MODERN JIM BLUDSOE DROWNS

Dancers Rush From Sinking Boat While Engineer Holds Prow on Shore, Then Dies.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Aug. 9.—Divers who explored the steamboat Peters Lee on the bottom of the Mississippi River at Lake Providence, La., today reported finding the body of Engineer Frank O'Neil, his hand holding the engine throttle.

He died there when the boat sank last night, having stayed at his post and held the boat's nose against the shore until the last of the 50 passengers, most of them women, were helped ashore.

O'Neil's act is practically a realization of the martyrdom of Jim Bludsoe, famed in the poem as the steamboat engineer who held her nose to the bank till all were saved, then was burned to death at his post.

A dance was on when the Peters Lee struck a sunken coal barge. A hole was torn in her side. The captain ordered the pilot to steer for the shore. The boat struck the mud and officers and crew began taking off the passengers.

Frank O'Neil in the engine room kept the stern wheel churning while the water poured into the hold.

A negro shouted through the engine room door that the boat was sinking.

"I know it!" shouted O'Neil. "You fellows get on up front where you can get off! I'll hold her nose against the shore!"

The last passenger was safely landed when the boat sank in 40 feet of water.

5-Year-Old Girl Run Down by Doctor Is Only Slightly Hurt

Estie Pierce, 5 years old, daughter of R. E. Pierce, No. 154 Ormond street, had a narrow escape from serious injury Saturday when she was struck by an automobile driven by Dr. E. V. Bailey, whose office is in the Empire Building.

The child in crossing Capitol avenue at Ormond street stopped directly in front of the machine as it rounded the corner. The physician brought his car to a speedy halt and was the first to reach the girl's side. He rushed her in his machine to her home, where it was found she was not badly hurt.

Mrs. Pierce, the mother, declined to make a case against the physician, and Call Officer John West accordingly took no action.

New Brain Surgery Device Is Invented

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug 9.—Delegates to the big medical congress are greatly interested in Dr. R. H. Clarke's device for mapping out the brain and removing parts which are perhaps keys to various disorders of the body.

The instrument has a tiny telescopic knife, supported on a miniature bridge, and the direction of the knife and depth to which it goes is regulated to a hair's breadth by a series of scales.

Surgeons who examined the machine are convinced the time is not far distant when they will be able with it to operate for paralysis and insanity.

Police Seek Missing Mother and Child

Detectives Saturday searched for Mrs. Edna E. Mills, 26, and her pretty 6-year-old girl, who are reported to have disappeared Thursday from their flat in the Fairley Apartments.

W. W. Mills, the husband, has furnished a description of the missing wife and child, and has asked the police to use every effort to find them.

According to information obtained by the husband, Mrs. Mills and the little girl went with another woman.

SAY SULZER USED FUNDS IN WALL ST.

Chairman of Investigation Committee Hints at Impeachment Proceedings.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Governor William Sulzer, of New York, was nearly $50,000 in debt as the result of stock market speculations at the time of his nomination, and used contributions to his campaign fund to make additional purchases of stocks while this debt was hanging over him, according to testimony presented to the Frawley committee of the Legislature.

The evidence is sufficient to warrant proceedings to impeach the Governor for violation of the corrupt practices act, Chairman Frawley declares. A decision as to the committee's recommendation is expected by Monday.

The Governor, according to the evidence, had dealings with three different stock exchange firms and was saved from being sold out by one firm by L. N. Josephthal, a Wall street banker, and a member of the Governor's staff as naval reserve aide. Josephthal, it was brought out, paid a debit balance of $26,739 still standing against the account on July 15 last. This was after the Governor had received repeated calls for more margin.

Used Campaign Funds.

The Governor's transactions with the other firms were for cash, and it was in connection with one of these that Governor Sulzer, according to the evidence, used campaign contributions.

Arranged chronologically, the testimony appeared to show that on January 1, 1912, there stood on the books of the stock exchange firm of Harris & Fuller an indebtedness of $48,599 against the purchase by Governor Sulzer of 500 shares of "Big Four," 200 shares American Smelting and Refining Company and 100 shares of Southern Pacific. This testimony was given by Melville B. Fuller, a member of the firm who on Wednesday had refused to answer the questions of the committee. Before testifying his counsel announced that the Governor had agreed that "Mr. Fuller's lips should be unsealed."

There were no other purchases of stock recorded on this account, according to the witness, until December 5, 1912, when the Governor bought 100 shares of "Big Four," making 600 in all. On December 11 the firm, according to a letter produced by the witness, made its first call upon the Governor for more margin. The books showed that on November 18 previous the Governor had paid in $10,000 against the account, and that on December 16, apparently in response to the call for margin, he paid in $6,000 more.

During Governor's Campaign.

In October of the same year the evidence indicated that Frederick Colwell, the Governor's alleged "dummy," purchased from Boyer, Griswold & Co., 200 shares of "Big Four" railroad stock outright at 60, for $12,025, the $25 representing commission. This was at the height of Mr. Sulzer's campaign for the governorship and transcripts from the firm's books showed the stock bought on October 16 was paid for partly in checks, at least two of which were identified in the testimony as Sulzer campaign contributions. There were seven checks in all, and the others are charged by Eugene L. Richards, counsel for the committee, as having been also campaign checks.

Strikers Beg for Copper Mine Jobs

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 9.—An end in the near future to the strike of 18,000 copper miners in the Calumet region was predicted to-day by the operators when 1,000 members of the miners' union appeared at the Calumet and Hecla company's mines early to-day and asked for their old jobs.

Reports from over the district today said that mines were being put in operation with the aid of non-union workers and deserting strikers.

4 Husky Militants Flog Physician of Home Office Staff

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Four militant suffragettes seized Medical Officer Pearson, of the Home Office staff, as he was leaving Holloway jail and horsewhipped him. The militants had chosen four of the biggest and strongest of their number and when Dr. Pearson tried to get away he was thrown to the pavement. Finally policemen and pedestrians interfered and Pearson was rescued.

While the women were wielding their whips on the doctor's face they kept up a continual shout of "You will kill our leaders, will you?" and "We will give you a taste of your own medicine."

The women escaped in the crowd.

Inspired by the horsewhipping, Mary Richardson, a militant, went on a rampage and was arrested for hurling bricks through the window of a stationery shop.

Members of the arson squad set fire to all the schoolhouses in Sutton, near London. The flames were extinguished before the buildings were destroyed.

House Votes Three Appropriations for Agricultural Work

The House of Representatives Saturday passed several important appropriations.

For publications and maintenance in the Department of Agriculture, $10,000 was appropriated.

For the chemical department in the Department of Agriculture $7,500 was ordered.

These bills now go to the Senate for approval.

Woman as 'Cabby' New York's Latest

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Aug. 9.—Saying that in these days when women are invading every business field, a woman has just as much right to be a hack driver as a stenographer, Mrs. L. J. Moses, of The Bronx, has demanded a license to drive a hack. She is about thirty years old, and attractive.

There was consternation among the hackmen when they saw Mrs. Moses take up her position at the main New Haven Railroad station and put in a bid for fares. Mrs. Moses has a brand new surrey and a fine horse.

Lightning Wreathes Phone Girl's Head

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Report was madetoday to the office of the Chicago Telephone Company of the bravery displayed by Miss Alma Mettier, a telephone operator who stuck to her post in the company's exchange in Whiting, Ind., during an electrical storm, while the building caught fire from lightning three times. The three fires occurred between 11 p. m. and dawn.

Firemen twice drove back the flames from the switchboard while Miss Mettier remained at work.

WOMEN NEVER CAME INTO FACTORY OFFICE, WITNESS TESTIFIES

The second week of the Frank trial ended at 12:30 Saturday with a bitter battle in progress over the testimony of Herbert G. Schiff, assistant superintendent of the National Pencil Factory.

Schiff was called soon after court opened in the forenoon and was on the stand when the adjournment was taken until Monday.

Schiff, besides denying that Frank ever had women in his office, describes in elaborate detail the duties of the superintendent, particularly his work on the afternoon the little Phagan girl came to her death. It was the purpose of the defense to show that it would have been most improbable that Frank, after committing a murder, calmly could have sat down with the burden of guilt resting on his conscience and proceeded with his usual preciseness in the intricate and involved computations required in making out the financial sheet.

Dorsey was given the witness toward the close of the session and started at once to attack Schiff's estimates of time that it would have required for the various details of the work. Schiff made a good witness and the solicitor was able to make little headway in his cross-questioning.

Says Frank Explained Nervousness.

Schiff admitted to Dorsey, however, that Frank was really anxious to get the Pinkertons on the job and that Frank called from his home three times at intervals of little more than half an hour, instructing Schiff to take the matter up with Sig Montag, one of the officers of the pencil factory company. He said Frank declared it to be the factory's duty to its employees.

Schiff also admitted that Frank several times explained his nervousness of Sunday, the day when the body was found, by the abrupt manner in which he had been taken from his house without any breakfast or coffee and by the visit to the morgue where the light suddenly was turned upon the body of the girl victim as she lay before his eyes.

A search Saturday for C. B. Dalton, the man who told of visiting the factory with Miss Daisy Hopkins, developed that he had disappeared from the courthouse. He was called for by the defense when court opened, but did not answer. One of the girls mentioned in his story declares in a letter to The Georgian, that Dalton lied in his statement.

The cross-examination of Schiff will be resumed when court opens Monday morning.

Financial Sheets Put In Evidence.

Reuben Arnold had in court the financial sheet over which there has been much discussion since the murder mystery deveolped. Schiff identified the series of figures and notations as in Frank's handwriting. Arnold had also every financial sheet for the year previous to the crime, and Schiff identified them all as Frank's work. He said that the least complicated of the financial sheets never took less than 2 1-2 or three hours to compile.

The financial sheet identified as the one Frank prepared the afternoon of April 26, the day of the murder, was displayed as an evidence that the writing of Frank was not tremulous, irregular or in any way different from his handwriting in the 51 other financial sheets on file.

Schiff went into the highly complex methods in which the financial sheet is made up, in order to show for the defense the clarity of mind that was required in order to complete the sheet without mistake or confusion.

He narrated that costs and profits were estimated each week on thousands of pencils of different classifications and grades, on hundreds of gross of rubber plugs, on the various classes of leads, boxes, "skeletons" on which the pencils were arranged and other items of material that entered into the manufacture of the pencils. Schiff also read a number of orders to illustrate the amount of other work that ordinarily is taken care of on Saturdays.

An attack was made upon the testimony of young George Epps when court opened Saturday morning. Epps was called to the stand and made to tell of the visit of a Georgian reporter at his home Sunday eevning, April 27. He was asked why he had not told at that time his story of riding to town with Mary Phagan on the day she was killed. Epps declared that he did not talk to the reporter.

The reporter, John Minar, was called immediately after and testified that he talked at length with both the Epps boy and his sister in an effort to determine who last had seen the murdered girl and when. The reporter declared that the sister replied that she had seen Mary Phagan Thursday before, but that young Epps, although present, said nothing, except that he had seen the girl occasionally. Arnold questioned the boy.

Q. Do you recollect the Sunday the body was found?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember a gentleman, a Mr. Minar, coming to your house and talking to you and your sister?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he ask you when was the last time either of you had seen Mary

Dr. Starnes Leads Organists' War on Old 'Jingle' Hymns

Never again will Atlanta churchgoers or any other churchgoers, for that matter, "ringle and jingle" on such familiar hymns as "Throw Out the Life Line," "The King's Business," etc., if Dr. Percy Starnes and his followers at the national convention of organists at Asbury Park, N. J., have their way.

Numerous delegates, headed by Dr. Starnes, announced disapproval of certain hymns sung for generations.

No hard and fast line has been drawn in this contemplated omission. Anything with a "ringle or a jingle," the progressives assert, should be omitted from hymnals, never to be resurrected, even in the wee little country church just on the edge of the backwoods.

The progressives are no respecters of persons. Witness the fact that some of the hymns placed under the ban were penned by Wesley and Isaac Watts.

Q. How much did that leave?—A. $30.64.

Q. Not Frank's money?—A. It certainly was not.

The witness was next shown the requisition and the house order books which he identified as having been used by Frank in compiling the financial sheet. He showed where Frank had made interest on the order book on April 26.

Q. Are these orders correct?—A. Yes.

Q. Look at these letters and see?—A. There is a better proof than that. If they were not correct, we would have heard from them.

Q. Did Mr. Dorsey call for these books?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hold back or conceal anything?—A. No; we gave them everything they asked for.

Q. After Frank entered the orders on this book, what did he do with them?—A. He put them on these orders here.

Q. Take each one of those eleven orders and see if they were checked in his handwriting.—A. They were.

Frank of Nervous Temperament.

The witness went carefully over each order.

Q. I have asked you about a mass of business relative to some orders. They came on Saturday, didn't they?—A. They did.

Dorsey: "I object. He doesn't know to his personal knowledge."

Schiff: "They were not there Friday night, and they were there Monday."

The objection was overruled.

Q. Was not this work entirely separate from the financial sheet?—A. It was.

Q. Did you know little Mary Phagan?—A. Her name was familiar on the pay roll, but I did not know who she was until after her death.

Q. When did you see Frank after Sunday?—A. I saw him Sunday at Bloomfield's.

Q. Was Mr. Frank of a nervous temperament?—A. He was.

Q. Did anything unusual upset him?—A. Yes. He would go all to pieces and run up and down the office.

Q. When anyone would get cut or hurt, you or Mr. Darley would have to look after him, would you not?—A. We would.

Hooper objected to Arnold leading the witness. Arnold admitted that he was leading the witness.

Q. Do you know Jim Conley?—A. Yes.

Q. What sort of a negro is he?—A. There isn't much to him.

Hooper interrupted: "I object to the form of both of these questions," he said. "I move that they be stricken from the records."

Arnold again admited that he was leading the witness.

Q. What work did he do?—A. Truck and ran the elevator.

Q. Do you know his character and was it good or bad?—A. Very bad.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. I would not.

As to Monteen Stover.

Arnold showed the witness the murder notes.

Q. Where do you find this paper in the factory?—A. Anywhere from the roof to the basement.

Q. Are they swept into the basement?—A. Yes.

Q. Why are they thrown around?—A. We use them for note paper in the different departments because this paper is much cheaper than any other we have.

Q. Do you recall hearing a conversation between Mr. Frank and Mr. Ursenbach Friday about going to the ball game Saturday?—A. Yes, but not exactly what was said. I heard Mr. Frank say something about "I will go if I can, Charley."

Q. Can you sit in Mr. Frank's office at his desk and see the clocks?—A. Only half of one of them.

Q. If that safe door is open, could you see out?—A. No.

Q. Could Monteen Stover have seen over it?—A. It would have been impossible.

Q. How much is that safe kept open?—A. All the time when anyone is working in the office.

Q. Did you return to the factory Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Who opened the safe?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you look into the safe that day?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see anything of a silver mesh bag in that safe?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see a purse of any kind in the safe?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. It was a little leather purse Joe Stelka found in the front of the factory a year ago. It was kept in the safe so that if anybody ever called for it it would be there.

Says Conley Was Scared.

Q. How much money did it have in it?—A. Sixty-five cents.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley at the factory Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Tuesday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank when he came back Monday?—A. Yes.

Q. Tuesday?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect him going up to the fourth floor? Were you with him constantly that morning?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he speak to Jim Conley that morning?—A. No.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley speak to him?—A. No.

Q. What did Conley say to you that morning?—A. I saw him near the shipping room. I asked him what he was doing there. He said he was scared to go out—that he would give a million dollars to be a white man. I answered that that would not do any good as they had taken Mr. Frank. I told him to go on down.

Q. Everybody was excited down there, were they not?—A. Yes; the girls were crying. We had to dismiss all the employees for the day.

Q. Were you aware of the fact that this negro Jim Conley sometimes failed to punch the clock?—A. I had gotton after him several times.

Q. You never excused him?—A. No. I docked him.

Q. Did you ever see blood spots on the floor?—A. Yes.

Q. How did blood spots get on the floor?—A. Well, when anyone cut their finger, or anything of that kind, they would come to the office on the second floor to get it fixed.

Q. Would they pass near the ladies' toilet on the second floor on the way to the office?—A. They would in coming from the rear of the second floor.

Q. Have you seen that hair since?—A. No.

Q. Was there any blood under that lathe?—A. No.

Q. Was there any water where this negro said he found the body?—A. No.

Q. Has that place been washed?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you talk to Gheesling at the undertaker's Sunday?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall talking to Sam Hewlett, a detective?—A. Only when we employed him as night watchman.

Q. When did you tell the detectives about Mrs. White seeing a negro?

Arnold interrupted. "How can that have anything to do with this case?" he asked.

His objection was sustained.

Employment of Pinkertons.

Q. How many times did Frank phone you Monday?—A. Two or three.

Q. Where was he then?—A. At home.

Q. The factory was full of detectives?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did he phone you about the Pinkertons?—A. About noon.

Q. What did he say?—A. He asked me to take up with Mr. Montag the employment of a private detective and suggested the Pinkertons. He said he thought it was only fair to the employees.

Q. What time did he call you again?—A. About 1.

Q. What did he want?—A. To know if I had located Mr. Montag.

Q. What did you tell him?—A. I told him I had not been able to get him yet.

Q. In your conversation with Mr. Frank did he say anything about his nervousness?—A. Yes, he spoke of it.

Q. What did he say?—A. I don't remember. I think once he mentioned how terrible the girl looked. Again about them flashing a light on the body in the dark room.

Complained of Being Upset.

Q. He complained about being terribly upset about being rushed from home, didn't he?—A. He said something about that.

Q. What did he tell you the police told him over the telephone?—A. He said they told him a catastrophe or tragedy—I don't remember the term—had happened.

Q. He told you he asked them if there had been a fire?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say about his breakfast?—A. He said one reason he was nervous was that he had not had any breakfast and wanted a cup of coffee.

Q. How long would it take a man to enter those eleven orders on a book?—A. An hour and a half.

Q. You have gone up some since you swore before the Coroner?—A. I did not swear before the Coroner, I said I thought.

Q. Didn't you swear that it would take about 30 minutes?

Arnold objected. "He asked it like he means all that work," Arnold said.

Dorsey: "He knows what I am asking." Laughter followed Dorsey's remark and the deputies were forced to rap repeatedly for order.

Arnold: "I am going to move that this courtroom be cleared, if there is any more of this disturbance. If we have got to take all of this crowd in, we might as well try the case out in the open."

Judge Threatens Disturbers.

Judge Roan: "Mr. Sheriff, find out who is creating this distrubance and bring them to me. I will see if I can't stop it."

Dorsey continued his questioning.

Q. You know that Miss Hall made the acknowledgment, don't you?—A. Sometimes.

Q. That would make some little difference wouldn't it?—A. Yes, five or ten minutes.

Q. Will you explain to this jury, if you can, how it took 30 minutes to enter the orders and only five minutes to write the acknowledgment?—A. I said it would take an hour and a half to do all the work on that paper.

Q. It took that long to fill out an order, enter the number, etc.

Arnold interrupted: "He has asked the witness that question and got his answer," he said.

The objection was overruled.

Q. I want you to detail the work that it took an hour and a half to do. (Schiff took the order book, the transcriptions to the order blanks, the check, and the requisition from the storeroom.) It took 30 minutes to put this much on the book?—A. I don't think so.

Quizzed on Office Details.

Q. Look at this acknowledgment. What are these initials? 'H. H.'?—A. Hattie Hall.

Q. Then she did this?—A. Yes.

Dorsey took an order bearing the initials "H. H." and bearing date of April 26.

Q. Did Miss Hall acknowledge this on April 26?—A. No, I wouldn't think so. It was probably acknowledged Monday or it might have been the day before April 26.

Q. Well, was it the custom to write these before or after they were entered in this book?—A. Either way.

Q. Then you had no regular system?—A. Yes, but one does not hinge on the other. It did not make any big difference how this was done. It had to be done in the regular course of business.

At this point court adjourned until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

Only a Mask.

Men are not being benefited by the summer vacation as they should be. Now, notwithstanding much outdoor life, they are little if any stronger than they were. The tan on their faces is darker and makes them look healthier, but it is only a mask. They are still nervous, easily tired, upset by trifles, and they do not eat nor sleep well. What they need is what tones the nerves, perfects digestion, creates appetite, and makes sleep refreshing, and that is Hood's Sarsaparilla. Pupils and teachers generally will find the chief purpose of the vacation best subserved by this great medicine which, as we know, "builds up the whole system."

The motorman and conductor of the car on which Mary Phagan came to town testified she could not have reached the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Dalton's Testimony False, Girl Named on Stand Says

The Georgian to-day received from Miss Laura Atkinson, of No. 30 Ella street, one of the young women mentioned in C. B. Dalton's testimony, a letter denying absolutely that she had ever walked home with Dalton from the restaurant near the pencil factory, as he swore. Here is Miss Atkinson's letter in full:

Editor The Georgian:

Will you please allow me space to correct a statement made by Mr. C. B. Dalton in his testimony at the Frank trial, and published in your paper yesterday? In answer to a question from Mr. Rosser as to whether he ever went to the pencil factory with any one except Miss Daisy Hopkins he said yes, he used to go to the Busy Bee and wait for the factory to close to walk home with the girls, and gave my name as one of the girls.

His statement, as I read it in your paper, impressed me as being intended to convey to the minds of those who heard it (and of course all who read it) the idea that I was working at the factory at the time he says he went there and that he was in the habit of walking home with me. I have no desire to make any derogatory remarks about Mr. Dalton, but in justice to myself and my good name, I certainly do feel it my duty to say that his statement concerning me is false and he had not the slightest ground whatever for making it and no right to use my name in any way in his testimony.

I have known him only about six months, and have never been in his company but three times. On two occasions I was at church with a gentleman friend who was also a friend of his and he walked with us from the church to my home, less than three blocks, and one afternoon while out walking I met him and he walked with me a distance of about four blocks. That, and a few conversations over the telephone, probably three or four, mark the extent of my acquaintance with him. I worked at the pencil factory exactly two days the second week in July (last month), and did not even see Mr. Dalton on either one of those days. I had never worked there before nor been there, and have not since.

Will you please state these facts in your paper and clear up any false impression that may have been made on people's minds concerning me, and the slur I feel has been cast on my good name by having him make such a false statement where it would be published broadcast over the country? I will appreciate it and thank you very much if you will correct the statement.

Sincerely,
LAURA ATKINSON.

HERE'S THE TIME CLOCK PUZZLE IN FRANK TRIAL; CAN YOU FIGURE IT OUT?

THE RIDDLE OF THE CLOCK IN THE PHAGAN MYSTERY

Jim Conley swears Mary Phagan went up the stairs of the National Pencil factory and was murdered before Monteen Stover arrived. He says he saw Miss Stover go up and leave.

Monteen Stover, State's witness, swears she arrived at 12:05.

George Epps, State's witness, swears he and Mary Phagan arrived at Marietta and Forsyth streets at 12:07.

The car crew, defense's witnesses, swear Mary arrived at Broad and Marietta at 12:07½ and at Broad and Hunter at 12:10.

If Mary Phagan was at Marietta and Forsyth at 12:07, as the State says, or at Broad and Hunter at 12:10, as the defense says, how could she have preceded Monteen Stover, as Jim Conley says, up the factory stairs, when Miss Stover was in the factory at 12:05?

What's the answer?

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!
Hark to the tale of the old hall clock!
Tick-tock! Tick-tock!
This is the tale of the clock!
—Old English Ballad.

This is a tale of an office clock and a motorman's watch—an office clock in the National Pencil Factory, the first requisite of which, it being a "time" clock, is accuracy, and a motorman's watch.

And this is the story of a clock that may or may not mean life and liberty and a restored good name to Leo Frank, or—a fate infinitely worse than mere death itself!

It is a story involving a young business man of repute and high standing, a college graduate and a husband, a brave, womanly little girl, foully murdered, a motorman known to many Atlantans, a newsboy not so well known, a disinterested working girl, a negro sweeper, a confessed accessory to murder, the dead girl's mother—and an office clock.

What does the story demonstrate? That shall be for the reader to say. Here is the story:

What the State Contends.

The State of Georgia is contending that Leo Frank murdered on April 26, before the hour of 12:05 in the afternoon, Mary Phagan, a 14-year-old working girl, employed in the National Pencil Factory, of which Frank was the superintendent.

It cites, among others, to bear out its contention, James Conley, a negro sweeper in the factory, and Monteen Stover, an employee of the factory.

Miss Stover is a disinterested witness—Conley not only is the star witness against Frank, but is interested in fixing the murder upon Frank.

Here is what the State, by its own witnesses, asserts:

Jim Conley swears that a few minutes before Miss Monteen Stover came into the factory—Miss Stover herself swearing that she entered at 12:05—Mary Phagan entered and passed upstairs and into Leo Frank's office.

Miss Stover, asked how she was positive as to the time she went in and the time she came out, stated that she looked at the time clock both as she came in and as she went out. That fixes the time of her coming and going definitely and exactly.

It was before Miss Stover came in that Conley swears Mary Phagan came in. Therefore, Mary Phagan must have arrived at the factory, according to Conley, at least before 12:05, the moment Miss Stover came in.

Before Miss Stover Entered.

But after Mary came in, and before Miss Stover came in, the murder, still according to Conley, had been effected.

For (a) after Mary went upstairs and before Miss Stover came in, Conley (b) heard pattering footsteps toward the rear of the building, where (c) he says the body was found by him later, and after that (d) a scream, and then (e) a period of silence.

All of this, according to Conley, before Monteen Stover entered the factory—that is, before 12:05 certainly—and, considering the things Conley swears happened, several minutes before 12:05, necessarily.

Mrs. Coleman, Mary's mother, swears that Mary left home "about 11:45" in the morning, and George Epps swears he joined her on the car at 11:50, for he looked at a clock at home just before boarding the car, and that he and Mary arrived at Marietta and Forsyth streets at 12:07, the latter hour not definitely fixed in his mind.

Motorman Remembers Time.

The motorman on that car, however, who swears he knew Mary Phagan, and had seen her board his car frequently, and remembers seeing her board that particular car on that particular day, says that the car arrived at Marietta and Forsyth at 12:7½, as that is the time it is scheduled to arrive there, and he was running on time that day.

The motorman swears Mary and a companion got off at Hunter and Broad about 12:10, that being a few minutes' farther run than Marietta and Forsyth. The conductor corroborates the motorman in an additional statement that the car was not running ahead of schedule, the conductors being particularly required by the company not to run ahead of time.

Mary Phagan left the street car at 12:10, still a block and a half from the pencil factory.

If she walked directly to the factory, she could not have reached there before 12:12, in any event.

If the little victim of this tragedy, Mary Phagan, therefore, DID NOT REACH THE FACTORY UNTIL MANY MINUTES AFTER CONLEY SWEARS SHE DID GET THERE, AND UNTIL AT LEAST TWO MINUTES AFTER MONTEEN STOVER HAD DEPARTED, AND UNTIL AFTER CONLEY SWEARS HE HAD HEARD THE FOOTSTEPS AND THE SCREAM, HOW CAN CONLEY'S STORY BE TRUE?

Slain Before She Arrived?

In other words, how could Mary Phagan have been murdered before she arrived at the factory?

Remember, too, that when Frank was asked at the Coroner's inquest as to the time of Mary Phagan's arrival, he said that it was after 12, because the noon whistle had blown some time before—that she might have arrived at 12:10 or, maybe later, perhaps as late as 12:20 or 12:25.

Conley, also, in fixing the time of Mary Phagan's arrival at the factory, said it was soon after the noon whistle blew, therefore, a little after 12—thus placing Mary's arrival between 12 and the time of Monteen Stover's arrival, which was 12:05.

Now then, take your pencil and paper, and figure this problem out for yourself.

Can you reconcile Conley's story with the other things proved, in the main, by the State's own witnesses?

HOW TIME HAS BECOME THE CRUCIAL POINT IN THE TRIAL OF LEO M. FRANK

2 Mary boards the Cooper street car at 11:50, according to witnesses for both State and defense.

3 Mary leaves car at 12:07 by State's testimony and 12:10 by witnesses for the defense.

4 Monteen Stover enters factory at 12:05 and leaves at 12:10. She swore she was certain of the time.

1 Mary Phagan leaves her home at 11:45, according to her mother

5 Jim Conley swears he saw Mary Phagan enter and heard her scream BEFORE Monteen Stover came.

CONFUSION OF HOLLOWAY SPOILS CLOSE OF GOOD DAY FOR THE DEFENSE

What promised to be a very favorable day for the defense in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, was partly spoiled at its close Friday by the bewilderment of E. F. Holloway, day watchman at the pencil factory, in a maze of conflicting statements.

Holloway's confusion under the fire of the Solicitor General was more than offset by the importance of the testimony which had gone before, two of the witnesses giving testimony which was intended to establish that Mary Phagan did not enter the National Pencil Factory on the day of her death until after Monteen Stover had come and gone.

Besides giving the lie direct to Jim Conley's tale, this testimony, if it stands as the truth in the minds of the jurors, upsets the State's theory that Monteen Stover visited the office of Leo Frank while the superintendent was in the metal room with the Phagan girl.

Conley said on the stand that he saw Lemmie Quinn, then Mary Phagan and then Monteen Stover go up to the second floor. The Stover girl said that she entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock. It was 12:10 when she left, she testified. She looked at the time clock both times.

Street Car Men Testify.

W. M. Matthews and W. T. Hollis, the motorman and conductor on the car which brought Mary into town the day that she met her death, testified that she did not leave the car before 12:10 o'clock, the inference from this testimony being that she could not have entered the factory before Monteen Stover and entered and left.

If the testimony of George Epps, the State's witness, is accepted, the defense declares Mary Phagan could not have entered the plant before Monteen Stover.

Matthews said that he knew the girl by sight and frequently spoke to her when she boarded his car. He said that he was relieved at Broad and Marietta streets at 12:07 o'clock the day of the crime and that he went inside the car and sat back of Mary Phagan and a girl companion while they were riding to Broad and Hunter streets. He said they got off at about 12:10 and walked toward the pencil factory.

Matthews' story contradicts that of George Epps, who testified on the stand that he rode to town with Mary, got off the car with her at Forsyth and Marietta streets and walked as far as the viaduct with her on her way to the pencil factory. Matthews and Hollis both said that they had no recollection of Epps being on the car. Hollis said that Mary was sitting alone when he took her fare just after the car got onto English avenue. Matthews said another young girl was sitting with her when the center of town was reached.

Attacks Conley's Story.

The significance of the story of the two street car men is that it seems to add another falsehood to the many that Jim Conley already has told and freely admitted telling.

He did not see Mary Phagan go upstairs to Frank's office, hear the sounds of footsteps going to the metal room, then a girl's scream, and after this witness the entrance and departure of Monteen Stover. On the contrary, the Stover girl was in the factory and gone before Mary Phagan came inside the doors.

Holloway, the day watchman, was called back to the stand by the defense to testify in rebuttal of Conley's testimony in regard to the alleged visits of women to Frank's office. Holloway said that no incidents of this sort ever took place. Conley would have had no opportunity of watching at the door without his (Holloway's) knowing it, he declared.

He denied that Daisy Hopkins ever visited the factory with a man while he was on duty or that immorality of any sort was practiced in the building to his knowledge. He said that Herbert Schiff and Frank were generally in the office together on Saturdays and that neither of them ever had women in the office.

Solicitor Dorsey began cross-examining Holloway in savage fashion and soon had the watchman badly rattled. At one time Holloway refused to commit himself as to what he had testified only a moment before.

"Was that negro drayman there Saturday—you said so awhile ago, didn't you?" asked the Solicitor.

Holloway floundered while Dorsey was insisting on an answer. He could not remember what he had testified. Finally he blurted out:

"If I said he was there, he was. If I said he wasn't there, he wasn't."

Refers to Reward Claim.

"But what is the truth?" persisted Dorsey.

Holloway continued to return the same answer until Judge Roan forced him to make a definite reply. Then he took refuge in the old reliable answer: "I don't remember."

The Solicitor called Holloway's attention to a remark that the watchman was said to have made about Conley being "my nigger" when a reference was made to the rewards offered. He also showed an affidavit signed by Holloway saying that Darley had left the factory the Saturday of the killing at 10:45 in the forenoon. Darley had testified that he left at about 9:30 and Holloway had said only a few minutes before that Darley left about 9:20 or 9:30.

"What did you say 10:45 for in the affidavit you signed for me shortly after the murder?" shouted the Solicitor.

"That was mostly guesswork," explained the witness.

"Did you tell Mr. Arnold that you left the factory every day about 5:30 o'clock?"

"Yes."

Said 3, but Meant 4 o'Clock.

"Didn't you tell me that you left sometimes at 3 o'clock?"

"If I said 3, I meant 4."

"What did you mean by 4:30 just now?"

"That just slipped out."

N. V. Darley, general manager of the factory; H. J. Hinchey, of No. 391 Peachtree street; Harry Scott, "Pbots" Rogers, I. U. Kauffman, T. H. Willett and J. Q. Adams were the other witnesses of the day.

Kauffman identified blueprints and drawings he had made of the Selig home and of the pencil factory. Willett explained the pasteboard model of the factory that he had made from the blueprints. Adams identified photographs he had made at the Selig home and the factory.

Hinchey told of seeing Frank coming from home on a Washington street car the afternoon of the crime. This was intended to discredit Albert McKnight, one of the State's witnesses, who said that he saw Frank board a Georgia avenue car when he left home.

Darley was recalled largely to testify to the possibility of various methods which Conley might have employed in disposing of the girl's body in the event he was the murderer of the girl.

New Theory Is Suggested.

The most startling suggestion came from Darley's testimony that a door leading from the entryway on the first floor into the rear of the building was found broken open right after the crime. Two trap doors open into the basement from this rear room. One of them is over a chute. Reuben Arnold, by his line of questioning, showed that the defense seriously had considered the theiry that the girl's murderer had dragged her through this door on the first floor and had dropped her body down the chute.

The Solicitor brought out that the door might have been opened by the detectives in their search of the building and that if the body ever had been dropped down the chute it most probably would have been left there, as it would have been perfectly hidden.

Absence of Alienists and The Hypothetical Question Distinguishes Frank Trial

By O. B. KEELER.

There are two things about the Frank trial that entitle it to distinguished consideration.

Thus far not a single alienist has been called to bat, and only the common or domesticated type of the dread Hypothetical Question has appeared.

In most of our great murder trials, the alienist is the last resort, or one of the latest resorts. Usually he is introduced by the defense; anywhere from four to eight of him.

The prosecution promptly counters with an equal number of wheel inspectors.

The defense (vide Thaw case) generally proves to its own satisfaction that the defendant was crazy when he did it, but since has recovered his equilibrium, his alibi and all the rest of his scattered personal effects.

The four to eight experts for the State differ slightly with this finding.

They All Agree.

They report that to the best of their several and collective knowledge and belief, which is considerable, the defendant is the happy possessor of one of the sanest little noodles they ever had the pleasure of sitting on. They say there is practically no chance that any such carefully-geared aggregation of mental sprockets ever slipped a cog.

But they add that, if the defense insists on the accused having been non compos at the time he did it, he most assuredly is in the same condition at present, or more so.

In short, the State contends that the defendant either should be hanged or remanded to the solitary upholstery for the rest of his life, according to which is most highly objectionable to the defense.

Vide Thaw case ad lib.

One Notable Exception.

There is only one case on record where a corps of alienists employed by one side agreed with those hired by the opposition.

It seems that the accused person, without any advice or suggestion from his lawyers, broke out all over with shockingly acute symptoms of dementia soon after he was arrested.

The defense ordered out the alienists.

They reported that the accused unquestionably was insane—remarkably insane.

Then the prosecution recruited its experts to the full war strength and ordered them to advance with caution.

To the intense surprise of everyone, including the defense, they reported that the prisoner was crazy beyond the shadow of a peradventure. They said he couldn't be any crazier without coming apart.

Well, that just about settled it. What prosecution could hold out against the combined forces of two sets of alienists? It was the first time on record that the warring experts had agreed.

And this time they were both wrong.

Inside of a year the record-holder for craziness—sprints, middle distance and Marathon—had got himself out of the bat factory and was enjoying life in a more congenial clime that had no extradition provisions in the treaty, if any.

The Hypothetical Question.

The hypothetical question is used rather more frequently than the alienist, because it is less expensive and embarrassing, while offering no more than an even break to the other side and confusing the jury fully as much as the most complicated alienistic explosions.

When the h. q. is sprung by the defense, an expert of considerable pedigree is propped up in the witness chair and compelled to listen, with the jury and such of the auditors as can stay awake, to a detailed relation of incidents beginning some time before the birth of the accused and extending to the date of the crime, with provisions and qualifications to fill out four hours and a half and eleven columns of "six point."

Then the expert says:

"No."

After which an expert for the other side listens to the same recital, repeated.

And he says:

"Yes."

What the jury says never gets into print.

Report of Miss Elizabeth Avery Coulton Shows 160 With High Entrance Requirements.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—A record of great improvement in Southern colleges is contained in a report by Miss Elizabeth Avery Coulton, secretary of the Southern Association of College Women, which is being distributed by the United States Bureau of Education.

In 1900 only three Southern colleges had standard requirements for entrance; this year year 160 announced standard admission requirements. The improvement is found also in libraries, laboratories, buildings and equipment of all kinds. In 1904 the A. B. of only two Southern colleges represented four full years of college work, while by 1914 graduates of at least 25 colleges will have completed four years of standard college work.

Miss Coulton attributes the advance chiefly to two agencies—the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and the General Education Board.

Much still remains to be done, however, according to Miss Coulton.

"There remains the hope," she says, "that many sham colleges may within the next ten or twelve years be induced to stop conferring degrees and become good preparatory or industrial schools; that others may die from lack of patronage, and that the 'righteous remnant' may thus be encouraged to continue to strive after ever enlarging ideals of standard and of service."

ATLANTA GIRL IS DROWNED IN SEA

Ethel Edmondson Overwhelmed by Wrightsville Breakers—Attempted Rescue Fails.

Miss Ethel Edmondson, 24, daughter of Mrs. S. P. Fincher, of No. 343 North Jackson street, was drowned at Wrightsville Beach Friday afternoon. She had been at the beach but a few hours when she decided to enter the surf. Scarcely had she reached the water when a huge wave raced in and knocked her down.

Roy Walraven, of Atlanta, who was with Miss Edmondson, was stunned for a moment by the force of the wave, but recovered quickly and went to her rescue. He had a terrific struggle and but for the timely arrival of Life Saver W. E. Watson he probably would have lost his life.

Miss Edmondson left Atlanta on Thursday night with a party of seven for a ten-day stay at the beach.

She was a member of Grace Methodist Church and was employed as a stenographer by the Wester Music Company.

News of her daughter's sudden death almost prostrated Mrs. Fincher. The body is expected to arrive in Atlanta to-day. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Diggs and Drew Caminetti for immoral purposes, will take the stand against Diggs when his trial is resumed Tuesday. No session of the Diggs trial was held to-day. Diggs and Caminetti will take the stand before the trial is concluded.

Judge Van Fleet dealt the defense another hard blow yesterday when he announced that the jury would not consider the willingness or unwillingness of the two girls to accompany Diggs and Caminetti.

Brand Whitlock May Get Diplomatic Post

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—President Wilson is seriously considering the nomination of another distinguished author to an important diplomatic post, according to information at the Capitol. Mayor Brand Whitlock of Toledo, Ohio, is the latest prospective candidate for diplomatic honors, and if McCombs declines the French ambassadorship, he may get that, or he may go to Belgium.

He had expressed a desire for the Switzerland mission, but that was promised before he got into the fight.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

JULY 31.—You are the only relaxation. Diary, that they permitt me to have, and my fingers, because of my weakness, feel as clumsy and big as telegraph poles. It is fortunate no one will ever read this scrawl.

I want to tell what happened the last hour before I stopped knowing what was happening.

I was sitting on the end of a log engaged in watching a cork on the water, thinking, as I so often do, of Sally, and longing to see her, when I felt Manette's arms around my neck. She had crawled out on the log, behind me, a perilous thing to do.

"Puppy says," she whispered, making believe as she frequently did that the dog could talk, "that a big black cloud is scaring him."

I looked up and found the skies overcast. There was a muttering threat in the waving of the trees, a sullen roar, and big, heavy drops of rain began to fall.

"Puppy is right," I replied, and turned hastily to carry the child back to shore. The log was old and soft and worn smooth, and my footing, with the child in my arms, was precarious. Ordinarily cautious, I thought only of the need of getting Manette to shelter, missed my step, and remember little else.

I had a feeling that I was plunging down, down, with Manette and the whole universe plunging on top of me. Everything turned black, there was a sudden, sharp pain in my head that seemed to spread over my entire body, and then I lost consciousness.

They tell me that the log, a fallen giant of the woods, must have turned, and that in my effort to save us from falling I caught hold of it and pulled it down on top of me. Then the rain began to fall in torrents.

"It was merciful," said Richard this morning, while hovering around me while the nurse took her morning walk, "that you were unconscious. If you had realized Manette's danger and your helplessness, you'd have gone mad."

Manette, they said, was saved from injury by a miracle. I have a sort of indistinct recollection that when I felt myself crashing down threw her from me. I don't know about that.

No one knows what happened in the next two hours, for it was fully that long till the dog appeared at the door of the kitchen, barking and howling. They had heard him coming, they said, by a half hour before he appeared in sight, and were ready with lanterns to follow him.

They supposed when the storm broke that he had found shelter, and were not worried, as we had been caught in so many storms before, and had always come home when they cleared, laughing and making merry over the experience.

A Friend in Need.

The dog saved us. "You may need him," Sally Spencer had urged when the question of takin him came up. She question of taking him came up. We needed him more than we needed anything else on earth. So many friends, who have brains where he has only dumb intuition, do not meet the hour of need as he met it.

Manette says that when she crawled out of the mud I was lying on the bank flat on my back, with the tree trunk lying across me. She found her way, with the rain beating down on her, to my side, and in her baby way tried to rouse me.

Failing, she seemed to realize that something serious had happened, for she snuggled down beside me, put both arms around my neck, and tried, as best she could with her arms and face, to shelter me from the storm.

Her little skirts were torn into shreds, proving the effort the dog made to pull her to a place of shelter. He pulled and barked and pulled, but she held to me with both arms. I can imagine the scene—the frantic efforts of the dog to get her to a place of safety, for the waters in the lake were rising, and her equally frantic efforts to cling to her Uncle Max.

With a mournful howl, he finally desisted, and started off to secure help for the task he was unable to accomplish alone.

Manette was uninjured, and the cold beating of the rain had no bad effects. Her name was the first I spoke when I found myself in bed with strange faces bending over me, and her arms around my neck, and her face pressed against mine, is the last I remember before I lapsed into unconsciousness again.

Afterwards.

Since then, nothing else has mattered. I know that they secured a physician at the hotel, and that the next day my own doctor came by special train, bringing a nurse and Richards with him, and that he has been here ever since.

"I am not going to leave you, Max," he said, "till I pull you through. It was my fault that you came to this place."

I am not sorry. Even physical suffering has its recompense. I do not concern myself over a thing in the world. Manette is safe, and it seems good to me, after so many years of fighting battles all alone, to have some one now fighting my battles for me. The doctor tells me frankly that this will be a battle. I do not care.

They let me have just enough light to see these pages, and when I have grown tired of writing, and I have paused many times in writing this, Richards takes you away, Diary, locks you up, and then the room is darkened again. That is the reason I have begun to regard The Hands as disembodied.

They float around me in the strangest way sometimes, always, through the long hours of the day and night, moving, with quick, deft touches to make me more comfortable. Sometimes I fall asleep holding a hand in mine, and its firm, cool touch seems to give me strength.

"Please," I asked last night, "let me hold your hand. I don't have that horrible feeling of floating off alone to an unknown sea when I have hold of your hand. I have a notion," growing garrulous, for the hours at night are long, "that I would like to be holding your hand when The Pilot calls for me. Somehow I would not hesitate to go."

"The Pilot isn't going to call for you," replied a voice somewhere, I don't know where, she seems such an altogether disembodied person. I wonder sometimes if she is more than Two Hands and a Voice; "and you must go to sleep now and not think of such things."

Modes of the Moment

For the Season.

THE skirt of the very useful and smart afternoon gown illustrated on the left-hand side is slightly draped. A fold of material runs diagonally from the waist to the drapery. The bodice has long sleeves finished off with a row of small buttons and the bodice is cut in jockey style. In the center is shown a charming evening gown carried out in white with a touch of color in the japonica tulle waistband. The foundation is of ivory charmeuse and over this is arranged the crystal-embroidered tulle. Crystal trimming is carried out on the sleeveless bodice. A smart gown with a graceful skirt is illustrated on the right. A tunic or accordion-pleated silk partially covers the charmeuse skirt; the ends of the sash are finished with heavy silk tassels. The collar and cuffs are made of white linen edged with pleated frills.

THE CANNIBAL .:. A True Nature Story Complete

By F. ST. MARS.

THE last sparrow had ceased twittering and tucked his head under his wing for the night; the last blackbird had left off scolding—as blackbirds do when they are going to roost—and the last of the fowls had fluttered up into its perch in the fowl house, when the old buck rat, the master, and for that matter the leader of all the rats in the farmyard, poked his sharp inquisitive nose up out of the hole in the barn floor. He was a very big rat. His ears were like chewed biscuits, and his tail was a stump, half of its proper length, because of the many fights he had had. It would have been difficult to find two inches on his body not marred by old scars. You will see, therefore, that his mere survival proved his great cunning and strength.

Having remained quite still for ten minutes, and made certain that the corner where the big cat usually lay in ambush was empty, he made for the sacks of potatoes ranged in a far corner. It was the work of a few minutes to gnaw a hole in one of these and extract the smallest potato he could get. This he carried to his hole in the floor and down beneath where, hidden under the earth, he had a private store of potatoes, nuts, grain, etc., which he visited when there were too many dangers about for him to venture out to feed.

When next the rat appeared it was in the cowyard, close to the water trough. It was a moonlight night, and everything in the yard showed up clearly, for which reason it had taken him something like an hour to work his way from the barn, moving cautiously always in deep shadow. There was a bull in the yard, a huge beast standing in the full glare of the moon, rumbling to himself deep down in his inside, and two bats were playing in and out of the open thatched cowshed. And that was all, or so it seemed.

Like to Drink.

Rats are thirsty creatures, and like to drink every few hours, is possible, otherwise you would never have found our cunning old rascal here out in the open. The trough was in the moonlight, and as he climbed up it he did so with every sense on the alert. So intent was he upon the possibility of danger around that it never struck him to glance inside the trough. In fact, he was actually leaning over the edge to drink before he realized that something was there drinking already beside himself.

A younger and less cunning rat would have started and bolted, and given himself away, but this one instantly stiffened—"froze," they call it in the wild—and lay still as death. There was no mistaking the identity of the drinker. It was a full-grown weasel. None other possessed that long, lithe form, or that cruel gleam in the eyes, except the stoat.

Apparently the weasel had not seen him, for when it had finished drinking it came slowly along the edge of the trough, balancing carefully, straight toward his crouched, motionless form. And then suddenly he saw its head go up, and its burning eyes peer over the edge below to the yard. Next moment it dropped flat and froze, too—not 3 feet away from the rat. Still it had not seen him, and whatever danger had startled it came plainly from below.

You can understand, then, that the old rat was burning anxious to lift his head and peer over the side. It was awful to lie there and await a danger you could not see, but he could not move.

Then, after about five or six minutes of awful, motionless suspense, very, very slowly over the side of the trough a head lifted and peered down upon the grenish water, and the two beasts crouched motionless within a yard of it.

Beyond a slight start when the head appeared, our rat did not move, and as for the weasel, it did not move at all. Very good reason had the rat to start, for the head was that of his wife. Yes, she was looking for him, and he knew it, but not in the way you think.

Slowly, beside hers, another head moved up and peered over, to be followed by another and yet others, till there were ten of them in a row staring with their gleaming eyes. And all the time beneath, both rat and weasel could hear a continuous pattering and rustling, which told of more rats and yet more.

This, seeing that they were of his own kind, ought to have pleased the rat, one would have thought. It did not. It made him tremble from head to foot, and he had not trembled in the least when he thought himself alone with the weasel. He considered himself, in fact, a match for the bloodthirsty little weasel any day, but he knew he was no match for that which was coming.

Flight.

Then all at once he sprang to his feet, and so quickly that none of the other animals had time to move, he raced along the edge of the trough, sprang clean over the astonished weasel, landed on the far side, slipped, recovered and scampered away along the top of the cattle-mangers, and so to the ground and out of the farmyard gate.

It was magnificently done, that amazingly quick retreat, and it showed a certain amount of reasoning. Had he gone any other way he would inevitably have been either surrounded or overtaken by the other rats, but as it was those that poured after him came into collision with the weasel, who, being the rats' hereditary foe and possessed of astonishing courage, naturally fought and checked the pursuit, until overpowered by sheer numbers. Thus, by the time the whole mob of rats had really got well on the trail of our old villain he was some fifty yards down the hedge that bordered the field outside and beyond hope of capture.

Now you will naturally ask why these rats, his relations and neighbors, and especially his own wife, would seek to murder him—and I will whisper to you the reason. When his wife returned to her nest she found two of her babies gone and another one freshly killed, and her nose told her that our old rat was the culprit.

And that is why, if you go to the farm to-day, you will not find the cunning old rat, who knows all about traps, kills the chickens and ducklings, sucks the eggs and is the worst foe his own kind possesses, living on the farm at all, but about a field or two away, within raiding distance.

Household Suggestions

If black kid gloves or calf-kid boots have become hard, put the gloves on the hand and apply in that position (as if washing the hands) as much camphorated oil as the leather will absorb; then take off and hang to dry and also allow the camphor to evaporate. With boots, rub in well with the hand the same kind of oil. This gives the original suppleness to the leather.

To brighten a carpet, take five or six large potatoes and scrape them finely into a pail of water. Stir, then strain. Wring out a cloth in the water and rub the carpet. Rinse the cloth as soon as soiled. Should soot fall on a carpet, sprinkle dry salt thickly over it, leave it for a few minutes, then brush up. No trace of the soot will remain.

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully, and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Permanganate of potash will clease dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

To cure a feather that has become damaged with rain or dew, sprinkle it thickly with common salt and shake before a bright fire until dry, when you will find it as good as new.

The Wife Who Spends Her Husband's Money

BY DOROTHY DIX.

WHEN a young man asks a girl's hand in marriage the first question that her father puts to him is, "Can you support my daughter in comfort?"

No kind and thoughtful parent, however, ever, takes the trouble to ask a prospective bride, "Can you spend wisely and judiciously my son's hard-earned money?"

Yet the one thing is just as important as the other, and the happiness and success of any marriage depends just as surely on the wife's ability to get the full purchasing power out of a dollar as it does upon the husband's ability to make that dollar. The ne'er-do-well of a man does not more surely bring a family to want and poverty than the thriftless and wasteful woman does.

There is a homely old proverb that says that a woman can throw more out of the back door with a teaspoon than a man can put in at the front door with a shovel. And it's true. No man, unless he is a financial wizard, can make any headway against the extravagance of a wife. It is his wife's discretion as a spender that settles the average man's fate for him, and determines whether he is to sit on a bookkeeper's stool or stand behind the counter the balance of his life, or whether he is going to be well to do and prosperous when he is middle-aged.

When you see the young wife of a man on a moderate salary always dressed up in the very latest cut in fashion, when you meet her at matinees every week and watch her having tea at a smart hotel afterwards, when you encounter her in the butcher shop negligently ordering sweetbreads and squabs, you don't have to go to any fortune teller to forecast the future of her husband and herself.

You Can Forecast.

You can do that for yourself. You can see a stoop-shouldered man growing more and more discouraged as the years go by, and he has nothing to show for his labor except a mountain of receipted bills, and at the end of it all you see a man dead from overwork or thrown out of his job into hopeless poverty into which he sinks.

On the other hand, when you see the wife of a poor young man who does her own housework and makes her own frocks and who buys the cheap cuts of meat at the butcher shop and is particular about having the bones and the trimmings sent home, you are equally able to forecast the future for her and her husband. And you see diamonds and motor cars festooning her horizon along about the time she is 50.

There is nothing new in these statements. Everybody has seen hundreds of such cases. Everybody can recite to you dozens of instances in their personal knowledge of men who have been ruined by their wives' extravagance or made by their wives' thrift. Every mother and father pray that their own son will get a wife who has the saving bank habit instead of the bargain counter mania, yet nobody raises a finger to prevent a catastrophe that threatens every man who gets married and every family that is started.

When a woman is wasteful and extravagant, and throws her husband's good money away we blame her, and say all the hard things about her that we can think of. It's a cruel injustice. It isn't her fault. It's the fault of the idiotic way in which we bring girls up.

We don't teach them the value of money. We don't teach them how to spend it, and to expect them to make a wise use of it is as unreasonable as to expect a land lubber to know how to pilot a ship.

No Experience.

The average girl, until she gets married, has never had the spending of a dollar. Her father has paid her bills, and her mother has decided what she could buy. A little change for street car and soda water is about all the money that has ever jingled in her purse. She has never had any fixed allowance for her clothes and personal expenses, and so has never realized that if she paid too much for a hat she would have to do without a dress, and that you can't spend your money and have it, too.

Parents are so afraid that their daughters will waste their money that they let the girl learn how to spend on her husband's earnings, which is pretty hard on Friend Husband.

It isn't the gril's fault that she doesn't know how to spend her husband's money wisely. It's the fault of her parents who have not taught her one of the most important lessons in life. That this is true is abundantly proven by the fact that women who have earned their living before they were married, and who have thus learned how to handle money, are almost invariably economical and thrifty managers and helps to their husbands.

There is no greater injustice in the world than the way women are treated about money. A woman without money is the most forlorn and piteous creature on earth. She is in a thousand times worse plight, and more danger, than a man is under similar circumstances, yet fathers do not concern themselves to try to protect their daughters against such a fate.

Boys are given money of their own when they are little fellows in order that they may learn to handle it, but the little girl is left to find out this important piece of knowledge the best way she can. A boy is fitted for some occupation whereby he may support himself in comfort. A girl's living is left to chance. She isn't taught any way by which she can keep herself out of the poor house if she doesn't marry, or if her husband should die and leave her penniless.

A rich man leaves his daughter a fortune, but he has not taught her one thing about how to take care of it, and she is left to the mercy of executors and lawyers, and she doesn't even know enough to keep herself from being swindled.

Perhaps some day men will realize that the only way to protect themselves is to teach women how to handle money by giving them a definite sum for their own, instead of making them do the mendicant act for every cent they get. Then we shall hear less about extravagant wives. It's ignorance, not viciousness, that makes women waste money.

Things Worth Remembering

Public executions in Paris prove very profitable to the owners of houses commanding the scene. Windows are let out for the occasion, the landlords watching for the first sign of the execution, and then at once sending word to the persons who have hired the room. If an ordinary criminal is executed, the charge is usually about $5 per seat, but should the offender have committed any remarkable crime, the price runs up to as much as $30.

A Pittsburg boy, William A. Davis reached his thirteenth birthday on Friday, June 13, 1913. He weighed 113 pounds, lived in Taggart street, which has thirteen letters in it, and was in grade thirteen at school. His mother, who was born on December 13, ordered Master Willie to stay in bed on his birthday to insure that no harm should befall him.

Kettlewell, in Yorkshire, possesses the most remarkable electric lighting installation in England. The village is only a tiny place, but the River Wharfe provides it with natural water power, and at a cost of less than $3,000 a lighting plant has been erected, the villagers being the shareholders and the directors of the company.

Now that the large advertising posters that were so great a disfigurement of the country on either side of the French railway lines have been rendered illegal by act of Parliament, advertisers on the Orleans Railway have begun to plant flower beds of brilliant colors in the fields on either side of the line, with the flowers arranged so as to spell the name of the goods to which they are to call attention.

In parts of Australia, where the average yearly rainfall is not more than 10 inches, a square mile will support only eight or nine sheep. In Buenos Ayres the same area, with 34 inches of rain, supports 2,560 sheep.

The average depth of sand in the deserts of Africa is from 30 to 40 feet.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

It Isn't Only Skin Deep, Says Maude Knowlton

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"BEAUTY is not just skin deep—it goes as deep as muscles and blood and brains," said Maude Knowlton, with the combination of buoyancy and conviction that makes a background of emphasis for her every word. "That is not saying that I think beauty is health, for features and figure and expression all have their part in making beauty; and I never forget that it goes right through the outer shell to the bone!"

In a cozy little flat out in the Eighties I visited the clever girl who, under Henry B. Harris' management, has scored several distinct hits, one of the best remembered of which is her marvelous portrayal of Simpson, the real chorus lady in "The Chorus Lady."

"A girl can't very well choose her birthplace," went on the girl whose clever gift of mental twist and verbal kink throws added glamour of interest over big brown eyes, wavy black hair and a complexion that when it is not covered with healthy summer-sun-and-ocean burn is first cousin to the cream of Miss Knowlton's own Irish meadow lands.

"No, a girl can't choose her own native heath, but if she could, a good starting place would be California. My! the air out there is made of component parts of vim, vigor and vitality—and with a little heredity to back up the H2O combination a start like that gives a girl a tendency to a sane, healthy viewpoint, and that kindly attitude toward life that irradiates even a homely face.

Not Posing.

"Of cobrse, I am not posing as a beauty expert," said modest Miss Maude, "but surely we agree that an actually homely face may have a charm of spirit and intelligence, a magnetic giving out of self to the world (that plays give and take all the time, you know) that a mere beauty shell which thrills you for fifteen minutes could not exert after the first quarter was past. Vim, vigor, vitality, a tolerant spirit toward the world and its inhabitants, and buoyancy to carry you over the jolting rough places, will surely bring out all your good points better than a diet list and a course of facial massage.

"Take buoyancy—it will keep you from getting the wrinkles and lines and spiritless eyes that are foes to beauty; it will put spring into your step. And now I have reached a sliding, for I just have to stop and talk about walking and carriage, Miss Beauty Seeker, hearken! You must walk along on the balls of your feet with buoyant spring instead of laggard slouch if you want to be truly attractive. Walk as if you could conquer worlds—and you will conquer hearts.

Swimming Good.

"Swimming helps a lot in the pursuit of proper land movement, for it brings a graceful fluidity of motion—no, I don't mean a fish-walk, but just a flowing, graceful movement in walking that is sure to please every one who sees, and that is sure to make you look fashionably tall and svelte.

"Oh, if you just hold yourself firmly erect on the balls of your feet and carry head and chest high instead of sloppily caved in, you will look twice as attractive, Miss Beauty Seeker—trust me for that!

"Vim to keep you up above the dead level of mediocrity; vigor to carry you on to ambition and achievement, vitality that will make you ready to meet every occasion; buoyancy—of which I have sung at length—and now a tolerant spirit, of which I can not sing at enough length. You know the woman who is always pecking and perking and digging at life, who criticises all the things that fall outside her own interests and inclinations. Her expression and attitude can ruin even a collection of perfect features and coloring."

"The woman who never would do the things New York does, yet who likes to see New York doing them—if it enjoys them," I mused.

"Ex-actly. I'll use that when I interview you," laughed merry Miss Maude. "'Live and let live' is a good motto for living and having the impress of living mark your face in lines of sweetness.

"Now for a background to the vim, vigor and vitality lady—the simplest clothes she dares wear, so she shall not be a mere clothes-horse, but a young - as - possible - attractive girl, whose own sweet nature and expression and well-carried figure are more important than the mere garments in which she is swathed. And there's my ideal of beauty," concluded Miss Knowlton.

And a very ideal ideal I call it—don't you?

Miss Maude Knowlton.

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them."—MRS. SADIE WILLIAMS, 455 James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential,) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

.:. Where There's a Will .:.

MME. ROSE BRASSY opened her autograph album, a masterpiece of morocco and solid gold, and showed its contents to her friend, Mlle. Lili Blanc. The book was full of sketches, drawings and poems by famous men and women, some merry, others grave, but nearly all containing a compliment to the beautiful young matron.

"You have certainly added some very interesting autographs to your collection since I saw it last. But do you know what you ought to have? Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Don't you think I know that," said Mme. Brassy, rather annoyed. "But it is awful difficult to get hold of just as the man himself. M. Brassy has several times invited him to our dinners, but he has always been engaged."

"Of course he is the fashionable poet of the moment," said Lili, "and ever since I have come home from abroad I have heard of nobody else. The great and only Lucien Fond, whose poems are sung everywhere, from Palais Elysees to Montmartre. And that is why you simply must have his autograph in your collection, Rose."

"It is easy enough to say that, Lili."

"I know it is difficult and now more than ever, for Aunt Charlotte told me yesterday that Lucien Fond goes to Versailles every day and spends the whole day with a sick sister. But I must go now, dear. Good-bye. I am coming to tennis on Friday."

When Mme. Brassy was alone she threw herself into a chair and began to think. For a long while she sat in silence, pondering, then she jumped up and said: "I know how it is going to be done."

The next day Lucien Fond drove to the railway station in his car.

He Is Annoyed.

"Call for me her to-night at 10," he said to his chauffeur.

Then he went into the waiting room, where a large portrait of himself made him pull his hat down over his eyes. His popularity annoyed him. He would have given anything to be an unknown traveler who was not made the target of scores of amateur photographers as soon as he left his house.

The train arrived. Fond entered a first-class compartment and was about to close the door behind him when he felt somebody pulling the door from the outside. He growled something between his teeth intended to sound like an apology and retired into the farthest corner and began to look at the landscape, dreading every moment that the young lady who had entered should begin to talk to him. No doubt she was going to pay him one of the compliments which were on everybody's lips and which he hated.

Of course, she was staring at him now. He could just feel it with his nerves without looking up.

But he was evidently mistaken. The young lady did not say a single word. The poet was bored and the sun annoyed him. He rolled down the shade and cast a stolen glance at his companion.

She was exceedingly pretty. Now she took off her veil and hat and arranged her fluffy golden hair. Then she rested her head in her hands and looked as if her thoughts were far away.

Fond, who was a great smoker and who was dying for a cigarette, took out his case.

"May I smoke, mademoiselle?" he asked politely.

She nodded her head and smiled. The poet was surprised. After the way she had looked at him he had expected a volume of words, a repetition of the compliments he was used to hear everywhere and which he hated. But she said nothing—not a single word. Fond was surprised and just a little bit disappointed.

Her Scheme.

While he was smoking he studied his companion's beautiful profile and slender throat. Suddenly she stood up and tried in vain to open the window. Fond rushed to her side and opened it for her. She thanked him with a graceful nod.

"At last I have met a woman who does not talk too much," he thought. "Perhaps she does not know me—and still the way she looked at me."

And Lucien Fond, who hated strangers to address him, now actually wished she would say something.

He threw away his cigarette.

"I am sure the smoke annoys you, mademoiselle," he said.

The young lady merely smiled. Did she mean yes or no?

More and more puzzled by her smile and her silence the poet said:

"Don't you feel a draught? Don't you want me to close the window on my side?"

The young lady produced a notebook, wrote something and handed it to the astonished poet.

"I am deaf," he read.

Deaf, that beautiful young girl—for of course she could not be married. The poet was deeply touched and wrote in the book:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

The poor young girl took her notebook, looked at it, smiled and put it into her bag.

Three days later Mme. Brassy was having a tennis party. Lili played badly and Rose scolded her.

"You must try to play better, Lili."

Her Triumph.

"Where there is a will there is a way, you know."

"Not always Rose—remember Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Oh, I have that."

Rose threw down her racquet, ran up to the house and returned proudly with her album open. A new page had been pasted in, and on this was written:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

"But how in the world did you get it so quickly, Rose, and why does he write 'sincerest sympathy'?"

Mme. Rose blushed a little and replied:

"That is my secret."

A Tie.

"I took Gladys to the party last night. On the way home I proposed, and she accepted me."

"That's winning in a walk, isn't it?"

"Yes, but it was a neck and neck finish."

A Misfit.

"Wealth has its penalties," said the ready-made philosopher.

"Yes," replied Mr. Cumrox. "I'd rather be back at the dear old factory than learning to pronounce the names of the old masters in my picture gallery."

How Wonderful!

The dumb man saw a wheel and spoke.

The deaf man saw a flock and herd.

The blind man bought a plane and saw.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Now, when did she fly?" the detective pursued. "Shortly after I saw her last. And how? On foot and quietly. The hall boy saw her go out, and he says she had her little bag on her arm and looked decent and composed; not like a woman in a delirium, nor even like one who meditates any dreadful crime. But then a boy's observation does not go for much, and we will let it pass. What we will remember, though, is this, that she had a veil on which covered her face, and this veil was brown, or, at least, of a very dark color.

"Two persons have told me so; the boy, whose word goes for little, and the chambermaid, who, though she did not see her go out, had had ample opportunity for observing her veil earlier in the afternoon, and whose word on such a subject does go for something. But, and mark the fact well, for it seems to me important, the veil that was clinging to her dress when she was brought into Mrs. Olney's parlor was gray and decidedly light; not the same one at all, according to description, which she wore when she went out of the hotel. What is the conclusion? That she stopped somewhere. Where? Another thing to find out. And now, about the poison. I went through Twenty-second street very soon after leaving Mrs. Olney's last night, and in front of one of the houses between Fifth and Sixth avenues I found a broken phial reeking with the smell of bitter almonds. So that part of his story is true. I have brought the bits of broken glass. Here they are."

The Coroner looked at them curiously, smelled them and glanced up at Mr. Gryce.

"'Well!" he suggested, in an inquiring tone. He felt that the detective's silence meant something.

"Don't you notice anything peculiar about these pieces?"

"No; to be frank, I don't."

"Poison that is bought at a drug store usually has a label on the bottle."

"True."

"And this phial once had a label on it."

"I see."

"But it has been washed off; or rather rubbed off by a moistened hand. There are bits of it still remaining."

"I perceive them."

"What inference can we draw? That caution has been used. Now caution is not an attribute of the suicide, whether that suicide was an intentional one or the result of a mistake."

"Humph!"

"And then there is another thing that puzzles me. Dr. Molesworth declares he found her sitting on the steps. I looked at those steps. There was a light snow lying on them and this snow lay white and undisturbed, as it would not have done if a woman had been sitting there. But then some little time had elapsed since he removed her from the spot, and enough fresh snow may have fallen to cover up the traces which her skirts must have left behind her."

"Very possible."

"Only those skirts were not damp about the edges, as they must have been if she had been sitting on a stoop under these circumstances. And this to my mind is good evidence that she did not sit there. I would sooner believe she had been carried down the stoop and placed in the phaeton without putting her foot to the ground. Only it happens to be General ——'s house and the thing is impossible."

"But how could you know about her skirts? You did not go near her."

"But Harrison did, the man you yourself sent there to investigate."

"And you have seen him since?"

"Five minutes after you did, sir."

The coroner laughed. He did not understand such zeal.

"I knew you would send for me," resumed Mr. Gryce, "and I want to have something to talk about."

"I see," said the Coroner, "well, go on."

"I am almost at the end of my rope, only—did you wonder what had become of Miss Farley's bag?"

"I did not know she had any."

The Missing Bag.

"The people at the hotel say she had, and here is the ocular proof of it." And Mr. Gryce produced from under his coat a small but neat handbag of black leather, having on one side two ornamental steel letters, one of which was "M," and the other "F." "The initials of her name, you perceive."

The Coroner nodded.

"You wonder where I got this bag. Why, in the most natural place in the world; it was in the phæton.'

"Ah, in the phæton."

"When I went out of the house last night I found that vehicle standing where it had been left, in front of the steps; and as according to the doctor's story, it had been the real scene of death, I naturally thought you would wish to have a look at it. I accordingly took possession of it and not seeing what else I could do with it at that time of night, drove it into a stable nearby. I expected every moment to be stopped by somebody and so forced to reveal my true character; but circumstances favored me and I got off with my prize unmolested. You will find it in charge of an officer at No. 66 West —— street."

"That is all right, but what about the look you took? You never left that phæton for me to examine first."

Mr. Gryce smiled grimly at the plain gold stud he wore as a cuff button. "I see you understand me." He then admitted apologetically, "'Twas dark and I did not find much. Still, I found something; the bag, for instance."

The Coroner looked at him with a doubtful air. Did he suspect for the first time that the detective was concealing something from him? If so, he said nothing, and Mr. Gryce went on blandly.

"This bag may have stories to tell. Suppose you open it, sir."

The Coroner nodded and did so. A number of toilet articles came to light and some linen. All was fresh and neat.

"Nothing that is likely to help up," asserted the Coroner. "No vestiges of poison, no letters, not even a scrap of writing of any kind."

Mr. Gryce did not commit himself.

"I would like to take an inventory of the articles," said he.

The Coroner allowed him to do so and then inquired:

"What about the witnesses? Have you seen the clerks at the drug store?"

"Yes, they have nothing to add to his story. He stopped there, came in as he said, told his fears and asked for assistance. One of them, Herbert Black by name, at once responded, but before he could reach the door the doctor came rushing back and crying out: "It is too late; she is dead, led the way to the phaeton, where they saw the poor girl tumbled in a heap, white and lifeless. They were young men and did not know enough to take her by the hand and see if she were yet cold. They took him doctor's word for granted, knowing him so well, and feeling a natural indisposition to interfere in a matter at once so horrible and so delicate, only asked what they should do to help him. 'I am going to take her straight home,' he told them, and requested one of them to telephone to you and the other to run along at his side as far as the house. This latter duty fell to Mr. Black, and it was he who helped the doctor carry the poor girl in. That is all. I worked a half hour, but could get no more out of him."

Nine Hours to Work.

"And the clergyman?"

"Has nothing to impart."

"And the driver? You surely have seen the driver, he whom he sent out of the way with a prescription to some patient or other?"

Mr. Gryce's brows knit.

"I have had but nine hours to work in," he said, "and one of them was thrown away on that boy. I set a watch for him in three places and succeeded in getting the first word with him. But he had only one story to tell and told it doggedly. It was in strict accordance with that of Dr. Molesworth. He had been ordered to come to the C—— Hotel at a quarter past 8 to take Mr. Pease home after the expected ceremony. He had gone there on foot, Dr. Molesworth himself having driven Mr. Pease to the hotel, and, finding the phaeton at the door, had waited beside it for the clergyman to come out. But before this could happen the doctor reappeared, and declaring that matters had not gone as he wished, took his place in the phaeton and beckoned him in beside him, after which they rode about the streets until the doctor suddenly stopped the horse somewhere near Union Square and, commanding him to get out, gave him a bit of paper, which he told him to take as quickly as he could to Mr. Monroe, in Seventy-third street. He obeyed him and had only just come back. This is what the boy said and all he could say, but I know as well as I know anything that he did not tell me the truth, for when I asked him what cars he took he stared at me for a moment helplessly, and then said, 'The Madison avenue cars,' which story he stuck to, but as one who is very much frightened sticks to a statement he knows is false but dares not abandon."

"I will make him tell the truth," asserted the Coroner.

"It is to be hoped so. He is not dull, but he is mighty obstinate, and is to all appearance very much afraid of his master."

"I know the species. I can manage him."

Mr. Gryce looked doubtful, but did not pursue the subject. On the contrary, he remarked:

"I forgot to give you another point I have made. Molesworth says that after leaving the hotel he rode through the streets searching for his missing bride. Now, a person who searches goes slowly, and when he finds what he seeks in the condition in which Miss Farley was found, he still goes slowly. But Dr. Molesworth's horse had been driven far and fast, as the state he was in when I drove him into the stable amply showed."

"A point? I should think so."

"And that is not all. Seeing that the horse went a trifle lame, I examined his feet, and there, wedged between the hoof and the shoe of his right forefoot I found a bit of gravel which I dare wager never came from the streets about Madison Square. As the horse was not lame enough for it to have been there long, I drew the inference that Miss Farley was searched for in other regions than those his story would lead you to surmise."

.:. Advice to the Lovelorn .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"NO" TO ALL.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The other night I attended a mask ball. Through the masking I became acquainted with a young man. Before leaving he asked me for my address, and if he might call.

I am 17. Should I have given him my address? Should I continue the acquaintance without a conventional introduction if he writes, as I know none of his friends? The young man asked me to call him up on the phone. Can I do this? Would it be proper to have him call? Should he ask me to go out with him (for he said something to that effect)? Could I do so without a chaperone? ROBERTA.

Let the matter end right now. You were foolish to give him your address, but it will be nothing more than passing folly if you make no effort to see him again.

ACCEPT HER STATEMENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Until recently one of the boys in our crowd kept company with a rather pretty girl and through some disagreement discontinued his attentions. All along I have been rather sweet on this same girl and since their disagreement I have been to see her very often.

What I can not understand, is this: It is only two or three months since I have been calling and she says she has learned to love me dearly. This other boy says she has told him that very often, too. Do you really think she could have learned to love me in so short a time?

She has given proof in one way, however. She never went to church before, but now she goes every Sunday night with me.

The boys kid me terribly and I want to hear from some one who is entirely impartial.

WILLIAM.

She may love you. One can not measure love by time, and you say she has given proof. Accept her statements without question and enjoy the present, but make no arrangements for marriage until you are sure that you are more than "rather sweet" on her.

THOMPSON TO TRY TO BREAK JINX TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 9.—When a jinx sits down on a ball club like the one that is following us around, there's no certainty of anything connected with baseball, and I reckon we ought to be thankful that we are permitted to keep on living.

Carl Thompson is due to pitch for us to-day, with Chapman catching and if it hadn't been for the games of yesterday and the day before I'd say we had a good chance to win. Of course, we're due to-day—but there's not a thing to being due, or even past due, when a jinx is on you.

WE thought we had that one-run jinx all busted yesterday and we should have except for as big a slice of the old luck I ever saw a ball club handed in one game.

We got into the last of the ninth with the score 4 to 2 in our favor and Love getting along pretty well, though not up to the mark set in his first game. Young got a hit over second and hurt his leg turning first. Daley ran for him and Perry drew a base on balls. Artie Hofman made to attempts to bunt, and then, forced to take a swing at it, slashed one straight at Bisland. It looked like a sure double play, but the ball took a freak hop far over Bisland's head and Daley scored. Long tried to nip him at the plate, which let Perry get to third and Hofman to second. Then Gibson hit for Noyes and singled, and it was all over.

BUT you can take it from me, the boys are fighting this jinx, and we believe we are bound to bust it soon.

Frank Looks Fit for Tough Go

By Left Hook.

WE have with us to-day Frank Whitney. The fighting carpenter arrived from Chicago yesterday and will be in our midst for several days. In the course of a few hours Charley White will be on the scene. The boys mix in a scheduled 10-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory on Wednesday night.

If Frank ever looked better than he does at the present time we have never had the pleasure of seeing him. The Cedar Rapids boy is the picture of health and says he never felt better in his life. Whitney is already near the weight he has agreed to make, therefore, he will not have to weaken himself by taking off any needed pounds.

FURTHERMORE, Whitney wishes to inform his many admirers here that on Wednesday night he will be ready for the battle of his career. To beat White is a difficult task for any boxer in the world. Whitney knows this and says he will be in the very best condition of his life when he steps into the ring with the Chicago sensation.

"A victory over White means that I will be in line with the topnotchers of my division," chirped Frank yesterday. "This is the chance I have been after for the past two years and, believe me, Charley will be in for the battle of his life. He may beat me, but if he does, it will be only after I have given him the very best that's in me. And, personally, I think that's good enough to win."

Frank spent a couple of days in Chicago before coming here. While there Whitney boxed with several of the tough "Windy City" scrappers, and, according to Frank, they certainly gave him a good work-out.

"I BOXED two days with Packey McFarland, and believe me, I was a pretty busy party," said Frank. "We boxed five rounds on each day and I never had blows showered at me as fast as I did on those occasions. At that, I wanted the experience, as I knew Packey had boxed with White several times and could give me a few pointers."

"They certainly think a great deal of White out West," continued the fighting carpenter. "They are calling him the greatest fighter in the world at his weight and I have already received two offers if I succeed in taking his measure. Kenosha, Wis., has promised me a bout with Leach Cross, while Milwaukee would put me on with Pal Brown."

While here Whitney will train at the Atlanta Athletic Club. Frank expects to spend most of his time boxing as he has already done quite a bit of road work. He expects to start work this afternoon.

WHITE is considered another Packey McFarland in science, speed and cleverness and has something that Packey rarely displays, a knock-out kick. In boxing Charlie, an opponent can not take any chances. Once an opening is left, the Chicago boy is quick to seize an opportunity of sending home his pile-driving blows.

Whitney thinks that the only way to beat White is to keep on top of him and never give him a chance to get set. He will probably map out his campaign on these lines. Frank expects his added weight will be of much advantage to him in this line of battling.

WHILE most of the fans are discussing the White-Whitney battle there are many fans who are giving much attention to the other 10-round battles. The return engagement between Kid Young and Charley Lee is arousing much talk.

Many believe that Young is still the best local boy at his weight when in condition. Lee, however, thinks otherwise and says he will prove for once and all time next Wednesday that he is Young's superior. Both boys are working hard for the go and should put up a corking mill.

THE other mill on the program will be a 10-round affair between Eddie Hanlon and Mike Saul. Mike already holds one victory over Hanlon and is out to prove he can duplicate the performance. Outsiders, however, appear to be stringing with Eddie. The latter's great showing with Terry Nelson has not been forgotten. Eddie fought like a champion the night he defeated Nelson, and if he fights the same way Wednesday, Saul will have his hands full carrying off the lion's share of the purse.

Tickets are on sale at Shepherd's Segar Store, Edgewood avenue and Pryor street.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MERELY A HECTIC DREAM.

Within the Hall of Fame I saw a
noble monument.
It cost ten thousand dollars if it ever
cost a cent.
And breathlessly I asked the guide:
"Who is yon famous gent?"

"That man," he said, "is Adam Umph
—a man whose noble name
Will echo on for countless years and fill the Hall of Fame.
He was a scribe who wrote about the well-known baseball game."

"And why," I said, "should Adam
Umph attain a statue tall
For writing dope about the gents who lean against the ball
When men like Cy and Charlie Dry
are given none at all?"

"At writing dope old Charlie Dry can
put him in the shade,
But this is why," he made reply, "his fame will never fade;
"He never canned a manager nor ever made a trade."

In ancient days baseball was our national game, but that was before we took up the pastime of firing managers.

The fabulous sum of $26 is all that is left out of Luther McCarty's $4,000 purse. This explains why some men would rather manage fighters than work for a living.

Horace Fogel has wished himself on the Federal League, but the said league has been up against it so hard that it is too weak to resist.

If it be true that Tom Chivington said "I should worry," we move that he be barred forever from organized baseball.

The rumor that Artie Hofman will be sold to the Yanks leads some one to suspect that some one has an awful grudge against the said Artie.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

When Frank Whitney steps into the ring with Charley White at the Auditorium-Armory Wednesday night he will not lack for admirers. Frank's great battles against "Battling" Nelson, Joe Thomas and Jake Abel has made him a popular boy among local fans.

Ad Wolgast, ex-lightweight champion of the world, will probably be seen in action on Labor Day. Tom McCarey yesterday secured Ad's word to meet the winner of the Jack White-Dundee bout on August 12.

Terry Nelson still thinks he can handle his mitts with the best of them. Terry has issued a challenge to the winner of the Hanlon-Mike Saul bout and says he will let the purse go winner take all if either of these boys will make 135 pounds at 3 o'clock for a night fight.

Jimmy Johnson, the New York fight promoter, expects a big crowd to attend the Jack Britton-Young Shugrue go next month. Both boys have put up sensational battles in the Eastern cities and are big cards with the fans.

Joe Rivers will have his last chance to make good on the coast on Labor Day when he tackles Leach Cross in a 20-round set-to. If Rivers loses he will be through as a big attraction with the Pacific coasters.

Joe Mandot, the French baker boy, intends to start a busy campaign on Labor Day. He has already wired Lou Castro, the local promoter, for a chance at the winner of the Whitney-White bout. Mandot ought to be a big card here.

Everybody is wondering why Knockout Brown is not fighting and whether he is ever going to put on the gloves again. His manager, Danny Morgan, says he'll start again as soon as the hot spell is over. In the meanwhile, Brown is taking daily spins in his new auto and also taking frequent dips in the briny. He should worry.

Arthur Pelky has refused to meet Jess Willard in a 20-round bout. Instead, he signed to clash with Charlie Miller before Jim Coffroth's club on August 27. Tom Jones, manager of Willard, claims that Pelky was afraid of his protege.

Freddie Luther Wins Long Race

Glenn and Lockner in Dead Heat

FREDDIE LUTHER, of Fort Worth, which is in Texas, earned the rating of pop-pop champion of the South over the 25-mile route, riding a runaway style of race at the Motordrome last night. Jock McNeil was second and Harry Glenn third, but Freddie had a good margin on all of them, though it should be explained that Jock suffered from engine trouble. That circumstance cost him several laps, and he was able to regain all but one and a fraction.

Luther maintained an average of 81.3 miles an hour. Engine trouble caused Morty Graves to drop out rather early in the struggle. Freddie's victory was especially popular in that it was his first victory on the local speedway.

Tex Richards won his customary event in spite of the fact that his own pet machine was in the hospital. This time Tex's victory was in the five-mile invitation race, which he negotiated in the fast time of 3:35.

An unusual finish was noted in the first heat of the special match race between Harry Glenn and George Lockner. The pair finished in a tie so tight that the judges could only call it a dead heat. The race was one of the best pair events yet seen on the speedway, each rider taking one of the two remaining heats. The event will be raced off next Tuesday night.

Following are the summaries:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(One-Mile Heats; 2 Miles, Final.)

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Tex Richards, second. Time, :44 2-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Georges Renel, second. Time, :43 2-5.

Third Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Henry Lewis, second. Time, :43 2-5.

Final—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second; Georges Renel, third. Time, 1:23.

SPECIAL MATCH RACE.
(Between Harry Glenn and George Lockner, best two out of three, 2-mile heats.)

First Heat—Declared dead heat. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—Won by Glenn. Time, 1:27 2-5.

Third Heat—Won by Lockner. Time, 1:28 2-5.

INVITATION RACE.
(Five Miles, Open to All Comers.)

Won by Tex Richards; Georges Renel, second. Time, 3:35.

TWENTY-FIVE-MILE RACE.
(Champion of the South.)

Won by Freddie Luther; Jock McNeil, second; Harry Glenn, third. Time, 18:27 2-5.

CHANCE PAYS $17,000 FOR MAISEL, BALTIMORE PLAYER

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Nothing daunted by his recent experience with Jimmy Callahan in the Chase trade, Frank Chance yesterday added to the list of high-priced "beauties" when he paid Baltimore $12,000 in cash and Players Daniels and Midkiff, valued at $5,000, for Ed Maisel, the star shortstop of the Orioles. Maisel is to report to Chance here to-day.

The high-priced infielder has been much sought by the White Sox, the Boston Braves and other clubs, but the Yankees, striving earnestly to get a winning club, outbid the others. The new man plays third base or shortstop with equal facility. Last season he batted .276 in 159 games, fielded .925 in 138 games at short and .927 in 22 games on the hot corner.

SAVAGE AND KUBIAK GO 10 HARD ROUNDS TO A DRAW

At the game to-day Baerwald and Shanley, of the Memphis club, will be presented with checks for $50 for hitting the Bull signs on their home grounds.

WELSH GO NOT LIKELY TO NET RITCHIE MUCH

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 9.—Willie Ritchie has let it be known that he had accepted the offer of Vancouver promoters for a match with Freddie Welsh on September 1.

This means that Ritchie has little thought of meeting Tommy Murphy, his "logical opponent," in the near future, and judging by remarks heard where sports congregate, Ritchie can prepare himself for a renewal of the criticism he was subjected to while he was touring the footlights and replying vaguely to questions put to him in respect to his ring plans.

There is a whisper around already that the Vancouver offer is not genuine but that Ritchie and Welsh are simply stockholders in a venture which calls for a 20-round bout and the taking of moving pictures. Those who are responsible for this rumor say that the "international aspect" of the bout leads all the parties interested to think that a big clean-up will be made from the "movies."

SENATORS BUY PITCHER.

HELENA, MONT., Aug. 9.—Manager Flannary, of the Helena baseball club, announced yesterday the sale of Pitcher M. Williams to the Washington Americans. The price stated was $3,000. Williams will report to Clark Griffith at the end of the Union Association season.

Ax Hangs Over Evers and Callahan

One-Run Jinx Still On the Job

By O. B. Keeler.

SIDE-STEPPING for the moment the somewhat scrambled managerial lay-out in our own tight little league, and placing a large and furry ear in immediate proximity to the Red Old Hills of Georgia, we are able to discern distant rumblings from the general direction of Chicago.

It listens to the effect that Jake Stahl shortly is to welcome distinguished company in the recently organized club of Canned Managers.

Jimmy Callahan, of the White Sox, and Johnny Evers, of the Cubs, are to be up for membership.

ALSO Thomas Chivington, president of the American Association, who likewise lives and moves and opens his protests in Chicago.

We don't know that anybody in this precinct is likely to get much het up over the prospective skids for Mr. Chivington, so long as he doesn't come down here and start an insurrection.

But there will be a good deal of interest in the fate of the Silent Trojan and the man who could see $18,500 in Larry Chappelle.

CALLAHAN'S case is something brand new, while Evers' has been growling and chirping alternately since before the present season opened.

Cal is simply getting the hot end of it from the bugs, the same as any manager in a town accustomed to a winning ball club, when his bunch falls into a losing streak. The bleacher experts in particular are after his scalp.

But that is only incidental.

It is said that Callahan's manner of handling his men, always sharp and dictatorial, is rapidly getting to the bullying and bulldozing stage. If that is true, it is a serious state of affairs. Most ball players are led and kidded, not abused and nagged, into playing their best. A sore bunch of ball players of the best class will put up a much sorrier fight than an inferior team, working and pulling together, and fighting the enemy intead of the manager.

SWITCHING to Evers, however, we find our o. f., Chubby Cholly Muffy, standing all puffed up in the spotlight and insisting he likes a scrappy club and a scrappy manager.

"I want them to fight—fight each other—fight the manager—fight the other club," says Mr. Muffy. "Johnny Evers has made good. He is there to stay."

But Mr. Muffy said a lot of kind words about F. Chance, too. And M. Brown.

And it is recalled that Roger Bresnahan still is with the Cubs—and that Rajah was pretty well understood to be taken over with the idea that if J. Evers didn't deliver a pennant, he (Rajah) was to have a crack at it.

We don't know about that, except this much:

J. Evers won't win the pennant this year.

AND about Johnny. He's a grand little ball player, but his unruly talking apparatus is getting him in bad. Getting him in worse, it might better be said.

The most ardent Cub fans are getting around to where they want Johnny to play ball. They want him to stay in the game and not spend his valuable time debating with the umpires and walking to the clubhouse.

Johnny may change his tactics.

And he may not.

FROM what we can gather at this distance, the following points appear in evidence:

The One-Run Jinx sticks on the job.

Providence has its arms around Fleharty.

If Slim Love was looking for a fine place to blow, he certainly found it; also, he did a good job of blowing.

The Volunteers' position in the league standing should be reversed, if the game yesterday was a fair sample of their luck.

Bill Smith had better begin coppering his own bets. In the last four games he has left Thompson and Love in too long and Dent not long enough.

But, at that, had Billy's maneuvers turned out the other way, the bugs would have been wagging their alleged domes of thought and talking about what a wise manager he was.

We still have a chance to make the trip all square at Nashville.

WOLGAST AND RITCHIE IN A MATCH FOR COMING FALL

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 9.—Tom Jones is authority for the statement that Champion Willie Ritchie will be seen in action with Ad Wolgast here the last of October or some time in November.

"It is possible," Jones says, "that they may not get together before Thanksgiving, but a return match will be staged here about that time, unless negotiations fall through entirely."

Ad and Tom Jones arrived in town yesterday morning. It is understood that McCarey will make a strong bid for the match and both Ritchie and Wolgast have signified their willingness to be here should the terms be satisfactory.

TEAMS TO PLAY OFF TIE.

There will be a battle royal to-day when the Hallet & Davis and Atlanta National Bank teams of the Manufacturers' League, tie up in the play-off of a tie which now exists between them for first honors. The game will be played at Tenth and Boulevard and called at 3:30 o'clock.

GOLFER MUST BE SUB-CONSCIOUS TO PLAY WELL

By Chick Evans.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—An article in the August Century Magazine by Marshall Whitlack, entitled "Mind versus Muscle in Golf" seems to have attracted much attention. Mr. Whitlack has developed a new theory of play and applied it to his own game. The result has been a marked improvement in his scores. He believes that good golf is played through the lower nerve centers and motor channels, while poor golf is due to the direct interference of the brain or consciousness.

"Apparently we play our good golf in a subconscious condition," he says, "and that is why all interruptions are so disastrous to one's game. According to this theory one must depend upon muscular sense and the preliminary waggle assumes unusual importance, as the right feel must be obtained in action, the waggle must be continued until the muscles feel the balance and poise of the body while in motion."

The chief idea of the whole theory seems to be that the ball must be addressed in motion and not in repose, because in the latter condition the muscles will set and stiffen to the detriment of one's game.

So much for the theory. The other day I met Mr. McCordic, one of Skokie's most prominent golfers, and he asked me if I had read the Century article. He and Douglass Smith read it last Friday night. Saturday morning they went out and made 75 and 77, and attributed that good score to the new idea.

GUS MUDD, one of Beverly's golfers, has sent me the following question:

"What is the penalty when caddy goes into bunker with player in match play or qualifying round?"

I am not an authority on rules, but I have never heard of any penalty attaching to such an act. I consulted Tom Bendelow, who assures me there is no such penalty. If by chance he is mistaken I should be glad to hear from other golfers.

The reason I do not think there is any such ruling as indicated by the question is the enormous size of the bunkers in Great Britain. If a caddy could not go into such a bunker it would work great hardship upon the player.

CAPTAIN R. H. PETERS, a civil war veteran, and an enthusiastic member of the Ravenswood Golf Club, made a wonderful shot on his home course the other day. He was about twenty yards from the fourth green and his ball lay in a grassy hollow and he had to use a well-lofted club to get out. Undismayed, the captain caught the ball deftly and landed it in the hole. It was a very unusual shot and Captain Peters has every reason to be proud of his achievement.

Schwartz Wants to Quit Vols

Hirsig Stingy With "Coin Bag"

By Paul W. Treanor.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 9.—Flying distress signals from every mast, leaking from stem to stern, the poor old hulk in which the Vols have been floundering about in the rough seas has been deserted by the Voltown bugs, and inquiring glances are being turned to a new and up to date craft to be launched next season. Every hope of landing in even decent company has been abandoned and the only thing left to consider is the building up of a club, out of entirely new material.

On top of the multitude of woes of the Schwartzmen, who have experienced the most appalling disasters on their road trips, comes the well-defined gossip that the Boy Manager has thrown up the sponge and asked to be relieved of the managerial worries in 1914. To the thousands of fans who have long been clamoring for Bill Schwartz's scalp the news will be hailed with wild delight, while to a few more thousand who will never believe that Bill has had a fair chance, his resignation will be a tough blow.

The latter clan are asking just who will be the Moses to lead the Vols back to the top rung of the ladder, of which they clambered by only a toe hold, back in 1908 when Bill Bernhard was the pilot. Where are they going to find a leader who can produce better results than Bill Schwartz, when one pauses to analyze the bunch of has-been and discards with which he has been forced to fight, and echo, always on the job, cuts in with the well-known answer.

Hirsig Pleads With Manager.

President Hirsig, according to the dope going the rounds, has pleaded with the boy pilot to reconsider his retirement from the game and direct the club next season from the bench, at the same time offering Bill a mighty fat job in the big garage which the Alibi Boss is building. Bill is a big ace wherever tires and automobiles are concerned and can hook himself on to a soft job any time he wants to send his uniform to a museum.

If anything will prevail upon Schwartz to once more head the Vols, it is going to be the sting of past defeats which prod his ambition to bring a flag to Voltown, for no man lives who can brand the boy manager as a quitter.

The time for post-mortems passed long ago, likewise the weeps over the upset milk can, but Hirsig doesn't know as much about ball players and how the game should be played as a sparrow does about the Panama toll argument, and he just naturally can't keep from jabbing his fins in the pie and deciding on the merits of ball tossers, some thousand miles or more away from his office.

The Murphy of Southern League.

The man who PRESENTED Harry Welchonce to the Crackers, who passed up a chance early in the year to grab off Third-sacker Dodge from the Reds, when they were crazy to get rid of him, who handed down adverse weighty (?) opinions on pitching deals, when the slabbers were cracking, was Hirsig. Time without number he meddled and wrecked the club's chances, for the Charles Webb Murphy of the Southern League is about the best little meddler at large.

When the Vols, after a grueling drive and fighting on sheer nerve, crawled into second place, Bill Schwartz, realizing the club was skating on thin ice, went to his boss on his knees for help, pointed out the weak places and faltering twirlers. And did Hirsig heed the warning? With padlocks that would baffle a burglar's kit, he clamped the lid on the strong box and laughed at the fears of the Vols ever slumping.

Some, with more sentiment than brains, are gaping their heads off for Artie Hofman to be elevated from the ranks, but you can go broke that the former Cub wouldn't touch the leadership if Schwartz has any notion of leading another forlorn hope, and even if Bill should lay the spangles aside, Circus Solly is far too wise a ball player to allow the present flock of Vols to be saddled off on him and put more gray hairs on his scalp.

CHURCH BALL PLAYER UNRULY.

CAMBRIDGE, OHIO, Aug. 9.—J. Powers, a member of the United Brethren Church team, is under arrest here on a charge of assault and held by the police under $300 bond.

Powers, it is alleged, assaulted F. S. Pollock, an umpire here, during a ball game, fracturing his skull. The hearing was delayed pending the outcome of Pollock's injuries. The assault took place during a twilight game late yesterday. Powers took exception to a ruling of the umpire and a fight followed.

GUNBOAT SMITH STOPS FLYNN IN FIVE ROUNDS

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Gunboat Smith is believed to have added some slight weight to his claim of the heavyweight title last night when he whipped Jim Flynn so thoroughly in five rounds that Referee Joh stopped the bout, which was scheduled for ten rounds. The Pueblo fireman was knocked down four times in the fifth round, and was battered fiercely throughout the battle after the opening session.

Smith weighed 183 1-2 pounds and Flynn was five pounds heavier. He started rushing at the first gong and crowded Smith back to his corner, working short-arm jabs to the body. Smith broke away and straightened his adversary up with a savage right uppercut. Then he managed to keep the fireman away from him and jabbed him enough to even things in that round.

Smith continued the same tactics in the next three rounds, keeping Flynn away from him and jabbing him viciously. In the fifth round the Gunboat stopped a fierce swing with his ribs, and on recovering he sailed in savagely with a hail of right and left jabs, followed by a right uppercut flush on the jaw that sent the fireman down for the count of eight. He got up and was knocked down again, and when this had been repeated twice more, Joh stopped the fight.

HUERTA ORDERS DRAFTING OF FRESH DEFI

Determined to Refuse to Recognize Lind—Iron Hand Fails to Curb Carranza's Activity.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VERA CRUZ, Aug. 9.—Captain Snowden, of the battleship New Hampshire, at the direction of John Lind, Special Ambassador from President Wilson to Mexico, to-day sent the following wireless to Admiral Fletcher, commander of the flotilla of United States warships in the harbor here:

"Governor Lind wishes to see the United States Consul and Admiral Fletcher immediately upon his arrival at Vera Cruz Saturday. Governor Lind will not go to Mexico City until Sunday."

Sensational rumors were circulated as to the cause for the conference. The New Hampshire will probably arrive this evening.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 9.—Maintaining his iron hand attitude in spite of international menace from revolutionary armies and threatened coercion, Provisional President Huerta to-day continued his diplomatic battle with the United States by giving orders to draft another note of protest against the coming of Special Ambassador Lind, unless the United States recognizes Mexico or halts Mr. Lind before he arrives in this city.

A tense situation exists here pending the arrival of Mr. Lind, who has been retarded by the State Department at Washington. It is likely that Mr. Lind will not arrive here until Sunday or Monday, if he is not detained en route on orders from Secretary Bryan.

Huerta's hope that defiance of the United States might break down the revolutionary spirit in the north seems to have been futile, according to a message from General Venustiano Carranza, leader of the rebels.

Gains Fresh Followers.

This was a reply to overtures to Carranza to join his forces to the regular army in the event of a "foreign invasion." However, Huerta has gained fresh followers among the radical element by his defiance of President Wilson. Supporters of the provisional president charge that the United States is preparing to act as it did in Cuba.

Sensational reports were current to-day relative to the diplomatic mission of General Felix Diaz to Tokio. Ostensibly Diaz is going to thank the Japanese Government for its representation at the Mexican centennial, but the belief is growing that Japan has consented to make a treaty with Mexico, and that Diaz is really a special ambassador. This treaty, it is reported, has to do with a league of common interests and not with commercial right. It follows the movement of the Government to invite 50,000 Japanese emigrants here to colonize the state of Morelos, which has been nearly depopulated by the rebellion.

Insists on Recognition.

Whether Huerta has any more cards to play in his diplomatic fight against outside interference with Mexican affairs is a question known only to the provisional President and his closest advisers. Huerta insists on "recognition and no parley," but the Government is not in condition to enforce his threat by war.

The national treasury is nearly depleted and the army material of the country has been thinned to a minimum by three years of revolution.

By diplomacy, however, he might still be able, by playing upon the Latin-American republics' fear of annexation and upon the hostility of foreign powers to the spirit of the Monroe Doctrine, to force the United States into a compromising position.

Even Nelson O'Shaughnessy, Charge d'Affaires of the United States Embassy here, is not acquainted with the details of Mr. Lind's mission. He has so informed the Mexican Foreign Minister.

There is a big fleet of United States warships in the harbor at Vera Cruz to welcome the New Hampshire, in which Mr. Lind is traveling. The latest addition to the fleet is the gunboat Wheeling.

Crisis Expected When Lind Presents Message.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—With the issue taut between the United States Government and General Huerta on the question of the diplomatic propriety of John Lind's mission to Mexico, the strain of the Mexican situation in Washington was undiminished to-day.

With the special envoy not due to arrive at Vera Cruz until late to-day, and with no answer forthcoming to the conciliatory statement given out by Secretary of State Bryan yesterday, conditions remain unchanged.

Washington is waiting to hear what General Huerta's specific course of action toward Lind will be. Huerta probably will not recognize the presence of Mr. Lind in Mexico until the latter attempts to transmit the mediation proposals to him through Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy.

It is believed the crisis then will be precipitated unless Huerta backs down completely from the attitude taken in his recent note. It is not believed he will.

That the New Hampshire was delayed purposely by wireless to give President Huerta every opportunity to reconsider his ban on Lind was learned to-day. No official business will be transacted until Monday, allowing Huerta 48 hours more leeway.

Marked activity was noticeable at both the War and Navy Departments, however, and preparations were made to keep offices in these departments open all Sunday.

Secretary of the Navy Daniels to-day made sure that the wireless communication between the naval station at Arlington, Va., and the Atlantic fleet, now maneuvering off Newport, R. I., was unbroken and it was rumored that Secretary of War Garrison, now on a tour of inspection of army posts throughout the United States, would return to Washington immediately instead of September 3.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee will go to the White House at 8 o'clock to-night for a conference with President Wilson at his invitation. It is expected that the President will tell the committee his plans and policy with reference to Mexico.

WHY RESINOL SOAP KEEPS COMPLEXIONS CLEAR AND HEALTHY

When you wash your face do you realize that it is not enough to remove the dirt—that your skin needs a soothing, healing influence to keep your complexion fresh and free from blemish?

Ordinary toilet soaps do not assert this influence. Many of them contain free alkali which tends to dry the skin and destroy its delicate texture. Even the best of such soaps can only clean, they can not heal and protect the skin. Resinol Soap, besides being an absolutely pure toilet soap, contains the same soothing, healing, antiseptic balsams as Resinol Ointment, the value of which in the treatment of skin affections is known throughout the medical profession. That is why Resinol Soap does for the skin what cosmetics are supposed to do—it insures not only a clean skin, but a healthy skin, and a fair, clear complexion. Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment are sold by all druggists. Trial free. Dept. 4-R, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

MAYOR MUM ON 'HEAP BIG TALK' ON FINANCES

Nothing but Language at Star Chamber Session in His Office, Woodward Asserts.

A star chamber conference or executive session oft he Finance Committee of Council was held Saturday morning at 11 o'clock in the office of Mayor Woodward, at which all citizens, officials and newspaper reporters were excluded.

After a solid hour of work, the committee adjourned and departed almost in a body.

When questioned as to the action taken by the Finance Committee, Chairman Humphrey answered:

"The Mayor requested that all newspaper reporters be referred to him. He will give all the information that is to be given out."

The reporters hastened into the Mayor's office and began to question him as to the weighty matters that had called for closed doors and secret session.

"What action did the committee take in regard to the row in the Park Board? Was Carey and Cochran right?" was asked by two or three at once.

"The matter was not even mentioned," replied the Mayor.

"It was understood that the meeting of the committee was called to settle the row. Was that not the case?"

"No, I tell you that matter was not mentioned," replied the Mayor.

"What was the object of the meeting, and what subject was discussed?"

"We simply met in friendly conference and talked."

"Was the subject the crematory, sewer construction or the public schools?" was asked.

"Neither. I found the City of Atlanta $700,000 in debt when I took charge as Mayor, and I am determined that every cent of it will be paid, and that at the end of my term the city will be out of debt. The action of the Supreme Court gave me the power and I have locked the door and have the key safely in my pocket. The Finance Committee must not anticipate revenue that is likely not to show up. Every sum appropriated must be in sight. No chances will be taken."

"But what did the committee do at the executive session?"

"Talked," was the answer.

Mrs. N. B. Wilson, Pauline's mistress, did not think it would do Pauline any harm to run in the street for two hours unattended. But it did. Pauline caught cold. That was three days ago. Three physicians tried to save Pauline's life. Mrs. Wilson was prostrated at the news of her dog's death.

Powers Agree to Rob Turks of Adrianople

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 9.—Assurances were given to the Bulgarian Government to-day by the powers that they would serve Turkey with an ultimatum calling for the evacuation of Thrace, which includes Adrianople.

Doubt is growing here whether peace in the Balkans will be lasting. Bulgaria and Montenegro are dissatisfied with the result of the war, while Turkey will probably seize any pretext to resume hostilities.

There is a strong revolutionary party in Albania which will keep the standing army busy.

Flee From Tariff To Rocking Chairs

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—The north end of the Capitol building looks these days like the upper deck of a summer hotel. The commodious veranda is filled with roomy wicker rocking chairs, occupied by Senators who weary of the tariff debate and seek to get cool.

The idea originated with Sergeant-at-Arms Higgins. He baited the place with two or three rockers and waited to see how the scheme worked. It was so popular that the building could not furnish sufficient chairs to meet the demand.

The couple were married here.

The bride's father gave up the pursuit at the river bank.

Atlantan in Wreck Recovers Strength

In the telegraphic report of the list of injured it was inadvertently stated that Mr. Ashley was a negro. This unintentional error does Mr. Ashley an injustice and is gladly corrected.

MEN AND RELIGION No. 73

CHILDREN OF GEORGIA

"AND THEY ALL WITH ONE CONSENT BEGAN TO MAKE EXCUSE."

Luke 14:18.

They were at dinner.

Jesus said:

"When thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind,

"And thou shalt be blessed."

One at the table pretended to be in sympathy. He began smugly:

"Happy is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God."

The hypocrisy of the man and all others like him was unmasked in the answer made by Jesus. He said:

"A certain man made a great supper and bade many—

"And they all with one consent began to make excuse."

One said one thing, another another.

With one it was a field; with another it was new oxen.

In the end, the Lord said:

"None of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."

And from the highways and the hedges called He His guests.

Are you a maker of hypocritcal phrases as was the man at the Pharisee's dinner table—pretending a love for that which is just and right?

Or, to-day, are you trying to do the will, not of man or men, but of Him who died for you?

Let us have done with excuses!

While spending thousands on fields, hogs and cattle, say not:

"We are unable—

"We can not give proper care to these girls—

"These children must go down in shame because of our lack of money—

"But our beasts we must protect whatever the cost."

If animals are more valuable than girls, let us say frankly: but you know that this is untrue.

You know what Georgia would do.

Consider, then!

The Bill in the House providing a Reformatory for Girls is No. 4—ahead of any other measure appropriating money.

The Penitentiary Committee has approved it.

Unanimously the Appropriations Committee has recommended that it pass.

Why, then, should beasts and fields be provided for by later bills and nothing done for Georgia's wayward and delinquent girls?

BURWELL of Hancock, the Speaker of the House, the Chairman and the vice-chairman, BLACKBURN of Fulton, HARDEMAN of Jefferson, MILLER of Bibb, NUNNALLY of Floyd, PAULK of Berrien, RAGLAND of Talbot, REDWINE of Fayette, RHODES of Clarke, SHUPTRINE of Chatham and SLADE of Muscogee constitute the Rules Committee of the House.

The Bill is in their hands.

Monday is the final day in which the measure can be heard and enacted into law at this session of the Legislature.

These eleven men, THE RULES COMMITTEE, will not prevent a hearing, say their friends. We believe that they will do more, that they will help to pass the Bill.

For they know the worth of a girl-child of ten to fourteen.

And they can appraise a cow or hog.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Auction Sale Sept. 2 Of Acreage in Cobb

McCravy Farm of 175 Acres Subdivided—Sales Total $37,050—Suburban Lot $35 a Foot.

J. B. Jackson, agent, will sell before the courthouse door at Marietta at 10 a. m., September 2, acreage tracts of the A. P. McCravy farm, comprising a total of about 175 acres, on terms of half cash and the balance in one and two years at 7 per cent. Mrs. Jane L. McCravy is administratrix.

The tracts will be one to twenty acres. They lie two miles south of Marietta, at Turner's Crossing, on the Marietta car line. Fourteen front the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the electric car line and the public road.

Small Sales Total $37,050.

Real estate agents have been quite busy this week with small sales, three agents announcing Saturday a total of $37,050. Twenty thousand of this was done by Roff Sims & Co., detailed announcement of which will be made later.

B. M. Grant & Co. have sold for Mary Z. Scales to E. V. Carter, Jr., a vacant lot on the east side of Williams street, north of Emmett street, 55 by 170 feet, for $1,400; for J. R. Holliday to P. H. Dobbins, a lot on the south side of Linden street, east of Myrtle street, 50 by 80, for $1,250; for the Walton Realty Company to Mrs. C. G. Hartman, a 100 by 400 foot vacant lot on the Cheshire road, near Peachtree road, for $3,500, or $35 a front foot, and to a client for C. E. Kauffmann, a 70 by 250 foot lot on the north side of Westminster Drive, Ansley Park, for $4,900.

Seventy Acres Bought.

W. A. Williams has sold to C. S. Minor through Robert W. Parris, of the Graham & Merk Real Estate Agency, four acres of land and a seven-room bungalow at Clarkston, near the Stone Mountain car line, for $2,500.

Mr. Parris handled a deal in which J. R. Phillips, of Atlanta, bought 70 acres of land near Bronwood, Terrell County, from Mr. Rodgers for $3,500, or $50 an acre. This land is on the Central of Georgia Railway, in a rich agricultural section.

County Lot Transferred.

A warranty deed on record Saturday tells of an interesting transfer of a small acreage tract on the Roswell road near Piedmont avenue. J. W. Moore gave the county $2,000 for it June 12, 1912, Luther Z. Rosser acting as commissioner, and Mr. Moore sold it recently to David W. Meadow. The consideration was not named.

Ponce DeLeon Place Sale.

J. W. Garland, of Pike County, has given the Cole-Mitchell Company a warranty deed on the property at the northeast corner of Ponce DeLeon place and St. Charles avenue for $6,500, the buyers assuming a loan of $3,000. The dimensions of the lot are 50 by 161.

Nice Profit in Lot.

A profit of $1,200 is represented in a transfer which has just gone to record. John T. Taylor has sold to Homer W. Cothran for $3,700 a property on West Tenth street, 132 feet east of Ridge avenue, having bought it from Dr. Joel T. Daves, of the Smith & Ewing Agency, for $1,500. The lot is irregular in shape.

Seven Apartments Leased.

Albert S. Adams, manager of the renting department of Bryan M. Grant & Co., announced Saturday the lease of seven housekeeping apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, which was recently placed with his firm for renting. Several smaller apartments of two rooms and bath have also been leased.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "A bullish construction was placed on the Government report on corn, while on wheat it was bearish and on oats mixed. Wheat bulls figure that it will be hard to keep prices down, with corn a failure west of the river and with a great scarcity of feedstuffs in the States of largest production."

Ohio August report on wheat crop, 101 per cent; July, 94 per cent; last August, 49. The July Government report made it 80. Oat crop, 82 per cent; July, 81; last August, 105. They figure fifteen bushels of wheat and 30 bushels of oats as par. No corn report. Timothy condition, 79.

The annual convention of the Wisconsin Retail Grocers' Association will be held at Racine on August 13. Sessions will continue to August 13. O. B. M. Glasson, president of the National Wholesale Grocers' Association, will deliver an address on "Trade Relations."

Canadian crops: A Winnipeg dispatch states that remarkable progress has been made the past three weeks in the crop development; harvest is expected to be in full swing in Manitoba the second week in August.

Denton, of Kansas City, estimates the Kansas corn crop at 50,000,000 bushels.

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. says:

"Wheat—Partly cloudy conditions, with scattered light rains, are noted this morning in the Northwest. There was a little better demand yesterday, with shipping sales in our market of 145,000 bushels, the seaboard reporting fifteen loads for export. Yesterday's Government figures were about as expected by the trade, and we doubt if they prove any especially bearish influence on prices.

"Corn—The weather map shows practically no rain in the corn belt, with temperatures still high. The Government figures do not represent present conditions, as since these figures were gathered the deterioration in the crop as a whole has been very great.

"Oats—The Government figures rather exceed those generally looked for, both as to the probable outturn of the present crop and supplies on hand from the old. We are inclined to think, however, that the showing returns during the coming month may be of a character such as to lower the total yield, as compared with the figures given yesterday.

"Provisions—Packers continue to buy lard. Demand for January good. The market is quiet and featureless at the moment."

Test Arranged for Device to Eliminate Open Switch Danger

A test of the Shepard automatic switch will be given at Oakland City at 3 o'clock this afternoon by the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, which will be witnessed by a large number of railway officials.

The switch is claimed to be a preventive of the open switch evil, and puts the opening and closing of the switch entirely under the control of the engineer. By throwing a lever in the cab the engineer may open the switch, and after his train has passed completely into it the switch automatically closes.

A $700,000 concern has been organized to manufacture the device, the plant being located in Atlanta.

HEAVY SLUMP IN PRICE OF COTTON

Western Rains and Promise of More Cause Heavy Sales. Support Withdrawn.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—With the exception of August, which opened 5 points higher on covering, the cotton market opened easier to-day with other options at a net decline of 4 to 13 points from Friday's final. On the opening the selling was general on a few light showers shown on the map over the western belt and local weather people believed that the barometers in the Southwest point to showery conditions over Texas and Oklahoma over Sunday. There was considerable selling by traders who went long on dry weather talk yesterday.

Futures and spots in Liverpool were quiet.

The buying was extremely light and scattered, being confined mainly to a few large spot houses.

The Government reports showed temperatures in Oklahoma yesterday averaged 104 degrees and Texas 98 degrees; with fifteen stations 100, five 102, two 104 and one station 106 degrees.

As the session wore on the selling became heavy. Little or no support was in evidence. The lack of substantial buying power caused a further reaction in values by dropping 7 to 18 points under the opening quotations. Every option established new low levels not witnessed in many months. August was as low as 11.47; September, 10.96; October 10.92; December, 10.81, and January, 10.92. These declines failed to bring out any fresh demand and the market closed practically at the bottom, showing net losses of 13 to 20 points from the final quotations of Friday.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 9.—Due 1¼ points higher, this market opened steady at a net advance of 1 to 2 points. At the close the market was quiet, with prices at a net gain of 1 to 1¼ points.

Spot cotton dull at 3 points advance; middling 6.46d; sales 3,000 bales, including 2,000 American bales; speculation and exports 200; imports, 4,000 bales, of which 3,000 were American.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 9.—Liverpool is very disappointing with futures 2 to 3 points lower than due; spots 3 points higher; sales, 3,000 bales.

Developments overnight were in favor of unsettled weather, with precipitation coming on the Western States—Arkansas and North Louisiana over Sunday. The map shows increasing cloudiness in Texas and some precipitation in the Northwest and Southeast portions.

Indications are for continued partly cloudy weather in the eastern half with scattered showers. It will become cooler in the northwestern quarter of the belt.

The market opened about 5 points lower, but broke quickly to 11 cents when the Government forecast confirmed private advices of rain prospects over Sunday in the Western States and Oklahoma.

Market prospects next week depend principally on the amount of rainfall in the Western States. The half monthly condition forecasts by the usual private authorities like Ellis and others are expected to show decline, as the rains came too late to affect their condition figures.

Covering by scalpers over Sunday rallied prices in the last hour.

USUAL DULLNESS IN STREET TO-DAY

Market Ruled Within Narrow Range on Weakness of the London Exchange.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—A heavy tone prevailed in the stock market at the opening to-day, although some of the issues made substantial gains on speculative buying. The market here followed the lead of American shares in the London market, weakness having been caused there by crop figures.

Among the losses here were: Amalgamated Copper, ½; American Car and Foundry, ¼; Canadian Pacific, ½; Utah Copper, ⅝; Steel common, ¼; Reading, ¼; Norfolk and Western, ¼; Erie ⅛, and first preferred, ⅝.

Delaware and Hudson made the best gain, advancing 1 point. Wabash was up ⅝. The Harrimans were steady, Southern Pacific advancing ⅜ and Union Pacific ½.

The curb was irregular.

American railroad shares in London were irregular and mostly lower on account of figures in the American corn crop report.

The stock market closed steady.

Government bonds unchanged. Other bonds strong.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New Hampshire road may sue to enforce payment of $50,000,000 repudiated South Carolina bonds.

The stock market held very well Friday after the publication of the Government crop report on corn. It was about what was generally expected. I believe it has been discounted as a market factor. Powerful interests are behind the advance in stocks, and I believe that on any reaction they are a purchase and will sell higher.—G. D. Potter.

Erie earnings for the year ending June 30 shows over 15 per cent on first preferred and over 4 per cent on all stock outstanding.

Anent the ramarkably good foreign trade exhibit for the fiscal year ended June 30 last, the possible effect of tariff reductions on our foreign trade balance becomes a timely topic for consideration. Last year our foreign trade reached a new zenith with a total of exports and imports of $4,275,000,000, or $421,000,000 more than that of 1912. Exports so far exceeded imports that this vast commerce created a trade balance in our favor abroad of $652,000,000. Can this be maintained next year when a new and much lower tariff is in existence? As the new tariff is likely to become operative next month, the effects of its operations will be reflected in 10 of the 12 months of the current fiscal year. The general expectation is that the drastic tariff reductions will result in a marked increase gain in exports. Of course unless exports enjoyed a corresponding increase the foreign trade balance must be reduced.

The foreign stocks are very quiet, but a firm tone prevails.

COTTON GOSSIP

The course of the cotton market now depends entirely on the weather, which must be watched closely. On the other hand, there is a bearish element which is waiting for the first signs of rain in the western belt to sell the market short, as it believes it is entirely too high in the face of excellent prospects that have existed up to the present time. The bulls contend that unless we get good rains in the west within the next few days, the market will set new high levels.

Aside from a few purchases and sales of more than 5,000 bales by Shearson, Baruch and McCormick, there were no large trades in yesterday's market. The gain of 10 points is considered a rather poor showing on continued high temperatures in Oklahoma and Texas, and indicates that the world considers the area deteriorating too small, when compared to the whole, to become frightened over. Another reason, of course, is that speculation is seriously curtailed by the tax threat and the abandonment of practically all arbitrage business by the larger straddle interests awaiting developments at Washington, materially reduces the volume of trade and activity of the market. There was no news aside from the weather details and complaints from Arkansas and the southwest. There are very few bulls to be found among the local crowd.

According to The Journal of Commerce the cotton goods trade is on the verge of broad activity, but tariff delay will be dangerous. The retail trade has been in the market in large numbers during the past week, giving evidences of a real need for goods of a staple character.

Dallas wires: "Texas, partly cloudy to clear; rain at Amarillo and Rockland. Oklahoma, generally clear."

Except fair in Oklahoma and Northwest Texas, the map is partly cloudy to cloudy over the entire belt. Fine rain at Amarillo, Northwest Texas and Galveston. Nice rains also in North Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Atlantic Coast districts. Indications are for unsettled to cooler weather over Sunday in Texas and Oklahoma; also good rain indications for Arkansas, North Louisiana, and showers over the rest of the belt.—Kofler.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—There will be occasional showers during to-night and Sunday in the Lake region and the New England States, while fair weather will prevail elsewhere east of the Mississippi River. The temperatures will be somewhat lower on Sunday in the extreme Northern districts, but the changes in the Atlantic and East Gulf States will not be important.

General Forecast.

General forecast until 7 p. m. Sunday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Sunday.

Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Tennessee—Generally fair to-night and Sunday.

Florida—Fair to-night and probably Sunday.

Alabama and Mississippi—Fair to-night and Sunday.

Louisiana—Showers to-night or Sunday.

East Texas—Fair to-night and Sunday.

West Texas—Fair in south, showers in north portion to-night or Sunday; cooler in north portion Sunday.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

George F. Jones & Son: We expect prices to do better until the drouth is generally broken.

Norden & Co.: We believe that the most reasonable course of cotton is to make use of fluctuations that may be caused by daily weather conditions and be technical position of the market.

Logan & Bryan: Weather conditions in Texas and Oklahoma are the dominating influences, and should that section receive beneficial moisture, lower range of prices will doubtless be seen.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Corn was up as much as 1 cent for the September option early, but it broke ⅞ on predictions of rain in many sections of the corn belt, with sales from 73 down to 72⅛. The other months acted in sympathy. December selling at 68 down to 66⅝ and May 69⅛ to 68⅝, compared to closing prices of yesterday, 67⅛ and 69 respectively.

The Government crop report on corn was considered bullish, but the figures which were made up August 1 failed to reflect the damage as a whole.

Wheat was ⅛ to ⅜ higher at the start, but this and ½ more was lost before the session was more than half an hour old.

Oats were higher early, but sold off with other grains and showed a weakening tendency after the decline.

Hogs were higher and provisions were higher in sympathy.

Whisky Is a Good Driver.

It Drives Away Friends, Happiness, and From the Mind Drives Confidence and Courage.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Send the picture on this page to some man who needs it.

Many men need it, unfortunately.

As you see this man at the table and the two spirits that leave him, you realize that man is not single, but made up of many elements.

These are firmly compacted in the self-controlled man; they work together to make him what he should be.

But whisky, the drug and poison, has the subtle power to dissolve character and take away from the man who scarcely knows it the best elements in his nature.

Whisky beggars a man! It finds him full of hope and courage and confidence in himself.

It finds him with friends, receiving and giving affection.

And one by one it takes these things from him.

The friends are taken and affection is taken. His strength, his prospects go, little by little, as the whisky fills his tissues, conquers his nerves and rules in the foolish brain which often says so pitifully, "If I had just one more drink, I'd be all right."

Just one more drink, and then another, and dozens and hundreds following.

And at last the unhappy man on whom whisky has fastened its clutch sits like the man in this picture. Of all men he alone does not see his degradation, the brutal defacement of what was once a man.

Have you seen a buzzard, a vulture or a crow picking the skeleton of a horse?

Whisky does its work as vilely and as thoroughly as the meanest buzzard.

Bit by bit it picks from the man all he has that is worth while.

Saddest of all is the scene in this picture, when the two spirits that give man his chief hope leave him—when COURAGE AND SELF-RESPECT PASS OUT OF THE DOOR LEAVING THIS POOR WRECK ALONE AT THE TABLE.

Is it even then too late, and is the case hopeless?

No, fortunately, it is never too late, and no man's case is hopeless.

HE CAN, IF HE WILL, RISE UP AND FOLLOW OUT OF THAT DOOR THE SPIRIT THAT HAS LEFT HIM AND OVERTAKE IT AND MAKE IT HIS OWN.

Some of the world's best work has been done and is done now by those that were once robbed by alcohol of all save the one spark that brings man back to his place WHEN HE WILL.

Many a man sits disconsolate, gazing into space, wondering what is to become of him, bitterly repentant, anxious for those that suffer.

And his hope and courage and confidence disappear in the distance.

Help him if you can. Lift him to his feet, start him in the right road.

He may overtake them, HE CAN IF HE WILL.

Portugal Will Never See King Manuel on the Throne---With Gaby Deslys on the Throne Steps.

The Trouble With Portugal Is Ignorance of the People, INABILITY TO READ, but the Republic Will Live.

(Copyright, 1913.)

News from Portugal, sent out by those that hate republican government and that like ignorance, is to the effect that the Republic of Portugal is in danger.

These reports need not seriously worry those that believe in republican government.

For a good many years there have been periodic reports of the same kind coming from France.

The world has been asked to believe that a French pretender, with a forehead one inch and a half high and the intelligence of a canary bird, would succeed in putting up a throne and ruling the French people.

Everybody knows that that is a pitiful joke.

The French pretenders have about as much chance of ruling in France as they have of ruling in Alaska.

The news from Portugal is disturbing only because of the fact that the system of tyranny, brutality and superstition that ruled there for so long, PURPOSELY KEPT THE PEOPLE IN IGNORANCE AND UNABLE TO READ.

Those that would mislead the people, those that hate the republic and hate government by the people, are helped by the fact that the poor peasants in the country, and the clerks and the workers in the cities and towns, are, as a rule, illiterate, unable to read or to sign their own names.

There is no real danger, however, for the Republic of Portugal. There may be a revolution again, but it will end IN ANOTHER REPUBLIC.

The interesting little Manuel will continue sitting at a little tin table on the French boulevard; he will continue to be a moving picture king—not a real one.

Never again will Portugal see him sitting on the throne, spending the money of a people overtaxed and kept ignorant.

If the present rulers of Portugal are replaced by others, they will be no men of the King Manuel type, but men of greater force than the present rulers, able to continue Portugal as a republic; able to carry on the real business of a republic—THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, THE ABOLITION OF IGNORANCE AND THE SUPERSTITION AND BRUTALITY THAT GO WITH IGNORANCE.

Do You Know Any Man Ruined by Whisky?

Show him this picture and the two spirits, SELF-RESPECT and COURAGE, walking away from this unhappy victim of his own weakness. This picture may send some drunkard hurrying out of the door to catch up with the friends that have been driven from him. (See Editorial.)

The Trouble with the World Is There Are So Many Teaching the Truth, So Few Living It---Let Your Life Illustrate Your Theories.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ARE you a student of the power of mind over matter? Are you talking to every one you meet about "Universal Life Principle" and "Vibration" and "Mental and Spiritual Science" and all the other expressions so in vogue to-day among advanced thinkers?

See to It That Your Life Illustrates Your Theories.

If you are, see to it that your life illustrates your theories. Do not let it all end in talk.

I have known a self-supporting woman to use all her income in literature and lectures and lessons on these subjects: "How to Control Destiny," "How to Grow Success," "How to Attain Self-Mastery" and "How to Be Well and Prosperous." Yet she was always ailing. She had not one penny saved, nor respectable clothing in her wardrobe; she slighted her work and forgot her duties and was altogether an unsatisfactory human being.

At almost any gathering of people identified with or interested in Mental, or Christian Science, or New Thought, or any kindred subject, a large majority of the unkempt and nervous and erratic beings are to be encountered. This is true, we know, of all new theories and creeds, for the disappointed and dissatisfied souls of earth naturally turn to new avenues of thought, hoping to find peace. But when we find these unfortunate types representing a religion or a theory and talking its precepts to every passerby, it is a matter of more than temporary regret.

Until you can indicate by your life, your face, your manner and your work that you have found a solution for the problem of existence and a panacea for human ills, do not talk about it. Wait in the silence and grow.

It is a simpler matter to be filled with a conviction than it is to prove that conviction to the world.

But while there are thousands of people to-day talking and writing the philosophy not ten in any thousand are living what they talk. A woman who was all nerves and hysteria and who kept herself and every one about her in confusion and excitement over her troubles and ailments was urged to try Spiritual Science.

"Why, I teach it," she said. "I do not need any one to help me in that way, as I have had a class of young women to whom I have been revealing the truth for some time."

That is the great trouble with the world to-day.

We have so many people teaching and so few living the truth. Because you have gained a little light and begin to understand the philosophy of life do not set yourself up for a teacher or an exhorter until you have proven by your life that what you teach and preach is practicable.

Wait Until You Succeed Before Preaching Success.

Wait until you can keep yourself in health before you begin healing others.

Wait until you are successful in your undertakings before you tell others the way to win success.

Wait until your face expresses peace and calm and happiness before you preach the power of your philosophy to produce these results.

Live first—talk afterward.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THERE is a devil and his name is Doubt;
The country and the city know him well.
He makes each human mind his citadel
And many an honest aim he puts to rout.
He argues well, about it and about—
He kills more love than any tongue can tell;
He leads obedient mortals to his hell
And mocks them when they seek a pathway out.

You do not know him, yet you doubt your friend;
You sneer at him, but doubt a mother's love.
He camps upon your trail until the end.
As smooth as silk, as fluttering as a dove
In every braid he builds his little fires—
He is the trustiest devil Satan hires.

High Cost of Living and Wasted Crops.

Lack of Transportation and the Clutch of the Middleman, He Declares, Has Left Thousands of Carloads of Garden Produce Rotting on the Ground in Texas This Season.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

DOWN in the beautiful and peaceful Pecos Valley in Texas some months ago I saw tons of luscious strawberries rotting in the field because the markets of the North were overstocked and the berries were not worth the freight, much less the cost of picking.

Southwestern Texas is the country that General Sherman had in mind when he made a certain sarcastic remark that has gone clattering down the centuries like a tin kettle to a dog's tail.

The application, however, of water and intelligent labor to the arid land of Texas has worked such miracles that William Tecumseh's far-flung phrase puts that gentleman's perspicacity in jeopardy.

On a single acre of irrigated land I have seen produced ten tons of onions, cabbages in proportion and spinach enough to fill a silo.

The sunshine, the fertility of the soil and water produce crops which, if the truth were told about them, would qualify the narrator for the Ananias Club in any city of the North, and quickly.

Carloads Rot.

The question, however, is to get these fruits and vegetables on the tables of the people who need them most. Lack of transportation and the clutch of the middleman has left thousands of carloads of garden produce rotting on the ground in Texas this past season.

Here is a question so big and important that it deserves the attention of the most able men in the United States to-day.

It is a somewhat curious fact that our lawmaking is largely the work of amateurs.

The men we send to Washington are not the men who have had experience in the matter of taking care of great and important propositions.

They are for the most part men who have wormed themselves into office.

The business of government falls into the hands of the inexperienced and the unfit.

This thing of government by the selfish, the transient and the irresponsible is the most telling criticism to be made of our so-called Democracy.

There should be a method devised by the Government whereby the services of highly trained men can be secured and utilized. And one of the crying needs of the trained man now is in this matter of getting the desirable food products of the South and West into the hands of the people in the cities of the East who need them most.

The Problem.

With peaches rotting in the orchards in the Yakima Valley, millions of dollars' worth of apples ungathered in Washington—hundreds of carloads of onions, cabbages, spinach, berries in Texas, and thousands of people in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and New York going without fresh vegetables and without fresh fruit—this is the condition that challenges our economic skill.

The solution of the high cost of living lies in getting vegetables and fruit direct from farm to family with least possible expense.

And so here comes an invention successfully utilized and worked out whereby fruits and vegetables can be dehydrated.

Most fruit and vegetables contain from 80 to 92 per cent of water. To eliminate this water so the vegetables and fruits can be kept an indefinite length of time is a most desirable evolution to bring about.

Green peas, rhubarb, spinach, raspberries, blackberries, strawberries should be on Christmas tables fresh in all of the cities of the North, and this at a very reasonable price.

Science to Help.

As it is things have to be shipped in season, in refrigerator cars, rushed through and sold quickly. Otherwise they deteriorate and perish.

The expense of transportation of perishable goods is very much greater than that where the article is dehydrated and prepared so it will keep indefinitely.

By evaporating the water in his products the farmer can find a ready market for a vast quantity of fruits and vegetables which are now practically worthless.

The market where the thing has to be sold quickly places the shipper at a great disadvantage and gives the middleman his chance.

I expect to see the day when the United States Government will co-operate with big business to the end that the vast crops of the irrigated lands of the West and South shall be harvested and marketed to the people who need them most, and this at a minimum of expense.

Washington a Mason

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

IT WAS one hundred and sixty years ago that George Washington was given the well-earned right to look upon the "hieroglyphic light which none but craftsmen ever saw."

The venerable and venerated records of Fredericksburg Lodge show that Washington was initiated on November 4, 1752, passed fellowcraft March 3, 1753, and was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason August 4, 1753.

Strange to say, it appears to be a fact that the "Father of His Country" was initiated before he had reached the required age of 21 years. Daniel Campbell, Master of the lodge, granted the special dispensation which enabled the candidate to begin his eastward journey while still a minor.

Grand Master French, of the District of Columbia, declared in an address delivered in 1851 that no one stopped to inquire about Washington's age when his petition was presented; that the majestic proportions of the candidate, together with his well-known character and ability, made upon all concerned the impression that might have been made by a thoroughly matured man.

It appears, however, that the dispensation was based upon the fact that the candidate's duties demanded it. So busy a man was to be received when it was convenient for him.

Washington remained a member of the Fredericksburg Lodge to the day of his death. Among the many other distinguished men whose names appear upon the rolls of the lodge are George Weedon, Washington's adjutant-general; General Hugh Mercer, who fell at the battle of Princeton; Jacob VonBraam, Washington's instructor in sword practice, and Fielding Lewis, Washington's brother-in-law.

The Bible that was used at the time Washington was made a Mason is still in possession of the old Virginia lodge, and is guarded with unremitting care and affection. It is said to be 226 years old, and is still in an excellent state of preservation.

In the evil days of the war between the States the old town of Fredericksburg lay between the opposing lines of Lee and Burnside, and while the bloody struggle was on thousands on both sides thought of the little temple and altar and Bible that were so lovingly associated in their recollection with the man who made the nation whose very existence was then trembling in the balance.

SAY SULZER USED FUNDS IN WALL ST.

Chairman of Investigation Committee Hints at Impeachment Proceedings.

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Governor William Sulzer, of New York, was nearly $50,000 in debt as the result of stock market speculations at the time of his nomination, and used contributions to his campaign fund to make additional purchases of stocks while this debt was hanging over him, according to testimony presented to the Frawley committee of the Legislature.

The evidence is sufficient to warrant proceedings to impeach the Governor for violation of the corrupt practices act, Chairman Frawley declares. A decision as to the committee's recommendation is expected by Monday.

The Governor, according to the evidence, had dealings with three different stock exchange firms and was saved from being sold out by one firm by L. N. Josephthal, a Wall street banker, and a member of the Governor's staff as naval reserve aide. Josephthal, it was brought out, paid a debit balance of $26,739 still standing against the account on July 15 last. This was after the Governor had received repeated calls for more margin.

Used Campaign Funds.

The Governor's transactions with the other firms were for cash, and it was in connection with one of these that Governor Sulzer, according to the evidence, used campaign contributions.

Arranged chronologically, the testimony appeared to show that on January 1, 1912, there stood on the books of the stock exchange firm of Harris & Fuller an indebtedness of $48,599 against the purchase by Governor Sulzer of 500 shares of "Big Four," 200 shares American Smelting and Refining Company and 100 shares of Southern Pacific. This testimony was given by Melville B. Fuller, a member of the firm who on Wednesday had refused to answer the questions of the committee. Before testifying his counsel announced that the Governor had agreed that "Mr. Fuller's lips should be unsealed."

There were no other purchases of stock recorded on this account, according to the witness, until December 5, 1912, when the Governor bought 100 shares of "Big Four," making 600 in all. On December 11 the firm, according to a letter produced by the witness, made its first call upon the Governor for more margin. The books showed that on November 18 previous the Governor had paid in $10,000 against the account, and that on December 16, apparently in response to the call for margin, he paid in $6,000 more.

During Governor's Campaign.

In October of the same year the evidence indicated that Frederick Colwell, the Governor's alleged "dummy," purchased from Boyer, Griswold & Co., 200 shares of "Big Four" railroad stock outright at 60, for $12,025, the $25 representing commission. This was at the height of Mr. Sulzer's campaign for the governorship and transcripts from the firm's books showed the stock bought on October 16 was paid for partly in checks, at least two of which were identified in the testimony as Sulzer campaign contributions. There were seven checks in all, and the others are charged by Eugene L. Richards, counsel for the committee, as having been also campaign checks.

FIRST EXTRA SESSION IN SENATE

Upper House Breaks Record for Year to Clear Away for Slaton's Tax Reform Bills.

For the first time during the present session the Georgia Senate, by convening in extra session Saturday morning, broke a precedent for the purpose of cleaning up the calendar of general bills preparatory to beginning real work on the proposed tax reform.

Senator Miller, chairman of the Finance Committee, paved the way Friday afternoon when he introduced the third and last administration tax measure providing for the imposition of a tax of 1 mill in addition to the 5 mills now levied in 1915, and an additional tax of 1-2 mill in 1916.

In the meantime the Senate substitute to the Sheppard House taxing bill has been read for the second time and printed copies have been distributed to the Senators. In all probability this bill be presented to the Senate for passage Monday morning.

Rush Bills Beaten in House.

At the same time, according to indications, the administration bills which were defeated in the House and presented jointly in the Senate by Senators Miller, McNeill and Tarver will be read and put on their way toward final passage. All four bills should be passed by the Senate not later than Tuesday or Wednesday of next week.

Although just four days remain the Senate will have ample time in which to consider in detail the measures, which, it is conceded by all, are the most important bills presented in the upper house this year.

Rapid-fire work Friday on a big batch of local House bills relieved the congestion to such an extent that only general gills remained on the calendar when the Senate convened Saturday morning.

Excuses Are Turned Down.

It was for this reason that President Randolph Anderson Friday afternoon urged Senators to be in their places in the extra session Saturday. Several otherwise "legitimate excuses" for absences were turned down by the President following adjournment Friday afternoon.

The most important legislation in the upper house Friday was the passage of Senator Sweat's compulsory education bill after a sharp skirmisw in which Senators McNeill, of the Twenty-second, and Allen, of the Twentieth, led the attacking forces. The final vote was 27 to 11.

The bill, as conceded by the authors, is one of the mildest on record and is only the first step in compulsory education legislation in Georgia.

Provisions of Measure.

It provides that children between the ages of 8 and 12 years of age shall be compelled to attend school for at least twelve weeks of each year; also children between the ages of 12 and 14 who are not engaged in some useful employment.

The bill of Senators Oliff and Pope providing for four-year terms for all county officers was tabled upon motion of Senator Oliff, who discovered that the proposed bill was in conflict with constitutional provisions.

Senator Miller's bill fixing prima facie right to the custody of children under 12 years of age to their mother was reported favorably by the General Judiciary Committee.

Boy Scouts Bury Lad Killed by Lightning

Funeral service over the body of John Stanley, who was killed by lightning at Dublin Thursday afternoon, took place at Poole's chapel Saturday morning. The Boy Scouts of Decatur acted as pallbearers and a guard of honor. Interment was at Westview cemetery.

Young Stanley was the son of Commissioner of Labor H. M. Stanley. He was struck while in an open field near Dublin. He was found lying face down, his arms under his body, dead. No one was with him when he was struck.

Poteat Suggests Jail For Slit Skirt Girls

NEW HAVEN, CONN., Aug. 9.—President Edwin Poteat, of Furman College, Greenville, S. C., says young women who are parading in New Haven with slit skirts should be put in jail.

"Women who indulge in such depraved dress are a menace morally to the commonwealth," said Poteat.

'Cutest Dog' Shipped In Plush-Lined Coffin

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Pauline, aged 13 years and 5 months, "the cutest bulldog that ever lived," was placed in a hermetically sealed, galvanized, plush-lined box to be shipped to Los Angeles. Pauline died of pneumonia.

Mrs. N. B. Wilson, Pauline's mistress, did not think it would do Pauline any harm to run in the street for two hours unattended. But it did. Pauline caught cold. That was three days ago. Three physicians tried to save Pauline's life. Mrs. Wilson was prostrated at the news of her dog's death.

Two Girls to Accuse Diggs and Caminetti

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 9.—Martha Warrington and Ida Norris, the Sacramento high school girls alleged to have been taken to Reno in November by Maury I. Diggs and Drew Caminetti for immoral purposes, will take the stand against Diggs when his trial is resumed Tuesday. No session of the Diggs trial was held to-day. Diggs and Caminetti will take the stand before the trial is concluded.

Judge Van Fleet dealt the defense another hard blow yesterday when he announced that the jury would not consider the willingness or unwillingness of the two girls to accompany Diggs and Caminetti.

DIXIE COLLEGES RAISE STANDARD

Report of Miss Elizabeth Avery Coulton Shows 160 With High Entrance Requirements.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—A record of great improvement in Southern colleges is contained in a report by Miss Elizabeth Avery Coulton, secretary of the Southern Association of College Women, which is being distributed by the United States Bureau of Education.

In 1900 only three Southern colleges had standard requirements for entrance; this year year 160 announced standard admission requirements. The improvement is found also in libraries, laboratories, buildings and equipment of all kinds. In 1904 the A. B. of only two Southern colleges represented four full years of college work, while by 1914 graduates of at least 25 colleges will have completed four years of standard college work.

Miss Coulton attributes the advance chiefly to two agencies—the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching and the General Education Board.

Much still remains to be done, however, according to Miss Coulton.

"There remains the hope," she says, "that many sham colleges may within the next ten or twelve years be induced to stop conferring degrees and become good preparatory or industrial schools; that others may die from lack of patronage, and that the 'righteous remnant' may thus be encouraged to continue to strive after ever enlarging ideals of standard and of service."

The idea originated with Sergeant-at-Arms Higgins. He baited the place with two or three rockers and waited to see how the scheme worked. It was so popular that the building could not furnish sufficient chairs to meet the demand.

EXPOSURE OF CONLEY STORY TIME FLAWS IS SOUGHT BY DEFENSE

Hammering away to show alleged glaring discrepancies in time in the story told by Jim Conley, the defense of Leo Frank Saturday morning recalled George Epps, the newsboy who testified to riding into town with Mary Phagan on the fatal day, in an attempt to show that the boy on the Sunday after the crime made no mention whatever of having seen Mary the day before in a talk with a newspaperman. Epps was called to the stand after C. B. Dalton had failed to respond to a call from the defense. Reuben Arnold questioned the boy.

Q. Do you recollect the Sunday the body was found?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember a gentleman, a Mr. Minar, coming to your house and talking to you and your sister?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't he ask you when was the last time either of you had seen Mary Phagan?—A. Yes, he asked my sister, he didn't ask me.

Q. Weren't you there?—A. No, I wasn't there. I was in the house.

Q. Weren't you standing by your sister and she said the last time Mary Phagan was seen by her was Thursday before the murder and you stood there and said nothing?—A. No, I didn't hear that. I was in the house, but I didn't hear all he said to her.

"Come down," said Mr. Arnold.

Shows Lad Didn't Flee From Court.

Mr. Dorsey interrupted.

Q. "George, has there been any trouble to get you to come to court?"—A. No, sir, I was playing ball when they sent for me yesterday and didn't get the message."

Mr. Arnold objected to the question and reply and Mr. Dorsey said:

"Your honor, Mr. Arnold made the impression on this court yesterday that this boy was fleeing from the court. The deputy said he couldn't find him. We just want to show that he was always willing to come."

Judge Roan overruled the objection.

Q. George you were always willing to come, weren't you?—A. Yes, sir. I got tired hanging around the court, and asked you if I could go. You told me you would send for me when you needed me. I came when I got your message.

Holloway Lost in Maze.

What promises to be a very favorable day for the defense in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, was partly spoiled at its close Friday by the bewilderment of E. F. Holloway, day watchman at the pencil factory, in a maze of conflicting statements.

Holloway's confusion under the fire of the Solicitor General was more than offset by the importance of the testimony which had gone before, two of the witnesses giving testimony which was intended to establish that Mary Phagan did not enter the National Pencil Factory on the day of her death until after Monteen Stover had come and gone.

Besides giving the lie direct to Jim Conley's tale, this testimony, if it stands as the truth in the minds of the jurors, upsets the State's theory that Monteen Stover visited the office of Leo Frank while the superintendent was in the metal room with the Phagan girl.

Conley said on the stand that he saw Lemmie Quinn, then Mary Phagan and then Monteen Stover go up to the second floor. The Stover girl said that she entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock. It was 12:10 when she left, she testified. She looked at the time clock both times.

W. M. Matthews and W. T. Hollis, the motorman and conductor on the car which brought Mary into town the day that she met her death, testified that she did not leave the car before 12:10 o'clock, the inference from this testimony being that she could not have entered the factory before Monteen Stover and entered and left.

If the testimony of George Epps, the State's witness, is accepted, the defense declares Mary Phagan could not have entered the plant before Monteen Stover.

Mattnews said that he knew the girl by sight and frequently spoke to her when she boarded his car. He said that he was relieved at Broad and Marietta streets at 12:07 o'clock the day of the crime and that he went inside the car and sat back of Mary Phagan and a girl companion while they were riding to Broad and Hunter streets. He said they got off at about 12:10 and walked toward the pencil factory.

Matthews' story contradicts that of George Epps, who testified on the stand that he rode to town with Mary, got off the car with her at Forsyth and Marietta streets and walked as far as the viaduct with her on her way to the pencil factory. Matthews and Hollis both said that they had no recollection of Epps being on the car. Hollis said that Mary was sitting alone when he took her fare just after the car got onto English avenue. Matthews said another young girl was sitting with her when the center of town was reached.

The significance of the story of the two street car men is that it seems to add another falsehood to the many that Jim Conley already has told and freely admitted telling.

He did not see Mary Phagan go upstairs to Frank's office, hear the sounds of footsteps going to the metal room, then a girl's scream, and then this witness the entrance and departure of Monteen Stover. On the contrary, the Stover girl was in the factory and gone before Mary Phagan came inside the doors.

NEWSBOY'S EVIDENCE IS ATTACKED BY DEFENSE; FLAWS IN TIME SOUGHT

Holloway, the day watchman, was called back to the stand by the defense to testify in rebuttal of Conley's testimony in regard to the alleged visits of women to Frank's office. Holloway said that no incidents of this sort ever took place. Conley would have had no opportunity of watching at the door without his (Holloway's) knowing it, he declared.

He denied that Daisy Hopkins ever visited the factory with a man while he was on duty or that immorality of any sort was practiced in the building to his knowledge. He said that Herbert Schiff and Frank were generally in the office together on Saturdays and that neither of them ever had women in the office.

Solicitor Dorsey began cross-examining Holloway in savage fashion and soon had the watchman badly rattled. At one time Holloway refused to commit himself as to what he had testified only a moment before.

"Was that negro drayman there Saturday—you said so awhile ago, didn't you?" asked the Solicitor.

Holloway floundered while Dorsey was insisting on an answer. He could not remember what he had testified. Finally he blurted out:

"If I said he was there, he was. If I said he wasn't there, he wasn't."

Refers to Reward Claim.

"But what is the truth?" persisted Dorsey.

Holloway continued to return the same answer until Judge Roan forced him to make a definite reply. Then he took refuge in the old reliable answer: "I don't remember."

The Solicitor called Holloway's attention to a remark that watchman was said to have made about Conley being "my nigger" when a reference was made to the rewards offered. He also showed an affidavit signed by Holloway saying that Darley had left the factory the Saturday of the killing at 10:45 in the forenoon. Darley had testified that he left at about 9:30 and Holloway had said only a few minutes before that Darley left about 9:20 or 9:30.

"What did you say 10:45 for in the affidavit you signed for me shortly after the murder?" shouted the Solicitor.

"That was mostly guess work," explained the witness.

"Did you tell Mr. Arnold that you left the factory every day about 5:30 o'clock?"

"Yes."

Said 3, but Meant 4 O'clock.

"Didn't you tell me that you left some times at 3 o'clock?"

"If I said 3, I meant 4."

"What did you mean by 4:30 just now?"

"That just slipped out."

N. V. Darley, general manager of the factory; H. J. Hinchey, of No. 391 Peachtree street; Harry Scott, "Boots" Rogers, I. U. Kauffman, T. H. Willett and J. Q. Adams were the other witnesses of the day.

Kauffman identified blue prints and drawings he had made of the Selig home and of the pencil factory. Willett explained the pasteboard model of the factory that he had made from the blue prints. Adams identified photographs he had made at the Selig home and the factory.

Hinchey told of seeing Frank coming from home on a Washington street car the afternoon of the crime. This was intended to discredit Albert McKnight, one of the State's witnesses, who said that he saw Frank board a Georgia avenue car when he left home.

Darley was recalled largely to testify to the possibility of various methods which Conley might have employed in disposing of the girl's body in the event he was the murderer of the girl.

New Theory Is Suggested.

The most startling sugestion came from Darley's testimony that a door leading from the entryway on the first floor into the rear of the biulding was found broken open right after the crime. Two trap doors open into the basement from this rear room. One of them is over a chute. Reuben Arnold, by his line of questioning, showed that the defense seriously had considered the theiry that the girl's murderer had dragged her through this door on the first floor and had dropped her body down the chute.

The Solicitor brought out that the door might have ben opened by the detectives in their search of the building and that if the body ever had been dropped down the chute it most probably would have ben left there as it would have ben perfectly hidden.

ATLANTA GIRL IS DROWNED IN SEA

Ethel Edmondson Overwhelmed by Wrightsville Breakers—Attempted Rescue Fails.

Miss Ethel Edmondson, 24, daughter of Mrs. S. P. Fincher, of No. 343 North Jackson street, was drowned at Wrightsville Beach Friday afternoon. She had been at the beach but a few hours when she decided to enter the surf. Scarcely had she reached the water when a huge wave raced in and knocked her down.

Roy Walraven, of Atlanta, who was with Miss Edmondson, was stunned for a moment by the force of the wave, but recovered quickly and went to her rescue. He had a terrific struggle and but for the timely arrival of Life Saver W. E. Watson he probably would have lost his life.

Miss Edmondson left Atlanta on Thursday night with a party of seven for a ten-day stay at the beach.

She was a member of Grace Methodist Church and was employed as a stenographer by the Wester Music Company.

News of her daughter's sudden death almost prostrated Mrs. Fincher. The body is expected to arrive in Atlnata to-day. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

Insanity 'Cure' Sure, Says Noted Alienist

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 9.—Doctor Toulouse, the great French alienist, has consented to answer a few questions put to him by one of the Hearst papers' correspondents regarding his successful treatment of certain forms of insanity by subcutaneous injections of oxygen.

On being asked whether the cures were permanent, Doctor Toulous said:

"When a patient who has been suffering from what in French scientific language is known as acute psychosis and has been incoherent and incapable of stringing together lucid ideas, regains his lucidity and retains that lucidity for several weeks, a scientist is justified in asserting that the cerebral crisis has ceased."

Lightning Wreathes Phone Girl's Head

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—Report was madeto-day to the office of the Chicago Telephone Company, of the bravery displayed by Miss Alma Mettier, a telephone operator who stuck to her post in the company's exchange in Whiting, Ind., during an electrical storm, while the building caught fire from lightning three times. The three fires occurred between 11 p. m. and dawn.

Firemen twice drove back the flames from the switchboard while Miss Mettier remianed at work.

New Brain Surgery Device Is Invented

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug 9.—Delegates to the big medical congress are greatly interested in Dr. R. H. Clarke's device for mapping out the brain and removing parts which are perhaps keys to various disorders of the body.

The instrument has a tiny telescopic knife, supported on a miniature bridge, and the direction of the knife and depth to which it goes is regulated to a hair's breadth by a series of scales.

Surgeons who examined the machine are convinced the time is not far distant when they will be able with it to operate for paralysis and insanity.

Booksellers Ban Hall Caine's Book

LONDON, Aug. 9.—Hall Caine's new novel, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," is still under a partial ban, although the big lending libraries have removed the boycott.

Goose Hits Paralytic; Quick Cure Wrought

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 9.—Arthur J. Reddington, a rancher, suffering from partial paralysis of the arms and legs for several years, was hobbling around near his ranch when a goose flew across the road and struck Reddington on the back of the neck.

He instinctively threw up his hands to his neck. When he recovered his composure, he found that he had the complete use of his arms and legs.

Dr. Starnes Leads Organists' War on Old 'Jingle' Hymns

Never again will Atlanta churchgoers or any other churchgoers, for that matter, "ringle and jingle" on such familiar hymns as "Throw Out the Life Line," "The King's Business," etc., if Dr. Percy Starnes and his followers at the national convention of organists at Asbury Park, N. J., have their way.

Numerous delegates, headed by Dr. Starnes, announced disapproval of certain hymns sung for generations.

No hard and fast line has been drawn in this contemplated omission. Anything with a "ringle or a jingle," the progressives assert, should be omitted from hymnals, never to be resurrected, even in the wee little country church just on the edge of the backwoods.

The progressives are no respecters of persons. Witness the fact that some of the hymns placed under the ban were penned by Wesley and Isaac Watts.

Masons Conduct Funeral of 'Uncle Luke' Wood Sunday

The funeral services of T. J. Wood, who died at his home in Riverside at 11 o'clock Friday morning, will be held at the Collins Memorial Church at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon, under the auspices fo the Bolton Lodge of Masons, of which he was a charter member.

Mr. Wood was 77 years old. He passed his entire life in this community, and had a large circle of friends, to whom he was known familiarly as "Uncle Luke." Until about three years ago he was engaged in farming, but was forced by failing health to retire. He entertained a number of friends Friday, August 1, at a birthday celebration.

He is survived by four daughters, Mrs. E. L. Jett, Mrs. Lizzie Davis, Mrs. E. L. Smith and Mrs. Brown Carroll, all of Atlanta, and one son, Frank Wood, of Texas. Interment will be at the family burying ground.

Test Arranged for Device to Eliminate Open Switch Danger

A test of the Shepard automatic switch will be given at Oakland City at 3 o'clock this afternoon by the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, which will be witnessed by a large number of railway officials.

The switch is claimed to be a preventative of the open switch evil, and puts the opening and closing of the switch entirely under the control of the engineer. By throwing a lever in the cab the engineer may open the switch, and after his train has passed completely into it the switch automatically closes.

A $700,000 concern has been organized to manufacture the device, the plant being located in Atlanta.

WHY RESINOL SOAP KEEPS COMPLEXIONS CLEAR AND HEALTHY

When you wash your face do you realize that it is not enough to remove the dirt—that your skin needs a soothing, healing influence to keep your complexion fresh and free from blemish?

Ordinary toilet soaps do not assert this influence. Many of them contain free alkali which tends to dry the skin and destroy its delicate texture. Even the best of such soaps can only clean, they can not heal and protect the skin. Resinol Soap, besides being an absolutely pure toilet soap, contains the same soothing, healing, antiseptic balsams as Resinol Ointment, the value of which in the treatment of skin affections is known throughout the medical profession. That is why Resinol Soap does for the skin what cosmetics are supposed to do—it insures not only a clean skin, but a healthy skin, and a fair, clear complexion. Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment are sold by all druggists. Trial free. Dept. 4-R, Resinol, Baltimore, Md.

STATE URGED TO PRINT ITS OWN TEXT BOOKS

House Passes Resolution Authorizing Inquiry—Up to Senate to Put It In Force.

If the Senate concurs in a resolution passed by the House Friday afternoon a commission composed of the Governor, the State Superintendent of Schools, three members from the House and two from the Senate, will determine if it would be practicable for Georgia to publish her own school books and furnish them to the schools of the State at cost.

The resolution, introduced in the House by McCrory, of Schley, provides that this investigation shall begin at once, and that the five members selected from the House and Senate shall be paid a per diem of $4, except during the sessions of the Legislature. The commission will report to the Legislature next year.

A squabble out of which it developed that both sides wanted virtually the same thing, occurred when McMichael, of the Education Committee, submitted a minority report recommending the defeat of the bill.

Book Trust Activity Charged.

A clash that for a moment threatened to become personal was precipitated by Mr. McMichael taking the floor in favor of a substitute offered by Mr. Adams, of Hall, which differed from the McCrory resolution in that it authorized a contract with the "book trust" for two years, while McCrory's resolution contained a proviso that any contract could be abrogated on six months' notice.

Mr. Stewart, of Coffee, while Mr. McMichael was discussing the resolution, asked if the Marion County representative was not the agent of the "book trust."

"I am," replied Mr. McMichael.

"I would like to know," asked Mr Stewart, "which you are representing this afternoon, the book trust or the people of Georgia?"

McMichael Refuses to Vote.

Mr. McMichael replied heatedly that he was representing the people first, last and all the time, and declared that only Mr. Stewart's "smallness" prevented him from seeing it. He declared that he was in favor of an investigation. As proof of his stand he declined to vote on the resolution.

Following the adoption of the resolution Mr. Sheppard, of Sumter, engaged in a lively tilt with Speaker Burwell, in an effort to bring the McCrory bill, which provides that the State at once begin the publication of school books, from the committee.

Motion after motion was made by Mr. Sheppard and ruled out of order by the Speaker, and finally Mr. Sheppard tried to get through a motion to amend the rules, so the bill could be brough out. This also the Speaker ruled out of order, and cited a House rule that states plainly that the rules can not be changed except on a resolution that must be referred to the Rules Committee.

Powers Agree to Rob Turks of Adrianople

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SOFIA, Aug. 9.—Assurances were given to the Bulgarian Government today by the powers that they would serve Turkey with an ultimatum calling for the evacuation of Thrace, which includes Adrianople.

Doubt is growing here whether peace in the Balkans will be lasting. Bulgaria and Montenegro are dissatisfied with the result of the war, while Turkey will probably seize any pretext to resume hostilities.

There is a strong revolutionary party in Albania which will keep the standing army busy.

Life's Worth Living in Georgia

If you prefer city life, there are no better cities in the world than those in Georgia. If you prefer village life, the smaller towns in Georgia offer every inducement.

If you prefer country or farm life, Georgia offers greater inducements than any State in the Union. Georgia lands work the year round, from two to five crops being gathered off of the same land each year---crops that are profitable.

Climate and Soil

The climate is such that farmers do not have to house stock during the winter, there being good grazing the entire year. For raising cattle and stock Georgia offers greater inducements than can be found elsewhere.

The soil is suited for almost anything that grows and can be utilized the entire year. The prices at which good farm land can be purchased at present in Georgia are so low that it is a matter of comment---some thinking that the land is not so good as stated. The land is good, but there are thousands of acres that are now lying idle and the good people of Georgia are anxious for good farmers to come among them. Consequently the land is cheaper here than elsewhere.

HERE'S THE TIME CLOCK PUZZLE IN FRANK TRIAL; CAN YOU FIGURE IT OUT?

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Tick-tock! Tick-tock!
Hark to the tale of the old hall clock!
Tick-tock! Tick-tock!
This is the tale of the clock!
—Old English Ballad.

This is a tale of an office clock and a motorman's watch—an office clock in the National Pencil Factory, the first requisite of which, it being a "time" clock, is accuracy, and a motorman's watch.

And this is the story of a clock that may or may not mean life and liberty and a restored good name to Leo Frank, or—a fate infinitely worse than mere death itself!

It is a story involving a young business man of repute and high standing, a college graduate and a husband, a brave, womanly little girl, foully murdered, a motorman known to many Atlantans, a newsboy not so well known, a disinterested working girl, a negro sweeper, a confessed accessory to murder, the dead girl's mother—and an office clock.

What does the story demonstrate? That shall be for the reader to say. Here is the story:

What the State Contends.

The State of Georgia is contending that Leo Frank murdered on April 26, before the hour of 12:05 in the afternoon, Mary Phagan, a 14-year-old working girl, employed in the National Pencil Factory, of which Frank was the superintendent.

It cites, among others, to bear out its contention, James Conley, a negro sweeper in the factory, and Monteen Stover, an employee of the factory.

Miss Stover is a disinterested witness—Conley not only is the star witness against Frank, but is interested in fixing the murder upon Frank.

Here is what the State, by its own witnesses, asserts:

Jim Conley swears that a few minutes before Miss Monteen Stover came into the factory—Miss Stover herself swearing that she entered at 12:05—Mary Phagan entered and passed upstairs and into Leo Frank's office.

Miss Stover, asked how she was positive as to the time she went in and the time she came out, stated that she looked at the time clock both as she came in and as she went out. That fixes the time of her coming and going definitely and exactly.

It was before Miss Stover came in that Conley swears Mary Phagan came in. Therefore, Mary Phagan must have arrived at the factory, according to Conley, at least before 12:05, the moment Miss Stover came in.

Before Miss Stover Entered.

But after Mary came in, and before Miss Stover came in, the murder, still according to Conley, had been effected.

For (a) after Mary went upstairs and before Miss Stover came in, Conley (b) heard pattering footsteps toward the rear of the building, where (c) he says the body was found by him later, and after that (d) a scream, and then (e) a period of silence.

All of this, according to Conley, before Monteen Stover entered the factory—that is, before 12:05 certainly—and, considering the things Conley swears happened, several minutes before 12:05, necessarily.

Mrs. Coleman, Mary's mother, swears that Mary left home "about 11:45" in the morning, and George Epps swears he joined her on the car at 11:50, for he looked at a clock at home just before boarding the car, and that he and Mary arrived at Marietta and Forsyth streets at 12:07, the latter hour not definitely fixed in his mind.

Motorman Remembers Time.

The motorman on that car, however, who swears he knew Mary Phagan, and had seen her board his car frequently, and remembers seeing her board that particular car on that particular day, says that the car arrived at Marietta and Forsyth at 12:7½, as that is the time it is scheduled to arrive there, and he was running on time that day.

The motorman swears Mary and a companion got off at Hunter and Broad about 12:10, that being a few minutes farther run than Marietta and Forsyth. The conductor corroborates the motorman in an additional statement that the car was not running ahead of schedule, the conductors being particularly required by the company not to run ahead of time.

Mary Phagan left the street car at 12:10, still a block and a half from the pencil factory.

If she walked directly to the factory, she could not have reached there before 12:12, in any event.

If the little victim of this tragedy, Mary Phagan, therefore, DID NOT REACH THE FACTORY UNTIL MANY MINUTES AFTER CONLEY SWEARS SHE DID GET THERE, AND UNTIL AT LEAST TWO MINUTES AFTER MONTEEN STOVER HAD DEPARTED, AND UNTIL AFTER CONLEY SWEARS HE HAD HEARD THE FOOTSTEPS AND THE SCREAM, HOW CAN CONLEY'S STORY BE TRUE?

Slain Before She Arrived?

In other words, how could Mary Phagon have been murdered before she arrived at the factory?

Remember, too, that when Frank was asked at the Coroner's inquest as to the time of Mary Phagan's arrival, he said that it was after 12, because the noon whistle had blown some time before—that she might have arrived at 12:10 or, maybe later, perhaps as late as 12:20 or 12:25.

Conley, also, in fixing the time of Mary Phagan's arrival at the factory, said it was soon after the noon whistle blew, therefore, a little after 12—thus placing Mary's arrival between 12 and the time of Monteen Stover's arrival, which was 12:05.

Now then, take your pencil and paper, and figure this problem out for yourself.

Can you reconcile Conley's story with the other things proved, in the main, by the State's own witnesses?

HOW TIME HAS BECOME THE CRUCIAL POINT IN THE TRIAL OF LEO M. FRANK

Mary leaves car at 12:07 by State's testimony and 12:10 by defense's witnesses.

Mary boards Cooper street car at 11:50, according to both State and defense.

Monteen Stover enters factory at 12:05 and leaves at 12:10.

Mary Phagan leaves home at 11:45, according to mother.

Jim Conley swears he saw Mary Phagan enter and hear her scream BEFORE Monteen Stover came.

Absence of Alienists and The Hypothetical Question Distinguishes Frank Trial

By O. B. KEELER.

There are two things about the Frank trial that entitle it to distinguished consideration.

Thus far not a single alienist has been called to bat, and only the common or domesticated type of the dread Hypothetical Question has appeared.

In most of our great murder trials, the alienist is the last resort, or one of latest resorts. Usually he is introduced by the defense; anywhere from four to eight of him.

The prosecution promptly counters with an equal number of wheel inspectors.

The defense (vide Thaw case) generally proves to its own satisfaction that the defendant was crazy when he did it, but since has recovered his equilibrium, his alibi and all the rest of his scattered personal effects.

The four to eight experts for the State differ slightly with this finding.

They All Agree.

They report that to the best of their several and collective knowledge and belief, which is considerable, the defendant is the happy possessor of one of the sanest little noodles they ever had the pleasure of sitting on. They say there is practically no chance that any such carefully-geared aggregation of mental sprockets ever slipped a cog.

But they add that, if the defense insists on the accused having been non compos at the time he did it, he most assuredly is in the same condition at present, or more so.

In short, the State contends that the defendant either should be hanged or remanded to the solitary upholstery for the rest of his life, according to which is most highly objectionable to the defense.

Vide Thaw case ad lib.

One Notable Exception.

There is only one case on record where a corps of alienists employed by one side agreed with those hired by the opposition.

It seems that the accused person, without any advice or suggestion from his lawyers, broke out all over with shockingly acute symptoms of dementia soon after he was arrested.

The defense ordered out the alienists.

They reported that the accused unquestionably was insane—remarkably insane.

Then the prosecution recruited its experts to the full war strength and ordered them to advance with caution.

To the intense surprise of everyone, including the defense, they reported that the prisoner was crazy beyond the shadow of a peradventure. They said he couldn't be any crazier without coming apart.

Well, that just about settled it. What prosecution could hold out against the combined forces of two sets of alienists? It was the first time on record that the warring experts had agreed.

And this time they were both wrong.

Inside of a year the record-holder for craziness—sprints, middle distance and Marathon—had got himself out of the bat factory and was enjoying life in a more congenial clime that had no extradition provisions in the treaty, if any.

The Hypothetical Question.

The hypothetical question is used rather more frequently than the alienist, because it is less expensive and embarrassing, while offering no more than an even break to the other side and confusing the jury fully as much as the most complicated alienistic explosions.

When the h. q. is sprung by the defense, an expert of considerable pedigree is propped up in the witness chair and compelled to listen, with the jury and such of the auditors as can stay awake, to a detailed relation of incidents beginning some time before the birth of the accused and extending to the date of the crime, with provisions and qualifications to fill out four hours and a half and eleven columns of "six point."

Then the experi says:

"No."

After which an expert for the other side listens to the same recital, repeated.

And he says:

"Yes."

What the jury says never gets into print.

THE RIDDLE OF THE CLOCK IN THE PHAGAN MYSTERY

Jim Conley swears Mary Phagan went up the stairs of the National Pencil factory and was murdered before Monteen Stover arrived. He says he saw Miss Stover go up and leave.

Monteen Stover, State's witness, swears she arrived at 12:05.

George Epps, State's witness, swears he and Mary Phagan arrived at Marietta and Forsyth streets at 12:07.

The car crew, defense's witnesses, swear Mary arrived at Broad and Marietta at 12:07½ and at Broad and Hunter at 12:10.

If Mary Phagan was at Marietta and Forsyth at 12:07, as the State says, or at Broad and Hunter at 12:10, as the defense says, how could she have preceded Monteen Stover, as Jim Conley says, up the factory stairs, when Miss Stover was in the factory at 12:05?

What's the answer?

Brand Whitlock May Get Diplomatic Post

WASHINGTON, Aug. 9.—President Wilson is seriously considering the nomination of another distinguished author to an important diplomatic post, according to information at the Capitol. Mayor Brand Whitlock of Toledo, Ohio, is the latest prospective candidate for diplomatic honors, and if McCombs declines the French ambassadorship, he may get that, or he may go to Belgium.

He had expressed a desire for the Switzerland mission, but that was promised before he got into the fight.

French Tars Flee in Panic.

L'ORIENT, FRANCE, Aug. 9.—Twenty sailors on board the French battleship Courbet were scalded and otherwise injured to-day when a tank exploded on the ship. Thinking that the magazine had let go the crew rushed on the decks in a panic and many leaped overboard.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

JULY 31.—You are the only relaxation, Diary, that they permit me to have, and my fingers, because of my weakness, feel as clumsy and big as telegraph poles. It is fortunate no one will ever read this scrawl.

I want to tell what happened the last hour before I stopped knowing what was happening.

I was sitting on the end of a log engaged in watching a cork on the water, thinking, as I so often do, of Sally, and longing to see her, when I felt Manette's arms around my neck. She had crawled out on the log, behind me, a perilous thing to do.

"Puppy says," she whispered, making believe as she frequently did that the dog could talk, "that a big black cloud is scaring him."

I looked up and found the skies overcast. There was a muttering threat in the waving of the trees, a sullen roar, and big, heavy drops of rain began to fall.

"Puppy is right," I replied, and turned hastily to carry the child back to shore. The log was old and soft and worn smooth, and my footing, with the child in my arms, was precarious. Ordinarily cautious, I thought only of the need of getting Manette to shelter, missed my step, and remember little else.

I had a feeling that I was plunging down, down, with Manette and the whole universe plunging on top of me. Everything turned black, there was a sudden, sharp pain in my head that seemed to spread over my entire body, and then I lost consciousness.

They tell me that the log, a fallen giant of the woods, must have turned, and that in my effort to save us from falling I caught hold of it and pulled it down on top of me. Then the rain began to fall in torrents.

"It was merciful," said Richard this morning, while hovering around me while the nurse took her morning walk, "that you were unconscious. If you had realized Manette's danger and your helplessness, you'd have gone mad."

Manette, they said, was saved from injury by a miracle. I have a sort of indistinct recollection that when I felt myself crashing down threw her from me. I don't know about that.

No one knows what happened in the next two hours, for it was fully that long till the dog appeared at the door of the kitchen, barking and howling. They had heard him coming, they said, a half hour before he appeared in sight, and were ready with lanterns to follow him.

They supposed when the storm broke that he had found shelter, and were not worried, as we had been caught in so many storms before, and had always come home when they cleared, laughing and making merry over the experience.

A Friend in Need.

The dog saved us. "You may need him," Sally Spencer had urged when the question of takin him came up. She question of taking him came up. We needed him more than we needed anything else on earth. So many friends, who have brains where he has only dumb intuition, do not meet the hour of need as he met it.

Manette says that when she crawled out of the mud I was lying on the bank flat on my back, with the tree trunk lying across me. She found her way, with the rain beating down on her, to my side, and in her baby way tried to rouse me.

Failing, she seemed to realize that something serious had happened, for she snuggled down beside me, put both arms around my neck, and tried, as best she could with her arms and face, to shelter me from the storm.

Her little skirts were torn into shreds, proving the effort the dog made to pull her to a place of shelter. He pulled and barked and pulled, but she held to me with both arms. I can imagine the scene—the frantic efforts of the dog to get her to a place of safety, for the waters in the lake were rising, and her equally frantic efforts to cling to her Uncle Max.

With a mournful howl, he finally desisted, and started off to secure help for the task he was unable to accomplish alone.

Manette was uninjured, and the cold beating of the rain had no bad effects. Her name was the first I spoke when I found myself in bed with strange faces bending over me, and her arms around my neck, and her face pressed against mine, is the last I remember before I lapsed into unconsciousness again.

Afterwards.

Since then, nothing else has mattered. I know that they secured a physician at the hotel, and that the next day my own doctor came by special train, bringing a nurse and Richards with him, and that he has been here ever since.

"I am not going to leave you, Max," he said, "till I pull you through. It was my fault that you came to this place."

I am not sorry. Even physical suffering has its recompense. I do not concern myself over a thing in the world. Manette is safe, and it seems good to me, after so many years of fighting battles all alone, to have some one now fighting my battles for me. The doctor tells me frankly that this will be a battle. I do not care.

They let me have just enough light to see these pages, and when I have grown tired of writing, and I have paused many times in writing this, Richards takes you away, Diary, locks you up, and then the room is darkened again. That is the reason I have begun to regard The Hands as disembodied.

They float around me in the strangest way sometimes, always, through the long hours of the day and night, moving with quick, deft touches to make me more comfortable. Sometimes I fall asleep holding a hand in mine, and its firm, cool touch seems to give me strength.

"Please," I asked last night, "let me hold your hand. I don't have that horrible feeling of floating off alone to an unknown sea when I have hold of your hand. I have a notion," growing garrulous, for the hours at night are long, "that I would like to be holding your hand when 'The Pilot' calls for me. Somehow I would not hesitate to go."

"The Pilot isn't going to call for you," replied a voice somewhere. I don't know where, she seems such an altogether disembodied person. I wonder sometimes if she is more than Two Hands and a Voice, "and you must go to sleep now and not think of such things."

Modes of the Moment

For the Season.

THE skirt of the very useful and smart afternoon gown illustrated on the left-hand side is slightly draped. A fold of material runs diagonally from the waist to the drapery. The bodice has long sleeves finished off with a row of small buttons and the bodice is cut in jockey style. In the center is shown a charming evening gown carried out in white with a touch of color in the japonica tulle waistband. The foundation is of ivory charmeuse and over this is arranged the crystal-embroidered tulle. Crystal trimming is carried out on the sleeveless bodice. A smart gown with a graceful skirt is illustrated on the right. A tunic or accordion-pleated silk partially covers the charmeuse skirt; the ends of the sash are finished with heavy silk tassels. The collar and cuffs are made of white linen edged with pleated frills.

THE CANNIBAL .:. A True Nature Story Complete

By F. ST. MARS.

THE last sparrow had ceased twittering and tucked his head under his wing for the night; the last blackbird had left off scolding—as blackbirds do when they are going to roost—and the last of the fowls had fluttered up into its perch in the fowl house, when the old buck rat, the master, and for that matter the leader of all the rats in the farmyard, poked his sharp inquisitive nose up out of the hole in the barn floor. He was a very big rat. His ears were like chewed biscuits, and his tail was a stump, half of its proper length, because of the many fights he had had. It would have been difficult to find two inches on his body not marred by old scars. You will see, therefore, that his mere survival proved his great cunning and strength.

Having remained quite still for ten minutes, and made certain that the corner where the big cat usually lay in ambush was empty, he made for the sacks of potatoes ranged in a far corner. It was the work of a few minutes to gnaw a hole in one of these and extract the smallest potato he could get. This he carried to his hole in the floor and down beneath where, hidden under the earth, he had a private store of potatoes, nuts, grain, etc., which he visited when there were too many dangers about for him to venture out to feed.

When next the rat appeared it was in the cowyard, close to the water trough. It was a moonlight night, and everything in the yard showed up clearly, for which reason it had taken him something like an hour to work his way from the barn, moving cautiously always in deep shadow. There was a bull in the yard, a huge beast standing in the full glare of the moon, rumbling to himself deep down in his inside, and two bats were playing in and out of the open thatched cowshed. And that was all, or so it seemed.

Like to Drink.

Rats are thirsty creatures, and like to drink every few hours, is possible, otherwise you would never have found our cunning old rascal here out in the open. The trough was in the moonlight, and as he climbed up it he did so with every sense on the alert. So intent was he upon the possibility of danger around that it never struck him to glance inside the trough. In fact, he was actually leaning over the edge to drink before he realized that something was there drinking already beside him-self.

A younger and less cunning rat would have started and bolted, and given himself away, but this one instantly stiffened—"froze," they call it in the wild—and lay still as death. There was no mistaking the identity of the drinker. It was a full-grown weasel. None other possessed that long, lithe form, or that cruel gleam in the eyes, except the stoat.

Apparently the weasel had not seen him, for when it had finished drinking it came slowly along the edge of the trough, balancing carefully, straight toward his crouched, motionless form. And then suddenly he saw its head go up, and its burning eyes peer over the edge below to the yard. Next moment it dropped flat and froze, too—not 3 feet away from the rat. Still it had not seen him, and whatever danger had startled it came plainly from below.

You can understand, then, that the old rat was burning anxious to lift his head and peer over the side. It was awful to lie there and await a danger you could not see, but he could not move.

Then, after about five or six minutes of awful, motionless suspense, very, very slowly over the side of the trough a head lifted and peered down upon the grenish water, and the two beasts crouched motionless within a yard of it.

Beyond a slight start when the head appeared, our rat did not move, and as for the weasel, it did not move at all. Very good reason had the rat to start, for the head was that of his wife. Yes, she was looking for him, and he knew it, but not in the way you think.

Slowly, beside hers, another head moved up and peered over, to be followed by another and yet others, till there were ten of them in a row staring with their gleaming eyes. And all the time beneath, both rat and weasel could hear a continuous pattering and rustling, which told of more rats and yet more.

This, seeing that they were of his own kind, ought to have pleased the rat, one would have thought. It did not. It made him tremble from head to foot, and he had not trembled in the least when he thought himself alone with the weasel. He considered himself, in fact, a match for the bloodthirsty little weasel any day, but he knew he was no match for that which was coming.

Flight.

Then all at once he sprang to his feet, and so quickly that none of the other animals had time to move, he raced along the edge of the trough, sprang clean over the astonished weasel, landed on the far side, slipped, recovered and scampered away along the top of the cattle-mangers, and so to the ground and out of the farmyard gate.

It was magnificently done, that amazingly quick retreat, and it showed a certain amount of reasoning. Had he gone any other way he would inevitably have been either surrounded or overtaken by the other rats, but as it was those that poured after him came into collision with the weasel, who, being the rats' hereditary foe and possessed of astonishing courage, naturally fought and checked the pursuit, until overpowered by sheer numbers. Thus, by the time the whole mob of rats had really got well on the trail of our old villain he was some fifty yards down the hedge that bordered the field outside and beyond hope of capture.

Now you will naturally ask why these rats, his relations and neighbors, and especially his own wife, would seek to murder him—and I will whisper to you the reason. When his wife returned to her nest she found two of her babies gone and another one freshly killed, and her nose told her that our old rat was the culprit.

And that is why, if you go to the farm to-day, you will not find the cunning old rat, who knows all about traps, kills the chickens and ducklings, sucks the eggs and is the worst foe his own kind possesses, living on the farm at all, but about a field or two away, within raiding distance.

Household Suggestions

If black kid gloves or calf-kid boots have become hard, put the gloves on the hand and apply in that position (as if washing the hands) as much camphorated oil as the leather will absorb; then take off and hang to dry and also allow the camphor to evaporate. With boots, rub in well with the hand the same kind of oil. This gives the original suppleness to the leather.

To brighten a carpet, take five or six large potatoes and scrape them finely into a pail of water. Stir, then strain. Wring out a cloth in the water and rub the carpet. Rinse the cloth as soon as soiled. Should soot fall on a carpet, sprinkle dry salt thickly over it, leave it for a few minutes, then brush up. No trace of the soot will remain.

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully, and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Permanganate of potash will clease dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

To cure a feather that has become damaged with rain or dew, sprinkle it thickly with common salt and shake before a bright fire until dry, when you will find it as good as new.

So Pa didn't have to brake any rock. Pa is a good skeemer about work.

The Wife Who Spends Her Husband's Money

BY DOROTHY DIX.

WHEN a young man asks a girl's hand in marriage the first question that her father puts to him is, "Can you support my daughter in comfort?"

No kind and thoughtful parent, however, ever, takes the trouble to ask a prospective bride, "Can you spend wisely and judiciously my son's hard-earned money?"

Yet the one thing is just as important as the other, and the happiness and success of any marriage depends just as surely on the wife's ability to get the full purchasing power out of a dollar as it does upon the husband's ability to make that dollar. The ne'er-do-well of a man does not more surely bring a family to want and poverty than the thriftless and wasteful woman does.

There is a homely old proverb that says that a woman can throw more out of the back door with a teaspoon than a man can put in at the front door with a shovel. And it's true. No man, unless he is a financial wizard, can make any headway against the extravagance of a wife. It is his wife's discretion as a spender that settles the average man's fate for him, and determines whether he is to sit on a bookkeeper's stool or stand behind the counter the balance of his life, or whether he is going to be well to do and prosperous when he is middle-aged.

When you see the young wife of a man on a moderate salary always dressed up in the very latest cut in fashion, when you meet her at matinees every week and watch her having tea at a smart hotel afterwards, when you encounter her in the butcher shop negligently ordering sweetbreads and squabs, you don't have to go to any fortune teller to forecast the future of her husband and herself.

You Can Forecast.

You can do that for yourself. You can see a stoop-shouldered man growing more and more discouraged as the years go by, and he has nothing to show for his labor except a mountain of receipted bills, and at the end of it all you see a man dead from overwork or thrown out of his job into hopeless poverty into which he sinks.

On the other hand, when you see the wife of a poor young man who does her own housework and makes her own frocks and who buys the cheap cuts of meat at the butcher shop and is particular about having the bones and the trimmings sent home, you are equally able to forecast the future for her and her husband. And you see diamonds and motor cars festooning her horizon along about the time she is 50.

There is nothing new in these statements. Everybody has seen hundreds of such cases. Everybody can recite to you dozens of instances in their personal knowledge of men who have been ruined by their wives' extravagance or made by their wives' thrift. Every mother and father pray that their own son will get a wife who has the saving bank habit instead of the bargain counter mania, yet nobody raises a finger to prevent a catastrophe that threatens every man who gets married and every family that is started.

When a woman is wasteful and extravagant, and throws her husband's good money away we blame her, and say all the hard things about her that we can think of. It's a cruel injustice. It isn't her fault. It's the fault of the idiotic way in which we bring girls up.

We don't teach them the value of money. We don't teach them how to spend it, and to expect them to make a wise use of it is as unreasonable as to expect a land lubber to know how to pilot a ship.

No Experience.

The average girl, until she gets married, has never had the spending of a dollar. Her father has paid her bills, and her mother has decided what she could buy. A little change for street car and soda water is about all the money that has ever jingled in her purse. She has never had any fixed allowance for her clothes and personal expenses, and so has never realized that if she paid too much for a hat she would have to do without a dress, and that you can't spend your money and have it, too.

Parents are so afraid that their daughters will waste their money that they let the girl learn how to spend on her husband's earnings, which is pretty hard on Friend Husband.

It isn't the girl's fault that she doesn't know how to spend her husband's money wisely. It's the fault of her parents who have not taught her one of the most important lessons in life. That this is true is abundantly proven by the fact that women who have earned their living before they were married, and who have thus learned how to handle money, are almost invariably economical and thrifty managers and helps to their husbands.

There is no greater injustice in the world than the way women are treated about money. A woman without money is the most forlorn and piteous creature on earth. She is in a thousand times worse plight, and more danger, than a man is under similar circumstances, yet fathers do not concern themselves to try to protect their daughters against such a fate.

Boys are given money of their own when they are little fellows in order that they may learn to handle it, but the little girl is left to find out this important piece of knowledge the best way she can. A boy is fitted for some occupation whereby he may support himself in comfort. A girl's living is left to chance. She isn't taught any way by which she can keep herself out of the poor house if she doesn't marry, or if her husband should die and leave her penniless.

A rich man leaves his daughter a fortune, but he has not taught her one thing about how to take care of it, and she is left to the mercy of executors and lawyers, and she doesn't even know enough to keep herself from being swindled.

Perhaps some day men will realize that the only way to protect themselves is to teach women how to handle money by giving them a definite sum for their own, instead of making them do the mendicant act for every cent they get. Then we shall hear less about extravagant wives. It's ignorance, not viciousness, that makes women waste money.

Things Worth Remembering

Public executions in Paris prove very profitable to the owners of houses commanding the scene. Windows are let out for the occasion, the landlords watching for the first sign of the execution, and then at once sending word to the persons who have hired the room. If an ordinary criminal is executed, the charge is usually about $6 per seat, but should the offender have committed any remarkable crime, the price runs up to as much as $30.

A Pittsburg boy, William A. Davis reached his thirteenth birthday on Friday, June 13, 1913. He weighed 113 pounds, lived in Taggart street, which has thirteen letters in it, and was in grade thirteen at school. His mother, who was born on December 13, ordered Master Willie to stay in bed on his birthday to insure that no harm should befall him.

Kettlewell, in Yorkshire, possesses the most remarkable electric lighting installation in England. The village is only a tiny place, but the River Wharfe provides it with natural water power, and at a cost of less than $3,000 a lighting plant has been erected, the villagers being the shareholders and the directors of the company.

Now that the large advertising posters that were so great a disfigurement of the country on either side of the French railway lines have been rendered illegal by act of Parliament, advertisers on the Orleans Railway have begun to plant flower beds of brilliant colors in the fields on either side of the line, with the flowers arranged so as to spell the name of the goods to which they are to call attention.

In parts of Australia, where the average yearly rainfall is not more than 10 inches, a square mile will support only eight or nine sheep. In Buenos Ayres the same area, with 34 inches of rain, supports 2,560 sheep.

The average depth of sand in the deserts of Africa is from 30 to 40 feet.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

It Isn't Only Skin Deep, Says Maude Knowlton

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"BEAUTY is not just skin deep—it goes as deep as muscles and blood and brains," said Maude Knowlton, with the combination of buoyancy and conviction that makes a background of emphasis for her every word. "That is not saying that I think beauty is health, for features and figure and expression all have their part in making beauty; and I never forget that it goes right through the outer shell to the bone!"

In a cozy little flat out in the Eighties I visited the clever girl who, under Henry B. Harris' management, has scored several distinct hits, one of the best remembered of which is her marvelous portrayal of Simpson, the real chorus lady in "The Chorus Lady."

"A girl can't very well choose her birthplace," went on the girl whose clever gift of mental twist and verbal kink throws added glamour of interest over big brown eyes, wavy black hair and a complexion that when it is not covered with healthy summer-sun-and-ocean burn is first cousin to the cream of Miss Knowlton's own Irish meadow lands.

"No, a girl can't choose her own native heath, but if she could, a good starting place would be California. My! the air out there is made of component parts of vim, vigor and vitality—and with a little heredity to back up the H2O combination a start like that gives a girl a tendency to a sane, healthy viewpoint, and that kindly attitude toward life that irradiates even a homely face.

Not Posing.

"Of course, I am not posing as a beauty expert," said modest Miss Maude, "but surely we agree that an actually homely face may have a charm of spirit and intelligence, a magnetic giving out of self to the world (that plays give and take all the time, you know) that a mere beauty shell which thrills you for fifteen minutes could not exert after the first quarter was past. Vim, vigor, vitality, a tolerant spirit toward the world and its inhabitants, and buoyancy to carry you over the jolting rough places, will surely bring out all your good points better than a diet list and a course of facial massage.

"Take buoyancy—it will keep you from getting the wrinkles and lines and spiritless eyes that are foes to beauty; it will put spring into your step. And now I have reached a siding, for I just have to stop and talk about walking and carriage. Miss Beauty Seeker, hearken! You must walk along on the balls of your feet with buoyant spring instead of laggard slouch if you want to be truly attractive. Walk as if you could conquer worlds—and you will conquer hearts.

Swimming Good.

"Swimming helps a lot in the pursuit of proper land movement, for it brings a graceful fluidity of motion—no, I don't mean a fish-walk, but just a flowing, graceful movement in walking that is sure to please every one who sees, and that is sure to make you look fashionably tall and svelte.

"Oh, if you just hold yourself firmly erect on the balls of your feet and carry head and chest high instead of sloppily caved in, you will look twice as attractive, Miss Beauty Seeker—trust me for that!

"Vim to keep you up above the dead level of mediocrity; vigor to carry you on to ambition and achievement, vitality that will make you ready to meet every occasion; buoyancy—of which I have sung at length—and now a tolerant spirit, of which I can not sing at enough length. You know the woman who is always pecking and perking and digging at life, who criticises all the things that fall outside her own interests and inclinations. Her expression and attitude can ruin even a collection of perfect features and coloring."

"The woman who never would do

Miss Maude Knowlton.

the things New York does, yet who likes to see New York doing them—if it enjoys them," I mused.

"Ex-actly. I'll use that when I interview you," laughed merry Miss Maude. "'Live and let live' is a good motto for living and having the impress of living mark your face in lines of sweetness.

"Now for a background to the vim, vigor and vitality lady—the simplest clothes she dares wear, so she shall not be a mere clothes-horse, but a young-as-possible-attractive girl, whose own sweet nature and expression and well-carried figure are more important than the mere garments in which she is swathed. And there's my ideal of beauty," concluded Miss Knowlton.

And a very ideal Ideal I call it—don't you?

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them."—MRS. SADIE WILLIAMS, 455 James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

.:. Where There's a Will .:.

MME. ROSE BRASSY opened her autograph album, a masterpiece of morocco and solid gold, and showed its contents to her friend, Mlle. Lili Blanc. The book was full of sketches, drawings and poems by famous men and women, some merry, others grave, but nearly all containing a compliment to the beautiful young matron.

"You have certainly added some very interesting autographs to your collection since I saw it last. But do you know what you ought to have? Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Don't you think I know that," said Mme. Brassy, rather annoyed. "But it is awful difficult to get hold of just as the man himself. M. Brassy has several times invited him to our dinners, but he has always been engaged."

"Of course he is the fashionable poet of the moment," said Lili, "and ever since I have come home from abroad I have heard of nobody else. The great and only Lucien Fond, whose poems are sung everywhere, from Palais Elysees to Montmartre. And that is why you simply must have his autograph in your collection, Rose."

"It is easy enough to say that, Lili." "I know it is difficult and now more than ever, for Aunt Charlotte told me yesterday that Lucien Fond goes to Versailles every day and spends the whole day with a sick sister. But I must go now, dear. Good-bye. I am coming to tennis on Friday."

When Mme. Brassy was alone she threw herself into a chair and began to think. For a long while she sat in silence, pondering, then she jumped up and said: "I know how it is going to be done."

The next day Lucien Fond drove to the railway station in his car.

He Is Annoyed.

"Call for me her to-night at 10," he said to his chauffeur.

Then he went into the waiting room, where a large portrait of himself made him pull his hat down over his eyes. His popularity annoyed him. He would have given anything to be an unknown traveler who was not made the target of scores of amateur photographers as soon as he left his house.

The train arrived. Fond entered a first-class compartment and was about to close the door behind him when he felt somebody pulling the door from the outside. He growled something between his teeth intended to sound like an apology and retired into the farthest corner and began to look at the landscape, dreading every moment that the young lady who had entered should begin to talk to him. No doubt she was going to pay him one of the compliments which were on everybody's lips and which he hated.

Of course, she was staring at him now. He could just feel it with his nerves without looking up.

But he was evidently mistaken. The young lady did not say a single word. The poet was bored and the sun annoyed him. He rolled down the shade and cast a stolen glance at his companion.

She was exceedingly pretty. Now she took off her veil and hat and arranged her fluffy golden hair. Then she rested her head in her hands and looked as if her thoughts were far away.

Fond, who was a great smoker and who was dying for a cigarette, took out his case.

"May I smoke, mademoiselle?" he asked politely.

She nodded her head and smiled. The poet was surprised. After the way she had looked at him he had expected a volume of words, a repetition of the compliments he was used to hear everywhere and which he hated. But she said nothing—not a single word. Fond was surprised and just a little bit disappointed.

Her Scheme.

While he was smoking he studied his companion's beautiful profile and slender throat. Suddenly she stood up and tried in vain to open the window. Fond rushed to her side and opened it for her. She thanked him with a graceful nod.

"At last I have met a woman who does not talk too much," he thought. "Perhaps she does not know me—and still the way she looked at me."

And Lucien Fond, who hated strangers to address him, now actually wished she would say something.

He threw away his cigarette.

"I am sure the smoke annoys you, mademoiselle," he said.

The young lady merely smiled. Did she mean yes or no?

More and more puzzled by her smile and her silence the poet said:

"Don't you feel a draught? Don't you want me to close the window on my side?"

The young lady produced a notebook, wrote something and handed it to the astonished poet.

"I am deaf," he read.

Deaf, that beautiful young girl—for of course she could not be married. The poet was deeply touched and wrote in the book:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

The poor young girl took her notebook, looked at it, smiled and put it into her bag.

Three days later Mme. Brassy was having a tennis party. Lili played badly and Rose scolded her.

"You must try to play better, Lili."

Her Triumph.

"Where there is a will there is a way, you know."

"Not always Rose—remember Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Oh, I have that."

Rose threw down her racquet, ran up to the house and returned proudly with her album open. A new page had been pasted in, and on this was written:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

"But how in the world did you get it so quickly, Rose, and why does he write 'sincerest sympathy'?"

Mme. Rose blushed a little and replied:

"That is my secret."

A Tie.

"I took Gladys to the party last night. On the way home I proposed, and she accepted me."

"That's winning in a walk, isn't it?"

"Yes, but it was a neck and neck finish."

A Misfit.

"Wealth has its penalties," said the ready-made philosopher.

"Yes," replied Mr. Cumrox. "I'd rather be back at the dear old factory than learning to pronounce the names of the old masters in my picture gallery."

How Wonderful!

The dumb man saw a wheel and spoke.

The deaf man saw a flock and herd.

The blind man bought a plane and saw.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Now, when did she fly?" the detective pursued. "Shortly after I saw her last. And how? On foot and quietly. The hall boy saw her go out, and he says she had her little bag on her arm and looked decent and composed; not like a woman in a delirium, nor even like one who meditates any dreadful crime. But then a boy's observation does not go for much, and we will let it pass. What we will remember, though, is this, that she had a veil on which covered her face, and this veil was brown, or, at least, of a very dark color.

"Two persons have told me so; the boy, whose word goes for little, and the chambermaid, who, though she did not see her go out, had had ample opportunity for observing her veil earlier in the afternoon, and whose word on such a subject does go for something. But, and mark the fact well, for it seems to me important, the veil that was clinging to her dress when she was brought into Mrs. Olney's parlor was gray and decidedly light; not the same one at all, according to description, which she wore when she went out of the hotel. What is the conclusion? That she stopped somewhere. Where? Another thing to find out. And now, about the poison. I went through Twenty-second street very soon after leaving Mrs. Olney's last night, and in front of one of the houses between Fifth and Sixth avenues I found a broken phial reeking with the smell of bitter almonds. So that part of his story is true. I have brought the bits of broken glass. Here they are."

The Coroner looked at them curiously, smelled them and glanced up at Mr. Gryce.

"Well!" he suggested, in an inquiring tone. He felt that the detective's silence meant something.

"Don't you notice anything peculiar about these pieces?"

"No; to be frank, I don't."

"Poison that is bought at a drug store usually has a label on the bottle."

"True."

"And this phial once had a label on it."

"I see."

"But it has been washed off; or rather rubbed off by a moistened hand. There are bits of it still remaining."

"I perceive them."

"What inference can we draw? That caution has been used. Now caution is not an atribute of the suicide, whether that suicide was an intentional one or the result of a mistake."

"Humph!"

"And then there is another thing that puzzles me. Dr. Molesworth declares he found her sitting on the steps. I looked at those steps. There was a light snow lying on them and this snow lay white and undisturbed, as it would not have done if a woman had been sitting there. But then some little time had elapsed since he removed her from the spot, and enough fresh snow may have fallen to cover up the traces which her skirts must have left behind her."

"Very possible."

"Only those skirts were not damp about the edges, as they must have been if she had been sitting on a stoop under these circumstances. And this to my mind is good evidence that she did not sit there. I would sooner believe she had been carried, down the stoop and placed in the phaeton without putting her foot to the ground. Only it happens to be General ——'s house and the thing is impossible."

"But how could you know about her skirts? You did not go near her."

"But Harrison did, the man you yourself sent there to investigate."

"And you have seen him since?"

"Five minutes after you did, sir."

The coroner laughed. He did not understand such zeal.

"I knew you would send for me," resumed Mr. Gryce, "and I want to have something to talk about."

"I see," said the Coroner, "well, go on."

"I am almost at the end of my rope, only—did you wonder what had become of Miss Farley's bag?"

"I did not know she had any."

The Missing Bag.

"The people at the hotel say she had, and here is the ocular proof of it." And Mr. Gryce produced from under his coat a small but neat handbag of black leather, having on one side two ornamental steel letters, one of which was "M." and the other "F." "The initials of her name, you perceive."

The Coroner nodded.

"You wonder where I got this bag. Why, in the most natural place in the world; it was in the phæton.'

"Ah, in the phæton."

"When I went out of the house last night I found that vehicle standing where it had been left, in front of the steps; and as according to the doctor's story, it had been the real scene of death, I naturally thought you would wish to have a look at it. I accordingly took possession of it and not seeing what else I could do with it at that time of night, drove it into a stable nearby. I expected every moment to be stopped by somebody and so forced to reveal my true character; but circumstances favored me and I got off with my prize unmolested. You will find it in charge of an officer at No. 66 West —— street."

"That is all right, but what about the look you took? You never left that phæton for me to examine first."

Mr. Gryce smiled grimly at the plain gold stud he wore as a cuff button. "I see you understand me." He then admitted apologetically, "'Twas dark and I did not find much. Still, I found something; the bag, for instance."

The Coroner looked at him with a doubtful air. Did he suspect for the first time that the detective was concealing something from him? If so, he said nothing, and Mr. Gryce went on blandly.

"This bag may have stories to tell. Suppose you open it, sir."

The Coroner nodded and did so. A number of toilet articles came to light and some linen. All was fresh and neat.

"Nothing that is likely to help us," asserted the Coroner. "No vestiges of poison, no letters, not even a scrap of writing of any kind."

Mr. Gryce did not commit himself.

"I would like to take an inventory of the articles," said he.

The Coroner allowed him to do so and then inquired:

"What about the witnesses? Have you seen the clerks at the drug store?"

"Yes, they have nothing to add to his story. He stopped there, came in as he said, told his fears and asked for assistance. One of them, Herbert Black by name, at once responded, but before he could reach the door the doctor came rushing back and crying out: "It is too late; she is dead, led the way to the phæton, where they saw the poor girl tumbled in a heap, white and lifeless. They were young men and did not know enough to take her by the hand and see if she were yet cold. They took him doctor's word for granted, knowing him so well, and feeling a natural indisposition to interfere in a matter at once so horrible and so delicate, only asked what they should do to help him. 'I am going to take her straight home,' he told them, and requested one of them to telephone to you and the other to run along at his side as far as the house. This latter duty fell to Mr. Black, and it was he who helped the doctor carry the poor girl in. That is all. I worked a half hour, but could get no more out of him."

Nine Hours to Work.

"And the clergyman?"

"Has nothing to impart."

"And the driver? You surely have seen the driver, he whom he sent out of the way with a prescription to some patient or other?"

Mr. Gryce's brows knit.

"I have had but nine hours to work in," he said, "and one of them was thrown away on that boy. I set a watch for him in three places and succeeded in getting the first word with him. But he had only one story to tell and told it doggedly. It was in strict accordance with that of Dr. Molesworth. He had been ordered to come to the C—— Hotel at a quarter past 8 to take Mr. Pease home after the expected ceremony. He had gone there on foot, Dr. Molesworth himself having driven Mr. Pease to the hotel, and, finding the phaeton at the door, had waited beside it for the clergyman to come out. But before this could happen the doctor reappeared, and declaring that matters had not gone as he wished, took his place in the phaeton and beckoned him in beside him, after which they rode about the streets until the doctor suddenly stopped the horse somewhere near Union Square and, commanding him to get out, gave him a bit of paper, which he told him to take as quickly as he could to Mr. Monroe, in Seventy-third street. He obeyed him and had only just come back. This is what the boy said and all he could say, but I know as well as I know anything that he did not tell me the truth, for when I asked him what cars he took he stared at me for a moment helplessly, and then said, 'The Madison avenue cars,' which story he stuck to, but as one who is very much frightened sticks to a statement he knows is false but dares not abandon."

"I will make him tell the truth," asserted the Coroner.

"It is to be hoped so. He is not dull, but he is mighty obstinate, and is to all appearance very much afraid of his master."

"I know the species. I can manage him."

Mr. Gryce looked doubtful, but did not pursue the subject. On the contrary, he remarked:

"I forgot to give you another point I have made. Molesworth says that after leaving the hotel he rode through the streets searching for his missing bride. Now, a person who searches goes slowly, and when he finds what he seeks in the condition in which Miss Farley was found, he still goes slowly. But Dr. Molesworth's horse had been driven far and fast, as the state he was in when I drove him into the stable amply showed."

"A point? I should think so."

"And that is not all. Seeing that the horse went a trifle lame, I examined his feet, and there, wedged between the hoof and the shoe of his right forefoot I found a bit of gravel which I dare wager never came from the streets about Madison Square. As the horse was not lame enough for it to have been there long, I drew the inference that Miss Farley was searched for in other regions than those his story would lead you to surmise."

.:. Advice to the Lovelorn .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"NO" TO ALL.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The other night I attended a mask ball. Through the masking I became acquainted with a young man. Before leaving he asked me for my address, and if he might call.

I am 17. Should I have given him my address? Should I continue the acquaintance without a conventional introduction if he writes, as I know none of his friends? The young man asked me to call him up on the phone. Can I do this? Would it be proper to have him call? Should he ask me to go out with him (for he said something to that effect)? Could I do so without a chaperone? ROBERTA.

Let the matter end right now. You were foolish to give him your address, but it will be nothing more than passing folly if you make no effort to see him again.

ACCEPT HER STATEMENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Until recently one of the boys in our crowd kept company with a rather pretty girl and through some disagreement discontinued his attentions. All along I have been rather sweet on this same girl and since their disagreement I have been to see her very often.

What I can not understand, is this: It is only two or three months since I have been calling and she says she has learned to love me dearly. This other boy says she has told him that very often, too. Do you really think she could have learned to love me in so short a time?

She has given proof in one way, however. She never went to church before, but now she goes every Sunday night with me.

The boys kid me terribly and I want to hear from some one who is entirely impartial.

WILLIAM.

She may love you. One can not measure love by time, and you say she has given proof. Accept her statements without question and enjoy the present, but make no arrangements for marriage until you are sure that you are more than "rather sweet" on her.

THOMPSON TO TRY TO BREAK JINX TO-DAY

By Joe Agler.

NASHVILLE, Aug. 9.—When a jinx sits down on a ball club like the one that is following us around, there's no certainty of anything connected with baseball, and I reckon we ought to be thankful that we are permitted to keep on living.

Carl Thompson is due to pitch for us to-day, with Chapman catching and if it hadn't been for the games of yesterday and the day before I'd say we had a good chance to win. Of course, we're due to-day—but there's not a thing to being due, or even past due, when a jinx is on you.

WE thought we had that one-run jinx all busted yesterday and we should have except for as big a slice of the old luck I ever saw a ball club handed in one game.

We got into the last of the ninth with the score 4 to 2 in our favor and Love getting along pretty well, though not up to the mark set in his first game. Young got a hit over second and hurt his leg turning first. Daley ran for him and Perry drew a base on balls. Artie Hofman made to attempts to bunt, and then, forced to take a swing at it, slashed one straight at Bisland. It looked like a sure double play, but the ball took a freak hop far over Bisland's head and Daley scored. Long tried to nip him at the plate, which let Perry get to third and Hofman to second. Then Gibson hit for Noyes and singled, and it was all over.

BUT you can take it from me, the boys are fighting this jinx, and we believe we are bound to bust it soon.

Freddie Luther Wins Long Race

Glenn and Lockner in Dead Heat

FREDDIE LUTHER, of Fort Worth, which is in Texas, earned the rating of pop-pop champion of the South over the 25-mile route, riding a runaway style of race at the Motordrome last night. Jock McNeil was second and Harry Glenn third, but Freddie had a good margin on all of them, though it should be explained that Jock suffered from engine trouble. That circumstance cost him several laps, and he was able to regain all but one and a fraction.

Luther maintained an average of 81.3 miles an hour. Engine trouble caused Morty Graves to drop out rather early in the struggle. Freddie's victory was especially popular in that it was his first victory on the local speedway.

Tex Richards won his customary event in spite of the fact that his own pet machine was in the hospital. This time Tex's victory was in the five-mile invitation race, which he negotiated in the fast time of 3:35.

An unusual finish was noted in the first heat of the special match race between Harry Glenn and George Lockner. The pair finished in a tie so tight that the judges could only call it a dead heat. The race was one of the best pair events yet seen on the speedway, each rider taking one of the two remaining heats. The event will be raced off next Tuesday night.

Following are the summaries:

MOTORDROME PURSE.
(One-Mile Heats; 2 Miles, Final.)

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MERELY A HECTIC DREAM.

Within the Hall of Fame I saw a
noble monument.
It cost ten thousand dollars if it ever
cost a cent.
And breathlessly I asked the guide;
"Who is you famous gent?"

"That man," he said, "is Adam Umph
—a man whose noble name
Will echo on for countless years and
fill the Hall of Fame.
He was a scribe who wrote about the
well-known baseball game."

"And why," I said, "should Adam
Umph attain a statue tall
For writing dope about the gents who
lean against the ball
When men like Cy and Charlie Dry
are given none at all?"

"At writing dope old Charlie Dry can
put him in the shade,
But this is why," he made reply, "his
fame will never fade;
"He never canned a manager nor ever made a trade."

In ancient days baseball was our national game, but that was before we took up the pastime of firing managers.

The fabulous sum of $26 is all that is left out of Luther McCarty's $4,000 purse. This explains why some men would rather manage fighters than work for a living.

Horace Fogel has wished himself on the Federal League, but the said league has been up against it so hard that it is too weak to resist.

If it be true that Tom Chivington said "I should worry," we move that he be barred forever from organized baseball.

The rumor that Artie Hofman will be sold to the Yanks leads some one to suspect that some one has an awful grudge against the said Artie.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a tennis champion who did not hail from California.

Experts who have seen Carl Morris in the ring declare unanimously that he is a good railroad engineer.

Jimmy Callahan is said to be a great little trader, but if he succeeds in trading P. Bodie off for anything more than a bat bag he will achieve undying fame.

THE GOAT.

O, it's sweet to be a manager and run
a losing club
And hear the rooters call you forty-seven kinds of dub.
O, it's sweet to be the William Goat
when all the time you know
That you stand between the public and the man behind the dough.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

When Frank Whitney steps into the ring with Charley White at the Auditorium-Armory Wednesday night he will not lack for admirers. Frank's great battles against "Battling" Nelson, Joe Thomas and Jake Abel has made him a popular boy among local fans.

Ad Wolgast, ex-lightweight champion of the world, will probably be seen in action on Labor Day. Tom McCarey yesterday secured Ad's word to meet the winner of the Jack White-Dundee bout on August 12.

Terry Nelson still thinks he can handle his mitts with the best of them. Terry has issued a challenge to the winner of the Hanlon-Mike Saul bout and says he will let the purse go winner take all if either of these boys will make 135 pounds at 3 o'clock for a night fight.

Jimmy Johnson, the New York fight promoter, expects a big crowd to attend the Jack Britton-Young Shugrue go next month. Both boys have put up sensational battles in the Eastern cities and are big cards with the fans.

Joe Rivers will have his last chance to make good on the coast on Labor Day when he tackles Leach Cross in a 20-round go-to. If Rivers loses he will be through as a big attraction with the Pacific coasters.

Joe Mandot, the French baker boy, intends to start a busy campaign on Labor Day. He has already wired Lou Castro, the local promoter, for a chance at the winner of the Whitney-White bout. Mandot ought to be a big card here.

Everybody is wondering why Knockout Brown is not fighting and whether he is ever going to put on the gloves again. His manager, Danny Morgan, says he'll start again as soon as the hot spell is over. In the meanwhile, Brown is taking daily spins in his new auto and also taking frequent dips in the briny. He should worry.

Arthur Pelky has refused to meet Jess Willard in a 20-round bout. Instead, he signed to clash with Charlie Miller before Jim Coffroth's club on August 27. Tom Jones, manager of Willard, claims that Pelky was afraid of his protege.

Memphis sends up the word that Kid Herman, of New Orleans, bested Jimmy Walsh, the British bantam, in an eight-round match there last night. If that there wasn't any shading in the report Herman bears watching.

Matty Baldwin is seriously thinking of leaving Los Angeles for his home in Boston. Matty was in hopes of getting on with Tommy Murphy, but the latter does not intend to do any boxing until fall.

CHANCE PAYS $17,000 FOR MASSEL, BALTIMORE PLAYER

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Nothing daunted by his recent experience with Jimmy Callahan in the Chase trade, Frank Chance yesterday added to the list of high-priced "beauties" when he paid Baltimore $12,000 in cash and Players Daniels and Midkiff, valued at $5,000, for Ed Maisel, the star shortstop of the Orioles. Maisel is to report to Chance here to-day.

The high-priced infielder has been much sought by the White Sox, the Boston Braves and other clubs, but the Yankees, striving earnestly to get a winning club outbid the others. The new man plays third base or shortstop with equal facility. Last season he batted .276 in 159 games, fielded .925 in 138 games at short and .927 in 22 games on the hot corner.

SAVAGE AND KUBIAK GO 10 HARD ROUNDS TO A DRAW

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Jim Savage and Al Kubiak, heavyweights, hammered each other for ten rounds to a draw here last night. Both men showed signs of severe punishment when they left the ring.

RED SOX BUY A FIELDER.

BOSTON, Aug. 9.—The Boston American League team announced to-day the purchase of Outfielder Welsh from the Worcester team of the New England League.

CRAVATH LEADS IN DRIVING RUNS ACROSS PLATE

FENCE-BREAKER CRAVATH, of the Phillies, is likely to lead the National League in driving in tallies this year as well as in manufacturing four-base wallops. During July the slugging Quaker pounded in 29 runs which was 10 more than any other player in the senior organization was able to drive home. Cravath's nearest rivals for the honor of being the National League's timeliest hitter last month were his teammate, Fred Luderus, Vic Saier and Frank Schulte, of the Cubs, and Larry Doyle, of the Giants, who won the Chalmers trophy last season. Each of these men put the finishing touches to nineteen markers.

Cravath excelled for the Phillies in timely hitting last month, Schulte and Saier for the Cubs, Doyle for the Giants, Dodge for the Reds, Miller for the Pirates, Fisher and Cutshaw for the Superbas, Whitted and Konetchy for the Cardinals, and Rariden for the Braves. It seems strange to find, as was the case in the Boston club last month, a catcher proving to be his team's most valuable wielder in the pinches. Rariden hit well all month, performing like a demon in the first game of the double-header with the Phillies on July 7. Then he batted in five runs, making a homer off Earl Moore with the bases filled.

Rariden was no, the only National Leaguer who, during July, coming to bat with all the bases occupied, cleared them. Others who turned the trick were Bob Bescher, Joe Connelly and Herb Moran.

Below will be found a table showing the number of runs batted in by 24 National League players last month, three leading pinch hitters on each team being included in the list:

	S.	H.	S. F.	I. O.	T.
Cravath, Philadelphia	27	2	0		29

WELSH GO NOT LIKELY TO NET RITCHIE MUCH

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., Aug. 9.—Willie Ritchie has let it be known that he had accepted the offer of Vancouver promoters for a match with Freddie Welsh on September 1.

This means that Ritchie has little thought of meeting Tommy Murphy, his "logical opponent," in the near future, and judging by remarks heard where sports congregate, Ritchie can prepare himself for a renewal of the criticism he was subjected to while he was touring the footlights and replying vaguely to questions put to him in respect to his ring plans.

There is a whisper around already that the Vancouver offer is not genuine but that Ritchie and Welsh are simply stockholders in a venture which calls for a 20-round bout and the taking of moving pictures. Those who are responsible for this rumor say that the "international aspect" of the bout leads all the parties interested to think that a big clean-up will be made from the "movies."

SENATORS BUY PITCHER.

DILLON HELD TO DRAW BY ASHE IN 12 ROUNDS

WINNIPEG, MAN., Aug. 9.—George Ashe, of New York, gamely fought off the vicious attacks of Jack Dillon, of Indianapolis, for twelve rounds last night, and the bout was declared a draw. Although Dillon made blood flow in the first round he was unable successfully to continue the advantage.

FORECLOSED ON BRIGHTON BEACH RACING PROPERTY

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—The passing of another famous New York race track apparently is forecast in a foreclosure sale of the Brighton Beach property, scheduled for August 28. The action was brought on a second mortgage of approximately $95,000. The first mortgage is $60,000.

to Stop Scaling of Psoriasis

This Troublesome Skin Disease Promptly Checked by a Very Simple Attention.

A lady in Lexington, Ky., says that before she began using S. S. S. psoriasis broke out at frequent intervals where she thought it cured. But by getting her blood under control by the influence of S. S. S., the disease entirely disappeared and there was never again the slightest sign of it.

There is one ingredient in S. S. S. which peculiarly stimulates cellular or glandular activity to select from the blood or from the fine network of blood vessels in the skin, those elements which it requires for regeneration.

Thus pimples, acne, eczema, lupus, or any other blood condition that attacks the skin or seeks an outlet through the skin, is met with the antidotal effect of S. S. S.

This is why skin troubles vanish so readily and why they do not return.

You can get S. S. S. in any drug store, but insist upon having it. The great Swift Laboratory in Atlanta, Ga., prepares this famous blood purifier, and you should take no chance by permitting anyone to recommend a substitute. And if your blood condition is such that you would like to consult a specialist freely, address the Medical Dept., The Swift Specific Company, 182 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Ax Hangs Over Evers and Callahan

One-Run Jinx Still On the Job

By O. B. Keeler.

SIDE-STEPPING for the moment the somewhat scrambled managerial lay-out in our own tight little league, and placing a large and furry ear in immediate proximity to the Red Old Hills of Georgia, we are able to discern distant rumblings from the general direction of Chicago.

It listens to the effect that Jake Stahl shortly is to welcome distinguished company in the recently organized club of Canned Managers.

Jimmy Callahan, of the White Sox, and Johnny Evers, of the Cubs, are to be up for membership.

ALSO Thomas Chivington, president of the American Association, who likewise lives and moves and opens his protests in Chicago.

We don't know that anybody in this precinct is likely to get much het up over the prospective skids for Mr. Chivington, so long as he doesn't come down here and start an insurrection.

But there will be a good deal of interest in the fate of the Silent Trojan and the man who could see $18,500 in Larry Chappelle.

CALLAHAN'S case is something brand new, while Evers' has been growling and chirping alternately since before the present season opened.

Cal is simply getting the hot end of it from the bugs, the same as any manager in a town accustomed to a winning ball club, when his bunch falls into a losing streak. The bleacher experts in particular are after his scalp.

But that is only incidental.

It is said that Callahan's manner of handling his men, always sharp and dictatorial, is rapidly getting to the bullying and bulldozing stage, if that is true, it is a serious state of affairs. Most ball players are led and kidded, not abused and nagged, into playing their best. A sore bunch of ball players of the best class will put up a much sorrier fight than an inferior team, working and pulling together, and fighting the enemy intead of the manager.

SWITCHING to Evers, however, we find our o. f., Chubby Cholly Muffy, standing all puffed up in the spotlight and insisting he likes a scrappy club and a scrappy manager.

"I want them to fight—fight each other—fight the manager—fight the other club," says Mr. Muffy. "Johnny Evers has made good. He is there to stay."

But Mr. Muffy said a lot of kind words about F. C. Chance, too. And M. Brown.

And it is recalled that Roger Bresnahan still is with the Cubs—and that Rajah was pretty well understood to be taken over with the idea that if J. Evers didn't deliver a pennant, he (Rajah) was to have a crack at it.

We don't know about that, except this much:

J. Evers won't win the pennant this year.

AND about Johnny. He's a grand little ball player, but his unruly talking apparatus is getting him in bad. Getting him in worse, it might better be said.

The most ardent Cub fans are getting around to where they want Johnny to play ball. They want him to stay in the game and not spend his valuable time debating with the umpires and walking to the clubhouse. Johnny may change his tactics.

And he may not.

TEAMS TO PLAY OFF TIE.

There will be a battle royal to-day when the Hallet & Davis and Atlanta National Bank teams of the Manufacturers' League, tie up in the play-off of a tie which now exists between them for first honors. The game will be played at Tenth and Boulevard and called at 3:30 o'clock.

GOLFER MUST BE SUB-CONSCIOUS TO PLAY WELL

By Chick Evans.

CHICAGO, Aug. 9.—An article in the August Century Magazine by Marshall Whitlack, entitled "Mind versus Muscle in Golf" seems to have attracted much attention. Mr. Whitlack has developed a new theory of play and applied it to his own game. The result has been a marked improvement in his scores. He believes that good golf is played through the lower nerve centers and motor channels, while poor golf is due to the direct interference of the brain or consciousness.

"Apparently we play our good golf in a subconscious condition," he says, "and that is why all interruptions are so disastrous to one's game. According to this theory one must depend upon muscular sense and the preliminary waggle assumes unusual importance, as the right feel must be obtained in action, the waggle must be continued until the muscles feel the balance and poise of the body while in motion."

The chief idea of the whole theory seems to be that the ball must be addressed in motion and not in repose, because in the latter condition the muscles will set and stiffen to the detriment of one's game.

So much for the theory. The other day I met Mr. McCordic, one of Skokie's most prominent golfers, and he asked me if I had read the Century article. He and Douglass Smith read it last Friday night. Saturday morning they went out and made 75 and 77, and attributed that good score to the new idea.

GUS MUDD, one of Beverly's golfers, has sent me the following question:

"What is the penalty when caddy goes into bunker with player in match play or qualifying round?"

I am not an authority on rules, but I have never heard of any penalty attaching to such an act. I consulted Tom Bendelow, who assures me there is no such penalty. If by chance he is mistaken I should be glad to hear from other golfers.

The reason I do not think there is any such ruling as indicated by the question is the enormous size of the bunkers in Great Britain. If a caddy could not go into such a bunker it would work great hardship upon the player.

CAPTAIN R. H. PETERS, a civil war veteran, and an enthusiastic member of the Ravenswood Golf Club, made a wonderful shot on his home course the other day. He was about twenty yards from the fourth green and his ball lay in a grassy hollow and he had to use a well-lofted club to get out. Undismayed, the captain caught the ball deftly and landed it in the hole. It was a very unusual shot and Captain Peters has every reason to be proud of his achievement.

Schwartz Wants to Quit Vols

Hirsig Stingy With "Coin Bag"

By Paul W. Treanor.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 9.—Flying distress signals from every mast, leaking from stem to stern, the poor old hulk in which the Vols have been floundering about in the rough seas has been deserted by the Voltown bugs, and inquiring glances are being turned to a new and up to date craft to be launched next season. Every hope of landing in even decent company has been abandoned and the only thing left to consider is the building up of a club, out of entirely new material.

On top of the multitude of woes of the Schwartzmen, who have experienced the most appalling disasters on their road trips, comes the well-defined gossip that the Boy Manager has thrown up the sponge and asked to be relieved of the managerial worries in 1914. To the thousands of fans who have long been clamoring for Bill Schwartz's scalp the news will be hailed with wild delight, while to a few more thousand who will never believe that Bill has had a fair chance, his resignation will be a tough blow.

The latter clan are asking just who will be the Moses to lead the Vols back to the top rung of the ladder, of which they clambered by only a toe hold, back in 1908 when Bill Bernhard was the pilot. Where are they going to find a leader who can produce better results than Bill Schwartz, when one pauses to analyze the bunch of has-been and discards with which he has been forced to fight, and echo, always on the job, cuts in with the well-known answer,

Hirsig Pleads With Manager.

President Hirsig, according to the dope going the rounds, has pleaded with the boy pilot to reconsider his retirement from the game and direct the club next season from the bench, at the same time offering Bill a mighty fat job in the big garage which the Alfbl Boss is building. Bill is a big ace wherever tires and automobiles are concerned and can hook himself on to a soft job any time he wants to send his uniform to a museum.

If anything will prevail upon Schwartz to once more head the Vols it is going to be the sting of past defeats which prod his ambitionsto bring a flag to Voltown, for no man lives who can brand the boy manager as a quitter.

The time for post-mortems passed long ago, likewise the weeps over the upset milk can, but Hirsig doesn't know as much about ball players and how the game should be played as a sparrow does about the Panama toll argument, and he just naturally can't keep from jabbing his fins in the pie and deciding on the merits of ball tossers, some thousand miles or more away from his office.

The Murphy of Southern League.

The man who PRESENTED Harry Welchonce to the Crackers, who passed up a chance early in the year to grab off Third-sacker Dodge from the Reds, when they were crazy to get rid of him, who handed down adverse weighty (?) opinions on pitching deals, when the slabbers were cracking, was Hirsig. Time without number he meddled and wrecked the club's chances, for the Charles Webb Murphy of the Southern League is about the best little meddler at large.

When the Vols, after a grueling drive and fighting on sheer nerve, crawled into second place, Bill Schwartz, realizing the club was skating on thin ice, went to his boss on his knees for help, pointed out the weak places and faltering twirlers. And did Hirsig heed the warning? With padlocks that would baffle a burglar's kit, he clamped the lid on the strong box and laughed at the fears of the Vols ever slumping.

Some, with more sentiment than brains, are gaping their heads off for Artie Hofman to be elevated from the ranks, but you can go broke that the former Cub wouldn't touch the leadership if Schwartz has any notion of leading another forlorn hope, and even if Bill should lay the spangles aside, Circus Solly is far too wise a ball player to allow the present flock of Vols to be saddled off on him and put more gray hairs on his scalp.

WOLGAST AND RITCHIE IN A MATCH FOR COMING FALL

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 9—Tom Jones is authority for the statement that Champion Willie Ritchie will be seen in action with Ad Wolgast here the last of October or some time in November.

"It is possible," Jones says, "that they may not get together before Thanksgiving, but a return match will be staged here about that time, unless negotiations fail through entirely."

Ad and Tom Jones arrived in town yesterday morning. It is understood that McCarey will make a strong bid for the match and both Ritchie and Wolgast have signified their willingness to be here should the terms be satisfactory.

CHURCH BALL PLAYER KILLED AN UMPIRE

CAMBRIDGE, OHIO, Aug. 9.—J. Powers, a member of the United Brethren Church team, is under arrest here on a charge of assault and held by the police under $300 bond.

Powers, it is alleged, assaulted F. S. Pollock, an umpire here, during a ball game, fracturing his skull. The hearing was delayed pending the outcome of Pollock's injuries. The assault took place during a twilight game late yesterday. Powers took exception to a ruling of the umpire and a fight followed.

BIG LEAGUERS BUYING FREQUENTLY AT PRESENT

TERRE HAUTE, IND., Aug. 9.—Catcher Hargrove has been sold to the Cubs for delivery at the end of the season. Grand Rapids has sold Pitcher Bowman to Cleveland for delivery at the end of the season, and Second Baseman Koehler goes to the New York Americans, to report at once to Jersey City. Brooklyn is to take Outfielders Reper and Tutweiler or Shortstop Fabrique from Fort Wayne.

GUNBOAT SMITH STOPS FLYNN IN FIVE ROUNDS

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—Gunboat Smith is believed to have added some slight weight to his claim of the heavyweight title last night when he whipped Jim Flynn so thoroughly in five rounds that Referee Joh stopped the bout, which was scheduled for ten rounds. The Pueblo fireman was knocked down four times in the fifth round, and was battered fiercely throughout the battle after the opening session.

Smith weighed 183 1-2 pounds and Flynn was five pounds heavier. He started rushing at the first gong and crowded Smith back to his corner, working short-arm jabs to the body. Smith broke away and straightened his adversary up with a savage right uppercut. Then he managed to keep the fireman away from him and jabbed him enough to even things in that round.

Smith continued the same tactics in the next three rounds, keeping Flynn away from him and jabbing him viciously. In the fifth round the Gunboat stopped a fierce swing with his ribs, and on recovering he sailed in savagely with a hail of right and left jabs, followed by a right uppercut flush on the jaw that sent the fireman down for the count of eight. He got up and was knocked down again, and when this had been repeated twice more, Joh stopped the fight.

Smallest Kingdom

Monaco is the smallest kingdom in the world. It is only fifty-three and a quarter miles in circuit, including Monte Carlo. The capital is Monaco, perched on a rocky promontory rising 200 feet above the sea level.

Monaco has undergone fifty-eight sieges, but has never lost her independence except for a few years at a time. In 500 B. C. Hectate of Miletus wrote an account of the city now called Monaco, and declared it to be so old that the people had lost all tradition of its origin.

Monte Carlo is famous for its magnificent casino, the most gorgeous gambling establishment in the world. The town of Monte Carlo in winter is a health resort, and in summer is noted for its bathing.

Whisky Is a Good Driver.

It Drives Away Friends, Happiness, and From the Mind Drives Confidence and Courage.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Send the picture on this page to some man who needs it.

Many men need it, unfortunately.

As you see this man at the table and the two spirits that leave him, you realize that man is not single, but made up of many elements.

These are firmly compacted in the self-controlled man; they work together to make him what he should be.

But whisky, the drug and poison, has the subtle power to dissolve character and take away from the man who scarcely knows it the best elements in his nature.

Whisky beggars a man! It finds him full of hope and courage and confidence in himself.

It finds him with friends, receiving and giving affection.

And one by one it takes these things from him.

The friends are taken and affection is taken. His strength, his prospects go, little by little, as the whisky fills his tissues, conquers his nerves and rules in the foolish brain which often says so pitifully, "If I had just one more drink, I'd be all right."

Just one more drink, and then another, and dozens and hundreds following.

And at last the unhappy man on whom whisky has fastened its clutch sits like the man in this picture. Of all men he alone does not see his degradation, the brutal defacement of what was once a man.

Have you seen a buzzard, a vulture or a crow picking the skeleton of a horse?

Whisky does its work as vilely and as thoroughly as the meanest buzzard.

Bit by bit it picks from the man all he has that is worth while.

Saddest of all is the scene in this picture, when the two spirits that give man his chief hope leave him—when COURAGE AND SELF-RESPECT PASS OUT OF THE DOOR LEAVING THIS POOR WRECK ALONE AT THE TABLE.

Is it even then too late, and is the case hopeless?

No, fortunately, it is never too late, and no man's case is hopeless.

HE CAN, IF HE WILL, RISE UP AND FOLLOW OUT OF THAT DOOR THE SPIRIT THAT HAS LEFT HIM AND OVERTAKE IT AND MAKE IT HIS OWN.

Some of the world's best work has been done and is done now by those that were once robbed by alcohol of all save the one spark that brings man back to his place WHEN HE WILL.

Many a man sits disconsolate, gazing into space, wondering what is to become of him, bitterly repentant, anxious for those that suffer.

And his hope and courage and confidence disappear in the distance.

Help him if you can. Lift him to his feet, start him in the right road.

He may overtake them, HE CAN IF HE WILL.

Portugal Will Never See King Manuel on the Throne---With Gaby Deslys on the Throne Steps.

The Trouble With Portugal Is Ignorance of the People, INABILITY TO READ, but the Republic Will Live.

(Copyright, 1913.)

News from Portugal, sent out by those that hate republican government and that like ignorance, is to the effect that the Republic of Portugal is in danger.

These reports need not seriously worry those that believe in republican government.

For a good many years there have been periodic reports of the same kind coming from France.

The world has been asked to believe that a French pretender, with a forehead one inch and a half high and the intelligence of a canary bird, would succeed in putting up a throne and ruling the French people.

Everybody knows that that is a pitiful joke.

The French pretenders have about as much chance of ruling in France as they have of ruling in Alaska.

The news from Portugal is disturbing only because of the fact that the system of tyranny, brutality and superstition that ruled there for so long, PURPOSELY KEPT THE PEOPLE IN IGNORANCE AND UNABLE TO READ.

Those that would mislead the people, those that hate the republic and hate government by the people, are helped by the fact that the poor peasants in the country, and the clerks and the workers in the cities and towns, are, as a rule, illiterate, unable to read or to sign their own names.

There is no real danger, however, for the Republic of Portugal. There may be a revolution again, but it will end IN ANOTHER REPUBLIC.

The interesting little Manuel will continue sitting at a little tin table on the French boulevard; he will continue to be a moving picture king—not a real one.

Never again will Portugal see him sitting on the throne, spending the money of a people overtaxed and kept ignorant.

If the present rulers of Portugal are replaced by others, they will be no men of the King Manuel type, but men of greater force than the present rulers, able to continue Portugal as a republic; able to carry on the real business of a republic—THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, THE ABOLITION OF IGNORANCE AND THE SUPERSTITION AND BRUTALITY THAT GO WITH IGNORANCE.

Do You Know Any Man Ruined by Whisky?

Show him this picture and the two spirits, SELF-RESPECT and COURAGE, walking away from this unhappy victim of his own weakness. This picture may send some drunkard hurrying out of the door to catch up with the friends that have been driven from him. (See Editorial.)

ARE you a student of the power of mind over matter? Are you talking to every one you meet about "Universal Life Principle" and "Vibration" and "Mental and Spiritual Science" and all the other expressions so in vogue to-day among advanced thinkers?

See to It That Your Life Illustrates Your Theories.

If you are, see to it that your life illustrates your theories. Do not let it all end in talk.

I have known a self-supporting woman to use all her income in literature and lectures and lessons on these subjects: "How to Control Destiny," "How to Grow Success," "How to Attain Self-Mastery" and "How to Be Well and Prosperous." Yet she was always ailing. She had not one penny saved, nor respectable clothing in her wardrobe; she slighted her work and forgot her duties and was altogether an unsatisfactory human being.

At almost any gathering of people identified with or interested in Mental, or Christian Science, or New Thought, or any kindred subject, a large majority of the unkempt and nervous and erratic beings are to be encountered. This is true, we know, of all new theories and creeds, for the disappointed and dissatisfied souls of earth naturally turn to new avenues of thought, hoping to find peace. But when we find these unfortunate types representing a religion or a theory and talking its precepts to every passerby, it is a matter of more than temporary regret.

Until you can indicate by your life, your face, your manner and your work that you have found a solution for the problem of existence and a panacea for human ills, do not talk about it. Wait in the silence and grow.

It is a simpler matter to be filled with a conviction than it is to prove that conviction to the world.

But while there are thousands of people to-day talking and writing the philosophy not ten in any thousand are living what they talk. A woman who was all nerves and hysteria and who kept herself and every one about her in confusion and excitement over her troubles and ailments was urged to try Spiritual Science.

"Why, I teach it," she said. "I do not need any one to help me in that way, as I have had a class of young women to whom I have been revealing the truth for some time."

That is the great trouble with the world to-day.

We have so many people teaching and so few living the truth. Because you have gained a little light and begin to understand the philosophy of life do not set yourself up for a teacher or an exhorter until you have proven by your life that what you teach and preach is practicable.

Wait Until You Succeed Before Preaching Success.

Wait until you can keep yourself in health before you begin healing others.

Wait until you are successful in your undertakings before you tell others the way to win success.

Wait until your face expresses peace and calm and happiness before you preach the power of your philosophy to produce these results.

Live first—talk afterward.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THERE is a devil and his name is Doubt;
The country and the city know him well.
He makes each human mind his citadel
And many an honest aim he puts to rout.
He argues well, about it and about—
He kills more love than any tongue can tell;
He leads obedient mortals to his hell
And mocks them when they seek a pathway out.

You do not know him, yet you doubt your friend;
You sneer at him, but doubt a mother's love.
He camps upon your trail until the end,
As smooth as silk, as fluttering as a dove
In every brain he builds his little fires—
He is the trustiest devil Satan hires.

High Cost of Living and Wasted Crops.

Lack of Transportation and the Clutch of the Middleman, He Declares, Has Left Thousands of Carloads of Garden Produce Rotting on the Ground in Texas This Season.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

DOWN in the beautiful and peaceful Pecos Valley in Texas some months ago I saw tons of luscious strawberries rotting in the field because the markets of the North were overstocked and the berries were not worth the freight, much less the cost of picking.

Southwestern Texas is the country that General Sherman had in mind when he made a certain sarcastic remark that has gone clattering down the centuries like a tin kettle to a dog's tail.

The application, however, of water and intelligent labor to the arid land of Texas has worked such miracles that William Tecumseh's far-flung phrase puts that gentleman's perspicacity in jeopardy.

On a single acre of irrigated land I have seen produced ten tons of onions, cabbages in proportion and spinach enough to fill a silo.

The sunshine, the fertility of the soil and water produce crops which, if the truth were told about them, would qualify the narrator for the Ananias Club in any city of the North, and quickly.

Carloads Rot.

The question, however, is to get these fruits and vegetables on the tables of the people who need them most. Lack of transportation and the clutch of the middleman has left thousands of carloads of garden produce rotting on the ground in Texas this past season.

Here is a question so big and important that it deserves the attention of the most able men in the United States to-day.

It is a somewhat curious fact that our lawmaking is largely the work of amateurs.

The men we send to Washington are not the men who have had experience in the matter of taking care of great and important propositions.

They are for the most part men who have wormed themselves into office.

The business of government falls into the hands of the inexperienced and the unfit.

This thing of government by the selfish, the transient and the irresponsible is the most telling criticism to be made of our so-called Democracy.

There should be a method devised by the Government whereby the services of highly trained men can be secured and utilized. And one of the crying needs of the trained man now is in this matter of getting the desirable food products of the South and West into the hands of the people in the cities of the East who need them most.

The Problem.

With peaches rotting in the orchards in the Yakima Valley, millions of dollars' worth of apples ungathered in Washington—hundreds of carloads of onions, cabbages, spinach, berries in Texas, and thousands of people in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and New York going without fresh vegetables and without fresh fruit—this is the condition that challenges our economic skill.

The solution of the high cost of living lies in getting vegetables and fruit direct from farm to family with least possible expense.

And so here comes an invention successfully utilized and worked out whereby fruits and vegetables can be dehydrated.

Most fruit and vegetables contain from 80 to 92 per cent of water. To eliminate this water so the vegetables and fruits can be kept an indefinite length of time is a most desirable evolution to bring about.

Green peas, rhubarb, spinach, raspberries, blackberries, strawberries should be on Christmas tables fresh in all of the cities of the North, and this at a very reasonable price.

Science to Help.

As it is things have to be shipped in season, in refrigerator cars, rushed through and sold quickly. Otherwise they deteriorate and perish.

The expense of transportation of perishable goods is very much greater than that where the article is dehydrated and prepared so it will keep indefinitely.

By evaporating the water in his products the farmer can find a ready market for a vast quantity of fruits and vegetables which are now practically worthless.

The market where the thing has to be sold quickly places the shipper at a great disadvantage and gives the middleman his chance.

I expect to see the day when the United States Government will co-operate with big business to the end that the vast crops of the irrigated lands of the West and South shall be harvested and marketed to the people who need them most, and this at a minimum of expense.

Washington a Mason

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

IT WAS one hundred and sixty years ago that George Washington was given the well-earned right to look upon the "hieroglyphic light which none but craftsmen ever saw."

The venerable and venerated records of Fredericksburg Lodge show that Washington was initiated on November 4, 1752, passed fellowcraft March 3, 1753, and was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason August 4, 1753.

Strange to say, it appears to be a fact that the "Father of His Country" was initiated before he had reached the required age of 21 years. Daniel Campbell, Master of the lodge, granted the special dispensation which enabled the candidate to begin his eastward journey while still a minor.

Grand Master French, of the District of Columbia, declared in an address delivered in 1851 that no one stopped to inquire about Washington's age when his petition was presented; that the majestic proportions of the candidate, together with his well-known character and ability, made upon all concerned the impression that might have been made by a thoroughly matured man.

It appears, however, that the dispensation was based upon the fact that the candidate's duties demanded it. So busy a man was to be received when it was convenient for him.

Washington remained a member of the Fredericksburg Lodge to the day of his death. Among the many other distinguished men whose names appear upon the rolls of the lodge are George Weedon, Washington's adjutant-general; General Hugh Mercer, who fell at the battle of Princeton; Jacob VonBraam, Washington's instructor in sword practice, and Fielding Lewis, Washington's brother-in-law.

The Bible that was used at the time Washington was made a Mason is still in possession of the old Virginia lodge, and is guarded with unremitting care and affection. It is said to be 226 years old, and is still in an excellent state of preservation.

In the evil days of the war between the States the old town of Fredericksburg lay between the opposing lines of Lee and Burnside, and while the bloody struggle was on thousands on both sides thought of the little temple and altar and Bible that were so lovingly associated in their recollection with the man who made the nation whose very existence was then trembling in the balance.

Five Called to Break Down Negroes' Stories

GEN. HUERTA IS ARMING JINGOES

Hatred Against Americans in Capital Stirred by President—Lind Warned Not to Come.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—The administration to-day decided to ignore entirely the note sent by President Huerta to the American government and to direct Special Envoy Lind to proceed to Mexico City without delay on his arrival at Vera Cruz to-night, unless he be held back by armed force.

"The President declines to be bluffed," stated a prominent government official to-day.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 8.—With the approval of Provisional President Huerta, arms were issued to-day to the students of the National Military Academy, who yesterday drafted a resolution praising Huerta for declaring John Lind, the special American envoy, persona non grata to the Mexican Government.

A number of residents in the American colony, who have fortunes invested in Mexico, are planning to make a demonstration Sunday when protests will be lodged against the action of President Wilson in sending a personal representative to Mexico City and urging that the Mexican Government be upheld.

Foreign Minister Aldape and other members of the Cabinet are doing all in their power to arouse the patriotism and enthusiasm of the people.

Meetings of young hot bloods, who are standing up for President Huerta in his defiance of the Stars and Stripes, are being encouraged.

Mexican secret service agents have been detailed to watch every movement that Mr. Lind makes here and the envoy will be under constant surveillance.

The newspapers to-day carried flaming stories of "Yankee interference," and warned the State Department to recall Mr. Lind from Vera Cruz and not allow him to come to Mexico City.

Direful consequences are promised if President Wilson and Secretary Bryan continue their present course of trying to settle the internal affairs of Mexico while withholding official recognition of the Huerta administration.

All the papers carry warm words of praise for Huerta and promise that he will stand like a rock in behalf of his policy of "Mexicans for Mexican affairs."

United States warships in the harbor at Vera Cruz were in wireless communication with the New Hampshire, upon which Mr. Lind, is coming, and it is expected that the New Hampshire will reach Vera Cruz about 9 o'clock to-night.

Some Would Ignore Lind.

There was a gathering of Cabinet Ministers and Huerta adherents in Congress at the National Palace today, at which the existing American-Mexican situation was thoroughly discussed. Some are for completely ignoring Mr. Lind, while the radicals insist that he shall be expelled un-

NO SET PLAN FOR NAVAL STORES

Delegates at Jacksonville Meet Unable to Agree on Way to Beter Prices.

JACKSONVILLE, Aug. 8.—After discussing the naval stores market from all angles for two hours, the 200 naval stores operators who met here this morning decided to return home and let each man do what he thought best toward working out a plan for better prices.

Different plans were proposed for bracing up the market, but none was accepted. It was the consensus of opinion that a curtailment of production would be the only thing that would boost the price. The methods of bringing about this curtailment was the question they were unable to settle.

The independent producers in the West are making money and refuse to quit shipping. This spoiled the plan to suspend operations all over the country. It was suggested that the factors be asked to refuse to advance any more expense money to their customers. This plan was thought too drastic and was abandoned.

Another plan was to dump all of the overproduction on the market, thereby cutting the prices to such a point as to force the Westerners to suspend operations. Several operators objected to this plan, because they had not sold anything this year, and the present market price would not net them anything for the year's work.

Electric Co. Blamed For Lineman's Death

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 8.—An inquest over the body of J. R. Peterson, lineman for the Southern Bell Telephone Company, killed Thursday when he came in contact with a live wire of the electric light company, was held this afternoon.

Justice A. R. Elmore, as Coroner, rendered a verdict that the Gainesville Gas and Electric Light Company, by "gross and culpable negligence," was to blame. This is the second case of the kind in three weeks. The other victim was C. D. Murray, a lineman for the Western Union.

The heavy wires of the electric company are devoid of insulation in places. The company was ordered to pay damages at the last term of court for the injury to a child by a broken live wire in the street.

Peterson's body, accompanied by the widow and two daughters, was sent to Jacksonville this morning for burial.

Striker Fined $50 in Mobile Assault Case

MOBILE, Aug. 8.—Two warrants were sworn out in the Inferior Criminal Court Friday against Joseph Mahler, one by Philip Shock charging threats to do him bodily harm, and the other by William Kling of the Home Industry Iron Works, charging that Mahler is interfering with persons engaged in lawful work.

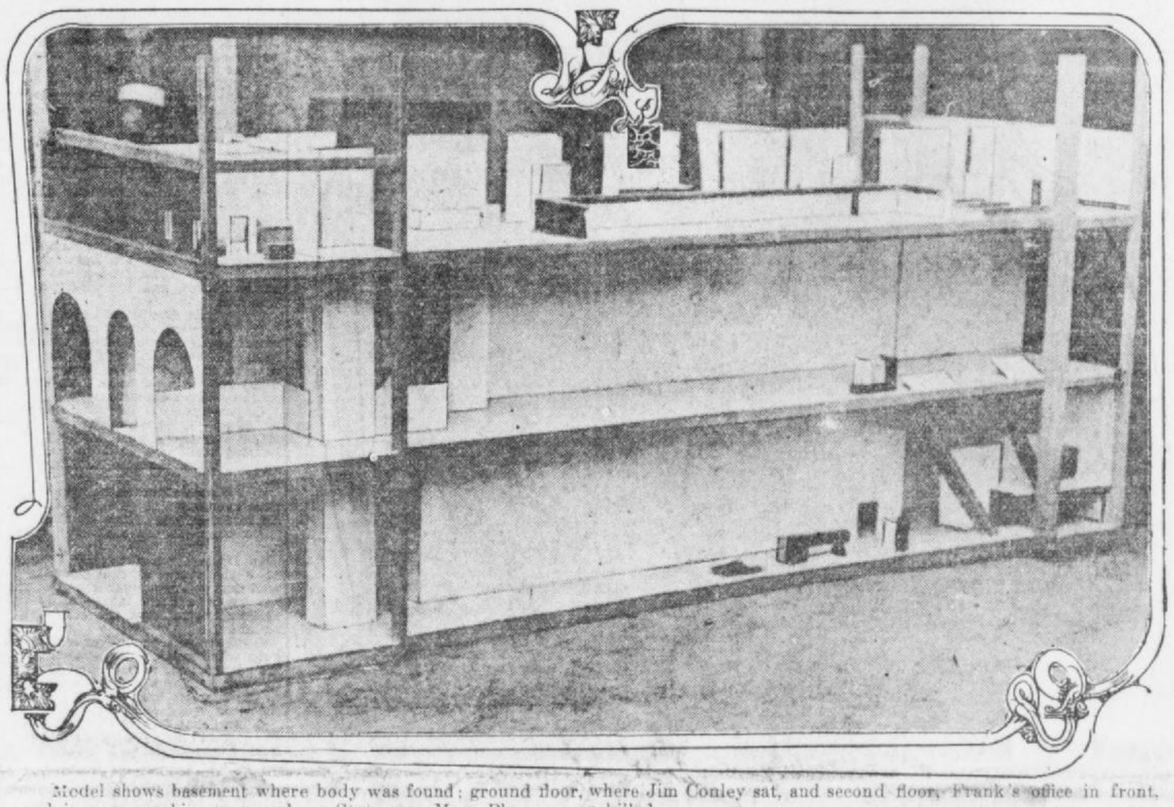

The second warrant was issued under the boycot law. Mr. Shock is general foreman of the plant.

Mahler was sentenced to pay a fine of $50 or serve 90 days in jail by Acting Recorder Robert E. Gordon Friday. Notice of an appeal was given and bond fixed at $200. William Agnew, the man who is alleged to have been assaulted, was not in court. Mahler had no witnesses. He did not testify.

PAPER MODEL OF PENCIL FACTORY PUT BEFORE JURY BY THE DEFENSE

Habeas Corpus to Free Lee Sought In Superior Court

Charging that Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan, is being given all the liberties of a "detained guest" while confined in prison, while the negro Newt Lee, who is held as a witness only, is being treated as a criminal, Attorneys Graham and Chappell representing Lee, late Friday afternoon swore out a writ of habeas corpus for the release of Lee. The hearing has been set for Saturday morning at 10 o'clock before Judge George L. Bell, of the Superior Court.

The petitioners set forth that Sheriff Mangum is treating Newt Lee as an ordinary criminal, despite the alleged fact that he is only a witness in the Mary Phagan case, having been released from the charge of murder by order of Judge Ellis, who, it is claimed, ordered the sheriff on disposition of a former writ not to confine Lee as a criminal but as a witness.

The petitioners set forth further that Frank, who is charged with the murder from which Lee was released, is being given all the liberties and privileges of a "detained guest, even being allowed to visit the dining room where he takes his meals."

It was charged this afternoon that this latest move is part of a general attack on the Sheriff inspired by political motives.

Engineer Prevents Wreck by Wild Dash

EUFAULA, Aug. 8.—The morning train from Atlanta and Macon was almost wrecked on a trestle two miles from Eufaula, which a few years ago was the scene of an accident in which several people were killed and numerous others injured.

Just as the train was crossing the trestle the tender jumped the track, and in order to pull the train to a place of safety Engineer Ed Scovall opened the throttle wide and went at full speed across the bridge. There the tender was righted.

Weyler Uses Mailed Fist in Strike Riots

Alabama Judgeship I s Sought by Three

ANNISTON, Aug. 8.—Much interest is expressed here in the appointment by Governor Emmet O'Neal of a successor to Probate Judge W. H. Cooper, whose death at Birmingham Thursday created a vacancy.

This will be the second time within about a year that Governor O'Neal will have had the opportunity of making an appointment to this office. When the health of Judge E. F. Crook necessitated his giving up the office, Representative J. J. Arnold was named to fill the unexpired term. He was defeated by Judge Cooper in the primary last year and has himself been in bad health recently.

E. D. Willett to-day eliminated himself from the race, leaving W. F. McCartney, Mr. Crook and Mr. Arnold in the field.

Postal Fraud Case To Be Begun Monday

GADSDEN, Aug. 8.—The trial of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne promoter charged with using the United States mails to defraud, will begin here in Federal Court next Monday.

There is a mass of testimony, and the trial will be lengthy and probably sensational. It is said that Drew's alleged victims are to be found in several States. The Grand Jury spent two days making the investigation.

It is said Drew wrongfully used the mails to induce persons to subscribe to stock in an oil company he was promoting at Fort Payne.

Bride Sees Husband Slain by Live Wire

ANNISTON, Aug. 8.—In the presence of his bride of a week, Howard Dill, a young electrician, was electrocuted on a pole by 60,000 volts passing through a wire at Coldwater Station, six miles from Anniston. The wife telephoned for help. She is prostrated by grief now.

Mr. Dil was a son of Policeman Joe Dill, of Anniston.

MESSENGER BOYS WIN STRIKE.

MOBILE, Aug. 8.—The strike of the Western Union messenger boys for car fare on messages outside of the retail business district and to the suburbs, which started yesterday afternoon, came to an end this afternoon when their demands were granted. The strike paralyzed the company's business for a while.

England Rapidly Is Besting Demon Rum, King's Doctor Avers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—In addressing the International Medical Congress to-day Sir Thomas Barlow, M. D., personal physician to King George and president of the congress, declared that England is rapidly becoming the most temperate nation in the world. He declared that the use of alcohol in the army and navy is diminishing at a fast rate.

Dr. Beale, of Texas, one of the American delegates, in speaking of pellagra, said it cost 3,000 lives in America in 1912, and that there were fully 50,000 persons afflicted with the disease.

Professor Pasteur told the congress that the use of radium as a cure for cancer has proven successful and probably will come into general use.

Farmer's Beans Are Cooked by Lightning

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—William Williams, a truck farmer, went out to gather some string beans for the family table the other day. Much to his surprise, he discovered that they were deliciously cooked.

He thought for a time that he had out-Burbanked Burbanks, but a little reflection divulged the reason. In planting he had placed wires between the poles, and during a recent storm lightning struck the wires and cooked the beans.

'Side-Door Pullman' Improvement Urged

CINCINNATI, Aug. 8.—At the first day's session of the annual convention of the Intinerant Workers' Association to-day a request was formulated to be presented to the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel railroads to put some modern improvements on freight cars.

They say ocean steamships now are provided with gymnasiums, sun parlors and golf links; that Pullman cars have sanitary cups which the porter provides on request, but that freight car roads are still as "hard as the heart of the railroad detective."

GRUBB TO HEAR RATE CASE.

GADSDEN, Aug. 8.—Judge W. I Grubb, who has been presiding over Federal Court here, adjourned court until next Monday and departed for Birmingham, where, it is understood, he will take up the supersedeas in the Louisville and Nashville rate case.

3 Negro 'Detectives' Are Nearly Lynched

PENSACOLA, Aug. 8.—According to a dispatch from Blountstown, Calhoun County, three negro "detectives" barely escaped lynching yesterday when it became known that they had "buncoed" authorities of that county. However, the Sheriff took them into custody and protected them.

Two weeks ago, it appears, the negroes were hired by the prosecuting attorney of Calhoun County to get evidence of the sale of liquor and gambling. They were provided with a small amount of money.

The names of about 50 negroes charged with gambling and with selling liquor have been furnished to the Sheriff and many arrests were made during the last two weeks. So many of the employees of a Blountstown Manufacturing Company were taken into custody that the mill had to suspend until the cases were disposed of.

When some of the cases went to trial yesterday it developed that the negro detectives had no evidence, but the accused had ample evidence to prove their innocence, many of them establishing alibis.

Ostend Bathing Suits In U.S.? Goodness, No!

NARRAGANSETT PIER, Aug. 8.—"Any woman who takes surf baths may for a trifling amount of money appear to advantage on the beach—an accomplishment not to be held lightly, as all women know," says Mrs. Henry Hutt, former wife of the artist.

"At Ostend, where women go to the beach in coats, one-piece bathing suits may be all right, but in America, where we lounge so much upon the beach, they would cause riots."

Paris Gown Saves Life of Vanderbilt

LONG BEACH, N. Y., Aug 8.—That William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., had a narrow escape from death in the automobile accident that claimed the life of S. Osgood Pell and William Laimbeer because of the fact that he wished to protect a Parisian gown worn by Mrs. Pell, became known when he testified at the inquest.

He would have been in the machine had he not stopped to secure a linen duster with which to cover Mrs. Pell's gown.

The rest of the party went on without waiting for the couple, who took another car and followed.

DORSEY GOES AFTER HOLLOWAY, CALLED TO STAND FOR FRANK

Portions of E. F. Holloway's testimony were badly shaken Solicitor Dorsey finished a grilling cross-examination of the National Pencity Factory timekeeper and watchman late Friday.

Holloway appeared a very willing witness for the defense and Dorsey went after him viciously as soon as Reuben Arnold was through the direction questioning.

The Solicitor, by his line of questioning, first imputed that Holloway had sought to get Kendrick, a former night watchman to swear that Frank had been in the habit of calling him up at night as he called Newt Lee. Holloway denied this indignantly.

Dorsey next asked Holloway if he had not told L. P. Whitfield, a Pinkerton operaitve, to come around the next day and he was sure the detective would find something. The next day the bloody club was found. Holloway also denied this.

Holloway testified that N. V. Darley left the factory at about 9:20 o'clock. Dorsey showed him his own affidavit saying that Darley left with Frank about 10:45.

Holloway gave Jim Conely the lie when he was recalled to the stand. Under the guidance of Reuben Arnold, he took up Conley's charges of grave misconduct against Frank and denied each one of them.

The day watchman declared that he always had been in the factory at the time Conley testified he had watched at the door for Frank and that he was positive such things never had taken place.

Holloway asserted that Frank never had brought women to his office and that women never were in his office, except members of his family.

Conley when he made his sensational charges of misconduct against Frank, cited Thanksgiving as one of the days that Frank had women in the factory. Holloway said Conley was not in the factory that day.

Reubne Arnold brought out the striking fact that it was snowing on Thanksgiving Day as a point against Conley's statement that a woman visited the factory that day and that she wore white shoes and white stockings.

Failure of George Epps, the 14-year-old newsboy, to appear in response to the call of the defense led Attorney Arnold to ask Judge Roan if he could not get an attachment for the lad. It was explained that the court deputies merely had been unable to locate the missing witness and that he would be brought into court the first thing in the morning.

That the door leading from the entryway on the first floor, of the National Pencil Factory, which had been nailed up since the first of January, was found broken open shortly after the murder of Mary Phagan was the startling testimony of N. V. Darley at the trial of Leo Frank Friday afternoon.

No testimony of this nature had been presented before and no intimation of such a discovery had been made during the investigation of the murder mystery. Its production, if the statements remain uncontroverted, opens up the possibility that the murderer of Mary Phagan attacked her on the first floor, broke open the door into the rear of the building and threw the body down one of two trap door, one of which opens onto a chute and the other onto a steep stairway.

The defense did not appear to be abandoning its theory that Conley might have attacked Mary Phagan and thrown her down the leevator shaft only a few feet distant or down the scuttlehole right by the elevator. On the contrary, Reuben Arnold in questioning Darley and other witnesses emphasized the ease with which such a deed might have been accomplished. It seemed to be the effort of the defense at this time not to center upon any one theory, but to show the jurors that the negro might have perpetrated the crime and disposed of the body in any one of four or five ways.

Darley, in advancing the striking possibility that the body had been carried through the door on the first floor into the rear of the building, said that the door had been nailed up again a few days after the crime as mysteriously as it had been broken open.

Darley said that he had kept watch of employees after the murder and that his suspicion immediately had fastened upon Conley because of the negro's peculiar actions. He said he had detailed the day watchman to montain an espionage over Conley.

C. B. Dalton's story recevied a severe blow at the hands of Darley. Darley said that no negro night watchman had been employed at the factory before April, 1913. Dalton tlod of night visits at the factory prior to this time and said he was met by a negro night watchman.

Solicitor Dorsey, cross-examining Darley, made the witness admit that detectives had been in the factory after the crime and might themselves have broken open the door.

The solicitor has brought out that if the body had been thrown down the chute in the rear of the factory, it would have dropped behind a pile of boxes where it would have been more effectively hidden than where it was discovered by Newt Lee. The solicitor claimed that the trap door over the rear stairway into the basement was nailed.

The attorneys for Frank vigorously assailed Friday the stories of two of the State's of two of the State's negro witnesses, Jim Conley, the accuser of Frank, and Albert McKnight, who said he saw Frank at the Selig home Saturday afternoon, April 26.

The motorman and conductor of the street car on which Mary Phagan is believed to have come to town the day of her death both testified that they knew the girl and that she was on their car which arrived at Broad and Hunter Streets not before 12:07 o'clock. She stayed on the car, they said, until the car reached Broad and Hunter Streets, which was about 12:10 o'clock. Consequently, it would have been impossible for her to reach the factory before 12:11 or 12:12 o'clock.

If the testimony of the two street car employees is accurate, it completely upsets Jim Conley's story that he saw Mary Phagan enter the factory before Monteen Stover came in. By the Stover girl's own testimony she entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock and left at 12:10 o'clock. Thus, she had gone by the time the Phagan girl arrived.

It also serves to destroy the significance of the Stover girl's testimony that Frank was absent from his office when she arrived there. As Mary Phagan had not yet arrived, according to the testimony of the street car men, it could hardly be regarded as a suspicious circumstance that Frank was not in his office, if it develops that he really was not. The defense also contends that Miss Stover, who admits she did not enter the inner office, could have looked through the doorway without seeing Frank.

Soon after court reconvened in the afternoon, H. J. Hinchey, of No. 391 Peachtree street, manager of the South Atlanta Blowpipe Company, appeared at the courthouse under subpen of the defense to discredit the story of Albert McKnight. McKnight testified that he was at Frank's home the afternoon of the murder and that he saw Frank board a Georgi avenue cr to return to the fctory.

Hinchey stated before he went on the stand that he was riding in his automobile on Washington street Memorial Day and at 2:15 o'clock he saw Frank get off a Washington street car at Washington and Hunter streets when the car was stalled by the parade. Frank then was on his way to the factory.

Earlier in the day the defense introduced other evidence to discredit McKnight. Photographs and blue prints of the Selig home were displayed to show that it would have been practically impossible for McKnight to see Frank at the sideboard, as the negro testified when he was on the stand.

Photos and Models Introduced.

Photographs and blue prints of the pencil factory also were put in evidence and in the afternoon a large sized model of the pencil factory, constructed on a scale of three-eighths of an inch to the foot, was brought into the court room. It was made by T. H. Willett, a patternmaker, of No. 100 Highland avenue, and John Cox, an attache of Reuben Arnold's office.

The model and blue prints were submitted in an effort to demonstrate that the State's theory of the crime is unreasonable and preposterous, and to illustrate the theory that the defense holds.

Attorney Arnold, who was conducting the examination during the forenoon, sought also to throw a deep shadow of suspicion upon the story of young George Epps, ho testified that he rode uptown with Mary Phagan the day she was killed.

Matthews said that another girl was seated with Mary the latter part of the ride to town. He did not recollect that Epps was on the car at all. The motorman said that he was relieved at Broad and Marietta streets and that he sat behind Mary and her companion all the way to Hunter street. He said the two alighted at Hunter street and proceeded toward Forsyth, on which the factory is located.

This is in direct contradiction to the story of Epps, who testified that he and Mary left the car at Forsyth and Marietta streets and that he walked with her toward the factory as far as the viaduct.

Didn't See Epps.

Hollis did not remember seeing Epps on the car. He said Mary was alone when he collected her fare after the car got on English avenue. He left the car at Forsyth and Marietta streets and did not see Mary Phagan alight there.

Albert Kauffman, an architect, was called to discredit several of the State's witnesses. He had blueprints of the Selig home which he displayed to the jury to show that it was impossible for Albert McKnight to have seen from the kitchen into the dining room, as he testified he did, on the Saturday afternoon that Frank came home from the factory.

His testimony was to the effect that Monteen Stover could not have seen over the safe door into Frank's office at the time she declared she was unable to find him on her visit to the factory.

He said that there was room for several bodies to pass down the scuttle hole into the basement. He exhibited a diagram of the factory to show that Frank could have sat in his office and not been aware of anything taking place beyond the time clock—for example, anyone coming up or going down the stairs.

Miss Daisy Hopkins, who C. B. Dalton said was his companion on visits to the factory basement, was called by the defense and denied Dalton's statements.

She said she never had spoken to Frank, and that Frank never had spoken to her.

Solicitor Dorsey made an attack on her character and forced her to admit she had been in jail on a statutory charge. It was brought out, however, that she was released without trial.

Frank, for the first time during the trial, took ana ctive part in helping direct the course his case was taking. He arose from his seat several times to make suggestions to his lawyers, and at his request certain questions were put.

Before Daisy Hopkins was called Solicitor Dorsey said he wanted to ask Harry Scott one more question. Attorney Rosser said he also wanted to ask one more question of Boots Rogers, Detective J. M. Starnes and George Epps. Detective Scott was the first witness called.

Dorsey asked:

Q. Mr. Scott, how long did it take you to get Jim Conley to write after he had admitted that he could write and you dictated it to him without delay?—A. Two or three minutes.

Daisy Hopkins on Stand.

Q. Did you introduce him to Mr. Frank?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you ever go into the factory and go into the basement with Dalton?—A. No, I don't even know where the basement is. I never have been in it.

Q. What time did you reach that point?—A. About two and one-half minutes later. It took that long on account of the crowds.

Q. It took that long?—A. Yes. I was not running the car then. I was sitting behind Mary Phagan. There was a little girl on the seat with her.

Q. Where did she get off?—At Broad and Hunter streets.

Q. What time was it than?—A. 12:10 as near as I could recollect.

Q. Didn't you tell Detective Whitfield, of the Pinkertons, that you might have been three or four minutes ahead of schedule?—A. No.

Q. You are sure you never told him that?—A. No.

Q. How is it that you are willing to tell this jury that Mary Phagan did not get off at Marietta and Broad streets?—A. Wait a minute and I will tell you. There was an ex-conductor sitting by me. He had a pin on his coat. I took it off and leaning over to Mary Phagan I said: "Little girl, this is your picture." She said: "No, it ain't." That made me positive.

Q. Tell me how these little girls were dressed?—A. I don't remember, except they were dressed in something light.

Q. You say it was a light color. Just what color was it?—A. I don't know.

Q. What did you say light color for? Come, don't——

Arnold Calls Halt.

Attorney Arnold interrupted.

"Just wait a minute. That is not the form to question him."

Fails on Color of Hat.

Attorney Arnold took the witness and showed him the dress Mary Phagan wore.

Q. Was this the dress she wore that day?—A. I am not sure, but it looks like it might have been.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness. He showed the witness Mary Phagan's hat.

Q. Is this the light hat you just now told the jury Mary Phagan had on? (The hat was of dark lavender material.)

Q. The girl you saw had on a light hat?—A. That's what I remember.

The witness was excused, and W. T. Hollis, conductor on the English avenue car on which the Phagan girl rode to town Saturday, April 26, took the witness stand. Arnold examined him.

Q. Which end of the car did she get on?—A. The front end.

Q. Which end were you on?—A. The back end.

Q. And you say you overheard a conversation between her and the motorman?—A. Yes; he asked her if she was mad, and she said yes, she was late.

Said She Was Late.

Q. She went down early in the morning, as a rule? Yet, when she said she was late, it was ten minutes to 12 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Are the cars on this line long or short?—A. Short cars.

Q. Was there any difficulty in hearing what was said on the front end when the car was standing still? A. No.

Q. No such thing as being ahead of time ever happens?—A. No, sir; it is against the rules of the company.

Attorney Hooper took the witness again.

Q. Do you mean to say that you obey the rules of the company so well that you are never ahead of time nor never a little late?—A. It isn't against the rules of the company to be late.

Q. Then you are never early—not even when going to the barn?—A. It isn't against the rules of the company to come in ahead of time when going to the barn, so long as you don't run reckless.

Q. And that day you brought Mary Phagan in was your last trip?—A. Yes.

STATE IS FORCED TO PIN HOPES ON CONLEY

Must Stand By While Defense Seeks Weak Link in the Negro's Story.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

As the defense in the Frank case gets under way, it is evident enough, as it has been from the beginning of this case, that there is but one big, tremendously compelling task before it—the annihilation of Conley's ugly story!

The State climaxed its case thrillingly and with deadly effect in the negro.

He came through the fire of cross-examination, exhaustive and thorough, in remarkably good shape, all things considered. He unfolded a story even more horrible than was anticipated. Certainly, in every conceivable way, he has sought to damage the defendant—even going to the extent of lodging against him another crime than murder!

Through the cross-examination, however, there ran an evident vein of deadly purpose upon the part of the defense. Conley was given full limit to go his length. He went it—no disputing that!

The question is, did he go TOO FAR?

Did he, in his last minute effort to get in EVERYTHING that possibly might work against the defendant, tell things, or say things, that eventually will rise to plague him to his utter undoing?

That is the defense's task—THE UNDOING OF CONLEY.

Conley the State's All.

Conley is the heart and soul of the State's case—without Conley, the State is rendered helpless. He is the Alpha and the Omega of the charge against Leo Frank.

That great detective, William J. Burns, says "they always—criminals—leave something out of gear in the stories they tell."

Burns declares there never was a lie told to shield a criminal that did not have in it SOMEWHERE a fatal weakness, that might be located if patiently sought for. The more elaborate the tale the criminal relates, the more chance there is, no matter how infinitely shrewd he may seem to be, that he will be discovered.

To-day is the defense's day in court—during its progress, which may be for a week or more, even as the State's day lasted 240 hours, Leo Frank must break down the awful story of Jim Conley, and prove himself innocent, if he can, of all the various charges brought against him.

Can he do it?

Well, maybe he can, and maybe he can not—at least, in the name of justice and decency and all that is right, he must have full and free OPPORTUNITY.

One Side of the Case.

During the progress of the State's case, the defense was led far into the gloom. People began to doubt Frank's innocence—people of poise and fair minds, desirous of seeing the truth prevail though the heavens fall. Even these people found themselves staggering and groping as the hideous and sinister charges fell from the lips of the negro.

Could Leo Frank, of previous good reputation, of fair name and unblemished integrity, college bred and studious in habit, so far as the public knew or suspected, be the monster responsible for little Mary Phagan's death, and also—the other unspeakable thing?

In a rather remarkable interview Mrs. Leo Frank gave The Sunday American some few weeks ago, she said this of Frank and herself: "As sweethearts, we went hand in hand, and intruded ourselves upon no person; as man and wife we have gone hand in hand, and we have intruded ourselves upon no person!"

They still are going "hand in hand," the man and the woman, the husband and the wife—the one holding up as best he can under the terrible charge of murder, the other there beside him—"for better or worse, in sickness and in health, for richer or poorer"—until death, or worse than death, shall sever the tie that binds.

That is something steadying to think about!

It is the defendant's day in court—and he is entitled to fair play and a fair chance!

To some it may seem that the burden has shifted, that it is up to the defense now, notwithstanding the more or less fictitious presumption of innocence the law jealously has established in his favor, to PROVE his innocence.

Be that as it may—even as the gloom has closed about him and all he holds most dear in this world—he still is a human being, in very dire distress, as yet unconvicted; and it is only right that the public should be patient, as he sets forth HIS side of this terrible affair.

And I give it as my opinion here and now, for whatever it is worth, that the case against Leo Frank yet may be far from conclusive—and it may never be made conclusive.

Conley's Tale Impossible?

Suppose the defense is able to show, by a sequence of logical, orderly and honorably sustained witnesses, that the tale Jim Conley tells is utterly absurd—and IMPOSSIBLE?

What then?

Will you be prepared, if forced to a conviction against your will, if it be that way with you, to say to Frank: "All right, you came through the fire, at times seemingly sure to consume you, unhurt and unscorched, but you came through, and I am content."

Conley's story has not YET been broken down—no. But it MAY be broken down.

In an article a few days ago, I said this, and I feel like repeating it now:

In judging this Frank case, purely from the State's own standpoint, there is nothing so important as the TIME ELEMENT in which the State uncompromisingly claims the crime was committed.

In another article a few days thereafter, I said this, and this I also feel like repeating now:

If the Conley story is a lie, if it has been TOO CLEVERLY "framed up"—if and a thousand other "ifs"—what matters that?

It matters this: If it be a lie, it MUST break down, somewhere, sometime; if it be the truth, it will stand against ALL the assaults made upon it!

State Tied by Conley.

Remember, unless Conley's story holds together, the case against Frank goes to pieces. Everybody who has read the evidence and who still is capable of rendering just judgment will admit that.

Suppose it can be shown, and is shown, that the story Conley told CAN NOT be true?

The defense MUST show that, or Frank is lost!

Can the defense do that?

The State has pinned itself down to exact and definite propositions. Remember, the defense has hardly started its story yet—it may be able to make absurd those very propositions the State has set up.

The crime, according to the State's witnesses, MUST have been committed thus and so, in exact order, and just as stated—or Conley's story falls down.

The biggest element in the State's case is the time element—mark that!

Upon it the State will stand or fall eventually.

If Mary Phagan was NOT killed before 12:05, then Leo Frank didn't kill her. If she was not killed at that time, Conley's story will not do.

Then is when the State says she was killed—THEN and not at any other time. Conley's story ALL leads up to and away from that.

Remember, too, that the only witness who swears to knowledge or suspicion of any unspeakable conduct upon the part of Frank is—again—Conley.

Dalton a Tame Witness.

When it came to corroborating Conley, Dalton proved a tame corroborator. The ugly, nasty charge of perversion and degeneracy, glibly dropped from the lips of Conley, rests ENTIRELY AND ALTOGETHER on Conley's word.

If Conley's story of the murder is shown to be IMPOSSIBLE AND ABSURD, will you then reverse your other opinion concerning Frank—if you have accepted Conley's word as to that—and agree that Conley, having lied to send Frank to the gallows, would have lied as readily to besmirch him with unmentionable scandal otherwise?

Shall not Frank have the right, unchallenged and fair, to clear himself of every charge lodged against him?

To-day is his day in court—will any living person begrudge him, sore pressed, one moment of it?

Will, in the end, he be able to read and take to himself, happily and serenely, Tennyson's beautiful poem ending—

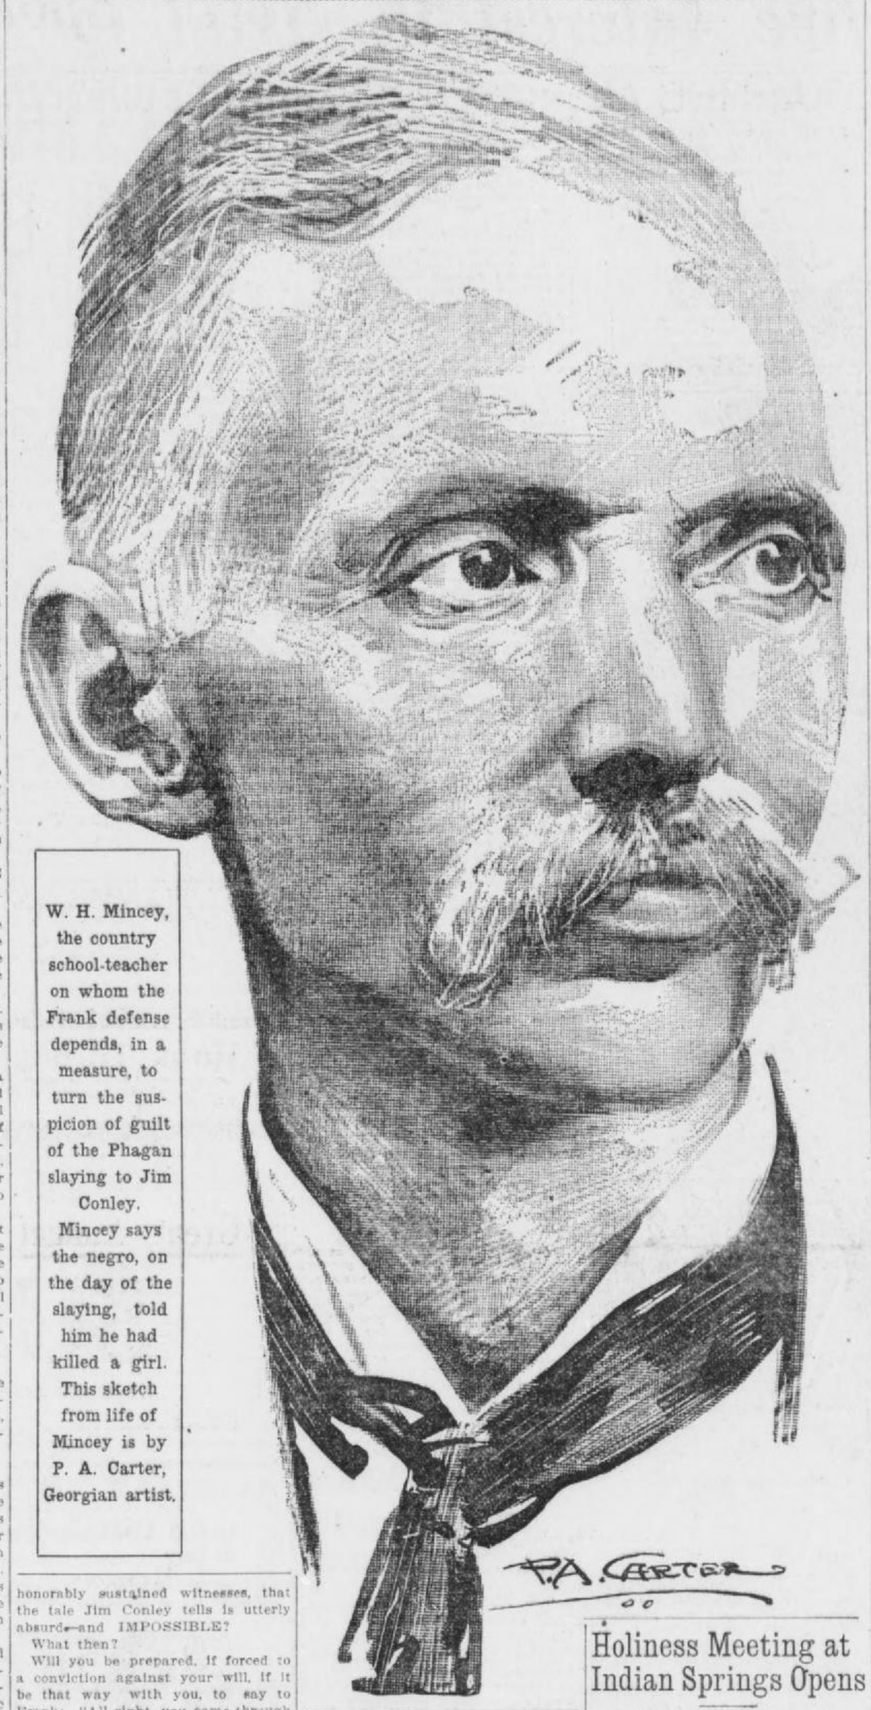

"And now it is daylight everywhere!"

Will he?

We shall see.

At least, he is entitled to his day in court—and it is at hand!

MAN WHO SAYS NEGRO JIM CONLEY CONFESSED SLAYING OF LITTLE GIRL

W. H. Mincey, the country school-teacher on whom the Frank defense depends, in a measure, to turn the suspicion of guilt of the Phagan slaying to Jim Conley. Mincey says the negro, on the day of the slaying, told him he had killed a girl. This sketch from life of Mincey is by P. A. Carter, Georgian artist.

STATE SEES BITS OF EVIDENCE AS ROPE STRANDS

Chain as Strong as Its Weakest Link, but Cord Must Be Cut Thread by Thread.

By O. B. KEELER.

They call it a chain that the State has forged, or has tried to forge, to hold Leo Frank to the murder of Mary Phagan.

But isn't it a rope?

A chain, you know, is as strong as its weakest link. Take one link out, and the chain comes apart.

With a rope, it's different.

Strand after strand might be cut or broken, and the rope still holds a certain weight. Then might come a time when the cutting of one more strand would cause the rope to break.

The point is, the finished rope will sustain a weight that would instantly snap any one of its several strands.

Bits of Evidence Threads.

And that is what the various bits of circumstantial evidence might better be called—strands or threads.

Edgar Allen Poe, in "The Mystery of Marie Roget," has nearly exhausted the philosophical phase of accumulative circumstance and its relation to evidence.

Applying the system of the well-known Dupin to the case in point—and REGARDING IT, BE IT UNDERSTOOD, STRICTLY FROM THE STATE'S VIEWPOINT—an analysis of part of the evidence against Leo Frank follows:

First off, the isolated circumstance of Conley's ability to write would seem as futile as a smoke wreath in sustaining any weight of evidence, except against Conley himself.

But to that fact is added the fact that Frank knew Conley could write.

Still, the thread is flimsy, and, even connected with the case against Frank, would appear worthless.

Six Deductions Seen.

But when it develops that Frank, knowing Conley could write, and knowing the police were trying to find the author of the murder notes—when Frank, well aware of these things, did not inform the police that Conley was lying when he said he could not write, the following deductions appear:

(1) That Frank did not want to connect Conley with the murder notes, which (2) would have been the natural and prompt inclination of a suspected man who knew nothing of the crime himself, so that (3) it appeared Frank knew something of the murder, and (4) knew that Conley knew he knew something of the murder, which (5) justified the conclusion on the part of the State that Frank feared to implicate Conley, lest (6) Conley, in turn, tell something that would implicate him.

Of course, this strand may be broken entirely by the defense, showing Frank never knew the police were ignorant of Conley's ability to write before the police learned it themselves.

But there is one pretty substantial strand of evidence, as the State sees it—and all having its genesis in the simple fact that Conley knew how to write, and at first denied it.

But that strand of itself surely would fail to carry the burden of the case. There must be others.

Even Conley's story is strong only by reason of many strands that surround and support it. Presented to a jury, round and unvarnished—tainted by the reek of false affidavits and weakened by the dry-rot of self-interest, Conley's story never would win a verdict against Leo Frank.

But there is the shred of the murder notes—Conley's story draws support from that. There is the time factor brought out by the expert testimony—Conley's story twines itself about the prop of science. There is the agitation of Frank noticed by Newt Lee in the middle of the afternoon—Conley's story provides for that. There is the visit of Monteen Stover, a tiny circumstance of itself—but of vast importance just so far as it strengthens Conley's recollection of exact time.

And it is by reason of the rope already well along in the twisting that a hundred other little circumstances become significant that of themselves would be lighter than the air-drawn dagger that troubled the dreams of Macbeth.

They fit in with the twisting of the rope.

Will the Rope Hold?

There is Frank's agitation at home and at the factory. There is the ugly story of habitual "chats" at the factory, guarded by Conley as watchman. And the sending away of Newt Lee that afternoon. And the seeing of Conley by Mrs. White, "loitering" at the place he fixes for himself as watchman, and at the time. And the alleged reluctance of Frank to confront Conley at the jail.

And all the rest of it.

So many little incidents, and most of them small to triviality in themselves.

The point is, each strengthens the other, until the fragile threads become a rope.

Will it hold after Frank's lawyers have presented their side of the case?

The jury must decide.

LEO FRANK AIDS HIS LAWYERS IN QUESTIONING OF WITNESSES

For First Time Prisoner Takes Active Interest in Trial for His Life

ARCHITECT IS QUIZZED TO REFUTE TESTIMONY OF NEGRO IN FRANK'S HOME

ing a cot, a bed or a sofa?—A. No.

Q. Did you find anything that looked like a bedroom, except the ladies' room?—A. No.

Hooper Cross-Examines.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Who told you the location of the body?—A. Mr. Schiff.

Q. He was under Mr. Frank in the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. Then if that location was wrong all of your measurements were wrong?

Arnold objected and his objection was sustained.

Q. You based all your measurements on Mr. Schiff's location of the body?—A. Yes.

Q. If that was wrong, all of your measurements were wrong—I mean about lines of vision, etc.?—A. Yes.

Q. You found a gas jet burning in the basement? Where was it?—A. Near the front.

Q. On the third floor you depended for light on the front doors and windows?—A. Yes.

Q. These are all glass?—A. Yes.

Q. There is also a gas jet farther back?—A. I didn't see any.

Q. On the first floor you say there is a trap door near the elevator two feet by two feet three inches, leading to the basement?—A. Yes.

Trap Door Small.

Q. A man of your size would have a hard time getting through there, wouldn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Two people couldn't get through? A. No.

Q. The scuttle hole back on the first floor leads to the basement?—A. Yes, to the dustpan in the back.

Q. A man doesn't look in a curved line, does he?—A. No, sir.

Q. Well, what do these curved lines on the second floor mean?—A. Those indicate the direction he probably walked.

Several of the jurymen were inattentive to these demonstrations.

Q. Anyone coming into this office could see if anyone was in there, couldn't he, if the door adjoining was open?—A. Yes.

Q. Nobody standing on the fourth floor at the head of the stairway could see down to the second floor?—A. I don't think they could.

Q. Don't you know they couldn't?—A. They might have a little view.

Frank Suggests Query.

Arnold took the witness on the redirect examination.

At the suggestion of Frank, Arnold asked the witness how near Frank's office there was a lavatory.

The witness did not know. Arnold also asked him at Frank's suggestion how far it was from the back of the stairs on the first floor to the top of the stairs at the second floor. The answer was 27 feet.

The identification of the plant and the measurements were carried on with the jury grouped around the witness on the edge of the jury box. Frank arose and walked over to Mr. Rosser to make his suggestions. Rosser whispered the questions to Arnold, who was making the examination.

Q. You did not make any test to see whether a person could view from the third to the fourth floor?—A. Yes.

Q. Would there be any trouble dropping a body down that scuttle hole?—A. No.

Q. Mr. Hooper asked you if it was dark by the elevator, was it?—A. Rather dark.

Might See Mirror.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. This is your diagram—that block on Georgia avenue?—A. Yes.

Q. This is your diagram of the Selig home, isn't it?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was the refrigerator in the kitchen?—A. Right here.

Q. How far is it from this corner of the room to the kitchen door?—A. About four feet.

Q. A man sitting in this corner could see that mirror, could he not?—A. He might.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. Could a person standing or sitting anywhere near this kitchen door see the mirror or any part of it?—A. No.

The witness was then excused.

Attorney Arnold tendered as evidence the diagram of the factory, the plat of the Selig home with reference to Pulliam, Washington and Gleen streets and Georgia avenue.

Solictor Dorsey made no objection.

J. G. Adams, a photographer, was next called to the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Did you go to the Selig home and take some pictures?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you take a couple of photographs, one from the kitchen door on the outside and one from the hallway looking into the dining room?—A. Only a portion of the window.

Q. Could you see the mirror from this view?—A. No.

Q. Did you take one from the inside of the door?—A. Yes.

Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor, may I show these pictures to the jury as we go along?"

Dorsey—It's against the rule, your honor. They would not let me do it.

Rosser—Oh, get the witness down off the stand and come before the jury. You can do it that way. Don't bother about Hugh.

Shows Photos to Jury.

The witness presented pictures of the open door of the safe in the outer office, excluding the view into the inner office. He also showed a picture taken outside of the outer office which showed that, with the safe door open, the view into the inner office was excluded. He showed pictures of the basement and a series of views of the elevator shaft on the second floor. He showed pictures of where Jim Conley is said to have sat on the first floor; also pictures of the plating room and a box near where Conley said he got the cloth in which he wrapped the Phagan girl's body He showed a picture of the lathe where some hair was found.

Q. Did you take a picture of the path a person would take coming from the metal room down the steps?—A. I did.

Mr. Arnold—I want to show the extent of the machinery in this metal room.

The attorney passed a number of photographs before the jury.

Q. In every one of these instances, Mr. Adams, did you make as accurate photographs as possible?—A. I did.

Hooper Quizzes Picture Man.

Attorney Hooper took up the cross-examination.

Q. How long since you took these photographs?—A. About a month.

Mr. Hooper went over the diagram of the Selig home with the witness

Q. When did you take a photograph of the Selig home?—A. That was more recent.

Q. A slight change of the position of that sideboard would have made the whole room visible through the mirror?—A. It would have made some of it visible.

Q. Wouldn't it have made it all visible?—A. I can't say.

The witness was excused. All of the photographs taken by him were offered as evidence without objection on the part of the State.

Court then took a recess until 2 o'clock.

Call for George Epps.

At the opening of the afternoon session, George Epps, the newsboy who declared that he came downtown on the same car with Mary Phagan, was recalled by the defense, but was not in court. Mr. Arnold addressed the court:

"Your honor," he said, "we are very anxious to get this boy here. I understand he said he is not coming."

Judge Roan said he would issue an attachment for him.

H. J. Hinchey, manager of the Southern Blow Pipe Company, residing at 391 Peachtree street, was called. Attorney Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Four or five years.

Q. What is your business?—A. Mechanical engineer with the Southern Blow Pipe Company.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank on Memorial Day?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. Near the Capitol. I was in an automobile and he was on a Washington street car. At least the car was on Washington street.

Q. What time was it?—A. Between 2 and 2:15 o'clock.

How He Remembered.

Q. How did you know that it was that time?—A. When he was accused I became very much interested and remembered doing certain things on Memorial Day. I left home between 1 and 1:10 o'clock and went through the same maneuvers to determine just what time I would have reached the Capitol.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How many times did you see Mr. Frank as you were making the trip?—A. Just once.

Q. He was on the inside of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. You had your hands full, didn't you?—A. Not altogether. I am an expert driver.

Q. You didn't see anybody else that you recognized on the car, did you?—A. No.

Discussed It With Frank.

Q. How many times have you seen Mr. Frank in jail?—A. Only once.

Q. Did you discuss this thing with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it before or after the Coroner's inquest?—A. It was a long time after that.

Q. Who else did you tell of this?—A. Several other people besides him. Many of them before I even saw the lawyers.

Q. What was the object of your visit? Were you subpenaed then?—A. No. I knew that I would be. My attorney, Leonard Haas, asked me if I would be a witness.

Q. Is he an attorney for Frank?—A. No; he is our attorney.

Q. What is your company?—A. South Atlanta Blow Pipe Company.

Q. Tell me, now, why you went down there to the jail?—A. I had an interest in the case. Mr. Frank was never a personal friend of mine, although I have known him in a business way for five years. I was interested in the case purely because I knew Mr. Frank in a business way.

The witness was excused.

Model of Factory Shown.

The defense's model of the National Pencil Company's building was brought in. It was a pasteboard affair, with wooden staves, built on a scale of 3-8 inch to a foot. It displayed the basement, first and second floors. It was made by P. H. Willet, a pettern maker, and John Cox, of Arnold & Arnold law office, who is also a pattern maker. It is without exterior walls and has all the various departments and little blocks of wood indicating the machinery and other furniture on different floors. Mr. Willet was called to the stand. Attorney Arnold examined him.

Q. You had the dimensions of the National Pencil Company's building in making this model, didn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Followed the proportions in making this model?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not try to make fully any model, did you—I mean you did not make it complete?—A. Not entirely.

Q. Did you make any measurements of the factory?—A. Not myself.

Q. Did Mr. Coughlin furnish you his blue prints?—A. No, Mr. Scott gave me the blue prints.

Finds Errors in Plans.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Didn't you make this front door exactly as it is?—A. I made it according to the blue prints.

Q. You don't pretend to say that the windows in the front of the third floor are at all correct?—A. I did not make them.

Here the court stenographer complained that he could not understand the witness.

Hooper: "It is not our fault that he won't talk out."

The witness finally said that the windows had been put in since he finished his design

Q. Mr. Willet, how do you get the height from a blue print?—A. We don't get it unless it is given.

Q. Was the height given in this case?—A. For the ground floor it was.

Q. You just put in the height for the other floors?—A. I elected those heights.

Q. Look at this trapdoor hole leading into the basement. You don't mean to tell this jury it was cut in the same proportion of 3-8 inch to a foot?—A. I could not tell without measuring it.

Least Bit Out of Proportion.

The witness was given a rule to make the measurements. He said it was a least bit out of proportion.

Q. Isn't it true that the same kind of looseness applies to various parts of this model?—A. No.

Q. Is that the only mistake you made?

Arnold interrupted. "I object to him calling it a mistake," Arnold said.

Attorney Hooper said he was through with the witness, and Arnold took him on the redirect examination.

Q. Does this purport to represent the height?—A. No, it is only the ground plan.

Q. Were you given instructions to correctly follow this ground plan?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you do so?—A. Yes.

Darley Looks at Model.

N. V. Darley, assistant superintendent of the National Pencil Company, was recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold questioned him.

Q. I wish you would examine this model and tell me whether or not it fairly represents a ground plan of the National Pencil Factory.

With Mr. Arnold questioning him, Darley pointed out the important points of the inside of the factory, as represented in the model.

Q. Is that chute that leads to the basement large enough for a body to pass through?—A. Yes.

Q. How far from where Mary Phagan's body was found would a body have been that fell through the chute?—A. Thirty or forty feet.

Q. If anybody would come down those stairs from the second floor, how far would you have to take them to throw them down the elevator shaft?—A. About 12 feet.

Door Broken Open.

Q. How about the door leading to the woodenware department? How did you find it?—A. It was broken open after the murder.

Q. Had you noticed it before?—A. No.

Q. Sitting in Mr. Frank's office, can you see the time clock?—A. About half of it.

Q. Could you see into Mr. Frank's office from the outer office door, with the safe door open?—A. Standing at the door, I would have to stand on tiptoe to see over it.

Was Dark and Cloudy Day.

Q. Is there any way of locking or bolting the door opening to the metal room from the inside?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there a bed or a cot or anything of the sort in the whole building?—A. Only two boxes in the basement with dirty sacks on them.

Q. Do you remember the machine little Mary Phagan worked on?—A. I don't remember seeing her at it, but I remember which one it was.

Q. If those doors to the stairway, leading up to the third floor, were open, one could get into the metal room from the rear, couldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Is this a good model?—A. It is.

Q. What kind of a day was April 26?—A. Cloudy and dark.

Q. Was the space around the front door darker than usual?—A. Yes.

Q. Sitting in Mr Frank's office, can you see the time clock?—A. About half of it.

Q. Could you see into Mr. Frank's office from the outer office door with the safe door open?—A. Standing at the door, I would have to stand on tiptoe to see over it.

Left Factory With Frank.

Q. What time did you leave the factory Saturday morning, April 26?—A. About 9:40 o'clock.

Q. If Jim Conley said you left at 11 o'clock, is it true, or not?—A. It is not true.

Q. Is it true that Conley said that you came to the factory after 10:30 o'clock, just after Conley arrived?

Hooper interrupted: "The Supreme Court has held that one witness cannot pass on the truthfulness of another. I object to both of these questions."

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

Q. Who left the factory with you?—A. Mr. Leo Frank.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley?—A. No.

Q. Where did you go?—A. Mr. Frank went to Montag's and I went to the Montgomery Theater.

Q. Did you take a drink of soda water together?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever call upon Saturday afternoons?—A. Yes, almost every Saturday. I called to find out about the finance sheet.

Q. Was Frank always there?—A. Always, but one time.

Conley Looked Suspicious.

Q. Mr. Dalton testified that last year he came in contact with a negro night watchman there. Did you have a negro night watchman then?—A. We always had a white night watchman until about April 1.

Q. I will ask you if the finance sheet was not always made up on Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see this negro Conley there Monday?—A. I did.

Q. How did he appear?—A. He looked excited. So much so that I told the watchman to keep an eye on him.

Dorsey objected: "I object to what he told someone else."

Judge Roan sustained the objection over the protest of the defense.

Q. Did you ever pinch or joke with Conley?—A. I didn't call it joking. I have kicked him when I found him loafing. He always laughed.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank joke him him?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you contribute to the fund to defend Frank?—A. No.

Q. Do you know Daisy Hopkins?—A. I never heard of her until yesterday.

Q. Are you acquainted with her general reputation?—A. No.

Q. When did you find that door open?—A. Three days after the crime.

Q. People were going in and out of the factory all the time, were they not?—A. Yes.

Body in Public Place.

Q. Detectives were all over the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. They went through the door, didn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. Don't you know this trap door was nailed down until the insurance people went through there?—A. No.

Q. Don't you remember two or three days after the murder you saw me go up those steps and find the door nailed?—A. I don't recall what door. I found it open.

Q. Don't you know that if a person had dropped a body down that chute, it would have been a better hiding place for it than anywhere else in the factory?

Arnold: I object to the question.

Dorsey changed the question.

Q. Well, then, which is the most public, this spot where the body was found, or back behind the boxes at the chute?—A. Where the body was found.

WOMAN DENIES SHE EVER VISITED PENCIL PLANT WITH DALTON

Miss Daisy Hopkins contradicts his story told to corroborate Conley.

The Frank trial audience laughed when C. B. Dalton said he didn't know where he was born.

Sheriff Mangum Answers Handcuffing Criticism.

Sheriff Mangum issued the following announcement to-day:

To the Public and Citizens of Fulton County:

Some complaints are being made in regard to the handcuffing of a prisoner while being transported to and from the Tower to court.

When only one prisoner is to be handled, if he is not violent or unruly he is allowed to go with an officer or officers without being handcuffed, be he white, black or any other color known on earth, regardless of sex, creed or nationality.

The Sheriff and his deputies are responsible for the safe handling of a prisoner and my belief is that the people of Fulton County have confidence in their Sheriff and his men.

Respectfully,

Recovered From Severe Lung Trouble

Plenty of fresh air and good food are necessary to persons suffering from lung trouble, but something more is needed to bring about full health. Eckman's Alterative is a medicine for throat and lung troubles, and so many reports have been received showing that it brought about good results in a number of cases which were declared hopeless, that all sufferers who are not benefiting otherwise should at least investigate what it has done for others. Investigate this case:

Madison Lake, Minn.

"Gentlemen: In December, 1908, March, 1909, and September, 1909, I was taken with hemorrhages of the lungs which confined me several weeks, each time to my bed. My doctor advised me to go West.

"In November I started for Denver, Colo. After my arrival I met Michael Brody, who upon learning of my condition, urged me to take Eckman's Alterative. In about two months I began to feel better. I kept on taking the medicine and improved fast. In March, 1910, I returned home. I think I am entirely well, have a good appetite and sleep well. When I left Denver my weight was 139 pounds. I now weigh 165, my normal weight. I thank God and your Alterative for my health."

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' drug stores and other leading druggists. CONLEY'S STORY PUT IN PECULIAR LIGHT WHEN DEFENSE CALLS SCOTT

Harry Scott, of the Pinkerton agency, showed up the "confessions" of Conley in a peculiar light when he was called to the stand by the Frank defense Thursday afternoon.

The detective, questioned by Luther Rosser, told the jury that Conley, when he "had told everything;" when he had accused Frank of the killing and had made himself an accessory after the fact by declaring that he assisted in the disposal of the body; when every motive for holding anything back had been swept away by his third affidavit, still denied to him (Scott) many of the alleged circumstances to which he testified while he was on the stand the first three days of the week.

It will be the contention of the defense that these many additions to Conley's tale, inasmuch as all reason for concealing them had passed after Conley had come out with his accusations against Frank and his confession of his own part in the crime, are pure fabrications of the black man's imagination, as are the other details of his tale.

Scott said that he had grilled and badgered Conley repeatedly about seeing Mary Phagan enter the factory. Even after the negro had made all his incriminating statements, he steadfastly denied seeing the girl victim go up the stairs to the second floor.

Denied He Had Seen Purse.

He denied also to Scott, the detective said, that he ever had seen the girl's mesh bag or parasol, or that he ever had heard a girl's scream while he was sitting on the first floor. He told the detectives that he did not see Lemmie Quinn or Monteen Stover enter the factory, although he later declared he had seen them both and so testified on the stand.

Conley said on the stand when he was questioned by Rosser that he thought he had told all these things to Scott and John Black while he was making his third and final affidavit. Scott was called to testify that Conley not only had failed to tell them, but for the most part had made strenuous denials when asked about them. It was expected that Black would be called early Friday to testify on the same matter.

Rosser, in his examination of Detective Scott, sought to create in the minds of the jury the impression that Conley had been guided and directed by the detectives in the framing of his string of statements and affidavits.

Scott admitted that the improbabilities in the negro's statements had been pointed out to him, and that, with these suggestions, Conley proceeded to doctor up his affidavits until they harmonized better with the circumstances of the day.

Solicitor Dorsey was loath to let any statement get into the record which indicated that Conley had been coached by the detectives, and he got Scott to say that no one had put the words in the negro's mouth.

"But you would say," shouted Rosser, "That don't fit, Jim,' and Jim would get something that did fit; isn't that so?"

It takes a baby a year or more to get six teeth.

In a year or less six of your teeth may be seriously damaged by lack of proper care. Proper care does not mean that you have to spend an hour a day scrubbing your teeth. Just two or three minutes in the morning and two or three at night.

And the care that you give your teeth is an investment that comes back a hundred fold in better health, and a better chance to make your mark in the world.

A few cents invested in a delicious dentifrice that gets you into the regular habit of teeth care, is common sense invested for your entire future life, that Mr. Darley left at 10:45?—A. I did not.

Q. Look at this. Did you sign it? Then was it read to you?—A. Yes.

Q. Then is your memory better to-day than it was a month ago?—A. It is as good.

Q. Didn't you tell somebody that you were working for this reward for Conley?—A. I did not.

Q. You are sure of that?—A. I did tell Detective Black that if this negro was convicted, he was my negro.

Q. Didn't you tell me that some Saturdays you remained at the factory as late as 3 o'clock?—A. No.

Q. You are sure of it?—A. Well, if I said 3 o'clock, I meant 4 o'clock.

Nailed the Factory Door.

Q. Well, what time do you mean when you told Mr. Arnold you left at 4:30?—A. I meant that.

Q. Did you tell Mr. Arnold that negro did or did not work at the factory on Saturday afternoon?—A. I said they worked there sometimes as late as 2:30.

Q. Didn't you tell me that Walter Pride worked there on Saturday afternoons sweeping and got extra pay for it?—A. Yes; but he didn't get no extra pay. He got paid by the hour.

Q. What was Jim Conley's number?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Didn't you say it was 71?—A. Yes.

Q. Then why did you say you didn't know? Take these slips and see if you can tell me.—A. I haven't my glasses, and I can't read without them.

Q. You tell this jury you nailed that door leading into the woodenware place Monday?—A. I did.

Q. Don't you know that door was open Monday to make a search?—A. I don't know when it was opened. It was nailed up when I left Saturday afternoon.

Q. Well, you are sure that the door was nailed up Saturday when you left?—A. Yes.

Q. You know those doors were nailed up back there?—A. One of them was.

Q. Do you know about the other?—A. No.

Q. That one you saw nailed was the one where the stairs are?—A. No.

Plant Model Exhibited.

Solicitor Dorsey cried: "Bring in that model."

The model of he pencil factory was brought in.

Q. Now you said that door was the one that opened on the steps (indicating the model)?—A. No, it was this one.

Q. Do you undertake to qualify as an expert on woman's wear?—A. I never pay any attention to it.

Q. Do you know whether fancy women wear white uppers to shoes to match white furs?

"I object to that question as irrevelent," interrupted Arnold.

Dorsey: "Your Honor, Mr. Arnold supplied the snow for a Thanksgiving Day and had this man give an opinion as to the kind of shoes women wear."

Arnold: "But, your Honor, he is talking about fancy women."

Dorsey: "That's just the kind I want to show went there, but I will not press the question."

Negro Loafers Barred.

Q. Did you ever find any beer bottles in the factory around the office?—A. Never.

Q. Is it not a fact that negroes used to take the beer bottles out of there and get beer in exchange for them?—A. No.

Q. Were you pretty strict about negroes being in there when they did not have business there?—A. I never allowed negroes like that in there.

Q. If Mr. Frank had told Jim Conley to watch, and you or Mr. Darley had seen him, would you have put him out?—A. Yes.

Q. Did a peg-legged negro come ther Saturday to get his pay?—A. If he did any hauling, he did.

Q. I ask if he was there. Didn't you swear he was there?—A. Yes; he was there.

Dorsey Tangles Witness.

Q. What time was it?—A. I don't know whether he was there or not.

Q. Well, why did you swear just now that he was there?—A. I am not sure.

Q. Why did you swear he was there?—A. I don't remember, but if I said he was there, he was there. If I said he was not there, he was not there.

Deputy Plennie Minor had to rap to stop the laugh which went the rounds of the courtroom crowd.

Q. What do you say now? Was he there or not there?—A. I do not remember.

Q. You say Conley was not at his work and followed the detectives around? Did not everybody else do that? Was anybody at work up there that day?—A. Everybody was excused after 9 o'clock.

Q. Jim Conley had worn that shirt you saw him washing all day, hadn't he?—A. Yes.

Saw Conley Writing.

Q. Did he have a shirt on?—A. His undershirt.

Q. He took it off to wash it?—A. Yes.

Q. It was the shirt he had been wearing all day?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was the shirt when you saw it?—A. He was hanging it on a line.

Q. Then why did you say he was trying to hide it?—A. He was trying to put it behind a pipe.

Solicitor Dorsey laughed and did not press the question.

Q. Did the negro have the shirt on when he was arrested?—A. Yes.

Q. You told Mr. Arnold that you saw this negro write on a pad?—A. Yes.

Q. He was taking down a list of boxes?—A. He was supposed to.

Arnold here took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Didn't they ask you if you ever saw Daisy Hopkins in the building Saturday afternoon? And didn't you say no?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Daisy Hopkins' character?—A. No.

Q. Didn't you say that all you heard of her was heard on the outside?—A. I did not.

At this point court adjourned until 9 o'clock Saturday morning.

Sheriff Mangum Answers Handcuffing Criticism.

Sheriff Mangum issued the following announcement to-day:

To the Public and Citizens of Fulton County:

Some complaints are being made in regard to the handcuffing of a prisoner while being transported to and from the Tower to court.

When only one prisoner is to be handled, if he is not violent or unruly he is allowed to go with an officer or officers without being handcuffed, be he white, black or any other color known on earth, regardless of sex, creed or nationality.

The Sheriff and his deputies are responsible for the safe handling of a prisoner and my belief is that the people of Fulton County have confidence in their Sheriff and his men.

Respectfully,
C. W. MANGUM, Sheriff.

LIND TO LAND ON MEXICAN SOIL TO-NIGHT

Anti-American Feeling Stirred by Huerta as United States Envoy Nears Capital.

der section 33 of the Mexican Constitution unless he makes out his mission to be favorable to Huerta's aims.

Section 33 provides that persons of suspicious intentions shall be driven from the country and not be allowed to return except on special permission from the Government.

It was decided that no official greeting shall be extended to Mr. Lind, thus breaking a tradition which is as immemorial as diplomacy itself.

After the conference Senor Aldape said:

"The Government has decided upon a definite course of action to be followed in the present situation, and we believe that it will be approved by all persons of justice. President Huerta is striving to re-establish order in Mexico, and he believes that outside interference, unless invited, would do more harm than good. President Huerta has the good of Mexico at heart, and I know that he would make great sacrifices in behalf of his country."

Mexico's Defy Ignored Until Lind Delivers Note.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Pending the arrival in Mexico of John Lind, special and personal representative of President Wilson, this Government will take no action with respect to the defy issued by the Mexican foreign office threatening to deport former Governor Lind as an undesirable alien.

Offical confirmation of the issuance of the threat has reached the State Department, but Secretary Bryan and other Government officials say the United States will make no move until it is seen whether the Mexican Government intends to carry out its threat.

Former Governor Lind is due to reach Vera Cruz to-night. If he makes good connections he should get to Mexico City in time for a conference with President Huerta tomorrow afternoon. It is believed here the Mexican President will be forced to confer with President Wilson's representative, if only to discover the nature of the communication it has been admitted the former Governor of Minnesota carries with him.

Should President Huerta deem it best to expel Mr. Lind, the United States may be forced to take drastic measures, but it is hoped at the State Department that this undesirable alternative will be avoided by a change of front on the part of the Mexican President after he receives Lind's message from President Wilson, the contents of which is unknown here to anyone save the President and Secretary Bryan.

After a conference with the President, Secretary Bryan to-day announced that the statement sent to the American Embassy at Mexico City for the Mexican foreign office that Special Ambassador Lind would be persona non grata to the Mexican Government unless he brought the proper credentials with him, had been received at the State Department today and that the President now has it under consideration.

At the request of the State Department, the battleship Michigan to-day was moved from Vera Cruz to Ciudad Del Carmen, Mexico. It was feared that the arrival of the battleship New Hampshire at Vera Cruz to-day might give rise to a report that the United States was preparing for active intervention and the Michigan, therefore, was moved farther down the coast, where she will remain for further orders.

SEN. JOHNSTON OF ALABAMA IS DEAD

United States Senator Victim of Pneumonia After Nine Days' Illness at Capital.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—Senator Joseph F. Johnston, of Alabama, died at 9 o'clock this morning at his apartment in the Brighton.

Senator Johnston had been ill for eight days, suffering from pneumonia.

As a mark of respect to the memory of Senator Johnston, the Senate adjourned almost immediately after assembling at noon.

Senator Overman offered a resolution for the appointment of a committee of Senators to take part in the funeral ceremonies and to accompany the body to Birmingham, where burial is to be made.

The Vice President appointed the following committee: Senators Bankhead, of Alabama; Bacon, Overman, Chamberlain, Hitchcock, Clarke, of Arkansas; Vardaman, Johnson, Swanson, Smith, of South Carolina; Thornton, Warren, Bristow, Gallinger, Catron, Bradley and Kenyon.

The funeral party will leave here to-night, and is expected to reach Birmingham to-morrow night. The funeral will take place Sunday morning.

Senator Joseph Forney Johnston, of Birmingham, was born in North Carolina in 1843. He served in the Confederate army from the beginning of the war to its conclusion, and was wounded four times. He rose from a private to the rank of captain, and was frequently mentioned honorably for gallant conduct.

Senator Johnston served four years as Governor of Alabama, before his election to the Senate in 1907. His first election to the Senate was to the unexpired term of Senator E. W. Pettus, deceased. He was re-elected in 1909 to his present term.

Senator Johnston's death at this time undoubtedly will bring about an acute political crisis in Alabama. His seat was being contested at the time of his death by Congressman R. P. Hobson, and the fight between them had grown very bitter. It is practically certain that Hobson will not be permitted, now that Johnston is dead, to have the succession uncontested.

There has been talk of Congressman Underwood as a candidate against Mr. Hobson, and the death of Senator Johnston likely will revive that.

His immediate successor will be named by Governor O'Neal, which means that Mr. Hobson will not get the immediate appointment.

He had been in poor health for several weeks.

Mrs. Johnston was with her husband when he died, as well as Forney Johnston, his son, who arrived from his home in Birmingham yesterday.

Mobile Offers Stevens To Fill Vacancy.

MOBILE, Aug. 8.—Mobile will ask Governor O'Neal to appoint State Senator T. M. Stevens to the vacant place in the United States Senate, caused by the death of Senator Joseph F. Johnston.

Stevens was the O'Neal administration leader at the last session of the Alabama Legislature. The man who will be appointed will not be a candidate for the place at the next election.

Immediate Election May Be Necessary.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 8.—Governor O'Neal may be compelled to call an extra session of the Alabama Legislature to order an election at once to fill the vacancy in the United States Senate, as it is generally believed at the Capitol here to-day that under the Seventeenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution the Governor has not the power to appoint a successor to the late Senator J. E. Johnston, who died in Washington to-day.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

At the Grand.

Pictures at the Grand are becoming more and more popular every day. Commencing next Monday, the policy will be to present pictures daily from 2:30 until 10:30, with complete new programs each day, at 10 cents admission for the best seats, and children at half price.

Forsyth Bill Pleases.

Every performance this week at the Forsyth has attracted almost the holding capacity in the busy theater. While it is a fact that the show is without a headliner or a feature that may have been advertised, it is nevertheless a combination of pleasing talent that has won applause from every gathering.

Next week's star will be Ralph Herz, the musical comedy character comedian, who has been a late star with "Dr. Dulath," and who was one of the big features with "Madame Sherry" and "The Charity Girl."

At the Bijou.

"Along the Pike" is drawing the biggest audiences of the season to the Bijou this week. The attraction has made good beyond the expectations of the management.

The Bijou will close its doors on Saturday for two weeks, during which time the painters will overhaul the little theater, preparatory to the opening of the fall season on August 25.

CAREY, REBUKED, HITS AT BOARD OF PARKS

Dan Carey, General Manager of Parks, declared Friday that factionalism in the Park Board had reached such a degree that the exploitation of any new ideas absolutely was prevented and that he was serving his last term under such conditions.

Authentic reports from the faction opposed to him are that plans are being made to drop him at the end of his term, January 1, 1915.

The old-time factionalism reached an acute stage at a meeting Thursday afternoon because Manager Carey had not consulted President J. O. Cochran about contracts for an underground conduit for the lighting of Piedmont Park.

Board Censures Mr. Carey.

President Cochran, with the balance of power in the board, has been supporting Manager Carey. But when Manager Carey took action on his own initiative he switched to the anti-Carey faction led by M. B. Young and R. A. Burnett and resolutions were adopted by a vote of 9 to 3 reprimanding Mr. Carey for making contracts without consulting the board.

Tangle Over "Loaned Stone."

Manager Carey also asked the board to straighten out an agreement between President Cochran and Engineer Nym Hurt, of the City Construction Department, about some crushed stone. Manager Carey said the minutes of the board showed that President Cochran had represented to the board that the stone had been given, while Mr. Hurt claims that it was only loaned and he wanted it back.

President Cochran said he understood that the stone had been loaned, and if he had represented that it had been given to the department he had made a mistake.

"It seems that a member of the board can do anything, but anything the general manager does is wrong," said Mr. Carey.

Commissioners Frank Reynolds, William Van Houten and Councilman Sam Shepard stoutly defended Manager Carey, but they were outvoted.

What the Charges Are.

Here are the specific charges brought by President Cochran against Manager Carey:

That the board appropriated $200 to remove the Erskine fountain to Grant Park and that Manager Carey spent $600 on it.

That negligence resulted in $22 demurrage collected on cars of stone one time and $17 another.

That he has given contracts for $800 for underground wiring of Piedmont Park, and that all of these expenditures were contracted for without the knowledge or consent of the board.

Manager Carey explained that the wiring contracts were made as a result of a misunderstanding between himself and City Electrician R. C. Turner.

Alabama Double of Croker Not Boasting

ANNISTON, Aug. 8.—Anniston, which has become famous for its doubles, having a man who looks like Roosevelt, one who looks like Wilson and a double of Napoleon in the person of State Senator T. E. He said he was willing to plead guilty to the likeness of all except Croker.

Lady Sackville's Daughter to Wed

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The Honorable Victoria Mary Sackville-West, whose engagement to Harold Nicholson, an attache of the British embassy at Constantinople, has been announced, is the daughter of Lady Sackville, who recently won a clear title to the vast fortune of Sir John Murray Scott.

Miss Sackville-West is the only child of Lord and Lady Sackville and she will succeed to the Scott fortune.

MEDICAL BILL IS PASSED, WITH AMENDMENT

After a bitter fight in which Representative Wohlwender, of Muscogee, charged under influence by advocates of the measure, the House of Representatives Friday morning passed the Garlington medical bill, known as the medical practices act, by a vote of 121 to 3, amended so as t prevent the members of the allopathic school of medicine having a majority of the proposed State Board of Medical Examiners. The original bill provided for a board of five allopaths, two eclectics and one homeopath.

The original bill, it was alleged by its opponents, was drawn by representatives of the American Medical Association, referred to on the floor of the House as the "medical trust." It was favorably reported by the committee, and a minority report condemning the bill was offered by R. J. Arnold, of Henry County, a member of the Hygiene and Sanitation Committee.

Chairman Breaks Tie.

Representative Hardeman, of Jefferson, who occupyed the Speaker's chair during the early part of the consideration of the bill, broke a tie vote on the amendment of Conner of Spalding to add two more members to the eight provided by the original bill. The chairman's vote carried the amendment.

The bill as amended and passed provides for a State board to consist of five allopaths, three eclectics and two homeopaths, thus preventing any arbitrary ruling based on dislike of any school of medicine, save through a combination that it is thought impossible to effect. The amended bill was approved by both factions.

The bill will raise the standard of physicians in Georgia.

40 per cent. It provides that applicants for licenses as practicing physicians must have attended a recognized school of medicine for four terms of eight months each, whereas the old laws required only three terms of seven months each.

Christian Scientists Not Barred.

Prior to the discussion of the bill the impression was that it would bar Christian Scientists and mental healers. An amendment was introduced by McCarthy, of Chatham, providing for this school of healing, but it was lost. The bill, however, takes care of them in the following language:

"The provisions of this bill shall not be construed as to interfere with the practices and beliefs of any religious sect, nor with the practice of osteopaths."

Garlington, of Richmond, the author of the bill, asserted that the minority report submitted by Arnold, of Henry, was drawn by physicians opposed to the passage of the bill.

Wohlwender, of Muscogee, declared the methods of the advocates of the bill were the worst he ever had seen in his experience as a member of the Legislature. He declared the had endeavored to reach him through the medium of his own family physician.

Girl Accuses Rich Fiance of Slaying

CLINTON, KY., Aug. 8.—May Copeland, held here as the confessed slayer of her brother-in-law, Hugh Atkinson, at Bardwell, to-day startled the jail authorities by making another confession, saying the killing was done by Lucien Turk, the wealthy fiance of the Copeland girl. Turk is being held at Paducah as an accessory.

In her statement to the police here the girl said that Turk killed her brother-in-law because Atkinson, according to May Copeland's admission to him, had wronged her. J. W. Turk, her fiance's father, the girl said, promised to give her $20,000 if she would confess the killing herself, and pay attorneys who would obtain her freedom under an unwritten law plea.

Anti-Drug Bill Is Defeated in House

The drug bill introduced in the House by Mr. Shuptrine of Chatham County, designed to regulate the sale of cocaine, morphine and other narcotics, was deefated by a vote of 55 to 71.

The bill provided that no druggist shall sell any of the drugs named in the act without a physician's prescription, and that each druggist pay $10 a year license. The bill also created the office of State Drug Commissioner, and provided for drug inspectors.

Mr. Shuptrine declared that the use of cocaine and morphine is greatly increasing in Georgia and should be regulated.

SCREWS, VETERAN JOURNALIST, DEAD

Noted Alabama Editor Stricken Suddenly at Country Home Near Montgomery.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., Aug. 8.—From an attack of acute indigestion, Major William Wallace Screws, the veteran editor of The Montgomery Advertiser, died suddenly Thursday night at his country home in Coosada, fourteen miles from Montgomery. Major Screws was 74 years old, and while his health had not been very good for several months, his death was unexpected. With him at the time of his death were his two sons, Benjamin Screws and Holt Screws, and his wife.

"The most beloved man in Alabama," was a title often given Major Screws, who despite the many bitter political fights he entered, always held the highest respect of both sides. He became connected with The Advertiser shortly after the war, and in a short while became sole owner of the paper. A few years later he sold half interest in the paper to Frank P. Glass, and under their combined directorship The Advertiser progressed to one of the foremost morning papers in the South.

Major Screws was born February 25, 1839, in Barbour County, Alabama, and attended school at Glennville. In 1859 he took up the study of law with the famous law firm of Watts, Judge and Jackson in Montgomery and was admitted to the bar in 1859 at the age of 20 years.

Though opposed to secession, Major Screws fought for his State, and went with the first troops to Pensacola. There he participated in the capture of Fort Barancas. He fought throughout the entire war, being captured in Virginia during the last few weeks of the struggle. He acted as correspondent for The Advertiser for the four years of the great struggle.

He held many offices of honor and was a prominent Mason, being grand high priest, Grand Chapter Royal Arch Masons of Alabama. He was Secretary of State for Alabama from 1878 to 1882, postmaster at Montgomery from 1893 to 1897, served a term as president of the National Editorial Association, and was connected in an official capacity with many other large associations.

Despite his years, Major Screws had retained a perfect control of his faculties, and until recently his physical condition was of the best.

Funeral arrangements have not been made yet.

Stage Ambitions of 2 Youths Shattered

Recorder Pro Tem. Preston Friday morning wrecked the stage ambitions of Joe Welch, of Center Hill, and Garland Hensley, of Fort McPherson, when he advised them to give up their ideas of show life and "go on and work for a living."

The two boys were found early Friday asleep in a box car in the Southern Railway yards. They explained they were out Thursday night at a rehearsal for a show and stayed too late to catch a car home. Judge Preston dismissed the cases.

Railroad Travel's Greatest Peril Is the Open Switch

The toll of lives taken each year by this ever-present danger has been enormous.

For years the inventive genius at the command of every great railroad system has been devoted to solving this question.

The question has been solved. The danger has been removed. The open switch is closed. The Shepherd Automatic Switch Company has answered the problem. Its safety device has removed the peril from the open switch as thoroughly as the removal of a serpent's fangs destroys his sting.

By a non-electrical mechanical device the main line is closed as soon as the last truck of a car has crossed the switch. It can be opened when the engineer throws a lever on entering the siding.

The danger of open and split switches is absolutely eliminated. As a time-saver this device will remove from a third to a half of the number of stops and operations of switchmen in taking and leaving siding.

The value of the Shepherd Automatic Switch will be shown by a special demonstration to-morrow (Saturday), August 9, at 3 p. m., on a spur track of the Atlanta and West Point Railroad, at the Atlanta Manufacturing Supply Company's shop in Oakland City, on the East Point car line.

The public is urged to view the practical demonstration of this wonderful invention.

Detailed information as to the Shepherd Automatic Switch will be gladly furnished by W. R. Green, at the Aragon Hotel, or W. C. Warfield, 706 Fourth National Bank Building.

Remember, the demonstration begins promptly at 3 p. m. to-morrow at Oakland City.

Take East Point car.

ORGANIZATION OF DEALERS MADE PERMANENT

Dixie's Merchants Take Important Step in Convention—Georgia Man President.

Convinced of the value of their annual gatherings, the merchants in convention at the Auditorium Friday morning organized a permanent body, the Southern States Merchants' Association, which will perpeuate these meetings and "co-operate in all ways calculated to advance the interests of its members."

J. W. Vaughn, of Cartersville, Ga., is to be president of the association, at least until the next convention in February, 1914. Other officers are: Vice presidents, R. O. Crouch, of Griffin, Ga., and T. E. Smith, of Greer, S. C.; secretary-treasurer, H. T. Moore.

Resolutions binding delegates to refuse credit to farmers who will not diversify their crops was not adopted. In modified form, simply indorsing diversification, the resolutions were passed.

Stock Raising Indorsed.

The convention further indorsed the raising of live stock and the improvement of the lower Missippi River. The bills fathered by the Georgia Retailers also were approved.

There will be one more session of the convention Saturday. Entertainment features, however, continue another week.

"The farmer's not has proven so good in 100 country banks and 1,000,000 transactions that we are almost ready to say that we have lost more money on the obligations of the United States in the recent decline of its bonds than we have lost in dealing with the farmer," said W. S. Witham, resenting the "prevalent condescending and patronizing" attitude toward the farmer.

Mr. Witham explained and praised the farm loan banks of Europe.

Jones on Store Discipline.

Boling H. Jones, chairman, took the subject of store discipline and management. His suggestions were eminently practical. For eight years he ran a chain of six retail stores, and from this experience cited seevral lessons in storekeeping.

Failure of clerks to charge goods sold, through lack of system, he believes is responsible for a 3 per cent leakage in many stores. A test convinced him of this, he said.

Mr. Jones preached strongly against price cutting. The remedy is close buying, and manufacturers would prefer small and frequent orders, he said.

"Give your clehks responsibility. Let them do their own buying, and they'll work harder to do the selling. Back up your clerks. Never quote a lower price than you allow them to make," he concluded.

Complete Bookkeeping Urged.

"You need ne expert to supervise your accounts," said C. E. Pollard, of the American Audit Company. "What you need are records so complete and so simple that they speak for themselves. I plead for complete books, to show costs of every kind in detail. Very seldom, indeed, can too many details be shown. Ususally, too few details are shown."

L. C. Upshaw, of Douglasville, Ga., talked on credits and collections. At the start he made many amusing characterizations of various "poor pay" types—"movers," "scientific" cranks of no real judgment, and "pony sawmill" men.

Of the sawmill men, he said: "Here is a safe rule. If a pony sawmill man owns one outfit, sell him cash. If he aowns two outfits—don't sell him at all."

Fire Insurance Needed.

H. E. Choate reminded the delegates that the United States pays $690,000 daily to the "demon fire"—about $2.50 per capita per year.

"No merchant can be without fire insurance," he said. "We hear dealers say rates are too high. Rates are high because hazard iss great, which is the best reason for insurance. We call many men unfortunate when they really are improvident."

He concluded with a plea for fire prevention.

C. W. McClure urged the value of organization, and advised delegates to form associations in every small town to watch credits and study merchandising.

He suggested farmers' conventions on the lines of the retailers' convention.

"Neither my husband nor I have ever kissed any one. We believe kissing a menace to good health, and persons indulging should be punished by law."

MACON, GA., Aug. 8.—Macon's municipal campaign will open next week with the announcement of the Aldermanic tickets by City Clerk Bridges Smith and Alderman A. L. Dasher, who are opposing candidates for the mayoralty. It developed to-day that Colonel W. A. Mr. Smith offered to stay out of the race if Colonel Huff desired to run, but the latter said he was debarred by reason of Mr. Dasher's candidacy.

The administration party is supporting Mr. Smith. He and Mr. Dasher both state that their tickets will be announced next week.

Klondike Miner Gives Cash and Auto to Couple Who Fed Him When Tramp.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—Mr. and Mrs. Jack Borron and George Pratt came from Macon, Mo., to-day to buy an automobile for the Borron family. Pratt carried the money that was to be paid for it. Borron had a certificate of deposit for $1,500, a gift of Pratt.

Seven years ago George Pratt was on his way to the Klondike. He became stranded in Macon, Mo., stopped at the Borron home and begged food and lodging. He was given the best food in the poor household and in the night he became violently ill. Mr. and Mrs. Borron cared for him through an illness that lasted more than a month. They gave him railroad fare to Kansas City. When Pratt left he said:

"If I strike it in the gold fields, I'll not forget you. I'll be back this way."

Borron last evening answered a knock and at the door faced a stranger. He did not remember Pratt, who was dressed in clothes of the latest fashion. Pratt extended a hand filled with gold certificates.

"I'm George Pratt," he said. "Here's $1,500. Stick it in your jeans. I struck it rich in the Klondike. We'll get ready early in the morning to buy an automobile. I have waited until I could buy you one before I tried to enjoy a ride."

HEROD'S HOG AND HEROD'S SON

A Roman cynic said:

"Rather be Herod's hog than be Herod's son."

Herod's boys—

They were dead.

Herod's heartlessness—

His cruel indifference had killed them.

The children had displeased Herod—

But the hog—he was alive.

When Herod died his hog and gold went not with his soul.

To-day the heart of Georgia stirs—

Not with the lust and greed which brought shameful fame to Herod of old—

But with the pity—

The tenderness—

The love which nineteen hundred years ago began to flow from Christ crucified, our Lord.

You will not return to our great Mother, the State, and say:

"Behold, this we have done for our fields, our cows and hogs—

"For our girls and boys—

"We had neither the time to consider,

"Nor the funds to provide."

For to-day Georgia holds flesh and blood as of greater value than swine and kine—

To-day the tears and suffering of one little girl whose life and honor might have been saved had you made the provision—these are worth more to your State than all the money, about which we chatter and talk forgetting that lives are being lost.

And you are Georgia.

Your heart is hers—

Her heart is yours, as is her power.

And you will not neglect—

You will take the time.

You will never whine:

"WE HAVE NO MONEY FOR THESE."

When you are spending money on cows and hogs.

You will provide.

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

JULY 31.—You are the only relaxation, Diary, that they permit me to have, and my fingers, because of my weakness, feel as clumsy and big as telegraph poles. It is fortunate no one will ever read this scrawl.

I want to tell what happened the last hour before I stopped knowing what was happening.

I was sitting on the end of a log engaged in watching a cork on the water, thinking, as I so often do, of Sally, and longing to see her, when I felt Manette's arms around my neck. She had crawled out on the log, behind me, a perilous thing to do.

"Puppy says," she whispered, making believe as she frequently did that the dog could talk, "that a big black cloud is scaring him."

I looked up and found the skies overcast. There was a muttering threat in the waving of the trees, a sullen roar, and big, heavy drops of rain began to fall.

"Puppy is right," I replied, and turned hastily to carry the child back to shore. The log was old and soft and worn smooth, and my footing, with the child in my arms, was precarious. Ordinarily cautious, I thought only of the need of getting Manette to shelter, missed my step, and remember little else.

I had a feeling that I was plunging down, down, with Manette and the whole universe plunging on top of me. Everything turned black, there was a sudden, sharp pain in my head that seemed to spread over my entire body, and then I lost consciousness.

They tell me that the log, a fallen giant of the woods, must have turned, and that in my effort to save us from falling I caught hold of it and pulled it down on top of me. Then the rain began to fall in torrents.

"It was merciful," said Richard this morning, while hovering around me while the nurse took her morning walk, "that you were unconscious. If you had realized Manette's danger and your helplessness, you'd have gone mad."

Manette, they said, was saved from injury by a miracle. I have a sort of indistinct recollection that when I felt myself crashing down threw her from me. I don't know about that.

No one knows what happened in the next two hours, for it was fully that long till the dog appeared at the door of the kitchen, barking and howling. They had heard him coming, they said, a half hour before he appeared in sight, and were ready with lanterns to follow him.

They supposed when the storm broke that he had found shelter, and were not worried, as we had been caught in so many storms before, and had always come home when they cleared, laughing and making merry over the experience.

A Friend in Need.

The dog saved us. "You may need him," Sally Spencer had urged when the question of takin him came up. She question of taking him came up. We needed him more than we needed anything else on earth. So many friends, who have brains where he has only dumb intuition, do not meet the hour of need as he met it.

Manette says that when she crawled out of the mud I was lying on the bank flat on my back, with the tree trunk lying across me. She found her way, with the rain beating down on her, to my side, and in her baby way tried to rouse me.

Failing, she seemed to realize that something serious had happened, for she snuggled down beside me, put both arms around my neck, and tried, as best she could with her arms and face, to shelter me from the storm.

Her little skirts were torn into shreds, proving the effort the dog made to pull her to a place of shelter. He pulled and barked and pulled, but she held to me with both arms. I can imagine the scene—the frantic efforts of the dog to get her to a place of safety, for the waters in the lake were rising, and her equally frantic efforts to cling to her Uncle Max.

With a mournful howl, he finally desisted, and started off to secure help for the task he was unable to accomplish alone.

Manette was uninjured, and the cold beating of the rain had no bad effects. Her name was the first I spoke when I found myself in bed with strange faces bending over me, and her arms around my neck, and her face pressed against mine, is the last I remember before I lapsed into unconsciousness again.

Afterwards.

Since then, nothing else has mattered. I know that they secured a physician at the hotel, and that the next day my own doctor came by special train, bringing a nurse and Richards with him, and that he has been here ever since.

"I am not going to leave you, Max," he said, "till I pull you through. It was my fault that you came to this place."

I am not sorry. Even physical suffering has its recompense. I do not concern myself over a thing in the world. Manette is safe, and it seems good to me, after so many years of fighting battles all alone, to have some one now fighting my battles for me. The doctor tells me frankly that this will be a battle. I do not care.

They let me have just enough light to see these pages, and when I have grown tired of writing, and I have paused many times in writing this, Richards takes you away, Diary, locks you up, and then the room is darkened again. That is the reason I have begun to regard The Hands as disembodied.

They float around me in the strangest way sometimes, always through the long hours of the day and night, moving with quick, deft touches to make me more comfortable. Sometimes I fall asleep holding a hand in mine, and its firm, cool touch seems to give me strength.

"Please," I asked last night, "let me hold your hand. I don't have that horrible feeling of floating off alone to an unknown sea when I have hold of your hand. I have a notion," growing garrulous, for the hours at night are long, "that I would like to be holding your hand when The Pilot calls for me. Somehow I would not hesitate to go."

"The Pilot isn't going to call for you," replied a voice somewhere, I don't know where, she seems such an altogether disembodied person. I wonder sometimes if she is more than Two Hands and a Voice; "and you must go to sleep now and not think of such things."

Modes of the Moment

For the Season.

THE skirt of the very useful and smart afternoon gown illustrated on the left-hand side is slightly draped. A fold of material runs diagonally from the waist to the drapery. The bodice has long sleeves finished off with a row of small buttons and the bodice is cut in jockey style. In the center is shown a charming evening gown carried out in white with a touch of color in the japonica tulle waistband. The foundation is of ivory charmeuse and over this is arranged the crystal-embroidered tulle. Crystal trimming is carried out on the sleeveless bodice. A smart gown with a graceful skirt is illustrated on the right. A tunic or accordion-pleated silk partially covers the charmeuse skirt; the ends of the sash are finished with heavy silk tassels. The collar and cuffs are made of white linen edged with pleated frills.

THE CANNIBAL .:. A True Nature Story Complete

By F. ST. MARS.

THE last sparrow had ceased twittering and tucked his head under his wing for the night; the last blackbird had left off scolding—as blackbirds do when they are going to roost—and the last of the fowls had fluttered up into its perch in the fowl house, when the old buck rat, the master, and for that matter the leader of all the rats in the farmyard, poked his sharp inquisitive nose up out of the hole in the barn floor. He was a very big rat. His ears were like chewed biscuits, and his tail was a stump, half of its proper length, because of the many fights he had had. It would have been difficult to find two inches on his body not marred by old scars. You will see, therefore, that his mere survival proved his great cunning and strength.

Having remained quite still for ten minutes, and made certain that the corner where the big cat usually lay in ambush was empty, he made for the sacks of potatoes ranged in a far corner. It was the work of a few minutes to gnaw a hole in one of these and extract the smallest potato he could get. This he carried to his hole in the floor and down beneath where, hidden under the earth, he had a private store of potatoes, nuts, grain, etc., which he visited when there were too many dangers about for him to venture out to feed.

When next the rat appeared it was in the cowyard, close to the water trough. It was a moonlight night, and everything in the yard showed up clearly, for which reason it had taken him something like an hour to work his way from the barn, moving cautiously always in deep shadow. There was a bull in the yard, a huge beast standing in the full glare of the moon, rumbling to himself deep down in his inside, and two bats were playing in and out of the open thatched cowshed. And that was all, or so it seemed.

Like to Drink.

Rats are thirsty creatures, and like to drink every few hours, is possible, otherwise you would never have found our cunning old rascal here out in the open. The trough was in the moonlight, and as he climbed up it he did so with every sense on the alert. So intent was he upon the possibility of danger around that it never struck him to glance inside the trough. In fact, he was actually leaning over the edge to drink before he realized that something was there drinking already beside himself.

A younger and less cunning rat would have started and bolted, and given himself away, but this one instantly stiffened—"froze," they call it in the wild—and lay still as death. There was no mistaking the identity of the drinker. It was a full-grown weasel. None other possessed that long, lithe form, or that cruel gleam in the eyes, except the stoat.

Apparently the weasel had not seen him, for when it had finished drinking it came slowly along the edge of the trough, balancing carefully, straight toward his crouched, motionless form. And then suddenly he saw its head go up, and its burning eyes peer over the edge below to the yard. Next moment it dropped flat and froze, too—not 3 feet away from the rat. Still it had not seen him, and whatever danger had startled it came plainly from below.

You can understand, then, that the old rat was burning anxious to lift his head and peer over the side. It was awful to lie there and await a danger you could not see, but he could not move.

Then, after about five or six minutes of awful, motionless suspense, very, very slowly over the side of the trough a head lifted and peered down upon the grenish water, and the two beasts crouched motionless within a yard of it.

Beyond a slight start when the head appeared, our rat did not move, and as for the weasel, it did not move at all. Very good reason had the rat to start, for the head was that of his wife. Yes, she was looking for him, and he knew it, but not in the way you think.

Slowly, beside hers, another head moved up and peered over, to be followed by another and yet others, till there were ten of them in a row staring with their gleaming eyes. And all the time beneath, both rat and weasel could hear a continuous pattering and rustling, which told of more rats and yet more.

This, seeing that they were of his own kind, ought to have pleased the rat, one would have thought. It did not. It made him tremble from head to foot, and he had not trembled in the least when he thought himself alone with the weasel. He considered himself, in fact, a match for the bloodthirsty little weasel any day, but he knew he was no match for that which was coming.

Flight.

Then all at once he sprang to his feet, and so quickly that none of the other animals had time to move, he raced along the edge of the trough, sprang clean over the astonished weasel, landed on the far side, slipped, recovered and scampered away along the top of the cattle-mangers, and so to the ground and out of the farmyard gate.

It was magnificently done, that amazingly quick retreat, and it showed a certain amount of reasoning. Had he gone any other way he would inevitably have been either surrounded or overtaken by the other rats, but as it was those that poured after him came into collision with the weasel, who, being the rats' hereditary foe and possessed of astonishing courage, naturally fought and checked the pursuit, until overpowered by sheer numbers. Thus, by the time the whole mob of rats had really got well on the trail of our old villain he was some fifty yards down the hedge that bordered the field outside and beyond hope of capture.

Now you will naturally ask why these rats, his relations and neighbors, and especially his own wife, would seek to murder him—and I will whisper to you the reason. When his wife returned to her nest she found two of her babies gone and another one freshly killed, and her nose told her that our old rat was the culprit.

And that is why, if you go to the farm to-day, you will not find the cunning old rat, who knows all about traps, kills the chickens and ducklings, sucks the eggs and is the worst foe his own kind possesses, living on the farm at all, but about a field or two away, within raiding distance.

Household Suggestions

If black kid gloves or calf-kid boots have become hard, put the gloves on the hand and apply in that position (as if washing the hands) as much camphorated oil as the leather will absorb; then take off and hang to dry and also allow the camphor to evaporate. With boots, rub in well with the hand the same kind of oil. This gives the original suppleness to the leather.

To brighten a carpet, take five or six large potatoes and scrape them finely into a pail of water. Stir, then strain. Wring out a cloth in the water and rub the carpet. Rinse the cloth as soon as soiled. Should soot fall on a carpet, sprinkle dry salt thickly over it, leave it for a few minutes, then brush up. No trace of the soot will remain.

Cayenne pepper is excellent to rid cupboards of mice. The floor should be gone over carefully, and each hole stopped up with a piece of rag dipped in water and then in cayenne pepper.

Tar may be removed from the hands by rubbing with the outside of fresh orange or lemon peel and drying immediately. The volatile oils dissolve tar so that it can be rubbed off.

Permanganate of potash will clease dirty filters of all impurities. A solution should be passed through the filter until it comes out as pink as when it was poured in.

To cure a feather that has become damaged with rain or dew, sprinkle it thickly with common salt and shake before a bright fire until dry, when you will find it as good as new.

Get thare two hammers & give them a rest. The Wife Who Spends Her Husband's Money

BY DOROTHY DIX.

WHEN a young man asks a girl's hand in marriage the first question that her father puts to him is, "Can you support my daughter in comfort?"

No kind and thoughtful parent, however, ever, takes the trouble to ask a prospective bride, "Can you spend wisely and judiciously my son's hard-earned money?"

Yet the one thing is just as important as the other, and the happiness and success of any marriage depends just as surely on the wife's ability to get the full purchasing power out of a dollar as it does upon the husband's ability to make that dollar. The ne'er-do-well of a man does not more surely bring a family to want and poverty than the thriftless and wasteful woman does.

There is a homely old proverb that says that a woman can throw more out of the back door with a teaspoon than a man can put in at the front door with a shovel. And it's true. No man, unless he is a financial wizard, can make any headway against the extravagance of a wife. It is his wife's discretion as a spender that settles the average man's fate for him, and determines whether he is to sit on a bookkeeper's stool or stand behind the counter the balance of his life, or whether he is going to be well to do and prosperous when he is middle-aged.

When you see the young wife of a man on a moderate salary always dressed up in the very latest cut in fashion, when you meet her at matinees every week and watch her having tea at a smart hotel afterwards, when you encounter her in the butcher shop negligently ordering sweetbreads and squabs, you don't have to go to any fortune teller to forecast the future of her husband and herself.

You Can Forecast.

You can do that for yourself. You can see a stoop-shouldered man growing more and more discouraged as the years go by, and he has nothing to show for his labor except a mountain of receipted bills, and at the end of it all you see a man dead from overwork or thrown out of his job into hopeless poverty into which he sinks.

On the other hand, when you see the wife of a poor young man who does her own housework and makes her own frocks and who buys the cheap cuts of meat at the butcher shop and is particular about having the bones and the trimmings sent home, you are equally able to forecast the future for her and her husband. And you see diamonds and motor cars festooning her horizon along about the time she is 50.

There is nothing new in these statements. Everybody has seen hundreds of such cases. Everybody can recite to you dozens of instances in their personal knowledge of men who have been ruined by their wives' extravagance or made by their wives' thrift. Every mother and father pray that their own son will get a wife who has the saving bank habit instead of the bargain counter mania, yet nobody raises a finger to prevent a catastrophe that threatens every man who gets married and every family that is started.

When a woman is wasteful and extravagant, and throws her husband's good money away we blame her, and say all the hard things about her that we can think of. It's a cruel injustice. It isn't her fault. It's the fault of the idiotic way in which we bring girls up.

We don't teach them the value of money. We don't teach them how to spend it, and to expect them to make a wise use of it is as unreasonable as to expect a land lubber to know how to pilot a ship.

No Experience.

The average girl, until she gets married, has never had the spending of a dollar. Her father has paid her bills, and her mother has decided what she could buy. A little change for street car and soda water is about all the money that has ever jingled in her purse. She has never had any fixed allowance for her clothes and personal expenses, and so has never realized that if she paid too much for a hat she would have to do without a dress, and that you can't spend your money and have it, too.

Parents are so afraid that their daughters will waste their money that they let the girl learn how to spend on her husband's earnings, which is pretty hard on Friend Husband.

It isn't the gril's fault that she doesn't know how to spend her husband's money wisely. It's the fault of her parents who have not taught her one of the most important lessons in life. That this is true is abundantly proven by the fact that women who have earned their living before they were married, and who have thus learned how to handle money, are almost invariably economical and thrifty managers and helps to their husbands.

There is no greater injustice in the world than the way women are treated about money. A woman without money is the most forlorn and piteous creature on earth. She is in a thousand times worse plight, and more danger, than a man is under similar circumstances, yet fathers do not concern themselves to try to protect their daughters against such a fate.

Boys are given money of their own when they are little fellows in order that they may learn to handle it, but the little girl is left to find out this important piece of knowledge the best way she can. A boy is fitted for some occupation whereby he may support himself in comfort. A girl's living is left to chance. She isn't taught any way by which she can keep herself out of the poor house if she doesn't marry, or if her husband should die and leave her penniless.

A rich man leaves his daughter a fortune, but he has not taught her one thing about how to take care of it, and she is left to the mercy of executors and lawyers, and she doesn't even know enough to keep herself from being swindled.

Perhaps some day men will realize that the only way to protect themselves is to teach women how to handle money by giving them a definite sum for their own, instead of making them do the mendicant act for every cent they get. Then we shall hear less about extravagant wives. It's ignorance, not viciousness, that makes women waste money.

Things Worth Remembering

Public executions in Paris prove very profitable to the owners of houses commanding the scene. Windows are let out for the occasion, the landlords watching for the first sign of the execution, and then at once sending word to the persons who have hired the room. If an ordinary criminal is executed, the charge is usually about $5 per seat, but should the offender have committed any remarkable crime, the price runs up to as much as $30.

A Pittsburg boy, William A. Davis, reached his thirteenth birthday on Friday, June 13, 1913. He weighed 113 pounds, lived in Taggart street, which has thirteen letters in it, and was in grade thirteen at school. His mother, who was born on December 13, ordered Master Willie to stay in bed on his birthday to insure that no harm should befall him.

Kettlewell, in Yorkshire, possesses the most remarkable electric lighting installation in England. The village is only a tiny place, but the River Wharfe provides it with natural water power, and at a cost of less than $3,000 a lighting plant has been erected, the villagers being the shareholders and the directors of the company.

Now that the large advertising posters that were so great a disfigurement of the country on either side of the French railway lines have been rendered illegal by act of Parliament, advertisers on the Orleans Railway have begun to plant flower beds of brilliant colors in the fields on either side of the line, with the flowers arranged so as to spell the name of the goods to which they are to call attention.

In parts of Australia, where the average yearly rainfall is not more than 10 inches, a square mile will support only eight or nine sheep. In Buenos Ayres the same area, with 24 inches of rain, supports 2,560 sheep.

The average depth of sand in the deserts of Africa is from 30 to 40 feet.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

It Isn't Only Skin Deep, Says Maude Knowlton

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

"BEAUTY is not just skin deep—it goes as deep as muscles and blood and brains," said Maude Knowlton, with the combination of buoyancy and conviction that makes a background of emphasis for her every word. "That is not saying that I think beauty is health, for features and figure and expression all have their part in making beauty; and I never forget that it goes right through the outer shell to the bone!"

In a cozy little flat out in the Eighties I visited the clever girl who, under Henry B. Harris' management, has scored several distinct hits, one of the best remembered of which is her marvelous portrayal of Simpson, the real chorus lady in "The Chorus Lady."

"A girl can't very well choose her birthplace," went on the girl whose clever gift of mental twist and verbal kink throws added glamour of interest over big brown eyes, wavy black hair and a complexion that when it is not covered with healthy summer-sun-and-ocean burn is first cousin to the cream of Miss Knowlton's own Irish meadow lands.

"No, a girl can't choose her own native heath, but if she could, a good starting place would be California. My! the air out there is made of component parts of vim, vigor and vitality—and with a little heredity to back up the H2O combination a start like that gives a girl a tendency to a sane, healthy viewpoint, and that kindly attitude toward life that irradiates even a homely face.

Not Posing.

"Of course, I am not posing as a beauty expert," said modest Miss Maude, "but surely we agree that an actually homely face may have a charm of spirit and intelligence, a magnetic giving out of self to the world (that plays give and take all the time, you know) that a mere beauty shell which thrills you for fifteen minutes could not exert after the first quarter was past. Vim, vigor, vitality, a tolerant spirit toward the world and its inhabitants, and buoyancy to carry you over the jolting rough places, will surely bring out all your good points better than a diet list and a course of facial massage.

"Take buoyancy—it will keep you from getting the wrinkles and lines and spiritless eyes that are foes to beauty; it will put spring into your step. And now I have reached a siding, for I just have to stop and talk about walking and carriage. Miss Beauty Seeker, hearken! You must walk along on the balls of your feet with buoyant spring instead of laggard slouch if you want to be truly attractive. Walk as if you could conquer worlds—and you will conquer hearts.

Swimming Good.

"Swimming helps a lot in the pursuit of proper land movement, for it brings a graceful fluidity of motion—no, I don't mean a fish-walk, but just a flowing, graceful movement in walking that is sure to please every one who sees, and that is sure to make you look fashionably tall and svelte.

"Oh, if you just hold yourself firmly erect on the balls of your feet and carry head and chest high instead of sloppily caved in, you will look twice as attractive, Miss Beauty Seeker—trust me for that!

"Vim to keep you up above the dead level of mediocrity; vigor to carry you on to ambition and achievement, vitality that will make you ready to meet every occasion; buoyancy—of which I have sung at length—and now a tolerant spirit, of which I can not sing at enough length. You know the woman who is always pecking and perking and digging at life, who criticises all the things that fall outside her own interests and inclinations. Her expression and attitude can ruin even a collection of perfect features and coloring."

"The woman who never would do

Miss Maude Knowlton.

the things New York does, yet who likes to see New York doing them—if it enjoys them," I mused.

"Ex-actly. I'll use that when I interview you," laughed merry Miss Maude. "'Live and let live' is a good motto for living and having the impress of living mark your face in lines of sweetness.

"Now for a background to the vim, vigor and vitality lady—the simplest clothes she dares wear, so she shall not be a mere clothes-horse, but a young-as-possible-attractive girl, whose own sweet nature and expression and well-carried figure are more important than the mere garments in which she is swathed. And there's my ideal of beauty," concluded Miss Knowlton.

And a very ideal Ideal I call it—don't you?

WOMAN SICK FOURTEEN YEARS

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elkhart, Ind.:—"I suffered for fourteen years from organic inflammation, female weakness, pain and irregularities. The pains in my sides were increased by walking or standing on my feet and I had such awful bearing down feelings, was depressed in spirits and became thin and pale with dull, heavy eyes. I had six doctors from whom I received only temporary relief. I decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial and also the Sanative Wash. I have now used the remedies for four months and cannot express my thanks for what they have done for me.

"If these lines will be of any benefit you have my permission to publish them."—Mrs. Sadie Williams, 455 James Street, Elkhart, Indiana.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential,) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

.:. Where There's a Will .:.

MME. ROSE BRASSY opened her autograph album, a masterpiece of morocco and solid gold, and showed its contents to her friend, Mlle. Lili Blanc. The book was full of sketches, drawings and poems by famous men and women, some merry, others grave, but nearly all containing a compliment to the beautiful young matron.

"You have certainly added some very interesting autographs to your collection since I saw it last. But do you know what you ought to have? Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Don't you think I know that," said Mme. Brassy, rather annoyed. "But it is awful difficult to get hold of just as the man himself. M. Brassy has several times invited him to our dinners, but he has always been engaged."

"Of course he is the fashionable poet of the moment," said Lili, "and ever since I have come home from abroad I have heard of nobody else. The great and only Lucien Fond, whose poems are sung everywhere, from Palais Elysees to Montmartre. And that is why you simply must have his autograph in your collection, Rose."

"It is easy enough to say that, Lili." "I know it is difficult and now more than ever, for Aunt Charlotte told me yesterday that Lucien Fond goes to Versailles every day and spends the whole day with a sick sister. But I must go now, dear. Good-bye. I am coming to tennis on Friday."

When Mme. Brassy was alone she threw herself into a chair and began to think. For a long while she sat in silence, pondering, then she jumped up and said: "I know how it is going to be done."

The next day Lucien Fond drove to the railway station in his car.

He Is Annoyed.

"Call for me her to-night at 10," he said to his chauffeur.

Then he went into the waiting room, where a large portrait of himself made him pull his hat down over his eyes. His popularity annoyed him. He would have given anything to be an unknown traveler who was not made the target of scores of amateur photographers as soon as he left his house.

The train arrived. Fond entered a first-class compartment and was about to close the door behind him when he felt somebody pulling the door from the outside. He growled something between his teeth intended to sound like an apology and retired into the farthest corner and began to look at the landscape, dreading every moment that the young lady who had entered should begin to talk to him. No doubt she was going to pay him one of the compliments which were on everybody's lips and which he hated.

Of course, she was staring at him now. He could just feel it with his nerves without looking up.

But he was evidently mistaken. The young lady did not say a single word. The poet was bored and the sun annoyed him. He rolled down the shade and cast a stolen glance at his companion.

She was exceedingly pretty. Now she took off her veil and hat and arranged her fluffy golden hair. Then she rested her head in her hands and looked as if her thoughts were far away.

Fond, who was a great smoker and who was dying for a cigarette, took out his case.

"May I smoke, mademoiselle?" he asked politely.

She nodded her head and smiled. The poet was surprised. After the way she had looked at him he had expected a volume of words, a repetition of the compliments he was used to hear everywhere and which he hated. But she said nothing—not a single word. Fond was surprised and just a little bit disappointed.

Her Scheme.

While he was smoking he studied his companion's beautiful profile and slender throat. Suddenly she stood up and tried in vain to open the window. Fond rushed to her side and opened it for her. She thanked him with a graceful nod.

"At last I have met a woman who does not talk too much," he thought. "Perhaps she does not know me—and still the way she looked at me."

And Lucien Fond, who hated strangers to address him, now actually wished she would say something.

He threw away his cigarette.

"I am sure the smoke annoys you, mademoiselle," he said.

The young lady merely smiled. Did she mean yes or no?

More and more puzzled by her smile and her silence the poet said:

"Don't you feel a draught? Don't you want me to close the window on my side?"

The young lady produced a notebook, wrote something and handed it to the astonished poet.

"I am deaf," he read.

Deaf, that beautiful young girl—for of course she could not be married. The poet was deeply touched and wrote in the book:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

The poor young girl took her notebook, looked at it, smiled and put it into her bag.

* * *

Three days later Mme. Brassy was having a tennis party. Lili played badly and Rose scolded her.

"You must try to play better, Lili."

Her Triumph.

"Where there is a will there is a way, you know."

"Not always Rose—remember Lucien Fond's autograph."

"Oh, I have that."

Rose threw down her racquet, ran up to the house and returned proudly with her album open. A new page had been pasted in, and on this was written:

"Please accept my sincerest sympathy. LUCIEN FOND."

"But how in the world did you get it so quickly, Rose, and why does he write 'sincerest sympathy'?"

Mme. Rose blushed a little and replied:

"That is my secret."

A Tie.

"I took Gladys to the party last night. On the way home I proposed, and she accepted me."

"That's winning in a walk, isn't it?"

"Yes, but it was a neck and neck finish."

A Misfit.

"Wealth has its penalties," said the ready-made philosopher.

"Yes," replied Mr. Cumrox. "I'd rather be back at the dear old factory than learning to pronounce the names of the old masters in my picture gallery."

How Wonderful!

The dumb man saw a wheel and spoke.
The deaf man saw a flock and herd.
The blind man bought a plane and saw.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Now, when did she fly?" the detective pursued. "Shortly after I saw her last. And how? On foot and quietly. The hall boy saw her go out, and he says she had her little bag on her arm and looked decent and composed; not like a woman in a delirium, nor even like one who meditates any dreadful crime. But then a boy's observation does not go for much, and we will let it pass. What we will remember, though, is this, that she had a veil on which covered her face, and this veil was brown, or, at least, of a very dark color.

"Two persons have told me so; the boy, whose word goes for little, and the chambermaid, who, though she did not see her go out, had had ample opportunity for observing her veil earlier in the afternoon, and whose word on such a subject does go for something. But, and mark the fact well, for it seems to me important, the veil that was clinging to her dress when she was brought into Mrs. Olney's parlor was gray and decidedly light; not the same one at all, according to description, which she wore when she went out of the hotel. What is the conclusion? That she stopped somewhere. Where? Another thing to find out. And now, about the poison. I went through Twenty-second street very soon after leaving Mrs. Olney's last night, and in front of one of the houses between Fifth and Sixth avenues I found a broken phial reeking with the smell of bitter almonds. So that part of his story is true. I have brought the bits of broken glass. Here they are."

The Coroner looked at them curiously, smelled them and glanced up at Mr. Gryce.

"Well!" he suggested, in an inquiring tone. He felt that the detective's silence meant something.

"Don't you notice anything peculiar about these pieces?"

"No; to be frank, I don't."

"Poison that is bought at a drug store usually has a label on the bottle."

"True."

"And this phial once had a label on it."

"I see."

"But it has been washed off; or rather rubbed off by a moistened hand. There are bits of it still remaining."

"I perceive them."

"What inference can we draw? That caution has been used. Now caution is not an attribute of the suicide, whether that suicide was an intentional one or the result of a mistake."

"Humph!"

"And then there is another thing that puzzles me. Dr. Molesworth declares he found her sitting on the steps. I looked at those steps. There was a light snow lying on them and this snow lay white and undisturbed, as it would not have done if a woman had been sitting there. But then some little time had elapsed since he removed her from the spot, and enough fresh snow may have fallen to cover up the traces which her skirts must have left behind her."

"Very possible."

"Only those skirts were not damp about the edges, as they must have been if she had been sitting on a stoop under these circumstances. And this to my mind is good evidence that she did not sit there. I would sooner believe she had been carried down the stoop and placed in the phaeton without putting her foot to the ground. Only it happens to be General ——'s house and the thing is impossible."

"But how could you know about her skirts? You did not go near her."

"But Harrison did, the man you yourself sent there to investigate."

"And you have seen him since?"

"Five minutes after you did, sir."

The coroner laughed. He did not understand such zeal.

"I knew you would send for me," resumed Mr. Gryce, "and I want to have something to talk about."

"I see," said the Coroner, "well, go on."

"I am almost at the end of my rope, only—did you wonder what had become of Miss Farley's bag?"

"I did not know she had any."

The Missing Bag.

"The people at the hotel say she had, and here is the ocular proof of it." And Mr. Gryce produced from under his coat a small but neat handbag of black leather, having on one side two ornamental steel letters, one of which was "M." and the other "F." "The initials of her name, you perceive."

The Coroner nodded.

"You wonder where I got this bag. Why, in the most natural place in the world; it was in the phaeton.'

"Ah, in the phaeton."

"When I went out of the house last night I found that vehicle standing where it had been left, in front of the steps; and as according to the doctor's story, it had been the real scene of death, I naturally thought you would wish to have a look at it. I accordingly took possession of it and not seeing what else I could do with it at that time of night, drove it into a stable nearby. I expected every moment to be stopped by somebody and so forced to reveal my true character; but circumstances favored me and I got off with my prize unmolested. You will find it in charge of an officer at No. 66 West —— street."

"That is all right, but what about the look you took? You never left that phaeton for me to examine first."

Mr. Gryce smiled grimly at the plain gold stud he wore as a cuff button. "I see you understand me." He then admitted apologetically, "'Twas dark and I did not find much. Still, I found something; the bag, for instance."

The Coroner looked at him with a doubtful air. Did he suspect for the first time that the detective was concealing something from him? If so, he said nothing, and Mr. Gryce went on blandly.

"This bag may have stories to tell. Suppose you open it, sir."

The Coroner nodded and did so. A number of toilet articles came to light and some linen. All was fresh and neat.

"Nothing that is likely to help up," asserted the Coroner. "No vestiges of poison, no letters, not even a scrap of writing of any kind."

Mr. Gryce did not commit himself.

"I would like to take an inventory of the articles," said he.

The Coroner allowed him to do so and then inquired:

"What about the witnesses? Have you seen the clerks at the drug store?"

"Yes, they have nothing to add to his story. He stopped there, came in as he said, told his fears and asked for assistance. One of them, Herbert Black by name, at once responded, but before he could reach the door the doctor came rushing back and crying out: "It is too late; she is dead, led the way to the phaeton, where they saw the poor girl tumbled in a heap, white and lifeless. They were young men and did not know enough to take her by the hand and see if she were yet cold. They took him doctor's word for granted, knowing him so well, and feeling a natural indisposition to interfere in a matter at once so horrible and so delicate, only asked what they should do to help him. 'I am going to take her straight home,' he told them, and requested one of them to telephone to you and the other to run along at his side as far as the house. This latter duty fell to Mr. Black, and it was he who helped the doctor carry the poor girl in. That is all. I worked a half hour, but could get no more out of him."

Nine Hours to Work.

"And the clergyman?"

"Has nothing to impart."

"And the driver? You surely have seen the driver, he whom he sent out of the way with a prescription to some patient or other?"

Mr. Gryce's brows knit.

"I have had but nine hours to work in," he said, "and one of them was thrown away on that boy. I set a watch for him in three places and succeeded in getting the first word with him. But he had only one story to tell and told it doggedly. It was in strict accordance with that of Dr. Molesworth. He had been ordered to come to the C—— Hotel at a quarter past 8 to take Mr. Pease home after the expected ceremony. He had gone there on foot, Dr. Molesworth himself having driven Mr. Pease to the hotel, and, finding the phaeton at the door, had waited beside it for the clergyman to come out. But before this could happen the doctor reappeared, and declaring that matters had not gone as he wished, took his place in the phaeton and beckoned him in beside him, after which they rode about the streets until the doctor suddenly stopped the horse somewhere near Union Square and, commanding him to get out, gave him a bit of paper, which he told him to take as quickly as he could to Mr. Monroe, in Seventy-third street. He obeyed him and had only just come back. This is what the boy said and all he could say, but I know as well as I know anything that he did not tell me the truth, for when I asked him what cars he took he stared at me for a moment helplessly, and then said, 'The Madison avenue cars,' which story he stuck to, but as one who is very much frightened sticks to a statement he knows is false but dares not abandon."

"I will make him tell the truth," asserted the Coroner.

"It is to be hoped so. He is not dull, but he is mighty obstinate, and is to all appearance very much afraid of his master."

"I know the species. I can manage him."

Mr. Gryce looked doubtful, but did not pursue the subject. On the contrary, he remarked:

"I forgot to give you another point I have made. Molesworth says that after leaving the hotel he rode through the streets searching for his missing bride. Now, a person who searches goes slowly, and when he finds what he seeks in the condition in which Miss Farley was found, he still goes slowly. But Dr. Molesworth's horse had been driven far and fast, as the state he was in when I drove him into the stable amply showed."

"A point? I should think so."

"And that is not all. Seeing that the horse went a trifle lame, I examined his feet, and there, wedged between the hoof and the shoe of his right forefoot I found a bit of gravel which I dare wager never came from the streets about Madison Square. As the horse was not lame enough for it to have been there long, I drew the inference that Miss Farley was searched for in other regions than those his story would lead you to surmise."

.:. Advice to the Lovelorn .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"NO" TO ALL.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

The other night I attended a mask ball. Through the masking I became acquainted with a young man. Before leaving he asked me for my address, and if he might call.

I am 17. Should I have given him my address? Should I continue the acquaintance without a conventional introduction if he writes, as I know none of his friends? The young man asked me to call him up on the phone. Can I do this? Would it be proper to have him call? Should he ask me to go out with him (for he said something to that effect)? Could I do so without a chaperone? ROBERTA.

Let the matter end right now. You were foolish to give him your address, but it will be nothing more than passing folly if you make no effort to see him again.

ACCEPT HER STATEMENT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Until recently one of the boys in our crowd kept company with a rather pretty girl and through some disagreement discontinued his attentions. All along I have been rather sweet on this same girl and since their disagreement I have been to see her very often.

What I can not understand, is this: It is only two or three months since I have been calling and she says she has learned to love me dearly. This other boy says she has told him that very often, too. Do you really think she could have learned to love me in so short a time?

She has given proof in one way, however. She never went to church before, but now she goes every Sunday night with me.

The boys kid me terribly and I want to hear from some one who is entirely impartial.

WILLIAM.

She may love you. One can not measure love by time, and you say she has given proof. Accept her statements without question and enjoy the present, but make no arrangements for marriage until you are sure that you are more than "rather sweet" on her.

ONLY THREE LEFT OF CUBS' OLD GUARD

By O. B. Keeler.

A COUPLE of days ago the papers carried a bit of baseball news to the effect that Edward Reulbach had been traded by the Cubs for Eddie Stack, of Brooklyn.

Of itself, that wasn't a very exciting bit of information. Neither Mr. Stack nor Mr. Reulbach has been exceeding any speed limits this year—even in Philadelphia.

But aside from that—

Say, did you notice a queer little nip of regret when you read that small item?

IT just marked the passing of one more of the few remaining original Cubs; the wonderful clan gathered by Frank Selee and molded by Frank Chance into what many will always believe to have been the greatest baseball machine of all time. And those who sing the praises of the Athletics and the rest have at last to admit that Connie Mack and the others have yet to win 116 games in a season.

BUT that's by the way.

You remember the Original Cubs, don't you? Let's see—can we recall the line-up of the smashing years of 1906-7-8?

Well, back of the wood was Johnny Kling, aided and abetted by Pat Moran—what little aiding and abetting Johnny needed in those halcyon days.

The slab staff? We'll match that, now, against any in history. Brown, Reulbach, Overall and Pfeister for the regulars, with Chick Frazer and Carl Lundgren in reserve. Frazer was a celebrated chicken fancier, you remember, and Carl could pitch better with the thermometer at 32 than most pitchers could on July 4.

The Infield—Chance and Evers and Tinker and Steinfeldt; and the rip and swing of the old Tinker-to-Evers-to-Chance that made the pace for all their day.

The Outfield—Schulte and Slagle and Sheckard; the celebrated S. S. S. combination, with the Rabbit to top the batting list and Artie Hofman to fill in on occasion.

WELL, well—we'll take stock of the remains.

Schulte and Evers, and Orvie Overall, who is plugging along on the come-back trail after a couple of years' defection.

Reulbach made the fourth of the Old Guard, until the other day. Big Ed hadn't done much the last few years. But don't forget that three times Big Ed topped the whole list of slabmen in the National League, and that when Brown and Mathewson were in their prime.

Four fighting Grizzlies,
Sturdy as can be—
Big Ed was traded,
Then there were three.

Who'll be the next of the Old Guard to pass on?

WITH brief reference to the latest chapter in that sad serial, "Losing 'Em by One Run," it appears from a somewhat scrambled telegraphic account that Bill Smith and Gilbert Price came together in a bean-on collision -after yesterday's game in Nashville.

Price appears to have been the one to bounce back. In fact, the report has it that Smith ordered him out of his uniform indefinitely.

The row was about the curve ball Price dealt to Callahan in the tenth inning, on which Dave Callahan doubled for the winning run.

At this distance, far be it from us to make wise criticisms of either Price or his manager.

Except this much.

If Price crossed up the manager on explicit instructions, he deserves all he got.

On the other hand, if Smith took out on his pitcher the soreness incident to losing a hard-fought battle—Price having been sent in cold and doing his best—it looks as if the manager was overly severe.

Kniseley on Southern Hurlers Explains Peculiarity of Hitters

PETE KNISELEY, outfielder for Birmingham, undertakes to explain the good showing some of the pitchers make in this circuit, only to fall down when they get into the big show; also why Southern leaguers hit well in the majors. Says Pete:

"The Southern League is the hardest place in the country to bat up in the .300 list. No wonder a player hits higher in the major league than in the Southern.

"In the majors, the pitchers do not exert themselves until real danger faces them. When the game is progressing without heavy hitting, the pitchers serve the ball over and give you a chance to swat it, hoping that it will go into one of the fielders' hands. But not here.

"From the beginning of the game until the finish, the Southern League pitchers work at top speed. As the result, the batter has a poorer opportunity to make a high mark. But I attribute the many ascensions in the Southern to this fact. Unless a man is of wonderful physique, he is unable to twirl nine innings, putting his greatest effort on every toss. There are a few who are able to stand the pace. Elmer Brown is a twirler of this class, while Bill Prough is another.

"But the average pitcher is able to stand the gaff for six or seven innings. Then when he weakens the batters feast on the offerings and frequently drive him from the mound. But, of course, there are clever pitchers in the Southern. Hardgrove and Foxen do not pitch hard until there is danger and are very successful.

"I believe that a .300 batsman in the Southern can duplicate the feat in the majors."

KNISELEY speaks truly both in respect to the pitching and batting. It has long been noted as a peculiar fact that recruits from the Southern League and the Pacific Coast League seldom have batted less in the majors than in the minors. Under ordinary circumstances, it would be fair to discount the average recruit's minor league batting by 10 to 20 points when he gets to the real class, but Daubert and Wheat both have batted better in fast company than they did in the bushes; Charles Stengel has become one of the heaviest clouters in the National and Red Smith is holding his own.

All of them are from the Southern, and probably Kniseley has the right answer. The explanation of the ability of Coast leaguers to hit in the majors up to their Coast standards has been that the heavy winds in some cities and the dampness in others on the Coast keep the batting down to a minimum, and a man who can hit in that country can hit anywhere.

THE tendency of young pitchers from the South to throw their whole strength into every ball delivered has also been noted by many observers. Brooklyn has an illustration of that very mistake in Frank Allen, who persists in working with all his might in every inning, with the result that when he is in a tight place he has comparatively little reserve strength with which to extricate himself.

An even more pronounced case of the same sort was furnished by Bill Burns, who is a native of Texas, but got his start on the Coast. Bill was one of the most powerful men that ever broke into baseball, but he did not know how to conserve his energy. He was at different periods with Washington, Detroit and Cincinnati, and with all his record was the same. He had the habit of blowing up at the end of the seventh or eighth inning, and, if the game ever went more than nine innings, it was a dead sure bet that Bill had nothing but his glove and spikes left for the tenth.

Nap Rucker used to fall for the same foolish policy in his callow days, but Nap has become old and wise and uses no more exertion now than is necessary, although he admits it took years for the light to break on him.

M'GRAW HINTS THAT GOLF COST MATHEWSON BEATING

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 8.—One of Giants was asked just before the New York team left Pittsburg for Cincinnati why McGraw did not take Mathewson out of the box in the fifth inning Wednesday, when seven runs were batted off his delivery.

"I think Mac wanted to impress something on Christy," said the Giant. "McGraw has been arguing all along against his pitchers playing golf. He does not object to the sport for infielders or outfielders, but he claims it does the pitchers no good, and he has tried to make Matty cut it out. McGraw claims that handling a golf stick tires the muscles in a pitcher's hands and wrists."

JACK JOHNSON BARRED FROM BOXING IN PARIS

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Jack Johnson will not be permitted to box in this country. The "American Boxing Federation" has requested the French Federation ot prohibit Johnson, the American negro pugilist, from fighting in France and that body has decided to grant the request.

FIGHT MANAGER IMPROVING.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 8.—Larney Lichtenstein, local manager of fighters, who on Monday underwent an operation at the Alexian Brothers' Hospital, where he had two ribs taken out, is recovering so rapidly that he intends making the trip to Winnipeg on August 14 to be with Steve Ketchel for his fight there. Doc Briggs performed the operation, and it was very successful.

HOLLIDAY AND JORDAN CROWD MANCHESTER

Votes Pour in Fast as Popularity Race Nears End—Five More Days Left.

ONLY five more chances for coupons, fans. Do your clipping early. The contest ends Wednesday noon, August 13. When it ends the last coupon in the Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's baseball contest will appear in this paper.

Dick Manchester still maintains his lead, although admirers of Otto Jordan and "Goat" Holliday are fighting like mad to obliterate the margin and throw their favorite into the lead. The race is drawing to a close, but it has lost none of its speed and excitement. Great bundles of coupons are coming in to the Baseball Popularity Editor daily in the dash for votes, and the leaders will probably have their last week's totals doubled when the final count is attained.

All America is clipping for Manchester. He holds first place and his followers are breaking their necks to keep him there. Will they succeed? Time only will tell.

There's a coupon in to-day's paper. Find it on the sporting page and send it in. There will be another in to-morrow's paper. Help your favorite player, be he from Thomasville, Americus, Valdosta or Waycross, win The Hearst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's loving cup and the honor of being the most popular player in the Empire State League.

COLE QUITS COLUMBUS TEAM; MAY JOIN FEDERALS

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 8.—Because Manager Hinchman fined and chased him off the field here, after Umpire Cahill had lifted him from the game, "King" Cole to-day asserted that he was done with pitching for the Columbus team. He says he's going to a nunnamed Federal League club.

TOMMY DIXON FALLS FROM RING IN SEVENTH ROUND

JOPLIN, MO., Aug. 8.—An injury received by Tommy Dixon, of Kansas City, during a fight here last night with Freddie Cole, of Indianapolis, caused the contest, scheduled for fifteen rounds, to terminate in the seventh round. Dixon fell through the ropes to the floor, injuring his arm.

JOCKEY CLAIMS HE WAS OFFERED $1,000 TO 'PULL'

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 8.—Jockey Wilson threw a commotion into sporting circles here to-day by declaring that he had been approached with an offer of a bribe to throw a race recently at the Belmont track meeting.

The stewards refused to comment upon it, as the matter will be sifted by the officials. The story involves another jockey, a friend of Wilson, who acted as an intermediary, and a well-known Bowery politician.

Wilson's specific statement was to the effect that a man named Reed, who has been warned off the track a number of times, approached him at the Belmont track and offered him $1,000 to pull Working Lad in a race on June 24. The stewards, it is said, have exonerated Wilson. No action has as yet been taken against the Bowery politician, but it is known that if he can not clear himself he will be asked to absent himself in future from all meetings given under the association's auspices.

LANGFORD AND JEANNETTE TO CLASH IN LONG BOUT

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 8.—Promoter McCarey last night received messages from Sam Langford and Joe Jeannette accepting his terms for a twenty-round bout. In all probability the date set for the heavyweight event will be October 7.

"I would like to see the question of supremacy between Langford and Jeannette settled," explained the promoter. "That's my reason for making the match. In a scheduled twenty-round go in my ring with Eyton refereeing, the two blacks will have to extend themselves. I will never stage a mismatch between a black and a white boxer. So long as the colored men battle among themselves I will put no handicap in their way."

All doubt as to Wolgast's willingness to box on the September date was removed yesterday when the former lightweight champion telegraphed as follows:

"Will positively meet the winner of the Dundee-White fight of August 12. Hope it will be Dundee, as I want to show the public the difference between a real fighter and a jumping jack."

JACK BARRY FIRST OF MACKMEN TO BE HURT

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 8.—The first serious accident of the season to Connie Mack's famous infield has resulted in Shortstop Jack Barry being put on the hospital list with a bad shoulder, caused by his bumping into Catcher O'Neil at the plate in Wednesday's game. Barry probably will be unable to play for a week.

RED SOX RECALL PLAYERS.

BOSTON, Aug. 8.—The Boston Red Sox to-day exercised their right of option on three players in the American Association. Infielder Krug, of the Indianapolis team, and Infielder Scott and Pitcher Brant, of St. Paul, recently sold with the right of repurchase, were recalled.

DENT PASSES 3 BATTERS IN 53 INNINGS

WHEN Elliott Dent walked Jack Spratt in the first inning of Thursday's game in Nashville, the Atlanta pitcher interrupted slightly the progress of a very fine bit of record-making in this league.

It was his third base on balls in fifty-three innings.

Before the game started Thursday, Dent's record, beginning July 18, was two bases on balls in forty-four innings. This included a "long run" of thirty-three innings, or practically three full games, without a walk being issued.

The big right-hander is going at top speed just now, and his control is well-nigh perfect. He doesn't get himself in the hole very often, either, and it is a rare thing for the batsman to be able to take a tight grip on terra firma and wait confidently for the next one to come over.

YANKEE OWNER PUTS IN CLAIM FOR CUBAN STARS

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—President Frank Farrell, of the New York American League club, will appeal to the National Commission to set aside the sale of three Cuban players of the Long Branch team, of the New York and New Jersey League, to the Boston Nationals. The players are Pitcher Laqua, Shortstop Arragon and Outfielder Padran, according to Farrell. Owner Henriques, of the Long Branch team, recently offered to sell him these players. Farrell agreed to take them, and the price was fixed.

According to the verbal agreement, the three players were to report to Manager Chance yesterday. Instead of the players reporting, Henriques sold them to President Gaffney, of the Braves. Farell says he has several witnesses to the deal.

CLEVELAND BUYS CATCHER BOWMAN; PAYS $2,500

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., Aug. 8.—The Grand Rapids club, of the Central League, announces the sale of Pitcher "Abe" Bowman to the Cleveland American League club. The price is given out at $2,500. Bowman will report to the Naps at the close of the Central season.

NEW BICYCLE RECORD.

PARIS, Aug. 8.—Marcel Berthel broke the world's one-hour bicycle record unpaced by covering 26.35 miles.

The American unpaced bicycle record for one hour is 25 miles 600 yards made by W. W. Hamilton at Denver, Colo., July 9, 1898.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

HOW SWEET.

How sweet to be a manager and run a baseball team—
At least when you are winning games it is a blissful dream.
But when the team is losing, is his job a thing of joy?
Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi, Oi yoi,
Oi yoi, Oi yoi!

Whether Ed Reulbach or Eddie Stack is the better athlete is yet to be determined, but it is a well-known fact that the Cubs never again will own Reulbach's equal as a badger fighter.

We are in receipt of a song written by that far-famed pugilist, Packey McFarland. The song is entitled, "I'd Like to Know." So would a whole lot of promoters, pugilists, managers and other insects.

Not that we are an expert on songology, but after reading Sir. McFarland's ballad we are convinced that he is a lightweight.

If Joe Jackson were to do all his batting at Shibe Park he would be chased to the minors or (worse yet) to St. Louis.

It is said that the said Joe Jackson has hit over .400 at the White Sox Park this season. Joe never would be mistaken for a White Sock—not even by a blind man.

There is charity even in baseball. For instance, Tom Lynch has handed a protested game to Joe Tinker.

Horace Fogel avers that he wants to put a baseball team in New York. This leads one to suspect that Horace has not heard of the adventures of Frank Chance.

Washington fans having presented Walter Johnson with a loving cup filled with money, it is said that Columbus fans will hand King Cole a shaving mug filled with lather.

It is said that fighters can't come back, but every day we note otherwise. For instance, there is Jack Heinen, the heavyweight. As he was leaving the place some philanthropist said: "Wait a minute, Jack!. We're going to buy another." He came back.

Sports and Such

NOT TRUE.

ONE day I wrote a story—a real pippin, on the square—
And clubs were formed to root for me; they boosted me for fair.
They bought up all the papers and wrote letters to my Boss;
They told him how they loved me and how much they'd feel my loss.
I had a fair young "sal'ry"—it was doubled twice and thrice;
They presented me with autos and tons of shirt-front ice;
I had eleven loving cups, a house and lot—a prize—
And I was chased with offers from a lot of vaudeville guys.
Then Senator O'Gorman, with another tony gent,
Insisted I should call at once upon the President.
I just was mitting Woodrow, when
I heard the bell-hop's call!
I'd dreamed, instead of batting dope, that I could bat a ball.

Cubs Send Overall To San Francisco

CHICAGO, Aug. 8.—Jeff Overall, Chicago Cubs' pitcher, was released to-day to the San Francisco club, of the Pacific Coast League. Announcement of the former star's release was made by President Murphy, of the Cubs, at noon.

GILBERT PRICE SUSPENDED AFTER GAME

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 8.—It is understood here that Manager Billy Smith of the Crackers and Gilbert Price, his star left-hand hurler, had a warm argument after yesterday's game, regarding the curve ball which Price pitched to Callahan in the tenth inning. Dave pasted the pill for a couple of bases and the winning run. Price had been sent in by Smith to take Dent's place in front of Callahan, who is a left-hand hitter, and Spratt, also batting from that side.

It is not plain just what the contention was, but it seems the manager told Price at the end of it that he was under suspension. Price went to the slab without much time to warm up, and that was the reason generally ascribed to his lack of effectiveness, but Smith seemed to take another view of it.

Smith had a short conference with Manager Schwartz concerning Jud Daley, but the boss of the Vols was not in the mood to shake up his team, and the result of the first game probably cemented that position.

Timid Kid Asked Griff for a Job

Engel Promises to Become a Star

WASHINGTON, Aug. 8.—During the early spring days of 1912 a young ball tosser applied for admittance to the ball park in Washington, where Clark Griffith, Walter Johnson, Herman Schaefer and other Nationals were romping about. He was too bashful to speak to anybody, just watched the athletes perform.

The next morning the same kid was on hand. He had read about the great Johnson, Walsh, Coombs, Bender, Wood and other pitchers. He was a pitcher, too. Rather, on the lots in Washington he curved 'em for the semi-pro teams, and as he usually won, he thought he'd like to become acquainted with the big leaguers.

The kid chatted with members of the Nationals, asked who was manager, and if he could talk to him. "Griffith is manager; he's standing over there," informed one athlete to the youngster. The kid walked over to Griffith.

"I'm a pitcher. I'd like to toss a few to your hitters," was his opening sentence to Griffith.

"Where do you hail from?" flashed back the Fox.

"Right here! Pitch on Saturdays and haven't lost a game for a year," returned the youngster.

"Go to the dressing room, put on a suit and let me take a look at you," answered Griffith.

THE youth appeared, went to the hill and pitched during the batting practice.

The players gave Griff the merry ha-ha. They wanted to know where the boss plucked the novice. When the ball came near the plate usually the sluggers lifted it over the heads of the outfielders.

All the time, though, Griff was watching his new entrant. He saw that he had a lot of speed and a fast breaking curve. But the kid was awkward and didn't have the proper delivery.

As the youngster improved with each day and began to show dazzing speed, he was introduced to his idol, Walter Johnson. Always chummy with aspiring kids, Johnson took an interest in the new acquisition. He showed him how to throw the fast one, the movement with the shoulder, how to curve the one down around the knees and the fast break high on the inside.

After a few lessons Griff and the players were surprised. In a few weeks the batters began popping the fast ones and hitting easy grounders on the curves.

* * *

WHEN it came time to make the first trip Griffith asked his strange tosser how he'd like to make a trip with the team.

"Do you think I can pitch?" was his answer.

"I don't know; I'll try you out," returned the boss.

The Nationals made several trips, and when a game was practically lost the kid got a chance to show himself. Sometimes he got away all right, sometimes he didn't.

The 1912 season was over. The kid had a bunch of experience. This past spring he was a regular member of the team, was along on the practice tour and watched every movement made by his favorite, Johnson.

Finally the kid got a chance to show himself at the start. He won, allowing only a few hits and a run or two. Then it was that Griffith realized he had a wonderful pitcher.

Recently Joe Engel beat the St. Louis Browns 2 to 1 with three scattered hits, and, according to press accounts of the game, showed almost as much stuff as Walter Johnson. Joe Engel was the timid kid who introduced himself to Griffith in the spring of 1912.

MAJOR CALLAWAY OFF TO SEE CLARK GRIFFITH NOW

Major Frank Callaway, president of the Atlanta ball club, is a lively little traveler these days.

Yesterday Major Callaway, who had just returned from Chattanooga, set out for Washington to confer with Clark Griffith concerning the terms of the agreement now existing between the Senators and the Crackers.

It is not understood that there is any disputed point to be settled, or that anything is to be done with reference to Clark and Long, but that with the claiming date close at hand Major Callaway wished to be in perfect accord with the Old Fox as to all the provisions of the treaty, so that the Atlanta club could deal intelligently with all its players.

ANOTHER PHENOM MAY GO UP TO MAJOR LEAGUES

CALGARY, ALBERTA, Aug. 8.—Jack Roche, Calgary catcher, seems sure to go to one of the big league teams. The White Sox, Cubs, Cardinals and Yankees are all bidding for the youngster. He is batting .354 and fielding .986. Comiskey made the first bid, but no price was set. Murphy has since requested the price, but has been asked to make an offer. Indianapolis, Louisville, Mobile and Los Angeles also are after him. The sale is likely to be made to-day.

BURWELL VICTOR OVER FOES OF TAX REFORM

Combine of 'Drys' With Anti-Revisionists Broken When House Votes to Reconsider Bills.

The combination formed by "dry" members of the House and the members who oppose all tax revision to defeat bills favored by Speaker W. H. Burwell and Governor Slaton was broken, for the present at least, Friday morning, when the House voted to reconsider its action Wednesday in defeating the constitutional amendments limiting the school levy to 2 1-2 mills and the pension levy to 1 1-2 mills.

The votes on the motions to reconsider, which were offered by Fullbright, of Burke, were 86 to 57 and 89 to 58, respectively.

The action of the House is regarded as a victory for Speaker Burwell, and indicates that some of his bills, which are administration measures, may be passed in spite of the opposition tax reform foes and "dry" members said to be moved by a desire for revenge because of failure to get the Webb bill out of committee.

Bills To Be Put on Passage.

With the action of the House reconsidered, the two bills—the school levy and the pension levy—undoubtedly will be brought up for passage at this session. It is understood they may be placed on the calendar for Saturday or Monday. The placing of the bill is solely in the hands of the Rules Committee, and while its members would not convict themselves, one member stated positively that the House would be given an opportunity to pass the bills during the present session.

Speaker Burwell has been hard at work trying to heal the wounds caused by his ruling Wednesday, when he declared the Kidd resolution, calling the Hixon-Searcy bill out of committee, out of order, and indications are he has succeeded.

The fight against Fullbright's motion to reconsider was feeble, though its voting strength was fairly large. Wallace Miller, of Bibb County, led the opposition to the motion. He declared the fixing of 2 1-2 mills as the limit of levy for school purposes would result in appropriating that amount each year, inasmuch as money is always appropriated up to the limit.

Mr. Kidd Is Turned Down.

Mr. Fullbright made but a short speech in favor of his motion, declaring the opponents of the bills had defeated them by spreading the erroneous impression that they would increase taxation.

Mr. Kidd, of Baker, tried to lead a fight against Speaker Burwell at the opening of the Friday morning session. His effort failed, because Speaker Burwell refused to recognize Mr. Kidd. When the report of the Rules Committee was submitted to the House, the Speaker asked the usual question: "Is there objection to the adoption of the report?"

"I object," shouted Mr. Kidd, in a tone that could have been heard a block.

"The Chair hears none," announced the Speaker.

Had Mr. Kidd been able to defeat the report of the Rules Committee, which fixes the work for the day, it was his evident intention to attempt to again introduce his resolution calling the Hixon-Searcy bill out of committee.

Queen Mary Stops Gambling at Court

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 8.—The gambling lid is on at Buckingham Palace. The quiet little games with which the servants were wont to while away their time and spare farthings are no more. As a result, grumblings are loud and frequpent. This is due to rules issued by Queen Mary, whose anti-gambling views are well known in court circles.

A strike of all the servants at the palace was narrowly averted a few days ago when the Queen decided to permit the servants to draw lots to see who shall accompany her on the royal yacht.

Town's Water So Bad Court Lifts Beer Lid

PITTSBURG, KANS., Aug. 8.—The water is so bad in Chapman, a mining camp near here, that beer is used in its place, and the people are so generous they give the substitute away.

A Girard man accused of selling "spiked" cider was freed on the theory that one man's word is as good as another's. These incidents were brought out in Crawford County courts.

SOFIA, Aug. 8.—In a communication issued to-day by the Bulgarian Government it was announced that "Bulgaria will begin demobilization of her army as soon as a peace treaty is signed, upon the understanding that the powers favor the Enos-Midia line as the southern Bulgarian boundary." This would give Adrianople to Bulgaria.

State Wins Point in Diggs Slavery Case

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 8.—The fourth day of the trial of Maury I. Diggs, former State Architect charged with white slavery, began to-day with the defense laboring under a decided handicap. Judge Van Fleet ruled that the characters and reputations of the two girls would have no bearing on the case.

3,000 EXPECTED AT GROCERS' OUTING

Elaborate Program of Recreation to Make Warm Springs Picnic Greatest Ever Held.

Plans are being made for the annual excursion to Warm Springs, Ga., Wednesday, August 13, of the Retail Grocers and Marketmen's Association. It is expected the outing will be the greatest the organization has ever held. Francis J. Kamper, chairman of the committee on arrangements, has issued an announcement of the picnic.

Nothing has been left undone by the committee. They expect more than 3,000 persons to attend the outing, and have made arrangements to care for all. Many family picnics have been arranged. There will be bathing, bowling, dancing and a baseball game between the associated grocers and the clothiers' league.

Through the efforts of Mr. Kamper and his committee, special arrangements have been made for women and children. The management of the Warm Springs Hotel has offered the use of the hotel to the crowds, and those who do not care for the more strenuous pastimes of baseball, bowling and bathing, can spend the day on the wide verandas and shady walks of the hotel and grounds.

Special trains to carry the crowds will leave Union Station, on the A., B. and A. Railroad for Warm Springs Wednesday morning at 7 and 7:15 o'clock. A round trip fare of $1 for adults and 50 cents for children will be charged.

Pigs Gorge Candy As Children Envy

CINCINNATI, Aug. 8.—The Refuge Home Farm, a municipal charity for homeless children, has a fine lot of thoroughbred pigs, which are to be gorged daily with chocolates and other choice confectionery, as a result of recent raids by the food inspection division of the Health Department.

To-day the refuge farm wagon carted to the farm for their delectation, nearly 1,500 pounds of milk chocolates, 3,000 pounds of peanuts, 850 pounds of shelled cocoanuts, 15 barrels of sugar and about 20 barrels of other odds and ends, including flavoring extracts used in making candy. These represented some of the condemnations made at several candy factories last week.

The Kind You Have Always Bought.

THIS is the caution applied to the public announcement of Castoria that has been manufactured under the supervision of Chas. H. Fletcher for over 30 years—the genuine Castoria. We respectfully call the attention of fathers and mothers when purchasing Castoria to see that the wrapper bears his signature in black. When the wrapper is removed the same signature appears on both sides of the bottle in red. Parents who have used Castoria for their little ones in the past years need no warning against counterfeits and imitations, but our present duty is to call the attention of the younger generation to the great danger of introducing into their families spurious medicines.

It is to be regretted that there are people who are now engaged in the nefarious business of putting up and selling all sorts of substitutes, or what should more properly be termed conterfeits, for medicinal preparations not only for adults, but worse yet, for children's medicines. It therefore devolves on the mother to scrutinize closely what she gives her child. Adults can do that for themselves but the child has to rely on the mother's watchfulness.

Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Letters from Prominent Druggists addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Central Drug Co., of Detroit, Mich., says: "We consider your Castoria in a class distinct from patent medicines and commend it."

Christy Drug Stores, of Pittsburg, Pa., say: "We have sold your Castoria for so many years with such satisfactory results that we cannot refrain from saying a good word for it when we get a chance."

Jacob Bros., of Philadelphia, Pa., say: "We take pleasure in recommending Fletcher's Castoria as one of the oldest and best of the preparations of the kind upon the market."

Hess & McCann, of Kansas City, Mo., say: "Your Castoria always gives satisfaction. We have no substitute for it and only sell 'The Kind You Have Always Bought,' the original."

The Voegeli Bros., of Minneapolis, Minn., say: "We wish to say that we have at all times a large demand for Fletcher's Castoria at all of our three stores and that it gives universal satisfaction to our trade."

Polk Miller Drug Co., of Richmond, Va., says: "Your Castoria is one of the most satisfactory preparations we have ever handled. It seems to satisfy completely the public demand for such an article and is steadily creating a growing sale by its merit."

P. A. Capdau, of New Orleans, La., says: "We handle every good home remedy demanded by the public and while our shelves are thoroughly equipped with the best of drugs and proprietary articles, there are few if any which have the unceasing sale that your Castoria has."

M. C. Dow, of Cincinnati, Ohio, says: "When people in increasing numbers purchase a remedy and continue buying it for years; when it passes the fad or experimental stage and becomes a household necessity, then it can be said its worth has been firmly established. We can and do gladly offer this kind of commendation to Fletcher's Castoria."

FIGHT BITTER ON COMPULSORY EDUCATION

Senate Takes No Action on a Motion to Table Sweat's School Measure.

With the motion before it to table Senator Sweat's compulsory education bill, which precipitated a bitter fight led by Senators McNeill and Allen, the Senate adjourned Friday afternoon shortly before 1 o'clock without taking any action on the bill.

Both Senators McNeill and Allen made a vigorous attack on the bill, the former charging that its only effect would be to let down the flood gates for the entrance of negro children into the public schools. Senator Sweat, the author of the bill, denied this, whereupon Senator Allen charged that the bill was illegally constituted in that case, as it discriminated between white and black, which is contrary to the laws of the State. The consideration of the bill will be continued Friday afternoon.

The Senate Friday morning passed unanimously the new charter for Atlanta, with amendments providing for the submission of the initiative, referendum and recall clause and the proposed limitation of the Recorder's power to the people before enaction into law.

Abolishes Clerk's Office.

The new charter as amended provides for the abolition of the present office of chief clerk of the city tax department and substitutes therefor a board of tax assessors and receivers, who shall nominate a chief clerk, subject to the confirmation first by the tax committee of the General Counncil and ultimately by the General Council. This provision will not be submitted to the vote of the people. The bill provides further for the initiative and referendum and the recall of all heads of departments, including the Mayor and members of the Council, upon the petition of a certain percentage of registered voters, and for the proper inspection of all elevators and boilers within the city limits.

The new charter, as passed by the Senate, will be sent back to the House for its approval preparatory to final submission to the Governor.

The Senate also passed Mr. McGregor's bill providing for a hearing by the Governor before trustees of public institutions shall be dismissed. According to the provisions of the bill such dismissal can be made only upon the recommendation of a majority of the members of the board of trustees of the institution affected.

New Bills in Senate.

Among the new bills introduced in the Senate Friday morning was a resolution by Senators Allen and McGregor, requesting the State Board of Education to investigate the advisability of introducing in the schools of the State "Webster's Blue Back Speller," which was used in the common schools a half century ago and "is still better than those used today," according to Major McGregor.

Senator Oliff, of the Fourth, also introduced a resolution requesting the United States Government to make an appropriation to preserve Fort Frederick, on St. Simons Island, a relic of the days of General Oglethorpe, first Governor of Georgia.

The Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments, headed by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, reported favorably Friday the two constitutional amendment taxing measures which were introduced at the instance of Governor Slaton. The bill creating a commission to investigate the release of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, which was defeated Thursday, was also reported on favorably following recommitment.

In addition to the general bills, the Senate passed the House bill giving the secret ballot to the city of Augusta.

Orient Road Shows $160,000 in Earnings

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Bondholders and noteholders of the Kansas City and Orient Railway have received a circular from the reorganization committee stating that the plan which the committee had hoped to issue earlier in the year had to be amended owing to the financial situation abroad and in America.

The committee reports that earnings of the line in the United States from June 30, 1912, to June 30, 1913, will approximate $160,000. The committee feels justified in adopting a policy of building into Kansas City as soon as possible.

COTTON GOSSIP

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma clear and hot."

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows part cloudy over eastern half of belt and south Texas; generaly fair elsewhere; general showers in eastern half of belt; none in western half. Indications are still for some rain coming in the west over Sunday.

Rainfall The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "After making full allowance for the fact that cotton is a dry weather plant and thrives on sunshine, the talent is forced to admit that drouth in parts of Oklahoma and Texas, accompanied by such high temperatures as those of yesterday, is injuring the crop every day. However, most traders on the short side have learned not to accept damage reports at face value, and when, in the face of a fair forecast for the west, the barometer lines revealed low pressure of the Gulf of Mexico, the talent promptly exploited storm formation as a promise of rain and weather students on the floor helped by asserting that extremely hot weather in Oklahoma is simply a forerunner of rain and cooler temperatures. Thus the market worked down after the bulge of Wednesday.

"Meanwhile, Manchester is not sending any encouraging reports, though Liverpool managed to sell 10,000 bales on the spot yesterday. At this time any lack of evidence of trade activity is apt to tell on the raw cotton market, because just now slack demand for the actual makes a poor showing when contrasted with the keen demand in evidence during the past two years.

"The market is very dull and very narrow, speculation has been reduced to a minimum and neither talent nor trade is in a humor to display enterprise. Increasing spot sales at Galveston and Houston indicate that the new crop market is opening up."

The market was sold off after the opening on unofficial reports of rain at Galveston. The early weather map shows no rain and weather experts could not see any in sight, which resulted in an active wave of buying at the outset.

* * *

On the call, Flinn and Gifford bought August. Black, Seidenberg, Hentz and Harden sold. Wilson, Mitchell, Gifford, Flinn and Black bought October. McElroy, Bashford and Hentz sold. Flinn, Wiggin, Watkins, Ralt and Gifford bought December. Rothschild, Rosenberg, Black and Orvis sold. Hicks bought January. Bashford, Hentz and Schley sold.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 8.—The hot and dry weather which prevailed over a large part of the country this week, while injuring the growing crops, was favorable for harvesting, storage and marketing of winter wheat, but delayed plowing of land for seeding of wheat in the fall. However, there is no apprehension felt, as there still is ample time for this work with favorable weather conditions. That there is more attention being given to the preparations of the soil and selection of seed is indicated by the larger yields and better quality of the winter wheat. Threshings continue to show larger yields than has been expected and the quality of the grain is of the best.

There is still a steady movement of wheat to market, as the yield is so much larger than has been estimated and that frost farmers are willing to part with at least a portion of their crop.

ABSENCE OF RAINS SENDS COTTON UP

Heavy Buying Based on Deterioration Reports From West—Offerings Extremely Light.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—Uneasiness was again expressed to-day over weather conditions in Texas, and when the cotton market opened, prices were at a net advance of 5 to 11 points from Thursday's final. New crops were the strongest, August showing an advance of 15 points immediately after the opening. The opening quotation was 11.75 and the next figure was 11.85.

There was no rain shown on the map, as had been generally expected and local weather experts failed to see any in sight just at present and the market was bought freely from strong sources. Shorts were also good buyers, but on the rally there seemed to be some cotton for sale as sentiment continues very bearish. Later the market eased off sharply on reports of rain at Galveston and El Paso and less support was in evidence.

Because the detailed weather map failed to show any rains over the western belt, and private reports of deteriorations in Arkansas and Oklahoma caused by the high temperatures and dry weather, the market developed a steady tone during the afternoon session, resulting in a rapid advance in prices from the early low point. Some of the large spot interests continue to buy on all reactions, which is encouraging to the believers in higher prices.

The bulls contend if rain does not come in the West within the next week that very serious damage will result and the feeling is now becoming more bullish. The market is very easily influenced on any weather news and prices will be governed accordingly.

At the close the market was tseady with July at unchanged quotation and other positions at a net advance of 8 to 11 points from the final quotations of Thursday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: August, 11.67; October, 11.10; December, 11.05; January, 10.96; March, 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August, 11.41; October, 11.11; December, 11.10; January, 11.11; March, 11.19.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 8.—The map shows cloudy weather prevailing over the eastern half of the belt and south Texas; generally fair elsewhere. Reports were quite general east of the River, but none are shown west. Indications are for increasing cloudiness with prospects for precipitation to come on the eastern States over Sunday. Cloudy and showery weather is indicated for the central and eastern States.

Liverpool was poor at first but rallied on the absence of rain in the West. Spot prices 6 points lower; sales 8,000 bales. First traders here were at an advance of about 6 points on nervous covering by shorts on the Government forecast of fair weather to-day and tomorrow in Oklahoma and Texas, but prices soon dropped to last night's closing figures when Galveston reported heavy rain. New York says the declining tendency is due more to the difference of speculation to furnish support than to weather prospects.

Trading is very quiet, waiting for weather developments in the western States over Sunday.

Spot people report the inquiry for early new shipments is still disappointingly slow

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 8.—Continued high temperatures in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas are giving rise to numerous complaints of crop deterioration, some of which are well founded, as numerous sections of this territory have been without rain for weeks. The market does not advance materially because of brilliant reports from the eastern belt, but trade is beginning to note more attentively the complaints and the tone is steady.

Marked Improvement Noted in Wool Trade

BOSTON, Aug. 8.—More inquiry has developed in the wool market during the past week, probably stimulated by the increased demand for lightweight goods, following the recent openings by leading mills. Total sales are estimated at fully 2,000,000 pounds, the business being distributed among the leading houses and covering most of the desirable grades. Primary markets are now well cleaned up, except in Ohio, but even there very little is doing and buyers are coming home. Prices here are unchanged.

Liquidation of holdings wherever a profit is shown is the policy in favor and some transfers, it is said, have been made at a very small margin.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

Whisky Is a Good Driver.

It Drives Away Friends, Happiness, and From the Mind Drives Confidence and Courage.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Send the picture on this page to some man who needs it.

Many men need it, unfortunately.

As you see this man at the table and the two spirits that leave him, you realize that man is not single, but made up of many elements.

These are firmly compacted in the self-controlled man; they work together to make him what he should be.

But whisky, the drug and poison, has the subtle power to dissolve character and take away from the man who scarcely knows it the best elements in his nature.

Whisky beggars a man! It finds him full of hope and courage and confidence in himself.

It finds him with friends, receiving and giving affection.

And one by one it takes these things from him.

The friends are taken and affection is taken. His strength, his prospects go, little by little, as the whisky fills his tissues, conquers his nerves and rules in the foolish brain which often says so pitifully, "If I had just one more drink, I'd be all right."

Just one more drink, and then another, and dozens and hundreds following.

And at last the unhappy man on whom whisky has fastened its clutch sits like the man in this picture. Of all men he alone does not see his degradation, the brutal defacement of what was once a man.

Have you seen a buzzard, a vulture or a crow picking the skeleton of a horse?

Whisky does its work as vilely and as thoroughly as the meanest buzzard.

Bit by bit it picks from the man all he has that is worth while.

Saddest of all is the scene in this picture, when the two spirits that give man his chief hope leave him—when COURAGE AND SELF-RESPECT PASS OUT OF THE DOOR LEAVING THIS POOR WRECK ALONE AT THE TABLE.

Is it even then too late, and is the case hopeless?

No, fortunately, it is never too late, and no man's case is hopeless.

HE CAN, IF HE WILL, RISE UP AND FOLLOW OUT OF THAT DOOR THE SPIRIT THAT HAS LEFT HIM AND OVERTAKE IT AND MAKE IT HIS OWN.

Some of the world's best work has been done and is done now by those that were once robbed by alcohol of all save the one spark that brings man back to his place WHEN HE WILL.

Many a man sits disconsolate, gazing into space, wondering what is to become of him, bitterly repentant, anxious for those that suffer.

And his hope and courage and confidence disappear in the distance.

Help him if you can. Lift him to his feet, start him in the right road.

He may overtake them, HE CAN IF HE WILL.

Portugal Will Never See King Manuel on the Throne---With Gaby Deslys on the Throne Steps.

The Trouble With Portugal Is Ignorance of the People, INABILITY TO READ, but the Republic Will Live.

(Copyright, 1913.)

News from Portugal, sent out by those that hate republican government and that like ignorance, is to the effect that the Republic of Portugal is in danger.

These reports need not seriously worry those that believe in republican government.

For a good many years there have been periodic reports of the same kind coming from France.

The world has been asked to believe that a French pretender, with a forehead one inch and a half high and the intelligence of a canary bird, would succeed in putting up a throne and ruling the French people.

Everybody knows that that is a pitiful joke.

The French pretenders have about as much chance of ruling in France as they have of ruling in Alaska.

The news from Portugal is disturbing only because of the fact that the system of tyranny, brutality and superstition that ruled there for so long, PURPOSELY KEPT THE PEOPLE IN IGNORANCE AND UNABLE TO READ.

Those that would mislead the people, those that hate the republic and hate government by the people, are helped by the fact that the poor peasants in the country, and the clerks and the workers in the cities and towns, are, as a rule, illiterate, unable to read or to sign their own names.

There is no real danger, however, for the Republic of Portugal. There may be a revolution again, but it will end IN ANOTHER REPUBLIC.

The interesting little Manuel will continue sitting at a little tin table on the French boulevard; he will continue to be a moving picture king—not a real one.

Never again will Portugal see him sitting on the throne, spending the money of a people overtaxed and kept ignorant.

If the present rulers of Portugal are replaced by others, they will be no men of the King Manuel type, but men of greater force than the present rulers, able to continue Portugal as a republic; able to carry on the real business of a republic—THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, THE ABOLITION OF IGNORANCE AND THE SUPERSTITION AND BRUTALITY THAT GO WITH IGNORANCE.

Do You Know Any Man Ruined by Whisky?

Show him this picture and the two spirits, SELF-RESPECT and COURAGE, walking away from this unhappy victim of his own weakness. This picture may send some drunkard hurrying out of the door to catch up with the friends that have been driven from him. (See Editorial.)

The Trouble with the World Is There Are So Many Teaching the Truth, So Few Living It---Let Your Life Illustrate Your Theories.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ARE you a student of the power of mind over matter? Are you talking to every one you meet about "Universal Life Principle" and "Vibration" and "Mental and Spiritual Science" and all the other expressions so in vogue to-day among advanced thinkers?

See to It That Your Life Illustrates Your Theories.

If you are, see to it that your life illustrates your theories. Do not let it all end in talk.

I have known a self-supporting woman to use all her income in literature and lectures and lessons on these subjects: "How to Control Destiny," "How to Grow Success," "How to Attain Self-Mastery" and "How to Be Well and Prosperous." Yet she was always ailing. She had not one penny saved, nor respectable clothing in her wardrobe; she slighted her work and forgot her duties and was altogether an unsatisfactory human being.

At almost any gathering of people identified with or interested in Mental, or Christian Science, or New Thought, or any kindred subject, a large majority of the unkempt and nervous and erratic beings are to be encountered. This is true, we know, of all new theories and creeds, for the disappointed and dissatisfied souls of earth naturally turn to new avenues of thought, hoping to find peace. But when we find these unfortunate types representing a religion or a theory and talking its precepts to every passerby, it is a matter of more than temporary regret.

Until you can indicate by your life, your face, your manner and your work that you have found a solution for the problem of existence and a panacea for human ills, do not talk about it. Wait in the silence and grow.

It is a simpler matter to be filled with a conviction than it is to prove that conviction to the world.

But while there are thousands of people to-day talking and writing the philosophy not ten in any thousand are living what they talk. A woman who was all nerves and hysteria and who kept herself and every one about her in confusion and excitement over her troubles and ailments was urged to try Spiritual Science.

"Why, I teach it," she said. "I do not need any one to help me in that way, as I have had a class of young women to whom I have been revealing the truth for some time."

That is the great trouble with the world to-day.

We have so many people teaching and so few living the truth. Because you have gained a little light and begin to understand the philosophy of life do not set yourself up for a teacher or an exhorter until you have proven by your life that what you teach and preach is practicable.

Wait Until You Succeed Before Preaching Success.

Wait until you can keep yourself in health before you begin healing others.

Wait until you are successful in your undertakings before you tell others the way to win success.

Wait until your face expresses peace and calm and happiness before you preach the power of your philosophy to produce these results.

Live first—talk afterward.

DOUBT

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THERE is a devil and his name is Doubt;
The country and the city know him well.
He makes each human mind his citadel
And many an honest aim he puts to rout.
He argues well about it and about—
He kills more love than any tongue can tell;
He leads obedient mortals to his hell
And mocks them when they seek a pathway out.

You do not know him, yet you doubt your friend;
You sneer at him, but doubt a mother's love.
He camps upon your trail until the end,
As smooth as silk, as fluttering as a dove
In every brain he builds his little fires—
He is the trustiest devil Satan hires.

High Cost of Living and Wasted Crops.

Lack of Transportation and the Clutch of the Middleman, He Declares, Has Left Thousands of Carloads of Garden Produce Rotting on the Ground in Texas This Season.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

DOWN in the beautiful and peaceful Pecos Valley in Texas some months ago I saw tons of luscious strawberries rotting in the field because the markets of the North were overstocked and the berries were not worth the freight, much less the cost of picking.

Southwestern Texas is the country that General Sherman had in mind when he made a certain sarcastic remark that has gone clattering down the centuries like a tin kettle to a dog's tail.

The application, however, of water and intelligent labor to the arid land of Texas has worked such miracles that William Tecumseh's far-flung phrase puts that gentleman's perspicacity in jeopardy.

On a single acre of irrigated land I have seen produced ten tons of onions, cabbages in proportion and spinach enough to fill a silo.

The sunshine, the fertility of the soil and water produce crops which, if the truth were told about them, would qualify the narrator for the Ananias Club in any city of the North, and quickly.

Carloads Rot.

The question, however, is to get these fruits and vegetables on the tables of the people who need them most. Lack of transportation and the clutch of the middleman has left thousands of carloads of garden produce rotting on the ground in Texas this past season.

Here is a question so big and important that it deserves the attention of the most able men in the United States to-day.

It is a somewhat curious fact that our lawmaking is largely the work of amateurs.

The men we send to Washington are not the men who have had experience in the matter of taking care of great and important propositions.

They are for the most part men who have wormed themselves into office.

The business of government falls into the hands of the inexperienced and the unfit.

This thing of government by the selfish, the transient and the irresponsible is the most telling criticism to be made of our so-called Democracy.

There should be a method devised by the Government whereby the services of highly trained men can be secured and utilized. And one of the crying needs of the trained man now is in this matter of getting the desirable food products of the South and West into the hands of the people in the cities of the East who need them most.

The Problem.

With peaches rotting in the orchards in the Yakima Valley, millions of dollars' worth of apples ungathered in Washington—hundreds of carloads of onions, cabbages, spinach, berries in Texas, and thousands of people in Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia and New York going without fresh vegetables and without fresh fruit—this is the condition that challenges our economic skill.

The solution of the high cost of living lies in getting vegetables and fruit direct from farm to family with least possible expense.

And so here comes an invention successfully utilized and worked out whereby fruits and vegetables can be dehydrated.

Most fruit and vegetables contain from 80 to 92 per cent of water. To eliminate this water so the vegetables and fruits can be kept an indefinite length of time is a most desirable evolution to bring about.

Green peas, rhubarb, spinach, raspberries, blackberries, strawberries should be on Christmas tables fresh in all of the cities of the North, and this at a very reasonable price.

Science to Help.

As it is things have to be shipped in season, in refrigerator cars, rushed through and sold quickly. Otherwise they deteriorate and perish.

The expense of transportation of perishable goods is very much greater than that where the article is dehydrated and prepared so it will keep indefinitely.

By evaporating the water in his products the farmer can find a ready market for a vast quantity of fruits and vegetables which are now practically worthless.

The market where the thing has to be sold quickly places the shipper at a great disadvantage and gives the middleman his chance.

I expect to see the day when the United States Government will co-operate with big business to the end that the vast crops of the irrigated lands of the West and South shall be harvested and marketed to the people who need them most, and this at a minimum of expense.

Washington a Mason

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

IT WAS one hundred and sixty years ago that George Washington was given the well-earned right to look upon the "hieroglyphic light which none but craftsmen ever saw."

The venerable and venerated records of Fredericksburg Lodge show that Washington was initiated on November 4, 1752, passed fellowcraft March 3, 1753, and was raised to the sublime degree of Master Mason August 4, 1753.

Strange to say, it appears to be a fact that the "Father of His Country" was initiated before he had reached the required age of 21 years. Daniel Campbell, Master of the lodge, granted the special dispensation which enabled the candidate to begin his eastward journey while still a minor.

Grand Master French, of the District of Columbia, declared in an address delivered in 1851 that no one stopped to inquire about Washington's age when his petition was presented; that the majestic proportions of the candidate, together with his well-known character and ability, made upon all concerned the impression that might have been made by a thoroughly matured man.

It appears, however, that the dispensation was based upon the fact that the candidate's duties demanded it. So busy a man was to be received when it was convenient for him.

Washington remained a member of the Fredericksburg Lodge to the day of his death. Among the many other distinguished men whose names appear upon the rolls of the lodge are George Weedon, Washington's adjutant-general; General Hugh Mercer, who fell at the battle of Princeton; Jacob VonBraam, Washington's instructor in sword practice, and Fielding Lewis, Washington's brother-in-law.

The Bible that was used at the time Washington was made a Mason is still in possession of the old Virginia lodge, and is guarded with unremitting care and affection. It is said to be 226 years old, and is still in an excellent state of preservation.

In the evil days of the war between the States the old town of Fredericksburg lay between the opposing lines of Lee and Burnside, and while the bloody struggle was on thousands on both sides thought of the little temple and altar and Bible that were so lovingly associated in their recollection with the man who made the nation whose very existence was then trembling in the balance.
