the Selig home to Pulliam street?—A. 221 feet.

Q. How far to Washington street? A. 175 feet.

Q. What does this represent? (A diagram of the pencil factory was displayed.)—A. That is the pencil factory.

Gives Dimensions of Factory.

Q. What is the size of the elevator shaft?—A. Six by eight.

Q. What is the length and breadth of this hole? (A spot where the ladder goes down into the basement of the factory was indicated).—A. Two feet by 2 feet 3 inches.

Q. What is the distance from the elevator to the spot where the body was found?—A. 176 feet.

Q. To the boiler?—A. 90 feet.

Q. From the elevator to this toilet?—A. 118 feet.

Q. The distance from the elevator to the back stairway?—A. 135 feet.

Q. The elevator to the chute? First, the dimensions?—A. " feet wide, 15 feet long.

Q. Was that large enough for a human body to go down?—A. One or several.

Q. How far from the elevator is it?—A. About 30 feet.

Q. How far is the back door from the elevator?—A. 165 feet.

Q. The total length of the building?—A. 200 feet.

Q. What are the widths of the walls?—A. Four feet.

Q. What kind of a bunk is in that inclosure back there by the boiler? A. A big box.

Q. What is in it?—A. All kinds of trash.

Q. How far is the trash pile from the spot where the body was found?—A. Sixty-one feet.

Q. The toilet?—A. Twenty-one feet.

Q. From the back door?—A. Forty-two feet.

Q. What about the line of vision from the toilet to where the body was found?—A. An angle of 43 degrees.

Q. How far would the line of vision throw you from this partition?—A. About 3 feet.

Q. Could you see a body there?—A. Not all of it.

Q. Is it an accurate plan of the first floor?—A. Yes.

Q. What is the width of the front door?—A. Six feet.

Q. What is the length of this partition from the front door?—A. Twenty-six feet.

Q. From the front door to the stairway, how far is it—A. Thirty-six feet.

Q. From the staircase to the elevator shaft?—A. Thirteen feet.

Q. From the stairway to this hole?—A. Ten and one-half feet.

Q. Is there a long hallway on the first floor?—A. Yes.

Trap Door Near Tragic Spot.

Q. Does it extend to the west end of the building?—A. Yes

Q. What is it used for?—A. Maybe a storeroom.

Q. Was it closed?—A. Yes.

Q. What was in there?—A. Two toilets.

Q. How far back?—A. About 90 feet.

Q. Is this the spot directly over where the body was found?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you find on the right-hand side, next to the toilet?—A. A trap door.

Q. Were there steps?—A. Yes.

Q. How near to this chute was the body found?—A. About 20 feet.

Q. When the trap is open, where does it lead to?—A. To the basement.

Q. What is it used for?—A. To send boxes down.

Q. Did you observe the door of the safe when it stood open in the outer office?—A. Yes.

Q. To what extent did it close off the view to the inner office?—A. Entirely.

Q. Could you see over that safe door?—A. Yes.

Q. Could a girl?—A. I don't think so.

Q. To the right of the door in the inner office, what did you find?—A. A desk.

Q. Are there two windows there?—A. Yes.

Q. They open on the street, don't they?—A. Yes.

Office 150 Feet From Dressing Room.

Q. This is Frank's desk?—A. Yes.

Q. A person on the other side of the street could see the desk, couldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. How far is it from Frank's office to the dressing room?—A. One hundred and fifty feet.

Q. What kind of a view is it from Frank's office to the stairway?—A. None at all.

Q. What kind of a view of the clock?—A. He could see about one-quarter of the first clock.

Q. What are these open spaces (pointing to the diagram)?—A. Passage ways.

Q. How wide are the doors to the metal room?—A. Six feet.

Q. How far from that door is it to the ladies' room?—A. About 10 feet.

Frank Makes Suggestion.

Q. From that point how far is it to the lathe?—A. Twenty feet.

Q. From this lathe to the point where Conley said he found the body?—A. Thirty-seven feet.

Q. How far from the ladies' toilet?—A. Nineteen feet.

Here Frank arose from his seat and walked across to Attorney Rosser to make a suggestion for a question.

Q. What is the size of these vats?—A. Six by four.

Q. Could you get a girl into one of these?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find in this whole build-

STATE IS FORCED TO PIN HOPES ON CONLEY

Must Stand By While Defense Seeks Weak Link in the Negro's Story.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

As the defense in the Frank case gets under way, it is evident enough, as it has been from the beginning of this case, that there is but one big, tremendously compelling task before it—the annihilation of Conley's ugly story!

The State climaxed its case thrillingly and with deadly effect in the negro.

He came through the fire of cross-examination, exhaustive and thorough, in remarkably good shape, all things considered. He unfolded a story even more horrible than was anticipated. Certainly, in every conceivable way, he has sought to damage the defendant—even going to the extent of lodging against him another crime than murder!

Through the cross-examination, however, there ran an evident vein of deadly purpose upon the part of the defense. Conley was given full limit to go his length. He went it—no disputing that!

The question is, did he go TOO FAR?

Did he, in his last minute effort to get in EVERYTHING that possibly might work against the defendant, tell things, or say things, that eventually will rise to plague him to his utter undoing?

That is the defense's task—THE UNDOING OF CONLEY.

Conley the State's All.

Conley is the heart and soul of the State's case—without Conley, the State is rendered helpless. He is the Alpha and the Omega of the charge against Leo Frank.

That great detective, William J. Burns, says "they always—criminals—leave something out of gear in the stories they tell."

Burns declares there never was a lie told to shield a criminal that did not have in it SOMEWHERE a fatal weakness, that might be located if patiently sought for. The more elaborate the tale the criminal relates, the more chance there is, no matter how infinitely shrewd he may seem to be, that he will be discovered.

To-day is the defense's day in court—during its progress, which may be for a week or more, even as the State's day lasted 240 hours, Leo Frank must break down the awful story of Jim Conley, and prove himself innocent, if he can, of all the various charges brought against him.

Can he do it?

Well, maybe he can, and maybe he can not—at least, in the name of justice and decency and all that is right, he must have full and free OPPORTUNITY.

One Side of the Case.

During the progress of the State's case, the defense was led far into the gloom. People began to doubt Frank's innocence—people of poise and fair minds, desirous of seeing the truth prevail though the heavens fall. Even these people found themselves staggering and groping as the hideous and sinister charges fell from the lips of the negro.

Could Leo Frank, of previous good reputation, of fair name and unblemished integrity, college bred and studious in habit, so far as the public knew or suspected, be the monster responsible for little Mary Phagan's death, and also—the other unspeakable thing?

In a rather remarkable interview Mrs. Leo Frank gave The Sunday American some few weeks ago, she said this of Frank and herself: "As sweethearts, we went hand in hand, and intruded ourselves upon no person; as man and wife we have gone hand in hand, and we have intruded ourselves upon no person!"

They still are going "hand in hand," the man and the woman, the husband and the wife—the one holding up as best he can under the terrible charge of murder, the other there beside him—"for better or worse, in sickness and in health, for richer or poorer"—until death, or worse than death, shall sever the tie that binds.

That is something steadying to think about!

It is the defendant's day in court—and he is entitled to fair play and a fair chance!

To some it may seem that the burden has shifted, that it is up to the defense now, notwithstanding the more or less fictitious presumption of innocence the law jealously has established in his favor, to PROVE his innocence.

Be that as it may—even as the gloom has closed about him and all he holds most dear in this world—he still is a human being, in very dire distress, as yet unconvicted; and it is only right that the public should be patient, as he sets forth HIS side of this terrible affair.

And I give it as my opinion here and now, for whatever it is worth, that the case against Leo Frank yet may be far from conclusive—and it may never be made conclusive.

Conley's Tale Impossible?

Suppose the defense is able to show, by a sequence of logical, orderly and honorably sustained witnesses, that the tale Jim Conley tells is utterly absurd—and IMPOSSIBLE?

What then?

Will you be prepared, if forced to a conviction against your will, if it be that way with you, to say to Frank: "All right, you came through the fire, at times seemingly sure to consume you, unhurt and unscorched, but you came through, and I am content."

Conley's story has not YET been broken down—no. But it MAY be broken down.

In an article a few days ago, I said this, and I feel like repeating it now:

In judging this Frank case, purely from the State's own standpoint, there is nothing so important as the TIME ELEMENT in which the State uncompromisingly claims the crime was committed.

In another article a few days thereafter, I said this, and this I also feel like repeating now:

If the Conley story is a lie, if it has been TOO CLEVERLY "framed up"—if and a thousand other "ifs"—what matters that?

It matters this: If it be a lie, it MUST break down, somewhere, sometime; if it be the truth, it will stand against ALL the assaults made upon it!

State Tied by Conley.

Remember, unless Conley's story holds together, the case against Frank goes to pieces. Everybody who has read the evidence and who still is capable of rendering just judgment will admit that.

Suppose it can be shown, and is shown, that the story Conley told CAN NOT be true?

The defense MUST show that, or Frank is lost!

Can the defense do that?

The State has pinned itself down to exact and definite propositions. Remember, the defense has hardly started its story yet—it may be able to make absurd those very propositions the State has set up.

The crime, according to the State's witnesses, MUST have been committed thus and so, in exact order, and just as stated—or Conley's story falls down.

The biggest element in the State's case is the time element—mark that!

Upon it the State will stand or fall eventually.

If Mary Phagan was NOT killed before 12:05, then Leo Frank didn't kill her. If she was not killed at that time, Conley's story will not do.

Then is when the State says she was killed—THEN and not at any other time. Conley's story ALL leads up to and away from that.

Remember, too, that the only witness who swears to knowledge or suspicion of any unspeakable conduct upon the part of Frank is—again—Conley.

Dalton a Tame Witness.

When it came to corroborating Conley, Dalton proved a tame corroborator. The ugly, nasty charge of perversion and degeneracy, glibly dropped from the lips of Conley, rests ENTIRELY AND ALTOGETHER on Conley's word.

If Conley's story of the murder is shown to be IMPOSSIBLE AND ABSURD, will you then reverse your other opinion concerning Frank—if you have accepted Conley's word as to that—and agree that Conley, having lied to send Frank to the gallows, would have lied as readily to besmirch him with unmentionable scandal otherwise?

Shall not Frank have the right, unchallenged and fair, to clear himself of every charge lodged against him?

To-day is his day in court—will any living person begrudge him, sore pressed, one moment of it?

Will, in the end, he be able to read and take to himself, happily and serenely, Tennyson's beautiful poem ending—

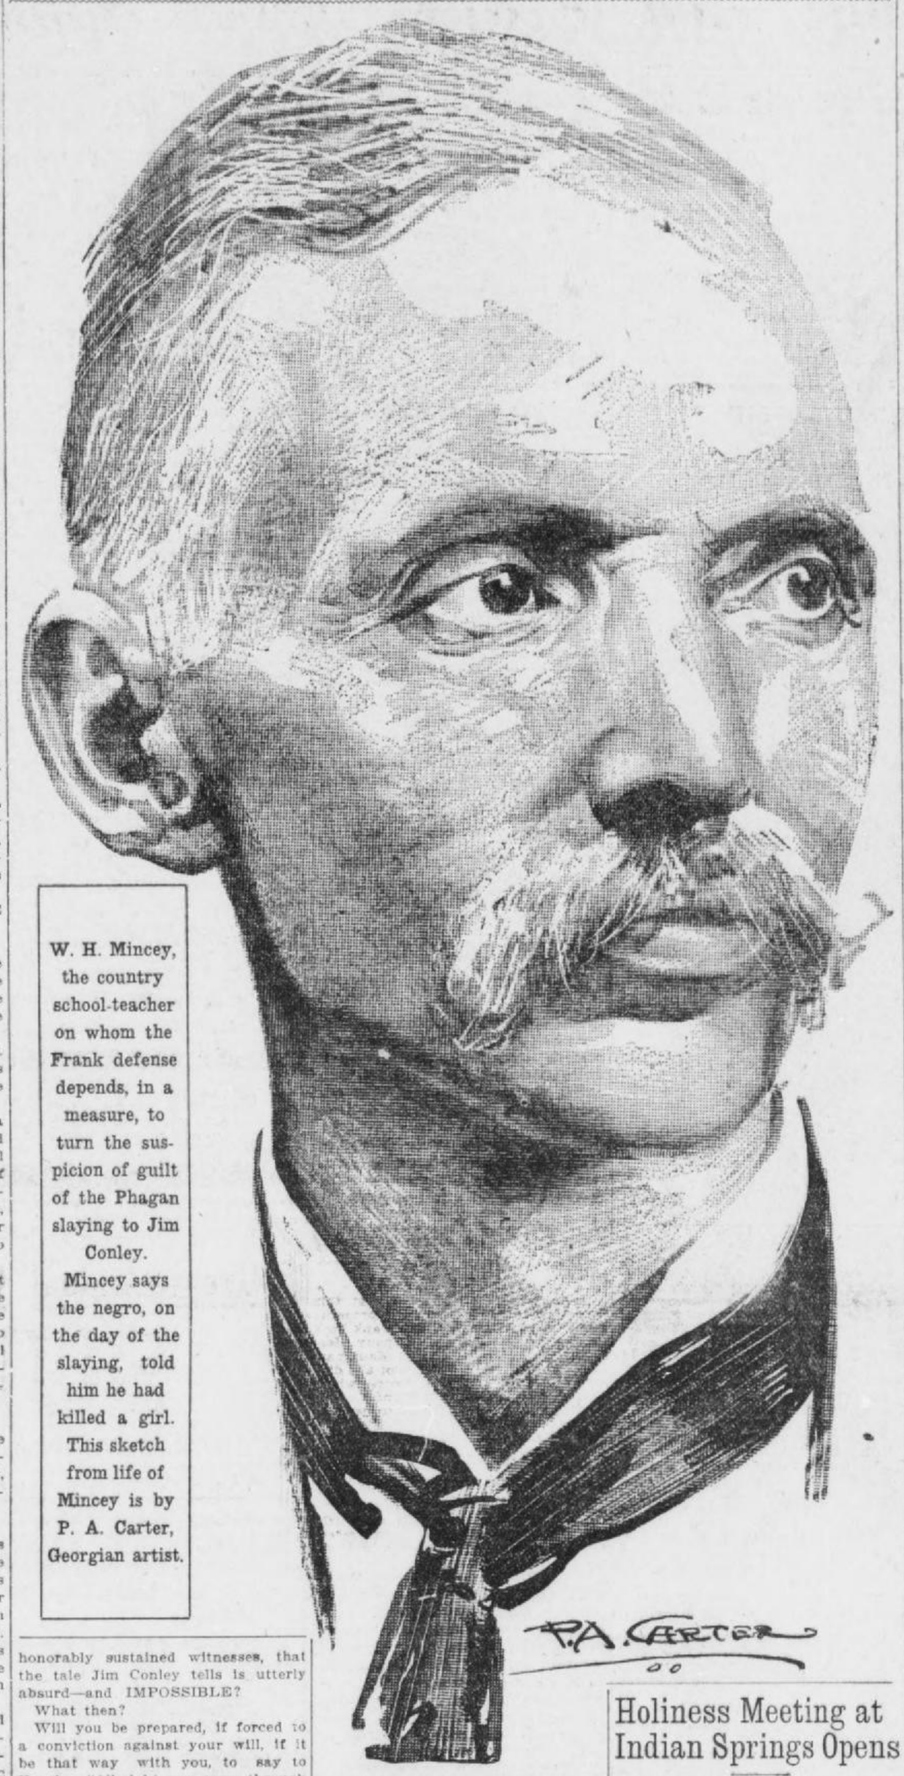

"And now it is daylight everywhere!"

Will he?

We shall see.

At least, he is entitled to his day in court—and it is at hand!

MAN WHO SAYS NEGRO JIM CONLEY CONFESSED SLAYING OF LITTLE GIRL

W. H. Mincey, the country school-teacher on whom the Frank defense depends, in a measure, to turn the suspicion of guilt of the Phagan slaying to Jim Conley. Mincey says the negro, on the day of the slaying, told him he had killed a girl. This sketch from life of Mincey is by P. A. Carter, Georgian artist.

STATE SEES BITS OF EVIDENCE AS ROPE STRANDS

Chain as Strong as Its Weakest Link, but Cord Must Be Cut Thread by Thread.

By O. B. KEELER.

They call it a chain that the State has forged, or has tried to forge, to hold Leo Frank to the murder of Mary Phagan.

But isn't it a rope?

A chain, you know, is as strong as its weakest link. Take one link out, and the chain comes apart.

With a rope, it's different.

Strand after strand might be cut or broken, and the rope still holds a certain weight. Then might come a time when the cutting of one more strand would cause the rope to break.

The point is, the finished rope will sustain a weight that would instantly snap any one of its several strands.

Bits of Evidence Threads.

And that is what the various bits of circumstantial evidence might better be called—strands or threads.

Edgar Allen Poe, in "The Mystery of Marie Roget," has nearly exhausted the philosophical phase of accumulative circumstance and its relation to evidence.

Applying the system of the well-known Dupin to the case in point—and REGARDING IT, BE IT UNDERSTOOD, STRICTLY FROM THE STATE'S VIEWPOINT—an analysis of part of the evidence against Leo Frank follows:

First off, the isolated circumstance of Conley's ability to write would seem as futile as a smoke wreath in sustaining any weight of evidence, except against Conley himself.

But to that fact is added the fact that Frank knew Conley could write.

Still, the thread is flimsy, and, even connected with the case against Frank, would appear worthless.

Six Deductions Seen.

But when it develops that Frank, knowing Conley could write, and knowing the police were trying to find the author of the murder notes—when Frank, well aware of these things, did not inform the police that Conley was lying when he said he could not write, the following deductions appear:

(1) That Frank did not want to connect Conley with the murder notes, which (2) would have been the natural and prompt inclination of a suspected man who knew nothing of the crime himself, so that (3) it appeared Frank knew something of the murder, and (4) knew that Conley knew he knew something of the murder, which (5) justified the conclusion on the part of the State that Frank feared to implicate Conley, lest (6) Conley, in turn, tell something that would implicate him.

Of course, this strand may be broken entirely by the defense, showing Frank never knew the police were ignorant of Conley's ability to write before the police learned it themselves.

But there is one pretty substantial strand of evidence, as the State sees it—and all having its genesis in the simple fact that Conley knew how to write, and at first denied it.

But that strand of itself surely would fail to carry the burden of the case. There must be others.

Even Conley's story is strong only by reason of many strands that surround and support it. Presented to a jury, round and unvarnished—tainted by the reek of false affidavits and weakened by the dry-rot of self-interest, Conley's story never would win a verdict against Leo Frank.

But there is the shred of the murder notes—Conley's story draws support from that. There is the time factor brought out by the expert testimony—Conley's story twines itself about the prop of science. There is the agitation of Frank noticed by Newt Lee in the middle of the afternoon—Conley's story provides for that. There is the visit of Monteen Stover, a tiny circumstance of itself—but of vast importance just so far as it strengthens Conley's recollection of exact time.

And it is by reason of the rope already well along in the twisting that a hundred other little circumstances become significant that of themselves would be lighter than the air-drawn dagger that troubled the dreams of Macbeth.

They fit in with the twisting of the rope.

Will the Rope Hold?

There is Frank's agitation at home and at the factory. There is the ugly story of habitual "chats" at the factory, guarded by Conley as watchman. And the sending away of Newt Lee that afternoon. And the seeing of Conley by Mrs. White, "loitering" at the place he fixes for himself as watchman, and at the time. And the alleged reluctance of Frank to confront Conley at the jail.

And all the rest of it.

So many little incidents, and most of them small to triviality in themselves.

The point is, each strengthens the other, until the fragile threads become a rope.

Will it hold after Frank's lawyers have presented their side of the case?

The jury must decide.

LEO FRANK AIDS HIS LAWYERS IN QUESTIONING OF WITNESSES

For First Time Prisoner Takes Active Interest in Trial for His Lite ARCHITECT IS QUIZZED TO REFUTE TESTIMONY OF NEGRO IN FRANK'S HOME

ing a cot, a bed or a sofa?—A. No.

Q. Did you find anything that looked like a bedroom, except the ladies' room?—A. No.

Hooper Cross-Examines.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who told you the location of the body?—A. Mr. Schiff.

Q. He was under Mr. Frank in the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. Then if that location was wrong all of your measurements were wrong?

Arnold objected and his objection was sustained.

Q. You based all your measurements on Mr. Schiff's location of the body?—A. Yes.

Q. If that was wrong, all of your measurements were wrong—I mean about lines of vision, etc.?—A. Yes.

Q. You found a gas jet burning in the basement? Where was it?—A. Near the front.

Q. On the third floor you depended for light on the front doors and windows?—A. Yes.

Q. These are all glass?—A. Yes.

Q. There is also a gas jet farther back?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. On the first floor you say there is a trap door near the elevator two feet by two feet three inches, leading to the basement?—A. Yes.

Trap Door Small.

Q. A man of your size would have a hard time getting through there, wouldn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Two people couldn't get through? A. No.

Q. The scuttle hole back on the first floor leads to the basement?—A. Yes, to the dustpan in the back.

Q. A man doesn't look in a curved line, does he?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what do these curved lines on the second floor mean?—A. Those indicate the direction he probably walked.

Several of the jurymen were inattentive to these demonstrations.

Q. Anyone coming into this office could see if anyone was in there, couldn't he, if the door adjoining was open?—A. Yes.

Q. Nobody standing on the fourth floor at the head of the stairway could see down to the second floor?—A. I don't think they could.

Q. Don't you know they couldn't?—A. They might have a little view.

Frank Suggests Query.

Arnold took the witness on the redirect examination.

At the suggestion of Frank, Arnold asked the witness how near Frank's office there was a lavatory.

The witness did not know. Arnold also asked him at Frank's suggestion how far it was from the back of the stairs on the first floor to the top of the stairs at the second floor. The answer was 27 feet.

The identification of the plant and the measurements were carried on with the jury grouped around the witness on the edge of the jury box. Frank arose and walked over to Mr. Rosser to make his suggestions. Rosser whispered the questions to Arnold, who was making the examination.

Q. You did not make any test to see whether a person could view from the third to the fourth floor?—A. Yes.

Q. Would there be any trouble dropping a body down that scuttle hole?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Hooper asked you if it was dark by the elevator, was it?—A. Rather dark.

Might See Mirror.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. This is your diagram—that block on Georgia avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. This is your diagram of the Selig home, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was the refrigerator in the kitchen?—A. Right here.

Q. How far is it from this corner of the room to the kitchen door?—A. About four feet.

Q. A man sitting in this corner could see that mirror, could he not?—A. He might.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. Could a person standing or sitting anywhere near this kitchen door see the mirror or any part of it?—A. No.

The witness was then excused.

Attorney Arnold tendered as evidence the diagram of the factory, the plat of the Selig home with reference to Pulliam, Washington and Gleen streets and Georgia avenue.

Solictor Dorsey made no objection.

J. G. Adams, a photographer, was next called to the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Did you go to the Selig home and take some pictures?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you take a couple of photographs, one from the kitchen door on the outside and one from the hallway looking into the dining room?—A. Only a portion of the window.

Q. Could you see the mirror from this view?—A. No.

Q. Did you take one from the inside of the door?—A. Yes.

Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor, may I show these pictures to the jury as we go along?"

Dorsey—It's against the rule, your honor. They would not let me do it.

Rosser—Oh, get the witness down off the stand and come before the jury. You can do it that way. Don't bother about Hughs.

Shows Photos to Jury.

The witness presented pictures of the open door of the safe in the outer office, excluding the view into the inner office. He also showed a picture taken outside of the outer office which showed that, with the safe door open, the view into the inner office was excluded. He showed pictures of the basement and a series of views of the elevator shaft on the second floor. He showed pictures of where Jim Conley is said to have sat on the first floor; also pictures of the plating room and a box near where Conley said he got the cloth in which he wrapped the Phagan girl's body. He showed a picture of the lathe where some hair was found.

Q. Did you take a picture of the path a person would take coming from the metal room down the steps?—A. I did.

Mr. Arnold—I want to show the extent of the machinery in this metal room.

The attorney passed a number of photographs before the jury.

Q. In every one of these instances, Mr. Adams, did you make as accurate photographs as possible?—A. I did.

Hooper Quizzes Picture Man.

Attorney Hooper took up the cross-examination.

Q. How long since you took these photographs?—A. About a month.

Mr. Hooper went over the diagram of the Selig home with the witness.

Q. When did you take a photograph of the Selig home?—A. That was more recent.

Q. A slight change of the position of that sideboard would have made the whole room visible through the mirror?—A. It would have made some of it visible.

Q. Wouldn't it have made it all visible?—A. I can't say.

The witness was excused. All of the photographs taken by him were offered as evidence without objection on the part of the State.

Court then took a recess until 2 o'clock.

Call for George Epps.

At the opening of the afternoon session, George Epps, the newsboy who declared that he came downtown on the same car with Mary Phagan, was recalled by the defense, but was not in court. Mr. Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor," he said, "we are very anxious to get this boy here. I understand he said he is not coming."

Judge Roan said he would issue an attachment for him.

H. J. Hinchey, manager of the Southern Blow Pipe Company, residing at 391 Peachtree street, was called. Attorney Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Four or five years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Mechanical engineer with the Southern Blow Pipe Company.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank on Memorial Day?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. Near the Capitol. I was in an automobile and he was on a Washington street car. At least the car was on Washington street.

Q. What time was it?—A. Between 2 and 2:15 o'clock.

How He Remembered.

Q. How did you know that it was that time?—A. When he was accused I became very much interested and remembered doing certain things on Memorial Day. I left home between 1 and 1:10 o'clock and went through the same maneuvers to determine just what time I would have reached the Capitol.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How many times did you see Mr. Frank as you were making the trip?—A. Just once.

Q. He was on the inside of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. You had your hands full, didn't you?—A. Not altogether. I am an expert driver.

Q. You didn't see anybody else that you recognized on the car, did you?—A. No.

Discussed It With Frank.

Q. How many times have you seen Mr. Frank in jail?—A. Only once.

Q. Did you discuss this thing with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it before or after the Coroner's inquest?—A. It was a long time after that.

Q. Who else did you tell of this?—A. Several other people besides him. Many of them before I even saw the lawyers.

Q. What was the object of your visit? Were you subpenaed then?—A. No. I knew that I would be. My attorney, Leonard Haas, asked me if I would be a witness.

Q. Is he an attorney for Frank?—A. No; he is our attorney.

Q. What is your company?—A. South Atlanta Blow Pipe Company.

Q. Tell me, now, why you went down there to the jail?—A. I had an interest in the case. Mr. Frank was never a personal friend of mine, although I have known him in a business way for five years. I was interested in the case purely because I knew Mr. Frank in a business way.

The witness was excused.

Model of Factory Shown.

The defense's model of the National Pencil Company's building was brought in. It was a pasteboard affair, with wooden staves, built on a scale of 3-8 inch to a foot. It displayed the basement, first and second floors. It was made by P. H. Willet, a pettern maker, and John Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law office, who is also a pattern maker. It is without exterior walls and has all the various departments and little blocks of wood indicating the machinery and other furniture on different floors. Mr. Willet was called to the stand. Attorney Arnold examined him.

Q. You had the dimensions of the National Pencil Company's building in making this model, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Followed the proportions in making this model?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not try to make fully any model, did you—I mean you did not make it complete?—A. Not entirely.

Q. Did you make any measurements of the factory?—A. Not myself.

Q. Did Mr. Coughlin furnish you his blue prints?—A. No, Mr. Scott gave me the blue prints.

Finds Errors in Plans.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Didn't you make this front door exactly as it is?—A. I made ti according to the blue prints.

Q. You don't pretend to say that the windows in the front of the third floor are at all correct?—A. I did not make them.

Here the court stenographer complained that he could not understand the witness.

Hooper: "It is not our fault that he won't talk out."

The witness finally said that the windows had been put in since he finished his design.

Q. Mr. Willet, how do you get the height from a blue print?—A. We don't get it unless it is given.

Q. Was the height given in this case?—A. For the ground floor it was.

Q. You just put in the height for the other floors?—A. I elected those heights.

Q. Look at this trapdoor hole leading into the basement. You don't mean to tell this jury it was cut in the same proportion of 3-8 inch to a foot?—A. I could not tell without measuring it.

Least Bit Out of Proportion.

The witness was given a rule to make the measurements. He said it was a least bit out of proportion.

Q. Isn't it true that the same kind of looseness applies to various parts of this model?—A. No.

Q. Is that the only mistake you made?

Arnold interrupted. "I object to him calling it a mistake," Arnold said.

Attorney Hooper said he was through with the witness and Arnold took him on the redirect examination.

Q. Does this purport to represent the height?—A. No, it is only the ground plan.

Q. Were you given instructions to correctly follow this ground plan?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you do so?—A. Yes.

Darley Looks at Model.

N. V. Darley, assistant superintendent of the National Pencil Company, was recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold questioned him.

Q. I wish you would examine this model and tell me whether or not it fairly represents a ground plan of the National Pencil Factory.

With Mr. Arnold questioning him, Darley pointed out the important points of the inside of the factory, as represented in the model.

Q. Is that chute that leads to the basement large enough for a body to pass through?—A. Yes.

Q. How far from where Mary Phagan's body was found would a body have been that fell through the chute?—A. Thirty or forty feet.

Q. If anybody would come down those stairs from the second floor, how far would you have to take them to throw them down the elevator shaft?—A. About 12 feet.

Door Broken Open.

Q. How about the door leading to the woodenware department? How did you find it?—A. It was broken open after the murder.

Q. Had you noticed it before?—A. No.

Q. Sitting in Mr. Frank's office, can you see the time clock?—A. About half of it.

Q. Could you see into Mr. Frank's office from the outer office door, with the safe door open?—A. Standing at the door, I would have to stand on tiptoe to see over it.

Was Dark and Cloudy Day.

Q. Is there any way of locking or bolting the door opening to the metal room from the inside?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there a bed or a cot or anything of the sort in the whole building?—A. Only two boxes in the basement with dirty sacks on them.

Q. Do you remember the machine little Mary Phagan worked on?—A. I don't remember seeing her at it, but I remember which one it was.

Q. If those doors to the stairway, leading up to the third floor, were open, one could get into the metal room from the rear, couldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Is this a good model?—A. It is.

Q. What kind of a day was April 26?—A. Cloudy and dark.

Q. Was the space around the front door darker than usual?—A. Yes.

Q. Sitting in Mr Frank's office, can you see the time clock?—A. About half of it.

Q. Could you see into Mr. Frank's office from the outer office door with the safe door open?—A. Standing at the door, I would have to stand on tiptoe to see over it.

Left Factory With Frank.

Q. What time did you leave the factory Saturday morning, April 26?—A. About 9:40 o'clock.

Q. If Jim Conley said you left at 11 o'clock, is it true, or not?—A. It is not true.

Q. Is it true that Conley said that you came to the factory after 10:30 o'clock, just after Conley arrived?

Hooper interrupted: "The Supreme Court has held that one witness cannot pass on the truthfulness of another. I object to both of these questions."

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

Q. Who left the factory with you?—A. Mr. Leo Frank.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley?—A. No.

Q. Where did you go?—A. Mr. Frank went to Montag's and I went to the Montgomery Theater.

Q. Did you take a drink of soda water together?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever call upon Saturday afternoons?—A. Yes, almost every Saturday. I called to find out about the finance sheet.

Q. Was Frank always there?—A. Always, but one time.

Conley Looked Suspicious.

Q. Mr. Dalton testified that last year he came in contact with a negro night watchman there. Did you have a negro night watchman then?—A. We always had a white night watchman until about April 1.

Q. I will ask you if the finance sheet was not always made up on Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see this negro Conley there Monday?—A. I did.

Q. How did he appear?—A. He looked excited. So much so that I told the watchman to keep an eye on him.

Dorsey objected: "I object to what he told someone else."

Judge Roan sustained the objection over the protest of the defense.

Q. Did you ever pinch or joke with Conley?—A. I didn't call it joking. I have kicked him when I found him loafing. He always laughed.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank joke him him?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you contribute to the fund to defend Frank?—A. No.

Q. Do you know Daisy Hopkins?—A. I never heard of her until yesterday.

Q. Are you acquainted with her general reputation?—A. No.

Q. When did you find that door open?—A. Three days after the crime.

Q. People were going in and out of the factory all the time, were they not?—A. Yes.

Body in Public Place.

Q. Detectives were all over the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. They went through the door, didn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you know this trap door was nailed down until the insurance people went through there?—A. No.

Q. Don't you remember two or three days after the murder you saw me go up those steps and find the door nailed?—A. I don't recall what door. I found it open.

Q. Don't you know that if a person had dropped a body down that chute, it would have been a better hiding place for it than anywhere else in the factory?

Arnold: I object to the question.

Dorsey changed the question.

Q. Well, then, which is the most public, this spot where the body was found, or back behind the boxes at the chute?—A. Where the body was found.

WOMAN DENIES SHE EVER VISITED PENCIL PLANT WITH DALTON

Miss Daisy Hopkins contradicts his story told to corroborate Couley.

The Frank trial audience laughed when C. B. Dalton said he didn't know where he was born.

Sheriff Mangum Answers Handcuffing Criticism.

Sheriff Mangum issued the following announcement to-day:

To the Public and Citizens of Fulton County:

Some complaints are being made in regard to the handcuffing of a prisoner while being transported to and from the Tower to court.

When only one prisoner is to be handled, if he is not violent or unruly he is allowed to go with an officer or officers without being handcuffed, be he white, black or any other color known on earth, regardless of sex, creed or nationality.

The Sheriff and his deputies are responsible for the safe handling of a prisoner and my belief is that the people of Fulton County have confidence in their Sheriff and his men.

Respectfully,
C. W. MANGUM, Sheriff.

Poetess Freed of Slaying a Priest

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Mme. Crespy, the poetess, charged with the murder of Abbe Chassaign, a young priest, with whom she was infatuated, was acquitted in the Criminal Court at Ager, to-day.

Her defense was that the priest committed suicide, but the prosecution contended that the woman killed her sweetheart in a jealous rage.

Arkansas Justice to Seek Clarke's Place

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., Aug. 8.—Associate Justice William F. Kirby, of the State Supreme Court, announces he will be candidate against United States Senator James P. Clarke, who shortly will announce for re-election.

Kirby was formerly Attorney General of Arkansas and cordially supported George W. Hays in the recent gubernatorial elections.

Escaped Leper in Flight to Mexico

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—George Hartman, the leper who was taken to the isolation cottage yesterday, escaped from there to-day and made his way to the home of his wife, where he obtained $200 and departed, saying he was going to Mexico.

Hartman is said to have contracted the disease in the Philippines, where he served in the army.

TELEGRAPHER BANKRUPT.

Herbert E. Darley, a telegrapher, filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy Friday. He admitted liabilities of $586.40, with no assets.

Recovered From Severe Lung Trouble

Plenty of fresh air and good food are necessary to persons suffering from lung trouble, but something more is needed to bring about full health. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for throat and lung troubles, and so many reports have been received showing that it brought about good results in a number of cases which were declared hopeless, that all sufferers who are not benefiting otherwise should at least investigate what it has done for others. Investigate this case:

Madison Lake, Minn.

"Gentlemen: In December, 1908, March, 1909, and September, 1909, I was taken with hemorrhages of the lungs which confined me several weeks, each time to my bed. My doctor advised me to go West.

"In November I started for Denver, Colo. After my arrival I met Michael Brody, who upon learning of my condition, urged me to take Eckman's Alterative. In about two months I began to feel better. I kept on taking the medicine and improved fast. In March, 1910, I returned home. I think I am entirely well, have a good appetite and sleep well. When I left Denver my weight was 136 pounds. I now weigh 165, my normal weight. I thank God and your Alterative for my health."

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' drug stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

CONLEY'S STORY PUT IN PECULIAR LIGHT WHEN DEFENSE CALLS SCOTT

Harry Scott, of the Pinkerton agency, showed up the "confessions" of Conley in a peculiar light when he was called to the stand by the Frank defense Thursday afternoon.

The detective, questioned by Luther Rosser, told the jury that Conley, when he "had told everything;" when he had accused Frank of the killing and had made himself an accessory after the fact by declaring that he assisted in the disposal of the body; when every motive for holding anything back had been swept away by his third affidavit, still denied to him (Scott) many of the alleged circumstances to which he testified while he was on the stand the first three days of the week.

It will be the contention of the defense that these many additions to Conley's tale, inasmuch as all reason for concealing them had passed after Conley had come out with his accusations against Frank and his confession of his own part in the crime, are pure fabrications of the black man's imagination, as are the other details of his tale.

Scott said that he had grilled and badgered Conley repeatedly about seeing Mary Phagan enter the factory. Even after the negro had made all his incriminating statements, he steadfastly denied seeing the girl victim go up the stairs to the second floor.

Denied He Had Seen Purse.

He denied also to Scott, the detective said, that he ever had seen the girl's mesh bag or parasol, or that he ever had heard a girl's scream while he was sitting on the first floor. He told the detectives that he did not see Lemmie Quinn or Monteen Stover enter the factory, although he later declared he had seen them both and so testified on the stand.

Conley said on the stand when he was questioned by Rosser that he thought he had told all these things to Scott and John Black while he was making his third and final affidavit. Scott was called to testify that Conley not only had failed to tell them, but for the most part had made strenuous denials when asked about them. It was expected that Black would be called early Friday to testify on the same matter.

Rosser, in his examination of Detective Scott, sought to create in the minds of the jury the impression that Conley had been guided and directed by the detectives in the framing of his string of statements and affidavits.

Scott admitted that the improbabilities in the negro's statements had been pointed out to him, and that, with these suggestions, Conley proceeded to doctor up his affidavits until they harmonized better with the circumstances of the day.

Solicitor Dorsey was loath to let any statement get into the record which indicated that Conley had been coached by the detectives, and he got Scott to say that no one had put the words in the negro's mouth.

"But you would say," snouted Rosser, "That don't fit, Jim,' and Jim would get something that did fit; isn't that so?"

It takes a baby a year or more to get six teeth.

In a year or less six of your teeth may be seriously damaged by lack of proper care. Proper care does not mean that you have to spend an hour a day scrubbing your teeth. Just two or three minutes in the morning and two or three at night.

And the care that you give your teeth is an investment that comes back a hundred fold in better health, and a better chance to make your mark in the world.

A few cents invested in a delicious dentifrice that gets you into the regular habit of teeth care, is common sense invested for your entire future life,

KINKY HAIR STRAIGHT SOFT AND SILKY

Don't be fooled by using some fake preparation which claims to straighten your hair. Kinky hair can not be made straight. You are just fooling yourself using it. You have to have hair before you can straighten it. Now this EXELENTO QUININE POMADE is a Hair Grower which feeds the scalp and roots of the hair and makes hair grow very fast and you soon can see the results after using several times. It is a wonderful hair grower. It cleans dandruff and stops falling hair at once. It leaves harsh, stubborn, nappy looking hair soft and silky, and you can fix up your hair the way you want it. We give money back if it doesn't do the way we claim. Try a box.

Price 25 cents by all druggists or by mail on receipt of stamps or coin.

PROBE LIKELY OF MEXICO LOBBY CHARGES

Senate May Heed W. Alden's Smith Allegation That Administration Is Inuenced.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The Senate Lobby Inquiry Committee to-day runs the risk of having its burdens increased by an inquiry into the Mexican lobby which Senator William Alden Smith charged during debate yesterday exists in Washington and which is furnishing "hearsay, haphazard propaganda," on which, he declared, President Wilson and Secretary Bryan are basing their Mexican policy.

When the committee met, Senator Cummins inquired of James A. Emery, chief lobbyist for the National Association of Manufacturers, about the formation of the National Tariff Commission Association in 1909. Emery explained that it was the outgrowth of sentiment expressed by members of the N. A. M. and was organized by James W. VanCleave. Members contributed money to press their propaganda. They opposed the Beveridge tariff commission bill, said Emery.

Senator Nelson asked Emery whether James Watson was employed by the N. A. M. and by the National Council of Industrial Defense.

"Neither."

"Was he employed by the Tariff Commission Association?"

"He told me so himself."

The N. A. M. contributed to the National Tariff Association, but did not directly employ Watson, the witness declared.

On account of the death of Senator Johnston, of Alabama, the committee adjourned till Monday.

Bell Buzzard Found! No, Not at Winsted

FORSYTH, Aug. 8.—The bell buzzard has been discovered again.

Roger H. Taylor, of this county, is sponsor for the story that on last Wednesday a buzzard, with a bell around its neck, passed through the settlement known as Northwest Corner and was seen by several reputable citizens.

Lighting on a tree in the settlement the buzzard attracted considerable attention, and it is claimed that the bell was not only visible, but the sound of the tinkle was unmistakable.

Two Die from Gases At Bottom of Well

ROME, Aug. 8.—Overcome by gas in the bottom of a well on Sheldon Simm's farm near Rome, Tom Lowry and Hugh Floyd expired before they could be rescued.

Lowry was at the bottom of the well cleaning it out when he yelled that gas was about to overcome him. A bucket was let down and he was drawn to the top. Just as he reached for support he missed the outstretched hands and fell to the bottom of the well.

Floyd tried to rescue him and as he clung to the bucket to be lowered, he, too, fell, and was killed.

Lightning Bolt Kills Commissioner's Son

DUBLIN, Aug. 8.—Lying at the edge of a cotton field, dead, John Stanley, 13-year-old son of H. M. Stanley, Commissioner og Commerce and Labor, was found by his brother yesterday afternoon. He was killed by lightning that apparently struck him in the head.

He had been dead about half an hour when found. The funeral will be held to-day.

Two Held as Members Of Boy Robber Band

Roy Nash, No. 12 Pittman place, and Harry Sharpton, No. 102 Gibson street, each 19 years old, are held at the police station accused of being members of a burglar band.

Nash and Sharpton were brought back by Detective McGill from Savannah, where they were traced by Detectives Gillespie and McGill. Three other youths, alleged members of the gang, were arrested a few days ago.

LIND TO LAND ON MEXICAN SOIL TO-NIGHT

Anti-American Feeling Stirred by Huerta as United States Envoy Nears Capital.

der section 33 of the Mexican Constitution unless he makes out his mission to be favorable to Huerta's aims.

Section 33 provides that persons of suspicious intentions shall be driven from the country and not be allowed to return except on special permission from the Government.

It was decided that no official greeting shall be extended to Mr. Lind, thus breaking a tradition which is as immemorial as diplomacy itself.

After the conference Senor Aldape said:

"The Government has decided upon a definite course of action to be followed in the present situation, and we believe that it will be approved by all persons of justice. President Huerta is striving to re-establish order in Mexico, and he believes that outside interference, unless invited would do more harm than good. President Huerta has the good of Mexico at heart, and I know that he would make great sacrifices in behalf of his country."

Mexico's Defy Ignored Until Lind Delivers Note.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Pending the arrival in Mexico of John Lind, special and personal representative of President Wilson, this Government will take no action with respect to the defy issued by the Mexican foreign office threatening to deport former Governor Lind as an undesirable alien.

Offical confirmation of the issuance of the threat has reached the State Department, but Secretary Bryan and other Government officials say the United States will make no move until it is seen whether the Mexican Government intends to carry out its threat.

Former Governor Lind is due to reach Vera Cruz to-night. If he makes good connections he should get to Mexico City in time for a conference with President Huerta to-morrow afternoon. It is believed here the Mexican President will be forced to confer with President Wilson's representative, if only to discover the nature of the communication it has been admitted the former Governor of Minnesota carries with him.

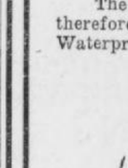

Should President Huerta deem it best to expel Mr. Lind, the United States may be forced to take drastic measures, but it is hoped at the State Department that this undesirable alternative will be avoided by a change of front on the part of the Mexican President after he receives Lind's message from President Wilson, the contents of which is unknown here to anyone save the President and Secretary Bryan.

After a conference with the President, Secretary Bryan to-day announced that the statement sent to the American Embassy at Mexico City for the Mexican foreign office that Special Ambassador Lind would be persona non grata to the Mexican Government unless he brought the proper credentials with him, had been received at the State Department to-day and that the President now has it under consideration.

At the request of the State Department, the battleship Michigan to-day was moved from Vera Cruz to Ciudad Del Carmen, Mexico. It was feared that the arrival of the battleship New Hampshire at Vera Cruz to-day might give rise to a report that the United States was preparing for active intervention and the Michigan, therefore, was moved farther down the coast, where she will remain for further orders.

PLANE LOSES TO TRAIN IN RACE TO CAPITAL

Fog and Motor Trouble Hold Back Aviator Wood After He Outspeeds Special.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Aviator C. Mervin Wood, who started from Hempstead, L. I., to-day to race a special train on the Pennsylvania Railroad to Washington and back, lost the first half of his contest owing to fog and motor trouble, after having the train beaten to a frazzle.

Wood was compelled to land at Gaithersburg, Md., after losing his way in the fog, and immediately after resuming his journey toward Fort Myer, the local end of the journey, had to alight a second time, but said he would resume as soon as he could make repairs.

At Baltimore, Wood was 35 minutes ahead of the train, but the latter arrived here at 9:43, leaving the aeroplane helpless in a Maryland village. The special train broke all records between Philadelphia and Washington, making the 135 miles in 139 minutes.

The flight was made to determine the worth of the Moissant monoplanes for scout duty in the army.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., Aug. 8.—Wood left Hempstead in a heavy fog at 4:36 a. m. He did not care to risk a trip over New York City, especially in such heavy weather.

Wood, who hails from Kansas City, Mo., is over 6 feet tall, but weighs only 160 pounds.

The aviator spent nearly an hour testing every part of the machine before he started.

"I don't want to duplicate Cody's feat," said he.

Aviator and machine weighed 1,208 pounds. In addition to 25 1-2 gallons of gasoline, Wood carried 8 1-2 gallons of castor oil with him. The fog caused some trepidation, but Wood said that he could find his way all right, and at 4:30 he gave the word to his mechanician that he was ready. There was a few minutes' delay, and it was 4:36 before the car shot away on its journey. Wood made a wide circle over Westbury tio get his bearings. The car was soon lost to view, but the humming of the propeller could be heard through the fog.

Immediately upon leaving, the airman began to ascend and was soon traveling at an altitude of 1,500 feet.

Army Men See Flight.

In the meantime the special train was racing westward over the Pennsylania tracks bearing a corps of newspaper men, representatives of the Aero Club of America and army officers.

At Trenton, N. J., where Wood was sighted at 5:55 o'clock, he was fourteen minutes behind the train. Wood lost time there, getting lost in the fog.

Wood was still out of sight when the special train reached Philadelphia. Persons who were watching for the airman at Philadelphia did not see him pass over the city, and it was figured out that he had either lost his way again or had taken another course to avoid the air pockets which generally infest the atmosphere above the cities.

Leaving Philadelphia, the engine driver sent the locomotive ahead at 80 miles an hour, while those on board strained their eyes through binoculars to get a glimpse of the aerial flyer.

Lost in Maryland Fogs.

Philadelphia is 120 miles from the aviator's starting point, and Wood had covered the distance in two hours and fourteen minutes.

Wood passed Wilmington, Del., at 7:35 o'clock, 35 minutes ahead of the train. At Wilmington the machine was so high in the air it could hardly be seen.

Baltimore was passed by Wood at 8:10 o'clock. At that point he was still 35 minutes ahead of the special train. The aviator was still maintaining a tremendous altitude.

Wood encountered the heaviest fog of the trip over some parts of Maryland. At Gaithersburg, Md., the aviator again got lost and decided that he could save time by landing and making inquiries. This he did, touching earth at 9:15. After getting his route straightened out, he again arose and proceeded in the direction of Fort Myer, Va.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

At the Grand.

Pictures at the Grand are becoming more and more popular every day. Commencing next Monday, the policy will be to present pictures daily from 2:30 until 10:30, with complete new programs each day, at 10 cents admission for the best seats, and children at half price.

Forsyth Bill Pleases.

Every performance this week at the Forsyth has attracted almost the holding capacity in the busy theater. While it is a fact that the show is without a headliner or a feature that may have been advertised, it is nevertheless a combination of pleasing talent that has won applause from every gathering.

Next week's star will be Ralph Herz, the musical comedy character comedian, who has been a late star with "Dr. Duluth," and who was one of the big features with "Madame Sherry" and "The Charity Girl."

At the Bijou.

"Along the Pike" is drawing the biggest audiences of the season to the Bijou this week. The attraction has made good beyond the expectations of the management.

The Bijou will close its doors on Saturday for two weeks, during which time the painters will overhaul the little theater, preparatory to the opening of the fall season on August 25.

CAREY, REBUKED, HITS AT BOARD OF PARKS

Manager Says Factionalism Bars New Ideas—Declares He Is Serving Last Term.

Dan Carey, General Manager of Parks, declared Friday that factionalism in the Park Board had reached such a degree that the exploitation of any new ideas absolutely was prevented and that he was serving his last term under such conditions.

Authentic reports from the faction opposed to him are that plans are being made to drop him at the end of his term, January 1, 1915.

The old-time factionalism reached an acute stage at a meeting Thursday afternoon because Manager Carey had not consulted President J. O. Cochran about contracts for an underground conduit for the lighting of Piedmont Park.

Board Censures Mr. Carey.

President Cochran, with the balance of power in the board, has been supporting Manager Carey. But when Manager Carey took action on his own initiative he switched to the anti-Carey faction led by M. B. Young and R. A. Burnett and resolutions were adopted by a vote of 9 to 3 reprimanding Mr. Carey for making contracts without consulting the board.

Tangle Over "Loaned Stone."

Manager Carey also asked the board to straighten out an agreement between President Cochran and Engineer Nym Hurt, of the City Construction Department, about some crushed stone. Manager Carey said the minutes of the board showed that President Cochran had represented to the board that the stone had been given, while Mr. Hurt claims that it was only loaned and he wanted it back.

President Cochran said he understood that the stone had been loaned, and if he had represented that it had been given to the department he had made a mistake.

"It seems that a member of the board can do anything, but anything the general manager does is wrong," said Mr. Carey.

Commissioners Frank Reynolds, William Van Houten and Councilman Sam Shepard stoutly defended Manager Carey, but they were outvoted.

What the Charges Are.

Here are the specific charges brought by President Cochran against Manager Carey:

That the board appropriated $200 to remove the Erskine fountain to Grant Park and that Manager Carey spent $600 on it.

That negligence resulted in $22 demurrage collected on cars of stone one time and $17 another.

That he has given contracts for $800 for underground wiring of Piedmont Park, and that all of these expenditures were contracted for without the knowledge or consent of the board.

Manager Carey explained that the wiring contracts were made as a result of a misunderstanding between himself and City Electrician R. C. Turner.

Alabama Double of Croker Not Boasting

ANNISTON, Aug. 8.—Anniston, which has become famous for its doubles, having a man who looks like Roosevelt, one who looks like Wilson and a double of Napoleon in the person of State Senator T. E. WANT AD IDEAS WILL HELP TO EARN VOTES

Contestants Invited to Heart-to-Heart Chat With Manager Next Monday Morning.

Contestants, the race is about to warm up.

The Want Ad Man wants to see you and talk things over. He has a bunch of ideas which will help you get the business.

Come in and see him Monday in his office, fourth floor of the new Foote & Davies building, North Pryor street and Edgewood avenue.

There is still time for new entries. Any live young man or woman who will enter with determination to succeed may win an automobile, a piano, a trip to California or any one of the dozens of prizes.

Don't forget to enlist your friends and acquaintances in the contest. Tell them you're out to win. Have them use Georgian want ads and cast their votes for you. Explain that every cent paid for want ads gives ten votes for you and will help you win.

Be sure and see the Want Ad Man next Monday. He has opened a special office for the contest and wants to have a heart to heart talk with every contestant. He has some ideas which will help you win.

Miss Sackville-West is the only child of Lord and Lady Sackville and she will succeed to the Scott fortune.

Cody To Be Buried With Military Honors

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—Military honors will be paid to the memory of Aviator Samuel F. Cody, who was killed in an aeroplane accident at Aldershot yesterday, when he is buried on Monday.

The funeral will be semi-military in character and the coffin will be escorted by troops.

Girl Accuses Rich Fiance of Slaying

CLINTON, KY., Aug. 8.—May Copeland, held here as the confessed slayer of her brother-in-law, Hugh Atkinson, at Bardwell, to-day startled the jail authorities by making another confession, saying the killing was done by Lucien Turk, the wealthy fiance of the Copeland girl. Turk is being held at Paducah as an accessory.

In her statement to the police here the girl said that Turk killed her brother-in-law because Atkinson, according to May Copeland's admission to him, had wronged her. J. W. Turk, her fiance's father, the girl said, promised to give her $20,000 if she would confess the killing herself, and pay attorneys who would obtain her freedom under an unwritten law plea.

Anti-Drug Bill Is Defeated in House

The drug bill introduced in the House by Mr. Shuptrine of Chatham County, designed to regulate the sale of cocaine, morphine and other narcotics, was deefated by a vote of 85 to 71.

The bill provided that no druggist shall sell any of the drugs named in the act without a physician's prescription, and that each druggist pay $10 a year license. The bill also created the office of State Drug Commissioner, and provided for drug inspectors.

Mr. Shuptrine declared that the use of cocaine and morphine is greatly increasing in Georgia and should be regulated.

Accounting by Phone Companies Ordered

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—To complete its investigation of the telephone situation throughout the United States, the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day ordered telephone concerns doing an interstate business to furnish the Commission with a history of their business affairs.

The total number of shares of stock, par value of each share, dividends paid, ownership of one company by another, capital and surplus is called for in a circular which will be sent to each company by the Commission.

Jails Husband for False Teeth Theft

FORSYTH, Aug. 8.—The limit in stealing has been reached in Monroe.

A negro woman of this county has had a warrant sworn out for her husband charging him with stealing her false teeth.

SCREWS, VETERAN JOURNALIST, DEAD

Noted Alabama Editor Stricken Suddenly at Country Home Near Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 8.—From an attack of acute indigestion, Major William Wallace Screws, the veteran editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, died suddenly Thursday night at his country home in Coosada, fourteen miles from Montgomery. Major Screws was 74 years old, and while his health had not been very good for several months, his death was unexpected. With him at the time of his death were his two sons, Benjamin Screws and Holt Screws, and his wife.

"The most beloved man in Alabama," was a title often given Major Screws, who despite the many bitter political fights he entered, always held the highest respect of both sides. He became connected with The Advertiser shortly after the war, and in a short while became sole owner of the paper. A few years later he sold half interest in the paper to Frank P. Glass, and under their combined directorship The Advertiser progressed to one of the foremost morning papers in the South.

Major Screws was born February 25, 1839, in Barbour County, Alabama, and attended school at Glennville. In 1859 he took up the study of law with the famous law firm of Watts, Judge and Jackson in Montgomery and was admitted to the bar in 1859 at the age of 20 years.

Though opposed to secession, Major Screws fought for his State, and went with the first troops to Pensacola. There he participated in the capture of Fort Barancas. He fought throughout the entire war, being captured in Virginia during the last few weeks of the struggle. He acted as correspondent for The Advertiser for the four years of the great struggle.

He held many offices of honor and was a prominent Mason, being grand high priest, Grand Chapter Royal Arch Masons of Alabama. He was Secretary of State for Alabama from 1878 to 1882, postmaster at Montgomery from 1893 to 1897, served a term as president of the National Editorial Association, and was connected in an official capacity with many other large associations.

Despite his years, Major Screws had retained a perfect control of his faculties, and until recently his physical condition was of the best.

Funeral arrangements have not been made yet.

Fowls Socialistic; 3 Kinds Share Nest

FORSYTH, Aug. 8.—A guinea nest is supposed to be hard to find, but a resident of Dillars, this county, while walking through a patch of woods found a nest which is shared in true communistic style by a guinea, a hen and a partridge. At the time the discovery was made there were three partridge, two guinea and six hen eggs in the nest.

What hours had been agreed upon by the sharers of the nest during which they are to keep house is unknown.

Nine Ears to Stalk In Forsyth Cornfield

FORSYTH, Aug. 8.—Nine ears of corn to a stalk is most unusual, but Jesse Childs, of near Rogers Church, in this county, is exhibiting around Forsyth a stalk on which there are nine well-matured ears.

He planted a prolific variety of corn, and claims that whil he has discovered no other stalk on which there are nine ears, six ears, and even seven, to the stalk are not unusual in his field. This corn was raised on thin upland soil.

FIRE LADDIES ON VACATION.

DALTON, Aug. 8.—Sixteen members of the Dalton fire department, headed by Chief W. H. Perry, left here Thursday afternoon for Tampa, Fla., on their annual two weeks' outing.

75 Canning Clubs to Feature State Fair

MACON, Aug. 8.—The first annual assembly of the girls and boys of the 75 County Canning Clubs of the State will be held here on October 27 and 28 as one of the special features of the Georgia State Fair. Not only will exhibits be made of the fruits and vegetables canned during the season, but actual demonstrations will be given by each of the clubs, under the direction of Miss Mary Creswell, of the State College of Agriculture. Over 700 boys and girls are expected to attend.

The State fair has announced a liberal award of prizes.

Stage Ambitions of 2 Youths Shattered

Recorder Pro Tem. Preston Friday morning wrecked the stage ambitions of Joe Welch, of Center Hill, and Garland Hensley, of Fort McPherson, when he advised them to give up their ideas of show life and "go on and work for a living."

The two boys were found early Friday asleep in a box car in the Southern Railway yards. They explained they were out Thursday night at a rehearsal for a show and stayed too late to catch a car home. Judge Preston dismissed the cases.

Railroad Travel's Greatest Peril Is the Open Switch

The toll of lives taken each year by this ever-present danger has been enormous.

For years the inventive genius at the command of every great railroad system has been devoted to solving this question.

The question has been solved. The danger has been removed. The open switch is closed. The Shepherd Automatic Switch Company has answered the problem. Its safety device has removed the peril from the open switch as thoroughly as the removal of a serpent's fangs destroys his sting.

By a non-electrical mechanical device the main line is closed as soon as the last truck of a car has crossed the switch. It can be opened when the engineer throws a lever on entering the siding.

The danger of open and split switches is absolutely eliminated. As a time-saver this device will remove from a third to a half of the number of stops and operations of switchmen in taking and leaving siding.

The value of the Shepherd Automatic Switch will be shown by a special demonstration to-morrow (Saturday), August 9, at 3 p. m., on a spur track of the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, at the Atlanta Manufacturing Supply Company's shop in Oakland City, on the East Point car line.

The public is urged to view the practical demonstration of this wonderful invention.

Detailed information as to the Shepherd Automatic Switch will be gladly furnished by W. R. Green, at the Aragon Hotel, or W. C. Warfield, 706 Fourth National Bank Building.

Remember, the demonstration begins promptly at 3 p. m. to-morrow at Oakland City.

Take East Point car.

The World of Society

The dinner dance at the Capital City Country Club was the occasion for a number of small dinner parties Thursday evening. Miss Jessie McKee, who returned recently from a stay of several months at school in Europe, was the honored guest of a little party entertained by Mr. and Mrs. George M. Brown and composed of the Misses McKee, Miss Leone Ladson, Miss Mary Brown, Messrs. Stuart Witham, Perrin Nicolson, Saunders Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McKee.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon entertained a swimming party before dinner, the party remaining for the al-fresco dinner.

A special party for Miss Anna Lowry Eason, of Tennessee, a young visitor who is the guest of Miss Emma Lowry Freeman, was entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Bates Block, the members of the party being, beside the two girls, Miss Alice May Freeman, Messrs. Arthur Clarke, Walter Nash and James Ragan.

Among others present were Misses Gladys Lein, Elizabeth Morgan, Mary Hines, Helen Woolfolk, of New York; Lyda Nash, Marian Achison, Gladys Hanson, Elise Brown, Carolyn Muse, Virginia Lipscomb, Ellen O'Keefe, Messrs. Strother Flemming, Miles, Ernest Ottley, Alison Thornwell and Small.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Mrs. W. A. Speer gave an informal tea at the Piedmont Club Friday afternoon for Mrs. Framptom Ellis, a bride.

The guests were seated on the western porch about a table which was lavishly decorated with white hydrangeas and pink zinnias, a large silver basket of these flowers being in the center with smaller baskets at each end. As a favor for each guest there were little pink baskets of bonbons, and the mints and other details were in pink and white.

Mrs. Speer wore an elegant lingerie gown of white crepe with a lace hat trimmed in blue feathers.

Sixteen guests were present.

Mrs. Wilkins Hostess.

Friday afternoon Mrs. Grant Wilkins entertained at bridge at the Piedmont Club for her niece, Mrs. William Chambers, of California, who is here for several weeks.

The card tables were placed on the wide veranda and appropriate prizes were given for top score and consolation.

Twelve young married women were invited to meet Mrs. Chambers.

Informal Evening Parties.

The younger set will be entertained at several informal parties Friday evening.

Miss May Horine will give a dancing party at her home at Ormewood Court for her guests, Miss Ethel Pettee, of New York, and Miss Mary Lynne Worsham, of Forsyth. About 60 of the college set will be present.

Goodwin Walker also entertains a number of the younger set at a watermelon cutting Friday evening at the country place of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel G. Walker, near Brookhaven.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrews' Dance.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter P. Andrews will entertain at the dinner dance Saturday evening at the Piedmont Club in honor of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Burwell. Their guests will include the members of the Pace's Ferry road colony.

East Lake Dance.

There will be the usual week-end dance on Saturday evening at the East Lake Country Club. Dinner will be served on the porch and dancing will follow.

Mrs. Jenkins Hostess.

Mrs. William M. Jenkins entertained informally Thursday evening for her guests, Miss Frances Hudley, of Hamilton, and Misses Mary Georgia and Anna Fitzzell, of Waverly Hall. The house was decorated with garden flowers and games were played during the evening.

The guests were Misses Blanch Baker, Elizabeth Cofield, Sara and Marie Colcord, Virginia Collier, Anna, Ruth and Mary Nichols, Lois Brenner, Messrs. Joseph Harper, Archie Gann, Edwin Schane, Newton McEachron, Hinton Longino, Irwin Wilson, William Simpson, Keith Hodges, Thomas Bradley, Stewart Harris, Walker and Harold Bloodworth.

Meeting of the Brenau Club.

The Brenau Club met Friday afternoon with Mrs. Rogers Winters at her home on Spring street. Plans for the winter were discussed.

For Miss Hazen.

Miss Mignon McCarty entertained at a spend-the-day party Friday for her guest, Miss Mildred Hazen, of Orange, N. J. Her guests included four friends who have had small parties for Miss Hazen. The morning was spent playing bridge.

Campbell-Bishop.

The marriage of Miss Aida Muriel Campbell to Mr. Guerry Bishop took place Wednesday at the Sacred Heart Church, Father Rapier officiating.

Miss Amorous Hostess.

Miss Isabel Amorous will entertain at tea at the Piedmont Club Monday afternoon.

PERSONAL

Miss Margaret McCarty and Miss Broyles will return home Monday after spending a month with Mrs. Henry Inman at Bar Harbor, Maine.

Mrs. Fannie Berry Wright, Miss Margaret Wright, Dudley Wright and Mrs. E. A. Jones left Friday morning for a six-week trip in the West. They will visit Yellowstone Park and go as far West as California before returning home.

Mrs. Robert Tompkins, of Helena, Ga., who has been the guest of her aunt, Mrs. E. F. Griffin, left Wednesday for a visit to her old home in Covington.

Miss Anna Griffin and Miss Della Quinn have returned from a two-week sojourn at Tybee Beach.

Miss Maidee Griffen returned this week from a stay of several months in Henderson, N. C., and is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. E. F. Griffin, on East avenue.

Dr. LeRoy Childs left Thursday evening for Michigan, where Mrs. Childs is spending the summer.

Mrs. W. S. Russell and her daughter, Lottie Thelma, of Jacksonville, Fla., are visiting Mrs. Russell's parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. L. Hearn, on Elm street.

Miss Amy Hearn has returned from a visit to Stone Mountain.

Mr. and Mrs. S. W. Sullivan and family, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Gordon Richards have returned from Flat Rock, N. C., where they spent two weeks. They made the trip in Mr. Sullivan's touring car and returned by way of Henderson, Asheville and Lake Toxaway.

Miss Augusta Pearce and Mrs. Robert Gregg have gone to New York, being called there by the death of a relative.

Mrs. Willis Jones, one of the city's most popular young matrons, is ill of appendicitis.

Mrs. Chris H. Essig and children, Miss Irene and Chris, Jr., have gone on a few months' visit to Mrs. Essig's mother in San Francisco.

Mrs. John Hill will spend September in the White Mountains.

Mrs. Burton Smith and Miss Hildreth Burton-Smith will spend the winter in New York.

Mrs. Lewis Carhart left Atlanta Wednesday for Toxaway.

Mrs. Harry Williams, of Columbus, is the guest of Mrs. George Lowndes, en route home from a stay in Asheville.

Mr. and Mrs. Ulric Atkinson return Friday from Atlantic City.

Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Clark have moved to Meridian, Miss.

Judge Dunbar Weds Washington Woman

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Judge William C. Dunbar, of Augusta, Ga., was married last night to Mrs. Virginia Turner Bennett, of Washington, in the presence of the Georgia delegation in Congress and many personal friends.

Judge Dunbar formerly was Mayor of Augusta and now is postmaster of the House of Representatives.

Judge and Mrs. Dunbar left Washington last night for Atlantic City. They will visit also in Augusta before returning to Washington.

Tract Giver Held in Macon War on Vice

MACON, Aug. 8.—The first arrest in the crusade to break up the assignation house evil was that of Mrs. Fannie Allen, who lives at the corner of Fourth and Pine streets.

Mrs. Allen is known throughout the city as a disseminator of religious tracts. The arrest of Mrs. Allen was made at the instance of Chief of Police Chapman, who claims to have positive knowledge of her guilt.

Former Lily Oelrichs Nurses Sick Husband

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 8.—Peter D. Martin, of California, Newport and Paris, is convalescing at the Morrell cottage here from the effects of the nervous breakdown he suffered a fortnight ago.

Mrs. Martin, who was Miss Lily Oelrichs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Oelrichs, is foregoing all society gayeties to remain at her husband's bedside.

ORGANIZATION OF DEALERS MADE PERMANENT

Dixie's Merchants Take Important Step in Convention—Georgia Man President.

Convinced of the value of their annual gatherings, the merchants in convention at the Auditorium Friday morning organized a permanent body, the Southern States Merchants' Association, which will perpeuate these meetings and "co-operate in all ways calculated to advance the interests of its members."

J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga., is to be president of the association, at least until the next convention in February, 1914. Other officers are: Vice presidents, R. O. Crouch, of Griffin, Ga., and T. E. Smith, of Greer, S. C.; secretary-treasurer, H. T. Moore.

Resolutions binding delegates to refuse credit to farmers who will not diversify their crops was not adopted. In modified form, simply indorsing diversification, the resolutions were passed.

Stock Raising Indorsed.

The convention further indorsed the raising of live stock and the improvement of the lower Missippi River. The bills fathered by the Georgia Retailers also were approved.

There will be one more session of the convention Saturday. Entertainment features, however, continue another week.

"The farmer's not has proven so good in 100 country banks and 1,000,000 transactions that we are almost ready to say that we have lost more money on the obligations of the United States in the recent decline of its bonds than we have lost in dealing with the farmer," said W. S. Witham, resenting the "prevalent condescending and patronizing" attitude toward the farmer.

Mr. Witham explained and praised the farm loan banks of Europe.

Jones on Store Discipline.

Boling H. Jones, chairman, took the subject of store discipline and management. His suggestions were eminently practical. For eight years he ran a chain of six retail stores, and from this experience cited seevral lessons in storekeeping.

Failure of clerks to charge goods sold, through lack of system, he believes is responsible for a 3 per cent leakage in many stores. A test convinced him of this, he said.

Mr. Jones preached strongly against price cutting. The remedy is close buying, and manufacturers would prefer small and frequent orders, he said.

"Give your clehks responsibility. Let them do their own buying, and they'll work harder to do the selling. Back up your clerks. Never quote a lower price than you allow them to make," he concluded.

Complete Bookkeeping Urged.

"You need ne expert to supervise your accounts," said C. E. Pollard, of the American Audit Company. "What you need are records so complete and so simple that they speak for themselves. I plead for complete books, to show costs of every kind in detail. Very seldom, indeed, can too many details be shown. Uusually, too few details are shown."

L. C. Upshaw, of Douglasville, Ga., talked on credits and collections. At the start he made many amusing characterizations of various "poor pay" types—"movers," "scientific" cranks of no real judgment, and "pony sawmill" men.

Of the sawmill men, he said: "Here is a safe rule. If a pony sawmill man owns one outfit, sell him cash. If he aowns two outfits—don't sell him at all."

Fire Insurance Needed.

H. E. Choate reminded the delegates that the United States pays $690,000 daily to the "demon fire"—about $2.50 per capita per year.

"No merchant can be without fire insurance," he said. "We hear dealers say rates are too high. Rates are high because hazard iss great, which is the best reason for insurance. We call many men unfortunate when they really are improvident."

He concluded with a plea for fire prevention.

C. W. McClure urged the value of organization, and advised delegates to form associations in every small town to watch credits and study merchandising.

He suggested farmers' conventions on the lines of the retailers' convention.

Pretty Anti-Kiss Crusader Coming!

TORONTO, ONT., Aug. 8.—Men delegates to the International Congress of Geologists here marvel at the record of Dr. Annie T. Quensel, a delegate from Sweden, of being an unkissed wife, for she is strikingly beautiful.

Dr. Quensel will lecture in the United States in the interests of an international anti-kissing crusade. She says:

"Neither my husband nor I have ever kissed any one. We believe kissing a menace to good health, and persons indulging should be punished by law."

Mrs. Susie Wright Dies While on Visit

FORSYTH, Aug. 8.—News has reached here of the death of Mrs. Susie Wright, of Macon, widow of Dr. W. P. Wright, of Barnesville, which occurred while she was visiting at the home of her brother, Mr. Ben Manry at Goggansville, in this county. Mrs. Wright was ill only a few hours.

Mrs. Wright is survived by two sons, W. P. Wright, who is an editorial writer on The New York Herald, and Dupont Wright, night editor of The Rome Tribune-Herald, and one daughter.

The funeral was held from the Manry residence yesterday.

2 Candidates For Macon Mayoralty

MACON, GA., Aug. 8.—Macon's municipal campaign will open next week with the announcement of the Aldermanic tickets by City Clerk Bridges Smith and Alderman A. L. Dasher, who are opposing candidates for the mayoralty. It developed to-day that Colonel W. A. Huff, who was mayor for ten years, would have been a candidate but for the entry of Mr. Dasher, whom he agreed not to oppose. Mr. Smith offered to stay out of the race if Colonel Huff desired to run, but the latter said he was debarred by reason of Mr. Dasher's candidacy.

The administration party is supporting Mr. Smith. He and Mr. Dasher both state that their tickets will be announced next week.

Rich Men Flock to Free Cigarette Cure

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—The National Anti-Cigarette League announces it has a cure for cigarette smokers. It consists in bathing the tongue three times with a nitrate of silver solution.

Dr. G. H. Kress, who is conducting the cure, is overwhelmed by applicants. Many of them are wealthy business and professional men.

RETURNS RICH TO AID BENEFACTORS

Klondike Miner Gives Cash and Auto to Couple Who Fed Him When Tramp.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Jack Borron and George Pratt came from Macon, Mo., to-day to buy an automobile for the Borron family. Pratt carried the money that was to be paid for it. Borron had a certificate of deposit for $1,500, a gift of Pratt.

Seven years ago George Pratt was on his way to the Klondike. He became stranded in Macon, Mo., stopped at the Borron home and begged food and lodging. He was given the best food in the poor household and in the night he became violently ill. Mr. and Mrs. Borron cared for him through an illness that lasted more than a month. They gave him railroad fare to Kansas City. When Pratt left he said:

"If I strike it in the gold fields, I'll not forget you. I'll be back this way."

Borron last evening answered a knock and at the door faced a stranger. He did not remember Pratt, who was dressed in clothes of the latest fashion. Pratt extended a hand filled with gold certificates.

"I'm George Pratt," he said. "Here's $1,500. Stick it in your jeans. I struck it rich in the Klondike. We'll get ready early in the morning to buy an automobile. I have waited until I could buy you one before I tried to enjoy a ride."

Estrada on Steamer Ashore in Mississippi

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—The steamer Escandida, carrying eighteen passengers, went ashore to-day on a mudbank near the mouth of the Mississippi. Tugboats were rushed to the relief of the boat and all the passengers were taken off.

Among them was General Juan Estrada, who forced President Zelaya out of office in Nicaragua.

Mercer Head To Be Chosen Next Week

MACON, Aug. 8.—Another meeting will be held next week by the special committee delegated to choose a president for Mercer University, and it is probable the place will be offered to either the Rev. W. W. Landrum, of Louisville, Ky., or the Rev. W. L. Pickard, of Savannah.

The Rev. T. W. O'Kelley, of Raleigh, N. C., has declined the presidency, yielding to the insistence of his congregation that he remain as pastor of their church.

Remove College Tax, Emory Alumni Urge

At a meeting of Emory College men at the University Club Thursday night E. V. Heath, '08, Representative from Burke County, was appointed to prepare a bill exempting the actual plants of such institutions from taxes. If such a measure can be made effective the saving to Emory will easily support an additional professorship.

The alumni present were unanimous in their support of inter-collegiate athletics. J. E. McRee, '88, presided.

PASTOR ON VACATION.

The Rev. H. M. DuBose, pastor of the First Methodist, is on his vacation at Buckhannon, W. Va. Rev. H. C. Christian will preach Sunday at 11 a. m. Rev. Henry Pace will fill the pulpit in the evening. An organ recital from 7:45 to 8 p. m. will be given by Miss Mamie Lee Bearden.

What Ails You?

An invitation is extended by Doctor Pierce to every sick and ailing man or woman to consult the Faculty of the Invalids' Hotel at Buffalo, N. Y., by letter. THE HEART OF GEORGIA

HEROD'S HOG AND HEROD'S SON

A Roman cynic said:

"Rather be Herod's hog than be Herod's son."

Herod's boys—

They were dead.

Herod's heartlessness—

His cruel indifference had killed them.

The children had displeased Herod—

But the hog—he was alive.

When Herod died his hog and gold went not with his soul.

To-day the heart of Georgia stirs—

Not with the lust and greed which brought shameful fame to Herod of old—

But with the pity—

The tenderness—

The love which nineteen hundred years ago began to flow from Christ crucified, our Lord.

You will not return to our great Mother, the State, and say:

"Behold, this we have done for our fields, our cows and hogs—

"For our girls and boys—

"We had neither the time to consider,

"Nor the funds to provide."

For to-day Georgia holds flesh and blood as of greater value than swine and kine—

To-day the tears and suffering of one little girl whose life and honor might have been saved had you made the provision—these are worth more to your State than all the money, about which we chatter and talk forgetting that lives are being lost.

And you are Georgia.

Your heart is hers—

Her heart is yours, as is her power.

And you will not neglect—

You will take the time.

You will never whine:

"WE HAVE NO MONEY FOR THESE."

When you are spending money on cows and hogs.

You will provide.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE first year of Mary Danforth's life in the business world dragged its dreary length away. In the beginning there had been some excitement attendant upon the new experience, and this had buoyed her up. To be sure there had been a great wrench in giving up the home of which she and her mother were so fond, but for her mother's sake the girl put her own griefs in the background. She remembered that once, several years ago, her father had said to his wife:

"She is singularly dependent and sensitive, Mary. If anything should happen to me you must look after her as tenderly as I have tried to do. I depend upon you for that."

The words recurred to the girl often through the wearisome months that followed upon her father's death, when she saw the elderly woman's sad face grow sadder as she tried to accustom herself to changed conditions. When Mary left home each morning it was with the appreciation that her mother must be both housekeeper and houseworker, and that she was not used to such toil. The girl would rise early in order that she herself might make her own bed and set her own room to rights, then help about the breakfast.

Yet in spite of these efforts on her part there were the dishes to be washed, the tiny flat to be swept and dusted, and the meals to be prepared by the widow. Mary would urge her to eat a substantial luncheon, yet she always feared that her own ideas of what "substantial" meant in this connection and her mother's interpretation of the word differed as soon as the daughter was out of sight. Therefore she would order from the butcher on her way downtown a chop or some other nourishing tidbit for her mother. Delicacies were a strain upon Mary Danforth's small purse, but her parent's strength must be kept up. Yet, do what the girl would, she was sure that when night came the patient widow was too tired or too depressed to sleep. She also knew—better than did her mother—that she herself, often went without food at the noon hour to save the price of a luncheon. A few crackers slipped into her bag before she left home would take the place of the noon-day meal.

In spite of these economies the family finances were very low. More than once Mrs. Danforth had been forced to use a little of what she called her "insurance money" to get herself some necessary bit of clothing. Each time this was done Mary was impressed afresh with the hopelessness of her efforts to support two women decently on her small salary.

Business was dull in all branches, and real estate was not booming. James Pearson, her employer, had a wife with enough money in her own right to support herself and her husband, so the success of his enterprise was not essential to his existence. He kept the business because he liked to feel that he was not dependent upon his wife. Mary often wished fervently that she was in the employ of some man to whom work was a necessity and who would be energetic and progressive. But she dared not abandon a certainty for an uncertainty.

It was at this juncture that Herbert Fischer ("Bert" as his friends called him), got into the habit of coming to Pearson's office to talk over a possible real estate deal. At first the girl barely noticed him, so absorbed was she in the many duties that fell to her lot, for she soon discovered that she was not only stenographer and typewriter, but assistant bookkeeper and office boy combined. Night found her jaded and nervous, looking forward eagerly to the letter from Gordon Craig that often awaited her when she returned to her flat.

Twice Fletcher, who had remained in the inner office talking to Pearson, came into the outer office just as Mary was putting on her coat and hat, and offered to escort her to the elevated where she was to take the train uptown. Both times the girl had declined coldly, yet the second time she did this her heart smote her as she saw his disappointed expression. Somehow, she thought, as she walked toward the Cortlandt street station, the look in the man's eyes reminded her of that in a faithful dog's eyes. She was so lonely that even the thought of a dog's devotion would comfort her, she said to herself with whimsical humor. Yet this man Fletcher was a common kind of a person, she decided—not a bit like the men of her world.

Then she smiled bitterly. At least not like the men of the world she used to live in. Perhaps, after all, a girl who worked in a little office on a mean salary, and who lived in a five-room apartment in the poorest section of West Eighty-fourth street, could hardly afford to sneer at anything just because he was not educated to the standard that had once been hers, and had not the refinement that was traditional in the circle of which she had once formed a part. That circle had melted away since her father's death. She could not keep pace with her friends, and one by one they had dropped out of her life. She did not care, she muttered untruthfully to herself. When one declares bitterly that she "does not care" that is usually when really "cares" most.

And that night there was no letter from Craig. He usually wrote her three times a week, but this was the fourth time in six weeks that his letter had not come on the day that she expected it.

"Never mind, dearest," she said to her mother, who commented on the non-arrival of the expected epistle and who remarked that "it was queer that Gordon had not written regularly lately," and "hoped that nothing was wrong" with her daughter's lover. "Gordon and I understand each other, and he is extremely busy just now. One can hardly expect a man to write as often as a woman does, you know."

Her mother kissed the speaker tenderly. "That's so, darling," she asserted, "and the busier Gordon is the more work he will do, and the sooner he will come for you, dearie—and for me."

"Yes!" the girl assented, bravely. "That is true, dear mother."

But in her heart she was saying: "How can I stand this kind of life unless he comes soon! How can I stand it!"

Lady Constance Stewart Richardson on How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

The first figure is a dainty and simple pose, but it works beautifully into any of the dances that are so popular to-day, for, as we all know, dancing is coming into its own, and one of the most beautiful and widely neglected arts is now making a place for itself.

In this, as in so many dancing movements, the figure must be poised lightly on the ball of the foot.

The second figure (2B) is an exercise that must bring to the body the lightness of flying, and when once it is mastered you will find that you have true grace at your command.

FIGURE TWO.

WHEN I was a child of 11 I used to go out in the gardens of my English home and study the statues and statuettes that decorated it. For hours at a time I used to copy the poses of those lovely classical statues, and I found the greatest entertainment and joy in trying to imitate those beautiful poses. This was the beginning of my dancing, and from the taste I acquired for classical pose and movement has come, I feel sure, whatever measure of bodily grace is mine.

Dancing is essentially feeling, and the expression of that feeling well up in movement and rhythm. It makes for grace and for strong, healthy bodies as no other form of exercise can, because no other form of exercise is as universally possible, as entirely within the reach of all, as this natural expression of the poetry we all have down in our natures.

To-day I am giving you two exercises that express the joy of living to a wonderful extent and give the body much to rejoice in, for they make for grace, for lightness and for the universally desired bodily beauty.

The First Figure.

The first figure is a dainty and simple pose, but it works beautifully into any of the dances that are so popular to-day, for, as we all know, dancing is coming into its own, and one of the most beautiful and widely neglected arts is now making a place for itself. This figure (1B) may be learned with the support of a wall, but it should be worked out in such perfection that it can be done with absolute poise. It will strengthen weak ankles and insteps while it is developing power for grace in arms and legs. Here is my method of practicing it: Point the toes of the right foot straight forward and balance the weight firmly on that foot. Now raise the left leg slowly from the floor, keeping the foot almost at right angles to the other foot. Lift the arms slowly, keeping the right arm held in one continuous line, while the left is curved at the elbow and raised at the wrist. The fingers are held lightly and well apart. The whole body inclines slightly toward the left when the left arm and leg are expressing the greater amount of action, and when the weight falls in the alternate pose I always recommend the body sways to the raised right foot.

This exercise, like all other dancing movements, must express lightness and joy, for dancing is dancing only when it comes as an expression of a happy spirit. It must express personality and yet conform to true ideals of grace and beauty, and thus in time it will bring the body to grace and beauty, too.

Figure Two.

The second figure (2B) is an exercise that must bring to the body the lightness of flying, and when once it is mastered you will find that you have true grace at your command. In this, as in so many dancing movements, the figure must be poised lightly on the ball of the foot. Just such simple movements as poising the body lightly on the toes or balls of the foot will help avoid civilization's arch enemy, flatfoot, and will help in the acquisition of a light, springy walk.

Poise the body lightly on the right foot, with a general inclination toward the right. Stretch the right arm up and out and droop the left arm from shoulder to just below the waist in one long curve. Even while the body is swaying in this position, lift the left leg from the hip and sway it backward from the knee, making one line from knee to toes and bringing the foot almost on a level with the knee. Now stand on the left foot and alternate from side to side.

This exercise is by no means easy to master, but there is no movement of which I know that can be more absolutely counted on to bring the figure into the long, graceful, undulating lines we all so much admire.

Mother and Father

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

FATHER'S idea of good luck is winning a lottery ticket. Mother's is to find a pair of stockings that do not need darning.

It is father who hopes at the beginning of impracticable schemes, and mother who cheers when things go wrong in the end. It is father who is depressed and exaggerates what is lost, and mother who is cheerful in counting what is left.

Mother is proud to be told that the homeliest child in the family resembles her. Father isn't.

Here of late the children put the dependence in father's money that some generations ago was put in mother's prayers.

It is father, never mother, who expects the children to assume the burden as they get older. Mother, if she had her way, would carry it till the day of her death.

Once upon a time father called mother and the children together and said in the very wisest way: "This house would be conducted better if business principles were applied. Your system," frowning at mother, "would throw a peanut stand into the court of bankruptcy. I have opened what I will call a trouble book. Every member of the family will make entries in it of troubles, worries, etc., and we will meet at the end of the week to discuss the entries and act upon any suggestions for reform."

Then he frowned at mother again and went to his office. A week later the trouble book was opened.

"Mother won't let me go swimming." "Mother refuses to let me have any spending money; I suggest a needed reform here." "Mother wouldn't let me wear my best dress to play in," etc., etc., appeared in the handwriting of the children, and in father's handwriting there appeared: "Mother had the steak too well done"; "Mother is neglecting her personal appearance; I recall twenty years ago when she took more pride in doing her hair"; "Mother asked for money to-day to get Willie new shoes; I must look into her extravagance," etc., etc., from father and the children, but not one complaint from mother!

Passing between Scylla and Charybdis is no feat compared with the daily position of the mother whose children are always demanding more money of her, and whose husband is always telling her she must get along with less.

Before the oldest girl in the family is sixteen her father finds his throne tottering, and by the time she is eighteen he hasn't enough authority left to order a favorite old picture left on the parlor wall.

When father scolds and goes out slamming the door, the daughter wishes she could have a man like that for a husband about a minute, and she'd cure him, and her mother tells her she will have a chance some day.

It is not very creditable to those children who live and grow up, but in the years to come the mother finds her greatest comfort in the thought that the child that would have always been appreciative and kind, and never have hurt her, is the one that died when it was a baby.

WARMED OVER LOVE

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PUZZLED writes as follows:

"I am a young girl 20 years of age and am deeply in love with a man eight years my senior, who reciprocates my love twice-fold. He has a very good position in business and is all that can be expected from a well-bred, respectable man. My only objection to him is that he is a widower and has two small children. My parents also object for this reason, and it is their only reason. If they thought the union would make me happy I am quite sure they would not stand in my way. I have met other young men, but can not seem to care for any of them."

The experience of wooing and winning a wife, of tasting the joy of being the head of one's own home, the creature comforts that domesticity means for a man, the broadening of heart and sympathies when the wife goes bravely alone to the shadow of death and returns with a child in her arms, the anguish of spirit when the mother falls sick and the desolation of the home when she is taken out of it forever, all tend to make a man more tender and considerate.

Though his home may have had its discomforts, he learns to regard it as his home; not his father's, or his mother's, but his own home. He also learned what an unimportant factor he was in its making, and realized the value of the WOMAN as he never realized it in his bachelor days.

That the experience is educational in a way that means more love, more consideration and an easing of the burden for the second wife, I am so certain that I wonder that the greater eligibility of the widower over the bachelor has not become an accepted fact.

Not Recognized.

Older women recognize it. Younger women do not because of the pretty sentiment they attach to being a man's first love.

The only objection to this man, then, is that he has two small children. Poor little motherless babes! I hope this little girl who has won this man's love has a heart broad enough to take in his children; a courage that will sustain her when, as a stepmother, she is maligned and misunderstood; and a charity that is big enough to cover their faults as effectually as if they were her own children.

Someone must mother the motherless, and the task is hard at its best, but one that is made light in the all-sustaining power of Love. If this man and his girl have for each other a love that will stand the strain, their union will be happy though he had ten children.

Learns Something.

His previous experience has made him dependent, tender and broader and considerate. He has two children and he knows that the woman he takes to the altar promises more than to be a loyal wife. She promises to be a loving mother to his children, to accept their resentment and ingratitude without complaint, and to know that hereafter to the end of her days criticism will be her lot.

He knows all this, and is grateful. On his first wedding day he regarded himself as a prize; the second time he goes to the altar with two children at his heels he knows, if he is a man and knows anything, that the prize is the brave-hearted girl who accompanies him.

He was confident on his first wedding day that he was dividing his joys. He knows on his second wedding day that he is dividing his burdens and sorrows, and the knowledge makes him humble.

You love him, my dear; you have met no other man you could love. He loves you, and I am sure your love is big enough to take in his children.

Nothing counts for as much as love. If you love, you know no burden. When you love, there is no sorrow too hard to bear. Marry him, go on loving him, and so long as you love him, you will be happy.

Not Alone.

An old Indian man, selling baskets, called at Mrs. Allen's one morning. He was very anxious to make a sale, and, after considerable parleying, he said:

"Make me an offer, madam, and see if I don't take you up."

Little 5-year-old Bertha was a spectator to the interview, and when the man made this remark she threw her arms around her mother, crying:

"Mother, if he takes you, I'll go, too."

Perspiring Feet Ache

The feet perspire abnormally in warm weather, get tired, ache, burn and jump with shooting pains. Poisonous exudations, moisture-soaked stockings, clogged pores, poor circulation, and the millions of foot nerves respond with burning, jumping and other torturing miseries. Dissolve Jacobs' Foot Relief Tablets in a warm foot bath, and instantly all poisonous matter is drawn out and the feet feel eased and rested. It prevents unhealthy sweats and odors, and keeps the feet feeling good. Unquestionably a wonderful preparation for the feet. 18c, by mail 20c.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

JULY 6.—"Tell me your name, Little Girl," said the woman who had rolled out such expressions as "the fundamental principles of liberty" as naturally as an entirely different type of woman rolls out the words "darlingest" and "cute," showing to which class she belonged.

Manette looked at me. I nodded my head. Then, to my surprise, the child told her real name—my name, and the name I was trying to keep secret.

"Blake," I hastily added. "Blake," she repeated after me.

The visitor looked grimly satisfied. Her suspicions were confirmed!

"You are Manette H——, the little heiress. You are not Manette Blake at all, and if you will come with me I will take you to your guardian. If you," turning to me, "interfere, I will have you arrested."

I laughed. "I hope," I said, putting fresh bait on my hook, and casting it out into the water, "that I will live long enough to see your sex in power. You are so inconsequential, so altogether unreasoning, and so cocksure that you are right that one will no longer be forced to turn to the joke books for amusement. The Congressional Records, in that glorious period, will cause a laugh to ring around the world."

"When the women are in power," she retorted, "idlers like you who go around insulting women will be flogged."

This was growing interesting. "I am not idle," I replied. "I am fishing. I have been fishing for three hours and haven't had a bite. That indicates persistence, steadfastness of purpose and ambition that will not be discouraged. As for being insulting——"

A Bluff Called.

I turned and looked her square in the face. "I don't see," I said, slowly, and as if giving it deep thought, "why you used that word. To insult you I should have to regard you or your intentions seriously. Believe me, madame, I had not done that."

I drew my line carefully in and packed up my box of fishing tackle. "Come, Manette." I said to the child, "let us go and be arrested. Are you ready?" turning to the very red-faced woman who stood beside me.

"If you will walk with us as far as the cottage I will get a horse, or do you prefer to have the child ride with with you and have me tied to your horse's tail and dragged as captives were in the olden times?"

I had called her bluff! "I want nothing," in anger, "but to see that child restored to its guardian."

"Then rest easy," I replied, taking off my hat and bowing. "She is with her guardian now."

"If you are Mr. Max——" she began, and could say no more, for she realized what a spectacle she had made of herself.

I bowed again and turned away. A moment later she came running after me. "I hope," she stammered, "that you will forgive me, but your looks——"

I cut her short with a bow, and picking Manette up in my arms, turned on to a narrow wooded path, and was soon out of sight.

"She is the kind of woman," I mused, "that thinks that to be a man is prima facie evidence of guilt. And the trouble is, her number is increasing."

A New Spot.

July 16.—Manette and I have found a new picnic spot, and for several days we had eluded the interloper, but on the fourth day I found her sitting on the porch when we got home. She had come, she said, to borrow Manette to take part in a tableaux to be given for the cause. "She would make," she said, "such a pretty little Goddess of Liberty. Besides," she argued, "the change would do her good. She needs a little civilization."

That made me smile. "Civilization" of the brand found at summer resorts consists in sitting around on hotel verandas, comparing surgical operations and crochet patterns and branding as "bold" and "scheming" the woman who receives the attention of the only man at the place. I could imagine Manette being passed around by the crochet cut-ups who would speculate on the price of her clothes, her uncle's wealth, and seek to secure through her childish frankness the key to my family secrets.

I refused. "The child," I explained, "is dearer to me than the Cause. She is in bed by 8 every night and has never been permited to stay up late and grow feverish and excited taking part like a manikin in some foolish show. I know that mothers let their children do it, but I am not a mother. I am only a man."

"And the rudest man that ever lived," she retorted, striding out to get on her horse.

I did not offer to assist her. I never have. It would be inconsistent for her to accept.

July 28.—I am writing this while lying in bed, and somewhere in the room, I don't know where, for I can't easily turn my head to see, there is a trained nurse.

I do not know how she got here nor when. All I know is that her attentions are very grateful to me, and that there have been days when I seemed to be slipping away from everyone into nowhere, and only the firm, cool touch of her hand held me.

I think I was conscious of her hand and its helpfulness and soothing magic for days before I opened my eyes wide enough to look her in the face. Even now I do not know what she looks like, and am not interested. I lie for hours with my eyes closed, asking nothing more in life than that a pair of very strong hands, white and soft and gentle, be there to turn my head when the pain of one position is too great, to smooth my pillow, and I hear a voice somewhere murmur, "Poor boy, poor boy!"

July 29.—Richards is here. I do not know when she came. I only know that every few hours she comes from some remote place—the next room is remote in my present condition—and helps The Hands move me to an easier position, and that with her coming all concern for Manette has left me.

Fall Guy.

A gentleman in a club had formed the hopeless and harmful habit of taking too much to drink—alcoholically speaking—before he went home every evening.

"How does he know what time to go home?" asked a stranger in the club one night.

"It's this way," explained a member. "He goes to the head of that long flight of stairs leading to the street. If he falls down them, he knows it's time to go home."

A Ready Proof.

Father—Just fancy, Willie, all these fields used to be under the sea, and fish were swimming about where we are standing.

Willie—Yes, dad; here's an empty salmon tin.

What chance has sane, sensible reason against the fortified power of a wild habit?

Loss is unpleasant—but it never rises to the dignity of calamity unless it is the loss of self-respect.

There is more real joy in carrying out intentions than in merely planning to do it.

When the Sun Rose

IT was absolutely still in the large, dark room where the patient lay.

A small lamp with a dark shade faintly illuminated the heavy silk curtains which covered the windows. In a corner of the room stood the little bed in which a small feverish body was struggling with death. A beautiful young woman was sitting at the bedside, her eyes anxiously followed every movement of the sick child.

Her costly evening gown showed that she had returned direct from some society affair. Her gloves and fan she had thrown carelessly on the table.

A few hours ago she had been sitting at the dinner table covered with flowers and surrounded by merry people, when a messager had arrived with the word that her little boy had suddenly been taken ill.

She hurried home as fast as her big car could carry her and now she was sitting here full of anxiety and despair.

Over and over again, she asked herself if it could really be possible that she was about to lose her fair-haired little darling. Oh no, God could not be so cruel! The boy was her greatest, her only joy! She realized that more than ever now, when she was in danger of losing him.

She wondered if she had always thought so, and her whole past life came back to her mind.

She saw herself as a happy, lively and spoiled girl, whose every wish was gratified. She saw herself surrounded by admirers and suitors, who flattered and envied her, but she never felt, not even for a short single moment, the real, true joy which fills and takes possession of your heart and soul.

No Love.

Then the learned and famous Professor Bornemann was introduced in her parents' home. He fell in love with the young, lively girl and she accepted him, though he was twenty years older than she.

Did she love him then?

No, unfortunately, not.

Rich as she was, she decorated her home with every possible luxury and comfort and filled it with guests, balls and dinners in endless succession.

For a time her husband let her do as she pleased, but one day he took both her hands and looked earnestly into her eyes, while he said in his gentle voice:

"Let us be done with all these empty pleasures, and let me see that I have a splendid little wife, who cares more for her husband and her baby than for all the dances and dinners in the world."

At first she stared at him in surprise, unable to understand him. Then she tore her hands away and answered angrily:

"I do not see how you can make such a request. You are old and have enjoyed all the pleasures of life, while I am young yet and have a right to enjoy myself."

He looked at her sadly, then he turned away and left the room without another word. And since then her life had been one mad round of pleasures, while her husband and child were left to take care of themselves.

And had she then found the happiness she sought?

No, not for a single minute.

* * *

The child in the bed moved again.

"Mama," the little feverish lips whispered.

She bent forward and stroked his hot forehead with her cool hand.

"Mama," he moaned once more.

Anxious Moments.

She felt a cruel pain in her heart. Had she done anything to deserve to be called Mama? She bent lower still and two big tears fell on the golden curls on the white pillow.

The door opened. Her husband entered, followed by the doctor. Her eyes sought his, which looked deep, deep into her soul.

The doctor felt the boy's pulse and shook his head gravely.

"I can not say anything now. I shall return in an hour, when the crisis is due. Until then we have hope." With a silent bow, he left the room.

The professor had sat down on a chair on the opposite side of the bed. His gray eyes looked at the little figure in the bed with infinite tenderness. The young wife fell down on her knees at her son's bedside.

The boy tossed about restlessly, while the minutes dragged along slowly.

In a quarter of an hour, then—

It was the same thought that filled the minds of husband and wife as they looked at each other across their little son's bed. Then both looked at the hands of the clock.

The child was still restless and feverish. Over and over again the mother stroked her boy's forehead with her cool hand. Then she let it slide down on the silk cover and inch by inch it crept closer to a strong, manly hand, until she took courage and touched it.

Their eyes met and a new sacred silent understanding was born.

* * *

The clock struck 6. The boy was resting easily, his breathing regular and his cheeks lost their feverish color. The crisis was over. The child's life was out of danger.

The professor stood up, went over to the window, drew the curtains aside and opened it. Then he went back to the bed and kneeled down at his wife's side.

The fresh air filled the room—and then the sun rose.

A HANDSOME WOMAN OF 40 WITH FINE HAIR

INSTEAD are you nearing a gray-haired old age at Forty? The world's most famous beauties reached the zenith in their 40s. But when a woman's hair loses its beauty and becomes gray and straggling, be she 40 or less, the world looks upon her as an old woman.

Robinnaire Hair Dye is not intended to bleach or change the original color of the hair. It is to restore faded or gray hair to its original color, and make it soft, lustrous and beautiful again. It is a pure preparation from our own laboratory, guaranteed harmless, and no woman or man need hesitate to use it. Thousands now are using it with best results, and during the quarter century we have sold it, never have we heard of an unsuccessful treatment. Does not stain the scalp, and is not detected.

Don't make the sad mistake of pulling out the white hairs, for very shortly they will come faster than you can pull them out. Instead use Robinnaire Hair Dye, and we promise that you will be pleased with this marvelously successful restorative. Prepared for light, medium and dark brown and black hair. When the Whistle Blows

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

Nell Brinkley Says

YOU lift your eyes to the great clock in the white tower and see six o'clock marked with widespread hands. You hear the chimes and whistles clamoring over all the choked streets. Six o'clock! And the girls who smile all day long as steadily as any chorus girl is bidden to do, who haul down enough yards of stuff in a day to tie a sash around this vain old world, who try debutante dancing-frocks on fat relics who've seen forty summer moons or more, who get down endless "middies" for lean little girls, whose too flat pay envelope is sometimes the fortune of the family, all those who need and earn a thicker pay envelope and electric fans, all these bits of womanhood who go to make up the brave army that work in shops pour out of the employes' door and out under the clamor of "six by the clock." The blonde hat model, in her sleazy, slippery, little black gown, the close-tailored girl who sells suits, with her crinkly hair and big black purse like a baby kit-bag, all there—and HAPPY! Have you noticed that? And PRETTY! Have you noticed that? They have many good excuses not to be the first—but they laugh and laugh—and you hear little things like this: "He said to her—and she said to him." "Isn't that great?" and "What are you going to wear?" and "I had the time of my life!" And pretty—they'd have a heap of excuses not to be that, too—what with trying to stretch a bill longer and greener than it is, and standing on their two feet all day long, and smiling long and sweet at grouches. But they are. Among them you find the trimmest girls in town. And some of their faces make a society belle's wish it could go back to Heaven and get made all over again.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

LEAVE THAT TO HER.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am twenty-one and in love with a girl of nineteen, and she loves me. Another man, who is much older, is trying to win her love, but she doesn't care for him. At present I am not settled, and it may take about three years before I can marry, while the other man can support her quite nicely. Have I the right to ask her to wait? S. J.

She loves you. She doesn't love the other man. If she is worthy of a good man's love she will wait indefinitely for him in preference to marrying a man she does not care for. Give her the right to decide, and see that you don't make her time of waiting too long.

SHE IS IN THE WRONG.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have been keeping company with a young lady for the last seven months. About a week ago I escorted her to a dance where she met some of her old gentlemen friends, who received her attention all the evening. When the time came to go home I asked her to go home with me, but she refused, saying she could go home with others. I then left her. Did I do proper in leaving her? Who should apologize? RICHARD.

She refused to let you escort her home though you had taken her there. Under the circumstances there was nothing for you to do but leave her. You owe her no apology.

KEEPING EVERLASTINGLY AT IT

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am nineteen, and dearly in love with a girl two years my junior, whom I have known for the past seven years. Some time ago she met a young man at a wedding, and has since been devoting all of her attention to him. I love her dearly and would ask you how I can win her love again. F. B. T.

Your seven years' devotion merits better returns. Be devoted and persistent, and if this fails change your tactics to indifference. The appearance of your rival stirred you. Has it occurred to you that if she found she had a rival it might renew her interests?

YOU WERE RIGHT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am sixteen and have been keeping company with, a young man about three months. He has bee sick and he telephoned and asked me to come and see him. I told him it was improper for a girl to go to a man's house, and he got angry. Was I right? R. M.

Don't worry, my dear, you did just right. I don't admire him because of his request of his reception of your refusal. Never go to see a man under any circumstances unless your mother goes with you.

Up-to-Date Jokes

A little boy of four years of age, on noticing for the first time a lock of gray hair on his father's head, asked:

"Papa, why are some of your hairs gray?"

Thinking to drive home a moral lesson, the father answered:

"Papa has a new gray hair every time his little boy is naughty."

The child seemed lost in thought, but, after a pause, said gravely:

"Then grandpa must have had awful naughty boys."

"No, I didn't. I thought he knew," was the reply.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

But this young man was not one to be easily daunted. "Do you wish me to make up an article out of surmises?" he inquired. "A young girl of this city has died in a carriage and the people have a right to know how. Shall I say by use of the knife or——"

"Scoundrel!" came from Dr. Molesworth's lips. "You deserve chastising, but I shall simply see that you do, what you have probably never done before, tell the exact truth." And, turning to the detective at his side, he exclaimed, "Note what I tell the fellow. If he alters a word or interposes one item that is not borne out by what he observes and hears here, I will see that he is discharged from his place. I know what paper he is on, and I know the editor, and my threat is no idle one. Now let him listen. This young lady, Mildred Farley by name, was engaged to marry me to-night. Being an orphan without friends—pardon me, Mrs. Olney, I should have said relatives, perhaps—and not being well, she thought a private marriage at a hotel would be most suitable. I agreed with her and the arrangements were all made for the ceremony. But she was sicker than I supposed. The symptoms of fever which I had perceived in her this afternoon increased rapidly on my departure and when I returned, before the specified hour to marry her, I found she had fled, leaving an incoherent note behind, which so alarmed me that I went out at once, and jumping into my phaeton, drove up and down the streets searching for her.

The End of It.

"I did not find her, of course; and remembering an important prescription I had promised to send a patient of mine, I dispatched my driver with it, and was taking my phaeton home myself, when I suddenly detected a woman seated on one of the steps in Twenty-second street whose appearance struck me as familiar. Though no believer in miracles, I accepted this one without scruple, and, jumping from my carriage, went up to her and soon saw that I was right in supposing I had found Miss Farley. She was very ill, and did not know me. 'I am sleepy,' she said, and dropped her head on my shoulder as I lifted her up. At the same moment I heard the sound of breaking glass, as if a small vial had slipped to the sidewalk and been shivered, while a pungent odor arose to my nostrils so suggestive of the poison known as prussic acid that I felt greatly alarmed, and hastily carrying her to my phaeton I put her in and drove as fast as I could toward home. But soon her increasing pallor and general condition convinced me that death was near, and I stopped at the drug store on the corner of Nineteenth street, and, leaving her in the phaeton, ran in and asked one of the clerks to assist me in bringing her into the store. He consented, and we went back to the phaeton, but only to find that I was too late. She had died in my absence."

"Horrible!" burst from the landlady's lips, and even the callous porter looked shocked and a trifle ashamed.

"Where she got the poison," continued the doctor, "remains to be found out. Perhaps she bought it after leaving the hotel; perhaps she had had it with her there as a medicine. If so, she may have taken an overdose without being conscious of her danger. I only know I was her physician and had never prescribed it for her, nor did I know she suffered from any ailment that required such a tonic."

"And is that all? Will you tell me nothing more?"

"You have a very good article," remarked the doctor, dryly. "Leave something for the future."

And the reporter had to be content, and the detectives, too.

The reporter gone, Dr. Molesworth turned again toward Mr. Gryce.

"And who are you?" he asked.

"I was going to say I didn't know," answered the seemingly trembling old man. "I am in pain and want to get home. Will one of you help me down the steps?"

"In pain!" repeated the doctor, who was not by any means a hard-hearted man.

"Yes, rheumatism in the stomach, I think. I came for some opium, but I won't wait any longer. They will worry about me at home. Besides, I feel a bit better now."

His manner was so natural, his look so in accordance with the character he had assumed, that Dr. Molesworth suspected nothing and kindly held out his arm. But he found the alleged detective had forestalled him.

"Let me do this business," he entreated, with a great show of good-nature and respect. "I have nothing else to do and am used to old men." And, nodding graciously to his superior, he led him carefully out, whispering as soon as the lintel of the door had hidden them from view, "What orders? Dou kou smell anything wrong here?"

"Watch," was the quiet but emphatic command. "Note everything, even to the lifting of an eyelid, but say nothing and do not seem to watch."

Then as they reached the front door, "Don't be hurt if I send some one else here. They know your character too well." And with this the elder man went out with a slow and hobbling step. The pain and distress of that evening had not been altogether assumed.

Some Points.

MR. GRYCE had only a look to go upon, but it was a look that spoke volumes. When a man shrinks from the eye of a detective, he has something to conceal, and when that something is connected with the death of a young girl by poison, it behooves an officer of the law to follow that man till he finds out what that something is.

It was therefore with some interest that he received in the early morning a summons from the gentleman who held the office of Coroner at this time, to come down to his office and have a talk with him concerning this case of Mildred Farley; nor was it long before he presented himself at the place designated. He found the Coroner alone and the following conversation ensued:

"Well, Gryce," said the latter, "I have just come from the house where you played the part of a sick patient so successfully last night. May I ask how you chanced to be so prompt on the scene of action? Do you scent out mysterious cases or had you any knowledge which led you to that especial spot just at the moment when your presence was possibly most required?"

"Both," was the good-natured reply. "Something which I call curiosity, but which I am fain now to consider instinct, made me an intruder in Dr. Molesworth's home last night. But I had a bit of knowledge to start with that roused his curiosity, and it is of his I want to speak, if you think the subject worthy of discussion or Dr. Molesworth anything but what he seems, a good, honest and reliable man."

"I think," returned the Coroner, slowly, "any subject of this kind worthy of discussion; and as for Dr. Molesworth, he stands high, but so do a great many others whose testimony we are called upon to question every day of our lives. You need not stop on his account if you have seen or discovered anything which contradicts his story."

"What is his story?"

"Didn't you hear it? I understood that he told all he had to tell in your presence."

"He told two stories."

"How two?"

"One with his lips, another with his face; that's what makes me doubt him."

"You do doubt him, then?"

Gryce's Story.

Mr. Gryce tapped the table before him with an abstracted air, murmured some unintelligible words and looked as if he thought he had replied.

"Come," cried the other, "your reasons? You usually have good ones."

"Yes," assented Mr. Gryce, "I usually have, but in this case it would be hard for me to tell you just what they are. I feel that there is something back of this affair which we do not see, but I am not ready as yet to go any further or even express any suspicions—say that I have any. The facts which I have been able to glean in the short space of time we have had are meager, but interesting. Perhaps you can add to them; if so, our conference may lead to something. This is what I know." And he related first what Dr. Molesworth had to say about the matter the evening before. When he had finished, he asked, "Does this story agree with what he told you this morning?"

"Exactly."

"Very good. So much for so much. Now for the side lights. I saw the girl myself yesterday afternoon."

"You?"

"Yes; I saw her, but I did not speak to her, nor did I recognize her for the person she was. Indeed, I took her for another woman whom she greatly resembled. It was at the C—— Hotel."

"Ah!"

"I need not enter into any further particulars about this circumstance, as it does not concern the affair before us, which stands quite apart by itself. Enough that for reasons of my own I played the spy on this young woman and saw her when she thought herself alone, in the privacy of her own apartment. This was some time after noon and the great fact which I wish to bring before you is this, that she was then to all appearance (and my eye is accustomed to read countenances) perfectly happy and had not in face or bearing the least trace of sickness."

"That is a point, certainly."

"Note it, and then add to it this, that being still under the error of which I have spoken, I went back to the hotel some three or four hours later, and wishing to confirm a former suspicion, sought my vantage spot again, and in conjunction with another witness whose testimony you will not need, looked in upon this Miss Farley again, when I perceived that a great change had passed over her. But it was not that of sickness. From happiness she had descended to misery, and in her pallor and wild, unrestrained attitudes I could detect the expression of despair, but none of bodily suffering or mental disorder.

"Now, what had occasioned this change in her in a space of time so short? I think I can answer that it was an interview with Dr. Molesworth. For, according to his own story and that of the hotel clerk, he was with her for a half hour or so in the afternoon; and though upon going out he told the hotel clerk he was coming back in the evening to marry her, something in his determination or in what had taken place at their interview had destroyed in her every vestige of hope and happiness. For it was anything but an expectant bride whom I saw after this visit, as it had been anything but an anxious woman whom I had seen before it.

"So! so!"

HARRY GLENN IS OUT TO CINCH 25-MILE TITLE

THE Atlanta Motordrome will be the scene of some interesting races to-night. The feature event will be a 25-mile race between the ten riders here at the present time, and the speed demons should furnish enough excitement in this race to last the fans for some time.

All the riders claim they have their machines working faster than ever, and it would not surprise many to see some dark horse win the long grind. Harry Glenn's great race last Tuesday has made him the talk of the town with motorcycle fans. Most of them want to see Harry win to-night and prove that his great riding Tuesday was not a fluke.

* * *

THE 25-mile race is for the championship of the South. To have an Atlanta boy capture this title would be a great honor to the city. Harry Glenn realizes this and it is a sure bet that Harry will be trying every minute of the time.

Richards, Graves, McNeil and Renel are also anxious to take the big event. Richards' machine was not going good Tuesday, but he says it is in great shape now. Graves is not saying much but Morty is out for some glory. McNeil and Renel can also be counted on to be in the race from start to finish.

* * *

THE Motordrome Purse will open the card. There will be three heats of one mile and a final of two miles. A special match race between Glenn and Lockner, best two in three heats, is also attracting much attention. The five-mile invitation race, open to all comers, fills out the program.

Following is the complete card for to-night:

First Event.
Motordrome Purse (qualifying heats, one mile; final, two miles; winners of trial heats and second man in fastest heat to qualify). First Heat—Richards, Lockner, Graves.

Second Event.
Motordrome Purse—Second Heat—Glenn, Renel, Swartz.

Third Event.
Motordrome Purse—Third Heat—McNeil, Lewis, Luther, Shields.

Fourth Event.
Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.
(Two-mile heats; two best in three.)

Fifth Event.
Motordrome Purse—Final heat.

Sixth Event.
Special Match Race—Glenn vs. Lockner.

Seventh Event.
Invitation Race—Distance, 5 miles. Open to all comers.

Eighth Event.
Special Match Race—Third heat, if necessary.

Ninth Event.
Twenty-five-mile race for championship of the South—Graves, Swartz, Shields, Lockner, Richards, Luther, Renel, McNeil, Lewis, Glenn.

YANKEE OWNER PUTS IN CLAIM FOR CUBAN STARS

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—President Frank Farrell, of the New York American League club, will appeal to the National Commission to set aside the sale of three Cuban players of the Long Branch team, of the New York and New Jersey League, to the Boston Nationals. The players are Pitcher Laqua, Shortstop Arragon and Outfielder Padran, according to Farrell. Owner Henriques, of the Long Branch team, recently offered to sell him these players. Farrell agreed to take them, and the price was fixed.

According to the verbal agreement, the three players were to report to Manager Chance yesterday. Instead of the players reporting, Henriques sold them to President Gaffney, of the Braves. Farell says he has several witnesses to the deal.

CLEVELAND BUYS CATCHER BOWMAN; PAYS $2,500

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Aug. 8.—The Grand Rapids club, of the Central League, announces the sale of Pitcher "Abe" Bowman to the Cleveland American League club. The price is given out at $2,500. Bowman will report to the Naps at the close of the Central season.

Just a Little Glimpse Below the Surface

Kniseley on Southern Hurlers

Explains Peculiarity of Hitters

PETE KNISELEY, outfielder for Birmingham, undertakes to explain the good showing some of the pitchers make in this circuit, only to fall down when they get into the big show; also why Southern leaguers hit well in the majors. Says Pete:

"The Southern League is the hardest place in the country to bat up in the .300 list. No wonder a player hits higher in the major league than in the Southern.

"In the majors, the pitchers do not exert themselves until real danger faces them. When the game is progressing without heavy hitting, the pitchers serve the ball over and give you a chance to swat it, hoping that it will go into one of the fielders' hands. But not here.

"From the beginning of the game until the finish, the Southern League pitchers work at top speed. As the result, the batter has a poorer opportunity to make a high mark. But I attribute the many ascensions in the Southern to this fact. Unless a man is of wonderful physique, he is unable to twirl nine innings, putting his greatest effort on every toss. There are a few who are able to stand the pace. Elmer Brown is a twirler of this class, while Bill Prough is another.

"But the average pitcher is able to stand the gaff for six or seven innings. Then when he weakens the batters feast on the offerings and frequently drive him from the mound. But, of course, there are clever pitchers in the Southern. Hardgrove and Foxen do not pitch hard until there is danger and are very successful.

"I believe that a .300 batsman in the Southern can duplicate the feat in the majors."

* * *

KNISELEY speaks truly both in respect to the pitching and batting. It has long been noted as a peculiar fact that recruits from the Southern League and the Pacific Coast League seldom have batted less in the majors than in the minors. Under ordinary circumstances, it would be fair to discount the average recruit's minor league batting by 10 to 20 points when he gets to the real class, but Daubert and Wheat both have batted better in fast company than they did in the bushes; Charles Stengel has become one of the heaviest clouters in the National and Red Smith is holding his own.

All of them are from the Southern, and probably Kniseley has the right answer. The explanation of the ability of Coast leaguers to hit in the majors up to their Coast standards has been that the heavy winds in some cities and the dampness in others on the Coast keep the batting down to a minimum, and a man who can hit in that country can hit anywhere.

* * *

THE tendency of young pitchers from the South to throw their whole strength into every ball delivered has also been noted by many observers. Brooklyn has an illustration of that very mistake in Frank Allen, who persists in working with all his might in every inning, with the result that when he is in a tight place he has comparatively little reserve strength with which to extricate himself.

An even more pronounced case of the same sort was furnished by Bill Burns, who is a native of Texas, but got his start on the Coast. Bill was one of the most powerful men that ever broke into baseball, but he did not know how to conserve his energy. He was at different periods with Washington, Detroit and Cincinnati, and with all his record was the same. He had the habit of blowing up at the end of the seventh or eighth inning, and, if the game ever went more than nine innings, it was a dead sure bet that Bill had nothing but his glove and spikes left for the tenth.

Nap Rucker used to fall for the same foolish policy in his callow days, but Nap has become old and wise and uses no more exertion now than is necessary, although he admits it took years for the light to break on him.

M'GRAW HINTS THAT GOLF COST MATHEWSON BEATING

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 8.—One of Giants was asked just before the New York team left Pittsburg for Cincinnati why McGraw did not take Mathewson out of the box in the fifth inning Wednesday, when seven runs were batted off his delivery.

"I think Mac wanted to impress something on Christy," said the Giant. "McGraw has been arguing all along against his pitchers playing golf. He does not object to the sport for infielders or outfielders, but he claims it does the pitchers no good, and he has tried to make Matty cut it out. McGraw claims that handling a golf stick tires the muscles in a pitcher's hands and wrists."

JACK JOHNSON BARRED FROM BOXING IN PARIS

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Jack Johnson will not be permitted to box in this country. The "American Boxing Federation" has requested the French Federation of prohibit Johnson, the American negro pugilist, from fighting in France and that body has decided to grant the request.

FIGHT MANAGER IMPROVING.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 8.—Larney Lichtenstein, local manager of fighters, who on Monday underwent an operation at the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, where he had two ribs taken out, is recovering so rapidly that he intends making the trip to Winnipeg on August 14 to be with Steve Ketchel for his fight there. Doc Briggs performed the operation, and it was very successful.

THOMPSON OR LOVE TO PITCH SECOND GAME

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 8.—Manager Smith hasn't decided whether Thompson or Love will pitch against the Vols to-day, but it will be one of them. Slim is eager for another crack at the enemy, and is sure he can lick them without trouble. Chapman will catch.

We lost another tough one yesterday, and it looks as if the jinx were closing in on us again. With the score tied up in the tenth inning, Dent was taken out to allow Price, a left-hander, to pitch to Callahan and Spratt, both batting on that side, with Williams on second and one out.

The move looked like the proper one, but Callahan spoiled everything with a long drive that scored Williams and knocked us ou of a hard-fought game. Dent piched his usual fine game, and Harry Holland's hit drove in our only tally.

Yesterday was "Business Men's Day," and there was a big parade of automobiles, and the players of both teams and a band. About 4,000 were at the park, where some field day events were put on before the game. Tommy Long beat Dave Callahan in the 100-yard dash, doing it in 11 seconds, which is some fast time without sprinting togs on. Harry Chapman won the throwing contest from Smith, of Atlanta, and Young and Beck, of Nashville.

JOCKEY CLAIMS HE WAS OFFERED $1,000 TO 'PULL'

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 8.—Jockey Wilson threw a commotion into sporting circles here to-day by declaring that he had been approached with an offer of a bribe to throw a race recently at the Belmont track meeting.

The stewards refused to comment upon it, as the matter will be sifted by the officials. The story involves another jockey, a friend of Wilson, who acted as an intermediary, and a well-known Bowery politician.

Wilson's specific statement was to the effect that a man named Reed, who has been warned off the track a number of times, approached him at the Belmont track and offered him $1,000 to pull Working Lad in a race on June 24. The stewards, it is said, have exonerated Wilson. No action has as yet been taken against the Bowery politician, but it is known that if he can not clear himself he will be asked to absent himself in future from all meetings given under the association's auspices.

COLE QUITS COLUMBUS TEAM; MAY JOIN FEDERALS

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 8.—Because Manager Hinchman fined and chased him off the field here, after Umpire Cahill had lifted him from the game, "King" Cole to-day asserted that he was done with pitching for the Columbus team. He says he's going to a nunnamed Federal League club.

TOMMY DIXON FALLS FROM RING IN SEVENTH ROUND

JOPLIN, MO., Aug. 8.—An injury received by Tommy Dixon, of Kansas City, during a fight here last night with Freddie Cole, of Indianapolis, caused the contest, scheduled for fifteen rounds, to terminate in the seventh round. Dixon fell through the ropes to the floor, injuring his arm.

RED SOX RECALL PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 8.—The Boston Red Sox to-day exercised their right of option on three players in the American Association. Infielder Krug, of the Indianapolis team, and Infielder Scott and Pitcher Brant, of St. Paul, recently sold with the right of repurchase, were recalled.

DENT PASSES 3 BATTERS IN 53 INNINGS

WHEN Elliott Dent walked Jack Spratt in the first inning of yesterday's game in Nashville, the Atlanta pitcher interrupted slightly the progress of a very fine bit of record-making in this league.

It was his third base on balls in fifty-three innings.

Before the game started yesterday, Dent's record, beginning July 18, was two bases on balls in forty-four innings. This included a "long run" of thirty-three innings, or practically three full games, without a walk being issued.

The big right-hander is going at top speed just now, and his control is well-nigh perfect. He doesn't get himself in the hole very often, either, and it is a rare thing for the batsman to be able to take a tight grip on terra firma and wait confidently for the next one to come over. Only the toughest kind of luck and very feeble hitting support cost the big boy another win yesterday.

RED SOX RECALL FOUR; BUY CATCHER M'NALLY

BOSTON, Aug. 8.—The Boston Red Sox to-day exercised their right of option on three players in the American Association. Infielder Krug, of the Indianapolis team, and Infielder Scott and Pitcher Brantt, of St. Paul, recently sold with the right of repurchase, were recalled.

Michael J. McNally, shortstop for the Utica team, New York State League, also was bought by the Red Sox.

LANGFORD AND JEANNETTE TO CLASH IN LONG BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 8.—Promoter McCarey last night received messages from Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette accepting his terms for a twenty-round bout. In all probability the date set for the heavyweight event will be October 7.

"I would like to see the question of supremacy between Langford and Jeannette settled," explained the promoter. "That's my reason for making the match. In a scheduled twenty-round go in my ring with Eyton refereeing, the two blacks will have to extend themselves. I will never stage a mixed match between a black and a white boxer. So long as the colored men battle among themselves I will put no handicap in their way."

All doubt as to Wolgast's willingness to box on the September date was removed yesterday when the former lightweight champion telegraphed as follows:

"Will positively meet the winner of the Dundee-White fight of August 12. Hope it will be Dundee, as I want to show the public the difference between a real fighter and a jumping jack."

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

HOW SWEET.

How sweet to be a manager and run a baseball team—
At least when you are winning games it is a blissful dream.
But when the team is losing, is his job a thing of joy?
Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi!

Whether Ed Reulbach or Eddie Stack is the better athlete is yet to be determined, but it is a well-known fact that the Cubs never again will own Reulbach's equal as a badger fighter.

We are in receipt of a song written by that far-famed pugilist, Packey McFarland. The song is entitled, "I'd Like to Know." So would a whole lot of promoters, pugilists, managers and other insects.

Not that we are an expert on songology, but after reading Mr. McFarland's ballad we are convinced that he is a lightweight.

If Joe Jackson were to do all his batting at Shibe Park he would be chased to the minors or (worse yet) to St. Louis.

It is said that the said Joe Jackson has hit over .400 at the White Sox Park this season. Joe never would be mistaken for a White Sock—not even by a blind man.

There is charity even in baseball. For instance, Tom Lynch has handed a protested game to Joe Tinker.

Horace Fogel avers that he wants to put a baseball team in New York. This leads one to suspect that Horace has not heard of the adventures of Frank Chance.

Washington fans having presented Walter Johnson with a loving cup filled with money, it is said that Columbus fans will hand King Cole a shaving mug filled with lather.

It is said that fighters can't come back, but every day we note otherwise. For instance, there is Jack Helmen, the heavyweight. As he was leaving the place some philanthropist said: "Wait a minute, Jack! We're going to buy another." He came back.

ONLY THREE LEFT OF CUBS' OLD GUARD

By O. B. Keeler.

A COUPLE of days ago the papers carried a bit of baseball news to the effect that Edward Reulbach had been traded by the Cubs for Eddie Stack, of Brooklyn.

Of itself, that wasn't a very exciting bit of information. Neither Mr. Stack nor Mr. Reulbach has been exceeding any speed limits this year—even in Philadelphia.

But aside from that—

Say, did you notice a queer little nip of regret when you read that small item?

• • •

IT just marked the passing of one more of the few remaining original Cubs; the wonderful clan gathered by Frank Selee and molded by Frank Chance into what many will always believe to have been the greatest baseball machine of all time. And those who sing the praises of the Athletics and the rest have at last to admit that Connie Mack and the others have yet to win 116 games in a season.

• • •

BUT that's by the way.

You remember the Original Cubs, don't you? Let's see—can we recall the line-up of the smashing years of 1906-7-8?

Well, back of the wood was Johnny Kling, aided and abetted by Pat Moran—what little aiding and abetting Johnny needed in those halcyon days.

The slab staff? We'll match that, now, against any in history. Brown, Reulbach, Overall and Pfeister for the regulars, with Chick Frazer and Carl Lundgren in reserve. Frazer was a celebrated chicken fancier, you remember, and Carl could pitch better with the thermometer at 32 than most pitchers could on July 4.

The Infield—Chance and Evers and Tinker and Steinfeldt; and the rip and swing of the old Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance that made the pace for all their day.

The Outfield—Schulte and Slagle and Sheckard; the celebrated S. S. S. combination, with the Rabbit to top the batting list and Artie Hofman to fill in on occasion.

• • •

WELL, well—we'll take stock of the remains.

Schulte and Evers, and Orvie Overall, who is plugging along on the come-back trail after a couple of years' defection.

Reulbach made the fourth of the Old Guard, until the other day. Big Ed hadn't done much the last few years. But don't forget that three times Big Ed topped the whole list of slabmen in the National League, and that when Brown and Mathewson were in their prime.

Four fighting Grizzlies,
Sturdy as can be—
Big Ed was traded,
Then there were three.

Who'll be the next of the Old Guard to pass on?

• • •

WITH brief reference to the latest chapter in that sad serial, "Losing 'Em by One Run," it appears from a somewhat scrambled telegraphic account that Bill Smith and Gilbert Price came together in a bean-on collision after yesterday's game in Nashville.

Price appears to have been the one to bounce back. In fact, the report has it that Smith ordered him out of his uniform indefinitely.

The row was about the curve ball Price dealt to Callahan in the tenth inning, on which Dave Callahan doubled for the winning run.

At this distance, far be it from us to make wise criticisms of either Price or his manager.

Except this much.

If Price crossed up the manager on explicit instructions, he deserves all he got.

On the other hand, if Smith took out on his pitcher the soreness incident to losing a hard-fought battle—Price having been sent in cold and doing his best—it looks as if the manager was overly severe.

CHANCE TURNS ACTOR WITH MOVING PICTURE CONCERN

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Frank Chance, manager of the Highlanders, is now an actor. He has been engaged by a moving picture company to take the leading part in a scenario entitled "The Peerless Leader," some of the scenes of which will be laid at the Polo Grounds, New York. Chance has ben rehearsing the role in a Jersey City studio since Monday. Catcher Sweeney, Outfielder Daniels and Hartzell will also appear in the film.

Frank Whitney Due Here To-day

Charley White Arrives Saturday

By Left Hook.

FRANK WHITNEY, the fighting carpenter from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, is due here at 11 o'clock this morning for his coming 10-round bout with Charley White at the Auditorium-Armory Wednesday night.

A wire from Nate Lewis, manager of Charley White, informs us that the Chicago boy will be here to-morrow morning. With both fighters on the battle ground local fans will have a chance to see the coming rivals in their training grind.

Whitney will pitch his tent at once in the Atlanta Athletic Club, where he intends to do the rest of his preliminary work for what he considers to be the most important fight of his career. Frank will do most of his boxing with Jimmy Perry, and the welterweight should be a valuable aid to him. The Cedar Rapids boy will also get a couple of lighter boys to box with.

• • •

WHAT Whitney is after is speed. Frank learned while in Chicago that his coming opponent is about the best piece of fighting machinery in the world. He also realizes that a victory over Charley will put him among the leaders of the 133-pounders. Chances of this kind don't come to boxers every day. The promoters of the Atlanta Athletic Association have given Whitney the opportunity he has been pinning for during the past year.

• • •

ON the other hand, Charley White is now the most watched boxer in the world to-day. Tom McCarey has his eyes on him. Tom is seriously thinking of putting White on with the winner of the Cross-Rivers setto on Labor Day, and a victory over Whitney will be another feather in the Chicago boy's cap. Jim Coffroth wants White to box Tommy Murphy in his arena, but is awaiting the outcome of Charley's scrap with Whitney. The Western promoters have been after White for the past year, but Nate Lewis wants his protege to pick up a few pounds in weight before sending him after the bigger boys.

CHARLEY is still young and has a bright future. White was 22 years old March 25 and has been boxing five years. During that period never has a boxer succeeded in stopping him, or better than that, no boxer has ever even floored him.

When it is taken into consideration that White has met the toughest lightweights in the world, this record is surely a remarkable one.

• • •

WHITNEY is a fighter of the opposite type to Charley. Frank loves to bore in and fight at close quarters. Once inside a man's guard he works his hands like a pair of piston rods, hoping to bring his man to the canvas.

It is also a fact that Whitney is a much improved boxer over the boy who was seen here about a year ago. Since leaving here Frank had about ten battles and managed to win them all.

• • •

THE Cedar Rapids boy is also aware of the fact that he is getting along in years and knows that if he intends to get any place in the boxing world now is the time. Next Wednesday Whitney will get his chance. If he loses, fans can rest assured that he will give them the very best he has. Whitney has yet to disappoint a fight gathering. This afternoon Whitney will be at the Atlanta Athletic Club working out for the match.

Charley will arrive here to-morrow morning and arrangements have already been made to have him do his training in the Ponce De Leon ball park.

• • •

THE other two bouts to be staged Wednesday have been completed. Charley Lee and Kid Young signed for their return engagement yesterday and these boys are expected to put up a corking mill.

The semi-wind-up will be between Mike Saul and Eddie Hanlon. The boys have agreed to weigh 138 pounds at 6 o'clock, and at this weight Mike should have a great chance of winning. Both bouts are scheduled to go 10 rounds, making 30 rounds of boxing for the evening's entertainment.

Tickets for the boxing show were placed on sale yesterday. Prices, $1, $1.50 and $2.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Gunboat Smith, of California, and Fireman Jim Flynn, of Pueblo, Colo., will clash in a 10-round bout at Madison Square Garden, New York, to-night. Betting fans have made Smith a 6 to 5 favorite, but admirers of Flynn think that the fireman's bulldog courage will carry him through to victory.

• • •

Frank Whitney is expected to arrive to-day for his 10-round engagement with Charlie White at the Auditorium-Armory on Wednesday, August 13. White will be here some time to-morrow.

• • •

Eddie Hanlon started hard work yesterday for his coming 10-round set-to with Mike Saul next Wednesday. Hanlon wants to be in the best of shape as he realizes that a victory over Mike will put him in line for some big matches. They have posted a $50 forfeit to weigh 138 pounds at 6 o'clock.

• • •

Mike Kelly, Indianapolis featherweight, is in Atlanta at the present time in search of matches with some of our 122-pounders. Kelly says he is willing to meet some of the lesser lights first in order to prove to local fans that he is made of the right stuff.

• • •

Coast fans are showing much interest in the coming Jack White-Johnny Kilbane bout scheduled to take place in Tom McCarey's arena on August 12. These two boys put up a corking mill for twenty rounds about a month ago. Ad Wolgast has agreed to meet the winner some time in September.

• • •

Billy Nolan, former manager of Willie Ritchie, says that the champion will never meet Ad Wolgast. Nolan says that Willie fears Ad and does not want any more of his game.

• • •

Over in Paris they are certainly picking the lemons for Georges Carpentier. Yesterday they pitted the Frenchman against a boxer named Williams and Carpentier stopped him in four rounds. Who next?

• • •

Leach Cross and Rivers have agreed to weigh 135 pounds ringside for their 20-round affair at Los Angeles on Labor Day. Each boxer is to receive 30 per cent of the gross receipts. The winner will probably be sent against Willie Ritchie.

• • •

Jack (Twin) Sullivan, of Boston, has signed articles to box Soldier Kearns, the Brooklyn heavyweight, in a 10-round go at the Queensberry A. C., Philadelphia, on the night of August 22.

• • •

Kid Young is getting into great shape for his coming battle with Charlie Lee. The "fighting newsboy" is doing his boxing with Mike Saul and they certainly are going at it in real fashion.

KRAMER BEATS CLARKE.

NEWARK, N. J., Aug. 8.—Frank Kramer, the world's champion cyclist, proved his right to the title when he defeated Jackie Clarke, the Australian "Rocket" in two out of three heats of a one-mile match race at the Velodrome here last night.

GILBERT PRICE SUSPENDED AFTER GAME

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 8.—It is understood here that Manager Billy Smith of the Crackers and Gilbert Price, his star left-hand hurler, had a warm argument after yesterday's game, regarding the curve ball which Price pitched to Callahan in the tenth inning. Dave pasted the pill for a couple of bases and the winning run. Price had been sent in by Smith to take Dent's place in front of Callahan, who is a left-hand hitter, and Spratt, also batting from that side.

It is not plain just what the contention was, but it seems the manager told Price at the end of it that he was under suspension. Price went to the slab without much time to warm up, and that was the reason generally ascribed to his lack of effectiveness, but Smith seemed to take another view of it.

Smith had a short conference with Manager Schwartz concerning Jud Daley, but the boss of the Vols was not in the mood to shake up his team, and the result of the first game probably cemented that position.

JACK BARRY FIRST OF MACKMEN TO BE HURT

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 8.—The first serious accident of the season to Connie Mack's famous infield has resulted in Shortstop Jack Barry being put on the hospital list with a bad shoulder, caused by his bumping into Catcher O'Neil at the plate in Wednesday's game. Barry probably will be unable to play for a week.

Sports and Such

NOT TRUE.

ONE day I wrote a story—a real pippin, on the square—
And clubs were formed to root for me; they boosted me for fair.
They bought up all the papers and wrote letters to my Boss;
They told him how they loved me and how much they'd feel my loss.
I had a fair young "sal'ry"—it was doubled twice and thrice;
They presented me with autos and tons of shirt-front ice;
I had eleven loving cups, a house and lot—a prize—
And I was chased with offers from a lot of vaudeville guys.
Then Senator O'Gorman, with another tony gent,
Insisted I should call at once upon the President.
I just was mitting Woodrow, when I heard the bell-hop's call!
I'd dreamed, instead of batting dope, that I could bat a ball.

Timid Kid Asked Griff for a Job

Engel Promises to Become a Star

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—During the early spring days of 1912 a young ball tosser applied for admittance to the ball park in Washington, where Clark Griffith, Walter Johnson, Herman Schaefer and other Nationals were romping about. He was too bashful to speak to anybody, just watched the athletes perform.

The next morning the same kid was on hand. He had read about the great Johnson, Walsh, Coombs, Bender, Wood and other pitchers. He was a pitcher, too. Rather, on the lots in Washington he curved 'em for the semi-pro teams, and as he usually won, he thought he'd like to become acquainted with the big leaguers.

The kid chatted with members of the Nationals, asked who was manager, and if he could talk to him. "Griffith is manager; he's standing over there," informed one athlete to the youngster. The kid walked over to Griffith.

"I'm a pitcher. I'd like to toss a few to your hitters," was his opening sentence to Griffith.

"Where do you hail from?" flashed back the Fox.

"Right here! Pitch on Saturdays and haven't lost a game for a year," returned the youngster.

"Go to the dressing room, put on a suit and let me take a look at you," answered Griffith.

• • •

THE youth appeared, went to the hill and pitched during the batting practice.

The players gave Griff the merry ha-ha. They wanted to know where the boss plucked the novice. When the ball came near the plate usually the sluggers lifted it over the heads of the outfielders.

All the time, though, Griff was watching his new entrant. He saw that he had a lot of speed and a fast breaking curve. But the kid was awkward and didn't have the proper delivery.

As the youngster improved with each day and began to show dazzing speed, he was introduced to his idol, Walter Johnson. Always chummy with aspiring kids, Johnson took an interest in the new acquisition. He showed him how to throw the fast one, the movement with the shoulder, how to curve the one down around the knees and the fast break high on the inside.

After a few lessons Griff and the players were surprised. In a few weeks the batters began popping the fast ones and hitting easy grounders on the curves.

WHEN it came time to make the first trip Griffith asked his strange tosser how he'd like to make a trip with the team.

"Do you think I can pitch?" was his answer.

"I don't know; I'll try you out," returned the boss.

The Nationals made several trips, and when a game was practically lost the kid got a chance to show himself. Sometimes he got away all right, sometimes he didn't.

The 1912 season was over. The kid had a bunch of experience. This past spring he was a regular member of the team, was along on the practice tour and watched every movement made by his favorite, Johnson.

Finally the kid got a chance to show himself at the start. He won, allowing only a few hits and a run or two. Then it was that Griffith realized he had a wonderful pitcher.

Recently Joe Engel beat the St. Louis Browns 2 to 1 with three scattered hits, and, according to press accounts of the game, showed almost as much stuff as Walter Johnson. Joe Engel was the timid kid who introduced himself to Griffith in the spring of 1912.

MAJOR CALLAWAY OFF TO SEE CLARK GRIFFITH NOW

Major Frank Callaway, president of the Atlanta ball club, is a lively little traveler these days.

Yesterday Major Callaway, who had just returned from Chattanooga, set out for Washington to confer with Clark Griffith concerning the terms of the agreement now existing between the Senators and the Crackers.

It is not understood that there is any disputed point to be settled, or that anything is to be done with reference to Clark and Long, but that with the claiming date close at hand Major Callaway wished to be in perfect accord with the Old Fox as to all the provisions of the treaty, so that the Atlanta club could deal intelligently with all its players.

ANOTHER PHENOM MAY GO UP TO MAJOR LEAGUES

CALGARY, ALBERTA, Aug. ..—Jack Roche, Calgary catcher, seems sure to go to one of the big league teams. The White Sox, Cubs, Cardinals and Yankees are all bidding for the youngster. He is batting .354 and fielding .986. Comiskey made the first bid, but no price was set. Murphy has since requested the price, but has been asked to make an offer. Indianapolis, Louisville, Mobile and Los Angeles also are after him. The sale is likely to be made to-day.

BURWELL VICTOR OVER FOES OF TAX REFORM

Combine of 'Drys' With Anti-Revisionists Broken When House Votes to Reconsider Bills.

The combination formed by "dry" members of the House and the members who oppose all tax revision to defeat bills favored by Speaker W. H. Burwell and Governor Slaton was broken, for the present at least, Friday morning, when the House voted to reconsider its action Wednesday in defeating the constitutional amendments limiting the school levy to 2 1-2 mills and the pension levy to 1 1-2 mills.

The votes on the motions to reconsider, which were offered by Fullbright, of Burke, were 86 to 57 and 89 to 58, respectively.

The action of the House is regarded as a victory for Speaker Burwell, and indicates that some of his bills, which are administration measures, may be passed in spite of the opposition tax reform foes and "dry" members said to be moved by a desire for revenge because of failure to get the Webb bill out of committee.

Bills To Be Put on Passage.

With the action of the House reconsidered, the two bills—the school levy and the pension levy—undoubtedly will be brought up for passage at this session. It is understood they may be placed on the calendar for Saturday or Monday. The placing of the bill is solely in the hands of the Rules Committee, and while its members would not convict themselves, one member stated positively that the House would be given an opportunity to pass the bills during the present session.

Speaker Burwell has been hard at work trying to heal the wounds caused by his ruling Wednesday, when he declared the Kidd resolution, calling the Hixon-Searcy bill out of committee, out of order, and indications are he has succeeded.

The fight against Fullbright's motion to reconsider was feeble, though its voting strength was fairly large. Wallace Miller, of Bibb County, led the opposition to the motion. He declared the fixing of 2 1-2 mills as the limit of levy for school purposes would result in appropriating that amount each year, inasmuch as money is always appropriated up to the limit.

Mr. Kidd Is Turned Down.

Mr. Fullbright made but a short speech in favor of his motion, declaring the opponents of the bills had defeated them by spreading the erroneous impression that they would increase taxation.

Mr. Kidd, of Baker, tried to lead a fight against Speaker Burwell at the opening of the Friday morning session. His effort failed, because Speaker Burwell refused to recognize Mr. Kidd. When the report of the Rules Committee was submitted to the House, the Speaker asked the usual question: "Is there objection to the adoption of the report?"

"I object," shouted Mr. Kidd, in a tone that could have been heard a block.

"The Chair hears none," announced the Speaker.

Had Mr. Kidd been able to defeat the report of the Rules Committee, which fixes the work for the day, it was his evident intention to attempt to again introduce his resolution calling the Hixon-Searcy bill out of committee.

Queen Mary Stops Gambling at Court

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The gambling lid is on at Buckingham Palace. The quiet little games with which the servants were wont to while away their time and spare farthings are no more. As a result, grumblings are loud and frequpent. This is due to rules issued by Queen Mary, whose anti-gambling views are well known in court circles.

A strike of all the servants at the palace was narrowly averted a few days ago when the Queen decided to permit the servants to draw lots to see who shall accompany her on the royal yacht.

Town's Water So Bad Court Lifts Beer Lid

PITTSBURG, KANS., Aug. 8.—The water is so bad in Chapman, a mining camp near here, that beer is used in its place, and the people are so generous they give the substitute away.

A Girard man accused of selling "spiked" cider was freed on the theory that one man's word is as good as another's. These incidents were brought out in Crawford County courts.

Postmaster Grows 50-lb. Watermelon

Postmaster Hugh McKee exhibited his prowess as a farmer Friday morning when he displayed a watermelon grown on his farm in Druid Hills which weighed more than 50 pounds.

Postmaster McKee, it is said, will retire to his farm when his term expires January 1.

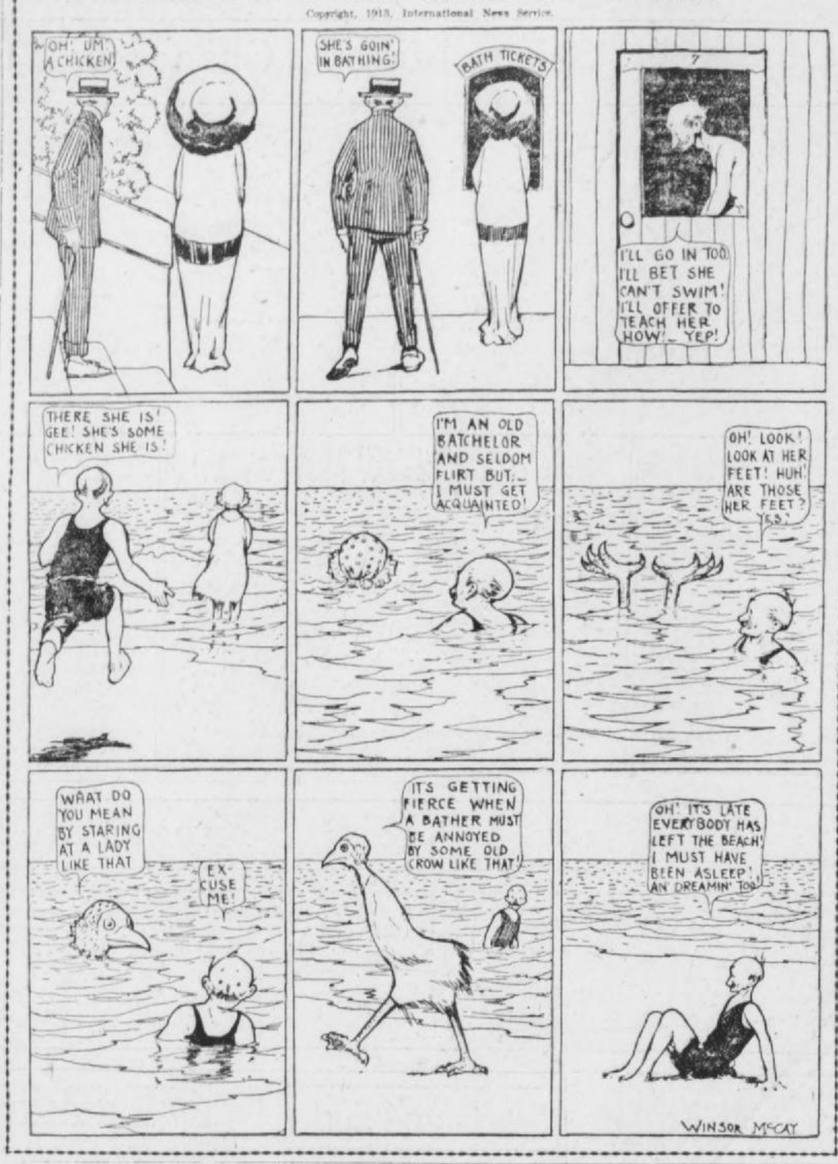

They'll Paddle Own Canoe 7,000 Miles

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green, of this city, will paddle their own canoe 7,000 miles through inland waters to the Gulf of Mexico. Mrs. Green will fly a suffrage pennan en route.

The couple will paddle up the Hudson River to the Erie Canal and through the great lakes.

Bulgars Insist Turks Evacuate Adrianople

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 8.—In a communication issued to-day by the Bulgarian Government it was announced that "Bulgaria will begin demobilization of her army as soon as a peace treaty is signed, upon the understanding that the powers favor the Enos-Midia line as the southern Bulgarian boundary." This would give Adrianople to Bulgaria.

It is doubtful if Bulgaria could carry on another war against Turkey. She has lost 100,000 men and her national treasury is depleted.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 8.—The Turkish Government to-day issued a manifesto calling upon the nation to oppose vigorously the evacuation of Adrianople.

State Wins Point in Diggs Slavery Case

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 8.—The fourth day of the trial of Maury I. Diggs, former State Architect charged with white slavery, began to-day with the defense laboring under a decided handicap. The first witnesses were on hand ready to testify as to the trip to Reno on which Diggs and Drew Caminetti, son of the Commissioner General of Immigration, are charged with taking Marsha Warrington and Lola Norris for immoral purposes.

Judge Van Fleet ruled that the characters and reputations of the two girls would have no bearing on the case.

Chicken Frying Race By Congress Wives

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The mooted question, "Who is the best chicken fryer in the Congressional set?" will be fought out by two of the dealers, Mrs. Champ Clark and Mrs. William A. Cullop, wife of Representative Cullop of Indiana.

Mrs. Cullop will celebrate her fiftieth wedding anniversary with the contest in her apartment. Each contestant will fry a chicken according to her pet recipe.

It is understood that Speaker Clark, Senator Tillman and other Congressmen have applied for the position of judges.

Man, 81, Has Kept Diary For 59 Years

SPOKANE, Aug. 8.—Henry Ballinger, an old-time resident of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho, a man close to eighty-one years of age, to-day offers a challenge to the world for having kept a diary continuously for the longest period of time.

His record reaches a short while over fifty-nine years.

HOBSON WANTS IT ALL DRY.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—A Constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale of all alcoholic beverages was proposed in a resolution introduced to-day by Representative Richmond Pearson Hobson of Alabama.

Judge Given Divorce Decree in Own Court

DANVILLE, ILL., Aug. 8.—Judge E. R. E. Kimbrough mounted the circuit bench here to-day after having been granted a divorce in his own court. Mrs. Emma Fountain Kimbrough, who now is living in Los Angeles, did not contest the judge's suit. Judge Kimbrough asked the decree on the grounds of desertion.

For many years Judge Kimbrough was a law partner of former Speaker Joseph G. Cannon.

NEW GOLDFIELD FOUND.

ANTWERP, Aug. 8.—A goldfield of exceptional richness has been discovered in the southern part of the Province of Katanga, in the Belgian Congo. Samples are declared to yield an ounce of gold to the ton.

Day Laborer for 42 Years Gets Million

OMAHA, Aug. 8.—Frederick Gross Von Alvensteben, for forty-two years a day laborer, received notice from the German consul at Chicago that he had fallen heir to an estate in Germany valued at $1,000,000.

Von Alvensteben became estranged from his family thirty years ago and came to America.

SUE FOR SEWAGE DAMAGE.

CHATTANOOGA, Aug. 8.—Seven citizens of St. Elmo have filed suit against the town of St. Elmo for $10,000 each for alleged damage to property on account of the sewage disposal plant there. It is alleged that the plant is a nuisance.

SHORT SHRIFT FOR SLAYER.

DALTON, Aug. 8.—Clem Pool, given a life sentence for the murder of Policeman Harry Cook, began work on the Walker County chaingang this morning, less than two weeks after the commission of his crime.

3,000 EXPECTED AT GROCERS' OUTING

Elaborate Program of Recreation to Make Warm Springs Picnic Greatest Ever Held.

Plans are being made for the annual excursion to Warm Springs, Ga., Wednesday, August 13, of the Retail Grocers and Marketmen's Association. It is expected the outing will be the greatest the organization has ever held. Francis J. Kamper, chairman of the committee on arrangements, has issued an announcement of the picnic.

Nothing has been left undone by the committee. They expect more than 3,000 persons to attend the outing, and have made arrangements to care for all. Many family picnics have been arranged. There will be bathing, bowling, dancing and a baseball game between the associated grocers and the clothiers' league.

Through the efforts of Mr. Kamper and his committee, special arrangements have been made for women and children. The management of the Warm Springs Hotel has offered the use of the hotel to the crowds, and those who do not care for the more strenuous pastimes of baseball, bowling and bathing, can spend the day on the wide verandas and shady walks of the hotel and grounds.

Special trains to carry the crowds will leave Union Station, on the A., B. and A. Railroad for Warm Springs Wednesday morning at 7 and 7:15 o'clock. A round trip fare of $1 for adults and 50 cents for children will be charged.

Pigs Gorge Candy As Children Envy

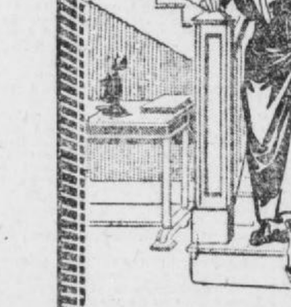

CINCINNATI, Aug. 8.—The Refuge Home Farm, a municipal charity for homeless children, has a fine lot of thoroughbred pigs, which are to be gorged daily with chocolates and other choice confectionery, as a result of recent raids by the food inspection division of the Health Department.

To-day the refuge farm wagon carted to the farm for their delectation, nearly 1,500 pounds of milk chocolates, 3,000 pounds of peanuts, 850 pounds of shelled cocoanuts, 15 barrels of sugar and about 20 barrels of other odds and ends, including flavoring extracts used in making candy. These represented some of the condemnations made at several candy factories last week.

The Kind You Have Always Bought.

THIS is the caution applied to the public announcement of Castoria that has been manufactured under the supervision of Chas. H. Fletcher for over 30 years—the genuine Castoria. We respectfully call the attention of fathers and mothers when purchasing Castoria to see that the wrapper bears his signature in black. When the wrapper is removed the same signature appears on both sides of the bottle in red. Parents who have used Castoria for their little ones in the past years need no warning against counterfeits and imitations, but our present duty is to call the attention of the younger generation to the great danger of introducing into their families spurious medicines.

It is to be regretted that there are people who are now engaged in the nefarious business of putting up and selling all sorts of substitutes, or what should more properly be termed conterfeits, for medicinal preparations not only for adults, but worse yet, for children's medicines. It therefore devolves on the mother to scrutinize closely what she gives her child. Adults can do that for themselves but the child has to rely on the mother's watchfulness.

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Letters from Prominent Druggists addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Central Drug Co., of Detroit, Mich., says: "We consider your Castoria in a class distinct from patent medicines and commend it."

Christy Drug Stores, of Pittsburg, Pa., say: "We have sold your Castoria for so many years with such satisfactory results that we cannot refrain from saying a good word for it when we get a chance."

Jacob Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa., say: "We take pleasure in recommending Fletcher's Castoria as one of the oldest and best of the preparations of the kind upon the market."

Hess & McCann, of Kansas City, Mo., say: "Your Castoria always gives satisfaction. We have no substitute for it and only sell 'The Kind You Have Always Bought,' the original."

The Voegeli Bros., of Minneapolis, Minn., say: "We wish to say that we have at all times a large demand for Fletcher's Castoria at all of our three stores and that it gives universal satisfaction to our trade."

Polk Miller Drug Co., of Richmond, Va., says: "Your Castoria is one of the most satisfactory preparations we have ever handled. It seems to satisfy completely the public demand for such an article and is steadily creating a growing sale by its merit."

P. A. Capdau, of New Orleans, La., says: "We handle every good home remedy demanded by the public and while our shelves are thoroughly equipped with the best of drugs and proprietary articles, there are few if any which have the unceasing sale that your Castoria has."

M. C. Dow, of Cincinnati, Ohio, says: "When people in increasing numbers purchase a remedy and continue buying it for years; when it passes the fad or experimental stage and becomes a household necessity, then it can be said its worth has been firmly established. We can and do gladly offer this kind of commendation to Fletcher's Castoria."

CAN'T HELP BUT ADMIRE BABIES

Every Woman Casts Loving Glance at The Nestling Cuddled in Its Bonnet.

A woman's heart naturally responds to the charm and sweetness of a pretty child, and more tenderly than ever before since the advent of Mother's Friend.

This is a most wonderful external help to the muscles and tendons. It penetrates the tissues, makes them pliant to readily yield to nature's demand for expansion, so there is no longer a period of pain, discomfort, straining, nausea or other symptoms so often distressing during the accidental weeks of expectancy.

Mother's Friend prepares the system for the coming event, and its use brings comfort, rest and repose during the term. This has a most marked influence upon the baby, since it thus inherits a splendid growing system of nerves and digestive function.

And particularly to young mothers is this famous remedy of inestimable value. It enables her to preserve her health and strength, and she remains a pretty mother by having avoided all the suffering and danger that would otherwise accompany such an occasion. Mother's Friend thoroughly lubricates every nerve, tendon and muscle involved and is a sure preventive for caking of the breasts.

You will find this splendid remedy on sale at all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle, and is highly recommended for the purpose.

Write Bradfield Regulator Co., 134 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., and they will mail you, sealed, a very instructive book for expectant mothers.

Smallest Kingdom

Monaco is the smallest kingdom in the world. It is only fifty-three and a quarter miles in circuit, including Monte Carlo. The capital is Monaco, perched on a rocky promontory rising 200 feet above the sea level.

Monaco has undergone fifty-eight sieges, but has never lost her independence except for a few years at a time. In 500 B. C. Hectate of Miletus wrote an account of the city now called Monaco, and declared it to be so old that the people had lost all tradition of its origin.

Monte Carlo is famous for its magnificent casino, the most gorgeous gambling establishment in the world. The town of Monte Carlo in winter is a health resort, and in summer is noted for its bathing.

FIGHT BITTER ON COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Senate Takes No Action on a Motion to Table Sweat's School Measure.

With the motion before it to table Senator Sweat's compulsory education bill, which precipitated a bitter fight led by Senators McNeill and Allen, the Senate adjourned Friday afternoon shortly before 1 o'clock without taking any action on the bill.

Both Senators McNeill and Allen made a vigorous attack on the bill, the former charging that its only effect would be to let down the flood gates for the entrance of negro children into the public schools. Senator Sweat, the author of the bill, denied this, whereupon Senator Allen charged that the bill was illegally constituted in that case, as it discriminated between white and black, which is contrary to the laws of the State. The consideration of the bill will be continued Friday afternoon.

The Senate Friday morning passed unanimously the new charter for Atlanta, with amendments providing for the submission of the initiative, referendum and recall clause and the proposed limitation of the Recorder's power to the people before enaction into law.

Abolishes Clerk's Office.

The new charter as amended provides for the abolition of the present office of chief clerk of the city tax department and substitutes therefor a board of tax assessors and receivers, who shall nominate a chief clerk, subject to the confirmation first by the tax committee of the General Council and ultimately by the General Council. This provision will not be submitted to the vote of the people. The bill provides further for the initiative and referendum and the recall of all heads of departments, including the Mayor and members of the Council, upon the petition of a certain percentage of registered voters, and for the proper inspection of all elevators and boilers within the city limits.

The new charter, as passed by the Senate, will be sent back to the House for its approval preparatory to final submission to the Governor.

The Senate also passed Mr. McGregor's bill providing for a hearing by the Governor before trustees of public institutions shall be dismissed. According to the provisions of the bill such dismissal can be made only upon the recommendation of a majority of the members of the board of trustees of the institution affected.

New Bills in Senate.

Among the new bills introduced in the Senate Friday morning was a resolution by Senators Allen and McGregor, requesting the State Board of Education to investigate the advisability of introducing in the schools of the State "Webster's Blue Back Speller," which was used in the common schools a half century ago and "is still better than those used today," according to Major McGregor.

Senator Oliff, of the Fourth, also introduced a resolution requesting the United States Government to make an appropriation to preserve Fort Frederick, on St. Simons Island, a relic of the days of General Oglethorpe, first Governor of Georgia.

The Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments, headed by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, reported favorably Friday the two constitutional amendment taxing measures which were introduced at the instance of Governor Slaton. The bill creating a commission to investigate the release of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, which was defeated Thursday, was also reported on favorably following recommitment.

In addition to the general bills, the Senate passed the House bill giving the secret ballot to the city of Augusta.

Orient Road Shows $160,000 in Earnings

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Bondholders and noteholders of the Kansas City and Orient Railway have received a circular from the reorganization committee stating that the plan which the committee had hoped to issue earlier in the year had to be amended owing to the financial situation abroad and in America.

The committee reports that earnings of the line in the United States from June 30, 1912, to June 30, 1913, will approximate $160,000. The committee feels justified in adopting a policy of building into Kansas City as soon as possible.

All Crops Fall Off From 1912 Figures

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The crop reporting board, Department of Agriculture, to-day made the following estimates of the condition of crops on August 1:

	Condition August 1, 1913.	1912.
Corn	75.8	80.0
Spring wheat	74.1	90.4
Oats	73.7	90.3
Barley	74.9	89.1

The yields indicated by the condition of crops on August 1, 1913, follow: Corn, 2,672,000,000; spring wheat, 233,000,000; oats, 1,028,000,000.

Buried in Socks Made For Father Years Ago

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 8.—James H. Williams, of the town of Jerusalem, was buried with his feet encased in a pair of socks knitted for his father 82 years ago.

Shortly before James was born his mother knitted a pair of socks for his father, but the socks were never worn by the father. They decended to the son, who carefully preserved them and expressed a desire to be buried with them on.

COTTON GOSSIP

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows part cloudy over eastern half of belt and south Texas; generaly fair elsewhere; general showers in eastern half of belt; none in western half. Indications are still for some rain coming in the west over Sunday.

* * *

Rainfall The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "After making full allowance for the fact that cotton is a dry weather plant and thrives on sunshine, the talent is forced to admit that drouth in parts of Oklahoma and Texas, accompanied by such high temperatures as those of yesterday, is injuring the crop every day. However, most traders on the short side have learned not to accept damage reports at face value, and when, in the face of a fair forecast for the west, the barometer lines revealed low pressure of the Gulf of Mexico, the talent promptly exploited storm formation as a promise of rain and weather students on the floor helped by asserting that extremely hot weather in Oklahoma is simply a forerunner of rain and lower temperatures. Thus the market worked down after the bulge of Wednesday.

"Meanwhile, Manchester is not sending any encouraging reports though Liverpool managed to sell 10,000 bales on the spot yesterday. At this time any lack of evidence of trade activity is apt to tell on the raw cotton market, because just now slack demand for the actual makes a poor showing when contrasted with the keen demand in evidence during the past two years.

"The market is very dull and very narrow; speculation has been reduced to a minimum and neither talent nor trade is in a humor to display enterprise. Increasing spot sales at Galveston and Houston indicate that the new crop market is opening up."

* * *

The market was sold off after the opening on unofficial reports of rain at Galveston. The early weather map shows no rain and weather experts could not see any in sight, which resulted in an active wave of buying at the outset.

* * *

On the call, Flinn and Gifford bought August. Black, Seidenberg, Hentz and Harden sold. Wilson, Mitchell, Gifford, Flinn and Black bought October. McElroy, Bashford and Hentz sold. Flinn, Wiggin, Watkins, Ralt and Gifford bought December. Rothschild, Rosenberg, Black and Orvis sold. Hicks bought January. Bashford, Hentz and Schley sold.

* * *

Noon Texas weather: Galveston cloudy, 78; good shower this morning; Taylor, Waco, McKinney, Denison and 70; Houston clear, 87; San Antonio cloudy, 82; Austin, Little Rock clear, 85; Belton clear, 93; Dallas clear, 93; Fort Worth clear, 98; Sherman clear, 92; Paris, Fort Smith, Ark., clear, 97; Texarkana clear, 101; Ardmore clear, 98; Chasha, Oklahoma City, Tulsa clear, 95; Muskogee clear, 99; McAlester clear, 94; Shreveport part cloudy, 93; rained at New Orleans half hour; now clearing.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—The hot and dry weather which prevailed over a large part of the country this week, while injuring the growing crops, was favorable for harvesting, storage and marketing of winter wheat, but delayed plowing of land for seeding of wheat in the fall. However, there is no apprehension felt, as there still is ample time for this work with favorable weather conditions. That there is more attention being given to the preparations of the soil and selection of seed is indicated by the larger yields and better quality of the winter wheat. Thrashings continue to show larger yields than has been expected and the quality of the grain is of the best.

There is still a steady movement of wheat to market, as the yield is so much larger than has been estimated and that most farmers are willing to part with at least a portion of their crop.

ABSENCE OF RAINS SENDS COTTON UP

Heavy Buying Based on Deterioration Reports From West—Offerings Extremely Light.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Uneasiness was again expressed to-day over weather conditions in Texas, and when the cotton market opened, prices were at a net advance of 5 to 11 points from Thursday's final. New crops were the strongest, August showing an advance of 15 points immediately after the opening. The opening quotation was 11.75 and the next figure was 11.85.

There was no rain shown on the map, as had been generally expected and local weather experts failed to see any in sight just at present and the market was bought freely from strong sources. Shorts were also good buyers, but on the rally there seemed to be some cotton for sale as sentiment continues very bearish. Later the market eased off sharply on reports of rain at Galveston and El Paso and less support was in evidence.

Because the detailed weather map failed to show any rains over the western belt, and private reports of deterioration in Arkansas and Oklahoma caused by the high temperatures and dry weather, the market developed a steady tone during the afternoon session, resulting in a rapid advance in prices from the early low point. Some of the large spot interests continue to buy on all reactions, which is encouraging to the bull element.

The bulls contend if rain does not come in the West within the next week that very serious damage will result and the feeling is now becoming more bullish. The market is very easily influenced on any weather news and prices will be governed accordingly.

At the close the market was steady with July at unchanged quotation and other positions at a net advance of 8 to 11 points from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—The map shows cloudy weather prevailing over the eastern half of the belt and south Texas; generally fair elsewhere. Showers were quite general east of the River, but none are shown west. Indications are for increasing cloudiness with prospects for precipitation to come on the eastern States over Sunday. Cloudy and showery weather is indicated for the central and eastern States.

Liverpool was poor at first but rallied on the absence of rain in the West. Spot prices 6 points lower; sales 8,000 bales. First traders here were at an advance of about 6 points on nervous covering by shorts on the Government forecast of fair weather to-day and tomorrow in Oklahoma and Texas, but prices soon dropped to last night's closing figures when Galveston reported heavy rain. New York says the declining tendency is due more to the difference of speculation to furnish support than to weather prospects.

Trading is very quiet, waiting for weather developments in the western belt to see over Sunday.

Spot people report the inquiry for early new shipments is still disappointingly slow.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 8.—Continued high temperatures in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas are giving rise to numerous complaints of crop deterioration, some of which are well founded, as numerous sections of this territory have been without rain for weeks. The market does not advance materially because of brilliant reports from the eastern belt, but trade is beginning to note more attentively the complaints and the tone is steady.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The North disturbance will move slowly eastward, causing showers to-night in the Lake region and the Ohio Valley, and on Saturday in the North and Middle Atlantic States. Occasional showers will continue in the South Atlantic and East Gulf States. Temperature changes will not be important during the next thirty-six hours in the region east of the Mississippi River.

General Forecast.

Forecast until 7 p. m. Saturday:

Georgia—Occasional showers to-night or Saturday.

Virginia and North Carolina—Occasional showers to-night or Saturday; warmer in west portions to-night.

South Carolina, Florida and Alabama—Occasional showers to-night or Saturday.

Mississippi—Fair, except showers in extreme southern portion to-night or Saturday.

Tennessee—Fair in west, showers in east portion to-night or Saturday; warmer in northeast portion to-night.

Louisiana—Fair in north and west, showers in southeast portion to-night or Saturday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Saturday.

Marked Improvement Noted in Wool Trade

BOSTON, Aug. 8.—More inquiry has developed in the wool market during the past week, probably stimulated by the increased demand for lightweight goods, following the recent openings by leading mills. Total sales are estimated at fully 2,000,000 pounds, the business being distributed among the leading houses and covering most of the desirable grades. Primary markets are now well cleaned up except in Ohio, but even there very little is doing and buyers are coming home. Prices here are unchanged.

Liquidation of holdings wherever a profit is shown is the policy in favor and some transfers, it is said, have been made at a very small margin.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

ELLA WHEELER WILCOX WRITES OF "THE WOMAN THOU GAVEST ME," BY HALL CAINE

The Brilliant American Poetess Analyzes the Tragedy of the Woman Whose Child Had No Father, the Horror of Her Loveless Marriage and the Great Problem of This Day.

HALL CAINE'S latest work of fiction, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," is a striking illustration of the change which has taken place in the world of literature during the last score of years.

For frank realism and courageous attacks upon time-worn traditions, it takes the lead of all other books written by all other authors.

The heroine of this novel is a young English girl, reared by an angelic mother and a traditionally brutal British father.

The father is a self-made man, who attains great wealth, and who marries his daughter to a debauched man of title.

The girl's feelings and ideas are not taken into consideration in the least. Neither has she been instructed regarding the meaning of marriage. The death of her mother when she was a mere child deprived her of the one tender tie, and left her with only the companionship of disagreeable relatives or paid attendants.

♣ ♣ ♣

From the hour of her marriage the trials and problems of life begin to present themselves to this young girl. With the first approach of the husband as a lover, all her womanly instincts arise in revolt and the bride refuses to become a wife.

Father, aunt, and clergymen are called into consultation, to small avail. Afraid as the girl is of her father, she is still more terrified at the thought of giving herself to her husband.

She insists upon returning home to her father, but is finally prevailed upon to go away with the husband, if he will leave her undisturbed until he can win her affections.

To this situation the husband consents, wishing to avoid a public scandal. However, his method of winning his bride's affections is not a successful one. Intemperance and vulgarity are among his characteristics and the young wife finds herself growing more and more disgusted with him, daily.

♣ ♣ ♣

Then comes the designing adventuress, in the guise of an old school friend and relative, who enters the home and becomes the mistress of the husband.

Bad as the man is, by nature and habit, one cannot help feeling that his position in his own home was a sorry one, and his affiliation with a woman of his own type does not seem at all surprising.

However, it ends all possibility of his ever winning the heart of his wife. Just at this moment the ideal man enters upon the scene and new complications arise.

Heart, soul, brain and body awaken simultaneously in the young wife, and it is quite naturally a blow to the husband's pride and to his self-conceit when he discovers that the chaste Diana, who has refused her husband's kiss, is an expectant mother.

The wife runs away, alone, and goes to London, where her child is born, and where, in the present phase of the story now running in Hearst's Magazine, she is facing poverty and despair in her efforts to support herself and child.

♣ ♣ ♣

We must remember that she was a very young and perfectly ignorant girl, knowing nothing of life, of the world, or of human nature, when she was plunged into all these distressing situations. All her instincts were high and fine, yet through the curious complications of her destiny, she became the mother of a child of a man she loved while married to a man she loathed.

Mighty problems face her in this situation

Everywhere she sees women respected by society and religious institutions, who are mothers of undesired children of detested men, simply because they are married to them.

Everywhere she sees women despised and shunned because they have brought forth children with love only to legitimatize birth.

Her young mind is torn and tortured with all the great problems suggested by these experiences. Meantime, the lover she believes to be dead is sailing on the high seas searching for strange goals and wholly unconscious of all that has happened to the woman of his heart.

Besides these two central figures are several other very interesting characters; one a beautiful young woman who elopes with a clergyman connected with the school where this young girl was educated. In the midst of her great distress, in her efforts to make a living for her child, she comes upon them in the slums of London; the clergyman dying and the woman selling herself, soul and body, to supply him with the necessities of life.

♣ ♣ ♣

Just how Mr. Caine is going to deal with all these characters eventually is a question to all readers of his remarkable novel.

No amount of brilliant writing and no amount of realistic pen pictures can change to any marked degree the situation of a woman who becomes a mother without the sanction of the law.

Birth needs, first and foremost, both the legitimate call of love and the sanction of marriage to make it ideal and beautiful.

When either element is lacking the child is not well-born in the fullest meaning of that word.

Physically, mentally and morally the child may be perfectly equipped to meet the demands of life, with only love as a dower from both parents; but we live in a world which has been obliged to make social laws to protect its social rights; and where there is a flaw in the birth certificate of a child, in this respect, it is sure to cause suffering and trouble sooner or later for all concerned.

But Mr. Caine's story will set people to thinking along broader and kinder lines regarding these topics.

It presents great subjects for the mature deliberation of all classes and the followers of all creeds. The methods of public charitable institutions toward erring women are fully illustrated in this novel, and will no doubt lead to much discussion and many protests. Read the great story, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me."

♣ ♣ ♣

Hall Caine's extraordinary novel, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," may be begun in the number of Hearst's Magazine now on the newsstands. A complete synopsis of previous chapters is printed in the magazine.

Frederick the Great

By REV. THOS. B. GREGORY.

FREDERICK THE GREAT became King of Prussia one hundred and seventy-three years ago—May 31, 1740. It was not much of a Prussia then, but the little man in the blue coat with the red trimmings made it one of the first powers of the Continent.

A very lovable old fellow, in many ways, was Frederick the Great. Underneath the king there was ever visible the man. After he had conquered his political position he made his nobles and aristocrats treat the common people fairly. He personally saw to it that just laws were instituted. He mortally hated fanaticism and bigotry. When the churchmen attempted to inveigle him into religious persecution, he replied: "Let the parsons go to Heaven their own way, and let everybody else do the same."

At heart he was favorable to democratic institutions. When King George wanted to hire soldiers of him to fight the Americans he indignantly spurned the proposition, and refused to let the Hessians pass through his territory on their way to join the British. He admired the things for which the Americans were fighting as ardently as he did the personal qualities and soldierly parts of the man who led their armies.

Look at the Picture Below, Then Look at Yourself.

You Can Find in This Picture More Information About "How to Succeed" Than Carnegie or Rockefeller Could Give You in Two Hours' Talk.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Work, hurry, plan, achieve—while the others rest.

That is the big secret of success.

The turtle won the race against the hare in the fable, because the turtle walked ALL THE TIME.

He could not run very fast but HE KNEW ENOUGH NOT TO LIE DOWN AND GO TO SLEEP.

Take a lesson from that turtle.

Take a lesson from this picture.

Your competitors are asleep on the grass.

They are thinking that it is too hot to work. They are pitying themselves. They will have more cause to pity themselves later for having pitied themselves so much NOW.

Don't envy the man who is paddling a canoe and telling some young person with a high color what wonderful things he is going to do NEXT WINTER.

Let him paddle his canoe and talk about himself.

YOU WORK NOW.

Lucky the man who works in August, lucky the man who is found by the hottest sun's rays ATTENDING TO BUSINESS.

When you are racing side by side with others, and when all are running, you can not do more than keep even.

Now, while others rest, is your chance to get ahead. Take it.

Don't pick this up and say to yourself that it is a rather nice picture, and put it down again. LOOK at it, study it.

THEN LOOK AT YOURSELF.

Ask yourself, and don't deceive yourself in the answer, whether you are the man WALKING in this picture, or whether you are one of those figures lying asleep on the grass.

The answer to that question will answer your question as to what your probable position will be in the world a few years from now.

There is a better sermon on success in this picture by Tad than in all the nice interviews given out by Mr. Rockefeller telling how he saved his first dollar, or by Mr. Carnegie saying what a wonderful thing it is to give away libraries WITH NO BOOKS IN THE LIBRARIES.

July is gone. If you wasted that month, don't waste more time now on regret. Start off in the right way in August. WALK fast, WORK hard, THINK for yourself, look ahead.

Remember that no man ever hurt himself with too much work.

IT'S WHAT YOU DO BETWEEN WORKING HOURS THAT HURTS YOU.

Remember, also, that no man cheats his employer. You can only cheat yourself by doing a thing less well than you know how to do it.

Be the steady walker, be the man who gains time while others rest, be the man who gets ahead.

And if you really try, good luck to you, for the man WHO REALLY TRIES doesn't fail.

The Time to Get Ahead Is Now

The man who travels and works in these hot and lazy days, while others rest and think it over, is the man that WILL WIN.

Young men that have ambition, and old men too, CAN GET SUCH A START BY DOING THE RIGHT KIND OF WORK NOW THAT THE OTHERS RESTING AND THINKING HOW HOT IT IS WILL NEVER CATCH YOU. August, September, October—they are the months of the winning workingman. (See Editorial.)

The Woman With the Secret Eyes

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SHE lives down in the valley by the running water, the woman with the secret eyes. She has three children, a boy and two girls; her husband has gone away, they say.

She is poor—and she is angry about it. She does not like the old house by the running water and she hates the song the water sings all day and all night.

"If I could only get up on the hill," she says whenever a neighbor will stop to talk with her, "it would be better up there. See what gay lives the people on the hill live. They have company and the lights shine through their windows far, far into the night, and they laugh and sing, and down here, where I live, we hear only the water—all day and all night the water.

And He's Smart.

"My children don't like it here, either. I am going to send them away so they won't hear it—all day and all night, the running of the water there by the door.

"The boy is going away to the city. Did you see the new suit I bought him? Oh, I can manage when I have to, and the new shoes, too, and the hat? Nothing better in town than those clothes—he's 'as good as the rest now.'

"And he's smart, too; he will make his way, and then we will live on the hill, too, maybe.

"The girls are going, too. I shall see to that. Did you notice the pretty new hats I have bought them? Not a girl in town has prettier ones—and their stockings, too. Some day they shall have a piano like the little girls up there on the hill. I will get it for them. You'll see; you'll see. They won't always be so poor."

Last night when I took a walk by the rushing water I met the three children, far, far out on the road toward town, and I saw a man slink through the low trees to the door of the woman with the secret eyes. I heard the woman's voice. She was laughing a cruel, wicked laugh, a dangerous laugh like the warning of a snake, and the man laughed, too.

To-morrow the three children will have more new things to make them look like the children in the houses up there on the hill—and the woman with the secret eyes will laugh again and be proud of the fine showing her children make—and all the time she is digging, digging, digging a pit for their poor little feet; for the people of the town are beginning to whisper.

They nod together, the old women; they grin together, the old men—and the children wonder why it is that people look so strangely at them when they put on their new finery and go out—to be seen.

"As good as the rest!" Poor woman with the secret eyes, don't you know, can't you understand that those children would be better off if they went barefoot, ragged and had too little to eat, and carried with them into the comprehension of growing youth no secret wonder, no half-hidden doubt of you and the way you earn the money to spend so freely on them?

The boy who's going to the city soon, what can he ever be with such a mother? The little girl, with the soft eyes there, how can she ever hold up her head—when she remembers and understands? The slender child with the puzzled eyes, what will she care what dresses she wore—when she lived down by the rushing waters? All she will know is that there was something "queer" about her mother.

Can't Hide Her Story.

Oh, woman with the secret eyes, work, scrub, starve, do anything honest, anything decent, and give your children a memory of you that will keep them straight when their own feet begin to wander. Your eyes are secret, but they can not hide your story. Some day some day these little ones of yours will know it, strive as you may to keep it hidden. Then what of your dreams—of houses on the hill and friends and joy?

Hark, how the water runs through the fringing willows. "To-morrow," it says, "to-morrow"—do you never listen to the warning it is trying to give?
