COUNSEL FOR STATE AND DEFENSE IN HOT ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE ROAN

Judge L. S. Roan.

GOV. SULZER IMPEACHED 79 TO 45

New York Assembly Votes After All-Night Session to Try Executive as Grafter.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one

TAX REFORM BILL READY TO SIGN

House Foes of Measure Fight for Reconsideration—Tie Vote Is Broken by Speaker.

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed

Kneel in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

Turks Threaten New War on Bulgarians

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13.—The Turkish Porte to-day threatened to declare war against Bulgaria unless Bulgarian soldiers ceased their slaughter of defenseless Turkish peasants.

According to reports sent in from Turkish military officers in Adrianopl, many Mussulman men and women are being killed daily in Thrace.

TRAGEDY RE-ENACTED TO PROVE STORY OF CONLEY IMPOSSIBLE

Spectacular evidence was to be introduced in behalf of Leo M. Frank, accused of the murder of Mary Phagan, Wednesday when Dr. William Owens, well-known Atlanta practitioner, entered court to testify that in the presence of hree men he had had re-enacted the disposition of the girl's body as described by Jim Conley, and that it could not possibly have been done in the time specified by the negro.

The time element in the story has always been considered the most vulnerable point by the defense, but the fact that an actual test had been made to prove Conley's story an impossibility had been kept a well guarded secret.

Dr. Owens was one of the first witnesses called Wednesday and the htree men who helped him re-enact the tragdy wre to follow him.

A man named Brent took the parf of Conley in the strange rehearsal and William A. Fleming took the part Conley said Frank enacted. Dr. Owens and a man named Wilson acted as timekeepers.

It took them eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this the defense will explain, must be added the tim ethe negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

State to Call More Witnesses.

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpoenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by Solicitor Dorsey. Frank Hooper. Reuben Arnold. Luther Z. Rosser.

FIGHT TO RECOVER ZACHRY CHILDREN

Case Will Be Taken to Richmond Superior Court—Divorce Proceedings Do Not Interfere.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 13.—Attorney C. E. Dunbar announces that he will bring action before Judge Henry C. Hammond, of the Richmond Superior Court, for the recovery of the Zachry children.

By a decision of the Supreme Court yesterday Judge Hammond must hear the evidence in the case. The entire matter is, therefore, reopened, and Dunbar believes that he will recover the children on his next attempt.

Ordinary Walton heard the case at first, and he decided that Zachry should have the custody of the children. Subsequently divorce proceedings were brought by Dunbar for Mrs. Zachry, and he asked Judge Hammond to hear the case and decide whether the father or the mother should have the custody of the children.

Judge Hammond declined on the ground that Ordinary Walton had already decided the matter. Dunbar reminded him that at the time the matter was heard before Walton divorce proceedings had not been instituted.

Hammond said it made no difference and that he had no right to hear it. The Supreme Court has ruled that he had and has the right.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louisans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temporarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

The forts at Woo Sung were captured by the Federals to-day and nearly all the rebel defenders were killed.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacremento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand today.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified

Mountaineer Frozen Dangling Over Cliff

STATE WILL CALL MORE WITNESSES IN REBUTTAL; DEFENSE BUILDS UP ALIBI

the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Defense Holds Time Was Insufficient.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found by the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there was yet the note to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutesa fter Frank arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She wore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Dalton's Chaingang Record Exposed.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblyemen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

Snores Punctuate Oratory.

The debate which led up to the vote was marked by a dramatic feature, but even fiery oratory could not keep awake the spectators who filled the galleries. The most interested were the women, who remained awake until the final roll call. A number of the men slept in their chairs and a buzz of snores proclaimed the superiority of slumber over forensic.

Majority Leader Levy made the final address before the vote was taken and he blended eloquence with facts in a convincing manner. Mr. Levy read a great part of the testimony taken by the Frawley committee before he declared in solemn tones that, in his mind, William Sulzer should be impeached in the name of the commonwealth and common honor."

Mr. Levy denied that the impeachment proceedings were being rushed by Tammany leaders, declaring that under the Constitution the impeachment court can not sit until 30 days have elapsed.

Assembly Schah, a Progressive who has been supporting the Governor's direct primary bill, supported Mr. Sulzer in a speech.

No Work for Police Guard.

It was expected that there would be a demonstration and police were on hand to quell disorder, but nothing of an exciting nature occurred.

Eugene Lamb Richards, counsel for the Frawley committee, will probably appear against Mr. Sulzer in court owing to his familiarity with the case.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Tammany's Hand Is Seen.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that if was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

No arguments sufficiently strong enough to sustain the charge of the Frawley committee were made on the floor, they declare that Governor Sulzer will fight back through the medium of exposures of prominent Tammany legislators who so far have been successful in the first round to accomplish his downfall, is also strongly hinted at.

The impeached Governor will have plenty of time to dig up damaging evidence, they declare, and will do his utmost to bring calumny home to those whom he has heretofore more than hinted were grafters, who must be driven out of the party.

More Scandal is Promised.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home ot Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democratsnow find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attehpts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued dlecrations that he "was walking the street straight." All sorts of "I told you so's" were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democvratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor wiuld be the victim. This material maybe brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found by Brown's body was a note stating htat he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Pays Annual Visit To Tomb of Grant

COLUMBUS, Aug. 13.—Friends in Columbus have received messages from Dr. E. B. M. Browne, now of New York, but formerly pastor of Temple B'Nai Israel in this city, that he has just paid his annual visit to the tomb of General U. S. Grant, it being the twenty-seventh anniversary of the burial of the former President.

Dr. Browne is the sole survivor of the pallbearers, who officiated at the funeral of General Grant. His daughter, Mrs. Dave Goldberg, now resides here.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Auditorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

Wife of Secretary Is Champion Whistler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — Mrs. Josephus Daniels, the talented wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is to-day considered the champion whistler of the Cabinet circle. Mrs. Daniels learned this unusual accomplishment from her sons.

When she drives down to coax the Secretary from his desk these Mexican days she summons him by giving a sweet, high whistle in a code both understand.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

200 Want Ad Finances Swindled, Is Charge

PRINCETON, IND., Aug. 13.—More than 200 men are said to have been victims of the alleged marriage frauds worked by Miss Ora Mabel Farris, 35 years old, assisted by her father and mother. The three were held to-day, charged with using the mails to defraud.

Using the name of Susie Meyers, the postal authorities charge Miss Farris would advertise for a husband in widely scattered newspapers, invite correspondence, become engaged and then ask for money to come to her fiance.

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

MAY RECONSIDER TAX REVISION MEASURE

Senate Bill for Equalization Is Passed Following Long and Bitter Fight.

during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 88. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Henderson Rushes to Capitol.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world, and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Soldiers Shoot Wild; Blacks Fear Bullets

AUGUSTA, GA., Aug. 13.—The new rifle range of the local military companies will have to be abandoned unless better precautions are taken to protect human lives. An injunction is threatened by W. H. Rennison and other property owners in the vicinity because the soldiers are said to be shooting recklessly. Negroes in the neighborhood have stopped work on the farms for fear of being killed.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

JUSTICE IS AIM OF BOTH SIDES IN TRIAL OF FRANK; SQUARE DEAL IS CERTAIN

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will be prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Many Jump at Conclusions.

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Braintree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "He jests at scars who never felt a wound," she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me over to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend over thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back Leefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much, & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice.

What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was vary sweet of her. You see Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order instead of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like. Pa sed the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two yung matrons & you cuddent malk me beleeve thare was a rong thing about wether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & seven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Missus Mace.

I know it, sed Pa, I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Civilized people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

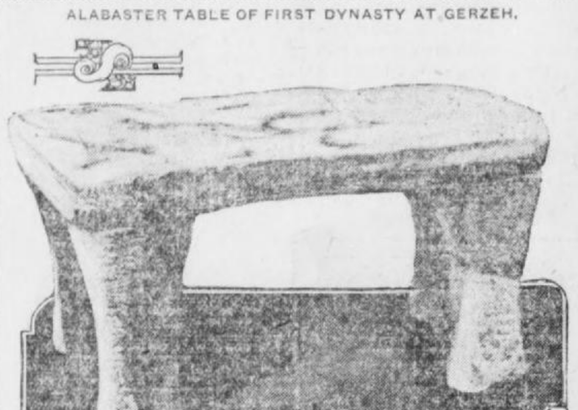

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

"Hallo!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him—very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him, it will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely owled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.

Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar, which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "curiy for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly. "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card. "We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren, for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her penciled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead,
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four tooth-brushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made; have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business' I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

Send 31 one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only on a free copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, 1008 pages, clothbound

The Call of the Cool North Woods

¶ Have you ever felt the thrill of an out-of-doors vacation—a few weeks of real life by the side of some picturesque lake—away from everything that savors of your daily toil?

¶ From the Great North Woods of Wisconsin and Northern Michigan Wild Nature—innumerable beautiful lakes and streams—the breath of the pine—the gamy bass—the vicious muskellunge—the agile trout and the toothsome pike—send out a call that "the man who knows" finds hard to resist.

¶ Each summer he returns to the scene of his last year's sport; each summer the appeal reaches many more who have not known the charms of this region.

¶ Why don't you arrange to go? Take a holiday in this wonderful country, where a thousand sparkling lakes teeming with gamy fish await you.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back, we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hardgrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

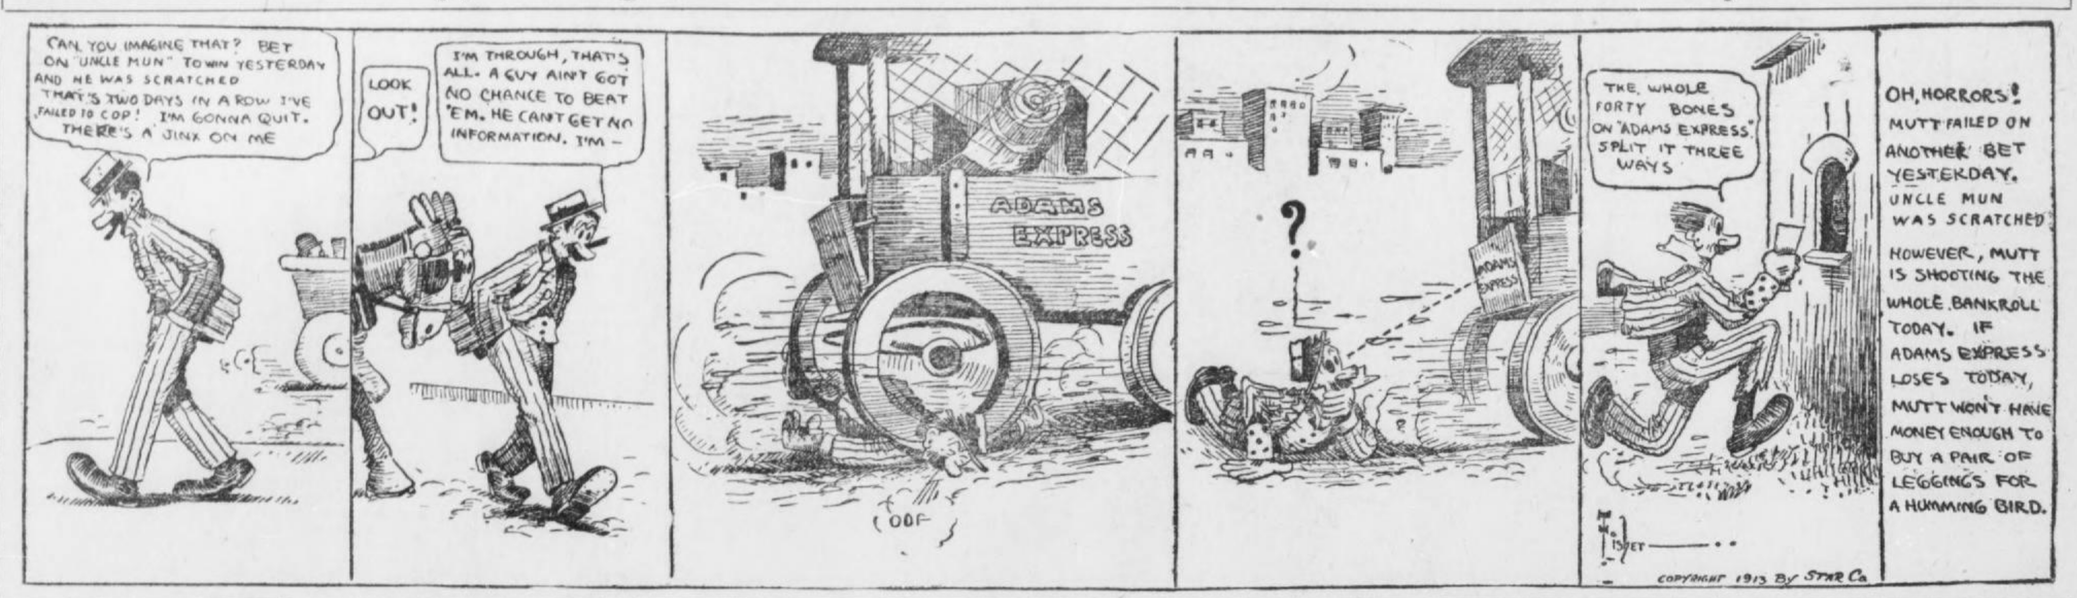

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a double-header against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V. The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles in heat and dust, but the alienists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knock-out—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONSISTENCY in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

* * *

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georger Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone. The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gitting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

REVENGE.

(A Baseball Tragedy in Three Acts.)

ACT I.

Ike Swatt, the mighty baseball star,
was smitten with a dame
Who owned a flock of lucre and an old and honored name,
But when he offered her his hand
she coldly spurned the same.

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they needed one tie.
Our Hero ambled to the plate and
saw three strikes go by.
The game was lost while she looked on with murder in her eye.

ACT III.

For she had bet her fortune on the
prowess of his bat,
And when he took the final strike it
left the poor girl flat.
"Revenge!" she cried, in accents
wild. "I'll marry him for that!"

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated h isiegs or his thirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never won a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fistiana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Boyo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Welgast and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbralth Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, Gus' bout being a ten-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the seventy-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated, Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times but the locals clearly had the class.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More
What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozies while the Barons were getting theirs.

"Goozle—Early English for weasand."

"Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to ding right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they often have pitched with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error, and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Ronn's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Plans for Erection of Sixteen-Story Bldg. At Whitehall and Ala.

Dr. E. L. Connally Consults Architects—United Cigar Stores May Take Brown & Allen Corner.

Announcement was made Tuesday of plans for a sixteen-story office building on the Brown & Allen site, southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets, a full account of which appears elsewhere. Dr. E. L. Connally owns the present building and will erect the new one.

This action will bring about some interesting changes, and may mean that Brown & Allen will move across the street to the place now occupied by Thomas H. Pitts, the tobacconist, and that the United Cigar Stores Company will be located where Brown & Allen now are.

The corner on which the building will stand is one of the busiest in Atlanta and brings a handsome rental.

List of 24 Exhibitors.

Success of the plan to exhibit Atlanta-made goods on the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building seems to be assured. Already 24 merchants and manufacturers have signed up for space. They are the Whittier Mills Company, Marcus-Loeb & Co., Nunnally & McCrea, Southern Engraving Company, Frederick Disinfectant Company, J. K. Orr Shoe Company, E. Van Winkle Motor Truck Company, Atlanta Gas Light Company, Southern Upholstering Company, Atlanta Stove Works, Southern Spring Bed Company, Burnett, Bell & Klapper, Gholstin-Cunningham Company, All Star Manufacturing Company, Byrd Printing Company, Norris, Inc., Willingham-Tift Lumber Company, Tripod Paint Company, J. P. Stevens Engraving Company, Atlanta Blank Book Manufacturing Company, White Provision Company, Dowman-Dozier, Foote & Davies.

The plan of the committee has been to put so many "spaces" 10 feet square at the disposal of exhibitors.

Moving on Whitehall.

The Eugene V. Haynes jewelry establishment will move soon from No. 37 to No. 49 Whitehall street. The firm has renovated the latter place and Mr. Haynes has carried out many ideas of the jewelry business gained on trips abroad. Under the old lease this concern was paying $4,000 a year rental, but the owner of No. 37 Whitehall, A. B. Steele, asked $12,000. Unable to reach a compromise at $8,000 the jewelry concern announced that it would move. The change will take place about September 1. An up-to-date moving picture house, it is said, will occupy the old location.

Peachtree Creek Plans.

What can be done to reclaim or "renovate" Peachtree Creek? More than a hundred property owners would like to know. The County Commissioners have a plan to clear out the bed and remove driftwood from the banks. This, they believe, will prevent to a large extent the present overflow in the rainy season, and keep the low places free from standing water. Mosquitoes won't have a chance, and as for the sewage of former days it has been largely removed by the erection of the Peachtree Creek disposal plant.

Some time ago the sugestion was made that the creek be bridged over for a considerable distance. This plan met opposition from Eretus Rivers, who declared that the city and the county had so few streams of size that they should be left exposed to view.

The main permanent trouble with Peachtree Creek seems to be that it is muddy rather than clear. Were it a stream of sparkling water rather than a ditch carrying off Georgia red clay its possibilities would be unlimited. If it were a good stream in this sense the lowlands that now border it could be turned into attractive park spaces for present and future generations.

Spring Street Improvement.

Sooner or later there is going to be a big improvement on Spring street to make it as much as possible a help to Peachtree. The proposition to extend Spring northward to Brookwood has already been announced. It rests where many other good propositions rest, to be revived later when the need becomes greater than it is at present.

Now comes the suggestion that Spring street be turned slightly from its course as it strikes Carnegie way —that a slice be cut from the northeast corner of Cain street (the Governor's Mansion lot) and Spring street be connected up with Cone street, which now ends at Carnegie way, and extended across the railroad tracks by way of a concrete viaduct.

Cone street ends on the south at Marietta street and it is suggested that the street be continued. The viaduct would go straight until the tracks were crossed and then curve slightly to the left, or about due south, and land on Madison avenue, to serve the entire Terminal Station district.

This arrangement, it is pointed out, would make it possible for the viaduct to pass safely to the east of the W. & A. freight depot, and it would put a leading thoroughfare one block closer to the retail district than a viaduct which jumped from the foot of the present Spring street. Not only that, but a first-class, straight-line thoroughfare would be opened up for traffic that would otherwise use Peachtree, and travelers using the Terminal Station could reach their North Side homes much more quickly than by the circuitous route that it is now necessary to travel.

Legislators To Be Paid at Once; Sum Due Them $70,000

That the Georgia legislators will receive every penny of the money due them for their services in the present session of the General Assembly was indicated Tuesday morning following a conference between Governor Slaton and State Treasurer Speer.

The total amount which will be paid to the legislators for salaries and mileage will be $70,000.

State Treasurer Speer declared Tuesday the legislators would be paid in full, regardless of the depleted condition of the treasury, sufficient funds for this purpose being in hand.

A large part of the $70,000 has been paid to the legislators already.

Senate Passes Bill Limiting Militia's Use

Apparently weary from the strenuous campaign for tax revision which culminated in the passage of the substitute to the Shepard bill Monday night, Georgia Senators adjourned Tuesday at noon following the passage of two general bills by McGregor, of the Nineteenth, providing for a revision of the military laws of the State. The vote was 29 to 0. There was no debate.

The bills provide affidavits shall be made by civic authorities before request is made upon the Governor for troops in case of riot or insurrection, thereby decreasing the power of the civil authorities and increasing that of the executive. The measure, according to its supporters, aims to prevent riots between citizens and soldiers such as occurred in Augusta last year.

Tubercular Cattle Barred From State

An order designed to prevent the shipment of tubercular cattle into Georgia was issued Tuesday morning by Dr. Peter F. Balmsen, State Veterinarian, from the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture. The order provides that all cattle originating in New York or Illinois, destined to any point in Georgia, must be accompanied by a certificate of health issued by a veterinary inspector of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.

The order goes into effect immediately.

Girl's Plea for Man Softens Policewoman

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Policewoman Alice Clement to-day was sorry she made an arrest. She was proud of the accomplishment in capturing a young man who insisted upon following her in the downtown streets.

But Miss Alice Brow, the young woman fiance, went to Policewoman Clement and pleaded that she recommend his release. Miss Brown, after several minutes' pleading, cried and then fainted.

When Policewoman Clement started to court to appear against Fred Bentley, 26, the young man she had arrested, she said: "I'm sorry I pinched him."

Parcel Post Stamps Going to Waste Here

The Atlanta postoffice has more than half a million parcel post stamps as a dead weight. Postmaster Hugh McKee has been instructed to sell them at once, but is having a hard job doing it.

Under an order which went into effect July 1 parcel post stamps were declared no longer necessary.

The parcel post stamps immediately fell into disuse, although they are of the same value as other stamps of the same denominations and can be used on all classes of matter.

POSSE SEARCHING FOR LEE SLAYER

South Georgia Farmer Shot Dead by Black He Attempted to Disarm.

LEESBURG, Aug. 12.—Searching parties to-day are scouring the country near this place in an effort to capture Doc Mathis, a negro, who shot and killed R. L. Jessey, a prominent Lee County farmer, last night.

Berry Wallace, a brother-in-law of Jossey, had a difficulty with Will Mathis, a son of the slayer, for beating a mule.

Returning from Leesburg in the automobile of Wallace, accompanied by several other men, a stop was made at the home of the negro, who, it was reported, had secured a rifle with which to avenge the whipping of his boy. It was the intention of the party to disarm the negro. They called to him and he came out, but returned to the house, saying: "Wait until I get my shoes."

Josey followed and told the negro to wait, but the negro shut and fastened the door. His son, Will Mathis, began firing at the party in the automobile from a window. Doc Mathis cracked the door open and fired at Jossey, the ball passing through the right breast.

Jossey's body was secured by the party and brought to Leesburg, where the posse was formed. The negroes in the meantime had escaped.

U. S. Peace Delegate To the Hague Is Dead

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 12.—The funeral of Judge U. M. Rose, member of The Hague Peace Conference, who died here to-day, will be held Thursday from the family residence. Judge Rose was one of the most distinguished members of the Southern bar and at one time was president of the American Bar Association. In 1905, following a visit of President Roosevelt to Little Rock, he was appointed a member of the International Peace Conference at The Hague.

Judge Rose was 79 years of age. His death was hastened by a recent fall, when he sustained a fractured arm.

Rain Halts Mercury As It Starts on Climb

A light shower shortly after noon Tuesday cooled the atmosphere and brought Atlanta relief from heat. The mercury in the official thermometer was forced from 88 degrees down to 78 in less than a half hour. The day started off with the thermometer registering 76 degrees.

Fair weather and cooler is predicted by Government Forecaster VonHerrmann.

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

.:. BEAUTY .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade,
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

In the Movies :-: In Real Life

For Success, Health, Happiness, Look Within!

Why Wait for Somebody Else to Bring Us These Things? Don't Be a Spiritual Looter; Pray Often, but Work, First, Last and Always.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ON retiring at night, just before going off to sleep, say, either mentally or orally as you choose:

I am health, strength, peace, happiness and prosperity and everything that goes to make for good.

Pure, good, rich blood is flowing through my body, removing all obstructions and bringing peace, health and harmony.

I am well and strong and vital.

I am beautiful, pure and good.

I am on the road to eternal youth.

I am opulent, happy and free.

Last but not least:

I will arise with unusual energy and radiance and power of accomplishment in the morning.

All I ask is that you do not try to dictate the way these things shall or may come, and I will guarantee them to cure anything from poverty to rheumatism.—Dr. James W. Cormany, Mount Carroll, Ill.

LET every reader of this column take with seriousness these emphatic statements of Dr. Cormany, and put them to the test.

Nothing Is the Matter With the World, Life or Destiny.

There is nothing the matter with the world, with life, with destiny.

Everything we desire or want or need waits for our claiming.

But the majority of God's children are waiting for SOMEBODY BESIDES THEMSELVES to bring them these things.

Not more than one human being in one thousand looks to HIMSELF and the Power back of himself for success, health and happiness.

The other 999 look to luck; to chance; to influence; to favors of friends and acquaintances; to doctors; to patent medicines; to some hoped-for miracle, and all the time a mine of wealth and reservoir of power within themselves lies unexplored and unused.

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

WHITE AND WHITNEY READY

5,000 Fans Expected to Witness Great Battle in Auditorium To-night.

Charley White, of Chicago, the best 128-pound boy in the world, and Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, who has a list of victories a mile long, are waiting for the bell to send them on their way in a ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both are in grand condition. They weighed in this afternoon at the Atlanta Athletic Club and neither moved the beam when the weight was placed on the 133-pound mark.

The biggest crowd that ever attended a boxing contest in Atlanta will be on hand. Fully 5,000 fans will be at the ringside when the first bout is staged.

The first scrap of the evening will be between Kid Payne and Battling O'Leary. It is scheduled to go four rounds. Then Mike Saul and Terry Nelson will slug through six rounds.

The semi-windup follows. It will be a ten-round affair between Kid Young and Charley Lee.

Lou Castro will rerefee.

Big Improvements At Shorter College

ROME, Aug. 13.—Great improvements are being made at Shorter College. Workmen are giving the walls of every room a coat of fresh paint; all bathrooms have been enameled, and all floors, everyone of which is of reinforced concrete, have been freshly painted.

A large out-of-doors gymnasium, 150 by 400 feet, is probably the greatest thing that the college has ever done for its students. There will be room for four or five tennis courts, several basket ball games and sufficient space for all kinds of gymnastics, callisthenics, etc. Electric lights will be arranged on the grounds, so that the girls may use the tennis courts and basket ball grounds in the evening.

The attendance for the next session at Shorter will be very large, the registration being far in excess of any previous year.

5th District Masons To Meet at Conyers

The Masonic lodges in Fulton, DeKalb, Douglas, Campbell and Rockdale Counties, comprising the Fifth Masonic District, will meet in annual convention Thursday at Conyers.

After the transaction of the regular business the three Masonic degrees will be conferred in extra full form by three special teams.

A barbecue and watermelon cutting are the entertainment program. A special train leaves Atlanta on the Georgia road at 7:30 a. m.

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Generally fair Wednesday; local showers Thursday.

LATEST NEWS

After heated discussion pro and con the Probation Bill passed the House Wednesday afternoon by a vote of 114 to 38. An amendment to the measure introduced by Miller of Bibb providing that the the bill should not apply to persons under 17 years of age, was lost by a vote of 78 to 26.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Robert F. Wagner, president pro tem of the Senate, said to-day that although the date of the beginning of the Sulzer impeachment court proceedings had not been decided upon yet, it had been tentatively agreed that it would be September 22.

MEMPHIS, TENN, Aug. 13.—The first bale of 1913 cotton sold for $155.50, or at a rate of 30 cents per pound, on the floor of the Cotton Exchange here to-day. The proceeds were donated to the Bachelors' Baby Hospital.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador from the United States to Mexico on leave, threw a bombshell into the State Department to-day by vigorously attacking the disclaimer of the British foreign office of its recognition of General Huerta as President of Mexico.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Aug. 13.—At Stevens Pottery, about eight miles from this city to-day Mrs. Will Winters was accidentally killed with a shotgun by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Winters. She was returning the gun her husband had borrowed from his brother. As she reached the house she playfully pointed the weapon at her sister-in-law and it was accidentally discharged.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—Although required by Attorney General McReynolds to release former Governor Brito, of Mexico, on $10,000 bail, United States Commissioner Arthur Browne to-day refused to order the Mexican rebel's release. McReynold's action was taken at the request of Secretary of State Bryan. Brito is held on a charge of murder and robbery preferred by the Mexican Federal Government.

WINCHESTER, KY., Aug. 13. Bob Deaton went on the stand today in the trial of "Red Tom" Davidson for the assassination of former Sheriff Ed Callahan. He made a full confession of the alleged plot, corroborating Doc Smith, Dan Deaton and others who have testified for the Commonwealth. Bob Deaton is also a defendant in the case.

Not One Petticoat For Shivering Girl

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Modern fashions that have ruled out the petticoat and a thief caused Miss May Leonard to walk eight blocks clad in shoes and stockings and an extremely light raincoat. She went bathing at Clarendon Beach. Some one rifled her locker while she was in the water. They left nothing but shoes and stockings. Her bathing suit was rented and the beach officials would not permit her to wear it home.

Miss Leonard asked every girl in the dressing room for the loan of a petticoat. Every one of them was wearing a skirt that permitted no petticoat. The only garment she could borrow was a raincoat.

Calmly Smokes Pipe As His House Burns

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Interest has been aroused here over the burning of the home of S. S. Tarver, a negro plumber, which was located near Ninth and Quintard streets, one of the best residence sections of the city. There are strong indications of incendiarism.

Whether the negro burned his own home to get the insurance or whether it was burned by white people who had been wanting to buy to get him out of the neighborhood, is a point of debate. It is said the negro was found in an alley calmly smoking his pipe while the house burned.

Sleepers Near Death In Burning Residence

Fire which spread rapidly forced Eugene R. Barmore, members of his family and boarders at his residence, 215 Capitol Avenue, to flee for their lives early Wednesday morning. They were compelled to leave the burning house in their night attire.

The fire was discovered by a neighbor, who rushed to the Barmore residence and beat upon the door until he had awakened the occupants. The roof and part of the second floor were destroyed.

QUERY WRINGS CRY OF AGONY FROM MOTHER; WIFE SOBS SILENTLY

Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of Leo Frank, caused a dramatic scene in court Wednesday afternoon by rising in her chair and denouncing Solicitor Dorsey as he was making charges of grossly improper conduct on the part of Frank with young girls in his factory.

The Solicitor was asking Ashley Jones, an insurance man, if he ever had heard of a story that Frank had taken certain liberties with one of the factory girls, giving her name.

Mrs. Frank, goaded into hysteria by the accusations against her son, rose, trembling with fury, from her chair, and shrieked:

"No, nor you either!"

She shook her finger at the Solicitor and would have continued had she not been restrained by her relatives and court attaches.

Frank himself sought to calm her, and the younger Mrs. Frank joined in the efforts to quiet the older woman.

"We will have to listen to these slanderous lies and calumies and this scurrilous defamation as long as the trial lasts," said Attorney Arnold. "It is outrageous, but we may as well meet it calmly."

Mrs. Frank was led from the room hysterically weeping.

Pantomime Is Described.

Dr. Owens told of the re-enacting by himself and three other men of Jim Conley's story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body. The testimony went in over the vigorous protest of Solicitor Dorsey.

Dr. Owens said that one of the men acted the part of Conley and another of Frank. The other two men were timers. It required eighteen and one-half minutes to take the supposed body to the basement from the office floor and return to Frank's office, going through all of the movements described by Conley and repeating all of the conversation Conley quoted in his statement. This did not include the time spent in Frank's office where the negro said the notes were written.

Attorney Hooper gave Owens a long cross-examination to demonstrate that the re-enactment of Conley's story could not be taken as an accurate measure of the time required for the disposal of the body.

Attorney Arnold again threatened to move for a mistrial when the Solicitor began his cross-examination of Jones.

Dorsey asked Jones if he had not heard of Frank holding young girls on his lap in his office and taking other liberties with them.

"That is outrageous," shouted Arnold. "I shall move for a mistrial if such a question is asked again. It is most unjust and prejudicial that the gossip of crack-brained extremists should be allowed to come before this jury.

Dorsey Promises to Back Charges.

"I'm not four-flushing," retorted the Solicitor. "I'll bring witnesses here to prove all I have charged."

Jones said that as an insurance man he had the most favorable reports of Frank's character, and that he had never heard any of the reports of immorality and improper conduct.

Solicitor Dorsey spent two hours Wednesday afternoon trying to break down the story of Lemmie Quinn, foreman of the metal dpeartment at the National Pencil Factory.

Quinn had testified that he visited the office of Leo Frank at 12:20 or 12:25 the day the Phagan girl was murdered.

Dorsey with all his might sought to raise the suspicion in the minds of the jurors that Quinn either was not at the factory at all or that he came there much earlier than he testified.

He asked the witness if he had not told Policeman Payne that "he was glad he had not been in the factory the day the girl was killed," and if he had not also denied it to Detectives Starnes and Black. Quinn denied that this was true.

"Isn't it true," asked the Solicitor, "that you never said anything to anyone about having been in the factory on Saturday until after you had a conference with Frank, although you were with the officers off and on all day the Monday following the crime?"

Quinn acknowledge this was true. Quinn had explained this weeks ago on the ground that the police were at that time arresting every one and he did not want to be involved.

Three witnesses were produced by the defense to testify to Frank's good character. When the first one was called Solicitor Dorsey objected, saying:

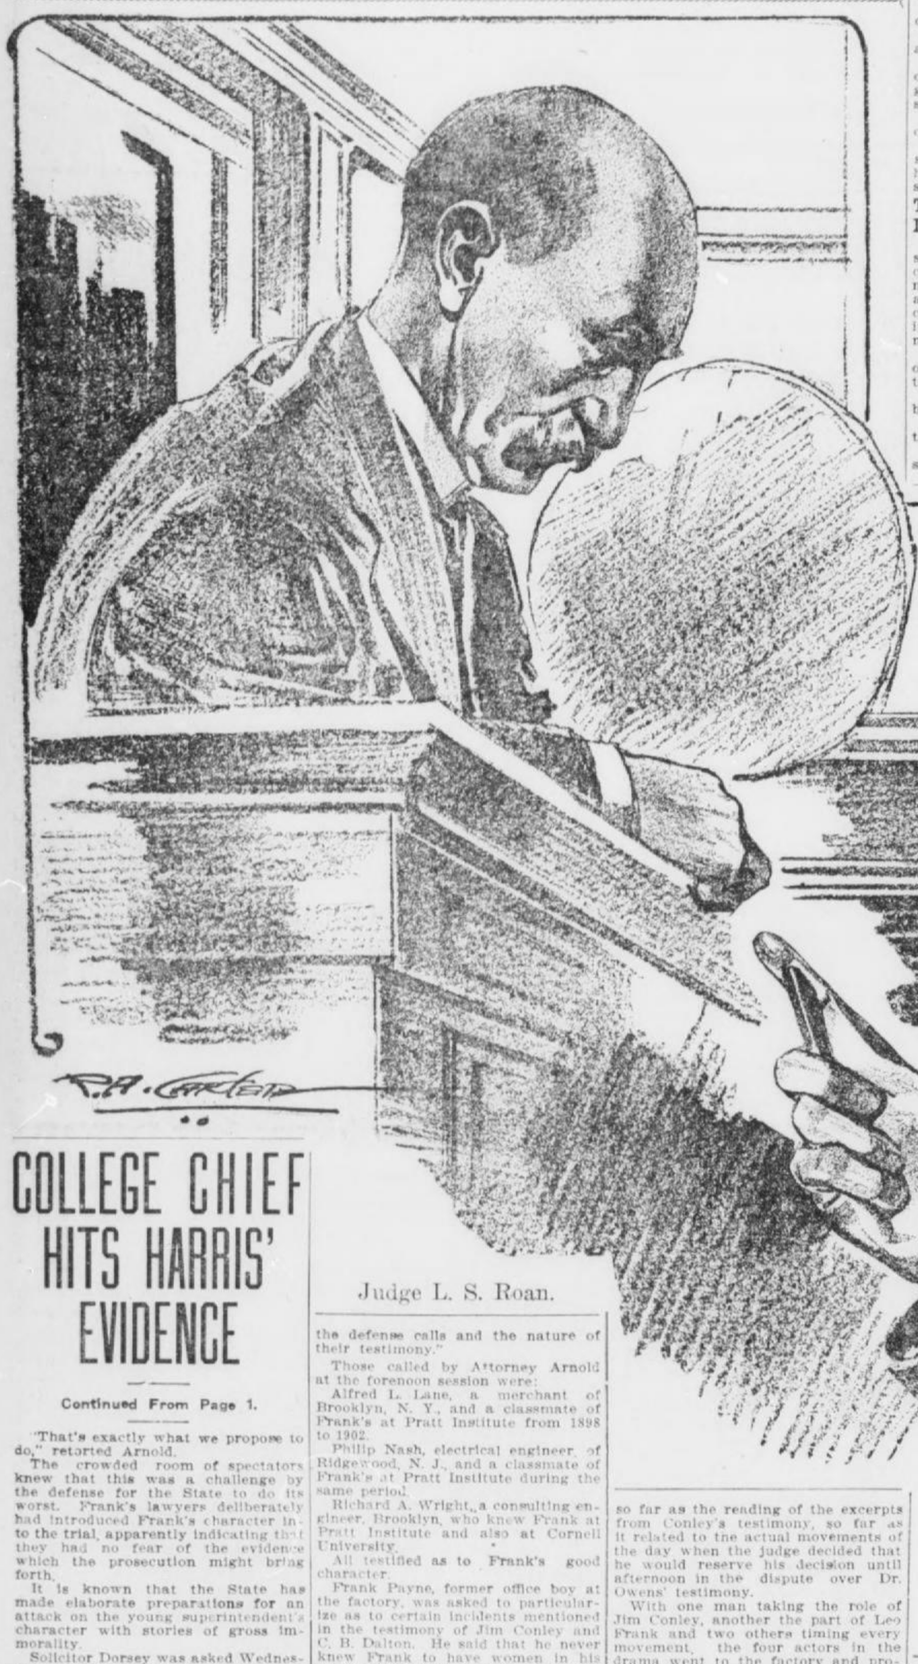

"I don't see how this testimony is material, your honor, unless the defense intends to make the defendant's character an issue."

TRAGEDY RE-ENACTED TO PROVE JIM CONLEY'S STORY FALSE

Frank Trial Scene of Hot Battle on Admissibility of Evidence for Defense

COUNSEL FOR STATE AND DEFENSE IN HOT ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE ROAN

Judge L. S. Roan.

Solicitor Dorsey. Frank Hooper. Reuben Arnold. Luther Z. Rosser.

food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 20 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed tomorrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Dorsey—No, he hasn't a right to shoot in statements.

heartily.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any process in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the State can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank tumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office, Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quiet a while.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches.

watch man comes, I will pay him myself."

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right, Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you.

COLLEGE CHIEF HITS HARRIS' EVIDENCE

"That's exactly what we propose to do," retorted Arnold.

The crowded room of spectators knew that this was a challenge by the defense for the State to do its worst. Frank's lawyers deliberately had introduced Frank's character into the trial, apparently indicating that they had no fear of the evidence which the prosecution might bring forth.

It is known that the State has made elaborate preparations for an attack on the young superintendent's character with stories of gross immorality.

Solicitor Dorsey was asked Wednesday how many witnesses he expects to call.

"I don't know," he replied. "It largely depends on the number that the defense calls and the nature of their testimony."

Those called by Attorney Arnold at the forenoon session were:

Alfred L. Lane, a merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902.

Philip Nash, electrical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute during the same period.

Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, Brooklyn, who knew Frank at Pratt Institute and also at Cornell University.

All testified as to Frank's good character.

Frank Payne, former office boy at the factory, was asked to particularize as to certain incidents mentioned in the testimony of Jim Conley and C. B. Dalton. He said that he never knew Frank to have women in his office, although it was his custom to be at the office at the times Conley and Dalton testified that these gay parties took place.

A full three-quarters of the forenoon was consumed in a legal wrangle over the admissibility of Dr. William Owens' testimony. Dr. Owens was ready to testify in regard to the reproduction of the alleged movements of Conley and Frank in disposing of Mary Phagan's body, as Conley recited them on the witness stand. Judge Roan reserved his decision until afternoon.

Quinn was questioned minutely in regard to the time of his visit to the factory as soon as he was called to the stand. Attorney Arnold began by having him detail his movements throughout the day from the time he arose in the morning.

The foreman told an apparently straightforward story, although the Solicitor did not have time for cross-examination before the noon recess. He estimated that he entered the factory at about 12:20 o'clock. All of the doors were unlocked, he said, and the doors of the outer and inner offices on the second floor were open. The safe door, he thought, also was open. He testified that his conversation with Frank was very brief and that he left the factory within two or three minutes.

He said that R. P. Barrett, designated by Attorney Arnold as the "Christopher Columbus" of the Frank trial, had discovered the blood spots and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. Barrett frequently had remarked to him, Quinn testified, that he would draw down the big rewards if Frank was convicted. Quinn said that Barrett had mentioned $2,700 at one time and $4,500 at another as the sum he would receive because he had been the first to find the blood spots and other evidence.

The witness said that it was nothing unusual for factory employees to be hurt and bleed. He cited the case of C. P. Gilberi, who, he said, had been badly injured by the bursting of an emery wheel and was carried, bleeding, past the very place where Barrett discovered the blood spots.

He testified that he never had seen Frank speak to Mary Phagan and did not know that he knew her.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon in the dispute over Dr. Owens' testimony.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal.

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was carried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to reenact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

Numerous authorities were cited by both sides. Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father, and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there no certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear, anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate-Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the elevator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley a box of cigarettes. Conley lights cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes. Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Frank: "There is $200." Conley takes money and looks at it a little bit.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, don't you pay another dollar when that Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." (Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home.

Awaiting the Joyful Sound

The Wonderful Music That Bursts Forth When the Stork Arrives.

That funny little brassy cry that echoes the arrival of the new baby is perhaps the most cherished remembrance of our lives. And thousands of happy mothers owe their preservation to health and strength to Mother's Friend. This is an external remedy that is applied to the abdominal muscles. It relieves all the tension, prevents tenderness and pain, enables the muscles to expand gently, and, when baby comes, the muscles relax naturally, the form is preserved without laceration or other accident.

You will find Mother's Friend on sale at almost any drug store, as it is one of the standard, reliable remedies that grandmothers everywhere have relied upon.

With its daily use during the period of expectation, there is no weakness, no nausea, no morning sickness, no pain, distress or strain of any kind. Its influence is truly remarkable, as it penetrates the tissues and renders them pliant and easily governed by the demands of nature. You will be surprised at its wonderful effect and what a grateful relief it affords.

Especially to young women Mother's Friend is one of the greatest of all helpful influences.

You will find this wonderful remedy on sale at the store where you trade, or they will get it for you. It is prepared by Bradfield Regulator Company, 126 Lamar Building, Atlanta, Ga. Write them for a very valuable book to expectant mothers.

BOTH SIDES AIM FOR JUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF FRANK

With Judge, Jury and Councillors Performing Duty Well, Square Deal Is Assured.

By Jas. B. Nevin.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will be prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much, in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

State Calls More Witnesses; Defense Builds Up an Alibi

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after FranK arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

Kneel in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

Turks Threaten New War on Bulgarians

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13.—The Turkish Porte to-day threatened to declare war against Bulgaria unless Bulgarian soldiers ceased their slaughter of defenseless Turkish peasants.

According to reports sent in from Turkish military officers in Adrianopl, many Mussulman men and women are being killed daily in Thrace.

MORE WITNESSES FROM DALTON'S HOME SWEAR HIS CHARACTER IS BAD

Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Attorney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up, angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did, and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix, of Gwinett County, was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Gwinett County.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. How many acres of land do you own?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 809 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He declared he was a farmer of Gwinnett County, who had known C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Brooklyn Man First Character Witness.

Alfred Lane, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the first character witness to be introduced by the defense. He is a wealthy merchant of that city. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A merchant of New York.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902, and later at Cornell.

Q. You say you knew him at Pratt Institute for four years?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know him at Cornell?—A. Yes; I didn't go to Cornell, but I saw him much in Brooklyn.

Q. How old was he when you were together at Pratt Institute?—A. Between 17 and 21 years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. What is it—good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey did not cross-examine the witness. He was excused and Philip Nash, of Ridgewood, N. J., was called. Arnold examined him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Electrical engineer for a telephone company.

Q. Where did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I was with him at Pratt Institute for four years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it good or bad?—A. Good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination. Richard A. Knight, of Brooklyn, a consulting engineer and a college mate of Frank's at both the Pratt Institute and Cornell, was called by Attorney Arnold.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you know him?—A. I was his college mate at Pratt Institue and at Cornell.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Former Office Boy Called by Defense.

The witness was excused and Frank Payne, a former office boy at the National Pencil Company, was called.

Q. How old are you?—A. 16.

Q. When did you last work at the pencil factory?—A. About 8 months ago.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. Nowhere.

Q. Were you there last Thanksgiving day?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a day it was?—A. It snowed.

Q. Were Mr. Frank and Mr. Schiff there?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do?—A. Mr. Schiff sent me up to the fourth floor to fix some boxes.

Q. Who was up there?—A. Jim Conley.

Q. What time did he leave there?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley when you left?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the factory on Saturday?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did Mr. Frank ever have any women there?—A. No.

Q. How many weeks were you there?—A. Five or six.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were your duties there?—A. General office boy.

Q. You spent most of your time in Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you quit working there?—A. It has been seven or eight months ago.

Q. Did you ever see any beer bottles around there?—A. No.

Q. You say Jim Conley was there last Thanksgiving morning?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you notice him?—A. He was sweeping around there until about 10:30 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Lemmie Quinn Called to Stand.

The witness was excused and Lemmie Quinn was called. Arnold questioned the witness.

Q. Where did you work?—A. I am foreman of the metal department of the National Pencil Company.

Q. Is that the department Mary Phagan worked in?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Memorial day?—A. Yes, it was a holliday at the factory.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Barrett discovered the spots on the floor of the metal room and some strands of hair on a lathe?—A. Yes. He mentioned those discoveries to me.

Q. Did he ever mention any reward he expected to get if Mr. Frank was convicted?—A. Yes, he mentioned $2,700 once and another time $4,500. He said he had been told that if Mr. Frank was convicted there wasn't any chance to keep him out of his reward. He wanted my advice. I told him I was not a lawyer and could not tell him.

Q. Had anyone noticed them before Barrett said he discovered them?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember a man named Gilbert getting cut in the metal room and bleeding around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. About a year ago.

Q. Do you know of anyone being cut since then?—A. Yes, a boy was cut on the hand.

Q. Did he go by the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know what that stuff was over the spot on the floor?—A. No.

Q. Do you know what has ever become of that hair?—A. I think the detectives have it.

Hair Might Have Blown Into Lathe.

Q. Is there any place in that room where the girls dress their hair?—A. Why, there's a little gas jet about ten feet from the lathe.

Q. This jet is between the lathe and the west windows and a breeze might blow the hair across to this lathe, might it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get your pay Friday night before the murder?—A. About 20 minutes to 6.

Q. What was the last time before the murder that you saw Mary Phagan?—A. The Monday before.

Q. Why did she not work that week?—A. We were out of material and she was laid off.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank speak to Mary Phagan?—A. No, I never did.

Q. You were examined about all these things by the Coroner and they were impressed on your memory, were they not?—A. Yes.

Mr. Quinn told in detail what he did during the morning up to the time he returned to the factory. He said the front door of the factory was unlocked.

Q. When you got up to Frank's outer office was the door open or shut?—A. Open.

Q. How about the door to the inner office?—A. Open.

Q. How about the safe door in the outer office?—A. I think it was open.

Q. What time was this?—A. About 12:20.

Fixed Time by Going to Market.

Q. Why do you fix the time at that? A. Well, when I left home I was anxious to get up town before the meat markets closed. I left home at 15 minutes to 12. Doing the things I did, I judge it was about 12:20 o'clock when I got to the factory.

Q. You say you left home at 11:45, did you look at your watch?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you want to get to town?—A. Before 12, because I was afraid the stores would be closed.

Q. How long did it take you to walk to the market?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. What time was it when you got there?—A. The whistle blew while I was there.

Q. Can you tell how long you remained there?—A. No.

Q. You went to the pharmacy from there?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was that from the market?—A. About three doors.

Q. What pharmacy was that?—A. Benjamin's.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. About three minutes.

Q. Did you see anyone else at the factory besides Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. What office was he in?—A. The inner office.

Q. What did you say?—A. I asked him if Mr. Schiff was in. He said, "No."

Q. Did you say anything else?—A. I made some remark about his not being able to keep me away even on a holiday.

Q. What time was it when you left?—A. About 12:20.

Q. Where did you go?—A. To Devore's pool parlor. It was about 12:30 then.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To the cafe, where I met Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman.

White Substance Used on Machines.

Q. What did you go to see Schiff for?—A. We had a baseball wager and I went there to talk to him about it.

Q. How many minutes did you stay at the Busy Bee?—A. I can not tell exactly.

Q. But you do know what time you went to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to anyone at the poolroom?—A. Yes, McMurray.

Q. Where did you go from Devore's?—A. The Atlanta Theater.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. About fifteen minutes. I bought tickets for the night.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Back to Devore's.

Q. Who is John Lamey?—A. He worked with me.

Q. Did you go to the factory Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you talk to?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Montag.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. Three or four minutes.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. At Bloomfield's?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he dressed?—A. In blue of black.

Q. What is the purpose of that white preparation used at the plant?—A. To clean the machines.

Carried in Buckets, Spatters on Floors.

Q. How was it carried?—A. In buckets.

Q. It spatters over everything?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Frank Monday?—A. Yes, Monday afternoon.

Q. How was he dressed?—In brown.

Q. Look at this picture (showing the witness the State's diagram drawn by Bert Green, of The Georgian). Does it show Mary Phagan's machine?—A. No.

Q. Point out the place where Barrett claims to have found the hair. Did you find any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall the place near the closet where the negro said he found the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Well, if somebody had washed up blood in one place would it not have been the reasonable thing to wash it up in another?

"I object," said Dorsey. "That's a question for argument, your honor.

"It's such a good argument," said Arnold, "that I could not help it. I withdraw the question."

Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. The cross-examination of Quinn was to be taken up immediately then.

Argument on Admissibility Of Evidence Resumed.

The argument on the inadmisibility of Dr. Owens' testimony was resumed with the opening of the afternoon session. Attorney Rosser addressed the court.

"The rule at the beginning of this hearing was that we would be permitted to introduce any evidence that would tend to shed light on the mystery," he said.

Attorney Rosser at this juncture read a Georgia decision tending to show evidence of this kind as being admissible. Judge Roan interrupted.

"That part of it is all right, Mr. Rosser," he said. "The only point is whether the conditions are similar."

Rosser: "All right, your honor, I will read you some authorities on that point."

Attorney Rosser read a decision in a case in which such an experiment had been allowed in which the jury could make allowances for the differences.

"We will show that this man walked as fast as he could," said Rosser. "Is it possible that this court could have so far forgotten its common sense as to permit this jury to draw its own conclusions?"

"Only God Almighty can made identity," Rosser continued, "and He hasn't done it yet. There are no two leaves alike in the forest. I said a while ago that it was a one-horsed lawyer who wrote the opinion cited by my friend Dorsey. With a few exceptions, you and I know the authors of law books have not common sense enough to make a living practicing law.

"I don't think any more unsound principle of law could be embodied in the statutes than the one involved here, and I don't want to get in the contempt of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. A man's life is involved and important light might be excluded. One of the cases I was just showing you said in cases of dissimilarity that the judge shall instruct the jury to make allowances."

Dorsey took up the argument.

"I take no issue with Mr. Rosser," said the Solicitor, "about this Georgia case by the Court of Appeals. That was an expert matter—the question of how long it would take to stop an engine. In the Moran case it was a question of whether a stick was a deadly weapon or not. It was declared to be a case not admitting opinion evidence. The jury was just as capable of judging as the witness."

Raises Question of Strain.

Judge Roan: "They propose to prove by Dr. Owens how long it took persons he watched to go through the things Conley said he went through with. He is to state facts. I won't permit any opinion and I don't want to hear any more authority on it. It is a questio of whether they can go through substantially the same things as Conley said he did as regards speech, pressure, etc."

Dorsey: "Who can imagine the pressure they were under after murdering a little girl?"

Arnold: "All during this trial we have admitted this kind of evidence. We had policemen to say they had sat in the toilet and tried to see how much of the body of Mary Phagan Newt Lee could see. We asked the policemen—they asked the man."

Judge Roan: "Mr. Arnold, I don't want anything on that. I want to know whether there is enough similarity between the cases for the jury to draw its own conclusions."

Arnold: "We know, your honor."

Judge Roan: "Well, this man don't know how long Conley stood over the body."

Arnold: "We think that negro's statement was sufficiently graphic as to detail to admit of the comparison."

Judge Admits Evidence.

Judge Roan: "I have some doubts about it, but I will give the defendent the benefit of the doubt and allow the evidence to be admitted."

The jury was ordered brought in.

Lemmie Quinn was then recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold continued direct examination.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. When did the last man bleed on the second floor?—A. The last man dangerously hurt was a year ago.

Q. Was that a year from now, or a year from the date of the murder?—A. I mean just what I said.

Q. Can't you tell us the truth about it?

Arnold: "He has answered the question."

Dosey: "I am cross-examining the witness."

A. I can't tell you the exact time.

Q. When was the last time you noticed blood from this man?—A. Some time ago. I don't rememebr how long.

Q. Did it look like this blood found in front of the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes, except the last I saw there was darker.

Q. You told Mr. Starnes, Mr. Black and the other officers that you did not go into the factory on that Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not tell anyone about being in the factory until after you had been down to see Frank, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say when you told him?—A. He said he remembered seeing me, but didn't remember the time.

Q. Didn't he tell you to keep it quiet until he had seen his lawyers?—A. He didn't say keep it quet. He said he would talk with his lawyer.

Q. When was this that you saw Frank?—A. Tuesday after the murder.

Q. You were with the police all day Monday and said nothing about it?—A. I wasn't with them all day.

Explains Why He Was Led to Tell of Visit.

Q. Off and on, all day?—A. I saw them a number of times.

Q. Are you absolutely sure about what time you were in Frank's office?—A. Reasonably sure.

Q. Do you deny that you told Officer Payne that you had not been to the factory since Friday?—A. I do.

Q. You admit refreshing Frank's memory about your visit?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us just what you said.—A. I told him that I was there and he said he remembered it, but not the time except that it was after the time Mary Phagan was there.

Q. Didn't you tell him, "I don't like to be brought into it, but if it will help you, I will"?—A. Yes.

Q. He told his lawyers and said they advised him to mention it, and you told the police?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to Barrett before the Coroner's injuest?—A. No; that was after the Coroner's inquest.

Q. Where is Miss Jefferson, who discovered these spots, working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. She was there yesterday in the polishing department.

Q. You saw her?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't tell the officers you were in the factory on Saturday, April 26, until the following Saturday?—A. The next Saturday.

Q. Didn't you say this to the Coroner's Jury? That you told Frank you were there, and he said he would mention it to his attorneys to see whether it was favorable or not?—A. I don't know whether I said favorable or not.

State Seeking Flaws In Quinn Testimony.

Q. Why was it that you said it was between 12 and 12:30, and that you arrived at the poolroom at 12:25, and now say you arrived at Frank's office between 12:20 and 12:25 and arrived at the poolroom at 12:30?—A. I overlooked part of it.

Q. Didn't they ask you if you could be definite and you said you never looked at a clock until you got to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you now about the back door. Was it locked or barred?—A. Closed.

Q. On May 12, in the presence of Detectives Lanford, Starnes and myself, did you not sign this statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't you say that there was a bar on that door that cut off communication from the upper floor and didn't you say it was customarily kept closed?—A. Yes

Q. Now, didn't I go further with you and say this: "That the door that leads from the office floor to the floor above is kept closed," and didn't you say, "No, the door is closed with a bar across it." Now, isn't that true?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was that bar across it?—A. On pay days.

Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, I want you to tell me how you make these statements to-day and made entirely other statements before the Coroner?—A. I don't know.

Wasn't Sure of Time; Figured It Out Since.

Q. You don't know? All right. Now, wasn't the first time you ever mentioned Devoe's you said that you were there at 12:30?—A. I told you that when I made my first statement. I was not sure of the time, but I have since figured it out.

Q. What time did you leave home?—A. Eleven forty-five.

Q. How do you know what time you reached the town?—A. I figured it out.

Q. Now tel me how you changed the statements you made on May 5?—A. I never recall certain things.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. When you made that statement, you had forgotten about going to Wolsheimer's, hadn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Who reminded you of that?—A. My wife.

The witness was excused, and Oscar Pappenheimer was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer of furniture.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. Since March, 1910.

Q. Have you been getting comparative statments from Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Up to the time the postoffice

Georgia's Senate and Her Children

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me--

"Even so, it is not the will of your Father who is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Matt. 18:5-14.

A child—

A girl—

All men would help her.

House Bill No. 4 will save girls who are children in years.

The PRISON COMMISSION has favored the Bill.

The PENITENTIARY COMMITTEE of the House has approved it.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS with WHEATLEY of Sumter as Chairman unanimously recommended its adoption carrying a $30,000 appropriation.

And men believe that GOVERNOR SLATON approves the measure.

Yesterday, Tuesday, the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, whose Chairman is the Speaker of the House, BURWELL, with BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, put the Bill upon the calendar. Without this, the measure would have been lost. Among those helping to pass it were NUNNALLY of Floyd and SHUPTRINE of Chatham. And for it BARRY WRIGHT did splendid service.

THE VOTE WAS 115 TO 46.

The forty-six who opposed it did not do so with the thought of harming girls. They misunderstood. At heart—if they consider—they too approved the JONES-MILLS' BILL establishing the "Georgia Training School for Girls."

It is no one man's measure—no group of men can claim it—it is a law for the want of which girl children of Georgia have suffered.

You would not continue to hurt and degrade them—you, too, would help.

To-day the Bill is in the Senate.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS of that body, whose Chairman is Senator W. W. STARK, now has it under consideration; and the Senate RULES COMMITTEE will doubtless see that it is heard.

The President of the Senate, RANDOLPH ANDERSON, of Chatham, has long favored a Reformatory for girls in Georgia.

And since the question of taxation and finances has been settled, the only argument against the bill has been removed.

Of it, The Morning News of Savannah has rightly said:

"It is hard to see how anybody can truthfully say that it would not profit the State to spend $30,000 in that way."

The Senate will doubtless pass the Bill as it was adopted by the House, without an opposing vote.

All Georgia will approve.

RURAL CREDITS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Wilson Says Next Task Ahead of Him and Congress Is to Give Aid to Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The following statement was issued at the White House to-day embodying the views of President Wilson on rural credits:

"Again and again during the discussion of the currency bill it has been urged that special provision should be made in it for the facilitating of credits of the farmers of the country who stand in need of agricultural credits as distinguished from ordinary commercial and industrial credits. Such proposals were not adopted because such credits could only be imperfectly provided for in such a measure. The scope and character of the bill, its immediate and chief purpose could not be made to reach as far as the special interests of the farmer requires.

"Special machinery of a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that the Congress will at that session act upon the recommendations of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

Nation's Welfare Involved.

"There is no subject more important to the welfare and industrial development of the United States; there is no form in which I would myself seek a greater honor or privilege to take part because I should feel that it was a service to the whole country of the first magnitude and significance. It should have accompanied and gone hand and hand with reform of our banking and currency system if we had been ready to act wisely and with full knowledge of what we were about.

"There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world; were so intelligent and enterprising and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicap they carried, no matter what disadvantage, whether of the law or of natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or opportunity, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering, and have too often failed to renew them when we did see what they were. One of the chief and most serious of these disadvantages has been that he had not been able to secure the extended bank accommodations he every year stands in need of without paying the most burdensome rates of interest and saddling himself with mortgages and obligations of every kind which he fairly staggered under, if he could carry them at all.

Effects in Other Countries.

"In other countries systems of rural credit have been put into operation which not only have relieved the farmer, but have put his enterprises upon a footing of easy accomplishment. Countries in which agriculture was steadily languishing because wholly unprofitable have seen their farming lands blossom again and their people turn once more hopefully to the soil for a living. Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish not afterward.

"And they will be. This is our next task and duty. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with advising the Congress of the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon."

Wife of Umprie in Faint as Angry Fans Threaten Husband

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 13.—Mrs. James Murray, wife of the American Association umpire, was under the care of a physician to-day as the result of a nervous shock caused by witnessing an attack on her husband by infuriated baseball fans. During the game between Milwaukee and Louisville yesterday, Umpire Muray gave Milwaukee the benefit of a close decision. Fans from the bleachers and grandstand rushed on the field. Pitcher Jack Powell caught an angry man who was about to hurl a heavy hammer at the umpire.

Mrs. Murray, sitting in a lower box near the scene of the attack, fainted and was carried to an automobile.

San Francisco Call Purchased by Rival

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—M. H. DeYoung, publisher of The San Francisco Chronicle, to-day announced that he had purchased The San Francisco Call, and would close it September 1.

The price paid was not made public. John D. Spreckles, a member of the California family of capitalists, was the owner of The Call.

BEAUTY CONTEST WON BY MISS MARY CARL HURST

Victor in the beauty race striking example of piquant brunette.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst.

Wires luck to the 500,000 club upon learning her picture will adorn Booster Buttons.

Popular Society Girl's Likeness Will Adorn 'Half-Million' Club Booster Button.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Hurst, of No. 62 West Twelfth street, is declared the choice of Atlanta for the girl whose smile is to help spread the city's fame.

In winning the "Booster Button" Beauty Contest she becomes the sponsor of the 500,000 Booster Club, and her face will adorn the lapel buttons with this catchy slogan:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll get you yet. 500,000 by 1920."

When the voting ended Tuesday, this popular young society girl had a total of 18,340 votes, a good margin over her nearest competitor. Though decidedly the choice of Georgian and American readers, she did not win without a contest, and her permanent lead was never assured until the last days of the campaign. Her admirers were constant, though, and after her picture appeared as a nominee a steady stream of votes for her flowed in.

Winner a Piquant Brunette.

Miss Hurst is a striking type of a vivacious brunette. Her face scintillates smiles of good cheer.

There were all types of beauty in the contest—perfect blondes with cerulean blue eyes, auburn-haired girls with pink cheeks, girls with dark brown hair and big dreamy blue eyes, and various shades of brunettes. But the smiling face must have fit the slogan for a "Half Million City" better than any, for she got the most votes.

An order for the booster buttons immediately will be placed. Though Miss Hurst is sponsor for the club, she will lose her identity on the buttons, except as she is remembered as the girl. And, of course, everybody will remember that.

Wires "Luck to 500,000 Club."

There will be no name on the buttons, only the slogan of the Half Million City. Miss Hurst is out of the city, but in acknowledgment of her election she wired:

"Luck to the '500,000 Club.'"

The next step will be a formal organization of the "500,000 Club." Before many days the beautiful buttons will be distributed and a concentrated effort to boost Atlanta's population to 500,000 by 1920 will begin.

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same alignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. Thus no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the Vice President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of his health.

ILLNESS HALTS COURT.

GRIFFIN, Aug. 13.—On account of the illness of Judge R. E. Daniel, of the Flint Circuit, the August term of the Spalding County Superior Court was adjourned until the first Monday in September. Judge Daniel is in a very feeble condition.

SENATE PUTS AN O. K. ON SLATON NOMINATIONS

Confirmation of Moon and Steed Ends Fight Begun When Brown Took Seat.

Confirmation by the Senate Wednesday morning of four appointments made by Governor Slaton settled a controversy of long standing in regard to the official status of Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, as members of the State Board of Education.

The appointment of Professor Moon and Mr. Steed dates back to the administrations of Governor Hoke Smith and Governor Brown, who precipitated a bitter fight when he appointed Moon and Steed after an adjournment of the State Senate, which had upheld the Hoke Smith appointments. In the shuffle which followed the two Hoke Smith men were ousted to give place to Moon and Steed.

On recommendation of Governor Slaton, Moon and Steed will serve four years each, dating from September 5, 1913.

The appointments of the Governor confirmed by the Senate are as follows:

E. H. Callaway, of Richmond County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

Joseph S. Davis, of Dougherty County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

F. G. Bell, of Chatham County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for a term ending August 3, 1917, vice P. A. Stovall, resigned.

Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, to be members of the State Board of Education for four years from September 5, 1913.

Kentuckian Named Minister to Panama

JUDGE ROAN WILL WIN OVER ALL OPPOSITION

Some Protests From Men Who Want Atlantan Named Are Made to Governor.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar, some of whom have protested to the Governor. It is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Leaps From Pier to Save Society Woman

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—Mrs. G. Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ward, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians on Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station, where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

Soldier on Duty in Mine Strike Killed

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 13.—The first fatality since the installation of 200 Michigan State troops in the Calumet copper region on account of the strike of 18,000 miners occurred today, when Orla Green, 22, private in Battery A, of Lansing, died from an accident.

Green was kicked in the abdomen by a horse a week ago.

MASSEE CHARGES GRAFT IN MACON

Says City Pays Too Much for Electricity and That Officials Get Free Lights.

MACON, Aug. 13.—In an interview this afternoon W. Jordan Massee, president of the new electric power company, charges that the city of Macon officially, and the Macon Railway and Light Company, are in collusion and that for this reason his charges of excessive payments by the city to the Macon Railway and Light Company were whitewashed by Council last night.

Massee charges that Mayor John T. Moore and City Electrician Charles Humphries do not pay for lights used in their homes. He also says that Council whitewashed his charges because of the fact that the administration party has received liberal campaign contributions from the Macon Railway and Light Company in the past and expects similar contributions in the near future.

The charges are vigorously denied by officials.

Senate Kills Bill Providing for Early Primary Elections

The Senate Wednesday killed the House bill providing for early primaries, 21 to 18, agreed to the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture and the printing of bulletins and passed a number of local House bills.

President Anderson declared the Senate calendar virtually was clear with the exception of the inheritance tax bill, which probably will come up for passage late Wednesday afternoon.

Sharp debate occurred Wednesday morning on the primary bill, which was championed by Senator Tarver and others. Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, charged that the measure was an effort of politicians to legislate themselves back into office.

Insurrectors Kill 3,200 Federals, Then Rere..t.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 13.—Details of fighting between Federals and rebels around Torreon from July 20 to August 1 received here to-day from pony express riders, state that 3,200 Federals of a force of 10,000 were killed and 80 wounded. The rebels were defeated and driven off leaving over 1,000 dead and wounded.

The World of Society

Several informal affairs have been given this week for Miss Martha Boynton's guests, Misses Ann Grady, of Chattanooga, and Susie Veach, of Adairsville. Tuesday Mrs. George Boynton entertained at luncheon followed by a matinee party at the Forsyth for these attractive visitors. Her guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Laura Cole and Martha Carrington, of Charleston, the guest of Mrs. Gilham Morrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Boynton gave an informal supper party Tuesday for Miss Boynton's guests. The table was decorated with a basket of yellow sunflowers, and all the details were in yellow. The guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Martha Carrington, Laura Cole, Martha Boynton, Messrs. Perrin Nicolson, Cary Callaway, Harold Barnwell, George Northen and William McCullough.

On Wednesday these girls were honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. Henry Porter at the East Lake Country Club. Luncheon was served on the veranda and old-fashioned garden flowers adorned the table. Mrs. Porter had as her guests Miss Grady, Miss Veach, Miss Martha Boynton, Mrs. Gilham Morrow and her guest, Miss Martha Carrington, and Mrs. B. L. Durrence, who is spending this week with Mrs. Porter at her country home at East Lake.

Miss Veach will spend a few days with Miss Alice Richards on Boulevard, and Miss Grady will be the guest of Miss Martha Crane on Inman circle until Friday, when she goes to Adairsville to visit Miss Veach.

Morning Bridge.

Mrs. Virginius Hitt will entertain a number of young girls at bridge Friday morning to meet her guest, Miss Helen Woolfork, of New York.

Miss MacIntyre Hostess.

Miss Julia MacIntyre will entertain at afternoon tea Thursday at her home at Brookhaven.

Miss McGaughey Entertains.

Miss Ruble McGaughey entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon for Miss Bessie Tappan's guests, Miss Lucy Jacks, of Forsyth, and Miss Julia Gill, of Woodberry, and for Miss Julia Lokey, of Birmingham, the guest of Mrs. Hugh Lokey. The party was completed by Miss Minnie Purvis.

For Miss Bacon.

In compliment to Miss Farra Bacon, of Savannah, who is visiting her, Miss Marie Colcord entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon, inviting six girls to be her guests. Thursday afternoon there will be a swimming party at the C. C. C. for Miss Bacon. After a swim, tea will be served on the veranda.

Habersham Chapter Meets.

Joseph Habersham Chapter, D. A. R., will hold its monthly meeting Friday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of the regent, Mrs. John A. Perdue, No. 703 Edgewood avenue.

W. A. R. M. A. Postpone Meeting.

There will be no meeting of the W. A. R. M. A. this month on account of the illness of Mrs. Roy Wilheit.

Holcombe-Williams.

The marriage of Miss Aline Holcombe to Mr. Marion Williams took place at the home of the bride's mother Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the presence of a few relatives and friends, Dr. A. R. Holderby officiating.

Miss Holcombe was gowned in a traveling suit of blue, with hat and gloves to match.

The bridal party entered as Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Allie Hazel McClair. Miss Ethel Rutherford and Mr. G. C. Holcombe were the attendants.

After the wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Williams will be at home to their friends at No. 41 Orme street.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Miss Mary Brown entertained a swimming party at the Capital City Country Club Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Frampton Ellis, who was a bride of June. There were fourteen guests. Tea was served on the veranda.

Mrs. Hinton Hostess.

Mrs. Harold Hilton entertained Wednesday afternoon at a bridge tea, inviting the members of her club for the game and a few other friends in for tea at 5 o'clock. The honor guests were Miss Genevieve Gresham, the guest of Mrs. Russell Gresham, and Mrs. Pennel, of Fort Oglethorpe, who is visiting Mrs. J. C. Peavy.

Pink and white roses adorned the mantels. The prizes were gold and white china, while the guests of honor were presented with correspondence cards.

Mrs. Hilton received her guests wearing lavender crepe.

Smathers-Clough.

Miss Ellen Smathers, of Asheville, and Mr. Addison Clough, of Pennsylvania, were married Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Smathers, in Asheville.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Bartlett, and her little niece, Daisy Bartlett, were the only attendants, and only a few friends witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough are traveling in the West.

As Miss Smathers, Mrs. Clough visited in Atlanta last spring as the guest of Miss Emma Kate Amorous, and has many friends here who will be interested to hear of her wedding.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednsday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get bumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ralph Herz Scores Hit.

Ralph Herz, the musical comedy star, in an act that abounds in pathos, is the feature of a splendid bill at the Forsyth this week. Herz, although in a field entirely different from that in which he has been seen for years, does an excellent bit of character work in "Old Blind Joe," and the heartstrings of the audience get a good tug. His other impersonations are good.

Wood and Wyde, in a singing comedy skit, score a genuine hit. Their songs are catchy and their patter is above the average.

Milo Belden and company have a sketch which gets many laughs. Other acts are the Randalls, sharpshooters, who do some remarkable feats; the Adias family, in a first-class acrobatic turn; Willie Weston and company, in an entertaining musical number, and the Pathe play.

HAS NAME OPERATED ON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Miss Marie C. Schwabenhausen, a kindergarten teacher, had the Supreme Court in Brooklyn amputate the eight rear letters of her name. Now her pupils can handle it.

LAST PLEA FILED FOR PARDON OF M'NAUGHTON

Doctors Said to Have Made Affidavits That Arsenic Could Not Have Killed Flanders.

That one last desperate effort will be made to save the life of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, under sentence of death in the Chatham County jail, was indicated Wednesday morning, when Judge F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, representing McNaughton, filed affidavits with the State Prison Commission setting forth that the death of Flanders, alleged victim of McNaughton, could not have been caused by arsenic.

Judge Saffold arrived in Atlanta Wednesday morning. He filed the affidavits with the Prison Commission shortly thereafter and announced that he would remain in the city until the decision is handed down. The affidavits, it is said, were made out by physicians who assert that Flanders could not have died from arsenic.

According to members of the Prison Commission the new evidence will be carefully examined, probably Monday afternoon, preparatory to a final decision not later than Thursday.

Dr. McNaughton, it is understood, has expressed hope of being pardoned and has already prepared to re-enter the practice of medicine.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

G. A. & F. Grocery Co. Declared Bankrupt

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the G. A. & F. Grocery Company, a corporation doing a wholesale and retail grocery business at No. 23 Piedmont avenue, was filed in the United State District Court Wednesday morning.

The petitioners named are the Atlanta Paper Company, Gershon Company and A. Weimberg, who state that the concern owes more than $1,000. A referee will be appointed Thursday.

Canton Is Looted by Chinese Buccaneers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 13.—Chinese pirates still hold Canton at their mercy. Fighting is general, and a great part of the business district has been looted.

The Canton harbor is full of junks containing buccaneers. General Lung, commander of the garrison at Canton, is powerless.

FIRST OPEN BOLL AT DALTON.

DALTON.—The first open boll of cotton, unusually early for this section of the State, was brought in yesterday by W. T. Cox, of the Carbondale District. Indications point to the earliest first bale on record this year.

HOTEL MEN FEAST ON FRIED PULLETS

A delicious fried chicken dinner, with plenty of hot cornbread, buttermilk and vegetables raised on the premises, was served to the Hotel Men's Association after the regular monthly meeting at Durand's farm Tuesday evening. The association was the guest of J. T. Williams.

The members of the association and invited guests left the Piedmont Hotel at 4:30 o'clock in automobiles, after a short business meeting at which routine matters were disposed of. A committee was appointed to look after the delegates to the Georgia Hotel Men's Association, which meets in Atlanta the middle of November. Lee M. Jordan made an interesting talk on "Hotel Legislation."

The members present were J. Lee Barnes, J. F. Lutton, A. R. Evans, Ed R. Brown, Wallace Boyd, A. R. Keen, Lee M. Jordan, R Frank Taylor, Fred Limmell, Frank Harrell and Fred Houser. Among the invited guests were Edwin F. Johnson and Dr. J. S. Kennedy.

Mrs. Williams and Master "Biff" Williams assisted Mr. Williams in entertaining the guests.

Potash Lye Poison in Dipper Causes Death

ALPHARETTA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. Sallie Cobb, wife of William Cobb, a farmer living two miles west of Alpharetto, is dead after drinking water from a dipper with which she had a few hours before stirred potash lye.

Mrs. Cobb left the dipper on the well and went to visit a neighbor. On returning home she went to the well and took a drink of water. Within a few minutes she was in agony.

Negro Who Attacked Phone Girl Captured

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Jack Duncan, the negro who is said to have attacked, gagged, bound and robbed Miss Belle Kirkpatrick, telephone operator at Piedmont, in her office some time ago, is under arrest at Rome, Ga., having been brought from Miami, Fla., according to information given Sheriff C. T. Brooks here to-day.

Miss Kirkpatrick has gone to Rome to identify the negro, for whose arrest the Southern Bell Company had offered a $200 reward.

OBITUARY

Mrs. J. H. Bate, a former resident of Atlanta, died Monday night in San Antonio, Texas. She was the widow of J. H. Bate. The body will be brought here for interment.

MOTHER OF PRISONER CRIES OUT IN PROTEST; WIFE WEEPS AT QUERY

ceased delivering mail on Sunday, when did you get your reports?—A. Every Saturday.

Q. Since that time when have you been receiving them?—A. Every Monday morning.

Q. Did you get the report of April 24?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. Monday morning.

Dorsey toow the witness.

Q. Have you got the envelope?—A. No.

Q. Have you received one since?—A. No.

State Objects to Defense Statements.

Arnold, addressing the court: We will introduce these statements, your honor.

Dorsey: I object.

Judge Roan: It is admissible.

Ashley Jones was the next witness called. Attorney Arnold examined him.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. You are an insurance agent, aren't you?—A. Resident agent for the New York Life.

Q. You don't know anything of Frank's practices at the pencil factory?—A. No.

Dorsey Denies That He Is Four-Flushing.

Q. How do you know him?—A. He took a policy with our company in New York and, as you know, an insurance company makes a pretty thorough examination as to the moral and physical standing of the applicant.

Q. You never heard of his taking young girls into his lap, did you?

Arnold interrupted—Your honor, I think that question is outrageous. We are dealing with the date of April 26. We are not responsible for the lies and slanders circulated by cracked-brain extremists. All sorts of things have been circulated since this murder occurred.

Judge Roan—He can't ask him about anything that happened prior to the date of this murder.

Dorsey—Your honor, I am not four-flushing a bit. I am going to present a witness to prove these charges.

Arnold: "He couldn't prove it, even if it were true. These statements are all lies. If this matter comes up again I am going to make a motion for a new trial."

Dorsey: "You can take that up when I present the witness."

Mr. Dorsey (to the witness): Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank being caught with a girl in Druid Hills?—A. No. We had an investigator on the case and he never found any such thing.

Q. The members of your company took a great interest in this case? And wrote to the Grand Jury to indict Conley, did you not?—A. Three of us did.

Mother Cries Out Agonized Protest.

Q. Who were they?—A. Robert Leopold Cooney, Mr. Clark and myself.

Q. Was that not unusual?—A. We have not done it before, but we would do it again in the interest of justice.

Q. Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank taking girls on his lap?

At this question Mrs. Rea Frank, mother of Leo Frank, interrupted, shouting to the Solicitor, "No, and you didn't, either."

Mrs. Frank broke into tears, and crying "My God, my God," was taken from the courtroom.

Q. Did you ever hear of him putting his arms around Miss Myrtice Cato?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him going in the dressing room where little Gertie Jackson was in September, 1912?—A. No. (Much of Mr. Dorsey's questioning is unprintable.)

Q. Did you ever hear of Mrs. Pearl Dawson going there to get her pay and of him putting his hands on her little girl and of Mrs. Dawson throwing a monkey wrench at him?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him getting familiar with a Mrs. Winggold?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him having suggestive pictures on the walls and of him slapping girls?—A. No.

The witness was excused.

At this point Solicitor Dorsey asked Judge Roan to order Daisy Hopkins seld as he was informed she was preparing to leave town.

Deputies Start Search For Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Judge Roan issued the desired instructions. Deputies left the courtroom in search of her.

Dr. W. D. Owens was then recalled. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Dr. Owens, you heard the statement that was read here this morning. You and Mr. Walker used this document in making your experiments did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Leave out the eight minutes the negro said he was in the wardrobe and the time he said he consumed in writing the notes—how long did it take you to go through the performance just as Jim Conley related it?—A. Eighteen and one-half minutes.

Q. How fast did you do it?—A. As fast as we could.

Q. Including the time the negro said he was in the wardrobe and allowing ten minutes for writing the notes, how long did it take?—A. Thirty-six and one-half minutes.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you read this paper while you were making the experiments?—A. No, Mr. Hass did. I held the watch. Mr. Hass would read each movement that Conley said he made and then we would carry it out in detail.

Q. He had to give specific directions and then the act would be done?—A. Yes, most of the time. Sometimes directions would be anticipated.

Q. That is just what I wanted to know. Now, if the man who was doing this originally was doing it right along without any directions, couldn't he have done it much quicker?—A. Possibly. I don't think there would have been much difference, though.

Re-enacted Movements As Fast as They Could.

Q. Did you have the man who was doing this get excited?—A. No, we just went through the movements as fast as we could.

Q. This would take you a pretty good time at the foot of the elevator, would it not?—A. A minute.

Q. You didn't have any body to drop, did you?—A. No.

Q. Those knots which were tied around what was supposed to be the body didn't come untied, did they?—A. No.

Q. There were no heavy weights to carry, were there?—A. The sack 107 pounds.

Q. Did you see it weighed?—A. No.

Q. I understood you to say awhile ago that there were several points where you lost time?—A. I was going to explain that a little later. There were one or two places where I told them they were losing time, but they said it all belonged that way, according to the negro's statement.

Q. What is this spot right here? (Pointing out a spot on the Bert Green diagram.)—A. Where the body was found. Grant, who was going through the actions of Conley, carried the sack back from here (indicating another point.)

Q. Now, did you say they dragged the body?—A. They dragged the sack from the elevator.

Q. Where did you get the idea of dragging?—A. I don't know. They just dragged it.

Q. Did you notice the effect of dragging on the sack?—A. No.

Q. What kind of earth was it drawn over?—A. Just the plain earth found in the basement.

A recess of a few minutes was taken while the jury took its usual afternoon soft drink.

Questioning Resumed When Jury Returns.

Hooper resumed his questioning when the jury returned from its brief recess.

Q. You have got the statements here that Conley went to the cotton box and got a piece of cloth. Where was that piece of cloth?—A. He went to the corner of the cotton room.

Q. Who went?—A. Mr. Brandt.

Q. Who is Mr. Brandt?—A. He is a gentleman whom I have known for a number of years. I don't know what his business is.

Q. Who was playing the part of Frank?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is a builder.

Q. You know his initials?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Do you know how long it would take for an excited man to tie up a bundle similar in size to a body?—A. No, I don't.

Q. "Mr. Frank, you will have to help me with this girl, she is too heavy," the man playing the part of Conley said that?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did you stop after he said that?—A. Well, we stopped as long as we supposed Conley stopped.

Q. Who was giving these instructions?—A. M. Herbert Haas was one of them.

Q. The attorney here for the defense?—A. The man sitting there.

Q. Who else?—A. Mr. Wilson.

Witness Tells of Carrying the Sack.

Q. Mr. Wilson, of the Atlanta Baggage and Cab Company?—A. Yes.

Q. That is Mr. Haas' company?—A. I don't know.

Q. So Mr. Haas gave directions about how long to pause?—A. There was no pause.

Q. Mr. Frank came running down?—A. Yes.

Q. Came pretty fast?—A. Yes.

Q. How did he pick it up?—A. Well, there were two corners to the sack.

Q. Were the feet sticking out?—A. Well, if you want an accurate opinion, I could pick up the sack as quick as I could a body.

Q. You know as a matter of fact that a body is very hard to handle?—A. Yes.

Q. Now Frank wes very nervous and trembling? Was your Frank nervous and trembling?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. After he went a little way, he let her feet drop?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, who went after the key?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. Who was he?—Mr. Frank.

Q. Well, there were two Franks?—A. No.

Q. Well, wro did the talking?—A. Mr. Haas.

Q. Dr. Haas did the talking?—A. Yes.

Q. Who unlocked the switch?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. What part did he take?—A. He was just the elevator boy.

Q. Was it not a fact that it was difficult to read in that basement?—A. We read, all right.

Q. Who did the reading?—A. Mr. Haas.

Q. Oh, yes. Did you read without glasses?—A. Mr. Haas, who did the reading, did not have to wear glasses.

Q. Well, which Mr. Haas was it?—A. Herbert.

Confused About Way The Sack Was Carried.

Q. Well, doesn't he wear glasses?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Why, look at him now. Hasn't he got on glasses?—A. Yes

Q. When you got off the elevator, who carried the body?—A. Conley.

Q. Did he carry or drag the body?—A. I am a bit confused as to whether it was dragged or carried.

Q. Do you recall how he carried it the first time?—A. Yes, he took it under his arms supporting it at his abdomen

Q. Are you at all positive of that?—A. Yes.

Q. You were in front?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, where did he stay?—A. Near the boiler.

Q. Where the body was found?—A. Yes.

Q. What did they do with the hat, the parasol and the shoe?—A. They were not there. Frank said: "What am I going to do with them."

Q. What response was made?—A. Just throw them right along there.

Q. What was thrown?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you remember every time it means Fleming and when it means Haas?—A. Yes.

Q. Who washed his hands?—A. Fleming.

Q. Who impersonated Frank in his office?—A. Fleming, he got in Frank's office and rubbed his hands on the back of his head.

Q. Now, all of a sudden, Frank looked out of the door and said: "Here's Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall"?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he do?—A. He came running back and then we eliminated the time Conley was in the wardrobe.

Q. Who was Corinthia Hall and Emma Freeman?—A. We did not have them.

Q. Well, after a while they let Conley out of the wardrobe that he wasn't in, and he said: "Gee, you kept me in there a mighty long time"?—A. Yes.

Q. Then they sat down?—A. Yes.

Dorsey and Attorney Exchange Angry Glances.

Q. About how far apart?—A. Two or three feet.

Q. Then Frank gave Conley a cigarette and let him light it, then he put the cigarette in his pocket?—A. Yes.

Q. You actually had some cigarettes?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you have any money in the box?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Then they wrote the notes?—A. No, we just took cognizance of that time.

Q. Then Frank reached for a green piece of paper and told him to write? Did you take out for that?—A. Yes.

During Mr. Hooper's cross-examination Herbert Haas, one of the attorneys for the defense put his fee on the opposite side of the table from Solicitor Dorsy. With an expression of anger, he made a remark to Solicitor Dorsey; Dorsey looked at him and said: "Did you speak to me?" Solicitor Dorsey arose to be closer to him. They exchanged a few words in an undertone. Solicitor Dorsey paled as if from anger, and resumed his seat. He and Mr. Haas exchanged several angry glances.

Q. When did you write this letter to the Grand Jury?—A. Some time ago.

Q. At whose instance?—A. At the instance of myself and at the instance of Mr. Leonard Maas, who is my attorney.

Reads Appeal for Conley Indictment.

Q. Why did you write it?—A. I will explain. The attitude of the public has been one of prejudice. Shortly after Mr. Frank was arrested I met Mr. Haas on the street.

Hooper (interrupting): "I don't care to know about that."

Attorney Arnold objected, but was overruled by Judge Roan.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. Dr. Owens, why did you write this letter?—A. I wrote it as a matter of conscience.

Attorney Arnold read the letter again, which was an appeal to the Grand Jury urging the indictment of Conley.

Q. Dr. Owens, you did not laugh as much during this pantomime as Mr. Hooper, did you?—A. No, we did not.

Q. If you did laugh, it was Conley's own testimony?—A. Yes.

Dr. Owens was excused and Judge Roan ordered another witness called, but it was reported that all of the witnesses had gone, so court adjourned until 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

1,500-Pound Shark Captured in Trap

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Aug. 13.—A 1,500-pound shark, 25 feet long, which was captured in the Milk Island trap by Albert Story and killed, after a bitter battle, is at Story's Wharf where it attracts much attention.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Brantree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

FIRST BALE AT FORT GAINES.

FORT GAINES.—The first bale of 1913 cotton was received here to-day, just three days ahead of last year. It was brought in by Tony Wells, a negro, who received a handsome premium.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louisans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temporarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

BOUT FOR ED CLABBY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Eddie Clabby, brother of Jimmy Clabby, one of the claimants of the middleweight championship, has been matched to box ten rounds with Billy Walters, formerly of the Naval station at Lake Bluff, Ill., at Hammond, Ind., on Labor Day afternoon. The weight for the contest will be 142 pounds six hours before the contest.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a premonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "'He jests at scars who never felt a wound,'" she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me caver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend caver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefore now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much. & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice.

What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was vary sweet of her. You see, Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters frem our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons & you cuddent maik me beleeve thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simped minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Missus Mace.

I know it, sed Pa. I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to introduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"But that is a sound tooth," said the dentist. "The pain is only sympathetic."

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

"She shook things up pretty bad out at my place," said one, stroking his whiskers, meditatively. "By the way, Hiram," he added, "that new barn o' yourn get hurt at all?"

"Wal," drawled the other, "I dunno. I hain't found it yet!"

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

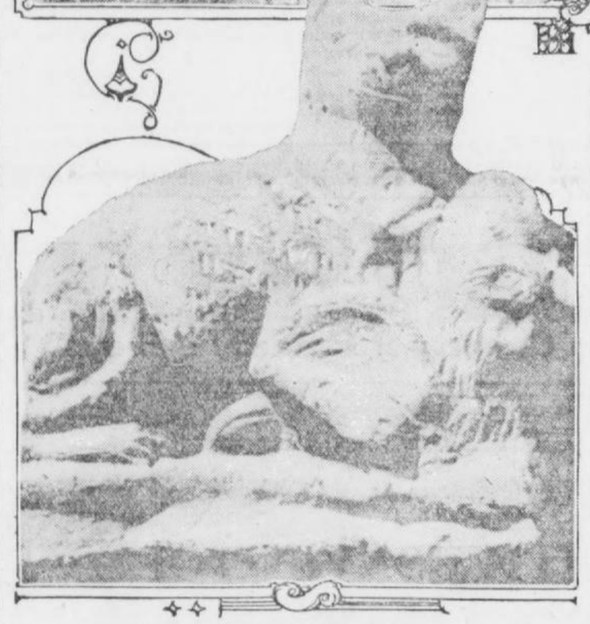

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

ALABASTER TABLE OF FIRST DYNASTY AT GERZEH.

A TOMB OPENED AT TARKHAN.

ANIMAL FIGURES AT MEMPHIS.

Civilized people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 5,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

"Hallo!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely owned the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

With the Boy.

Willie—May I go and play now, ma?

Mother—What? With those ragged trousers!

Willie—No; with the boy next door.

Ball Bearing; Long Wearing.

Condensed billing has been adopted by many business houses on account of its time-saving features.

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

is particularly adapted to this service and requires no extra attachments.

The pressure roll lock and release device, the tabulator, the back spacer and the paper gauge make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter a complete condensed billing machine.

These conveniences are part of the typewriter—not attachments—and there is no additional cost.

Write for free booklet, "The Measure of Worth." It explains how ball bearings make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter the easiest running and most durable writing machine.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar, which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly, "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card.

"We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren, for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her penciled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead,
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four tooth-brushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams, and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

The Call of the Cool North Woods

¶ Have you ever felt the thrill of an out-of-doors vacation—a few weeks of real life by the side of some picturesque lake—away from everything that savors of your daily toil?

¶ From the Great North Woods of Wisconsin and Northern Michigan Wild Nature—innumerable beautiful lakes and streams—the breath of the pine—the gamy bass—the vicious muskellunge—the agile trout and the toothsome pike—send out a call that "the man who knows" finds hard to resist.

¶ Each summer he returns to the scene of his last year's sport; each summer the appeal reaches many more who have not known the charms of this region.

¶ Why don't you arrange to go? Take a holiday in this wonderful country, where a thousand sparkling lakes teeming with gamy fish await you.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back, we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hardgrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

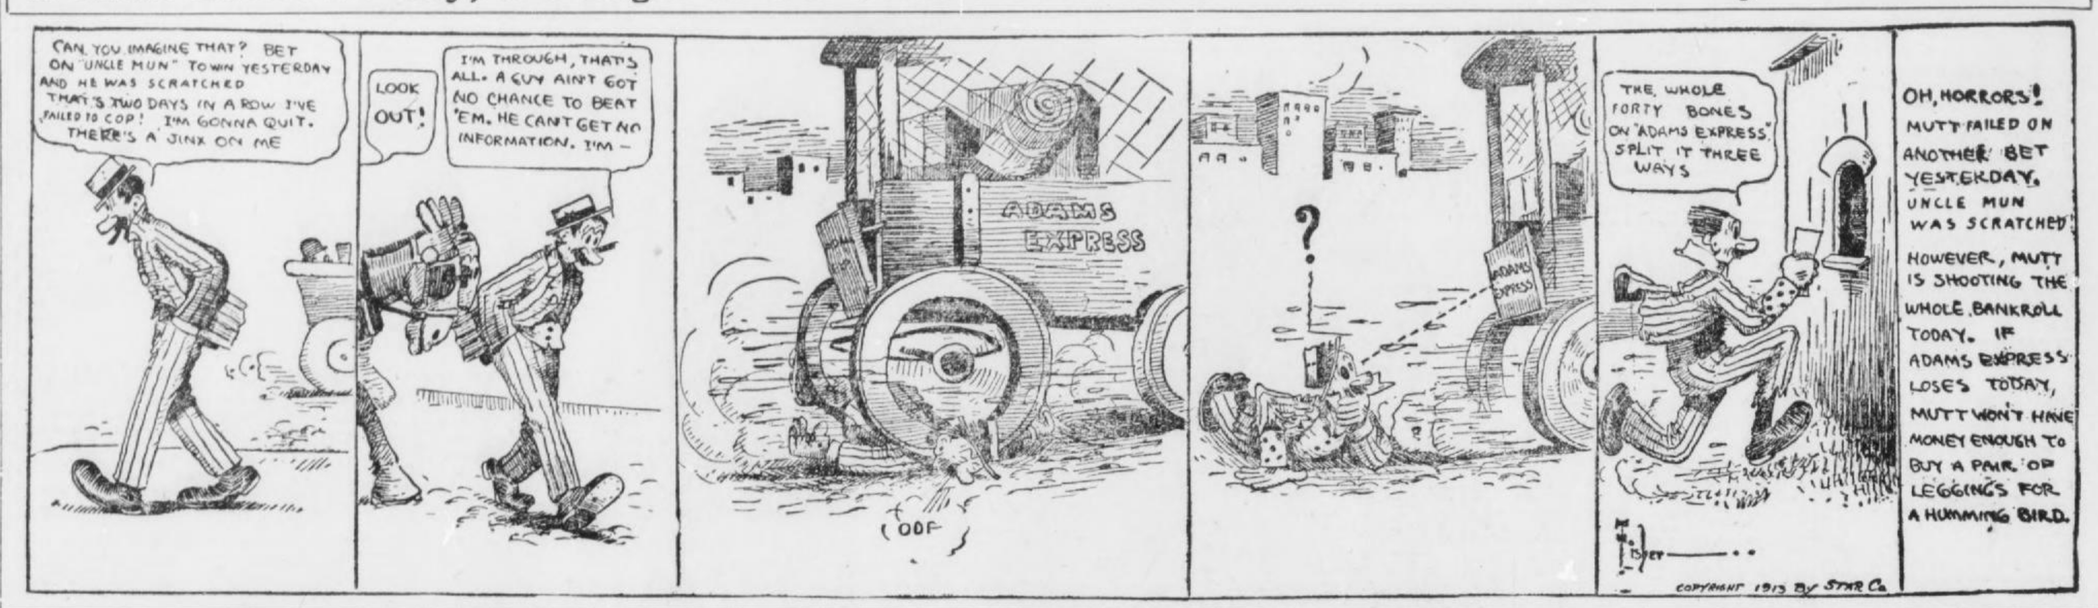

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

* * *

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a doubleheader against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V. The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Militiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Militiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles 'n heat and dust, but the alienists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knock-out—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONSISTENCY in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

* * *

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air".

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georges Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Ores., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gtting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

ACT I.

Ike Swatt, the mighty baseball star,
was smitten with a dame
Who owned a flock of lucre and an
old and honored name,
But when he offered her his hand
she coldly spurned the same.

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they needed one tie.
Our Hero ambled to the plate and
saw three strikes go by.
The game was lost while she looked on with murder in her eye.

ACT III.

For she had bet her fortune on the
prowess of his bat,
And when he took the final strike it
left the poor girl flat.
"Revenge!" she cried, in accents
wild. "I'll marry him for that!"

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated h isiegs or his thirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never won a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fistiana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

• • •

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Bovo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Wolgast and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbraith Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

• • •

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

• • •

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

• • •

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

• • •

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

• • •

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

• • •

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

• • •

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times but the locals clearly had the class.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 34 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More
What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

• • •

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozles* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error, and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

• • •

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—The Court of Impeachment will meet at the Capitol September 18 at noon.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Friends Make Hard Fight.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblymen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face" said they.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democrats now find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attempts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued declarations that he "was walking the street called straight." All sorts of "I told you so's were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor would be the victim. This material may be brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

Briefly, the articles of impeachment which were presented to the Senate to-day charge that Governor Sulzer is guilty of the following allegations:

That he filed a false statement of campaign contributions with the Secretary of State, such statement having caused "great scandal" and reproach for the Governor of the State of New York, and that the said statement did not contain all the contributions received by him, and that he was guilty of a misdemeanor in failing to file a true report.

Charge Effort to Block Quiz.

That while Governor, William Sulzer induced Louis R. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller by fraudulent methods, to withhold certain testimony from the Frawley committee, and that such acts were the commission of a felony.

That the Governor "practiced deceit and fraud and used threats and menaces" intended to prevent the committee and other witnesses subpenaed from producing books and papers desired by the committee, such act having been a misdemeanor.

That in preventing or dissuading Frederick L. Colwell from attending the hearing of the Frawley committee the Governor was also guilty of a misdemeanor in having violated section 2441 of the penal law.

That prior to his election the Governor appropriated campaign contributions to his own use, using the same, or a large portion thereof, to speculate in stocks, and that he thereby stole such checks and was guilty of larceny.

That he promised and threatened to use his office to affect the vote of certain public officers, including Assemblymen S. G. Prime, of Essex, and Thaddeus C. Sweet, of Oswego.

That the Governor corruptly used his authority as Governor to affect the price of securities in the New York Stock Exchange, in some of which he was speculating and in other ways sought to influence legislation.

In conclusion the articles read:

"The assembly demands that the Governor answer concerning all these matters before the court which is to hear the charges, and offers to present proof of said matters at such time as the honorable court for the trial of impeachment may order and appoint."

William Sulzer less than a year ago enjoyed the confidence of the people of New York State to such an extent that he was elected Governor by a vote of 19,000 in excess of that given Wilson and the national ticket, and a few months later said in an interview, "The people understand me, I understand the people, and we trust each other."

Throughout his long career in the State Assembly, in the National House of Representatives, and during his recent campaign for election as Governor and his six-month tenure of that office Governor Sulzer always posed as a poor man and a friend of the poor man.

AUTO ROAD PLAN IS PRAISED BY THE SENATE

Indorses Hearst's Sunday American Trail-Blazing Trip Through Dixie to San Francisco.

A resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, indorsing the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers to blaze an all-Southern highway from Atlanta to San Francisco, was passed unanimously by the Senate Wednesday morning.

In offering the resolution Senator McNeill declared that the proposed campaign undoubtedly meant much not only for Georgia, but for the whole South, as it will afford a direct road from the East to the South and thence to the Pacific Coast, where the great Panama-Pacific Exposition will be held in 1915.

"I offer this resolution for the indorsement of the Senate," said the Senator, "because the campaign is an effort to increase interest in good roads and highways in additions to affording a route from New York to the Pacific Coast through the South. The campaign is featured by the fact that it will not cost the State of Georgia one cent."

Senate Resolution in Full.

The resolution adopted by the Senate follows:

Resolved, That whereas the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers for an all-Southern transcontinental highway from Atlanta to San Francisco will mean much for the promotion of good roads in Georgia as well as better facilities for the interchange of farm products between different States, this Senate does hereby indorse this movement, thereby encouraging the sentiment and interest for better roads and highways.

The Senate indorsement of the campaign followed fast on the heels of the indorsement of Governor John M. Slaton, who declared Tuesday that no better sign of the progress of the people could be had than just such movements as this one.

Other prominent citizens, including Shelby Smith, County Commissioner, also have placed their hearty stamp of approval on the project.

In fact, interest in the proposed tour has exceeded the fondest expectations of the good roads and highway boosters, who are leaving no stone unturned to make the transcontinental path-finding tour a success in every particular.

Pathfinder Arranges Details.

Perhaps the busiest of the boosters is "Pathfinder" Ferguson, who will conduct the big campaign. Mr. Ferguson arrived in Atlanta last Saturday, and since that time he has gone into every detail of the first lap of the journey from Atlanta to Birmingham. Scarcely a single detail of the "official" start, which will be made next Monday, has been overlooked. The pathfinders have their road maps in readiness and the Atlanta boosters who will have the parade in hand have announced "ready."

The parade will be one of the largest ever witnessed in Atlanta. Among those who will participate will be the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief, various city officials and other prominent citizens. Mr. Ferguson will go direct to Anniston, Ala., from Atlanta and thence to Birmingham, the first "official" stopping place. The proposed route extends through Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, San Diego, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

FIRE AT ARMORY THREATENS ARSENAL

Crowd Flees as Flames Near the Ammunition Room Over Taft Hall—Damage Heavy.

Rapidly making toward the room where many thousand rounds of ammunition were stored, fire did several thousand dollars' worth of damage in the storeroom of the armory over Taft Hall in the Auditorium early Wednesday afternoon.

The main auditorium was not touched, however. The blaze did not get within 100 yards of the huge organ.

The fire was discovered by Sergeant Wardwell, of the Artillery Corps, who happened to be in the basement at the time. Smoke came down the elevator shaft and he rushed upstairs into the office of H. J. Weaver, the keeper of the building. They hurried to the upper floor and discovered smoke coming out of the storeroom in which the tents of Companies C and D are kept. An alarm was turned in and several companies responded.

Firemen Find Doors Locked.

It required several minutes for the firemen to gain entrance into the room on account of the door being locked. The armory is on the top floor and it was necessary to use an aerial truck and enter through the window. The firemen were driven back for some time by the heavy smoke from the burning tents and were compelled to play several streams on them for more than half an hour.

The tents which were burned were used in the recent encampment at St. Simons Island, and it is quite probable that the fire had smoldered for several days. The loss to the National Guard will amount to several thousand dollars.

It required but a few moments for the room to fill with water to a depth of more than two feet, the fire being unusually hard to quench on account of the waterproof tents, and having started in the center of a huge pile of canvas.

Plastering Loosened.

The water seeped through the floor and the ceiling over Taft Hall, loosening the plaster there, while a heavy stream flowed down the stairways into the great lobby. When the fire was extinguished the firemen undertook the task of baling out the storeroom, using large galvanized tubs for the work.

News of the Auditorium being on fire drew a large crowd, but when the rumor that many rounds of ammunition were stored in the apartment next to the tent room spread the crowd melted rapidly.

The fire will not interfere with a prize fight scheduled at the Auditorium Wednesday night.

Board of Examiners For Trained Nurses

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 13.—Under the provisions of a 1913 legislative act providing for the State registration of nurses, Governor Park Trammell has appointed the following trained nurses as members of the State Board of Examiners:

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—Mountain guides near Leisang to-day discovered the frozen body of a mountaineer hanging over the cliff in the Breigenz Mountains.

The man, who was a guide, had fallen from a precipice and his clothing had caught in a jutting tree root.

TAX BILL IS PASSED AFTER HARD BATTLE

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Soldier Held for Attempted Attack

PENSACOLA, Aug. 13.—Jack Gord, a soldier from Fort Barrancas, is being held in irons at the navy yard charged with attempting to attack a prominent young woman at Warrington. No warrant has been issued for him, although the United States District Attorney is now investigating the matter. It is claimed the soldier went to the room of the young woman in his stocking feet and wearing no coat or shirt. When the young woman screamed, the soldier ran and Deputy Game Warden Chapman knocked him down with a brick. The clothing of Gord was found downstairs.

The soldier denies all charges, claiming that his clothes had been stolen and that he went into the room upstairs in order not to expose himself improperly clad.

Victims of Promoter Found in Many States

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—Cashier Bohlin, of the Fort Payne bank, testified to-day that E. C. Drew, the oil well promoter on trial here for using the mail to defraud, had deposited $19,000 in the bank between January 1, 1912, and the present date. It was also shown he had deposited $6,000 in a bank at Collinsville.

The money was secured from investors, the largest amount from any one person being $1,000, which Mrs. Belcher, residing in Maine, had sent. Drew's alleged victims are found in many States.

Carmack Trial Nears Finish at Opelika

OPELIKA, Aug. 13.—It is probable that the trial of Homer Carmack, which began Tuesday afternoon, will be concluded by noon Thursday. Carmack is charged with murdering J. J. Folke, an aged Phoenix City merchant, on Sunday night, June 22.

The State is represented by Solicitor C. A. L. Samford, of the Law and Equity Court of Lee County, assisted by his brother, T. D. Samford, while the defense is being represented by C. A. Hayes, of Phenix City, and Judge A. E. Barnett, of Opelika. Judge Lum Duke is the trial judge.

Feud of Gamblers Cause of Killing

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 13.—That the killing of W. Louie (Pat) Roney by Ed Ellis on one of the principal streets of Birmingham on the night of July 31 was a chapter of a feud among gamblers was brought out in the preliminary hearing, which has been concluded, Ellis being released on $2,500 bond.

Louie Smith, a partner of Ellis, was killed in Montgomery by Roney. Smith had killed Brooks Fuller, another gambler, some months before.

Visiting Merchants Have Big Barbecue

Fall styles, new fabrics, freight rates and price terms were forgotten Wednesday afternoon by sellers and buyers alike when nearly every wholesale merchant in Atlanta and many hundreds of delegates to the Southern Merchants' convention dropped business and enjoyed a barbecue at Ponce DeLeon Park.

J. R. Little was put at the head of the barbecue committee and Lee Barnes was engaged to supervise the outdoor cookery.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries committed in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 102 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 209 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacremento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand to-day.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified.

Gives 500 Pieces of Skin to Daughter

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 13.—Mrs. Howard Gladding has given 500 tiny pieces of skin from her arms to prevent scars on the face of her daughter, four, who fell down stairs with a lighted lamp.

VAUDEVILLE PROVES DECIDED SUCCESS AT THE BONITA THEATER

After months of tabloid musical comedy, the Bonita Theater put on a high-class vaudeville bill Monday, which proved a success from the first show. There are four numbers on the bill, the Anderson Sisters and Bud Fagg being headliners.

If you appreciate light, amusing vaudeville, go to the Bonita and you will find just what you want.

There's a world of satisfaction in buying Uneeda Biscuit because you know you will get what you want—soda crackers that are oven-fresh, crisp, clean, appetizing and nourishing.

Uneeda Biscuit are always uniform in quality—they are always alike in crispness, in flavor—they are soda crackers you can depend upon. And all because Uneeda Biscuit are uncommon soda crackers packed in an uncommon way.

Five cents everywhere in the moisture-proof package.

Announcement Soon Of $150,000 Sales

Smith & Ewing's Deals In Contract Stage—Great Interest in New Office Building—Other Notes.

Sales aggregating $150,000 are expected to be announced in a week by the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency. These are in contract stage and lawyers are busy examining titles. Several are for sums around $25,000. This agency has sold through J. H. and Crawford Maddox for L. C. Durham, of Terrell County, to J. R. Smith, No. 96 East Cain street, 40 by 150 feet, for $6,000, or at the rate of $150 a foot. Mr. Smith bought for investment, and he may improve with an apartment house or building of similar character.

Comment on Skyscraper Plans.

Real estate men engaged in a good deal of discussion Wednesday on the 16-story office building which it is planned to erect on Dr. E. L. Connally's lot at the southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets. Most of them expressed the belief that an office structure additional to the Atlanta National Bank Building would lend a great deal of prestige to the retail shopping district and the entire South Side.

The probable effect on tenants and leases was also discussed with interest. Announcement that Brown & Allen might move to the Lynch property across the way, which they leased a year ago, and that the United Cigar Stores Company might take the Brown & Allen corner caused much gossip on the probable new lease rate for the corner. The Lynch corner, according to reliable authority, would cost the drug concern $450 a month. This would be exclusive of the other space upstairs and on West Alabama street, which now brings Brown & Allen an amount above the entire cost. The Lynch property was leased by the drug company for seven years as a protection, and the lease contains an option for five years more.

The United Cigar Stores Company, it is reported, made Dr. Connally an offer on the Brown & Allen corner, but negotiations have not gone far. Dr. Connally promised Ed Brown, of the drug company, the refusal on the ground floor at a price which has not been given out. This is said to apply either to the store as it stands or to the office building space. The Brown & Allen lease is up September 1, 1914.

In the leases on parts of the Connally property it is said there is a one-year cancellation clause, which is taken to mean that when Dr. Connally made the leases he had a big building in view.

The old building is bringing a handsome return, and the only hesitation Dr. Connolly has about putting up a larger structure lies in the fact that a sky-scraper would not pay as high a percentage on the investment.

Insurance Money Easy.

Insurance money continues to be lent more readily in Atlanta than previous to the announcement that $25,000,000 would be placed in Southern banks to move the crops. About twenty loan deeds went to record Tuesday. Approximately half of them were to the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, the Guaranty Trust Company, of Missouri, the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Connecticut, the Germania Savings Bank and the United States Morigage and Trust Company.

Many Expected at Dinner.

Inasmuch as Chas. P. Glover, Harris G. White, S. B. Turman and Fitzhugh Knox will be present at the monthly dinner of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday, it is believed that a large crowd of realty men will attend. The above-named agents are full of the recent trip to Winnipeg, and they will be called on to relate their experiences in the Northwest.

President White has made announcement of a change in plan for the monthly dinners. Instead of holding them at 6:30 p. m., the time will be 12:30 to 2 p. m., and the place will be the Hotel Ansley. Friday's dinner will be held in the Georgia place room of the hotel.

Interesting Apartment Leases.

H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have leased apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and will be quartered there this winter. The leases were made by Albert S. Adams, of the R. M. Grant Agency, who is the exclusive agent for this structure. Gen. R. K. Evans will move from the Bell place, northeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, to the Georgian Terrace.

The near approach of fall finds many people ready to move into new locations, and the renting agencies are in the midst of their busiest season. Mr. Aycock, manager of the renting department of the Charles P. Glover agency, declared that the tendency was to re-lease rather than to choose different houses.

Peachtree Lease Expected.

Another Peachtree lease is expected to be announced soon. The United Motor Atlanta Company, now the Maxwell Company, will move from its present location at the foot of Currier street to some location that suits its wholesale business better, and the Turman, Black & Calhoun agency, who have the building, will announce the plans of another concern which will move in.

Big Acreage Sale.

Extensive acreage tracts in South and Middle Georgia continue to be handled through Atlanta real estate agents. Sisson & Miller have sold to T. R. Owsley, through J. T. Kimbrough, the well-known realty agent, 160 acres of land three miles north of Fort Valley for $9,000, or $56 an acre.

Support for Exhibit Project.

Indications pointed Wednesday to success in the effort to place Atlanta-made goods permanently on exhibit in the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building, southeast corner of North Pryor street and Auburn avenue. Several additional merchants and manufacturers assured the merchants and manufacturers' committee that they would take space. It has been feared that not enough exhibitors would be in the building to make the project a success, and W. H. Leahy, of the local industrial bureau, has given notice that prospective lessees must hurry and sign up for space, or it will be too late.

Unless action is taken at once the building will be converted into offices, as originally planned. Work is under way and the Chamber of Commerce officials want to know the decision of the exhibitors so as to determine definitely the character of the building.

Pushing Peachtree Work.

Indications were Wednesday that the county convicts would finish up during the day or early Thursday Peachtree repairs as far south as Fifteenth street and would be able to turn back from Fifteenth to Brookwood. There is probably five days' work before the entire job is completed, and then the gang will go back to the stretch lying between W. S. Witham's country place and the DeKalb County line.

People using Peachtree of late have expressed great satisfaction over the paving. The County Commissioners decided to make repairs rather than lay new material and to make the job new next year. The old paving was plowed up, pulverized and packed with a giant roller and for the present it does as well as when it was first laid.

Building Permits.

$100—J. M. Tuggle, No. 21 Meldrim street; addition. D. F. Light.

$150—D. O. Martin, No. 307 Central avenue; additions. Day work.

COTTON SELLS OFF AFTER EARLY GAIN

The Market Ruled Very Narrow, Though There Was Some Cotton Wanted on Easy Spots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and according sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and on matter how dry it remains, this cotton will come into the market freely until the receipts from the eastern half of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

As the map showed little or no rain and the detailed weather report posted at 12 o'clock, giving temperatures and rainfall for yesterday, was disappointing to the bearish element, as there was seventeen points in Oklahoma showing temperatures from 100 to 109 and ten points in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 104, with much less rainfall than had been expected from the private reports that were received late yesterday afternoon. The market ruled very narrow, though there was apparently some cotton wanted on all easy spots. Some of the prominent interests who have been identified with the bull side of late were put down as the early sellers. It is purely a weather market and much depends on what may happen during the next two or three days.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 3 to 6 points from the closing quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows rather general precipitation in the eastern part of Texas, although light so far. Generally fair in the western half of Texas and Oklahoma overnight, partly cloudy to fair in the rest of the belt. Scattered showers fell in Tennessee, the south central Gulf and Atlantic coast districts. Indications are for further precipitation west today, particularly in the southern and eastern part of Texas.

Liverpool came in very poor, with futures at one time, as much as 4 lower than due.

The last report to us from Liverpool says: "Feeling and opinion continue bearish, chiefly on account of the bad trade outlook. Spinners and manufacturers are complaining bitterly and understand similar conditions exist on the continent, so that even with a moderate crop, a bull movement appears difficult."

This accounts for the poor response to reports of crop deterioration from Texas and Oklahoma and the slow business in forward shipments.

Trading here is quiet this morning with the market dull but steady around last night's closing figures. The relatively small new crop receipts, in view of the reports of active ginning in Texas, are the subject of comment. This is generally accounted for by the slow export demand, and the unfavorable news from Liverpool is in line with it.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Unless the drouth situation in the Southwest is relieved, we expect no activity at present.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think general conditions warrant any marked upturn at this time, and in the event of good soaking rains in the South west, a lower range of values will undoubtedly result.

COTTON GOSSIP

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third driest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Carke amendment was likely to be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas, with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showers and weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scatterd showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi De Lata Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record; first bale in 1902 being received August 10. This is about six days earlier than the average."

Temperatures: Galveston, clear and warm, good shower last night; Houston, clear, 76; San Antonio, clear, 82; Taylor, clear, 85; Dalas clear, 85; Fort Worth, clear, 84; Sherman, clear, 80; Denison, clear, 82; Paris, clear, 80; Texarkana clear, 76; Little Rock, clear, 78; Oklahoma City, clear, 81; Chickasha, clear, 81; Muskogee, clear, 88; McAlester, clear, 87; rain yesterday, Amite, clear, 69; Baton Rouge clear, 78; Lafayette, cloudy, 73; Donalsonville, clear, 72; Alexandria, clear, 75; Franklin, cloudy, 74; Morgan City, cloudy, warm; Robeline, clear, 69; Grand Cane, clear, 71; Minden, clear, 69; Lake Charles, cloudy, 69; Helena, part cloudy, warm; Hattiesburg, clear, 80.

Rainfall: Taylor, .22; Galveston, .42; Palestine, .01; Fort Smith, .02; New Orleans, .24; Mobile, .04; Nashville, .04; Atlanta, .46; Wilmington, .01; Houston, .04

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Were the cotton market freed from the menace of hostile legislation it would probably rise sharply. Crop damage reports are coming in from the west in great numbers. But, as matters stand, the markets reflect a heavy tone even in the presence of a more active demand for forward export freight room. Big crop people adhere to their belief that the drouth affected area in the west does not cover a large amount of territory and that even the dry region has produced crops in dryer years than this.

"Nevertheless, the Weather Bureau stresses the bad state of affairs resulting from lack of moisture in Oklahoma and Texas, and the detailed reports from 198 Texas stations for July show a rainfuil deficiency of 1.62 inches, and a temperature excess of 1.2 degrees over the July normal.

"On the other hand, print cloths are now quoted at 3⅝c, or ⅛ of a cent below the quotations at this time last year, which is equal to about 2½c a pound on raw cotton. But raw cotton values are now very little lower than they were at this time last year. Meanwhile, trade attention continues to center on the weather in the west.

Memphis wires: "Semi-monthly condition report of J. B. Turner shows following condition or August 8 with comparisons to Government's figures on July 25:

"North Carolina, 83 against 77; South Carolina, 82 against 75; Georgia, 80 against 76; Alabama, 78 against 79; Mississippi, 78 against 77, Tennessee, 87 against 90; Arkansas, 85 against 87; Louisiana, 78 against 79; Oklahoma, 72 against 61; Texas, 74 against 81; United States 77.8 against 79.6."

By Government July 25: "The status of the crop is now just the reverse of that of the early season in that highest conditions are shown in the Eastern and Atlantic States, which fact is due to exceptionally favorable weather there and severe drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, operating to advance the one and pull down the other. It is seldom that cotton maintains at this date the luxuriant growth and vigorous life that is characteristic of the plant in Georgia and the Carolinas."

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—There will be showers during the next 36 hours in all the Northern States east of the Mississippi river. From Tennessee and the Carolinas southward the weather will be fair, except for local showers on the Gulf coast.

The temperatures will rise slowly in the Northern and Eastern States east of the Mississippi River. Forecast till 8 p. m. Thursday:

General Forecast.

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Thursday.

Virginia—Unsettled, local showers to-night or Thursday; warmer in central portion to-night.

North Carolina—Fair in west; showers in east portion to-night or Thursday.

Florida—Fair to-night, except showers in southwestern portion to-night or Thursday.

Louisiana—Fair in north; showers in southern portion to-night or Thursday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Thursday.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—The market shows same old nervousness over Texas weather. A few light rains fell in eastern Texas, but as a whole the State remains quite dry and hot. The semi-monthly condition reports show heavy losses in the Southwest, but improvement in the East, nearly offsetting the losses. Likely that drouth must continue or rains come or some setback occur in the East to move the market far away from 11 cents.

TEXAS COMPANY ATTRACTIVE ISSUE

Canadian Pacific and Harrimans Also Higher—Sentiment Becoming Optimistic.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ¾ to 119¾, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¼, for a gain of 1¾.

After opening with a gain of ⅛, Southern Pacific went to 91⅜, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154½ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ⅝, American Smelting ⅜, Bethlehem Steel ⅝, United States Rubber common ⅛, Western Union ⅛, Utah Copper ⅜, Steel common ⅛, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ⅜. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

Pronounced strength developed in the leading issues in the last half of the first hour and prices moved up a point or more fro mthe initial figures. Canadian Pacific was in brisk demand, advancing 1½, while gains ranging around 1¼ were recorded in Lehigh Valley, Steel common, Reading, Union Pacific and American Smelting. Substantial gains were also noted in Erie, St. Paul, Anaconda and Amalgamated Copper.

A number of profit-taking sales were made in the second hour, however, and many of the important issues receded fractionally.

Call money is loaning and renewing at 2¼ per cent.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 90 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

For Success, Health, Happiness, Look Within!

Why Wait for Somebody Else to Bring Us These Things? Don't Be a Spiritual Looter; Pray Often, but Work, First, Last and Always.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ON retiring at night, just before going off to sleep, say, either mentally or orally as you choose:

I am health, strength, peace, happiness and prosperity and everything that goes to make for good.

Pure, good, rich blood is flowing through my body, removing all obstructions and bringing peace, health and harmony.

I am well and strong and vital.

I am beautiful, pure and good.

I am on the road to eternal youth.

I am opulent, happy and free.

Last but not least:

I will arise with unusual energy and radiance and power of accomplishment in the morning.

All I ask is that you do not try to dictate the way these things shall or may come, and I will guarantee them to cure anything from poverty to rheumatism.—Dr. James W. Cormany, Mount Carroll, Ill.

LET every reader of this column take with seriousness these emphatic statements of Dr. Cormany, and put them to the test.

Nothing Is the Matter With the World, Life or Destiny.

There is nothing the matter with the world, with life, with destiny.

Everything we desire or want or need waits for our claiming.

But the majority of God's children are waiting for SOMEBODY BESIDES THEMSELVES to bring them these things.

Not more than one human being in one thousand looks to HIMSELF and the Power back of himself for success, health and happiness.

The other 999 look to luck; to chance; to influence; to favors of friends and acquaintances; to doctors; to patent medicines; to some hoped-for miracle, and all the time a mine of wealth and reservoir of power within themselves lies unexplored and unused.

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

.:. BEAUTY .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade,
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

FRANK'S CLASSMATES AT COLLEGE TELL OF HIS GOOD CHARACTER

A vicius attack by inuendo only by Solicitor Dorsey upon the character of Leo Frank and a sensational interruption of his questions by the prisoner's mother were the features of the Frank trial late Wednesday afternoon. The man on the stand, Ashley Jones, denied absolutely any knowledge of the things the Solicitor indirectly charged.

Dr. William Owens followed the sensational incident with a description of the re-enactment of Jim Conley's story made to show that the event he described could not have happened in the time he specified.

"Mr. Jones, you never heard of Frank having girls on his lap in the office?" Dorsey had asked.

"No; nor you neither!" cried Frank's mother.

"Keep quiet, keep quiet; I am afraid you will have to sit here and listen to this a long time," said the Solicitor.

Mrs. Frank broke into tears and was assisted from the room, crying: "My God, my God!"

Mother and Wife Sit With Bowed Heads.

The Solicitor's examination of Jones had been of a most sensational nature and during the portion of it leading up to the interruption by Mrs. Frank the mother of the defendant and her daughter sat with lowered heads listening to the questions and answers.

Following the outbreak, Attorney Arnold jumped to his feet and shouted: "Your honor, this is outrageous. We are not responsible for the lies and slanders that cracked-brain extremists have circulated since this murder occurred."

"I will rule that the Solicitor can not ask anything that he has heard since the murder," replied Judge Roan. "He can ask on this cross-examination what happened before."

"Your honor," returned Solicitor Dorsey, "I am not four-flushing about this. I am going to present a witness to prove the charges.

Attorney Arnold interrupted the speaker.

"Your honor," he said, "if any more of these gross slanders are brought up, I am going to make a motion for a new trial."

Owens' Testimony Admitted.

Judge Roan ruled Wednesday afternoon that the testimony of Dr. William Owens should be admitted over the objection of Solicitor Dorsey. He said he had some doubts of it but that he would let it go to the jury.

The decision was a most decisive victory for the defense. It enabled Frank's lawyers to introduce testimony in regard to a striking reproduction of the events connected with the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as described by Jim Conley for the purpose of showing that it would have been absolutely impossible for these events to have taken place between 12:56 and thetime that Frank left the factory for home.

As Solicitor Dorsey was making an impassioned plea for the exclusion of the testimony and describing the terror that must have hastened the movements of the little factory girl's murderer, Mrs. J. W. Coleman' Mary Phagan's mother, broke down utterly and wept for several minutes.

Court opened in the afternoon with the attorneys arguing the admission of Dr. Owens' testimony. Luther Rosser cited case after case in which evidence similar to that proposed by the defense had been admitted and allowed to stand.

Solicitor Dorsey contended that the witness was not testifying as an expert, but was giving his opinion on a matter concerning which the jurors were just as well qualified to judge as the witness.

Dr. Owens was prepared to testify that with three others he went through all the movements described by Conley, and that it required the two men who took the parts of Conley and Frank eighteen and one-half minutes to carry a burden representing the body of Mary Phagan to the basement and return to the office floor.

Lemmie Quinn, foreman in the metal department of the National Pencil Factory, told a story on the witness stand Wednesday in the trial of Leo M. Frank which gave the lie to another of Jim Conley's courtroom statements.

Conley testified that he saw Lemmie Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came in. The two girls entered some time between 12 and 12:15. Quinn said he did not get to the factory until about 12:20, and that he saw neither of the girls.

Aside from the testimony of Quinn, the forenoon was marked by the opening of the gates for all of the character testimony against Frank which the State wishes to produce.

Three witnesses were produced by the defense to testify to Frank's good character. When the first one was called Solicitor Dorsey objected, saying:

"I don't see how this testimony is material, your honor, unless the defense intends to make the defendant's character an issue."

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

Sleepers Near Death In Burning Residence

Fire which spread rapidly forced Eugene R. Barmore, members of his family and boarders at his residence, 215 Capitol Avenue, to flee for their lives early Wednesday morning. They were compelled to leave the burning house in their night attire.

The fire was discovered by a neighbor, who rushed to the Barmore residence and beat upon the door until he had awakened the occupants. The roof and part of the second floor were destroyed.

WHITE AND WHITNEY READY

5,000 Fans Expected to Witness Great Battle in Auditorium To-night.

Charley White, of Chicago, the best 128-pound boy in the world, and Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, who has a list of victories a mile long, are waiting for the bell to send them on their way in a ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both are in grand condition. They weighed in this afternoon at the Atlanta Athletic Club and neither moved the beam when the weight was placed on the 133-pound mark.

The biggest crowd that ever attended a boxing contest in Atlanta will be on hand. Fully 5,000 fans will be at the ringside when the first bout is staged.

The first scrap of the evening will be between Kid Payne and Battling O'Leary. It is scheduled to go four rounds. Then Mike Saul and Terry Nelson will slug through six rounds.

The semi-windup follows. It will be a ten-round affair between Kid Young and Charley Lee.

Lou Castro will rerefee.

Big Improvements At Shorter College

ROME, Aug. 13.—Great improvements are being made at Shorter College. Workmen are giving the walls of every room a coat of fresh paint; all bathrooms have been enameled, and all floors, everyone of which is of reinforced concrete, have been freshly painted.

A large out-of-doors gymnasium, 150 by 400 feet, is probably the greatest thing that the college has ever done for its students. There will be room for four or five tennis courts, several basket ball games and sufficient space for all kinds of gymnastics, calisthenics, etc. Electric lights will be arranged on the grounds, so that the girls may use the tennis courts and basket ball grounds in the evening.

The attendance for the next session at Shorter will be very large, the registration being far in excess of any previous year.

Calmly Smokes Pipe As His House Burns

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Interest has been aroused here over the burning of the home of S. S. Tarver, a negro plumber, which was located near Ninth and Quintard streets, one of the best residence sections of the city. There are strong indications of incendiarism.

Whether the negro burned his own home to get the insurance or whether it was burned by white people who had been wanting to buy to get ihm out of the neighborhood, is a point of debate. It is said the negro was found in an alley calmly smoking his pipe while the house burned.

5th District Masons To Meet at Conyers

The Masonic lodges in Fulton, DeKalb, Douglas, Campbell and Rockdale Counties, comprising the Fifth Masonic District, will meet in annual convention Thursday at Conyers.

After the transaction of the regular business the three Masonic degrees will be conferred in extra full form by three special teams.

A barbecue and watermelon cutting are the entertainment program. A special train leaves Atlanta on the Georgia road at 7:30 a. m.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Generally fair Wednesday; local showers Thursday.

LATEST NEWS

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Robert F. Wagner, president pro tem of the Senate, said to-day that although the date of the beginning of the Sulzer impeachment court proceedings had not been decided upon yet, it had been tentatively agreed that it would be September 22.

MEMPHIS, TENN, Aug. 13.—The first bale of 1913 cotton sold for $155.50, or at a rate of 30 cents per pound, on the floor of the Cotton Exchange here to-day. The proceeds were donated to the Bachelors' Baby Hospital.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador from the United States to Mexico on leave, threw a bombshell into the State Department to-day by vigorously attacking the disclaimer of the British foreign office of its recognition of General Huerta as President of Mexico.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Aug. 13.—At Stevens Pottery, about eight miles from this city to-day Mrs. Will Winters was accidentally killed with a shotgun by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Winters. She was returning the gun her husband had borrowed from his brother. As she reached the house she playfully pointed the weapon at her sister-in-law and it was accidentally discharged.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—Although required by Attorney General McReynolds to release former Governor Brito, of Mexico, on $10,000 bail, United States Commissioner Arthur Browne to-day refused to order the Mexican's release. McReynold's action was taken at the request of Secretary of State Bryan. Brito is held on a charge of murder and robbery preferred by the Mexican Federal Government.

WINCHESTER, KY., Aug. 13.—Bob Deaton went on the stand today in the trial of Rice Tom Davidson for the assassination of former Sheriff Ed Callahan. He made a full confession of the alleged plot, corroborating Smith, Dan Deaton and others who have testified for the Commonwealth. Bob Deaton is also a defendant in the case.

Not One Petticoat For Shivering Girl

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Modern fashions that have ruled out the petticoat and a thief caused Miss May Leonard to walk eight blocks clad in shoes and stockings and an extremely light raincoat. She went bathing at Clarendon Beach. Some one rifled her locker while she was in the water. They left nothing but shoes and stockings. Her bathing suit was rented and the beach officials would not permit her to wear it home.

Miss Leonard asked every girl in the dressing room for the loan of a petticoat. Every one of them was wearing a skirt that permitted no petticoat. The only garment she could borrow was a raincoat.

Clayton to Oppose Hobson for Senate

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 13.—Congressman Henry D. Clayton, who has been appointed by Governor O'Neal to fill the unexpired term of Senator Joseph F. Johnston, deceased, announces his intention of entering the race for the full term.

Congressman Richard Pearson Hobson had already opened his campaign for the senatorial toga of Senator Johnston, and will continue in the race. He has made a number of speeches in different sections of the State.

Dozing Man Killed By Painted Face Joke

YONKERS, N. Y., Aug. 13.—While William Colbert, a carpenter, was dozing in a lunchroom here, a joker touched up the sleeper's countenance with shoe polish.

When Colbert awoke, someone held a mirror before his face. As soon as he recognized himself, Colbert burst out laughing and fell dead.

TRAGEDY RE-ENACTED TO PROVE JIM CONLEY'S STORY FALSE

Frank Trial Scene of Hot Battle on Admissibility of Evidence for Defense

COUNSEL FOR STATE AND DEFENSE IN HOT ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE ROAN

Judge L. S. Roan.

Solicitor Dorsey. Frank Hooper. Reuben Arnold. Luther Z. Rosser.

food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 30 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed tomorrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Dorsey—No, he hasn't a right to shoot in statements.

heartily.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any process in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the State can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank stumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office. Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quiet a while.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches,

watch man comes. I will pay him myself."

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right. Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you.

"That's exactly what we propose to do," retorted Arnold.

The crowded room of spectators knew that this was a challenge by the defense for the State to do its worst. Frank's lawyers deliberately had introduced Frank's character into the trial, apparently indicating that they had no fear of the evidence which the prosecution might bring forth.

It is known that the State has made elaborate preparations for an attack on the young superintendent's character with stories of gross immorality.

Solicitor Dorsey was asked Wednesday how many witnesses he expects to call.

"I don't know," he replied. "It largely depends on the number that the defense calls and the nature of their testimony."

Those called by Attorney Arnold at the forenoon session were:

Alfred L. Lane, a merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902.

Philip Nash, electrical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute during the same period.

Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, Brooklyn, who knew Frank at Pratt Institute and also at Cornell University.

All testified as to Frank's good character.

Frank Payne, former office boy at the factory, was asked to particularize as to certain incidents mentioned in the testimony of Jim Conley and C. B. Dalton. He said that he never knew Frank to have women in his office, although it was his custom to be at the office at the times Conley and Dalton testified that these gay parties took place.

A full three-quarters of the forenoon was consumed in a legal wrangle over the admissibility of Dr. William Owens' testimony. Dr. Owens was ready to testify in regard to the reproduction of the alleged movements of Conley and Frank in disposing of Mary Phagan's body, as Conley recited them on the witness stand. Judge Roan reserved his decision until afternoon.

Quinn was questioned minutely in regard to the time of his visit to the factory as soon as he was called to the stand. Attorney Arnold began by having him detail his movements throughout the day from the time he arose in the morning.

The foreman told an apparently straightforward story, although the Solicitor did not have time for cross-examination before the noon recess. He estimated that he entered the factory at about 12:20 o'clock. All of the doors were unlocked, he said, and the doors of the outer and inner offices on the second floor were open. The safe door, he thought, also was open. He testified that his conversation with Frank was very brief and that he left the factory within two or three minutes.

He said that R. P. Barrett, designated by Attorney Arnold as the "Christopher Columbus" of the Frank trial, had discovered the blood spots and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. Barrett frequently had remarked to him, Quinn testified, that he would draw down the big rewards if Frank was convicted. Quinn said that Barrett had mentioned $2,700 at one time and $4,500 at another as the sum he would receive because he had been the first to find the blood spots and other evidence.

The witness said that it was nothing unusual for factory employees to be hurt and bleed. He cited the case of C. P. Gilbert, who, he said, had been badly injured by the bursting of an emery wheel and was carried, bleeding, past the very place where Barrett discovered the blood spots.

He testified that he never had seen Frank speak to Mary Phagan and did not know that he knew her.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon in the dispute over Dr. Owens' testimony.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal.

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was carried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to re-enact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

Numerous authorities were cited by both sides. Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there not certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear, anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate-Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the elevator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley box of cigarettes. Conley lights cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes. Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Frank: "There is $200." Conley takes money and looks at it a little bit.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, don't you pay another dollar when that Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." (Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home.

Awaiting the Joyful Sound

The Wonderful Music That Bursts Forth When the Stork Arrives.

That funny little brassy cry that echoes the arrival of the new baby is perhaps the most cherished remembrance of our lives. And thousands of happy mothers owe their preservation to health and strength to Mother's Friend. This is an external remedy that is applied to the abdominal muscles. It relieves all the tension, prevents tenderness and pain, enables the muscles to expand gently, and, when baby comes, the muscles relax naturally, the form is preserved without laceration or other accident.

You will find Mother's Friend on sale at almost any drug store, as it is one of the standard, reliable remedies that grandmothers everywhere have relied upon.

With its daily use during the period of expectation, there is no weakness, no nausea, no morning sickness, no pain, distress or strain of any kind. Its influence is truly remarkable, as it penetrates the tissues and renders them pliant and easily governed by the demands of nature. You will be surprised at its wonderful effect and what a grateful relief it affords.

Especially to young women Mother's Friend is one of the greatest of all helpful influences.

BOTH SIDES AIM FOR JUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF FRANK

With Judge, Jury and Councillors Performing Duty Well, Square Deal Is Assured.

By Jas. B. Nevin.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will oe prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

GIRLS WHO TESTIFY FOR DEFENSE OF FRANK

MISS REBECCA CARSON. MISS CORINTHIA HALL.

200 Want Ad Fiances Swindled, Is Charge

PRINCETON, IND., Aug. 13.—More than 200 men are said to have been victims of the alleged marriage frauds worked by Miss Ora Mabel Farris, 35 years old, assisted by her father and mother. The three were held to-day, charged with using the mails to defraud.

Using the name of Susie Meyers, the postal authorities charge Miss Farris would advertise for a husband in widely scattered newspapers, invite correspondence, become engaged and then ask for money to come to her fiance.

10-Year-Old Girl to Christen the Nevada

RENO, NEV., Aug. 13.—Eleanor Anne Siebert, ten years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Siebert, of this city, and a niece of Governor Oddie, has been selected to act as sponsor at the launching of the battleship Nevada, now nearing completion at the Fore River Works at Quincy, Mass.

Little Miss Siebert will break a bottle of wine over the prow of the ship as she names it after her State about October 1.

State Calls More Witnesses; Defense Builds Up an Alibi

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after Frank arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

Kneel in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Attorney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up, angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did, and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix, of Gwinett County, was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Gwinett County.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. How many acres of land do you own?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County, was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 890 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He declared he was a farmer of Gwinnett County, who had known C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Brooklyn Man First Character Witness.

Alfred Lane, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the first character witness to be introduced by the defense. He is a wealthy merchant of that city. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A merchant of New York.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902, and later at Cornell.

Q. You say you knew him at Pratt Institute for four years?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know him at Cornell?—A. Yes; I didn't go to Cornell, but I saw him much in Brooklyn.

Q. How old was he when you were together at Pratt Institute?—A. Between 17 and 21 years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. What is it—good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey did not cross-examine the witness. He was excused and Philip Nash, of Ridgewood, N. J., was called. Arnold examined him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Electrical engineer for a telephone company.

Q. Where did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I was with him at Pratt Institute for four years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it good or bad?—A. Good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination. Richard A. Knight, of Brooklyn, a consulting engineer and a college mate of Frank's at both the Pratt Institute and Cornell, was called by Attorney Arnold.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you know him?—A. I was his college mate at Pratt Institue and at Cornell.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Former Office Boy Called by Defense.

The witness was excused and Frank Payne, a former office boy at the National Pencil Company, was called.

Q. How old are you?—A. 16.

Q. When did you last work at the pencil factory?—A. About 8 months ago.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. Nowhere.

Q. Were you there last Thanksgiving day?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a day it was?—A. It snowed.

Q. Were Mr. Frank and Mr. Schiff there?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do?—A. Mr. Schiff sent me up to the fourth floor to fix some boxes.

Q. Who was up there?—A. Jim Conley.

Q. What time did he leave there?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley when you left?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the factory on Saturday?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did Mr. Frank ever have any women there?—A. No.

Q. How many weeks were you there?—A. Five or six.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were your duties there?—A. General office boy.

Q. You spent most of your time in Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you quit working there?—A. It has been seven or eight months ago.

Q. Did you ever see any beer bottles around there?—A. No.

Q. You say Jim Conley was there last Thanksgiving morning?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you notice him?—A. He was sweeping around there until about 10:30 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Lemmie Quinn Called to Stand.

The witness was excused and Lemmie Quinn was called. Arnold questioned the witness.

Q. Where did you work?—A. I am foreman of the metal department of the National Pencil Company.

Q. Is that the department Mary Phagan worked in?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Memorial day?—A. Yes, it was a holliday at the factory.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Barrett discovered the spots on the floor of the metal room and some strands of hair on a lathe?—A. Yes. He mentioned those discoveries to me.

Q. Did he ever mention any reward he expected to get if Mr. Frank was convicted?—A. Yes, he mentioned $2,700 once and another time $4,500. He said he had been told that if Mr. Frank was convicted there wasn't any chance to keep him out of his reward. He wanted my advice. I told him I was not a lawyer and could not tell him.

Q. Had anyone noticed them before Barrett said he discovered them?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember a man named Gilbert getting cut in the metal room and bleeding around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. About a year ago.

Q. Do you know of anyone being cut since then?—A. Yes, a boy was cut on the hand.

Q. Did he go by the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know what that stuff was over the spot on the floor?—A. No.

Q. Do you know what has ever become of that hair?—A. I think the detectives have it.

Hair Might Have Blown Into Lathe.

Q. Is there any place in that room where the girls dress their hair?—A. Why, there's a little gas jet about ten feet from the lathe.

Q. This jet is between the lathe and the west windows and a breeze might blow the hair across to this lathe, might it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get your pay Friday night before the murder?—A. About 20 minutes to 6.

Q. What was the last time before the murder that you saw Mary Phagan?—A. The Monday before.

Q. Why did she not work that week?—A. We were out of material and she was laid off.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank speak to Mary Phagan?—A. No, I never did.

Q. You were examined about all these things by the Coroner and they were impressed on your memory, were they not?—A. Yes.

Mr. Quinn told in detail what he did during the morning up to the time he returned to the factory. He said the front door of the factory was unlocked.

Q. When you got up to Frank's outer office was the door open or shut?—A. Open.

Q. How about the door to the inner office?—A. Open.

Q. How about the safe door in the outer office?—A. I think it was open.

Q. What time was this?—A. About 12:20.

Fixed Time by Going to Market.

Q. Why do you fix the time at that? A. Well, when I left home I was anxious to get up town before the meat markets closed. I left home at 11 minutes to 12. Doing the things I did, I judge it was about 12:20 o'clock when I got to the factory.

Q. You say you left home at 11:45, did you look at your watch?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you want to get to town?—A. Before 12, because I was afraid the stores would be closed.

Q. How long did it take you to walk to the market?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. What time was it when you got there?—A. The whistle blew while I was there.

Q. Can you tell how long you remained there?—A. No.

Q. You went to the pharmacy from there?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was that from the market?—A. About three doors.

Q. What pharmacy was that?—A. Benjamin's.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. About three minutes.

Q. Did you see anyone else at the factory besides Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. What office was he in?—A. The inner office.

Q. What did you say?—A. I asked him if Mr. Schiff was in. He said, "No."

Q. Did you say anything else?—A. I made some remark about his not being able to keep me away even on a holiday.

Q. What time was it when you left?—A. About 12:20.

Q. Where did you go?—A. To Devore's pool parlor. It was about 12:30 then.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To the cafe where I met Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman.

White Substance Used on Machines.

Q. What did you go to see Schiff for?—A. We had a baseball wager and I went there to talk to him about it.

Q. How many minutes did you stay at the Busy Bee?—A. I can not tell exactly.

Q. But you do know what time you went to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to anyone at the poolroom?—A. Yes, McMurray.

Q. Where did you go from Devore's?—A. The Atlanta Theater.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. About fifteen minutes. I bought tickets for the night.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Back to Devore's.

Q. Who is John Lamey?—A. He worked with me.

Q. Did you go to the factory Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you talk to?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Montag.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. Three or four minutes.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. At Bloomfield's?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he dressed?—A. In blue of black.

Q. What is the purpose of that white preparation used at the plant?—A. To clean the machines.

Carried in Buckets, Spatters on Floors.

Q. How was it carried?—A. In buckets.

Q. It spatters over everything?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Frank Monday?—A. Yes, Monday afternoon.

Q. How was he dressed?—In brown.

Q. Look at this picture (showing the witness the State's diagram drawn by Bert Green, of The Georgian). Does it show Mary Phagan's machine?—A. No.

Q. Point out the place where Barrett claims to have found the hair. Did you find any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall the place near the closet where the negro said he found the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Well, if somebody had washed up blood in one place would it not have been the reasonable thing to wash it up in another?

"I object," said Dorsey. "That's a question for argument, your honor.

"It's such a good argument," said Arnold, "that I could not help it. I withdraw the question."

Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. The cross-examination of Quinn was to be taken up immediately then.

Argument on Admissibility Of Evidence Resumed.

The argument on the inadmisibility of Dr. Owens' testimony was resumed with the opening of the afternoon session. Attorney Rosser addressed the court.

"The rule at the beginning of this hearing was that we would be permitted to introduce any evidence that would tend to shed light on the mystery," he said.

Attorney Rosser at this juncture read a Georgia decision tending to show evidence of this kind as being admissible. Judge Roan interrupted.

"That part of it is all right, Mr. Rosser," he said. "The only point is whether the conditions are similar."

Rosser: "All right, your honor, I will read you some authorities on that point."

Attorney Rosser read a decision in a case in which such an experiment had been allowed in which the jury could make allowances for the differences.

"We will show that this man walked as fast as he could," said Rosser. "Is it possible that this court could have so far forgotten its common sense as to permit this jury to draw its own conclusions?"

"Only God Almighty can made identity," Rosser continued, "and He hasn't done it yet. There are no two leaves alike in the forest. I said a while ago that it was a one-horsed lawyer who wrote the opinion cited by my friend Dorsey. With a few exceptions, you and I know the authors of law books have not common sense enough to make a living practicing law.

"I don't think any more unsound principle of law could be embodied in the statutes than the one involved here, and I don't want to get in the contempt of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. A man's life is involved and important light might be excluded. One of the cases I was just showing you said in cases of dissimilarity that the judge shall instruct the jury to make allowances."

Dorsey took up the argument.

"I take no issue with Mr. Rosser," said the Solicitor, "about this Georgia case by the Court of Appeals. That was an expert matter—the question of how long it would take to stop an engine. In the Moran case it was a question of whether a stick was a deadly weapon or not. It was declared to be a case not admitting opinion evidence. The jury was just as capable of judging as the witness."

Raises Question of Strain.

Judge Roan: "They propose to prove by Dr. Owens how long it took persons he watched to go through the litings Conley said he went through with. He is to state facts. I won't permit any opinion and I don't want to hear any more authority on it. It is a questio of whether they can go through substantially the same things as Conley said he did as regards speech, pressure, etc."

Dorsey: "Who can imagine the pressure they were under after murdering a little girl?"

Arnold: "All during this trial we have admitted this kind of evidence. We had policemen to say they had sat in the toilet and tried to see how much of the body of Mary Phagan Newt Lee could see. We asked the policemen—they asked the man."

Judge Roan: "Mr. Arnold, I don't want anything on that. I want to know whether there is enough similarity between the cases for the jury to draw its own conclusions."

Arnold: "We know, your honor."

Judge Roan: "Well, this man don't know how long Conley stood over the body."

Arnold: "We think that negro's statement was sufficiently graphic as to detail to admit of the comparison."

Judge Admits Evidence.

Judge Roan: "I have some doubts about it, but I will give the defendent the benefit of the doubt and allow the evidence to be admitted."

The jury was ordered brought in.

Lemmie Quinn was then recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold continued direct examination.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. When did the last man bleed on the second floor?—A. The last man dangerously hurt was a year ago.

Q. Was that a year from now, or a year from the date of the murder?—A. I mean just what I said.

Q. Can't you tell us the truth about it?

Arnold: "He has answered the question."

Dosey: "I am cross-examining the witness."

A. I can't tell you the exact time.

Q. When was the last time you noticed blood from this man?—A. Some time ago. I don't rememebr how long.

Q. Did it look like this blood found in front of the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes, except the last I saw there was darker.

Q. You told Mr. Starnes, Mr. Black and the other officers that you did not go into the factory on that Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not tell anyone about being in the factory until after you had been down to see Frank, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say when you told him?—A. He said he remembered seeing me, but didn't remember the time.

Q. Didn't he tell you to keep it quiet until he had seen his lawyers?—A. He didn't say keep it quet. He said he would talk with his lawyer.

Q. When was this that you saw Frank?—A. Tuesday after the murder.

Q. You were with the police all day Monday and said nothing about it?—A. I wasn't with them all day.

Explains Why He Was Led to Tell of Visit.

Q. Off and on, all day?—A. I saw them a number of times.

Q. Are you absolutely sure about what time you were in Frank's office?—A. Reasonably sure.

Q. Do you deny that you told Officer Payne that you had not been to the factory since Friday?—A. I do.

Q. You admit refreshing Frank's memory about your visit?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us just what you said.—A. I told him that I was there and he said he remembered it, but not the time except that it was after the time Mary Phagan was there.

Q. Didn't you tell him, "I don't like to be brought into it, but if it will help you, I will"?—A. Yes.

Q. He told his lawyers and said they advised him to mention it, and you told the police?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to Barrett before the Coroner's inquest?—A. No; that was after the Coroner's inquest.

Q. Where is Miss Jefferson, who discovered these spots, working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. She was there yesterday in the polishing department.

Q. You saw her?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't tell the officers you were in the factory on Saturday, April 26, until the following Saturday?—A. The next Saturday.

Q. Didn't you say this to the Coroner's Jury? That you told Frank you were there, and he said he would mention it to his attorneys to see whether it was favorable or not?—A. I don't know whether I said favorable or not.

State Seeking Flaws In Quinn Testimony.

Q. Why was it that you said it was between 12 and 12:30, and that you arrived at the poolroom at 12:25, and now say you arrived at Frank's office between 12:20 and 12:25 and arrived at the poolroom at 12:30?—A. I overlooked part of it.

Q. Didn't they ask you if you could be definite and you said you never looked at a clock until you got to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you now about the back door. Was it locked or barred?—A. Closed.

Q. On May 12, in the presence of Detectives Lanford, Starnes and myself, did you not sign this statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't you say that there was a bar on that door that cut off communication from the upper floor and didn't you say it was customarily kept closed?—A. Yes

Q. Now, didn't I go further with you and say this: "That the door that leads from the office floor to the floor above is kept closed," and didn't you say, "No, the door is closed with a bar across it." Now, isn't that true?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was that bar across it?—A. On pay days.

Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, I want you to tell me how you make these statements to-day and made entirely other statements before the Coroner?—A. I don't know.

Wasn't Sure of Time; Figured It Out Since.

Q. You don't know? All right. Now, wasn't the first time you ever mentioned Devoe's you said that you were there at 12:30?—A. I told you that when I made my first statement. I was not sure of the time, but I have since figured it out.

Q. What time did you leave home?—A. Eleven forty-five.

Q. How do you know what time you reached the town?—A. I figured it out.

Q. Now tell me how you changed the statements you made on May 5?—A. I never recall certain things.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. When you made that statement, you had forgotten about going to Wolsheimer's, hadn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Who reminded you of that?—A. My wife.

The witness was excused, and Oscar Pappenheimer was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer of furniture.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. Since March, 1910.

Q. Have you been getting comparative statments from Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Up to the time the postoffice

Georgia's Senate and Her Children

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me--

"Even so, it is not the will of your Father who is in Heaven that one of these littie ones should perish."

Matt. 18:5-14.

A child—

A girl—

All men would help her.

House Bill No. 4 will save girls who are children in years.

The PRISON COMMISSION has favored the Bill.

The PENITENTIARY COMMITTEE of the House has approved it.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS with WHEATLEY of Sumter as Chairman unanimously recommended its adoption carrying a $30,000 appropriation.

And men believe that GOVERNOR SLATON approves the measure.

Yesterday, Tuesday, the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, whose Chairman is the Speaker of the House, BURWELL, with BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, put the Bill upon the calendar. Without this, the measure would have been lost. Among those helping to pass it were NUNNALLY of Floyd and SHUPTRINE of Chatham. And for it BARRY WRIGHT did splendid service.

THE VOTE WAS 115 TO 46.

The forty-six who opposed it did not do so with the thought of harming girls. They misunderstood. At heart—if they consider—they too approved the JONES-MILLS' BILL establishing the "Georgia Training School for Girls."

It is no one man's measure—no group of men can claim it—it is a law for the want of which girl children of Georgia have suffered.

You would not continue to hurt and degrade them—you, too, would help.

To-day the Bill is in the Senate.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS of that body, whose Chairman is Senator W. W. STARK, now has it under consideration; and the Senate RULES COMMITTEE will doubtless see that it is heard.

The President of the Senate, RANDOLPH ANDERSON, of Chatham, has long favored a Reformatory for girls in Georgia.

And since the question of taxation and finances has been settled, the only argument against the bill has been removed.

Of it, The Morning News of Savannah has rightly said:

"It is hard to see how anybody can truthfully say that it would not profit the State to spend $30,000 in that way."

The Senate will doubtless pass the Bill as it was adopted by the House, without an opposing vote.

All Georgia will approve.

RURAL CREDITS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Wilson Says Next Task Ahead of Him and Congress Is to Give Aid to Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The following statement was issued at the White House to-day embodying the views of President Wilson on rural credits:

"Again and again during the discussion of the currency bill it has been urged that special provision should be made in it for the facilitating of credits of the farmers of the country who stand in need of agricultural credits as distinguished from ordinary commercial and industrial credits. Such proposals were not adopted because such credits could only be imperfectly provided for in such a measure. The scope and character of the bill, its immediate and chief purpose could not be made to reach as far as the special interests of the farmer requires.

"Special machinery of a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that the Congress will at that session act upon the recommendations of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

Nation's Welfare Involved.

"There is no subject more important to the welfare and industrial development of the United States; there is no form in which I would myself seek a greater honor or privilege to take part because I should feel that it was a service to the whole country of the first magnitude and significance. It should have accompanied and gone hand and hand with reform of our banking and currency system if we had been ready to act wisely and with full knowledge of what we were about.

"There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world; were so intelligent and enterprising and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicap they carried, no matter what disadvantage, whether of the law or of natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or opportunity, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering, and have too often failed to renew them when we did see what they were. One of the chief and most serious of these disadvantages has been that he had not been able to secure the extended bank accommodations he every year stands in need of without paying the most burdensome rates of interest and saddling himself with mortgages and obligations of every kind which he fairly staggered under, if he could carry them at all.

Effects in Other Countries.

"In other countries systems of rural credit have been put into operation which not only have relieved the farmer, but have put his enterprises upon a footing of easy accomplishment. Countries in which agriculture was steadily languishing because wholly unprofitable have seen their farming lands blossom again and their people turn once more hopefully to the soil for a living. Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish not afterward.

"And they will be. This is our next task and duty. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with advising the Congress of the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the country-side, and that very soon."

Wife of Umprie in Faint as Angry Fans Threaten Husband

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 13.—Mrs. James Murray, wife of the American Association umpire, was under the care of a physician to-day as the result of a nervous shock caused by witnessing an attack on her husband by infuriated baseball fans. During the game between Milwaukee and Louisville yesterday, Umpire Muray gave Milwaukee the benefit of a close decision. Fans from the bleachers and grandstand rushed on the field. Pitcher Jack Powell caught an angry man who was about to hurl a heavy hammer at the umpire.

Mrs. Murray, sitting in a lower box near the scene of the attack, fainted and was carried to an automobile.

CALL—3

San Francisco Call Purchased by Rival

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—M. H. DeYoung, publisher of The San Francisco Chronicle, to-day announced that he had purchased The San Francisco Call, and would close it September 1.

The price paid was not made public. John D. Spreckles, a member of the California family of capitalists, was the owner of The Call.

BEAUTY CONTEST WON BY MISS MARY CARL HURST

Victor in the beauty race striking exampie of piquant brunette.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst.

Wires luck to the 500,000 club upon learning her picture will adorn Booster Buttons.

Popular Society Girl's Likeness Will Adorn 'Half-Million' Club Booster Button.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Hurst, of No. 62 West Twelfth street, is declared the choice of Atlanta for the girl whose smile is to help spread the city's fame.

In winning the "Booster Button" Beauty Contest she becomes the sponsor of the 500,000 Booster Club, and her face will adorn the lapel buttons with this catchy slogan:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll get you yet, 500,000 by 1920."

When the voting ended Tuesday, this popular young society girl had a total of 18,340 votes, a good margin over her nearest competitor. Though decidedly the choice of Georgian and American readers, she did not win without a contest, and her permanent lead was never assured until the last days of the campaign. Her admirers were constant, though, and after her picture appeared as a nominee a steady stream of votes for her flowed in.

Winner a Piquant Brunette.

Miss Hurst is a striking type of a vivacious brunette. Her face scintillates smiles of good cheer.

There were all types of beauty in the contest—perfect blondes with cerulean blue eyes, auburn-haired girls with pink cheeks, girls with dark brown hair and big dreamy blue eyes, and various shades of brunettes. But the smiling face must have fit the slogan for a "Half Million City" better than any, for she got the most votes.

An order for the booster buttons immediately will be placed. Though Miss Hurst is sponsor for the club, she will lose her identity on the buttons, except as she is remembered as the girl. And, of course, everybody will remember that.

Wires "Luck to 500,000 Club."

There will be no name on the buttons, only the slogan of the Half Million City. Miss Hurst is out of the city, but in acknowledgment of her election she wired:

"Luck to the '500,000 Club.'"

The next step will be a formal organization of the "500,000 Club." Before many days the beautiful buttons will be distributed and a concentrated effort to boost Atlanta's population to 500,000 by 1920 will begin.

SENATE PUTS AN O. K. ON SLATON NOMINATIONS

Confirmation of Moon and Steed Ends Fight Begun When Brown Took Seat.

Confirmation by the Senate Wednesday morning of four appointments made by Governor Slaton settled a controversy of long standing in regard to the official status of Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, as members of the State Board of Education.

The appointment of Professor Moon and Mr. Steed dates back to the administrations of Governor Hoke Smith and Governor Brown, who precipitated a bitter fight when he appointed Moon and Steed after an adjournment of the State Senate, which had upheld the Hoke Smith appointments. In the shuffle which followed the two Hoke Smith men were ousted to give place to Moon and Steed.

On recommendation of Governor Slaton, Moon and Steed will serve four years each, dating from September 5, 1913.

The appointments of the Governor confirmed by the Senate are as follows:

E. H. Callaway, of Richmond County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

Joseph S. Davis, of Dougherty County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

F. G. Bell, of Chatham County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for a term ending August 3, 1917, vice P. A. Stovall, resigned.

Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, to be members of the State Board of Education for four years from September 5, 1913.

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same alignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. Thus no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the Vice President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of his health.

ILLNESS HALTS COURT.

GRIFFIN, Aug. 13.—On account of the illness of Judge R. E. Daniel, of the Flint Circuit, the August term of the Spalding County Superior Court was adjourned until the first Monday in September. Judge Daniel is in a very feeble condition.

JUDGE ROAN WILL WIN OVER ALL OPPOSITION

Some Protests From Men Who Want Atlantan Named Are Made to Governor.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar, some of whom have protested to the Governor, it is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Leaps From Pier to Save Society Woman

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—Mrs. G. Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

Kentuckian Named Minister to Panama

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ward, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians in Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

Soldier on Duty in Mine Strike Killed

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 13.—The first fatality since the installation of 200 Michigan State troops in the Calumet copper region on account of the strike of 18,000 miners occurred today, when Orla Green 22, private in Battery A, of Lansing, died from an accident.

Green was kicked in the abdomen by a horse a week ago.

MASSEE CHARGES GRAFT IN MACON

Says City Pays Too Much for Electricity and That Officials Get Free Lights.

MACON, Aug. 13.—In an interview this afternoon W. Jordan Massee, president of the new electric power company, charges that the city of Macon officially, and the Macon Railway and Light Company, are in collusion and that for this reason his charges of excessive payments by the city to the Macon Railway and Light Company were whitewashed by Council last night.

Massee charges that Mayor John T. Moore and City Electrician Charles Humphries do not pay for lights used in their homes. He also says that Council whitewashed his charges because of the fact that the administration party has received liberal campaign contributions from the Macon Railway and Light Company in the past and expects similar contributions in the near future.

The charges are vigorously denied by officials.

Senate Kills Bill Providing for Early Primary Elections

The Senate Wednesday killed the House bill providing for early primaries, 21 to 18, agreed to the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture and the printing of bulletins and passed a number of local House bills.

President Anderson declared the Senate calendar virtually was clear with the exception of the inheritance tax bill, which probably will come up for passage late Wednesday afternoon.

Sharp debate occurred Wednesday morning on the primary bill, which was championed by Senator Tarver and others. Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, charged that the measure was an effort of politicians to legislate themselves back into office.

Insurrectors Kill 3,200 Federals, Then Rere..t.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 13.—Details of fighting between Federals and rebels around Torreon from July 29 to August 1 received here to-day from pony express riders, state that 3,200 Federals of a force of 10,000 were killed and 80 wounded. The rebels were defeated and driven off leaving over 1,000 dead and wounded.

The World of Society

Several informal affairs have been given this week for Miss Martha Boynton's guests, Misses Ann Grady, of Chattanooga, and Susie Veach, of Adairsville. Tuesday Mrs. George Boynton entertained at luncheon followed by a matinee party at the Forsyth for these attractive visitors. Her guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Laura Cole and Martha Carrington, of Charleston, the guest of Mrs. Gilham Morrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Boynton gave an informal supper party Tuesday for Miss Boynton's guests. The table was decorated with a basket of yellow sunflowers, and all the details were in yellow. The guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Martha Carrington, Laura Cole, Martha Boynton, Messrs. Perrin Nicolson, Cary Callaway, Harold Barnwell, George Northen and William McCullough.

On Wednesday these girls were honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. Henry Porter at the East Lake Country Club. Luncheon was served on the veranda and old-fashioned garden flowers adorned the table. Mrs. Porter had as her guests Miss Grady, Miss Veach, Miss Martha Boynton, Mrs. Gilham Morrow and her guest, Miss Martha Carrington, and Mrs. R. L. Durrence, who is spending this week with Mrs. Porter at her country home at East Lake.

Miss Veach will spend a few days with Miss Alice Richards on Boulevard, and Miss Grady will be the guest of Miss Martha Crane on Inman circle until Friday, when she goes to Adairsville to visit Miss Veach.

Morning Bridge.

Mrs. Virginius Hitt will entertain a number of young girls at bridge Friday morning to meet her guest, Miss Helen Woolfork, of New York.

Miss MacIntyre Hostess.

Miss Julia MacIntyre will entertain at afternoon tea Thursday at her home at Brookhaven.

Miss McGaughey Entertains.

Miss Ruble McGaughey entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon for Miss Bessie Tappan's guests, Miss Lucy Jacks, of Forsyth, and Miss Julia Gill, of Woodberry, and for Miss Julia Lokey, of Birmingham, the guest of Mrs. Hugh Lokey. The party was completed by Miss Minnie Purvis.

For Miss Bacon.

In compliment to Miss Farra Bacon, of Savannah, who is visiting her, Miss Marie Colcord entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon, inviting six girls to be her guests. Thursday afternoon there will be a swimming party at the C. C. C. C. for Miss Bacon. After a swim, tea will be served on the veranda.

Habersham Chapter Meets.

Joseph Habersham Chapter, D. A. R., will hold its monthly meeting Friday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of the regent, Mrs. John A. Perdue, No. 793 Edgewood avenue.

W. A. R. M. A. Postpone Meeting.

There will be no meeting of the W. A. R. M. A. this month on account of the illness of Mrs. Roy Wilheit.

Holcombe-Williams.

The marriage of Miss Aline Holcombe to Mr. Marion Williams took place at the home of the bride's mother Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the presence of a few relatives and friends, Dr. A. R. Holderby officiating.

Miss Holcombe was gowned in a traveling suit of blue, with hat and gloves to match.

The bridal party entered as Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Allie Hazel McClair. Miss Ethel Rutherford and Mr. G. C. Holcombe were the attendants.

After the wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Williams will be at home to their friends at No. 41 Orme street.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Miss Mary Brown entertained a swimming party at the Capital City Country Club Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Frampton Ellis, who was a bride of June. There were fourteen guests. Tea was served on the veranda.

Mrs. Hinton Hostess.

Mrs. Harold Hilton entertained Wednesday afternoon at a bridge tea, inviting the members of her club for the game and a few other friends in for tea at 5 o'clock. The honor guests were Miss Genevieve Gresham, the guest of Mrs. Russell Gresham, and Mrs. Pennel, of Fort Oglethorpe, who is visiting Mrs. J. C. Peavy.

Pink and white roses adorned the mantels. The prizes were gold and white china, while the guests of honor were presented with correspondence cards.

Mrs. Hilton received her guests wearing lavender crepe.

Smathers-Clough.

Miss Ellen Smathers, of Asheville, and Mr. Addison Clough, of Pennsylvania, were married Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Smathers, in Asheville.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Bartlett, and her little niece, Daisy Bartlett, were the only attendants, and only a few friends witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough are traveling in the West.

As Miss Smathers, Mrs. Clough visited in Atlanta last spring as the guest of Miss Emma Kate Amorous, and has many friends here who will be interested to hear of her wedding.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednesday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get bumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ralph Herz Scores Hit.

Ralph Herz, the musical comedy star, in an act that abounds in pathos, is the feature of a splendid bill at the Forsyth this week. Herz, although in a field entirely different from that in which he has been seen for years, does an excellent bit of character work in "Old Blind Joe," and the heartstrings of the audience get a good tug. His other impersonations are good.

Wood and Wyde, in a singing comedy skit, score a genuine hit. Their songs are catchy and their patter is above the average.

Milo Belden and company have a sketch which gets many laughs. Other acts are the Randalls, sharpshooters, who do some remarkable feats; the Adias family, in a first-class acrobatic turn; Willie Weston and company, in an entertaining musical number, and the Pathe play.

HAS NAME OPERATED ON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Miss Marie C. Schwabenhausen, a kindergarten teacher, had the Supreme Court in Brooklyn amputate the eight rear letters of her name. Now her pupils can handle it.

LAST PLEA FILED FOR PARDON OF M'NAUGHTON

Doctors Said to Have Made Affidavits That Arsenic Could Not Have Killed Flanders.

That one last desperate effort will be made to save the life of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, under sentence of death in the Chatham County jail, was indicated Wednesday morning, when Judge F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, representing McNaughton, filed affidavits with the State Prison Commission setting forth that the death of Flanders, alleged victim of McNaughton, could not have been caused by arsenic.

Judge Saffold arrived in Atlanta Wednesday morning. He filed the affidavits with the Prison Commission shortly thereafter and announced that he would remain in the city until the decision is handed down. The affidavits, it is said, were made out by physicians who assert that Flanders could not have died from arsenic.

According to members of the Prison Commission the new evidence will be carefully examined, probably Monday afternoon, preparatory to a final decision not later than Thursday.

Dr. McNaughton, it is understood, has expressed hope of being pardoned and has already prepared to re-enter the practice of medicine.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

G. A. & F. Grocery Co. Declared Bankrupt

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the G. A. & F. Grocery Company, a corporation doing a wholesale and retail grocery business at No. 24 Piedmont avenue, was filed in the United State District Court Wednesday morning.

The petitioners named are the Atlanta Paper Company, Gershon Company and A. Weimberg, who state that the concern owes more than $1,000. A referee will be appointed Thursday.

Canton Is Looted by Chinese Buccaneers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 13.—Chinese pirates still hold Canton at their mercy. Fighting is general, and a great part of the business district has been looted.

The Canton harbor is full of junks containing buccaneers. General Lung, commander of the garrison at Canton, is powerless.

FIRST OPEN BOLL AT DALTON.

DALTON.—The first open boll of cotton, unusually early for this section of the State, was brought in yesterday by W. T. Cox, of the Carbondale District. Indications point to the earliest first bole on record this year.

HOTEL MEN FEAST ON FRIED PULLETS

A delicious fried chicken dinner, with plenty of hot cornbread, buttermilk and vegetables raised on the premises, was served to the Hotel Men's Association after the regular monthly meeting at Durand's farm Tuesday evening. The association was the guest of J. T. Williams.

The members of the association and invited guests left the Piedmont Hotel at 4:30 o'clock in automobiles, after a short business meeting at which routine matters were disposed of. A committee was appointed to look after the delegates to the Georgia Hotel Men's Association, which meets in Atlanta the middle of November. Lee M. Jordan made an interesting talk on "Hotel Legislation."

The members present were J. Lee Barnes, J. F. Lutton, A. R. Evans, Ed R. Brown, Wallace Boyd, A. R. Keen, Lee M. Jordan, R Frank Taylor, Fred Limmell, Frank Harrell and Fred Houser. Among the invited guests were Edwin F. Johnson and Dr. J. S. Kennedy.

Mrs. Williams and Master "Biff" Williams assisted Mr. Williams in entertaining the guests.

Potash Lye Poison in Dipper Causes Death

ALPHARETTA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. Sallie Cobb, wife of William Cobb, a farmer living two miles west of Alpharetta, is dead after drinking water from a dipper with which she had a few hours before stirred potash lye.

Mrs. Cobb left the dipper on the well and went to visit a neighbor. On returning home she went to the well and took a drink of water. Within a few minutes she was in agony.

Negro Who Attacked Phone Girl Captured

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Jack Duncan, the negro who is said to have attacked, gagged, bound and robbed Miss Belle Kirkpatrick, telephone operator at Piedmont, in her office some time ago, is under arrest at Rome, Ga., having been brought from Miami, Fla., according to information given Sheriff C. T. Brooks here to-day.

Miss Kirkpatrick has gone to Rome to identify the negro, for whose arrest the Southern Bell Company had offered a $200 reward.

OBITUARY

Mrs. J. H. Bate, a former resident of Atlanta, died Monday night in San Antonio, Texas. She was the widow of J. H. Bate. The body will be brought here for interment.

The funeral of Mrs. C. D. Diggs, who died Tuesday at her home in East Point, will be held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the East Point Baptist Church. She was 69 years old, and is survived by two sons, W. O. Diggs, of Cullman, Ala., and J. H. Diggs, of East Point; four daughters, Misses Ella and Alice Diggs, Mrs. J. W. Aldred and Mrs. W. D. Oliver, all of East Point. Interment at Polk Cemetery.

MOTHER OF PRISONER CRIES OUT IN PROTEST; WIFE WEEPS AT QUERY

ceased delivering mail on Sunday, when did you get your reports?—A. Every Saturday.

Q. Since that time when have you been receiving them?—A. Every Monday morning.

Q. Did you get the report of April 24?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. Monday morning.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. Have you got the envelope?—A. No.

Q. Have you received one since?—A. No.

State Objects to Defense Statements.

Arnold, addressing the court: We will introduce these statements, your honor.

Dorsey: I object.

Judge Roan: It is admissible.

Ashley Jones was the next witness called. Attorney Arnold examined him.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. You are an insurance agent, aren't you?—A. Resident agent for the New York Life.

Q. You don't know anything of Frank's practices at the pencil factory?—A. No.

Dorsey Denies That He Is Four-Flushing.

Q. How do you know him?—A. He took a policy with our company in New York and, as you know, an insurance company makes a pretty thorough examination as to the moral and physical standing of the applicant.

Q. You never heard of his taking young girls into his lap, did you?

Arnold interrupted—Your honor, I think that question is outrageous. We are dealing with the date of April 26. We are not responsible for the lies and slanders circulated by cracked-brain extremists. All sorts of things have been circulated since this murder occurred.

Judge Roan—He can't ask him about anything that happened prior to the date of this murder.

Dorsey—Your honor, I am not four-flushing a bit. I am going to present a witness to prove these charges.

Arnold: "He couldn't prove it, even if it were true. These statements are all lies. If this matter comes up again I am going to make a motion for a new trial."

Dorsey: "You can take that up when I present the witness."

Mr. Dorsey (to the witness): Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank being caught with a girl in Druid Hills?—A. No. We had an investigator on the case and he never found any such thing.

Q. The members of your company took a great interest in this case? And wrote to the Grand Jury to indict Conley, did you not?—A. Three of us did.

Mother Cries Out Agonized Protest.

Q. Who were they?—A. Robert Leopold Cooney, Mr. Clark and myself.

Q. Was that not unusual?—A. We have not done it before, but we would do it again in the interest of justice.

Q. Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank taking girls on his lap?

At this question Mrs. Rea Frank, mother of Leo Frank, interrupted, shouting to the solicitor, "No, and you didn't, either."

Mrs. Frank broke into tears, and crying "My God, my God," was taken from the courtroom.

Q. Did you ever hear of him putting his arms around Miss Myrtice Cato?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him going in the dressing room where little Gertie Jackson was in September, 1912?—A. No. (Much of Mr. Dorsey's questioning is unprintable.)

Q. Did you ever hear of Mrs. Pearl Dawson going there to get her pay and of him putting his hands on her little girl and of Mrs. Dawson throwing a monkey wrench at him?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him [illegible] familiar with a Mrs. Winggold?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him having suggestive pictures on the walls and of him slapping girls?—A. No.

The witness was excused.

At this point Solicitor Dorsey asked Judge Roan to order Daisy Hopkins seld as he was informed she was preparing to leave town.

Deputies Start Search For Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Judge Roan issued the desired instructions. Deputies left the courtroom in search of her.

Dr. W. D. Owens was then recalled. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Dr. Owens, you heard the statement that was read here this morning. You and Mr. Walker used this document in making your experiments did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Leave out the eight minutes the negro said he was in the wardrobe and the time he said he consumed in writing the notes—how long did it take you to go through the performance just as Jim Conley related it?—A. Eighteen and one-half minutes.

Q. How fast did you do it?—A. As fast as we could.

Q. Including the time the negro said he was in the wardrobe and allowing ten minutes for writing the notes, how long did it take?—A. Thirty-six and one-half minutes.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you read this paper while you were making the experiments?—A. No. Mr. Hass did. I held the watch. Mr. Hass would read each movement that Conley said he made and then we would carry itout in detail.

Q. He had to give specific directions and then the act would be done?—A. Yes, most of the time. Sometimes directions would be anticipated.

Q. That is just what I wanted to know. Now, if the man who was doing this originally was doing it right along without any directions, couldn't he have done it much quicker?—A. Possibly. I don't think there would have been much difference, though.

Re-enacted Movements As Fast as They Could.

Q. Did you have the man who was doing this get excited?—A. No, we just went through the movements as fast as we could.

Q. This would take you a pretty good time at the foot of the elevator, would it not?—A. A minute.

Q. You didn't have any body to drop, did you?—A. No.

Q. Those knots which were tied around what was supposed to be the body didn't come untied, did they?—A. No.

Q. There were no heavy weights to carry, were there?—A. The sack 107 pounds.

Q. Did you see it weighed?—A. No.

Q. I understood you to say awhile ago that there were several points where you lost time?—A. I was going to explain that a little later. There were one or two places where I told them they were losing time, but they said it all belonged that way, according to the negro's statement.

Q. What is this spot right here? (Pointing out a spot on the Bert Green diagram.)—A. Where the body was found. Grant, who was going through the actions of Conley, carried the sach back from here (indicating another point.)

Q. Now, did you say they dragged the body?—A. They dragged the sack from the elevator.

Q. Where did you get the idea of dragging?—A. I don't know. They just dragged it.

Q. Did you notice the effect of dragging on the sack?—A. No.

Q. What kind of earth was it drawn over?—A. Just the plain earth found in the basement.

A recess of a few minutes was taken while the jury took its usual afternoon soft drink.

Questioning Resumed When Jury Returns.

Hooper resumed his questioning when the jury returned from its brief recess.

Q. You have got the statements here that Conley went to the cotton box and got a piece of cloth. Where was that piece of cloth?—A. He went to the corner of the cotton room.

Q. Who went?—A. Mr. Brandt.

Q. Who is Mr. Brandt?—A. He is a gentleman whom I have known for a number of years. I don't know what his business is.

Q. Who was playing the part of Frank?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is a builder.

Q. You know his initials?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Do you know how long it would take for an excited man to tie up a bundle similar in size to a body?—A. No, I don't.

Q. "Mr. Frank, you will have to help me with this girl, she is too heavy," the man playing the part of Conley said that?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did you stop after he said that?—A. Well, we stopped as long as we supposed Conley stopped.

Diaz Ignored Because Of Diplomatic Error

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—A cablegram to a local Japanese newspaper from Tokio to-day said:

"As the Government of Mexico has ignored the diplomatic usage of the international intercourse etiquette by sending an envoy to Japan without consulting and making arrangements with the Japanese Government for the mission of General Felix Diaz, Japan advised the Government of Mexico that there is necessity of careful consultations beforehand."

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Audftorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

Wife of Secretary Is Champion Whistler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — Mrs. Josephus Daniels, the talented wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is to-day considered the champion whistler of the Cabinet circle. Mrs. Daniels learned this unusual accomplishment from her sons.

When she drives down to coax the Secretary from his desk these Mexican days she summons him by giving a sweet, high whistle in a code both understand.

Soldiers Shoot Wild; Blacks Fear Bullets

AUGUSTA, GA., Aug. 13.—The new rifle range of the local military companies will have to be abandoned unless better precautions are taken to protect human lives. An injunction is threatened by W. H. Rennison and other property owners in the vicinity because the soldiers are said to be shooting recklessly. Negroes in the neighborhood have stopped work on the farms for fear of being killed.

FIGHT TO RECOVER ZACHRY CHILDREN

Case Will Be Taken to Richmond Superior Court—Divorce Proceedings Do Not Interfere.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 13.—Attorney C. E. Dunbar announces that he will bring action before Judge Henry C. Hammond, of the Richmond Superior Court, for the recovery of the Zachry children.

By a decision of the Supreme Court yesterday Judge Hammond must hear the evidence in the case. The entire matter is, therefore, reopened, and Dunbar believes that he will recover the children on his next attempt.

Ordinary Walton heard the case at first, and he decided that Zachry should have the custody of the children. Subsequently divorce proceedings were brought by Dunbar for Mrs. Zachry, and he asked Judge Hammond to hear the case and decide whether the father or the mother should have the custody of the children.

Judge Hammond declined on the ground that Ordinary Walton had already decided the matter. Dunbar reminded him that at the time the matter was heard before Walton divorce proceedings had not been instituted.

Hammond said it made no difference and that he had no right to hear it. The Supreme Court has ruled that he had and has the right.

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

1,500-Pound Shark Captured in Trap

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Aug. 13.—A 1,500-pound shark, 25 feet long, which was captured in the Milk Island trap by Albert Story and killed, after a bitter battle, is at Story's Wharf where it attracts much attention.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Brantree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

FIRST BALE AT FORT GAINES.

FORT GAINES.—The first bale of 1913 cotton was received here to-day, just three days ahead of last year. It was brought in by Tony Wells, a negro, who received a handsome premium.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louisans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temporarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

BOUT FOR ED CLABBY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Eddie Clabby, brother of Jimmy Clabby, one of the claimants of the middleweight championship, has been matched to box ten rounds with Billy Walters, formerly of the Naval station at Lake Bluff, Ill., at Hammond, Ind., on Labor Day afternoon. The weight for the contest will be 142 pounds six hours before the contest.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "He jests at scars who never felt a wound," she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me oaver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend oaver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa usked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much, & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice.

What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was very sweet of her. You see, Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is devoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons & you cuddent malk me beleeve thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Missus Mace.

I know it, sed Pa, I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"But that is a sound tooth," said the dentist. "The pain is only sympathetic."

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

A solicitor called upon a professor of great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

"Halloa!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

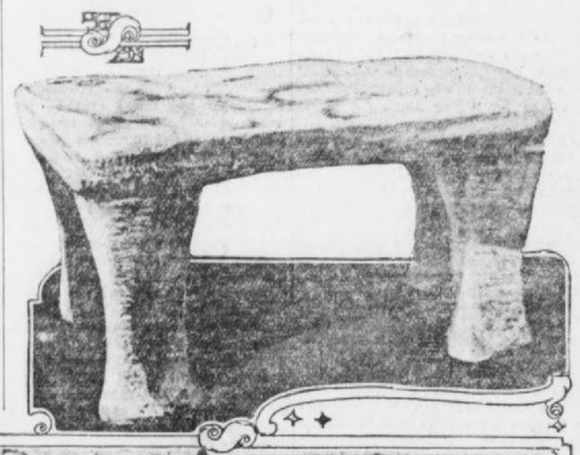

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Civilized people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely owled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly. "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card.

"We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her penciled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead.
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four tooth-brushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams, and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——"

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; "but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

The Call of the Cool North Woods

¶ Have you ever felt the thrill of an out-of-doors vacation—a few weeks of real life by the side of some picturesque lake—away from everything that savors of your daily toil?

¶ From the Great North Woods of Wisconsin and Northern Michigan Wild Nature—innumerable beautiful lakes and streams—the breath of the pine—the gamy bass—the vicious muskellunge—the agile trout and the toothsome pike—send out a call that "the man who knows" finds hard to resist.

¶ Each summer he returns to the scene of his last year's sport; each summer the appeal reaches many more who have not known the charms of this region.

¶ Why don't you arrange to go? Take a holiday in this wonderful country, where a thousand sparkling lakes teeming with gamy fish await you.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

* * *

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hardgrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

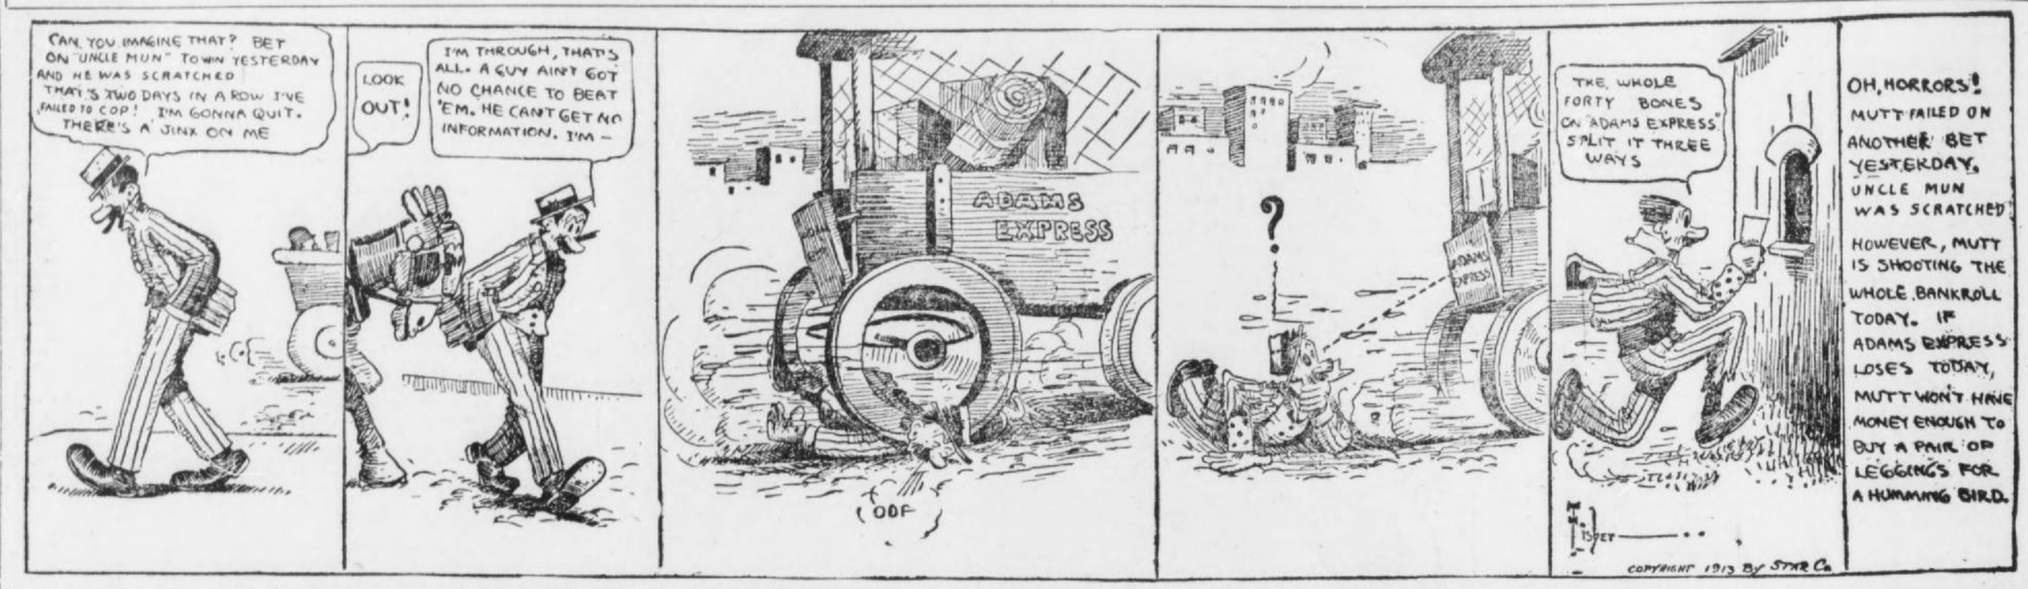

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

* * *

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a doubleheader against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V. The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles 'n heat and dust, but the allentsts have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knockout—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONSistency in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

LOS ANGELES, Aug 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georger Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers, matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

* * *

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gtting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they

The game was lost while she looked

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated h isiegs or his thirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never seen a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fistiana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

• • •

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

• • •

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Boyo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Wolgast and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

• • •

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

• • •

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbraith Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

• • •

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

• • •

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

• • •

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

• • •

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

• • •

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

• • •

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

• • •

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

• • •

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night. Frankie Burns is to be Jack's opponent and the battle is to be staged at Denver, Colo.

• • •

Carl Morris is the champion lemon picker of the country. Morris is to be sent against Fred Lachlan on Friday night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

• • •

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 13.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times, but the locals clearly had the class.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More
What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

• • •

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozies* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

• • •

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

• • •

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

• • •

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

• • •

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

• • •

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

LAJOIE HAS BEEN IN BIG LEAGUES SEVENTEEN YEARS

TO HAVE "REGULAR" PLANT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The New York American League team's new grounds will be located at 200th and Broadway and Exterior streets. The grandstand will be 665 feet on 225th street and 495 1-2 feet on 227th street, extending the entire block on Broadway end and will be 52 feet deep. The field stand will be erected at the Exterior street end and will be 264 by 54 1-2 feet. These stands will form a stadium, and the cost of the grandstand has been estimated at $250,000 and the field stand at $12,000. The stands will be of brick and terra cotta.

KNOX COLLEGE PICKS COACH.

GALESBURG, ILL., Aug. 1 —President Thomas McClelland, of Knox College, yesterday announced that R. R. Campbell, for three years athletic director of the University School of Detroit, has been chosen to succeed Ira T. Carrithers as coach at Knox. Carrithers will serve as assistant coach at the University of Illinois.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—The Court of Impeachment will meet at the Capitol September 18 at noon.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Friends Make Hard Fight.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblymen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment tried through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democrats now find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attempts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued declarations that he "was walking the street straight." All sorts of "I told you so's were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor would be the victim. This material may be brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

Briefly, the articles of impeachment which were presented to the Senate to-day charge that Governor Sulzer is guilty of the following allegations:

That he filed a false statement of campaign contributions with the Secretary of State, such statement having caused "great scandal" and reproach for the Governor of the State of New York, and that the said statement did not contain all the contributions received by him, and that he was guilty of a misdemeanor in failing to file a true report.

Charge Effort to Block Quiz.

That while Governor, William Sulzer induced Louis R. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller, by fraudulent methods, to withhold certain testimony from the Frawley committee, and that such acts were the commission of a felony.

That the Governor "practiced deceit and fraud and used threats and menaces" intended to prevent the committee and other witnesses subpenaed from producing books and papers desired by the committee, such act having been a misdemeanor.

That in preventing or dissuading Frederick L. Colwell from attending the hearing of the Frawley committee the Governor was also guilty of a misdemeanor in having violated section 2441 of the penal law.

That prior to his election the Governor appropriated campaign contributions to his own use using the same, or a large portion thereof, to speculate in stocks, and that he thereby stole such checks and was guilty of larceny.

That he promised and threatened to use his office to affect the vote of certain public officers, including Assemblymen S. G. Prime, of Essex, and Thaddeus C. Sweet, of Oswego.

That the Governor corruptly used his authority as Governor to affect the price of securities in the New York Stock Exchange, in some of which he was speculating and in other ways sought to influence legislation.

In conclusion the articles read:

"The assembly demands that the Governor answer concerning all these matters before the court which is to hear the charges, and offers to present proof of said matters at such time as the honorable court for the trial of impeachment may order and appoint."

William Sulzer less than a year ago enjoyed the confidence of the people of New York State to such an extent that he was elected Governor by a vote of 19,000 in excess of that given Wilson and the national ticket, and a few months later said in an interview, "The people understand me, I understand the people, and we trust each other."

Throughout his long career in the State Assembly, in the National House of Representatives, and during his recent campaign for election as Governor and his six-month tenure of that office Governor Sulzer always posed as a poor man and a friend of the poor man

Indorses Hearst's Sunday American Trail-Blazing Trip Through Dixie to San Francisco.

A resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, indorsing the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers to blaze an all-Southern highway from Atlanta to San Francisco, was passed unanimously by the Senate Wednesday morning.

In offering the resolution Senator McNeill declared that the proposed campaign undoubtedly meant much not only for Georgia, but for the whole South as it will afford a direct road from the East to the South and thence to the Pacific Coast, where the great Panama-Pacific Exposition will be held in 1915.

"I offer this resolution for the indorsement of the Senate," said the Senator, "because the campaign is an effort to increase interest in good roads and highways in additions to affording a route from New York to the Pacific Coast through the South. The campaign is featured by the fact that it will not cost the State of Georgia one cent."

Senate Resolution in Full.

The resolution adopted by the Senate follows:

Resolved, That whereas the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers for an all-Southern transcontinental highway from Atlanta to San Francisco will mean much for the promotion of good roads in Georgia as well as better facilities for the interchange of farm products between different States, this Senate does hereby indorse this movement, thereby encouraging the sentiment and interest for better roads and highways.

The Senate indorsement of the campaign followed fast on the heels of the indorsement of Governor John M. Slaton who declared Tuesday that no better sign of the progress of the people could be had than just such movements as this one.

Other prominent citizens, including Shelby Smith, County Commissioner, also have placed their hearty stamp of approval on the project.

In fact, interest in the proposed tour has exceeded the fondest expectations of the good roads and highway boosters, who are leaving no stone unturned to make the transcontinental path-finding tour a success in every particular.

Pathfinder Arranges Details.

Perhaps the busiest of the boosters is "Pathfinder" Ferguson, who will conduct the big campaign. Mr. Ferguson arrived in Atlanta last Saturday, and since that time he has gone into every detail of the first lap of the journey from Atlanta to Birmingham. Scarcely a single detail of the "official" start, which will be made next Monday, has been overlooked. The pathfinders have their road maps in readiness and the Atlanta boosters who will have the parade in hand have announced "ready."

The parade will be one of the largest ever witnessed in Atlanta. Among those who will participate will be the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief, various city officials and other prominent citizens. Mr. Ferguson will go direct to Anniston, Ala., from Atlanta and thence to Birmingham, the first "official" stopping place. The proposed route extends through Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, San Diego, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

One-Hour Want Ad Brings About Sale

This two-line want ad appeared in Tuesday's Georgian, in the midst of a long list of articles for sale:

FOR SALE—Return ticket to Jacksonville, Fla. Phone Ivy 5696-J.

Early to-day the Want Ad Man's telephone rang. The lady who had inserted the ad was on the wire.

"Please discontinue my ad," she said. "The ticket was sold within an hour after The Georgian reached the street. Thank you."

That want ad had cost just 20 cents. Wasn't it worth it?

FIRE AT ARMORY THREATENS ARSENAL

Crowd Flees as Flames Near the Ammunition Room Over Taft Hall—Damage Heavy.

Rapidly making toward the room where many thousand rounds of ammunition were stored, fire did several thousand dollars' worth of damage in the storeroom of the armory over Taft Hall in the Auditorium early Wednesday afternoon.

The main auditorium was not touched, however. The blaze did not get within 100 yards of the huge organ.

The fire was discovered by Sergeant Wardwell, of the Artillery Corps, who happened to be in the basement at the time. Smoke came down the elevator shaft and he rushed upstairs into the office of H. J. Weaver, the keeper of the building. They hurried to the upper floor and discovered smoke coming out of the storeroom in which the tents of Companies C and D are kept. An alarm was turned in and several companies responded.

Firemen Find Doors Locked.

It required several minutes for the firemen to gain entrance into the room on account of the door being locked. The armory is on the top floor and it was necessary to use an aerial truck and enter through the window. The firemen were driven back for some time by the heavy smoke from the burning tents and were compelled to play several streams on them for more than half an hour.

The tents which were burned were used in the recent encampment at St. Simons Island, and it is quite probable that the fire had smoldered for several days. The loss to the National Guard will amount to several thousand dollars.

It required but a few moments for the room to fill with water to a depth of more than two feet, the fire being unusually hard to quench on account of the waterproof tents, and having started in the center of a huge pile of canvas.

Plastering Loosened.

The water seeped through the floor and the ceiling over Taft Hall, loosening the plaster there, while a heavy stream flowed down the stairways into the great lobby. When the fire was extinguished the firemen undertook the task of baling out the storeroom, using large galvanized tubs for the work.

News of the Auditorium being on fire drew a large crowd, but when the rumor that many rounds of ammunition were stored in the apartment ext to the tent room spread the crowd melted rapidly.

The fire will not interfere with a prize fight scheduled at the Auditorium Wednesday night.

Board of Examiners For Trained Nurses

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 13.—Under the provisions of a 1913 legislative act providing for the State registration of nurses, Governor Park Trammell has appointed the following trained nurses as members of the State Board of Examiners:

Miss Anna Davids, of Miami; Miss N. B. Prewitt, of Tampa; Miss Irene M. Foote, of Jacksonville; Miss Maud Yothers, of Orlando; and Miss Anna L. Rutherford, of St. Augustine.

Mountaineer Frozen Dangling Over Cliff

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—Mountain guides near Leisang to-day discovered the frozen body of a mountaineer hanging over the cliff in the Bregenz Mountains.

The man, who was a guide, had fallen from a precipice and his clothing had caught in a jutting tree root.

TAX BILL IS PASSED AFTER HARD BATTLE

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Soldier Held for Attempted Attack

PENSACOLA, Aug. 13.—Jack Gord, a soldier from Fort Barrancas, is being held in irons at the navy yard charged with attempting to attack a prominent young woman at Warrington. No warrant has been issued for him, although the United States District Attorney is now investigating the matter. It is claimed the soldier went to the room of the young woman in his stocking feet and wearing no coat or shirt. When the young woman screamed, the soldier ran and Deputy Game Warden Chapman knocked him down with a brick. The clothing of Gord was found downstairs.

The soldier denies all charges, claiming that his clothes had been stolen and that he went into the room upstairs in order not to expose himself improperly clad.

Victims of Promoter Found in Many States

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—Cashier Bohlin, of the Fort Payne bank, testified to-day that E. C. Drew, the oil well promoter on trial here for using the mail to defraud, had deposited $19,000 in the bank between January 1, 1912, and the present date. It was also shown he had deposited $6,000 in a bank at Collinsville.

The money was secured from investors, the largest amount from any one person being $1,000, which Mrs. Belcher, residing in Maine, had sent. Drew's alleged victims are found in many States.

Carmack Trial Nears Finish at Opelika

OPELIKA, Aug. 13.—It is probable that the trial of Homer Carmack, which began Tuesday afternoon, will be concluded by noon Thursday. Carmack is charged with murdering J. J. Folke, an aged Phoenix City merchant, on Sunday night, June 22.

The State is represented by Solicitor C. A. L. Samford, of the Law and Equity Court of Lee County, assisted by his brother, T. D. Samford, while the defense is being represented by C. A. Hayes, of Phenix City, and Judge A. E. Barnett, of Opelika. Judge Lum Duke is the trial judge.

Feud of Gamblers Cause of Killing

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 13.—That the killing of W. Louie (Pat) Roney by Ed Ellis on one of the principal streets of Birmingham on the night of July 31 was a chapter of a feud among gamblers was brought out in the preliminary hearing, which has been concluded, Ellis being released on $2,500 bond.

Louie Smith, a partner of Ellis, was killed in Montgomery by Roney. Smith had killed Brooks Fuller, another gambler, some months before.

Visiting Merchants Have Big Barbecue

Fall styles, new fabrics, freight rates and price terms were forgotten Wednesday afternoon by sellers and buyers alike when nearly every wholesale merchant in Atlanta and many hundreds of delegates to the Southern Merchants' convention dropped business and enjoyed a barbecue at Ponce DeLeon Park.

J. R. Little was put at the head of the barbecue committee and Lee Barnes was engaged to supervise the outdoor cookery.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries committed in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 102 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 208 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S. Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacramento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand to-day.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified.

Announcement Soon Of $150,000 Sales

Smith & Ewing's Deals in Contract Stage—Great Interest in New Office Building—Other Notes.

Sales aggregating $150,000 are expected to be announced in a week by the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency. These are in contract stage and lawyers are busy examining titles. Several are for sums around $25,000. This agency has sold through J. H. and Crawford Maddox for L. C. Durham, of Terrell County, to J. R. Smith, No. 96 East Cain street, 40 by 150 feet, for $6,000, or at the rate of $150 a foot. Mr. Smith bought for investment, and he may improve with an apartment house or building of similar character.

Comment on Skyscraper Plans.

Real estate men engaged in a good deal of discussion Wednesday on the 16-story office building which it is planned to erect on Dr. E. L. Connally's lot at the southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets. Most of them expressed the belief that an office structure additional to the Atlanta National Bank Building would lend a great deal of prestige to the retail shopping district and the entire South Side.

The probable effect on tenants and leases was also discussed with interest. Announcement that Brown & Allen might move to the Lynch property across the way, which they leased a year ago, and that the United Cigar Stores Company might take the Brown & Allen corner caused much gossip on the probable new lease rate for the corner. The Lynch corner, according to reliable authority, would cost the drug concern $450 a month. This would be exclusive of the other space upstairs and on West Alabama street, which now brings Brown & Allen an amount above the entire cost. The Lynch property was leased by the drug company for seven years, as a protection, and the lease contains an option for five years more.

The United Cigar Stores Comuany, it is reported, made Dr. Connally an offer on the Brown & Allen corner, but negotiations have not gone far. Dr. Connally promised Ed Brown, of the drug company, the refusal on the ground floor at a price which has not been given out. This is said to apply either to the store as it stands or to the office building space. The Brown & Allen lease is up September 1, 1914.

In the leases on parts of the Connally property it is said there is a one-year cancellation clause, which is taken to mean that when Dr. Connally made the leases he had a big building in view.

The old building is bringing a handsome return, and the only hesitation Dr. Connolly has about putting up a larger structure lies in the fact that a sky-scraper would not pay as high a percentage on the investment.

Insurance Money Easy.

Insurance money continues to be lent more readily in Atlanta than previous to the announcement that $25,000,000 would be placed in Southern banks to move the crops. About twenty loan deeds went to record Tuesday. Approximately half of them were to the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, the Guaranty Trust Company, of Missouri, the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Connecticut, the Germania Savings Bank and the United States Mortgage and Trust Company.

Many Expected at Dinner.

Inasmuch as Chas. P. Glover, Harris G. White, S. B. Turman and Fitzhugh Knox will be present at the monthly dinner of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday, it is believed that a large crowd of realty men will attend. The above-named agents are full of the recent trip to Winnipeg, and they will be called on to relate their experiences in the Northwest.

President White has made announcement of a change in plan for the monthly dinners. Instead of holding them at 6:30 p. m., the time will be 12:30 to 2 p. m., and the place will be the Hotel Ansley. Friday's dinner will be held in the Georgia pine room of the hotel.

Interesting Apartment Leases.

H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have leased apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and will be quartered there this winter. The leases were made by Albert S. Adams, of the B. M. Grant Agency, who is the exclusive agent for this structure. Gen. R. K. Evans will move from the Bell place, northeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, to the Georgian Terrace.

The near approach of fall finds many people ready to move into new locations, and the renting agencies are in the midst of their busiest season. Mr. Aycock, manager of the renting department of the Charles P. Glover agency, declared that the tendency was to re-lease rather than to choose different houses.

Peachtree Lease Expected.

Another Peachtree lease is expected to be announced soon. The United Motor Atlanta Company, now the Maxwell Company, will move from its present location at the foot of Currier street to some location that suits its wholesale business better, and the Turman, Black & Calhoun agency, who have the building, will announce the plans of another concern which will move in.

Big Acreage Sale.

Extensive acreage tracts in South and Middle Georgia continue to be handled through Atlanta real estate agents. Sisson & Miller have sold to T. R. Owsley, through J. T. Kimbrough, the well-known realty agent, 160 acres of land three miles north of Fort Valley for $9,000, or $56 an acre.

Support for Exhibit Project.

Indications pointed Wednesday to success in the effort to place Atlanta-made goods permanently on exhibit in the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building, southeast corner of North Pryor street and Auburn avenue. Several additional merchants and manufacturers assured the merchants and manufacturers' committee that they would take space. It has been feared that not enough exhibitors will be in the building to make the project a success, and W. H. Leahy, of the local industrial bureau, has given notice that prospective lessees must hurry and sign up for space, or it will be too late.

Unless action is taken at once the building will be converted into offices, as originally planned. Work is under way and the Chamber of Commerce officials want to know the decision of the exhibitors so as to determine definitely the character of the building.

Pushing Peachtree Work.

Indications were Wednesday that the county convicts would finish up during the day or early Thursday Peachtree repairs as far south as Fifteenth street and would be able to turn back from Fifteenth to Brookwood. There is probably five days' work before the entire job is completed, and then the gang will go back to the stretch lying between W. S. Witham's country place and the DeKalb County line.

People using Peachtree of late have expressed great satisfaction over the paving. The County Commissioners decided to make repairs rather than lay new material and to make the job new next year. The old paving was plowed up, pulverized and packed with a giant roller and for the present it does as well as when it was first laid.

COTTON SELLS OFF AFTER EARLY GAIN

The Market Ruled Very Narrow, Though There Was Some Cotton Wanted on Easy Spots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and according y sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and on matter how dry it remains, this cotton will come into the market freely until the receipts from the eastern half of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

As the map showed litt'e or no rain and the detailed weather report posted at 12 o'clock, giving temperatures and rainfall for yesterday, was disappointing to the bearish element, as there was seventeen points in Oklahoma showing temperatures from 100 to 109 and ten points in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 104, with much less rainfall than had been expected from the private reports that were received late yesterday afternoon. The market ruled very narrow, though there was apparently some cotton wanted on all easy spots. Some of the prominent interests who have been identified with the bull side of late were put down as the early sellers. It is purely a weather market and much depends on what may happen during the next two or three days.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 3 to 5 points from the closing quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows rather general precipitation in the eastern part of Texas, although light so far. Generally fair in the western half of Texas and Oklahoma overnight, partly cloudy to fair in the rest of the belt. Scattered showers fell in Tennessee, the south central Gulf and Atlantic coast districts. Indications are for further precipitation west today, particularly in the southern and eastern part of Texas.

Liverpool came in very poor, with futures at one time, as much as 4 lower than

The last report to us from Liverpool says: "Feeling and opinion continue bearish, chiefly on account of the bad trade outlook. Spinners and manufacturers are complaining bitterly and understand similar conditions exist on the Continent, so that even with a moderate crop a bull movement appears difficult."

This accounts for the poor response to reports of crop deterioration from Texas and Oklahoma and the slow business in forward shipments.

Trading here is quiet this morning with the market dull but steady around last night's closing figures. The relatively small new crop receipts, in view of the reports of active ginning in Texas, are the subject of comment. This is generally accounted for by the slow export demand, and the unfavorable news from Liverpool is in line with it.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Unless the drouth situation in the Southwest is relieved, we expect no activity at present.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think general conditions warrant any marked upturn at this time, and in the event of good soaking rains in the Southwest, a lower range of values will undoubtedly result.

COTTON GOSSIP

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third dryest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Clarke amendment was likely t be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showery weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scatterd showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi De Lata Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record, the Arkansas, 85 against 87. Louisiana, 78 against 79; Oklahoma, 72 against 61; Texas, 74 against 81; United States 77.8 against 79.6.

By Government July 25: "The status of the crop is now just the reverse of that of the early season in that highest conditions are shown in the Eastern and Atlantic States, which fact is due to exceptionally favorable weather there and severe drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, operating to advance the one and pull down the other. It is seldom that cotton maintains at this date the luxuriant growth and vigorous life that is characteristic of the plant in Georgia and the Carolinas."

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—There will be showers during the next 36 hours in all the Northern States east of the Mississippi River. From Tennessee and the Carolinas southward the weather will be fair, except for local showers on the Gulf coast.

The temperatures will rise slowly in the Northern and Eastern States east of the Mississippi River. Forecast till 8 p. m. Thursday:

General Forecast.

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Thursday.

Virginia—Unsettled, local showers to-night or Thursday; warmer in central portion to-night.

North Carolina—Fair in west; showers in east portion to-night or Thursday.

Florida—Fair to-night, except showers in southwestern portion to-night or Thursday.

Louisiana—Fair in north; showers in southern portion to-night or Thursday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Thursday.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—The market shows same old nervousness over Texas weather. A few light rains fell in eastern Texas, but as a whole the State remains quite dry and hot. The semi-monthly condition reports show heavy losses in the Southwest, but improvement in the East, nearly offsetting the losses. Likely that drouth must continue or rains come or some setback occur in the East to move the market far away from 11 cents.

TEXAS COMPANY ATTRACTIVE ISSUE

Canadian Pacific and Harrimans Also Higher—Sentiment Becoming Optimistic.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ⅜ to 119⅜, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¼, for a gain of 1¼.

After opening with a gain of ⅛, Southern Pacific went to 91⅜, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154½ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ½, American Smelting ⅝, Bethlehem Steel ⅛, United States Rubber common ¼, Western Union ¼, Utah Copper ⅝, Steel common ⅛, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ⅜. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

Pronounced strength developed in the leading issues in the last half of the first hour and prices moved up a point or more fro mthe initial figures. Canadian Pacific was in brisk demand, advancing 1⅝, while gains ranging around ¼ were recorded in Lehigh Valley, Steel common, Reading, Union Pacific and American Smelting. Substantial gains were also noted in Erie, St. Paul, Anaconda and Amalgamated Copper.

A number of profit-taking sales were made in the second hour, however, and many of the important issues receded fractionally.

Call money is loaning and renewing at 2¼ per cent.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 99 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

Price-Current says: "Corn in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and a large part of Illinois and parts of Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee is beyond restoration. The crop north of these States is in good shape, and rains have been sufficient to insure fairly good crops. The crop at best will be fully 400,000,000 bushels under last year and may drop below that. Spring wheat has delayed ripening somewhat, and bright weather is now desired to round out the filling period and provide for harvest."

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

BEAUTY

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade.
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

FRANK'S MOTHER STIRS COURTROOM

Leaps to Defense of Son at Dorsey's Question

FRANK'S CLASSMATES AT COLLEGE TELL OF HIS GOOD CHARACTER

A sensation was created in the courtroom during the cross-examination of Ashley Jones by Solicitor Dorsey at the Frank trial when Mrs. Rea Frank, mother of the defendant, sprang to her feet with a denial of intimations made by the Solicitor reflecting on her son.

"Mr. Jones, you never heard of Frank having girls on his lap in the office?" Dorsey had asked.

"No; nor you neither!" cried Frank's mother.

"Keep quiet, keep quiet; I am afraid you will have to sit here and listen to this a long time," said the Solicitor.

Mrs. Frank broke into tears and was assisted from the room, crying: "My God, my God!"

Mother and Wife Set With Bowed Heads.

The Solicitor's examination of Jones had been of a most sensational nature and during the portion of it leading up to the interruption by Mrs. Frank the mother of the defendant and her daughter sat with lowered heads listening to the questions and answers.

Following the outbreak, Attorney Arnold jumped to his feet and shouted: "Your honor, this is outrageous. We are not responsible for the lies and slanders that cracked-brain extremists have circulated since this murder occurred."

"I will rule that the Solicitor can not ask anything that he has heard since the murder," replied Judge Roan. "He can ask on this cross-examination what happened before."

"Your honor," returned Solicitor Dorsey, "I am not fourflushing about this. I am going to present a witness to prove the charges.

Attorney Arnold interrupted the speaker.

"Your honor," he said, "if any more of these gross slanders are brought up, I am going to make a motion for a new trial."

Judge Ran ruled Wednesday afternoon that the testimony of Dr. William Owens should be admitted over the objection of Solicitor Dorsey. He said he had some doubts of it but that he would let it go to the jury.

The decision was a most decisive victory for the defense. It enabled Frank's lawyers to introduce testimony in regard to a striking reproduction of the events connected with the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as described by Jim Conley for the purpose of showing that it would have been absolutely impossible for these events to have taken place between 12:56 and thetime that Frank left the factory for home.

As Solicitor Dorsey was making an impassioned plea for the exclusion of the testimony and describing the terror that must have hastened the movements of the little factory girl's murderer, Mrs. J. W. Coleman' Mary Phagan's mother, broke down utterly and wept for several minutes.

Court opened in the afternoon with the attorneys arguing the admission of Dr. Owens' testimony. Luther Rosser cited case after case in which evidence similar to that proposed by the defense had been admitted and allowed to stand.

Solicitor Dorsey contended that the witness was not testifying as an expert, but was giving his opinion on a matter concerning which the jurors were just as well qualified to judge as the witness.

Dr. Owens was prepared to testify that with three others he went through all the movements described by Conley, and that it required the two men who took the parts of Conley and Frank eighteen and one-half minutes to carry a burden representing the body of Mary Phagan to the basement and return to the office floor.

Lemmie Quinn, foreman in the metal department of the National Pencil Factory, told a story on the witness stand Wednesday in the trial of Leo M. Frank which gave the lie to another of Jim Conley's courtroom statements.

Conley testified that he saw Lemmie Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came in. The two girls entered some time between 12 and 12:15. Quinn said he did not get to the factory until about 12:20, and that he saw neither of the girls.

Aside from the testimony of Quinn, the forenoon was marked by the opening of the gates for all of the character testimony against Frank which the State wishes to produce.

Three witnesses were produced by the defense to testify to Frank's good character. When the first one was called Solicitor Dorsey objected, saying:

"I don't see how this testimony is material, your honor, unless the defense intends to make the defendant's character an issue."

"That's exactly what we propose to do," retorted Arnold.

Challenge to State To Do Its Worst.

The crowded room of spectators knew that this was a challenge by the defense for the State to do its worst. Frank's lawyers deliberately had introduced Frank's character into the trial, apparently indicating that they had no fear of the evidence which the prosecution might bring forth.

It is known that the State has made elaborate preparations for an attack on the young superintendent's character with stories of gross immorality.

Solicitor Dorsey was asked Wednesday how many witnesses he expects to call.

"I don't know," he replied. "It largely depends on the number that the defense calls and the nature of their testimony."

Those called by Attorney Arnold at the forenoon session were:

Alfred L. Lane, a merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902.

Philip Nash, electrical engineer, Ridgewood, N. J., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute during the same period.

Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, Brooklyn, who knew Frank at Pratt Institute and also at Cornell University.

All testified as to Frank's good character.

Office Boy Called to Aid Frank.

Frank Payne, former office boy at the factory, was asked to particularize as to certain incidents mentioned in the testimony of Jim Conley and C. B. Dalton. He said that he never knew Frank to have women in his office, although it was his custom to be at the office at the times Conley and Dalton testified that these gay parties took place.

A full three-quarters of the forenoon was consumed in a legal wrangle over the admissibility of Dr. William Owens' testimony. Dr. Owens was ready to testify in regard to the reproduction of the alleged movements of Conley and Frank in disposing of Mary Phagan's body, as Conley recited them on the witness stand. Judge Roan reserved his decision until afternoon.

Quinn was questioned minutely in regard to the time of his visit to the factory as soon as he was called to stand. Attorney Arnold began by having him detail his movements throughout the day from the time he arose in the morning.

The foreman told an apparently straightforward story, although the Solicitor did not have time for cross-examination before the noon recess. He estimated that he entered the factory at about 12:20 o'clock. All of the doors were unlocked, he said, and the doors of the outer and inner offices on the second floor were open. The safe door, he thought, also was open. He testified that his conversation with Frank was very brief and that he left the factory within two or three minutes.

He said that R. P. Barrett, designated by Attorney Arnold as the "Christopher Columbus" of the Frank trial, had discovered the blood spots and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. Barrett frequently had remarked to him, Quinn testified, that he would draw down the big rewards if Frank was convicted. Quinn said that Barrett had mentioned $2,700 at one time and $4,500 at another as the sum he would receive because he had been the first to find the blood spots and other evidence.

The witness said that it was nothing unusual for factory employees to be hurt and bleed. He cited the case of C. P. Gilbert, who, he said, had been badly injured by the bursting of an emery wheel and was carried, bleeding, past the very place where Barrett discovered the blood spots.

He testified that he never had seen Frank speak to Mary Phagan and did not know that he knew her.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon in the dispute over Dr. Owens' testimony.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal.

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was car-

ARMORY FIRE THREATENS ARSENAL

Crowd Flees as Flames Near the Ammunition Room Over Taft Hall—Damage Heavy.

Rapidly making toward the room where many thousand rounds of ammunition were stored, fire did several thousand dollars' worth of damage in the storeroom of the armory over Taft Hall in the Auditorium early Wednesday afternoon.

The main auditorium was not touched, however. The blaze did not get within 100 yards of the huge organ.

The fire was discovered by Sergeant Wardwell, of the Artillery Corps, who happened to be in the basement at the time. Smoke came down the elevator shaft and he rushed upstairs into the office of H. J. Weaver, the keeper of the building. They hurried to the upper floor and discovered smoke coming out of the storeroom in which the tents of Companies C and D are kept. An alarm was turned in and several companies responded.

Firemen Find Doors Locked.

It required several minutes for the firemen to gain entrance into the room on account of the door being locked. The armory is on the top floor and it was necessary to use an aerial truck and enter through the window. The firemen were driven back for some time by the heavy smoke from the burning tents and were compelled to play several streams on them for more than half an hour.

The tents which were burned were used in the recent encampment at St. Simons Island, and it is quite probable that the fire had smoldered for several days. The loss to the National Guard will amount to several thousand dollars.

It required but a few moments for the room to fill with water to a depth of more than two feet, the fire being unusually hard to quench on account of the waterproof tents, and having started in the center of a huge pile of canvas.

Plastering Loosened.

The water seeped through the floor and the ceiling over Taft Hall, loosening the plaster there, while a heavy stream flowed down the stairways into the great lobby. When the fire was extinguished the firemen undertook the task of bailing out the storeroom, using large galvanized tubs for the work.

News of the Auditorium being on fire drew a large crowd, but when the rumor that many rounds of ammunition were stored in the apartment next to the tent room spread the crowd melted rapidly.

The fire will not interfere with a prize fight scheduled at the Auditorium Wednesday night.

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

LATEST NEWS

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Robert F. Wagner, president pro tem of the Senate, said to-day that although the date of the beginning of the Sulzer impeachment court proceedings had not been decided upon yet, it had been tentatively agreed that it would be September 22.

MEMPHIS, TENN, Aug. 13.—The first bale of 1913 cotton sold for $155.50, or at a rate of 30 cents per pound, on the floor of the Cotton Exchange here to-day. The proceeds were donated to the Bachelors' Baby Hospital.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Henry Lane Wilson, ambassador from the United States to Mexico on leave, threw a bombshell into the State Department to-day by vigorously attacking the disclaimer of the British foreign office of its recognition of General Huerta as President of Mexico.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Aug. 13.—At Stevens Pottery, about eight miles from this city to-day Mrs. Will Winters was accidentally killed with a shotgun by her sister-in-law, Mrs. Charles Winters. She was returning the gun her husband had borrowed from his brother. As she reached the house she playfully pointed the weapon at her sister-in-law and it was accidentally discharged.

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—Although required by Attorney General McReynolds to release former Governor Brito, of Mexico, on $10,000 bail, United States Commissioner Arthur Browne to-day refused to order the Mexican's release. McReynold's action was taken at the request of Secretary of State Bryan. Brito is held on a charge of murder and robbery preferred by the Mexican Federal Government.

WINCHESTER, KY., Aug. 13. Bob Deaton went on the stand today in the trial of Red Hamilton Davidson for the assassination of former Sheriff Ed Callahan. He made a full confession of the alleged plot, corroborating Jim Smith, Dan Deaton and others who have testified for the Commonwealth. Bob Deaton is also a defendant in the case.

Dayton To Be Run by Business Manager

BATTLE TO IMPEACH SULZER WON

New York Assembly Votes After All-Night Session to Try Executive as Grafter.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—The Court of Impeachment will meet at the Capitol September 18 at noon.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Friends Make Hard Fight.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him, by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblyemen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

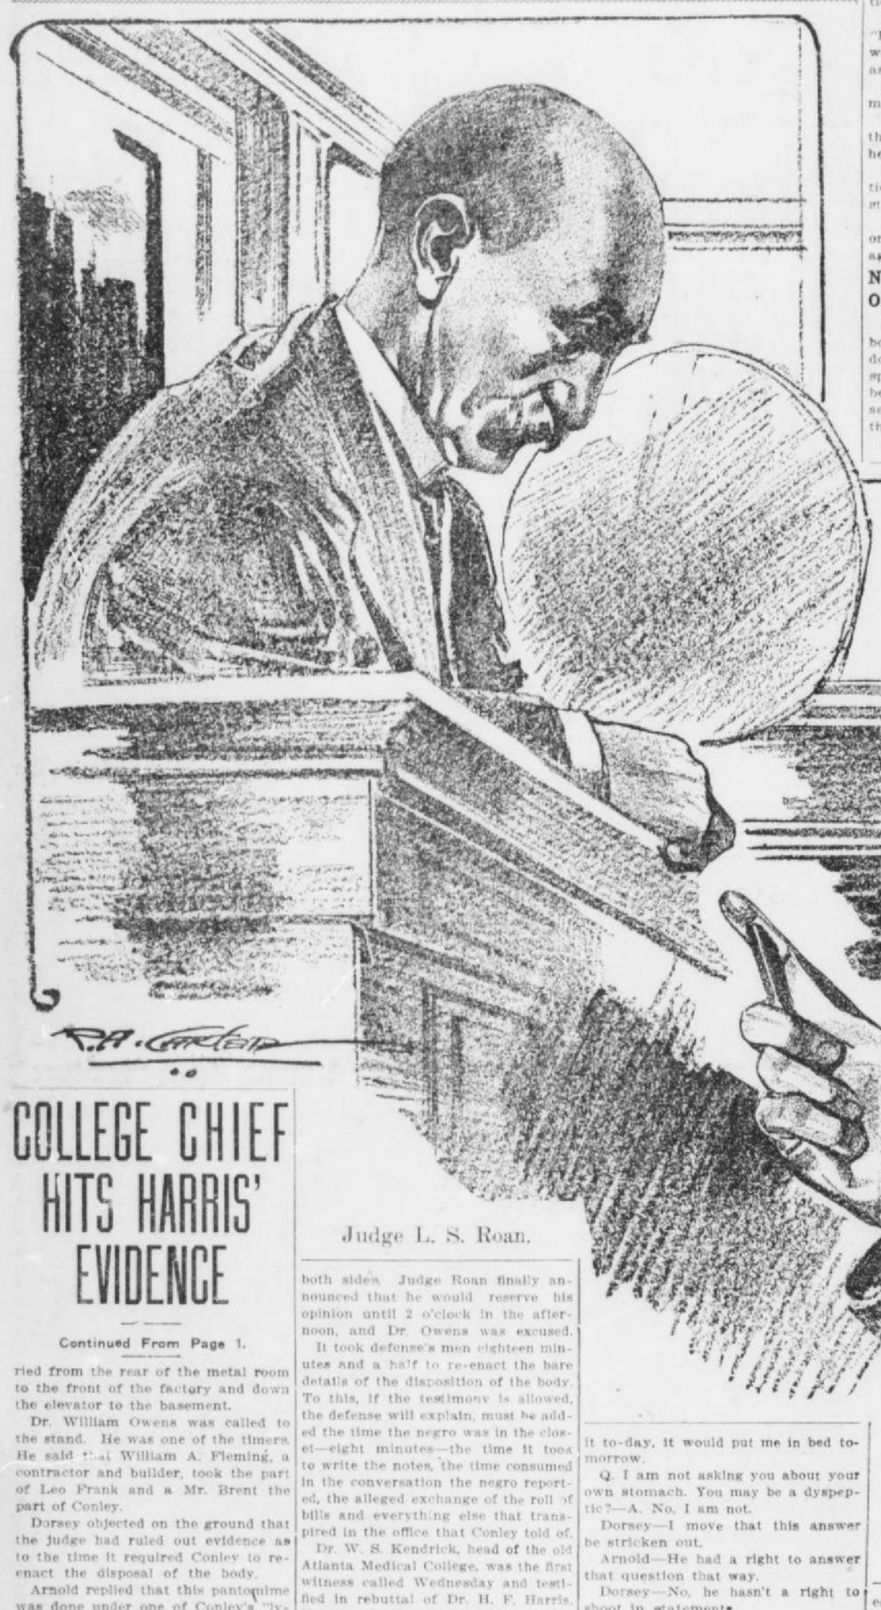

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was ried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to re-enact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

Numerous authorities were cited by both sides. Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 30 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed to-morrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Dorsey—No, he hasn't a right to shoot in statements.

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there not certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed heartily.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any progress in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate-Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the State can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the elevator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go.

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank stumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office, Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quiet a while.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches, takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley box of cigarettes, Conley lights cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes, Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Frank: "There is $200." Conley takes money and looks at it a little bit.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, don't you pay another dollar when that watch man comes, I will pay him myself."

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right, Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you. Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." (Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home. Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Attor-

BOTH SIDES AIM FOR JUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF FRANK

With Judge, Jury and Councillors Performing Duty Well, Square Deal Is Assured.

By Jas. B. Nevin.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will be prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

State Calls More Witnesses; Defense Builds Up an Alibi

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after Frank arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

Kneel in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

Turks Threaten New War on Bulgarians

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13.—The Turkish Porte to-day threatened to declare war against Bulgaria unless Bulgarian soldiers ceased their slaughter of defenseless Turkish peasants.

According to reports sent in from Turkish military officers in Adrianopl, many Mussulman men and women are being killed daily in Thrace.

ney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did, and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix, of Gwinett County, was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

Q Where do you live?—A. Gwinett County.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. How many acres of land do you own?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 800 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He declared he was a farmer of Gwinnett County, who had known C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Brooklyn Man First Character Witness.

Alfred Lane, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the first character witness to be introduced by the defense. He is a wealthy merchant of that city. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A merchant of New York.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902, and later at Cornell.

Q. You say you knew him at Pratt Institute for four years?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know him at Cornell?—A. Yes; I didn't go to Cornell, but I saw him much in Brooklyn.

Q. How old was he when you were together at Pratt Institute?—A. Between 17 and 21 years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. What is it—good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey did not cross-examine the witness. He was excused and Philip Nash, of Ridgewood, N. J., was called. Arnold examined him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Electrical engineer for a telephone company.

Q. Where did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I was with him at Pratt Institute for four years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it good or bad?—A. Good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination. Richard A. Knight, of Brooklyn, a consulting engineer and a college mate of Frank's at both the Pratt Institute and Cornell, was called by Attorney Arnold.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you know him?—A. I was his college mate at Pratt Institue and at Cornell.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Former Office Boy Called by Defense.

The witness was excused and Frank Payne, a former office boy at the National Pencil Company, was called.

Q. How old are you?—A. 16.

Q. When did you last work at the pencil factory?—A. About 8 months ago.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. Nowhere.

Q. Were you there last Thanksgiving day?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a day it was?—A. It snowed.

Q. Were Mr. Frank and Mr. Schiff there?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do?—A. Mr. Schiff sent me up to the fourth floor to fix some boxes.

Q. Who was up there?—A. Jim Conley.

Q. What time did he leave there?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley when you left?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the factory on Saturday?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did Mr. Frank ever have any women there?—A. No.

Q. How many weeks were you there?—A. Five or six.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were your duties there?—A. General office boy.

Q. You spent most of your time in Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you quit working there?—A. It has been seven or eight months ago.

Q. Did you ever see any beer bottles around there?—A. No.

Q. You say Jim Conley was there last Thanksgiving morning?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you notice him?—A. He was sweeping around there until about 10:30 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Lemmie Quinn Called to Stand.

The witness was excused and Lemmie Quinn was called. Arnold questioned the witness.

Q. Where did you work?—A. I am foreman of the metal department of the National Pencil Company.

Q. Is that the department Mary Phagan worked in?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Memorial day?—A. Yes, it was a holliday at the factory.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Barrett discovered the spots on the floor of the metal room and some strands of hair on a lathe?—A. Yes. He mentioned those discoveries to me.

Q. Did he ever mention any reward he expected to get if Mr. Frank was convicted?—A. Yes, he mentioned $2,700 once and another time $4,500. He said he had been told that if Mr. Frank was convicted there wasn't any chance to keep him out of his reward. He wanted my advice. I told him I was not a lawyer and could not tell him.

Q. Had anyone noticed them before Barrett said he discovered them?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember a man named Glibert getting cut in the metal room and bleeding around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. About a year ago.

Q. Do you know of anyone being cut since then?—A. Yes, a boy was cut on the hand.

Q. Did he go by the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know what that stuff was over the spot on the floor?—A. No.

Q. Do you know what has ever become of that hair?—A. I think the detectives have it.

Hair Might Have Blown Into Lathe.

Q. Is there any place in that room where the girls dress their hair?—A. Why, there's a little gas jet about ten feet from the lathe.

Q. This jet is between the lathe and the west windows and a breeze might blow the hair across to this lathe, might it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get your pay Friday night before the murder?—A. About 20 minutes to 6.

Q. What was the last time before the murder that you saw Mary Phagan?—A. The Monday before.

Q. Why did she not work that week?—A. We were out of material and she was laid off.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank speak to Mary Phagan?—A. No, I never did.

Q. You were examined about all these things by the Coroner and they were impressed on your memory, were they not?—A. Yes.

Mr. Quinn told in detail what he did during the morning up to the time he returned to the factory. He said the front door of the factory was unlocked.

Q. When you got up to Frank's outer office was the door open or shut?—A. Open.

Q. How about the door to the inner office?—A. Open.

Q. How about the safe door in the outer office?—A. I think it was open.

Q. What time was this?—A. About 12:20.

Fixed Time by Going to Market.

Q. Why do you fix the time at that? A. Well, when I left home I was anxious to get up town before the meat markets closed. I left home at 15 minutes to 12. Doing the things I did, I judge it was about 12:20 o'clock when I got to the factory.

Q. You say you left home at 11:45, did you look at your watch?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you want to get to town?—A. Before 12, because I was afraid the stores would be closed.

Q. How long did it take you to walk to the market?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. What time was it when you got there?—A. The whistle blew while I was there.

Q. Can you tell how long you remained there?—A. No.

Q. You went to the pharmacy from there?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was that from the market?—A. About three doors.

Q. What pharmacy was that?—A. Benjamin's.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. About three minutes.

Q. Did you see anyone else at the factory besides Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. What office was he in?—A. The inner office.

Q. What did you say?—A. I asked him if Mr. Schiff was in. He said, "No."

Q. Did you say anything else?—A. I made some remark about his not being able to keep me away even on a holiday.

Q. What time was it when you left?—A. About 12:20.

Q. Where did you go?—A. To Devore's pool parlor. It was about 12:30 then.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To the cafe, where I met Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman.

White Substance Used on Machines.

Q. What did you go to see Schiff for?—A. We had a baseball wager and I went there to talk to him about it.

Q. How many minutes did you stay at the Busy Bee?—A. I can not tell exactly.

Q. But you do know what time you went to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to anyone at the poolroom?—A. Yes, McMurray.

Q. Where did you go from Devore's?—A. The Atlanta Theater.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. About fifteen minutes. I bought tickets for the night.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Back to Devore's.

Q. Who is John Lamey?—A. He worked with me.

Q. Did you go to the factory Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you talk to?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Montag.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. Three or four minutes.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. At Bloomfield's?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he dressed?—A. In blue of black.

Q. What is the purpose of that white preparation used at the plant?—A. To clean the machines.

Carried in Buckets, Spatters on Floors.

Q. How was it carried?—A. In buckets.

Q. It spatters over everything?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Frank Monday?—A. Yes, Monday afternoon.

Q. How was he dressed?—In brown.

Q. Look at this picture (showing the witness the State's diagram drawn by Bert Green of The Georgian). Does it show Mary Phagan's machine?—A. No.

Q. Point out the place where Barrett claims to have found the hair. Did you find any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall the place near the closet where the negro said he found the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Well, if somebody had washed up blood in one place would it not have been the reasonable thing to wash it up in another?

"I object," said Dorsey. "That's a question for argument, your honor.

"It's such a good argument," said Arnold, "that I could not help it. I withdraw the question."

Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. The cross-examination of Quinn was to be taken up immediately then.

Argument on Admissibility Of Evidence Resumed.

The argument on the inadmissibility of Dr. Owens' testimony was resumed with the opening of the afternoon session. Attorney Rosser addressed the court.

"The rule at the beginning of this hearing was that we would be permitted to introduce any evidence that would tend to shed light on the mystery," he said.

Attorney Rosser at this juncture read a Georgia decision, tending to show evidence of this kind as being admissible. Judge Roan interrupted.

"That part of it is all right, Mr. Rosser," he said. "The only point is whether the conditions are similar."

Rosser: "All right, your honor, I will read you some authorities on that point."

Attorney Rosser read a decision in a case in which such an experiment had been allowed in which the jury could make allowances for the differences.

"We will show that this man walked as fast as he could," said Rosser. "Is it possible that this court could have so far forgotten its common sense as to permit this jury to draw its own conclusions?"

Rosser Pleads for Test.

"Only God Almighty can made identity," Rosser continued, "and He hasn't done it yet. There are no two leaves alike in the forest. I said a while ago that it was a one-horsed lawyer who wrote the opinion cited by my friend Dorsey. With a few exceptions, you and I know the authors of law books have not common sense enough to make a living practicing law.

"I don't think any more unsound principle of law could be embodied in the statutes than the one involved here, and I don't want to get in the contempt of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. A man's life is involved and important light might be excluded. One of the cases I was just showing you said in cases of dissimilarity that the judge shall instruct the jury to make allowances."

Dorsey took up the argument.

"I take no issue with Mr. Rosser," said the Solicitor, "about this Georgia case by the Court of Appeals. That was an expert matter—the question of how long it would take to stop an engine. In the Moran case it was a question of whether a stick was a deadly weapon or not. It was declared to be a case not admitting opinion evidence. The jury was just as capable of judging as the witness."

Raises Question of Strain.

Judge Roan: "They propose to prove by Dr. Owens how long it took persons he watched to go through the things Conley said he went through with. He is to state facts. I won't permit any opinion and I don't want to hear any more authority on it. It is a questio of whether they can go through substantially the same things as Conley said he did as regards speech, pressure, etc."

Dorsey: "Who can imagine the pressure they were under after murdering a little girl?"

Arnold: "All during this trial we have admitted this kind of evidence. We had policemen to say they had sat in the toilet and tried to see how much of the body of Mary Phagan Newt Lee could see. We asked the policemen—they asked the man."

Judge Roan: "Mr. Arnold, I don't want anything on that. I want to know whether there is enough similarity between the cases for the jury to draw its own conclusions."

Arnold: "We know, your honor."

Judge Roan: "Well, this man don't know how long Conley stood over the body."

Arnold: "We think that negro's statement was sufficiently graphic as to detail to admit of the comparison."

Judge Admits Evidence.

Judge Roan: "I have some doubts about it, but I will give the defendent the benefit of the doubt and allow the evidence to be admitted."

The jury was ordered brought in.

Lemmie Quinn was then recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold continued direct examination.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. When did the last man bleed on the second floor?—A. The last man dangerously hurt was a year ago.

Q. Was that a year from now, or a year from the date of the murder?—A. I mean just what I said.

Q. Can't you tell us the truth about it?

Arnold: "He has answered the question."

Dosey: "I am cross-examining the witness."

A. I can't tell you the exact time.

Q. When was the last time you noticed blood from this man?—A. Some time ago. I don't rememebr how long.

Q. Did it look like this blood found in front of the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes, except the last I saw there was darker.

Q. You told Mr. Starnes, Mr. Black and the other officers that you did not go into the factory on that Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not tell anyone about being in the factory until after you had been down to see Frank, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say when you told him?—A. He said he remembered seeing me, but didn't remember the time.

Q. Didn't he tell you to keep it quiet until he had seen his lawyers?—A. He didn't say keep it quet. He said he would talk with his lawyer.

Q. When was this that you saw Frank?—A. Tuesday after the murder.

Q. You were with the police all day Monday and said nothing about it?—A. I wasn't with them all day.

Explains Why He Was Led to Tell of Visit.

Q. Off and on, all day?—A. I saw them a number of times.

Q. Are you absolutely sure about what time you were in Frank's office?—A. Reasonably sure.

Q. Do you deny that you told Officer Payne that you had not been to the factory since Friday?—A. I do.

Q. You admit refreshing Frank's memory about your visit?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us just what you said.—A. I told him that I was there and he said he remembered it, but not the time except that it was after the time Mary Phagan was there.

Q. Didn't you tell him, "I don't like to be brought into it, but if it will help you, I will"?—A. Yes.

Q. He told his lawyers and said they advised him to mention it, and you told the police?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to Barrett before the Coroner's inquest?—A. No; that was after the Coroner's inquest.

Q. Where is Miss Jefferson, who discovered these spots, working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. She was there yesterday in the polishing department.

Q. You saw her?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't tell the officers you were in the factory on Saturday, April 26, until the following Saturday?—A. The next Saturday.

Q. Didn't you say this to the Coroner's Jury? That you told Frank you were there, and he said he would mention it to his attorneys to see whether it was favorable or not?—A. I don't know whether I said favorable or not.

State Seeking Flaws In Quinn Testimony.

Q. Why was it that you said it was between 12 and 12:30, and that you arrived at the poolroom at 12:25, and now say you arrived at Frank's office between 12:20 and 12:25 and arrived at the poolroom at 12:30?—A. I overlooked part of it.

Q. Didn't they ask you if you could be definite and you said you never looked at a clock until you got to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you now about the back door. Was it locked or barred? A. Closed.

Q. On May 12, in the presence of Detectives Lanford, Starnes and myself, did you not sign this statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't you say that there was a bar on that door that cut off communication from the upper floor and didn't you say it was customarily kept closed?—A. Yes

Q. Now, didn't I go further with you and say this: "That the door that leads from the office floor to the floor above is kept closed," and didn't you say, "No, the door is closed with a bar across it." Now, isn't that true?—A. Yes.

Senators Take Slap at House

The House of Representatives almost unanimously turned down the Senate Wednesday morning, when a resolution introduced in the Senate by Taylor, of the Third, requesting the House to return a local bill abolishing the Board of Commissioners of Appling County, was defeated.

Carter, of Appling, led the fight against the resolution, declaring the efforts of Senator Taylor to get the bill back were merely an attempt to discredit him in his home county, and defeat all his bills.

Senator Taylor proposed to amend Mr. Carter's bill by adding a referendum clause. This Mr. Carter declared the people of his county do not want.

Representative Hardeman, of Jefferson spo ekvigorously in favor of the resolution, declaring its defeat would be a grave discomfort to the Senate. Mr. Pickert, of Terrell, declared the House should refuse the request of the Senate and support Mr. Carter, who, he said, is accountable to the people of his county.

The House passed the bill providing for the popular election of United States Senators, and for a temporary appointment by the Governor.

Socialist Fined by Recorder in Mobile

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—W. M. Doyle, striking machinist and Socialist, who has been creating much comment by his anarchistic utterances and his publications, was fined $25 or 50 days by Acting Recorder Robert Gordon in the Recorder's Court to-day for blockading the streets in Bienville Square.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the trial and on account of the feeling that was aroused over the case, the Rev. Matthew Brewster, rector of fashionable Trinity Episcopal Church, signing his bond at the time of his arrest.

Georgia's Senate and Her Children

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me--

"Even so, it is not the will of your Father who is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Matt. 18:5-14.

A child—

A girl—

All men would help her.

House Bill No. 4 will save girls who are children in years.

The PRISON COMMISSION has favored the Bill.

The PENITENTIARY COMMITTEE of the House has approved it.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS with WHEATLEY of Sumter as Chairman unanimously recommended its adoption carrying a $30,000 appropriation.

And men believe that GOVERNOR SLATON approves the measure.

Yesterday, Tuesday, the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, whose Chairman is the Speaker of the House, BURWELL, with BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, put the Bill upon the calendar. Without this, the measure would have been lost. Among those helping to pass it were NUNNALLY of Floyd and SHUPTRINE of Chatham. And for it BARRY WRIGHT did splendid service.

THE VOTE WAS 115 TO 46.

The forty-six who opposed it did not do so with the thought of harming girls. They misunderstood. At heart—if they consider—they too approved the JONES-MILLS' BILL establishing the "Georgia Training School for Girls."

It is no one man's measure—no group of men can claim it—it is a law for the want of which girl children of Georgia have suffered.

You would not continue to hurt and degrade them—you, too, would help.

To-day the Bill is in the Senate.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS of that body, whose Chairman is Senator W. W. STARK, now has it under consideration; and the Senate RULES COMMITTEE will doubtless see that it is heard.

The President of the Senate, RANDOLPH ANDERSON, of Chatham, has long favored a Reformatory for girls in Georgia.

And since the question of taxation and finances has been settled, the only argument against the bill has been removed.

Of it, The Morning News of Savannah has rightly said:

"It is hard to see how anybody can truthfully say that it would not profit the State to spend $30,000 in that way."

The Senate will doubtless pass the Bill as it was adopted by the House, without an opposing vote.

All Georgia will approve.

RURAL CREDITS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Wilson Says Next Task Ahead of Him and Congress Is to Give Aid to Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The following statement was issued at the White House to-day embodying the views of President Wilson on rural credits:

"Again and again during the discussion of the currency bill it has been urged that special provision should be made in it for the facilitating of credits of the farmers of the country who stand in need of agricultural credits as distinguished from ordinary commercial and industrial credits. Such proposals were not adopted because such credits could only be imperfectly provided for in such a measure. The scope and character of the bill, its immediate and chief purpose could not be made to reach as far as the special interests of the farmer requires.

"Special machinery of a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that the Congress will at that session act upon the recommendations of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

Nation's Welfare Involved.

"There is no subject more important to the welfare and industrial development of the United States; there is no form in which I would myself seek a greater honor or privilege to take part because I should feel that it was a service to the whole country of the first magnitude and significance. It should have accompanied and gone hand and hand with reform of our banking and currency system if we had been ready to act wisely and with full knowledge of what we were about.

"There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world; were so intelligent and enterprising and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicap they carried, no matter what disadvantage, whether of the law or of natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or opportunity, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering, and have too often failed to renew them when we did see what they were. One of the chief and most serious of these disadvantages has been that he had not been able to secure the extended bank accommodations he every year stands in need of without paying the most burdensome rates of interest and saddling himself with mortgages and obligations of every kind which he fairly staggered under, if he could carry them at all.

Effects in Other Countries.

"In other countri s systems of rural credit have been put into operation which not only have relieved the farmer, but have put his enterprises upon a footing of easy accomplishment. Countries in which agriculture was steadily languishing because wholly unprofitable have seen their farming lands blossom again and their people turn once more hopefully to the soil for a living. Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish not afterward.

"And they will be. This is our next task and duty. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with advising the Congress of the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the country-side, and that very soon."

Wife of Umprie in Faint as Angry Fans Threaten Husband

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 13.—Mrs. James Murray, wife of the American Association umpire, was under the care of a physician to-day as the result of a nervous shock caused by witnessing an attack on her husband by infuriated baseball fans. During the game between Milwaukee and Louisville yesterday, Umpire Muray gave Milwaukee the benefit of a close decision. Fans from the bleachers and grandstand rushed on the field. Pitcher Jack Powell caught an angry man who was about to hurl a heavy hammer at the umpire.

Mrs. Murray, sitting in a lower box near the scene of the attack, fainted and was carried to an automobile.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—M. H. DeYoung, publisher of The San Francisco Chronicle, to-day announced that he had purchased The San Francisco Call, and would close it September 1.

The price paid was not made public. John D. Spreckles, a member of the California family of capitalists, was the owner of The Call.

BEAUTY CONTEST WON BY MISS MARY CARL HURST

Victor in the beauty race striking example of piquant brunette.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst.

Wires luck to the 500,000 club upon learning her picture will adorn Booster Buttons.

Popular Society Girl's Likeness Will Adorn 'Half-Million' Club Booster Button.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Hurst, of No. 62 West Twelfth street, is declared the choice of Atlanta for the girl whose smile is to help spread the city's fame.

In winning the "Booster Button" Beauty Contest she becomes the sponsor of the 500,000 Booster Club, and her face will adorn the lapel buttons with this catchy slogan:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll get you yet. 500,000 by 1920."

When the voting ended Tuesday, this popular young society girl had a total of 18,340 votes, a good margin over her nearest competitor. Though decidedly the choice of Georgian and American readers, she did not win without a contest, and her permanent lead was never assured until the last days of the campaign. Her admirers were constant, though, and after her picture appeared as a nominee a steady stream of votes for her flowed in.

Winner a Piquant Brunette.

Miss Hurst is a striking type of a vivacious brunette. Her face scintillates smiles of good cheer.

There were all types of beauty in the contest—perfect blondes with cerulean blue eyes, auburn-haired girls with pink cheeks, girls with dark brown hair and big dreamy blue eyes, and various shades of brunettes. But the smiling face must have fit the slogan for a "Half Million City" better than any, for she got the most votes.

An order for the booster buttons immediately will be placed. Though Miss Hurst is sponsor for the club, she will lose her identity on the buttons, except as she is remembered as the girl. And, of course, everybody will remember that.

Wires "Luck to 500,000 Club."

There will be no name on the buttons, only the slogan of the Half Million City. Miss Hurst is out of the city, but in acknowledgment of her election she wired:

"Luck to the '500,000 Club.'"

The next step will be a formal organization of the "500,000 Club." Before many days the beautiful buttons will be distributed and a concentrated effort to boost Atlanta's population to 500,000 by 1920 will begin.

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same alignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. Thus no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the Vice President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of his health.

SENATE PUTS AN O. K. ON SLATON NOMINATIONS

Confirmation of Moon and Steed Ends Fight Begun When Brown Took Seat.

Confirmation by the Senate Wednesday morning of four appointments made by Governor Slaton settled a controversy of long standing in regard to the official status of Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, as members of the State Board of Education.

The appointment of Professor Moon and Mr. Steed dates back to the administrations of Governor Hoke Smith and Governor Brown, who precipitated a bitter fight when he appointed Moon and Steed after an adjournment of the State Senate, which had upheld the Hoke Smith appointments. In the shuffle which followed the two Hoke Smith men were ousted to give place to Moon and Steed.

On recommendation of Governor Slaton, Moon and Steed will serve four years each, dating from September 5, 1913.

The appointments of the Governor confirmed by the Senate are as follows:

E. H. Callaway, of Richmond County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

Joseph S. Davis, of Dougherty County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

F. G. Bell, of Chatham County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for a term ending August 3, 1917, vice P. A. Stovall, resigned.

Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, to be members of the State Board of Education for four years from September 5, 1913.

Kentuckian Named Minister to Panama

JUDGE ROAN WILL WIN OVER ALL OPPOSITION

Some Protests From Men Who Want Atlantan Named Are Made to Governor.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar, some of whom have protested to the Governor, it is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Leaps From Pier to Save Society Woman

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—Mrs. G. Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ware, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians on Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station, where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

Soldier on Duty in Mine Strike Killed

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 13.—The first fatality since the installation of 200 Michigan State troops in the Calumet copper region on account of the strike of 18,000 miners occurred today, when Orla Green, 22, private in Battery A, of Lansing, died from an accident.

Green was kicked in the abdomen by a horse a week ago.

MASSEE CHARGES GRAFT IN MACON

Says City Pays Too Much for Electricity and That Officials Get Free Lights.

MACON, Aug. 13.—In an interview this afternoon W. Jordan Massee, president of the new electric power company, charges that the city of Macon officially, and the Macon Railway and Light Company, are in collusion and that for this reason his charges of excessive payments by the city to the Macon Railway and Light Company were whitewashed by Council last night.

Massee charges that Mayor John T. Moore and City Electrician Charles Humphries do not pay for lights used in their homes. He also says that Council whitewashed his charges because of the fact that the administration party has received liberal campaign contributions from the Macon Railway and Light Company in the past and expects similar contributions in the near future.

The charges are vigorously denied by officials.

Senate Kills Bill Providing for Early Primary Elections

The Senate Wednesday killed the House bill providing for early primaries, 21 to 18, agreed to the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture and the printing of bulletins and passed a number of local House bills.

President Anderson declared the Senate calendar virtually was clear with the exception of the inheritance tax bill, which probably will come up for passage late Wednesday afternoon.

Sharp debate occurred Wednesday morning on the primary bill, which was championed by Senator Tarver and others. Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, charged that the measure was an effort of politicians to legislate themselves back into office.

Insurrectors Kill 3,200 Federals, Then Rere t.

The World of Society

Several informal affairs have been given this week for Miss Martha Boynton's guests, Misses Ann Grady, of Chattanooga, and Susie Veach, of Adairsville. Tuesday Mrs. George Boynton entertained at luncheon followed by a matinee party at the Forsyth for these attractive visitors. Her guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Laura Cole and Martha Carrington, of Charleston, the guest of Mrs. Gilham Morrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Boynton gave an informal supper party Tuesday for Miss Boynton's guests. The table was decorated with a basket of yellow sunflowers, and all the details were in yellow. The guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Martha Carrington, Laura Cole, Martha Boynton, Messrs. Perrin Nicolson, Cary Callaway, Harold Barnwell, George Northen and William McCullough.

On Wednesday these girls were honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. Henry Porter at the East Lake Country Club. Luncheon was served on the veranda and old-fashioned garden flowers adorned the table. Mrs. Porter had as her guests Miss Grady, Miss Veach, Miss Martha Boynton, Mrs. Gilham Morrow and her guest, Miss Martha Carrington, and Mrs. B. L. Durrence, who is spending this week with Mrs. Porter at her country home at East Lake.

Miss Veach will spend a few days with Miss Alice Richards on Boulevard, and Miss Grady will be the guest of Miss Martha Crane on Inman circle until Friday, when she goes to Adairsville to visit Miss Veach.

Morning Bridge.

Mrs. Virginius Hitt will entertain a number of young girls at bridge Friday morning to meet her guest, Miss Helen Woolfork, of New York.

Miss MacIntyre Hostess.

Miss Julia MacIntyre will entertain at afternoon tea Thursday at her home at Brookhaven.

Miss McGaughey Entertains.

Miss Rubie McGaughey entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon for Miss Bessie Tappan's guests, Miss Lucy Jacks, of Forsyth, and Miss Julia Gill, of Woodberry, and for Miss Julia Lokey, of Birmingham, the guest of Mrs. Hugh Lokey. The party was completed by Miss Minnie Purvis.

For Miss Bacon.

In compliment to Miss Farra Bacon, of Savannah, who is visiting her, Miss Marie Colcord entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon, inviting six girls to be her guests. Thursday afternoon there will be a swimming party at the C. C. C. C. for Miss Bacon. After a swim, tea will be served on the veranda.

Habersham Chapter Meets.

Joseph Habersham Chapter, D. A. R., will hold its monthly meeting Friday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of the regent, Mrs. John A. Perdue, No. 703 Edgewood avenue.

W. A. R. M. A. Postpone Meeting.

There will be no meeting of the W. A. R. M. A. this month on account of the illness of Mrs. Roy Wilhelt.

Holcombe-Williams.

The marriage of Miss Aline Holcombe to Mr. Marion Williams took place at the home of the bride's mother Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the presence of a few relatives and friends, Dr. A. R. Holderby officiating.

Miss Holcombe was gowned in a traveling suit of blue, with hat and gloves to match.

The bridal party entered as Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Allie Hazel McClair. Miss Ethel Rutherford and Mr. G. C. Holcombe were the attendants.

After the wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Williams will be at home to their friends at No. 41 Orme street.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Miss Mary Brown entertained a swimming party at the Capital City Country Club Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Frampton Ellis, who was a bride of June. There were fourteen guests. Tea was served on the veranda.

Mrs. Hinton Hostess.

Mrs. Harold Hilton entertained Wednesday afternoon at a bridge tea, inviting the members of her club for the game and a few other friends in for tea at 5 o'clock. The honor guests were Miss Genevieve Gresham, the guest of Mrs. Russell Gresham, and Mrs. Pennel, of Fort Oglethorpe, who is visiting Mrs. J. C. Peavy.

Pink and white roses adorned the mantels. The prizes were gold and white china, while the guests of honor were presented with correspondence cards.

Mrs. Hilton received her guests wearing lavender crepe.

Smathers-Clough.

Miss Ellen Smathers, of Asheville, and Mr. Addison Clough, of Pennsylvania, were married Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Smathers, in Asheville.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Bartlett, and her little niece, Daisy Bartlett, were the only attendants, and only a few friends witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough are traveling in the West.

As Miss Smathers, Mrs. Clough visited in Atlanta last spring as the guest of Miss Emma Kate Amorous, and has many friends here who will be interested to hear of her wedding.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednsday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get pumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ralph Herz Scores Hit.

Ralph Herz, the musical comedy star, in an act that abounds in pathos, is the feature of a splendid bill at the Forsyth this week. Herz, although in a field entirely different from that in which he has been seen for years, does an excellent bit of character work in "Old Blind Joe," and the heartstrings of the audience get a good tug. His other impersonations are good.

Wood and Wyde, in a singing comedy skit, score a genuine hit. Their songs are catchy and their patter is above the average.

Milo Belden and company have a sketch which gets many laughs. Other acts are the Randalls, sharpshooters, who do some remarkable feats; the Adias family, in a first-class acrobatic turn; Willie Weston and company, in an entertaining musical number, and the Pathe play.

HAS NAME OPERATED ON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Miss Marie C. Schwabenhausen, a kindergarten teacher, had the Supreme Court in Brooklyn amputate the eight rear letters of her name. Now her pupils can handle it.

LAST PLEA FILED FOR PARDON OF M'NAUGHTON

Doctors Said to Have Made Affidavits That Arsenic Could Not Have Killed Flanders.

That one last desperate effort will be made to save the life of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, under sentence of death in the Chatham County jail, was indicated Wednesday morning, when Judge F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, representing McNaughton, filed affidavits with the State Prison Commission setting forth that the death of Flanders, alleged victim of McNaughton, could not have been caused by arsenic.

Judge Saffold arrived in Atlanta Wednesday morning. He filed the affidavits with the Prison Commission shortly thereafter and announced that he would remain in the city until the decision is handed down. The affidavits, it is said, were made out by physicians who assert that Flanders could not have died from arsenic.

According to members of the Prison Commission the new evidence will be carefully examined, probably Monday afternoon, preparatory to a final decision not later than Thursday.

Dr. McNaughton, it is understood, has expressed hope of being pardoned and has already prepared to re-enter the practice of medicine.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

G. A. & F. Grocery Co. Declared Bankrupt

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the G. A. & F. Grocery Company, a corporation doing a wholesale and retail grocery business at No. 23 Piedmont avenue, was filed in the United State District Court Wednesday morning.

The petitioners named are the Atlanta Paper Company, Gershon Company and A. Weimberg, who state that the concern owes more than $1,000. A referee will be appointed Thursday.

Canton Is Looted by Chinese Buccaneers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 13.—Chinese pirates still hold Canton at their mercy. Fighting is general, and a great part of the business district has been looted.

The Canton harbor is full of junks containing buccaneers. General Lung, commander of the garrison at Canton, is powerless.

FIRST OPEN BOLL AT DALTON.

DALTON.—The first open boll of cotton, unusually early for this section of the State, was brought in yesterday by W. T. Cox, of the Carbondale District. Indications point to the earliest first bale on record this year.

HOTEL MEN FEAST ON FRIED PULLETS

A delicious fried chicken dinner, with plenty of hot cornbread, buttermilk and vegetables raised on the premises, was served to the Hotel Men's Association after the regular monthly meeting at Durand's farm Tuesday evening. The association was the guest of J. T. Williams.

The members of the association and invited guests left the Piedmont Hotel at 4:30 o'clock in automobiles, after a short business meeting at which routine matters were disposed of. A committee was appointed to look after the delegates to the Georgia Hotel Men's Association, which meets in Atlanta the middle of November. Lee M. Jordan made an interesting talk on "Hotel Legislation."

The members present were J. Lee Barnes, J. F. Lutton, A. R. Evans, Ed R. Brown, Wallace Boyd, A. R. Keen, Lee M. Jordan, R Frank Taylor, Fred Limmell, Frank Harrell and Fred Houser. Among the invited guests were Edwin F. Johnson and Dr. J. S. Kennedy.

Mrs. Williams and Master "Biff" Williams assisted Mr. Williams in entertaining the guests.

Potash Lye Poison in Dipper Causes Death

ALPHARETTA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. Sallie Cobb, wife of William Cobb, a farmer living two miles west of Alpharetto, is dead after drinking water from a dipper with which she had a few hours before stirred potash lye.

Mrs. Cobb left the dipper on the well and went to visit a neighbor. On returning home she went to the well and took a drink of water. Within a few minutes she was in agony.

Negro Who Attacked Phone Girl Captured

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Jack Duncan, the negro who is said to have attacked, gagged, bound and robbed Miss Belle Kirkpatrick, telephone operator at Piedmont, in her office some time ago, is under arrest at Rome, Ga., having been brought from Miami, Fla., according to information given Sheriff C. T. Brooks here to-day.

Miss Kirkpatrick has gone to Rome to identify the negro, for whose arrest the Southern Bell Company had offered a $200 reward.

OBITUARY

Mrs. J. H. Bate, a former resident of Atlanta, died Monday night in San Antonio, Texas. She was the widow of J. H. Bate. The body will be brought here for interment.

The funeral of Mrs. C. D. Diggs, who died Tuesday at her home in East Point, will be held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the East Point Baptist Church. HUERTA SHOWS CONCILIATORY SPIRIT

Radicals Call Present Quiet Calm Before Storm—Drunken Students Jeer Lind.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 13.—Following the conference between Special American Envoy John Lind and the Mexican Foreign Minister, Manuel Gamboa, the belief prevailed here today that President Huerta would adopt a conciliatory attitude toward the United States, realizing the hopelessness of trying to combat the vast power of Mexico's big neighbor.

Callers at the National Palace declared that in substance President Huerta had said:

"While Mexico resents interference even from a friendly power in her domestic affairs, nevertheless we do not feel that we are in any way being coerced by the United States. We will make further protest against any efforts of Mr. Lind to settle affairs in this republic if he attempts to do so, but such action on our part will not be of a bellicose nature."

Lind Makes Report.

Mr. Lind is in constant communication with Washington and has notified the State Department of his safe arrival here and of the apparent absence of any anti-American feeling.

It is understood the Carranza rebels in Northeastern Mexico have communicated a desire to Mr. Lind to meet their representatives so that representations may be made in behalf of formal recognition of the Carranza forces as belligerents.

The Foreign Office to-day denied having any official knowledge of Japan's declination to recognize Felix Diaz as a special envoy. In fact, Mexico was assured before Senor Diaz left Mexico that he would be received in an official capacity.

A group of students from the National Military Academy, who evidently had indulged too freely in Mexican rum, attempted to make a hostile demonstration around the Hotel Lascurain, where Mr. Lind and his party are staying. They were driven away by rurales.

Calm Before Storm.

The situation here has remained quiet, but radicals among the supporters of Huerta declare it is only the calm before the storm. Conservatives are counseling Huerta not to antagonize the United States. A delegation of planters called at the National Palace to-day and presented a petition about as follows:

"Having the good of Mexico at heart and desiring to attract foreign capital for the upbuilding of the Republic, we ask President Huerta to maintain the friendliest relations with the United States and not to take action of any nature whatsoever which might offend our peaceful allies."

Pays Annual Visit To Tomb of Grant

COLUMBUS, Aug. 13.—Friends in Columbus have received messages from Dr. E. B. M. Browne, now of New York, but formerly pastor of Temple B'Nai Israel in this city, that he has just paid his annual visit to the tomb of General U. S. Grant, it being the twenty-seventh anniversary of the burial of the former President.

Dr. Browne is the sole survivor of the pallbearers who officiated at the funeral of General Grant. His daughter, Mrs. Dave Goldberg, now resides here.

State Urged to Pay For Warship Silver By House Committee

Payment of Georgia's donation to the silver service presented to the battleship Georgia, which has been deferred six years, was recommended Tuesdaye by a vote of 9 to 5, by the House Committee on Appropriations.

It was the overwhelming sentiment of the committee that the debt was an honorable one and should be paid at once. Charles W. Crankshaw, the Atlanta jeweler who has waited patiently for his money, appeared in person before the committee and read a brief history of the gift. It was at the request of the late Joseph M. Terrell, then Governor of Georgia, that the gift was made. The Governor presented the silver service on Georgia Day at the Jamestown Exposition.

The outstanding amount voted paid by the Appropriations Committee was $1,300. The total cost of the service was $7,515. Georgia cities contributed.

Diaz Ignored Because Of Diplomatic Error

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—A cablegram to a local Japanese newspaper from Tokio to-day said:

"As the Government of Mexico has ignored the diplomatic usage of the international intercourse etiquette by sending an envoy to Japan without consulting and making arrangements with the Japanese Government for the mission of General Felix Diaz, Japan advised the Government of Mexico that there is necessity of careful consultations beforehand."

McAdoo Belongs to Buttermilk Brigade

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The Wilson administration just can not agree on the subject of drink. Further disruption came to light to-day with the discovery that William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, is a buttermilk "fiend."

William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, insists on grape juice. President Wilson drinks orange juice.

Tuberculosis Spread By Paris Street Dogs

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The French Academy of Medicine is discussing the spreading of tuberculosis by dogs.

It is estimated that from 12,000 to 18,000 tubercular dogs are running loose in the Paris streets out of a total dog population of 200,000.

It is found that dogs give tuberculosis to cats.

CHURCHES WAKE TO CHANCE AT $1,000 GOLD

Several Organizations and Individuals Start in to Win Georgian's Want Ad Contest.

"How many organizations are going in for that $1,000 in gold?" asked the chairman of a church committee of the Want Ad Man. The committee had been appointed to take up the entry of the church in the Want Ad Contest inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian, and was making plans to go out and win.

"Why, quite a number and more coming," explained the Want Ad Man. "But the more the better for everybody.

"You see the more entered the more the vote is split up, just as when four or five candidates run for Mayor. It gives everybody a better chance to win. And remember, there's $500 worth of furniture of your own selection for second prize."

The Want Ad Contest has interested hundreds of Atlantans and the office of the Want Ad Man, fourth floor of the Foote & Davies Building, is one of the busiest places in the city this week. Contestants are calling to have details explained to them, to receive order blanks and other equipment, to have a chat with the Want Ad Man and gain tips on how to succeed.

The announcement of the complete list of prizes aroused new interest. The two grand prizes, a five-passenger automobile and a double tour to California and return with all expenses paid, have made everybody buckle down to work. And besides these, there are five prizes in each of four classes, men's, women's boys' and girls', so that everybody has a chance to win something worth while. And best of all, there isn't any guesswork or gamble. It is simply a businesslike proposition in which energy brings a certain return.

There is still time to enter the contest. The Want Ad Man will tell you all about it if you'll see him this week.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

COLUMBUS.—The Lee County, Alabama, Sunday school convention will meet August 22 and 23 at Waverly. Leon C. Palmer, field secretary of the Sunday school work in Alabama, will make the principal address.

SAVANNAH.—George W. Price, of Wilkesbarre, Pa., who suffered a stroke of paralysis several days ago, is in a serious condition at the Savannah Hospital.

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Auditorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

Wife of Secretary Is Champion Whistler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — Mrs. Josephus Daniels, the talented wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is to-day considered the champion whistler of the Cabinet circle. Mrs. Daniels learned this unusual accomplishment from her sons.

When she drives down to coax the Secretary from his desk these Mexican days she summons him by giving a sweet, high whistle in a code both understand.

Soldiers Shoot Wild; Blacks Fear Bullets

AUGUSTA, GA., Aug. 13.—The new rifle range of the local military companies will have to be abandoned unless better precautions are taken to protect human lives. An injunction is threatened by W. H. Rennison and other property owners in the vicinity because the soldiers are said to be shooting recklessly. Negroes in the neighborhood have stopped work on the farms for fear of being killed.

FIGHT TO RECOVER ZACHRY CHILDREN

Case Will Be Taken to Richmond Superior Court—Divorce Proceedings Do Not Interfere.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 13.—Attorney C. E. Dunbar announces that he will bring action before Judge Henry C. Hammond, of the Richmond Superior Court, for the recovery of the Zachry children.

By a decision of the Supreme Court yesterday Judge Hammond must hear the evidence in the case. The entire matter is, therefore, reopened, and Dunbar believes that he will recover the children on his next attempt.

Ordinary Walton heard the case at first, and he decided that Zachry should have the custody of the children. Subsequently divorce proceedings were brought by Dunbar for Mrs. Zachry, and he asked Judge Hammond to hear the case and decide whether the father or the mother should have the custody of the children.

Judge Hammond declined on the ground that Ordinary Walton had already decided the matter. Dunbar reminded him that at the time the matter was heard before Walton divorce proceedings had not been instituted.

Hammond said it made no difference and that he had no right to hear it. The Supreme Court has ruled that he had and has the right.

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

1,500-Pound Shark Captured in Trap

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Aug. 13.—A 1,500-pound shark, 25 feet long, which was captured in the Milk Island trap by Albert Story and killed, after a bitter battle, is at Story's Wharf where it attracts much attention.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Braintree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

FIRST BALE AT FORT GAINES.

FORT GAINES.—The first bale of 1913 cotton was received here to-day, just three days ahead of last year. It was brought in by Tony Wells, a negro, who received a handsome premium.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louicans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temporarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

BOUT FOR ED CLABBY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Eddie Clabby, brother of Jimmy Clabby, one of the claimants of the middleweight championship, has been matched to box ten rounds with Billy Walters, formerly of the Naval station at Lake Bluff, Ill., at Hammond, Ind., on Labor Day afternoon. The weight for the contest will be 142 pounds six hours before the contest.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "'He jests at scars who never felt a wound,'" she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father, died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me oaver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend oaver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the verandа & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look prifty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much, & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice. What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was very sweet of her. You see Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons & you cuddent maik me beleeve thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Missus Mace.

I know it, sed Pa, I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"But that is a sound tooth," said the dentist. "The pain is only sympathetic."

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

A solicitor called upon a professional man in Bloomsbury, and was shown into the consulting room. Presently the professional man entered, and, without looking at his visitor, began to write at his desk. The solicitor coughed, but the professional man continued writing. The solicitor coughed again, and then said:

"Excuse me, sir, but I have called to see you about a very important matter."

"Then why the devil don't you say so?" replied the professional man, looking up from his writing.

Two American farmers met a day or two after a cyclone had swept over their farms.

"She shook things up pretty bad out at my place," said one, stroking his whiskers meditatively. "By the way, Hiram," he added, "that new barn o' yourn get hurt at all?"

"Wal," drawled the other, "I dunno. I hain't found it yet!"

"Look here, Boxer, did you call me a common ass?"

"No, Fopson. I said you were an uncommon ass."

"Aw, that's different. I cawn't stand having anybody call me common, y'know."

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

Civilized people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

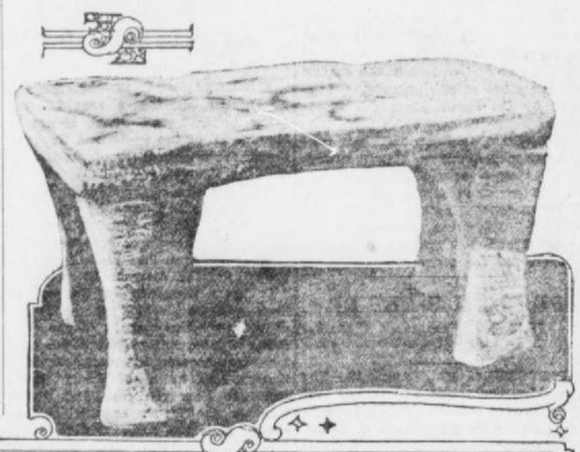

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

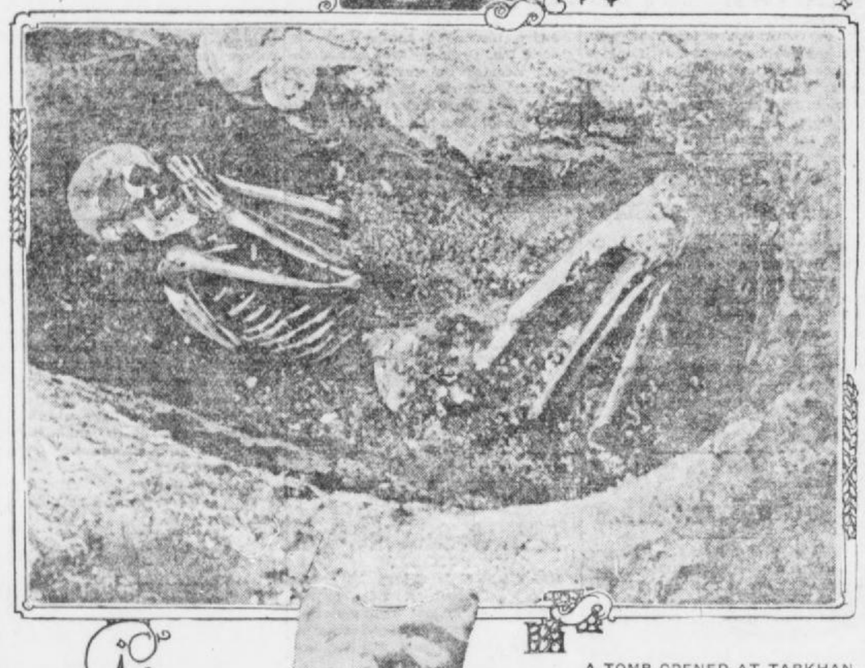

"Hallo!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

ANIMAL FIGURES AT MEMPHIS.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used un yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely owled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.

Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. In the home atmosphere is that of peace It is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

With the Boy.

Willie—May I go and play now, ma?

Mother—What? With those ragged trousers!

Willie—No; with the boy next door.

L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

Ball Bearing; Long Wearing.

Condensed billing has been adopted by many business houses on account of its time-saving features.

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

is particularly adapted to this service and requires no extra attachments.

The pressure roll lock and release device, the tabulator, the back spacer and the paper gauge make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter a complete condensed billing machine.

These conveniences are part of the typewriter—not attachments—and there is no additional cost.

Write for free booklet, "The Measure of Worth." It explains how ball bearings make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter the easiest running and most durable writing machine.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly. "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card.

"We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren, for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her pencilled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones, "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead,
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four tooth-brushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams, and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at the owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; "but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back, we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

* * *

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hardgrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a doubleheader against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V.
The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles in heat and dust, but the alienists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knock-out—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONsistency in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

* * *

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

* * *

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georges Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

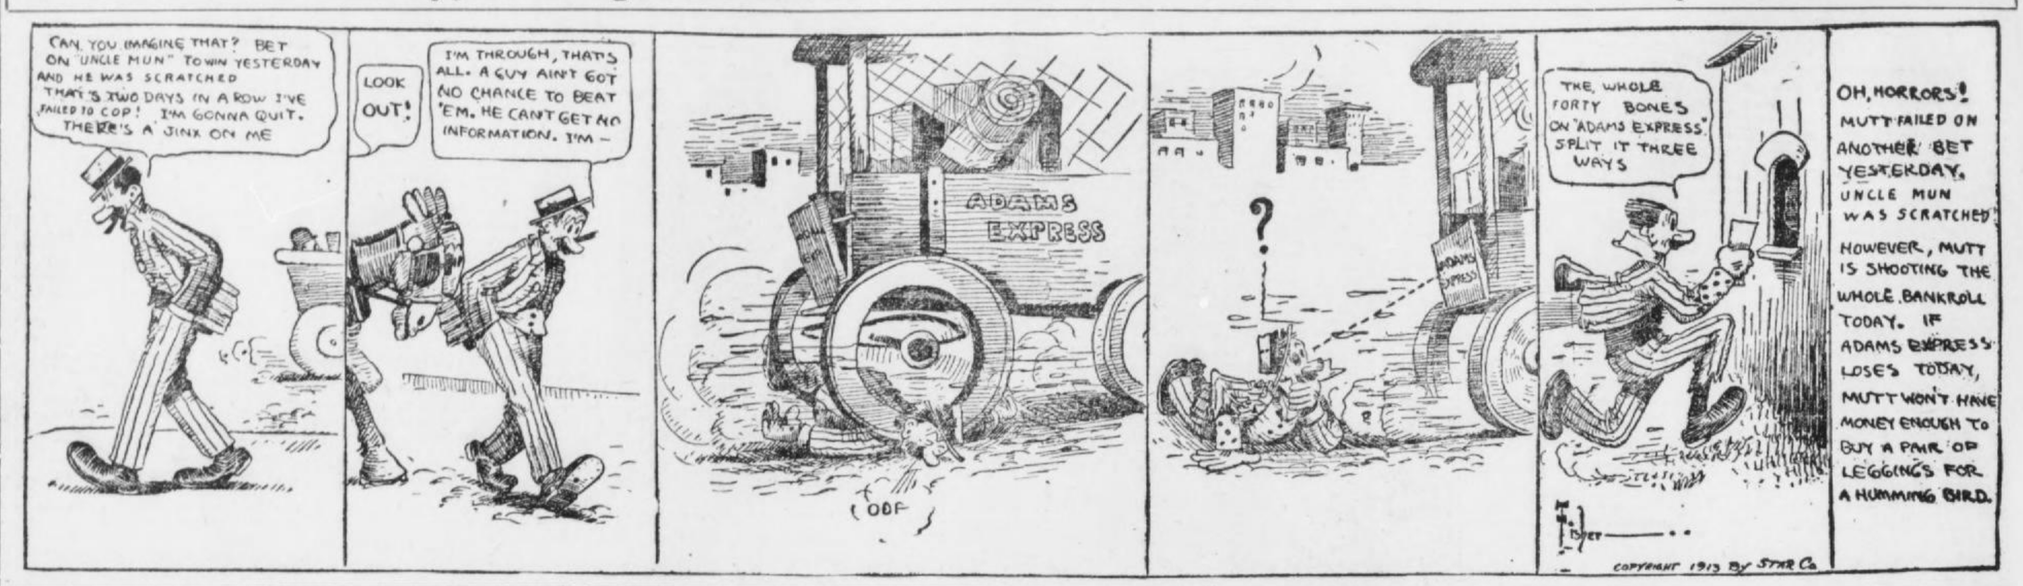

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his Admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

* * *

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gitting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

Ike Swatt, the mighty baseball star,
was smitten with a dame
Who owned a flock of lucre and an
old and honored name,
But when he offered her his hand
she coldly spurned the same.

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they needed one tie.
Our Hero ambled to the plate and
saw three strikes go by.
The game was lost while she looked on with murder in her eye.

ACT III.

For she had bet her fortune on the process of his bat,
And when he took the final strike it
left the poor girl flat.
"Revenge!" she cried, in accents
wild. "I'll marry him for that!"

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated his legs or his thirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never won a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fistiana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

• • •

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

• • •

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Boyo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Wolgast and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle, his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

• • •

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

• • •

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbraith Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

• • •

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

• • •

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

• • •

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

• • •

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

• • •

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

• • •

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

• • •

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

• • •

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night. Frankie Burns is to be Jack's opponent and the battle is to be staged at Denver, Colo.

• • •

Carl Morris is the champion lemon picker of the country. Morris is to be sent against Fred Lachian on Friday night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

• • •

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times but the locals clearly had the class.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More

What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

• • •

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozles* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

• • •

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

• • •

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

• • •

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, aither.

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next twos weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

LAJOIE HAS BEEN IN BIG LEAGUES SEVENTEEN YEARS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Seventeen years a major and still one of the foremost players of the game is the proud record of Napoleon Lajoie, second baseman of the Naps, who, on Saturday, will celebrate the seventeenth anniversary of his entrance into the big leagues.

TO HAVE "REGULAR" PLANT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The New York American League team's new grounds will be located at 200th and Broadway and Exterior streets. The grandstand will be 665 feet on 225th street and 415 1-2 feet on 227th street, extending the entire block on Broadway end and will be 52 feet deep. The field stand will be erected at the Exterior street end and will be 264 by 541-2 feet. These stands will form a stadium, and the cost of the grandstand has been estimated at $250,000 and the field stand at $12,000. The stands will be of brick and terra cotta.

KNOX COLLEGE PICKS COACH.

GALESBURG, ILL., Aug. 1 —President Thomas McClelland, of Knox College, yesterday announced that R. R. Campbell, for three years athletic director of the University School of Detroit, has been chosen to succeed Ira T. Carrithers as coach at Knox. Carrithers will serve as assistant coach at the University of Illinois.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Tammany's Hand Is Seen.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democrats now find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attempts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued declarations that he "was walking the street called straight." All sorts of "I told you so's were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor would be the victim. This material may be brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

Briefly, the articles of impeachment which were presented to the Senate to-day charge that Governor Sulzer is guilty of the following allegations:

That he filed a false statement of campaign contributions with the Secretary of State, such statement having caused "great scandal" and reproach for the Governor of the State of New York, and that the said statement did not contain all the contributions received by him, and that he was guilty of a misdemeanor in failing to file a true report.

Charge Effort to Block Quiz.

That while Governor, William Sulzer induced Louis R. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller, by fraudulent methods, to withhold certain testimony from the Frawley committee, and that such acts were the commission of a felony.

That the Governor "practiced deceit and fraud and used threats and menaces" intended to prevent the committee and other witnesses subpenaed from producing books and papers desired by the committee, such act having been a misdemeanor.

That in preventing or dissuading Frederick L. Colwell from attending the hearing of the Frawley committee the Governor was also guilty of a misdemeanor in having violated section 2441 of the penal law.

That prior to his election the Governor appropriated campaign contributions to his own use, using the same, or a large portion thereof, to speculate in stocks, and that he thereby stole such checks and was guilty of larceny.

Abuse of Power Alleged.

That he promised and threatened to use his office to affect the vote of certain public officers, including Assemblymen S. G. Prime, of Essex, and Thaddeus C. Sweet, of Oswego.

That the Governor corruptly used his authority as Governor to affect the price of securities in the New York Stock Exchange, in some of which he was speculating and in other ways sought to influence legislation.

In conclusion the articles read:

"The assembly demands that the Governor answer concerning all these matters before the court which is to hear the charges, and offers to present proof of said matters at such time as the honorable court for the trial of impeachment may order and appoint."

Posed as a Poor Man.

William Sulzer less than a year ago enjoyed the confidence of the people of New York State to such an extent that he was elected Governor by a vote of 19,000 in excess of that given Wilson and the national ticket, and a few months later said in an interview, "The people understand me, I understand the people, and we trust each other."

Throughout his long career in the State Assembly, in the National House of Representatives, and during his recent campaign for election as Governor and his six-month tenure of that office Governor Sulzer always posed as a poor man and a friend of the poor man.

Refuses to See Reporters.

The Governor's secretary stated that Sulzer would not make any statement and would not see the newspaper men at the usual hour to-day.

When the Governor reached the Capitol this morning, he was asked how he felt and replied: "Fine. It's a nice breezy morning."

He seemed to be in excellent spirits and paused to allow his picture to be taken at the foot of the Capitol steps.

Although both houses of the Legislature were scheduled to meet at 11 o'clock, it was long after that hour when the lawmakers, hollow-eyed and sleepy in appearance, began to arrive. Many of them had not been to bed at all.

The Court of Appeals, it was learned to-day, could not be convened much before the end of September on account of many of the judges being in Europe and other places on vacations.

No word was forthcoming to-day as to whether Governor Sulzer would attempt to remain in office or fight his accusers. The Governor himself would say nothing whatever, and Judge D. Cady Herrick, before he went into consultation with the Governor, refused to discuss the situation. It is believed by friends of the Governor that for the time being the Governor will step aside, but no confirmation of this can be obtained.

Big Improvements At Shorter College

ROME, Aug. 13.—Great improvements are being made at Shorter College. Workmen are giving the walls of every room a coat of fresh paint; all bathrooms have been enameled, and all floors, everyone of which is of reinforced concrete, have been freshly painted.

A large out-of-doors gymnasium, 150 by 400 feet, is probably the greatest thing that the college has ever done for its students. There will be room for four or five tennis courts, several basket ball games and sufficient space for all kinds of gymnastics, calisthenics, etc. Electric lights will be arranged on the grounds, so that the girls may use the tennis courts and basket ball grounds in the evening.

The attendance for the next session at Shorter will be very large, the registration being far in excess of any previous year.

Dozing Man Killed By Painted Face Joke

YONKERS, N. Y., Aug. 13.—While William Colbert, a carpenter, was dozing in a lunchroom here, a joker touched up the sleeper's countenance with shoe polish.

When Colbert awoke, someone held a mirror before his face. As soon as he recognized himself, Colbert burst out laughing and fell dead.

AUTO ROAD PLAN IS PRAISED BY THE SENATE

Indorses Hearst's Sunday American Trail-Blazing Trip Through Dixie to San Francisco.

A resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, indorsing the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers to blaze an all-Southern highway from Atlanta to San Francisco, was passed unanimously by the Senate Wednesday morning.

In offering the resolution Senator McNeill declared that the proposed campaign undoubtedly meant much not only for Georgia, but for the whole South, as it will afford a direct road from the East to the South and thence to the Pacific Coast, where the great Panama-Pacific Exposition will be held in 1915.

"I offer this resolution for the indorsement of the Senate," said the Senator, "because the campaign is an effort to increase interest in good roads and highways in additions to affording a route from New York to the Pacific Coast through the South. The campaign is featured by the fact that it will not cost the State of Georgia one cent."

Senate Resolution in Full.

The resolution adopted by the Senate follows:

Resolved, That whereas the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers for an all-Southern transcontinental highway from Atlanta to San Francisco will mean much for the promotion of good roads in Georgia as well as better facilities for the interchange of farm products between different States, this Senate does hereby indorse this movement, thereby encouraging the sentiment and interest for better roads and highways.

The Senate indorsement of the campaign followed fast on the heels of the indorsement of Governor John M. Slaton, who declared Tuesday that no better sign of the progress of the people could be had than just such movements as this one.

Other prominent citizens, including Shelby Smith, County Commissioner, also have placed their hearty stamp of approval on the project.

In fact, interest in the proposed tour has exceeded the fondest expectations of the good roads and highway boosters, who are leaving no stone unturned to make the transcontinental path-finding tour a success in every particular.

Pathfinder Arranges Details.

Perhaps the busiest of the boosters is "Pathfinder" Ferguson, who will conduct the big campaign. Mr. Ferguson arrived in Atlanta last Saturday, and since that time he has gone into every detail of the first lap of the journey from Atlanta to Birmingham. Scarcely a single detail of the "official" start, which will be made next Monday, has been overlooked. The pathfinders have their road maps in readiness and the Atlanta boosters who will have the parade in hand have announced "ready."

The parade will be one of the largest ever witnessed in Atlanta. Among those who will participate will be the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief, various city officials and other prominent citizens. Mr. Ferguson will go direct to Anniston, Ala., from Atlanta and thence to Birmingham, the first "official" stopping place. The proposed route extends through Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, San Diego, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

One-Hour Want Ad Brings About Sale

This two-line want ad appeared in Tuesday's Georgian, in the midst of a long list of articles for sale:

FOR SALE—Return ticket to Jacksonville, Fla. Phone Ivy 5606-J.

Early to-day the Want Ad Man's telephone rang. The lady who had inserted the ad was on the wire.

"Please discontinue my ad," she said. "The ticket was sold within an hour after The Georgian reached the street. Thank you."

That want ad had cost just 20 cents. Wasn't it worth it?

TALBOTTON.—Although the act providing for County Commissioners for Talbot County specifies that no commissioner shall draw more than $24 per year, Commissioner Roderick Leonard is giving practically his entire time to the roads of the county.

Fate of Exhibit of Atlanta-Made Goods Hangs in Balance

Committees are making every effort to dispose of the unsold space in the four top floors of the New Chamber of Commerce Building reserved for a permanent manufacturers' exhibit of Atlanta-made goods.

It is necessary that the space be disposed of by the middle of next week, or the proposition will be abandoned. Manufacturers of Atlanta-made goods are urged to take advantage of this opportunity to establish the exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at a central location easily accessible to visitors to the city.

Every city that has established a permanent manufacturers' exhibit has increased it later on and the proposition has proven eminently successful.

Not One Petticoat For Shivering Girl

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Modern fashions that have ruled out the petticoat and a thief caused Miss May Leonard to walk eight blocks clad in shoes and stockings and an extremely light raincoat. She went bathing at Clarendon Beach. Some one rifled her locker while she was in the water. They left nothing but shoes and stockings. Her bathing suit was rented and the beach officials would not permit her to wear it home.

Miss Leonard asked every girl in the dressing room for the loan of a petticoat. Every one of them was wearing a skirt that permitted no petticoat. The only garment she could borrow was a raincoat.

Clayton to Oppose Hobson for Senate

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 13.—Congressman Henry D. Clayton, who has been appointed by Governor O'Neal to fill the unexpired term of Senator Joseph F. Johnston, deceased, announces his intention of entering the race for the full term.

Congressman Richard Pearson Hobson had already opened his campaign for the senatorial toga of Senator Johnston, and will continue in the race. He has made a number of speeches in different sections of the State.

5th District Masons To Meet at Conyers

The Masonic lodges in Fulton, DeKalb, Douglas, Campbell and Rockdale Counties, comprising the Fifth Masonic District, will meet in annual convention Thursday at Conyers.

After the transaction of the regular business the three Masonic degrees will be conferred in extra full form by three special teams.

A barbecue and watermelon cutting are the entertainment program. A special train leaves Atlanta on the Georgia road at 7:30 a. m.

Board of Examiners For Trained Nurses

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 13.—Under the provisions of a 1913 legislative act providing for the State registration of nurses, Governor Park Trammell has appointed the following trained nurses as members of the State Board of Examiners:

Miss Anna Davids, of Miami; Miss N. B. Prewitt, of Tampa; Miss Irene M. Foote, of Jacksonville; Miss Maud Yothers, of Orlando; and Miss Anna L. Rutherford, of St. Augustine.

Mountaineer Frozen Dangling Over Cliff

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—Mountain guides near Leisang to-day discovered the frozen body of a mountaineer hanging over the cliff in the Bregenz Mountains.

The man, who was a guide, had fallen from a precipice and his clothing had caught in a jutting tree root.

TAX BILL IS PASSED AFTER HARD BATTLE

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Boy Shoots Matches From Air Gun; Fire

EUFAULA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. H. C Reynolds was seriously burned about the hands and face to-day in trying to extinguish a burning mosquito net and save her home from destruction.

Mrs. Reynolds' son, Henry Reynolds, was shooting matches from an airgun when one of them struck the iron bed, ignited and set fire to the net, which started a big flame.

Florida Cattle for Miller's 101 Ranch

GAINESVILLE, FLA., Aug. 13.—Since last March 17,000 cattle have been purchased in Florida by Miller Bros. of 101 Ranch, Bliss, Okla.

The last are now being shipped. Only 300 head were lost en route. The average price paid was $13.50 a head.

Death Answers an Invitation to Speak

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—When the Etowah County Veterans' reunion opened here to-day it developed that the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston had been invited to make an address.

Senator Johnston died before making response to the invitation.

Soldier Held for Attempted Attack

PENSACOLA, Aug. 13.—Jack Gord, a soldier from Fort Barrancas, is being held in irons at the navy yard charged with attempting to attack a prominent young woman at Warrington. No warrant has been issued for him, although the United States District Attorney is now investigating the matter. It is claimed the soldier went to the room of the young woman in his stocking feet and wearing no coat or shirt. When the young woman screamed, the soldier ran and Deputy Game Warden Chapman knocked him down with a brick. The clothing of Gord was found downstairs.

The soldier denies all charges, claiming that his clothes had been stolen and that he went into the room upstairs in order not to expose himself improperly clad.

Victims of Promoter Found in Many States

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—Cashier Bohlin, of the Fort Payne bank, testified to-day that E. C. Drew, the oil well promoter on trial here for using the mail to defraud, had deposited $19,000 in the bank between January 1, 1912, and the present date. It was also shown he had deposited $6,000 in a bank at Collinsville.

The money was secured from investors, the largest amount from any one person being $1,000, which Mrs. Belcher, residing in Maine, had sent. Drew's alleged victims are found in many States.

Carmack Trial Nears Finish at Opelika

OPELIKA, Aug. 13.—It is probable that the trial of Homer Carmack, which began Tuesday afternoon, will be concluded by noon Thursday. Carmack is charged with murdering J. J. Folke, an aged Phoenix City merchant, on Sunday night, June 22.

The State is represented by Solicitor C. A. L. Samford, of the Law and Equity Court of Lee County, assisted by his brother, T. D. Samford, while the defense is being represented by C. A. Hayes, of Phenix City, and Judge A. E. Barnett, of Opelika. Judge Lum Duke is the trial judge.

Feud of Gamblers Cause of Killing

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 13.—That the killing of W. Louie (Pat) Roney by Ed Ellis on one of the principal streets of Birmingham on the night of July 31 was a chapter of a feud among gamblers was brought out in the preliminary hearing, which has been concluded, Ellis being released on $2,500 bond.

Louie Smith, a partner of Ellis, was killed in Montgomery by Roney. Smith had killed Brooks Fuller, another gambler, some months before.

Visiting Merchants Have Big Barbecue

Fall styles, new fabrics, freight rates and price terms were forgotten Wednesday afternoon by sellers and buyers alike when nearly every wholesale merchant in Atlanta and many hundreds of delegates to the Southern Merchants' convention dropped business and enjoyed a barbecue at Ponce DeLeon Park.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries committed in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 102 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 209 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacramento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand today.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified.

Gives 500 Pieces of Skin to Daughter

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 13.—Mrs. Howard Gladding has given 500 tiny pieces of skin from her arms to prevent scars on the face of her daughter, four, who fell down stairs with a lighted lamp.

VAUDEVILLE PROVES DECIDED SUCCESS AT THE BONITA THEATER

After months of tabloid musical comedy, the Bonita Theater put on a high-class vaudeville bill Monday, which proved a success from the first show. There are four numbers on the bill, the Anderson Sisters and Bud Fagg being headliners.

If you appreciate light, amusing vaudeville, go to the Bonita and you will find just what you want.

There's a world of satisfaction in buying Uneeda Biscuit because you know you will get what you want—soda crackers that are oven-fresh, crisp, clean, appetizing and nourishing.

Uneeda Biscuit are always uniform in quality—they are always alike in crispness, in flavor—they are soda crackers you can depend upon. And all because Uneeda Biscuit are uncommon soda crackers packed in an uncommon way.

Five cents everywhere in the moisture-proof package.

Smith & Ewing's Deals In Contract Stage—Great Interest In New Office Building—Other Notes.

Sales aggregating $150,000 are expected to be announced in a week by the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency. These are in contract stage and lawyers are busy examining titles. Several are for sums around $25,000. This agency has sold through J. H. and Crawford Maddox for L. C. Durham, of Terrell County, to J. R. Smith, No. 96 East Cain street, 40 by 150 feet, for $6,000, or at the rate of $150 a foot. Mr. Smith bought for investment, and he may improve with an apartment house or building of similar character.

Comment on Skyscraper Plans.

Real estate men engaged in a good deal of discussion Wednesday on the 16-story office building which it is planned to erect on Dr. E. L. Connally's lot at the southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets. Most of them expressed the belief that an office structure additional to the Atlanta National Bank Building would lend a great deal of prestige to the retail shopping district and the entire South Side.

The probable effect on tenants and leases was also discussed with interest. Announcement that Brown & Allen might move to the Lynch property across the way, which they leased a year ago, and that the United Cigar Stores Company might take the Brown & Allen corner caused much gossip on the probable new lease rate for the corner. The Lynch corner, according to reliable authority, would cost the drug concern $450 a month. This would be exclusive of the other space upstairs and on West Alabama street, which now brings Brown & Allen an amount above the entire cost. The Lynch property was leased by the drug company for seven years, as a protection, and the lease contains an option for five years more.

The United Cigar Stores Comuany, it is reported, made Dr. Connally an offer on the Brown & Allen corner, but negotiations have not gone far. Dr. Connally promised Ed Brown, of the drug company, the refusal on the ground floor at a price which has not been given out. This is said to apply either to the store as it stands or to the office building space. The Brown & Allen lease is up September 1, 1914.

In the leases on parts of the Connally property it is said there is a one-year cancellation clause, which is taken to mean that when Dr. Connally made the leases he had a big building in view.

The old building is bringing a handsome return, and the only hesitation Dr. Connolly has about putting up a larger structure lies in the fact that a skyscraper would not pay as high a percentage on the investment.

Insurance Money Easy.

Insurance money continues to be lent more readily in Atlanta than previous to the announcement that $25,000,000 would be placed in Southern banks to move the crops. About twenty loan deeds went to record Tuesday. Approximately half of them were to the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, the Guaranty Trust Company, of Missouri, the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Connecticut, the Germania Savings Bank and the United States Mortgage and Trust Company.

Many Expected at Dinner.

Inasmuch as Chas. P. Glover, Harris G. White, S. B. Turman and Fitzhugh Knox will be present at the monthly dinner of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday, it is believed that a large crowd of realty men will attend. The above-named agents are full of the recent trip to Winnipeg, and they will be called on to relate their experiences in the Northwest.

President White has made announcement of a change in plan for the monthly dinners. Instead of holding them at 6:30 p. m., the time will be 12:30 to 2 p. m., and the place will be the Hotel Ansley. Friday's dinner will be held in the Georgia pine room of the hotel.

Interesting Apartment Leases.

H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have leased apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and will be quartered there this winter. The leases were made by Albert S. Adams, of the B. M. Grant Agency, who is the exclusive agent for this structure. Gen. R. K. Evans will move from the Bell place, northeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, to the Georgian Terrace.

The near approach of fall finds many people ready to move into new locations, and the renting agencies are in the midst of their busiest season. Mr. Aycock, manager of the renting department of the Charles P. Glover agency, declared that the tendency was to re-lease rather than to choose different houses.

Peachtree Lease Expected.

Another Peachtree lease is expected to be announced soon. The United Motor Atlanta Company, now the Maxwell Company, will move from its present location at the foot of Currier street to some location that suits its wholesale business better, and the Turman, Black & Calhoun agency, who have the building, will announce the plans of another concern which will move in.

Big Acreage Sale.

Extensive acreage tracts in South and Middle Georgia continue to be handled through Atlanta real estate agents. Sisson & Miller have sold to T. R. Owsley, through J. T. Kimbrough, the well-known realty agent, 160 acres of land three miles north of Fort Valley for $9,000, or $56 an acre.

Support for Exhibit Project.

Indications pointed Wednesday to success in the effort to place Atlanta-made goods permanently on exhibit in the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building, southeast corner of North Pryor street and Auburn avenue. Several additional merchants and manufacturers represented the merchants and manufacturers' committee that they would take space. It has been feared that not enough exhibitors will be in the building to make the project a success, and W. H. Leahy, of the local industrial bureau, has given notice that prospective lessees must hurry and sign up for space, or it will be too late.

Unless action is taken at once the building will be converted into offices, as originally planned. Work is under way and the Chamber of Commerce officials want to know the decision of the exhibitors so as to determine definitely the character of the building.

Pushing Peachtree Work.

Indications were Wednesday that the county convicts would finish up during the day or early Thursday Peachtree repairs as far south as Fifteenth street and would be able to turn back from Fifteenth to Brookwood. There is probably five days' work before the entire job is completed, and then the gang will go back to the stretch lying between W. S. Witham's country place and the DeKalb County line.

People using Peachtree of late have expressed great satisfaction over the paving. The County Commissioners decided to make repairs rather than lay new material and to make the job new next year. The old paving was plowed up, pulverized and packed with a giant roller and for the present it does as well as when it was first laid.

Building Permits.

$100—J. M. Tuggle, No. 21 Meldrim street; addition. D. F. Light.

$125—Mrs. Rosa E. Jones, No. 122 Curran street; bathroom and porch. Day work.

$150—G. W. Foote, No. 126 East Pine street; sleeping porch. Day work.

$150—D. O. Martin, No. 307 Central avenue; additions. Day work.

COTTON SELLS OFF AFTER EARLY GAIN

The Market Ruled Very Narrow, Though There Was Some Cotton Wanted on Easy Spots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and according y sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and on matter how dry it remains, this cotton will come into the market freely until the eastern part of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

As the map showed litt'e or no rain and the detailed weather report posted at 10 o'clock, giving temperatures and rainfall for yesterday, was disappointing to the bearish element, as there was seventeen points in Oklahoma showing temperatures from 100 to 109 and ten points in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 104, with much less rainfall than had been expected from the private reports that were received late yesterday afternoon. The market ruled very narrow, though there was apparently some cotton wanted on all easy spots. Some of the prominent interests who have been identified with the bull side of late were put down as the early sellers. It is purely a weather market and much depends on what may happen during the next two or three days.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 3 to 6 points from the closing quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows rather general precipitation in the eastern part of Texas, although light so far. Generally fair in the western half of Texas and Oklahoma overnight, partly cloudy to fair in the rest of the belt. Scattered showers fell in Tennessee, the south central Gulf and Atlantic coast districts. Indications are for further precipitation west today, particularly in the southern and eastern part of Texas.

Liverpool came in very poor, with futures at one time, as much as 4 lower than due.

The last report to us from Liverpool says: "Feeling and opinion continue bearish, chiefly on account of the bad trade outlook. Spinners and manufacturers are complaining bitterly and understand similar conditions exist on the continent, so that even with a moderate crop a bull movement appears difficult."

This accounts for the poor response to reports of crop deterioration from Texas and Oklahoma and the slow business in forward shipments.

Trading here is quiet this morning with the market dull but steady around last night's closing figures. The relatively small new crop receipts, in view of the reports of active ginning in Texas, are the subject of comment. This is generally accounted for by the slow export demand, and the unfavorable news from Liverpool is in line with it.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Unless the drouth situation in the Southwest is relieved, we expect no activity at present.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think general conditions warrant any marked upturn at this time, and in the event of good soaking rains in the Southwest, a lower range of values will undoubtedly result.

COTTON GOSSIP

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third dryest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Clarke amendment was likely to be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas, with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showery weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scatterd showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi Delata Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record; first bale in 1902 being received August 10. This is about six days earlier than the average."

Temperatures: Galveston, clear and warm, good shower last night; Houston clear, 76; San Antonio, clear, 82; Taylor, clear, 85; Dalas clear, 85; Fort Worth, clear, 84; Sherman, clear, 80; Denison, clear, 82; Paris, clear, 80; Texarkana clear, 76; Little Rock, clear 78; Oklahoma City, clear, 81; Chickasha, clear, 81; Muskogee, clear, 88; McAlester, clear, 87; rain yesterday. Amite, clear, 69; Baton Rouge clear, 78; Lafayette, cloudy 78; Donaldsville, clear, 72; Alexandria, clear, 75. Franklin, cloudy, 74; Morgan City, cloudy, warm; Robeline, clear, 69; Grand Cane clear, 71; Minden, clear, 69; Lake Charles, cloudy, 69; Helena, part cloudy, warm; Hattiesburg, clear, 80.

Rainfall: Taylor, .22; Galveston, .42; Palestine, .01; Fort Smith, .02; New Orleans .24; Mobile, .04; Nashville, .04; Atlanta, .46; Wilmington, .01; Houston, .04

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Were the cotton market freed from the menace of hostile legislation it would probably do better now that crop damage reports are coming in from the west in great numbers. But, as matters stand, the markets reflect a heavy tone even in the presence of a more active demand for forward export freight room. Big crop people adhere to their belief that the drouth affected area in the west does not cover a great amount of territory and that even the dry region has produced crops in dryer years than this.

"Nevertheless, the Weather Bureau stresses the bad state of affairs, resulting from lack of rain in Oklahoma and Texas, and the detailed reports from 198 Texas stations for July show a rainfull deficiency of 1.62 inches, and a temperature excess of 1.2 degrees over the July normal.

"On the other hand, print cloths are now quoted at 3¾c, or ⅜ of a cent below the quotations at this time last year, which is equal to about 2½c a pound on raw cotton. But raw cotton values are now very little lower than they were at this time last year. Meanwhile, trade attention continues to center on the weather in the west.

Memphis wires: "Semi-monthly condition report of J. B. Turner shows following condition on August 9 with comparisons to Government's figures on July 25:

"North Carolina, 83 against 77; South Carolina, 82 against 78; Georgia, 80 against 76; Alabama, 80 against 79; Mississippi, 78 against 77; Tennessee, 87 against 80; Arkansas, 85 against 87; Louisiana, 78 against 79; Oklahoma, 72 against 61; Texas, 74 against 81; United States 77.8 against 77.9.

By Government July 25: "The status of the crop is now just the reverse of that of the early season in that highest conditions are shown in the Eastern and Atlantic States, which fact is due to exceptionally favorable weather there and severe drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, operating to advance the one and pull down the other. It is seldom that cotton maintains at this date the luxurfant growth and vigorous life that is characteristic of the plant in Georgia and the Carolinas."

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—There will be showers during the next 36 hours in all the Northern States east of the Mississippi River. From Tennessee and the Carolinas southward the weather will be fair, except for local showers on the Gulf coast.

The temperatures will rise slowly in the Northern and Eastern States east of the Mississippi River. Forecast till 8 p. m. Thursday:

General Forecast.

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Thursday.

Virginia—Unsettled, local showers to-night or Thursday; warmer in central portion to-night.

North Carolina—Fair in west; showers in east portion to-night or Thursday.

Florida—Fair to-night, except showers in southwestern portion to-night or Thursday.

Louisiana—Fair in north; showers in southern portion to-night or Thursday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Thursday.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—The market shows same old nervousness over Texas weather. A few light rains fell in eastern Texas, but as a whole the State remains quite dry and hot. The semi-monthly condition reports show heavy losses in the Southwest, but improvement in the East, nearly offsetting the losses. Likely that drouth must continue or rains come or some setback occur in the East to move the market far away from 11 cents.

TEXAS COMPANY ATTRACTIVE ISSUE

Canadian Pacific and Harrimans Also Higher—Sentiment Becoming Optimistic.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ¾ to 119¾, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¾, for a gain of 1¾.

After opening with a gain of ⅜, Southern Pacific went to 91⅜, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154⅛ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ½, American Smelting ⅝, Bethlehem Steel ⅛, United States Rubber common ¼, Western Union ¼, Utah Copper ⅝, Steel common ⅛, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ⅜. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

Pronounced strength developed in the leading issues in the last half of the first hour and prices moved up a point or more fro mthe initial figures. Canadian Pacific was in brisk demand, advancing 1¾, while gains ranging around ¾ were recorded in Lehigh Valley, Steel common, Reading, Union Pacific and American Smelting. Substantial gains were also noted in Erie, St. Paul, Anaconda and Amalgamated Copper.

A number of profit-taking sales were made in the second hour, however, and many of the important issues receded fractionally.

Call money is loaning and renewing at 2¾ per cent.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 99 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

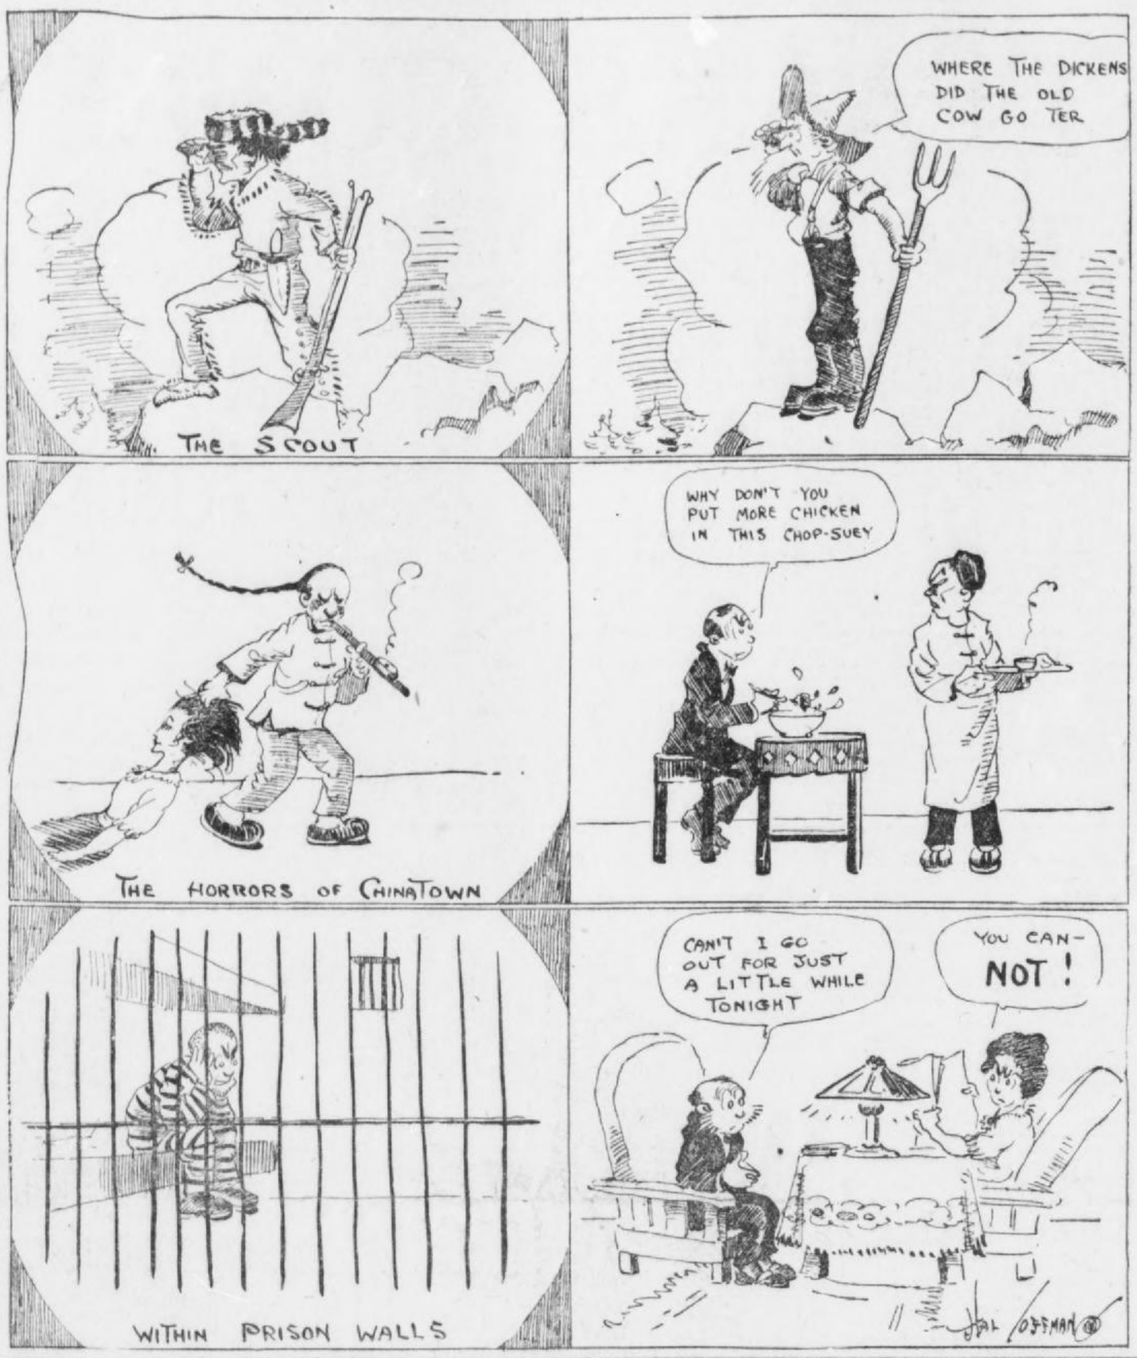

.:. BEAUTY .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade,
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

In the Movies :-: In Real Life

For Success, Health, Happiness, Look Within!

Why Wait for Somebody Else to Bring Us These Things? Don't Be a Spiritual Looter; Pray Often, but Work, First, Last and Always.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ON retiring at night, just before going off to sleep, say, either mentally or orally as you choose:

I am health, strength, peace, happiness and prosperity and everything that goes to make for good.

Pure, good, rich blood is flowing through my body, removing all obstructions and bringing peace, health and harmony.

I am well and strong and vital.

I am beautiful, pure and good.

I am on the road to eternal youth.

I am opulent, happy and free.

Last but not least:

I will arise with unusual energy and radiance and power of accomplishment in the morning.

All I ask is that you do not try to dictate the way these things shall or may come, and I will guarantee them to cure anything from poverty to rheumatism.—Dr. James W. Cormany, Mount Carroll, Ill.

LET every reader of this column take with seriousness these emphatic statements of Dr. Cormany, and put them to the test.

Nothing Is the Matter With the World, Life or Destiny.

There is nothing the matter with the world, with life, with destiny.

Everything we desire or want or need waits for our claiming.

But the majority of God's children are waiting for SOMEBODY BESIDES THEMSELVES to bring them these things.

Not more than one human being in one thousand looks to HIMSELF and the Power back of himself for success, health and happiness.

The other 999 look to luck; to chance; to influence; to favors of friends and acquaintances; to doctors; to patent medicines; to some hoped-for miracle, and all the time a mine of wealth and reservoir of power within themselves lies unexplored and unused.

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

WINIFRED BLACK Writes on Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 423 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

BATTLE TO IMPEACH SULZER WON

New York Assembly Votes After All-Night Session to Try Executive as Grafter.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblymen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was

Committees are making every effort to dispose of the unsold space in the four top floors of the New Chamber of Commerce Building reserved for a permanent manufacturers' exhibit of Atlanta-made goods.

It is necessary that the space be disposed of by the middle of next week, or the proposition will be abandoned. Manufacturers of Atlanta-made goods are urged to take advantage of this opportunity to establish the exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at a central location easily accessible to visitors to the city.

Every city that has established a permanent manufacturers' exhibit has increased it later on and the proposition has proven eminently successful.

Not One Petticoat For Shivering Girl

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Modern fashions that have ruled out the petticoat and a thief caused Miss May Leonard to walk eight blocks clad in shoes and stockings and an extremely light raincoat. She went bathing at Clarendon Beach. Some one rifled her locker while she was in the water. They left nothing but shoes and stockings. Her bathing suit was rented and the beach officials would not permit her to wear it home.

Miss Leonard asked every girl in the dressing room for the loan of a petticoat. Every one of them was wearing a skirt that permitted no petticoat. The only garment she could borrow was a raincoat.

Clayton to Oppose Hobson for Senate

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 13.—Congressman Henry D. Clayton, who has been appointed by Governor O'Neal to fill the unexpired term of Senator Joseph F. Johnston, deceased, announces his intention of entering the race for the full term.

Congressman Richard Pearson Hobson had already opened his campaign for the senatorial toga of Senator Johnston, and will continue in the race. He has made a number of speeches in different sections of the State.

Sleepers Near Death In Burning Residence

Fire which spread rapidly forced Eugene R. Barmore, members of his family and boarders at his residence, 215 Capitol Avenue, to flee for their lives early Wednesday morning. They were compelled to leave the burning house in their night attire.

The fire was discovered by a neighbor, who rushed to the Barmore residnece and beat upon the door until he had awakened the occupants. The roof and part of the second floor were destroyed.

Calmly Smokes Pipe As His House Burns

ANNISTON, ALA., Aug. 13.—Interest has been aroused here over the burning of the home of S. S. Tarver, a negro plumber, which was located near Ninth and Quintard streets, one of the best residence sections of the city. There are strong indications of incendiarism.

Whether the negro burned his own home to get the insurance or whether it was burned by white people who had been wanting to buy to get ihm out of the neighborhood, is a point of debate. It is said the negro was found in an alley calmly smoking his pipe while the house burned.

Dayton To Be Run by Business Manager

DAYTON, OHIO, Aug. 13.—By a vote of over 2 to 1 Dayton has adopted the business manager form of government. At the November election five commissioners will be chosen. The one securing the greatest number of votes will select a manager for the city.

Fire Spreading to Buffalo Shipyards

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Fire which broke out about 2:45 in the Knowlton warehouse is spreading to the shipyards adjacent. Great damage is feared.

The destroyed building was filled to the roof with rosin.

MOTOR TOUR LAUDED BY SENATE

Indorses Hearst's Sunday American Trail-Blazing Trip Through Dixie to San Francisco.

A resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, indorsing the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers to blaze an all-Southern highway from Atlanta to San Francisco, was passed unanimously by the Senate Wednesday morning.

In offering the resolution Senator McNeill declared that the proposed campaign undoubtedly meant much not only for Georgia, but for the whole South, as it will afford a direct road from the East to the South and thence to the Pacific Coast, where the great Panama-Pacific Exposition will be held in 1915.

"I offer this resolution for the indorsement of the Senate," said the Senator, "because the campaign is an effort to increase interest in good roads and highways in additions to affording a route from New York to the Pacific Coast through the South. The campaign is featured by the fact that it will not cost the State of Georgia one cent."

Senate Resolution in Full.

The resolution adopted by the Senate follows:

Resolved, That whereas the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers for an all-Southern transcontinental highway from Atlanta to San Francisco will mean much for the promotion of good roads in Georgia as well as better facilities for the interchange of farm products between different States, this Senate does hereby indorse this movement, thereby encouraging the sentiment and interest for better roads and highways.

The Senate indorsement of the campaign followed fast on the heels of the indorsement of Governor John M. Slaton, who declared Tuesday that no better sign of the progress of the people could be had than just such movements as this one.

Other prominent citizens, including Shelby Smith, County Commissioner, also have placed their hearty stamp of approval on the project.

In fact, interest in the proposed tour has exceeded the fondest expectations of the good roads and highway boosters, who are leaving no stone unturned to make the transcontinental path-finding tour a success in every particular.

Pathfinder Arranges Details.

Perhaps the busiest of the boosters is "Pathfinder" Ferguson, who will conduct the big campaign. Mr. Ferguson arrived in Atlanta last Saturday, and since that time he has gone into every detail of the first lap of the journey from Atlanta to Birmingham. Scarcely a single detail of the "official" start, which will be made next Monday, has been overlooked. The pathfinders have their road maps in readiness and the Atlanta boosters who will have the parade in hand have announced "ready."

The parade will be one of the largest ever witnessed in Atlanta. Among those who will participate will be the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief, various city officials and other prominent citizens. Mr. Ferguson will go direct to Anniston, Ala., from Atlanta and thence to Birmingham, the first "official" stopping place. The proposed route extends through Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, San Diego, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

ARMORY FIRE THREATENS ARSENAL

Crowd Flees as Flames Near the Ammunition Room Over Taft Hall—Damage Heavy.

Rapidly making toward the room wheer many thousan rounds of ammunition were stored, fire did several thousand dollars' worth of damage in the storeroom of the armory over Taft Hall in the Auditorium early Wednesday afternoon.

The main auditorium was not touched, however. The blaze did not get within 100 yards of the huge organ.

The fire was discovered by Sergeant Wardwell, of the Artillery Corps, who happened to be in the basement at the time. Smoke came down the elevator shaft and he rushed upstairs into the office of H. J. Weaver, the keeper of the building. They hurried to the upper floor and discovered smoke coming out of the storeroom in which the tents of Companies C and D are kept. An alarm was turned in and several companies responded.

Firemen Find Doors Locked.

It required several minutes for the firemen to gain entrance into the room on account of the door being locked. The armory is on the top floor and it was necessary to use an aerial truck and enter through the window. The firemen were driven back for some time by the heavy smoke from the burning tents and were compelled to play several streams on them for more than half an hour.

The tents which were burned were used in the recent encampment at St. Simons Island, and it is quite probable that the fire had smoldered for several days. The loss to the National Guard will amount to several thousand dollars.

It required but a few moments for the room to fill with water to a depth of more than two feet, the fire being unusually hard to quench on account of the waterproof tents, and having started in the center of a huge pile of canvas.

Plastering Loosened.

The water seeped through the floor and te ceiling over Taft Hall, loosening the plaster there, while a heavy stream flowed down the stairways into the great lobby. When the fire was extinguished the firemen undertook the task of baling out the storeroom, using large galvanized tubs for the work.

News of the Auditorium being on fire drew a large crowd, but when the rumor that many rounds of ammunition were stored in the apartment next to the tent room spread the crowd melted rapidly.

The fire will not interfere with a prize fight scheduled at the Auditorium Wednesday night.

TAX BILL IS PASSED; FOES IN NEW WAR

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought

DEFENSE LETS DOWN ALL BARS FOR ATTACK ON FRANK'S CHARACTER

Lemmie Quinn, foreman in the metal department of the National Pencil Factory, told a story on the witness stand Wednesday in the trial of Leo M. Frank which gave the lie to another of Jim Conley's courtroom statements.

Conley testified that he saw Lemmie Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came in. The two girls entered some time between 12 and 12:15. Quinn said he did not get to the factory until about 12:20, and that he saw neither of the girls.

Quinn had not demonstrated how well his story will stand up under the cross-examination of Solicitor Dorsey as Reuben Arnold had not quite concluded with the direct examination when the noon recess was taken.

Aside from the testimony of Quinn, the forenoon was marked by the opening of the gates for all of the character testimony against Frank which the State wishes to produce.

Three witnesses were produced by the defense to testify to Frank's good character. When the first one was called Solicitor Dorsey objected, saying:

"I don't see how this testimony is material, your honor, unless the defense intends to make the defendant's character an issue."

"That's exactly what we propose to do," retorted Arnold.

Challenge to State To Do Its Worst.

The crowded room of spectators knew that this was a challenge by the defense for the State to do its worst. Frank's lawyers deliberately had introduced Frank's character into the trial, apparently indicating that they had no fear of the evidence which the prosecution might bring forth.

It is known that the State has made elaborate preparations for an attack on the young superintendent's character with stories of gross immorality.

Solicitor Dorsey was asked Wednesday how many witnesses he expects to call.

"I don't know," he replied. "It largely depends on the number that the defense calls and the nature of their testimony.

Those called by Attorney Arnold at the forenoon session were:

Alfred L. Lane, a merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902.

Philip Nash, clerical engineer, Ridgewood, N. J., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute during the same period.

Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, Brooklyn, who knew Frank at Pratt Institute and also at Cornell University.

All testified as to Frank's good character.

Office Boy Called to Aid Frank.

Frank Payne, former office boy at the factory, was asked to particularize as to certain incidents mentioned in hte testimony of Jim Conley and C. B. Dalton. He said that he never knew Frank to have women in his office, although it was his custom t obe at the office at the times Conley and Dalton testified that these gay parties took place.

A full three-quarters of the forenoon was consumed in a legal wrangle over the admissibility of Dr. William Owens' testimony. Dr. Owens was ready to testify in regard to the reproduction of the alleged movements of Conley and Frank in disposing of Mary Phagan's body, as Conley recited them on the witness stand. Judge Roan reserved his decision until afternoon.

Quinn was questioned minutely in regard to the time of his visit to the factory as soon as he was called to stand. Attorney Arnold began by having him detai lhis movements throughout the day from the time he arose in the morning.

The foreman told an apparently straightforward story, although the Solicitor did not have time for cross-examination before the noon recess. He estimated that he entered the factory at about 12:20 o'clock. All of the doors were unlocked, he said, and the doors of the outer and inner offices on the second floor were open. The safe door, he thought, also was open. He testified that his conversation with Frank was very brief and that he left the factory within two or three minutes.

Tells of Barrett's Hope For Big Reward.

He said that R. P. Barrett, designated by Attorney Arnold as the "Christopher Columbus" of the Frank trial, had discovered the blood spots and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. Barrett frequently had remarked to him, Quinn testified, that he would draw down the big rewards if Frank was convicted. Quinn said that Barrett had mentioned $2,700 at one time and $4,500 at another as the sum he would receive because he had been the first to find the blood spots and other evidence.

The witness said that it was nothing unusual for factory employees to be hurt and bleed. He cited the case of C. P. Gilbert, who, he said, had been badly injured by the bursting of an emery wheel and was carried, bleeding, past the very place where Barrett discovered the blood spots.

He testified that he never had seen Frank speak to Mary Phagan and did not know that he knew her.

A half dozen witnesses from Gwinnett County were called to give character testimony against C. B. Dalton, the State's witness, who declared he had seen women frequently in Frank's office. All said that his reputation for truth and veracity was bad and that they would not believe him under oath.

Clash Over Enactment of Conley's Story.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon in the dispute over Dr. Owens' testimony.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal.

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was car-

Frank Trial Scene of Hot Battle on Admissibility of Evidence for Defense

COUNSEL FOR STATE AND DEFENSE IN HOT ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE ROAN

Judge L. S. Roan.

Solicitor Dorsey. Frank Hooper. Reuben Arnold. Luther Z. Rosser.

Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 30 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed to-morrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Dorsey—No, he hasn't a right to shoot in statements.

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there not certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed heartily.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any progress in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear, anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate-Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the State can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the elevator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank stumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office, Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quiet a while.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches, takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley box of cigarettes. Conley lights cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes, Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Frank: "There is $200." Conley takes money and looks at it a little bit.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, don't you pay another dollar when that watch man comes, I will pay him myself."

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right. Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you. Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." (Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home. Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Atterried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to re-enact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

BOTH SIDES AIM FOR JUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF FRANK

With Judge, Jury and Councillors Performing Duty Well, Square Deal Is Assured.

By Jas. B. Nevin.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will be prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human sagacity is able to approximate it!"

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, or may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

GIRLS WHO TESTIFY FOR DEFENSE OF FRANK

MISS REBECCA CARSON.

MISS CORINTHIA HALL.

200 Want Ad Fiances Swindled, Is Charge

PRINCETON, IND., Aug. 13.—More than 200 men are said to have been victims of the alleged marriage frauds worked by Miss Ora Mabel Farris, 35 years old, assisted by her father and mother. The three were held to-day, charged with using the mails to defraud.

Using the name of Susie Meyers, the postal authorities charge Miss Farris would advertise for a husband in widely scattered newspapers, invite correspondence, become engaged and then ask for money to come to her fiance.

10-Year-Old Girl to Christen the Nevada

RENO, NEV., Aug. 13.—Eleanor Anne Siebert, ten years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Siebert, of this city, and a niece of Governor Oddie, has been selected to act as sponsor at the launching of the battleship Nevada, now nearing completion at the Fore River Works at Quincy, Mass.

Little Miss Siebert will break a bottle of wine over the prow of the ship as she names it after her State about October 1.

State Calls More Witnesses; Defense Builds Up an Alibi

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after FrankK arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

Kneel in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

Turks Threaten New War on Bulgarians

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13.—The Turkish Porte to-day threatened to declare war against Bulgaria unless Bulgarian soldiers ceased their slaughter of defenseless Turkish peasants.

According to reports sent in from Turkish military officers in Adrianopl, many Mussulman men and women are being killed daily in Thrace.

ney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up, angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did, and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix, of Gwinett County, was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Gwinett County.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. How many acres of land do you own?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 800 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He declared he was a farmer of Gwinnett County, who had known C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Brooklyn Man First Character Witness.

Alfred Lane, of Brooklyn, N. Y., was the first character witness to be introduced by the defense. He is a wealthy merchant of that city. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A merchant of New York.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902, and later at Cornell.

Q. You say you knew him at Pratt Institute for four years?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know him at Cornell?—A. Yes; I didn't go to Cornell, but I saw him much in Brooklyn.

Q. How old was he when you were together at Pratt Institute?—A. Between 17 and 21 years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. What is it—good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey did not cross-examine the witness. He was excused and Philip Nash, of Ridgewood, N. J., was called. Arnold examined him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Electrical engineer for a telephone company.

Q. Where did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I was with him at Pratt Institute for four years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it good or bad?—A. Good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination. Richard A. Knight, of Brooklyn, a consulting engineer and a college mate of Frank's at both the Pratt Institute and Cornell, was called by Attorney Arnold.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you know him?—A. I was his college mate at Pratt Institue and at Cornell.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Former Office Boy Called by Defense.

The witness was excused and Frank Payne, a former office boy at the National Pencil Company, was called.

Q. How old are you?—A. 16.

Q. When did you last work at the pencil factory?—A. About 8 months ago.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. Nowhere.

Q. Were you there last Thanksgiving day?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a day it was?—A. It snowed.

Q. Were Mr. Frank and Mr. Schiff there?—A. Yes.

Q. What did you do?—A. Mr. Schiff sent me up to the fourth floor to fix some boxes.

Q. Who was up there?—A. Jim Conley.

Q. What time did he leave there?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley when you left?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the factory on Saturday?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did Mr. Frank ever have any women there?—A. No.

Q. How many weeks were you there?—A. Five or six.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were your duties there?—A. General office boy.

Q. You spent most of your time in Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you quit working there?—A. It has been seven or eight months ago.

Q. Did you ever see any beer bottles around there?—A. No.

Q. You say Jim Conley was there last Thanksgiving morning?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you notice him?—A. He was sweeping around there until about 10:30 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Lemmie Quinn Called to Stand.

The witness was excused and Lemmie Quinn was called. Arnold questioned the witness.

Q. Where did you work?—A. I am foreman of the metal department of the National Pencil Company.

Q. Is that the department Mary Phagan worked in?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Memorial day?—A. Yes, it was a holliday at the factory.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Barrett discovered the spots on the floor of the metal room and some strands of hair on a lathe?—A. Yes. He mentioned those discoveries to me.

Q. Did he ever mention any reward he expected to get if Mr. Frank was convicted?—A. Yes, he mentioned $2,700 once and another time $4,500. He said he had been told that if Mr. Frank was convicted there wasn't any chance to keep him out of his reward. He wanted my advice. I told him I was not a lawyer and could not tell him.

Q. Had anyone noticed them before Barrett said he discovered them?—A. No.

Q. Do you remember a man named Gilbert getting cut in the metal room and bleeding around the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. When was it?—A. About a year ago.

Q. Do you know of anyone being cut since then?—A. Yes, a boy was cut on the hand.

Q. Did he go by the women's dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you know what that stuff was over the spot on the floor?—A. No.

Q. Do you know what has ever become of that hair?—A. I think the detectives have it.

OFFICE BOY TESTIFIES IN DEFENSE OF FRANK

ALONZO MANN.

Hair Might Have Blown Into Lathe.

Q. Is there any place in that room where the girls dress their hair?—A. Why, there's a little gas jet about ten feet from the lathe.

Q. This jet is between the lathe and the west windows and a breeze might blow the hair across to this lathe, might it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get your pay Friday night before the murder?—A. About 20 minutes to 6.

Q. What was the last time before the murder that you saw Mary Phagan?—A. The Monday before.

Q. Why did she not work that week?—A. We were out of material and she was laid off.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank speak to Mary Phagan?—A. No, I never did.

Q. You were examined about all these things by the Coroner and they were impressed on your memory, were they not?—A. Yes.

Mr. Quinn told in detail what he did during the morning up to the time he returned to the factory. He said the front door of the factory was unlocked.

Q. When you got up to Frank's outer office was the door open or shut?—A. Open.

Q. How about the door to the inner office?—A. Open.

Q. How about the safe door in the outer office?—A. I think it was open.

Q. What time was this?—A. About 12:20.

Fixed Time by Going to Market.

Q. Why do you fix the time at that?—A. Well, when I left home I was anxious to get up town before the meat markets closed. I left home at 15 minutes to 12. Doing the things I did, I judge it was about 12:20 o'clock when I got to the factory.

Q. You say you left home at 11:45, did you look at your watch?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you want to get to town?—A. Before 12, because I was afraid the stores would be closed.

Q. How long did it take you to walk to the market?—A. About twelve minutes.

Q. What time was it when you got there?—A. The whistle blew while I was there.

Q. Can you tell how long you remained there?—A. No.

Q. You went to the pharmacy from there?—A. Yes.

Q. How far was that from the market?—A. About three doors.

Q. What pharmacy was that?—A. Benjamin's.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. About three minutes.

Q. Did you see anyone else at the factory besides Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. What office was he in?—A. The inner office.

Q. What did you say?—A. I asked him if Mr. Schiff was in. He said, "No."

Q. Did you say anything else?—A. I made some remark about his not being able to keep me away even on a holiday.

Q. What time was it when you left?—A. About 12:20.

Q. Where did you go?—A. To Devore's pool parlor. It was about 12:50 then.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. To the cafe, where I met Miss Hall and Mrs. Freeman.

White Substance Used on Machines.

Q. What did you go to see Schiff for?—A. We had a baseball wager and I went there to talk to him about it.

Q. How many minutes did you stay at the Busy Bee?—A. I can not tell exactly.

Q. But you do know what time you went to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to anyone at the poolroom?—A. Yes, McMurray.

Q. Where did you go from Devore's?—A. The Atlanta Theater.

Q. How long did you stay?—A. About fifteen minutes. I bought tickets for the night.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. Back to Devore's.

Q. Who is John Lamey?—A. He worked with me.

Q. Did you go to the factory Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. Whom did you talk to?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Montag.

Q. How long did you look at the body?—A. Three or four minutes.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank Sunday?—A. Yes.

Q. At Bloomfield's?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he dressed?—A. In blue of black.

Q. What is the purpose of that white preparation used at the plant?—A. To clean the machines.

Carried in Buckets, Spatters on Floors.

Q. How was it carried?—A. In buckets.

Q. It spatters over everything?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Frank Monday?—A. Yes, Monday afternoon.

Q. How was he dressed?—In brown.

Q. Look at this picture (showing the witness the State's diagram drawn by Bert Green of The Georgian). Does it show Mary Phagan's machine?—A. No.

Q. Point out the place where Barrett claims to have found the hair. Did you find any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall the place near the closet where the negro said he found the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Well, if somebody had washed up blood in one place would it not have been the reasonable thing to wash it up in another?

"I object," said Dorsey. "That's a question for argument, your honor."

"It's such a good argument," said Arnold, "that I could not help it. I withdraw the question."

Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. The cross-examination of Quinn was to be taken up immediately then.

Socialist Fined by Recorder in Mobile

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—W. M. Doyle, striking machinist and Socialist, who has been creating much comment by his anarchistic utterances and his publications, was fined $25 or 50 days by Acting Recorder Robert Gordon in the Recorder's Court to-day for blockading the streets in Bienville Square.

A large crowd was attracted to the courtroom by the trial and on account of the feeling that was aroused over the case, the Rev. Matthew Brewster, rector of fashionable Trinity Episcopal Church, signing his bond at the time of his arrest.

SCHOOLS FUND IS RESTORED BY THE HOUSE

Senate Amendments Reconsidered and Bill Returned in Virtually Its Original Form.

Forced to follow the lead of the Senate in the matter of tax reform legislation, the House of Representatives turned the tables Wednesday morning by disagreeing with practically every amendment offered by the Senate to the House general appropriations bill. Now the Senate will be obliged to come to the House in the matter of disposing of the revenues of the State. The bill as finally completed by the House at 1 o'clock and which will be sent to the Senate at once for further action restored virtually every detail of the measure which passed the House two weeks ago.

The consideration of the Senate amendments brought about an unusual situation which finally resulted in a complete victory for education in Georgia, the members showing by almost unanimous vote that they are unwilling for any of the higher educational institutions of the State to suffer through lack of funds.

Leaders of House Active.

In view of the passage of the tax bill Tuesday leaders in the House brought out the bill with the intention of restoring it to its original shape by disagreeing with the Senate amendments.

Several members, who declared they were unwilling to make appropriations in excess of the estimated revenues, started a fight to agree to the Senate amendments, led by Moye of Johnson. On the first vote Moye had strength enough to induce the House to agree to the Senate amendments reducing the appropriations for the State University, the School of Technology, the Milledgeville Normal School, the North Georgia Agricultural College, the Athens Normal and the Athens Agricultual School. Amendments reducing the sums for other schools were disagreed to, despite Moye's efforts.

After the entire list of amendments had been gone through, the members who favored disagreeing with the Senate amendments succeeded in inducing the House to reconsider its action on all amendments that had been previously agreed to. The fight was led by Smith of Fulton, Pickett of eTrrell and Wright of Floyd, all of whom declared that giving large sums to some schools and cutting the appropriations for others was unjust discrimination. The important Senate amendments were then acted upon as follows:

House Votes on Senate Cuts.

Granting $450 more to the School for the Deaf, agreed to.

Reducing the University of Georgia appropriation from $52,500 to $48,725, rejected.

Reducing the appropriations for Georgia Tech from $20,000 to $74,400 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation for the Milledgeville Normal and Industrial School from $52,500 to $48,725 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation of the North Georgia Agricultural College from $21,500 to $19,395 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation of the Athens Normal College from $47,500 to $44,175 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation of the Athens Agricultural College from $100,000 to $95,000 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation of the Valdosta Normal School from $25,000 to $23,000 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation for the State Medical School at Augusta from $30,000 to $27,900 rejected.

Reducing the appropriation of the common schools from $2,550,000 to $2,375,000 rejected.

Reducing the pension appropriation from $385,000 to $310,000 rejected.

It is understood that leaders in the Senate, in view of the passage of the tax reform bill, have agreed to pass the House appropriations bills as restored.

Senators Take Slap at House

The House of Representatives almost unanimously turned down the Senate Wednesday morning, when a resolution introduced in the Senate by Taylor, of the Third, requesting the House to return a local bill abolishing the Board of Commissioners of Appling County, was defeated.

Carter, of Appling, led the fight against the resolution, declaring the efforts of Senator Taylor to get the bill back were merely an attempt to discredit him in his home county, and defeat all his bills.

Senator Taylor proposed to amend Mr. Carter's bill by adding a referendum clause. This Mr. Carter declared the people of his county do not want.

Representative Hardeman, of Jefferson spo ekvigorously in favor of the resolution, declaring its defeat would be a grave discomfort to the Senate. Mr. Pickert, of Terrell, declared the House should refuse the request of the Senate and support Mr. Carter, who, he said, is accountable to the people of his county.

The House passed the bill providing for the popular election of United States Senators, and for a temporary appointment by the Governor.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 75.

Georgia's Senate and Her Children

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me--

"Even so, it is not the will of your Father who is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Matt. 18:5-14.

A child—

A girl—

All men would help her.

House Bill No. 4 will save girls who are children in years.

The PRISON COMMISSION has favored the Bill.

The PENITENTIARY COMMITTEE of the House has approved it.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS with WHEATLEY of Sumter as Chairman unanimously recommended its adoption carrying a $30,000 appropriation.

And men believe that GOVERNOR SLATON approves the measure.

Yesterday, Tuesday, the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, whose Chairman is the Speaker of the House, BURWELL, with BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, put the Bill upon the calendar. Without this, the measure would have been lost. Among those helping to pass it were NUNNALLY of Floyd and SHUPTRINE of Chatham. And for it BARRY WRIGHT did splendid service.

THE VOTE WAS 115 TO 46.

The forty-six who opposed it did not do so with the thought of harming girls. They misunderstood. At heart—if they consider—they too approved the JONES-MILLS' BILL establishing the "Georgia Training School for Girls."

It is no one man's measure—no group of men can claim it—it is a law for the want of which girl children of Georgia have suffered.

You would not continue to hurt and degrade them—you, too, would help.

To-day the Bill is in the Senate.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS of that body, whose Chairman is Senator W. W. STARK, now has it under consideration; and the Senate RULES COMMITTEE will doubtless see that it is heard.

The President of the Senate, RANDOLPH ANDERSON, of Chatham, has long favored a Reformatory for girls in Georgia.

And since the question of taxation and finances has been settled, the only argument against the bill has been removed.

Of it, The Morning News of Savannah has rightly said:

"It is hard to see how anybody can truthfully say that it would not profit the State to spend $30,000 in that way."

The Senate will doubtless pass the Bill as it was adopted by the House, without an opposing vote.

All Georgia will approve.

RURAL CREDITS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Wilson Says Next Task Ahead of Him and Congress Is to Give Aid to Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The following statement was issued at the White House to-day embodying the views of President Wilson on rural credits:

"Again and again during the discussion of the currency bill it has been urged that special provision should be made in it for the facilitating of credits of the farmers of the country who stand in need of agricultural credits as distinguished from ordinary commercial and industrial credits. Such proposals were not adopted because such credits could only be imperfectly provided for in such a measure. The scope and character of the bill, its immediate and chief purpose could not be made to reach as far as the special interests of the farmer requires.

"Special machinery of a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that the Congress will at that session act upon the recommendations of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

Nation's Welfare Involved.

"There is no subject more important to the welfare and industrial development of the United States; there is no form in which I would myself seek a greater honor or privilege to take part because I should feel that it was a service to the whole country of the first magnitude and significance. It should have accompanied and gone hand and hand with reform of our banking and currency system if we had been ready to act wisely and with full knowledge of what we were about.

"There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world; were so intelligent and enterprising and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicaps they carried, no matter what disadvantage, whether of the law or of natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or opportunity, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering, and have too often failed to renew them when we did see what they were. One of the chief and most serious of these disadvantages has been that he had not been able to secure the extended bank accommodations he every year stands in need of, without paying the most burdensome rates of interest and saddling himself with mortgages and obligations of every kind which he fairly staggered under, if he could carry them at all.

Effects in Other Countries.

"In other countries systems of rural credit have been put into operation which not only have relieved the farmer, but have put his enterprises upon a footing of easy accomplishment. Countries in which agriculture was steadily languishing because wholly unprofitable have seen their farming lands blossom again and their people turn once more hopefully to the soil for a living. Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish not afterward.

"And they will be. This is our next task and duty. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with advising the Congress of the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon."

Wife of Umpire in Faint as Angry Fans Threaten Husband

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 13.—Mrs. James Murray, wife of the American Association umpire, was under the care of a physician to-day as the result of a nervous shock caused by witnessing an attack on her husband by infuriated baseball fans. During the game between Milwaukee and Louisville yesterday, Umpire Murray gave Milwaukee the benefit of a close decision. Fans from the bleachers and grandstand rushed on the field. Pitcher Jack Powell caught an angry man who was about to hurl a heavy hammer at the umpire.

Mrs. Murray, sitting in a lower box near the scene of the attack, fainted and was carried to an automobile.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—M. H. [illegible], publisher of The San Francisco Chronicle, to-day announced that he had purchased The San Francisco Call, and would close it September 1.

The price paid was not made public. John D. Spreckles, a member of the California family of capitalists, is owner of The Call.

BEAUTY CONTEST WON BY MISS MARY CARL HURST

Victor in the beauty race striking example of piquant brunette.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst.

Wires luck to the 500,000 club upon learning her picture will adorn Booster Buttons.

Popular Society Girl's Likeness Will Adorn 'Half-Million' Club Booster Button.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Hurst, of No. 62 West Twelfth street, is declared the choice of Atlanta for the girl whose smile is to help spread the city's fame.

In winning the "Booster Button" Beauty Contest she becomes the sponsor of the 500,000 Booster Club, and her face will adorn the lapel buttons with this catchy slogan:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll get you yet, 500,000 by 1920."

When the voting ended Tuesday, this popular young society girl had a total of 18,340 votes, a good margin over her nearest competitor. Though decidedly the choice of Georgian and American readers, she did not win without a contest, and her permanent lead was never assured until the last days of the campaign. Her admirers were constant, though, and after her picture appeared as a nominee a steady stream of votes for her flowed in.

Winner a Piquant Brunette.

Miss Hurst is a striking type of a vivacious brunette. Her face scintillates smiles of good cheer.

There were all types of beauty in the contest—perfect blondes with cerulean blue eyes, auburn-haired girls with pink cheeks, girls with dark brown hair and big dreamy blue eyes, and various shades of brunettes. But the smiling face must have fit the slogan for a "Half Million City" better than any, for she got the most votes.

An order for the booster buttons immediately will be placed. Though Miss Hurst is sponsor for the club, she will lose her identity on the buttons, except as she is remembered as the girl. And, of course, everybody will remember that.

Wires "Luck to 500,000 Club."

There will be no name on the buttons, only the slogan of the Half Million City. Miss Hurst is out of the city, but in acknowledgment of her election she wired:

"Luck to the '500,000 Club.'"

The next step will be a formal organization of the "500,000 Club." Before many days the beautiful buttons will be distributed and a concentrated effort to boost Atlanta's population to 500,000 by 1920 will begin.

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same alignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. Thus no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the Vice President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of his health.

ILLNESS HALTS COURT.

GRIFFIN, Aug. 13.—On account of the illness of Judge R. E. Daniel, of the Flint Circuit, the August term of the Spalding County Superior Court was adjourned until the first Monday in September. Judge Daniel is in a very feeble condition.

SENATE PUTS AN O. K. ON SLATON NOMINATIONS

Confirmation of Moon and Steed Ends Fight Begun When Brown Took Seat.

Confirmation by the Senate Wednesday morning of four appointments made by Governor Slaton settled a controversy of long standing in regard to the official status of Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, as members of the State Board of Education.

The appointment of Professor Moon and Mr. Steed dates back to the administrations of Governor Hoke Smith and Governor Brown, who precipitated a bitter fight when he appointed Moon and Steed after an adjournment of the State Senate, which had upheld the Hoke Smith appointments. In the shuffle which followed the two Hoke Smith men were ousted to give place to Moon and Steed.

On recommendation of Governor Slaton, Moon and Steed will serve four years each, dating from September 5, 1913.

The appointments of the Governor confirmed by the Senate are as follows:

E. H. Callaway, of Richmond County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

Joseph S. Davis, of Dougherty County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

F. G. Bell, of Chatham County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for a term ending August 3, 1917, vice P. A. Stovall, resigned.

Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, to be members of the State Board of Education for four years from September 5, 1913.

Kentuckian Named Minister to Panama

JUDGE ROAN WILL WIN OVER ALL OPPOSITION

Some Protests From Men Who Want Atlantan Named Are Made to Governor.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar, some of whom have protested to the Governor, it is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Leaps From Pier to Save Society Woman

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—Mrs. G. Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ward, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians in Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station, where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

Soldier on Duty in Mine Strike Killed

CALUMET, MICH., Aug. 13.—The first fatality since the installation of 200 Michigan State troops in the Calumet copper region on account of the strike of 18,000 miners occurred today, when Orla Green, 22, private in Battery A, of Lansing, died from an accident.

Green was kicked in the abdomen by a horse a week ago.

MASSEE CHARGES GRAFT IN MACON

Says City Pays Too Much for Electricity and That Officials Get Free Lights.

MACON, Aug. 13.—In an interview this afternoon W. Jordan Massee, president of the new electric power company, charges that the city of Macon officially, and the Macon Railway and Light Company, are in collusion and that for this reason his charges of excessive payments by the city to the Macon Railway and Light Company were whitewashed by Council last night.

Massee charges that Mayor John T. Moore and City Electrician Charles Humphries do not pay for lights used in their homes. He also says that Council whitewashed his charges because of the fact that the administration party has received liberal campaign contributions from the Macon Railway and Light Company in the past and expects similar contributions in the near future.

The charges are vigorously denied by officials.

Senate Kills Bill Providing for Early Primary Elections

The Senate Wednesday killed the House bill providing for early primaries, 21 to 18, agreed to the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture and the printing of bulletins and passed a number of local House bills.

President Anderson declared the Senate calendar virtually was clear with the exception of the inheritance tax bill, which probably will come up for passage late Wednesday afternoon.

Sharp debate occurred Wednesday morning on the primary bill, which was championed by Senator Tarver and others. Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, charged that the measure was an effort of politicians to legislate themselves back into office.

Insurrectors Kill 3,200 Federals, Then Rereat.

The World of Society

Several informal affairs have been given this week for Miss Martha Boynton's guests, Misses Ann Grady, of Chattanooga, and Susie Veach, of Adairsville. Tuesday Mrs. George Boynton entertained at luncheon followed by a matinee party at the Forsyth for these attractive visitors. Her guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Laura Cole and Martha Carrington, of Charleston, the guest of Mrs. Gilham Morrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Charles Boynton gave an informal supper party Tuesday for Miss Boynton's guests. The table was decorated with a basket of yellow sunflowers, and all the details were in yellow. The guests included Misses Susie Veach, Ann Grady, Martha Carrington, Laura Cole, Martha Boynton, Messrs. Perrin Nicolson, Cary Callaway, Harold Barnwell, George Northen and William McCullough.

On Wednesday these girls were honor guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. Henry Porter at the East Lake Country Club. Luncheon was served on the veranda and old-fashioned garden flowers adorned the table. Mrs. Porter had as her guests Miss Grady, Miss Veach, Miss Martha Boynton, Mrs. Gilham Morrow and her guest, Miss Martha Carrington, and Mrs. B. L. Durrence, who is spending this week with Mrs. Porter at her country home at East Lake.

Miss Veach will spend a few days with Miss Alice Richards on Boulevard, and Miss Grady will be the guest of Miss Martha Crane on Inman circle until Friday, when she goes to Adairsville to visit Miss Veach.

Morning Bridge.

Mrs. Virginius Hitt will entertain a number of young girls at bridge Friday morning to meet her guest, Miss Helen Woolfork, of New York.

Miss MacIntyre Hostess.

Miss Julia MacIntyre will entertain at afternoon tea Thursday at her home at Brookhaven.

Miss McGaughey Entertains.

Miss Ruble McGaughey entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon for Miss Bessie Tappan's guests, Miss Lucy Jacks, of Forsyth, and Miss Julia Gill, of Woodberry, and for Miss Julia Lokey, of Birmingham, the guest of Mrs. Hugh Lokey. The party was completed by Miss Minnie Purvis.

For Miss Bacon.

In compliment to Miss Farra Bacon, of Savannah, who is visiting her, Miss Marie Colcord entertained at a matinee party at the Forsyth Wednesday afternoon, inviting six girls to be her guests. Thursday afternoon there will be a swimming party at the C. C. C. C. for Miss Bacon. After a swim, tea will be served on the veranda.

Habersham Chapter Meets.

Joseph Habersham Chapter, D. A. R., will hold its monthly meeting Friday afternoon at 3:30 at the home of the regent, Mrs. John A. Perdue, No. 703 Edgewood avenue.

W. A. R. M. A. Postpone Meeting.

There will be no meeting of the W. A. R. M. A. this month on account of the illness of Mrs. Roy Wilhelt.

Holcombe-Williams.

The marriage of Miss Aline Holcombe to Mr. Marion Williams took place at the home of the bride's mother Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the presence of a few relatives and friends, Dr. A. R. Holderby officiating.

Miss Holcombe was gowned in a traveling suit of blue, with hat and gloves to match.

The bridal party entered as Mendelssohn's wedding march was played by Miss Allie Hazel McClair. Miss Ethel Rutherford and Mr. G. C. Holcombe were the attendants.

After the wedding trip Mr. and Mrs. Williams will be at home to their friends at No. 41 Orme street.

For Mrs. Ellis.

Miss Mary Brown entertained a swimming party at the Capital City Country Club Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Frampton Ellis, who was a bride of June. There were fourteen guests. Tea was served on the veranda.

Mrs. Hinton Hostess.

Mrs. Harold Hilton entertained Wednesday afternoon at a bridge tea, inviting the members of her club for the game and a few other friends in for tea at 5 o'clock. The honor guests were Miss Genevieve Gresham, the guest of Mrs. Russell Gresham, and Mrs. Pennel, of Fort Oglethorpe, who is visiting Mrs. J. C. Peavy.

Pink and white roses adorned the mantels. The prizes were gold and white china, while the guests of honor were presented with correspondence cards.

Mrs. Hilton received her guests wearing lavender crepe.

Smathers-Clough.

Miss Ellen Smathers, of Asheville, and Mr. Addison Clough, of Pennsylvania, were married Saturday evening at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. George Smathers, in Asheville.

The bride's sister, Mrs. Bartlett, and her little niece, Daisy Bartlett, were the only attendants, and only a few friends witnessed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Clough are traveling in the West.

As Miss Smathers, Mrs. Clough visited in Atlanta last spring as the guest of Miss Emma Kate Amorous, and has many friends here who will be interested to hear of her wedding.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednsday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get bumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ralph Herz Scores Hit.

Ralph Herz, the musical comedy star, in an act that abounds in pathos, is the feature of a splendid bill at the Forsyth this week. Herz, although in a field entirely different from that in which he has been seen for years, does an excellent bit of character work in "Old Blind Joe," and the heartstrings of the audience get a good tug. His other impersonations are good.

Wood and Wyde, in a singing comedy skit, score a genuine hit. Their songs are catchy and their patter is above the average.

Milo Belden and company have a sketch which gets many laughs. Other acts are the Randalls, sharpshooters, who do some remarkable feats; the Adias family, in a first-class acrobatic turn; Willie Weston and company, in an entertaining musical number, and the Pathe play.

HAS NAME OPERATED ON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Miss Marie C. Schwabenhausen, a kindergarten teacher, had the Supreme Court in Brooklyn amputate the eight rear letters of her name. Now her pupils can handle it.

LAST PLEA FILED FOR PARDON OF M'NAUGHTON

Doctors Said to Have Made Affidavits That Arsenic Could Not Have Killed Flanders.

That one last desperate effort will be made to save the life of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, under sentence of death in the Chatham County jail, was indicated Wednesday morning, when Judge F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, representing McNaughton, filed affidavits with the State Prison Commission setting forth that the death of Flanders, alleged victim of McNaughton, could not have been caused by arsenic.

Judge Saffold arrived in Atlanta Wednesday morning. He filed the affidavits with the Prison Commission shortly thereafter and announced that he would remain in the city until the decision is handed down. The affidavits, it is said, were made out by physicians who assert that Flanders could not have died from arsenic.

According to members of the Prison Commission the new evidence will be carefully examined, probably Monday afternoon, preparatory to a final decision not later than Thursday.

Dr. McNaughton, it is understood, has expressed hope of being pardoned and has already prepared to re-enter the practice of medicine.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

G. A. & F. Grocery Co. Declared Bankrupt

An involuntary petition in bankruptcy against the G. A. & F. Grocery Company, a corporation doing a wholesale and retail grocery business at No. 23 Piedmont avenue, was filed in the United State District Court Wednesday morning.

The petitioners named are the Atlanta Paper Company, Gershon Company and A. Weimberg, who state that the concern owes more than $1,000. A referee will be appointed Thursday.

Canton Is Looted by Chinese Buccaneers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 13.—Chinese pirates still hold Canton at their mercy. Fighting is general, and a great part of the business district has been looted.

The Canton harbor is full of junks containing buccaneers. General Lung, commander of the garrison at Canton, is powerless.

FIRST OPEN BOLL AT DALTON.

DALTON.—The first open boll of cotton, unusually early for this section of the State, was brought in yesterday by W. T. Cox, of the Carbondale District. Indications point to the earliest first bale on record this year.

HOTEL MEN FEAST ON FRIED PULLETS

A delicious fried chicken dinner, with plenty of hot cornbread, buttermilk and vegetables raised on the premises, was served to the Hotel Men's Association after the regular monthly meeting at Durand's farm Tuesday evening. The association was the guest of J. T. Williams.

The members of the association and invited guests left the Piedmont Hotel at 4:30 o'clock in automobiles, after a short business meeting at which routine matters were disposed of. A committee was appointed to look after the delegates to the Georgia Hotel Men's Association, which meets in Atlanta the middle of November. Lee M. Jordan made an interesting talk on "Hotel Legislation."

The members present were J. Lee Barnes, J. F. Lution, A. R. Evans, Ed R. Brown, Wallace Boyd, A. R. Keen, Lee M. Jordan, R Frank Taylor, Fred Limmell, Frank Harrell and Fred Houser. Among the invited guests were Edwin F. Johnson and Dr. J. S. Kennedy.

Mrs. Williams and Master "Biff" Williams assisted Mr. Williams in entertaining the guests.

Potash Lye Poison in Dipper Causes Death

ALPHARETTA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. Sallie Cobb, wife of William Cobb, a farmer living two miles west of Alpharetto, is dead after drinking water from a dipper with which she had a few hours before stirred potash lye.

Mrs. Cobb left the dipper on the well and went to visit a neighbor. On returning home she went to the well and took a drink of water. Within a few minutes she was in agony.

Negro Who Attacked Phone Girl Captured

ANNISTON, Ala., Aug. 13.—Jack Duncan, the negro who is said to have attacked, gagged, bound and robbed Miss Belle Kirkpatrick, telephone operator at Piedmont, in her office some time ago, is under arrest at Rome, Ga., having been brought from Miami, Fla., according to information given Sheriff C. T. Brooks here to-day.

Miss Kirkpatrick has gone to Rome to identify the negro, for whose arrest the Southern Bell Company had offered a $200 reward.

OBITUARY

Mrs. J. H. Bate, a former resident of Atlanta, died Monday night in San Antonio, Texas. She was the widow of J. H. Bate. The body will be brought here for interment.

The funeral of Mrs. C. D. Diggs, who died Tuesday at her home in East Point, will be held at 2 o'clock Wednesday afternoon from the East Point Baptist Church. HUERTA SHOWS CONCILIATORY SPIRIT

Radicals Call Present Quiet Calm Before Storm—Drunken Students Jeer Lind.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 13.—Following the conference between Special American Envoy John Lind and the Mexican Foreign Minister, Manuel Gamboa, the belief prevailed here today that President Huerta would adopt a conciliatory attitude toward the United States, realizing the hopelessness of trying to combat the vast power of Mexico's big neighbor.

Callers at the National Palace declared that in substance President Huerta had said:

"While Mexico resents interference even from a friendly power in her domestic affairs, nevertheless we do not feel that we are in any way being coerced by the United States. We will make further protest against any efforts of Mr. Lind to settle affairs in this republic if he attempts to do so, but such action on our part will not be of a bellicose nature."

Lind Makes Report.

Mr. Lind is in constant communication with Washington and has notified the State Department of his safe arrival here and of the apparent absence of any anti-American feeling.

It is understood the Carranza rebels in Northeastern Mexico have communicated a desire to Mr. Lind to meet their representatives so that representations may be made in behalf of formal recognition of the Carranza forces as belligerents.

The Foreign Office to-day denied having any official knowledge of Japan's declination to recognize Felix Diaz as a special envoy. In fact, Mexico was assured before Señor Diaz left Mexico that he would be received in an official capacity.

A group of students from the National Military Academy, who evidently had indulged too freely in Mexican rum, attempted to make a hostile demonstration around the Hotel Lascurain, where Mr. Lind and his party are staying. They were driven away by rurales.

Calm Before Storm.

The situation here has remained quiet, but radicals among the supporters of Huerta declare it is only the calm before the storm. Conservatives are counseling Huerta not to antagonize the United States. A delegation of planters called at the National Palace to-day and presented a petition about as follows:

"Having the good of Mexico at heart and desiring to attract foreign capital for the upbuilding of the Republic, we ask President Huerta to maintain the friendliest relations with the United States and not to take action of any nature whatsoever which might offend our peaceful allies."

Pays Annual Visit To Tomb of Grant

COLUMBUS, Aug. 13.—Friends in Columbus have received messages from Dr. E. B. M. Browne, now of New York, but formerly pastor of Temple B'Nai Israel in this city, that he has just paid his annual visit to the tomb of General U. S. Grant, it being the twenty-seventh anniversary of the burial of the former President.

Dr. Browne is the sole survivor of the pallbearers who officiated at the funeral of General Grant. His daughter, Mrs. Dave Goldberg, now resides here.

State Urged to Pay For Warship Silver By House Committee

Payment of Georgia's donation to the silver service presented to the battleship Georgia, which has been deferred six years, was recommended Tuesdaye by a vote of 8 to 5, by the House Committee on Appropriations.

It was the overwhelming sentiment of the committee that the debt was an honorable one and should be paid at once. Charles W. Crankshaw, the Atlanta jeweler who has waited patiently for his money, appeared in person before the committee and read a brief history of the gift. It was at the request of the late Joseph M. Terrell, then Governor of Georgia, that the gift was made. The Governor presented the silver service on Georgia Day at the Jamestown Exposition.

The outstanding amount voted paid by the Appropriations Committee was $1,300. The total cost of the service was $7,515. Georgia cities contributed.

Diaz Ignored Because Of Diplomatic Error

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—A cablegram to a local Japanese newspaper from Tokio to-day said:

"As the Government of Mexico has ignored the diplomatic usage of the international intercourse etiquette by sending an envoy to Japan without consulting and making arrangements with the Japanese Government for the mission of General Felix Diaz, Japan advised the Government of Mexico that there is necessity of careful consultations beforehand."

McAdoo Belongs to Buttermilk Brigade

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The Wilson administration just can not agree on the subject of drink. Further disruption came to light to-day with the discovery that William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, is a buttermilk "fiend."

William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, insists on grape juice. President Wilson drinks orange juice.

Tuberculosis Spread By Paris Street Dogs

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The French Academy of Medicine is discussing the spreading of tuberculosis by dogs.

It is estimated that from 12,000 to 18,000 tubercular dogs are running loose in the Paris streets out of a total dog population of 200,000.

It is found that dogs give tuberculosis to cats.

CHURCHES WAKE TO CHANCE AT $1,000 GOLD

Several Organizations and Individuals Start in to Win Georgian's Want Ad Contest.

"How many organizations are going in for that $1,000 in gold?" asked the chairman of a church committee of the Want Ad Man. The committee had been appointed to take up the entry of the church in the Want Ad Contest inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian, and was making plans to go out and win.

"Why, quite a number and more coming," explained the Want Ad Man. "But the more the better for everybody.

"You see the more entered the more the vote is split up, just as when four or five candidates run for Mayor. It gives everybody a better chance to win. And remember, there's $500 worth of furniture of your own selection for second prize."

The Want Ad Contest has interested hundreds of Atlantans and the office of the Want Ad Man, fourth floor of the Foote & Davies Building, is one of the busiest places in the city this week. Contestants are calling to have details explained to them, to receive order blanks and other equipment, to have a chat with the Want Ad Man and gain tips on how to succeed.

The announcement of the complete list of prizes aroused new interest. The two grand prizes, a five-passenger automobile and a double tour to California and return with all expenses paid, have made everybody buckle down to work. And besides these, there are five prizes in each of four classes, men's, women's, boys' and girls', so that everybody has a chance to win something worth while. And best of all, there isn't any guesswork or gamble. It is simply a businesslike proposition in which energy brings a certain return.

There is still time to enter the contest. The Want Ad Man will tell you all about it if you'll see him this week.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

COLUMBUS.—The Lee County, Alabama, Sunday school convention will meet August 22 and 23 at Waverly. Leon C. Palmer, field secretary of the Sunday school work in Alabama, will make the principal address.

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Auditorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

Wife of Secretary Is Champion Whistler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — Mrs. Josephus Daniels, the talented wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is to-day considered the champion whistler of the Cabinet circle. Mrs. Daniels learned this unusual accomplishment from her sons.

When she drives down to coax the Secretary from his desk these Mexican days she summons him by giving a sweet, high whistle in a code both understand.

Soldiers Shoot Wild; Blacks Fear Bullets

AUGUSTA, GA., Aug. 13.—The new rifle range of the local military companies will have to be abandoned unless better precautions are taken to protect human lives. An injunction is threatened by W. H. Rennison and other property owners in the vicinity because the soldiers are said to be shooting recklessly. Negroes in the neighborhood have stopped work on the farms for fear of being killed.

FIGHT TO RECOVER ZACHRY CHILDREN

Case Will Be Taken to Richmond Superior Court—Divorce Proceedings Do Not Interfere.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 13.—Attorney C. E. Dunbar announces that he will bring action before Judge Henry C. Hammond, of the Richmond Superior Court, for the recovery of the Zachry children.

By a decision of the Supreme Court yesterday Judge Hammond must hear the evidence in the case. The entire matter is, therefore, reopened, and Dunbar believes that he will recover the children on his next attempt.

Ordinary Walton heard the case at first, and he decided that Zachry should have the custody of the children. Subsequently divorce proceedings were brought by Dunbar for Mrs. Zachry, and he asked Judge Hammond to hear the case and decide whether the father or the mother should have the custody of the children.

Judge Hammond declined on the ground that Ordinary Walton had already decided the matter. Dunbar reminded him that at the time the matter was heard before Walton divorce proceedings had not been instituted.

Hammond said it made no difference and that he had no right to hear it. The Supreme Court has ruled that he had and has the right.

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

1,500-Pound Shark Captured in Trap

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Aug. 13.—A 1,500-pound shark, 25 feet long, which was captured in the Milk Island trap by Albert Story and killed, after a bitter battle, is at Story's Wharf where it attracts much attention.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Braintree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

FIRST BALE AT FORT GAINES.

FORT GAINES.—The first bale of 1913 cotton was received here to-day, just three days ahead of last year. It was brought in by Tony Wells, a negro, who received a handsome premium.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louisans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temporarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

BOUT FOR ED CLABBY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Eddie Clabby, brother of Jimmy Clabby, one of the claimants of the middleweight championship, has been matched to box ten rounds with Billy Walters, formerly of the Naval station at Lake Bluff, Ill., at Hammond, Ind., on Labor Day afternoon. The weight for the contest will be 142 pounds six hours before the contest.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "'He jests at scars who never felt a wound,'" she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol of prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the seedid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me oaver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend oaver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peeches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much. & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice. What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was vary sweet of her. You see, Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons' & you cuddent malk me beleeve thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Misses Mace.

I know it, sed Pa, I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to len to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"But that is a sound tooth," said the dentist. "The pain is only sympathetic."

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

A solicitor called upon a professional man in Bedford Row, and was shown into the office of a junior partner. He was a young man, and had only been called to the bar a few months. He was very anxious to get a brief, and was delighted when the solicitor said:

"I have a case in the Queen's Bench, and I should like you to hold a brief for me."

"Certainly," said the young barrister, "I shall be very pleased to do so. What is the case?"

"Oh, it's a very simple case," said the solicitor. "It is only a question of a bill of exchange for £5."

"Then I'm afraid I can't undertake it," said the barrister. "I'm only a junior, and I don't think it would be worth your while to brief me for such a small amount."

"Oh, that doesn't matter," said the solicitor. "I'm only a junior myself."

Two American farmers met a day or two after a cyclone had swept over their farms.

"She shook things up pretty bad out at my place," said one, stroking his whiskers meditatively. "By the way, Hiram," he added, "that new barn o' yourn get hurt at all?"

"Wal," drawled the other, "I dunno, I hain't found it yet!"

The Major—And there we stood, Miss Ethel, in the heart of the jungle, that huge panther and I, barely ten paces apart, each staring at the face of the other.

Ethel—Oh, major, how dreadful for you both!

"Look here, Boxer, did you call me a common ass?"

"No, Popson. I said you were an uncommon ass."

"Aw, that's different. I cawn't stand having anybody call me common, y'know."

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

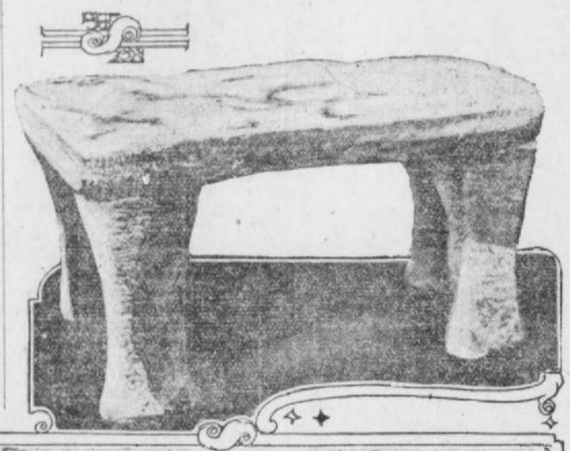

CIVILIZED people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

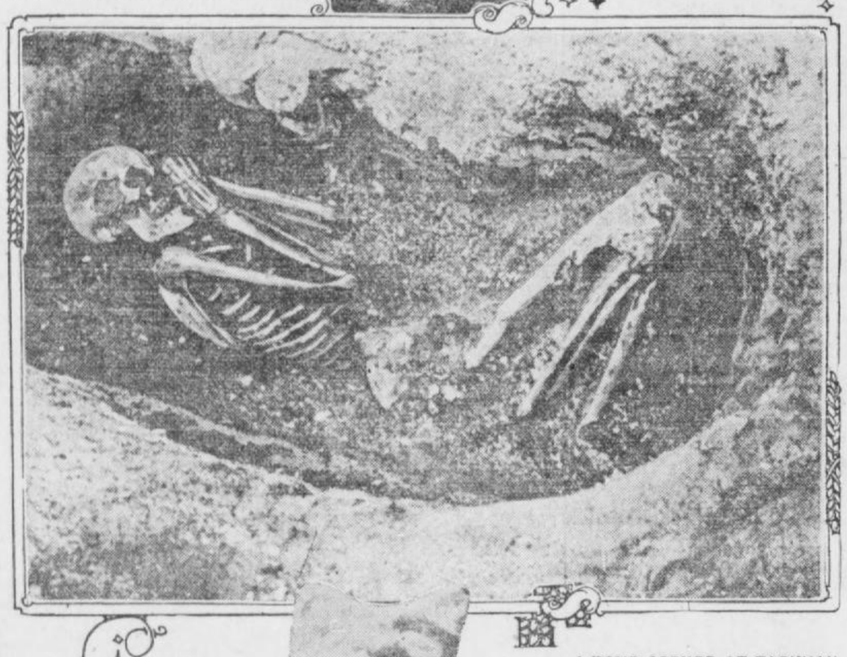

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

ALABASTER TABLE OF FIRST DYNASTY AT GERZEH.

A TOMB OPENED AT TARKHAN.

ANIMAL FIGURES AT MEMPHIS.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

"Hallo!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her lovelightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely oxled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEAFNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

PARENTS are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

With the Boy.

Willie—May I go and play now, ma?

Mother—What? With those ragged trousers!

Willie—No; with the boy next door.

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar, which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly. "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card.

"We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren, for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her penciled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-mondé' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade.'

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And [illegible] head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead.
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No' matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four tooth-brushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is, Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any phyalcian. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, biotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back, we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

* * *

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hargrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

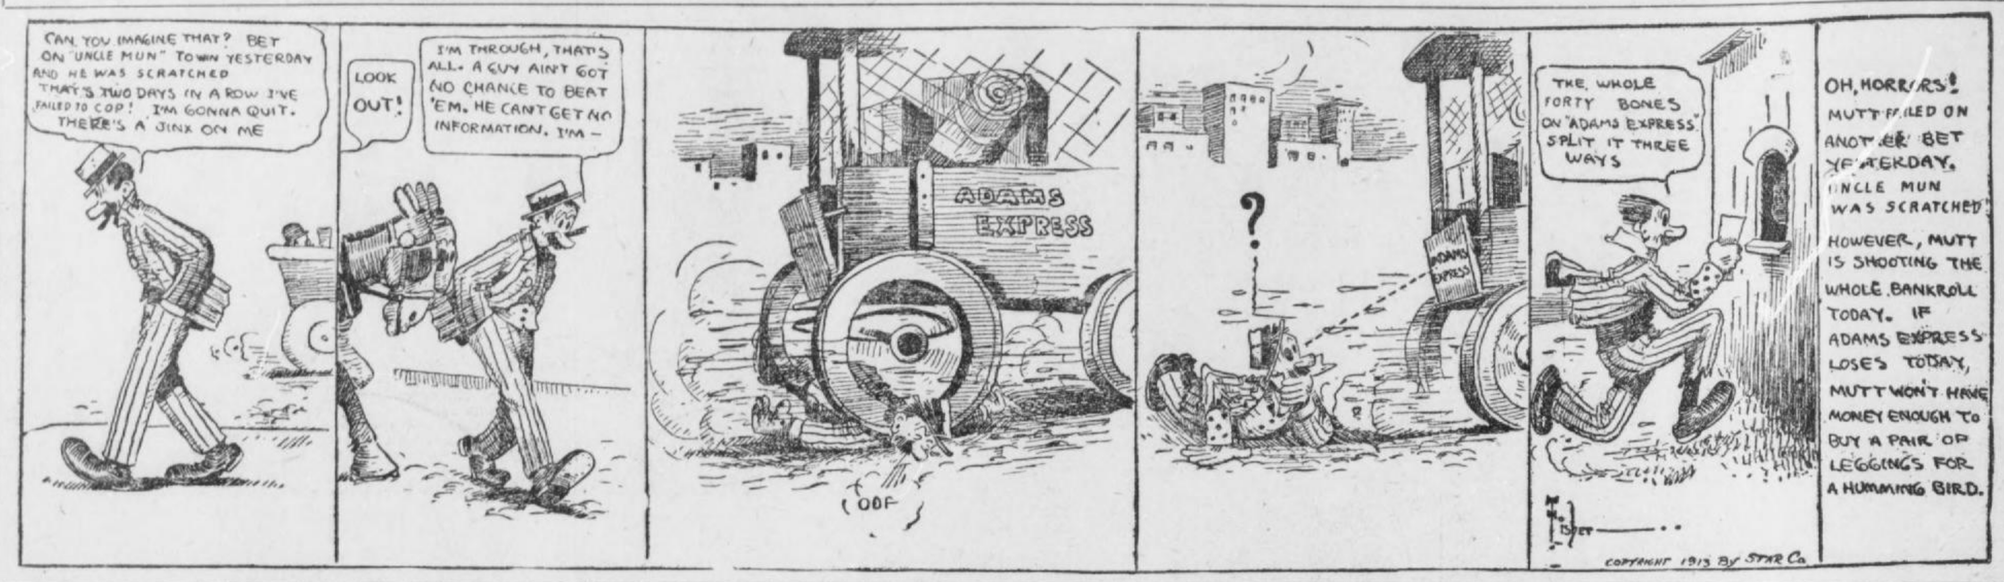

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a doubleheader against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V. The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles in heat and dust, but the alienists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knockout—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONsistency in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

* * *

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

* * *

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georger Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers, matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

* * *

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gitting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

REVENGE.

(A Baseball Tragedy in Three Acts.)

ACT I.

Ike Swatt, the mighty baseball star,
was smitten with a dame
Who owned a flock of lucre and an
old and honored name,
But when he offered her his hand
she coldly spurned the same.

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they needed one tie.
Our Hero ambled to the plate and
saw three strikes go by.
The game was lost while she looked on with murder in her eye.

ACT III.

For she had bet her fortune on the
prowess of his bat,
And when he took the final strike it
left the poor girl flat.
"Revenge!" she cried, in accents
wild. "I'll marry him for that!"

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated h isiegs or his thirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never won a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Whiston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fistiana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

* * *

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

* * *

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Boyo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Wolgust and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

* * *

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

* * *

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbraith Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

* * *

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

* * *

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

* * *

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

* * *

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

* * *

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

* * *

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

* * *

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

* * *

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

* * *

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night. Frankie Burns is to be Jack's opponent and the battle is to be staged at Denver, Colo.

* * *

Carl Morris is the champion lemon picker of the country. Morris is to be sent against Fred Lachlan on Friday night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

* * *

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times but the locals clearly had the class.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More

What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

* * *

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozles* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

* * *

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

* * *

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error, and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

* * *

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

* * *

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

LAJOIE HAS BEEN IN BIG LEAGUES SEVENTEEN YEARS

WASHINTGON, Aug. 13.—Seventeen years a major and still one of the foremost players of the game is the proud record of Napoleon Lajoie, second baseman of the Naps, who, on Saturday, will celebrate the seventeenth anniversary of his entrance into the big leagues.

TO HAVE "REGULAR" PLANT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The New York American League team's new grounds will be located at 206th and Broadway and Exterior streets. The grandstand will be 665 feet on 225th street and 495 1-2 feet on 227th street, extending the entire block on Broadway end and will be 52 feet deep. The field stand will be erected at the Exterior street end and will be 264 by 54 1-2 feet. These stands will form a stadium, and the cost of the grandstand has been estimated at $250,000 and the field stand at $12,000. The stands will be of brick and terra cotta.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Tammany's Hand Is Seen.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democrats now find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attempts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued declarations that he "was walking the street called straight." All sorts of "I told you so's were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor would be the victim. This material may be brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

Briefly, the articles of impeachment which were presented to the Senate to-day charge that Governor Sulzer is guilty of the following allegations:

That he filed a false statement of campaign contributions with the Secretary of State, such statement having caused "great scandal" and reproach for the Governor of the State of New York, and that the said statement did not contain all the contributions received by him, and that he was guilty of a misdemeanor in failing to file a true report.

Charge Effort to Block Quiz.

That while Governor, William Sulzer induced Louis R. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller, by fraudulent methods, to withhold certain testimony from the Frawley committee, and that such acts were the commission of a felony.

That the Governor "practiced deceit and fraud and used threats and menaces" intended to prevent the committee and other witnesses subpenaed from producing books and papers desired by the committee, such act having been a misdemeanor.

That in preventing or dissuading Frederick L. Colwell from attending the hearing of the Frawley committee the Governor was also guilty of a misdemeanor in having violated section 2441 of the penal law.

That prior to his election the Governor appropriated campaign contributions to his own use using the same, or a large portion thereof, to speculate in stocks, and that he thereby stole such checks and was guilty of larceny.

Abuse of Power Alleged.

That he promised and threatened to use his office to affect the vote of certain public officers, including Assemblymen S. G. Prime, of Essex, and Thaddeus C. Sweet, of Oswego.

That the Governor corruptly used his authority as Governor to affect the price of securities in the New York Stock Exchange, in some of which he was speculating and in other ways sought to influence legislation.

In conclusion the articles read:

"The assembly demands that the Governor answer concerning all these matters before the court which is to hear the charges, and offers to present proof of said matters at such time as the honorable court for the trial of impeachment may order and appoint."

Posed as a Poor Man.

William Sulzer less than a year ago enjoyed the confidence of the people of New York State to such an extent that he was elected Governor by a vote of 19,000 in excess of that given Wilson and the national ticket, and a few months later said in an interview, "The people understand me, I understand the people, and we trust each other."

Throughout his long career in the State Assembly, in the National House of Representatives, and during his recent campaign for election as Governor and his six-month tenure of that office Governor Sulzer always posed as a poor man and a friend of the poor man.

Refuses to See Reporters.

The Governor's secretary stated that Sulzer would not make any statement and would not see the newspaper men at the usual hour to-day.

When the Governor reached the Capitol this morning, he was asked how he felt and replied: "Fine. It's a nice breezy morning."

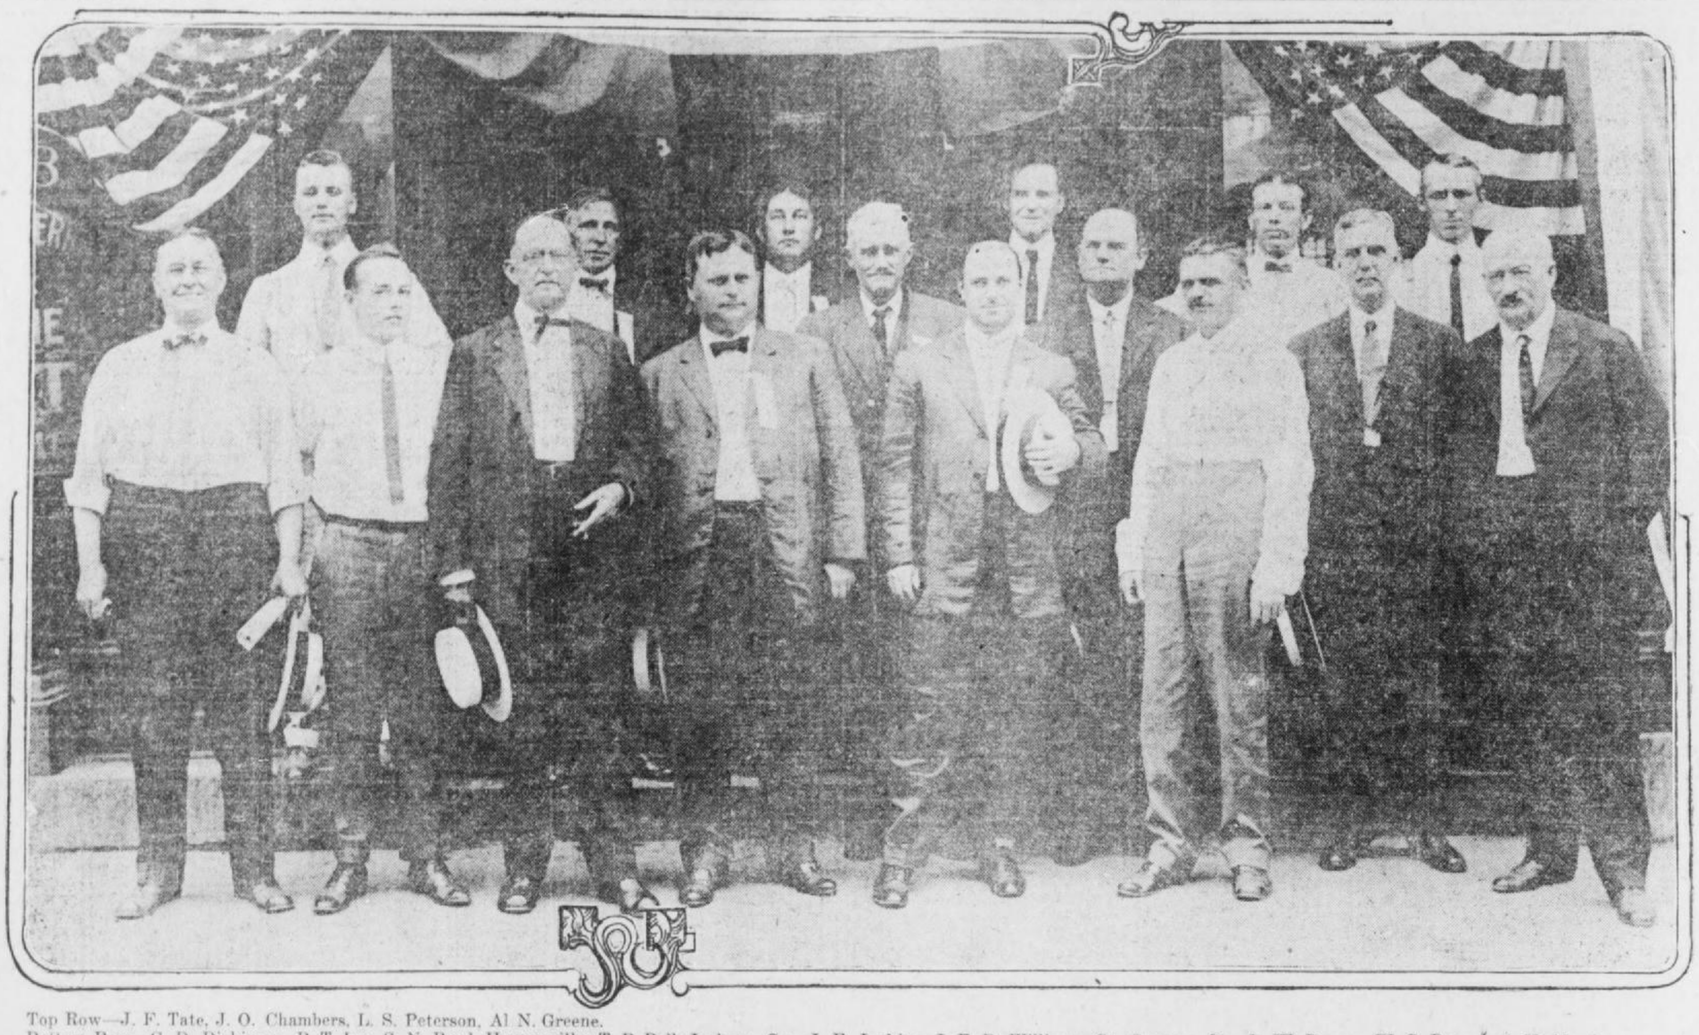

He seemed to be in excellent spirits and paused to allow his picture to be taken at the foot of the Capitol steps.

Although both houses of the Legislature were scheduled to meet at 11 o'clock, it was long after that hour when the lawmakers, hollow-eyed and sleepy in appearance, began to arrive. Many of them had not been to bed at all.

The Court of Appeals, it was learned to-day, could not be convened much before the end of September on account of many of the judges being in Europe and other places on vacations.

No word was forthcoming to-day as to whether Governor Sulzer would attempt to remain in office or fight his accusers. The Governor himself would say nothing whatever, and Judge D. Cady Herrick, before he went into consultation with the Governor, refused to discuss the situation. It is believed by friends of the Governor that for the time being the Governor will step aside, but no confirmation of this can be obtained.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

Visiting Merchants Have Big Barbecue

Fall styles, new fabrics, freight rates and price terms were forgotten Wednesday afternoon by sellers and buyers alike when nearly every wholesale merchant in Atlanta and many hundreds of delegates to the Southern Merchants' convention dropped business and enjoyed a barbecue at Ponce DeLeon Park.

J. R. Little was put at the head of the barbecue committee and Lee Barnes was engaged to supervise the outdoor cookery.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries committed in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 102 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 209 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S. Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

WORKS FOR $2 A MONTH.

TALBOTTON.—Although the act providing for County Commissioners for Talbot County specifies that no commissioner shall draw more than $24 per year, Commissioner Roderick Leonard is giving practically his entire time to the roads of the county.

Big Improvements At Shorter College

ROME, Aug. 13.—Great improvements are being made at Shorter College. Workmen are giving the walls of every room a coat of fresh paint; all bathrooms have been enameled, and all floors, everyone of which is of reinforced concrete, have been freshly painted.

A large out-of-doors gymnasium, 150 by 400 feet, is probably the greatest thing that the college has ever done for its students. There will be room for four or five tennis courts, several basket ball games and sufficient space for all kinds of gymnastics, calisthenics, etc. Electric lights will be arranged on the grounds, so that the girls may use the tennis courts and basket ball grounds in the evening.

The attendance for the next session at Shorter will be very large, the registration being far in excess of any previous year.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacramento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand today.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified

That want ad had cost just 20 cents. Wasn't it worth it?

Mountaineer Frozen Dangling Over Cliff

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, Aug. 13.—Mountain guides near Leisang to-day discovered the frozen body of a mountaineer hanging over the cliff in the Bregenz Mountains.

The man, who was a guide, had fallen from a precipice and his clothing had caught in a jutting tree root.

himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed.

None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Announcement Soon Of $150,000 Sales

Smith & Ewing's Deals in Contract Stage—Great Interest in New Office Building—Other Notes.

Sales aggregating $150,000 are expected to be announced in a week by the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency. These are in contract stage and lawyers are busy examining titles. Several are for sums around $25,000. This agency has sold through J. H. and Crawford Maddox for L. C. Durham, of Terrell County, to J. R. Smith, No. 96 East Cain street, 40 by 150 feet, for $6,000, or at the rate of $150 a foot. Mr. Smith bought for investment, and he may improve with an apartment house or building of similar character.

Comment on Skyscraper Plans.

Real estate men engaged in a good deal of discussion Wednesday on the 16-story office building which it is planned to erect on Dr. E. L. Connally's lot at the southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets. Most of them expressed the belief that an office structure additional to the Atlanta National Bank Building would lend a great deal of prestige to the retail shopping district and the entire South Side.

The probable effect on tenants and leases was also discussed with interest. Announcement that Brown & Allen might move to the Lynch property across the way, which they leased a year ago, and that the United Cigar Stores Company might take the Brown & Allen corner caused much gossip on the probable new lease rate for the corner. The Lynch corner, according to reliable authority, would cost the drug concern $450 a month. This would be exclusive of the other space upstairs and on West Alabama street, which now brings Brown & Allen an amount above the entire cost. The Lynch property was leased by the drug company for seven years, as a protection, and the lease contains an option for five years more.

The United Cigar Stores Comuany, it is reported, made Dr. Connally an offer on the Brown & Allen corner, but negotiations have not gone far. Dr. Connally promised Ed Brown, of the drug company, the refusal on the ground floor at a price which has not been given out. This is said to apply either to the store as it stands or to the office building space. The Brown & Allen lease is up September 1, 1914.

In the leases on parts of the Connally property it is said there is a one-year cancellation clause, which is taken to mean that when Dr. Connally made the leases he had a big building in view.

The old building is bringing a handsome return, and the only hesitation Dr. Connolly has about putting up a larger structure lies in the fact that a skyscraper would not pay as high a percentage on the investment.

Insurance Money Easy.

Insurance money continues to be lent more readily in Atlanta than previous to the announcement that $25,000,000 would be placed in Southern banks to move the crops. About twenty loan deeds went to record Tuesday. Approximately half of them were to the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, the Guaranty Trust Company, of Missouri, the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Connecticut, the Germania Savings Bank and the United States Mortgage and Trust Company.

Many Expected at Dinner.

Inasmuch as Chas. P. Glover, Harris G. White, S. B. Turman and Fitzhugh Knox will be present at the monthly dinner of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday, it is believed that a large crowd of realty men will attend. The above-named agents are full of the recent trip to Winnipeg, and they will be called on to relate their experiences in the Northwest.

President White has made announcement of a change in plan for the monthly dinners. Instead of holding them at 6:30 p. m., the time will be 12:30 to 2 p. m., and the place will be the Hotel Ansley. Friday's dinner will be held in the Georgia pine room of the hotel.

Interesting Apartment Leases.

H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have leased apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and will be quartered there this winter. The leases were made by Albert S. Adams, of the B. M. Grant Agency, who is the exclusive agent for this structure. Gen. R. K. Evans will move from the Bell place, northeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, to the Georgian Terrace.

The near approach of fall finds many people ready to move into new locations, and the renting agencies are in the midst of their busiest season. Mr. Aycock, manager of the renting department of the Charles P. Glover agency, declared that the tendency was to re-lease rather than to choose different houses.

Peachtree Lease Expected.

Another Peachtree lease is expected to be announced soon. The United Motor Atlanta Company, now the Maxwell Company, will move from its present location at the foot of Currier street to some location that suits its wholesale business better, and the Turman, Black & Calhoun agency, who have the building, will announce the plans of another concern which will move in.

Big Acreage Sale.

Extensive acreage tracts in South and Middle Georgia continue to be handled through Atlanta real estate agents. Sisson & Miller have sold to T. R. Owsley, through J. T. Kimbrough, the well-known realty agent, 160 acres of land three miles north of Fort Valley for $9,000, or $56 an acre.

Support for Exhibit Project.

Indications pointed Wednesday to success in the effort to place Atlanta-made goods permanently on exhibit in the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building, southeast corner of North Pryor street and Auburn avenue. Several additional merchants and manufacturers assured the merchants and manufacturers' committee that they would take space. It has been feared that not enough exhibitors will be in the building to make the project a success, and W. H. Leahy, of the local industrial bureau, has given notice that prospective lessees must hurry and sign up for space, or it will be too late.

Unless action is taken at once the building will be converted into offices, as originally planned. Work is under way and the Chamber of Commerce officials want to know the decision of the exhibitors so as to determine definitely the character of the building.

Pushing Peachtree Work.

Indications were Wednesday that the county convicts would finish up during the day or early Thursday Peachtree repairs as far south as Fifteenth street and would be able to turn back from Fifteenth to Brookwood. There is probably five days' work before the entire job is completed, and then the gang will go back to the stretch lying between W. S. Witham's country place and the DeKalb County line.

People using Peachtree of late have expressed great satisfaction over the paving. The County Commissioners decided to make repairs rather than lay new material and to make the job new next year. The old paving was plowed up, pulverized and packed with a giant roller and for the present it does as well as when it was first laid.

COTTON SELLS OFF AFTER EARLY GAIN

The Market Ruled Very Narrow, Though There Was Some Cotton Wanted on Easy Spots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and accordingly sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and no matter how dry it remains, this cotton will come into the market freely until the receipts from the eastern half of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

As the map showed little or no rain and the detailed weather report posted at 12 o'clock, giving temperatures and rainfall for yesterday, was disappointing to the bearish element, as there was seventeen points in Oklahoma showing temperatures from 100 to 109 and ten points in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 104, with much less rainfall than had been expected from the private reports that were received late yesterday afternoon. The market ruled very narrow, though there was apparently some cotton wanted on all easy spots. Some of the prominent interests who have been identified with the bull side of late were put down as the early sellers. It is purely a weather market and much depends on what may happen during the next two or three days.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows rather general precipitation in the eastern part of Texas, although light so far. Generally fair in the western half of Texas and Oklahoma overnight, partly cloudy to fair in the rest of the belt. Scattered showers fell in Tennessee, the south central Gulf and Atlantic coast districts. Indications are for further precipitation west today, particularly in the southern and eastern part of Texas.

Liverpool came in very poor, with futures at one time, as much as 4 lower than due.

The last report to us from Liverpool says: "Feeling and opinion continue bearish, chiefly on account of the bad trade outlook. Spinners and manufacturers are complaining bitterly and understand similar conditions exist on the continent, so that even with a moderate crop, a bull movement appears difficult."

This accounts for the poor response to reports of crop deterioration from Texas and Oklahoma and the slow business in forward shipments.

Trading here is quiet this morning with the market dull but steady around last night's closing figures. The relatively small new crop receipts, in view of the reports of active ginning in Texas, are the subject of comment. This is generally accounted for by the slow export demand, and the unfavorable news from Liverpool is in line with it.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Unless the drouth situation in the Southwest is relieved, we expect no activity at present.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think general conditions warrant any marked upturn at this time, and in the event of good soaking rains in the Southwest, a lower range of values will undoubtedly result.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Near months in the cotton seed oil market again had a violent break this morning under outside liquidation, but shorts and commission houses were good buyers of late positions, and toward noon the whole market turned quiet and steady.

COTTON GOSSIP.

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third dryest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Clarke amendment was likely t be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas, with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showery weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scatterd showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi DeLata Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record; first bale in 1902 being received August 10. This is about six days earlier than the average."

Temperatures: Galveston, clear and warm, good shower last night; Houston clear, 76; San Antonio clear, 82; Taylor, clear, 85; Dalas, clear, 85; Fort Worth, clear, 84; Sherman, clear, 80; Denison, clear, 82; Paris, clear, 80; Texarkana clear, 76; Little Rock, clear, 78; Oklahoma City, clear, 81; Chickasha, clear, 81; Muskogee, clear, 88; McAlester, clear, 87; rain yesterday. Amite, clear, 69; Baton Rouge, clear, 85; Lafayette, cloudy, 73; Donalsonville, clear, 72; Alexandria, clear, 75; Franklin, cloudy, 74; Morgan City, cloudy, warm; Robeline, clear, 69; Grand Cane, clear, 71; Minden, clear, 69; Lake Charles, cloudy, 69; Helena, part cloudy, warm; Hattiesburg, clear, 80.

Rainfall: Taylor, .22; Galveston, .42; Palestine, .01; Fort Smith, .02; New Orleans, .24; Mobile, .04; Nashville, .04; Atlanta, .46; Wilmington, .01; Houston, .94

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Were the cotton market freed from the menace of hostile legislation it would probably do better now that crop damage reports are coming in from the west in great numbers. But, as matters stand, the markets reflect a heavy tone even in the presence of a more active demand for forward export freight room. Big crop people adhere to their belief that the drouth affected area in the west does not cover a great amount of territory and that even the dry region has produced crops in dryer years than this.

"Nevertheless, the Weather Bureau stresses the bad state of affairs resulting from lack of moisture in Oklahoma and Texas, and the detailed reports from 198 Texas stations for July show a rainfull deficiency of 1.62 inches, and a temperature excess of 1.2 degrees over the July normal.

"On the other hand, print cloths are now quoted at 3⅝c, or ⅝ of a cent below the quotations at this time last year, which is equal to about 2½c a pound on raw cotton. But raw cotton values are now very little lower than they were at this time last year. Meanwhile, trade attention continues to center on the weather in the west.

Memphis wires: "Semi-monthly condition report of J. B. Turner shows following condition on August 9 with comparisons to Government's figures on July 25:

"North Carolina, 82 against 77; South Carolina, 82 against 75; Georgia, 80 against 76; Alabama, 80 against 79; Mississippi, 78 against 77; Tennessee, 87 against 90; Arkansas, 85 against 87; Louisiana, 78 against 79; Oklahoma, 72 against 61; Texas, 74 against 81; United States 77.8 against 79.6.

By Government July 25: "The status of the crop is now just the reverse of that of the early season in that higher conditions are shown in the Eastern and Atlantic States, which fact is due to exceptionally favorable weather there and severe drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, operating to advance the one and pull down the other. It is seldom that cotton maintains at this date the luxuriant growth and vigorous life that is characteristic of the plant in Georgia and the Carolinas."

BANK OF LAFAYETTE TO INCREASE CAPITAL STOCK

LAFAYETTE, GA., Aug. 13.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Bank of Lafayette to-day it was unanimously voted to increase the capital stock from $50,000 to $60,000; the additional 100 shares to be sold for $180, which is a little bit less than the actual book value of the stock.

Of the above sale $10,000 will go to capital, $5,000 to surplus, and $3,000 to undivided profits. This will give this bank a capital and surplus of $100,000 and undivided profits of about $10,000.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—The market shows same old nervousness over Texas weather. A few light rains fell in eastern Texas, but as a whole the State remains quite dry and hot. The semi-monthly condition reports show heavy losses in the Southwest, but improvement in the East, nearly offsetting the losses. Likely that drouth must continue or rains come or some setback occur in the East to move the market far away from 11 cents.

TEXAS COMPANY ATTRACTIVE ISSUE

Canadian Pacific and Harrimans Also Higher—Sentiment Becoming Optimistic.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ⅝ to 119⅝, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¼, for a gain of 1¼.

After opening with a gain of ⅛, Southern Pacific went to 91⅜, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154¾ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ½, American Smelting ⅝, Bethlehem Steel ½, United States Rubber common ⅛, Western Union ½, Utah Copper ⅝, Steel common ⅛, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ⅜. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Sentiment is becoming very optimistic and the large interests are increasing their holdings as the stock market advances. There is more activity in this market by the banking people than we have seen in many months. They realize that stocks are low based on the return they yield.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 99 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

Price-Current says: "Corn in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and a large part of Illinois and parts of Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee is beyond restoration. The crop north of these States is in good shape, and rains have been sufficient to insure fairly good crops. The crop at best will be fully 100,000,000 bushels under last year and may drop below that. Spring wheat has delayed ripening somewhat, and bright weather is now desired to round out the filling period and provide for harvest."

"Corn—The map shows light rains in parts of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois and Ohio Valley. No rain in Kansas where high temperatures continue. There seems to be very little indication of any setback, for when one lot of buyers liquidates new ones appear.

"Oats—The market shows a firm undertone, with a good class of buying on weak spots.

"Provisions—There was further liquidation yesterday, which caused severe breaks."

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1912.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

.:. BEAUTY .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade,
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

FIGHT OVER RE-ENACTING OF CONLEY STORY

Dorsey Resists Effort of the Defense to Show Negro's Narrative Impossible

BATTLE TO IMPEACH SULZER WON

New York Assembly Votes After All-Night Session to Try Executive as Grafter.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblymen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chair of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same allignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. This no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the vice-President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of hes health.

Not One Petticoat For Shivering Girl

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Modern fashions that have ruled out the petticoat and a thief caused Miss May Leonard to walk eight blocks clad in shoes and stockings and an extremely light raincoat. She went bathing at Clarendon Beach. Some one rifled her locker while she was in the water. They left nothing but shoes and stockings. Her bathing suit was rented and the beach officials would not permit her to wear it home.

Miss Leonard asked every girl in the dressing room for the loan of a petticoat. Every one of them was wearing a skirt that permitted no petticoat. The only garment she could borrow was a raincoat.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

Philadelphia Girl Is Ty Cobb in Skirts

PHILADELPHIA, P., Aug. 13.—This city has a new baseball heroine, Dorothy Moylan, eight years old, played shortstop on the girls' team of the Germantown Boys' Club and accepted eleven chances without an error.

But more remarkable was her record with the bat. This diminutive girl made two home runs, three two-baggers and two singles in seven trips to the plate. One of her home runs came with the bases full.

Sleepers Near Death In Burning Residence

Fire which spread rapidly forced Eugene R. Barmore, members of his family and boarders at his residence, 215 Capitol Avenue, to flee for their lives early Wednesday morning. They were compelled to leave the burning house in their night attire.

The fire was discovered by a neighbor, who rushed to the Barmore residnece and beat upon the door until he had awakened the occupants. The roof and part of the second floor were destroyed.

Dozing Man Killed By Painted Face Joke

YONKERS, N. Y., Aug. 13.—While William Colbert, a carpenter, was dozing in a lunchroom here, a joker touched up the sleeper's countenance with shoe polish.

When Colbert awoke, someone held a mirror before his face. As soon as he recognized himself, Colbert burst out laughing and fell dead.

TAX BILL IS PASSED; FOES IN NEW WAR

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several Foes Drop Fight.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote seesawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Henderson Rushes to Capitol.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

200 Want Ad Fiances Swindled, Is Charge

PRINCETON, IND., Aug. 13.—More than 200 men are said to have been victims of the alleged marriage frauds worked by Miss Ora Mabel Farris, 35 years old, assisted by her father and mother. The three were held to-day, charged with using the mails to defraud.

Using the name of Susie Meyers, the postal authorities charge Miss Farris would advertise for a husband in widely scattered newspapers, invite correspondence, become engaged and then ask for money to come to her fiance.

10-Year-Old Girl to Christen the Nevada

RENO, NEV., Aug. 13.—Eleanor Anne Siebert, ten years old, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Siebert, of this city, and a niece of Governor Oddie, has been selected to act as sponsor at the launching of the battleship Nevada, now nearing completion at the Fore River Works at Quincy, Mass.

Little Miss Siebert will break a bottle of wine over the prow of the ship as she names it after her State about October 1.

Knee' in Streets To Pray for Rain

MARSHALL, MO., Aug. 13.—In the hope of checking the disastrous drouth that has done great damage in this section, prayers were not only offered in all the churches here, but citizens knelt in the streets and prayed for rain.

Following church services, at which pastors called on their congregations to offer personal prayers for rain, many business men, while walking home, knelt in the street and offered up prayer.

AFTER FIERCE CLASH OF ATTORNEYS, JUDGE RESERVES HIS RULING

A hot legal battle was waged between the attorneys in the Frank case Wednesday over the admission of testimony relating to a dramatic reproduction, movement by movement, of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as described by the negro, Jim Conley.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was carried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to re-enact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

Numerous authorities were cited by both sides. Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 30 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed to-morrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Dorsey—No, he hasn't a right to shoot in statements.

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there no certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

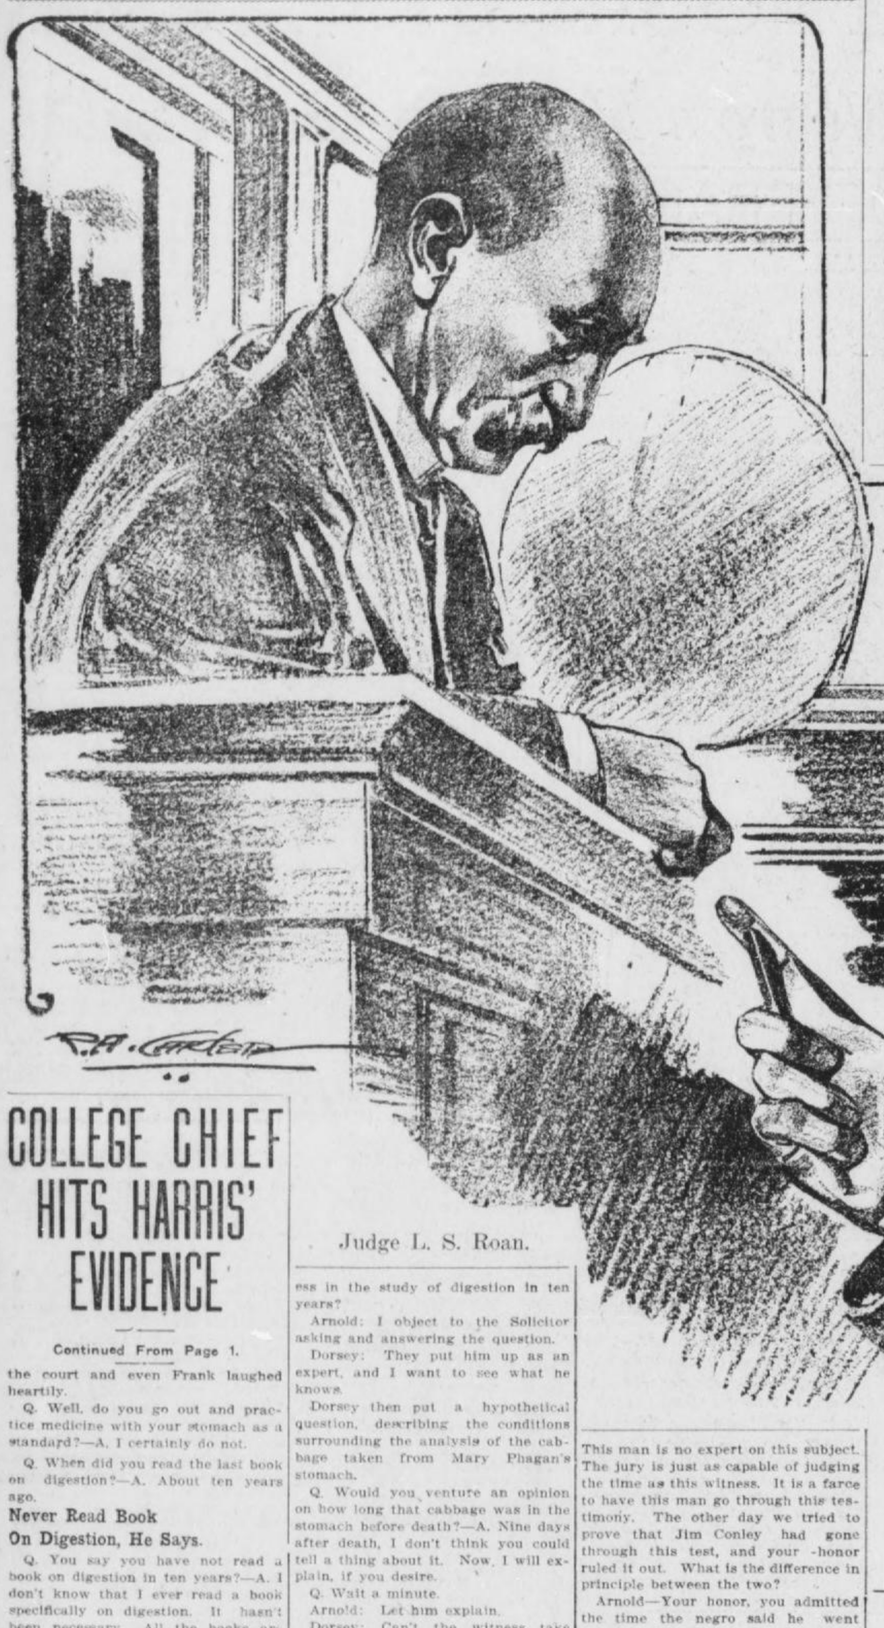

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed heartily.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any progress in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the State can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

Conley Wraps up Body; Gets Frank to Aid Him.

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together, and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the levator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Tells of Leaving Cellar And Ride in Elevator.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank stumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office, Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quite a whiel.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches, takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley box of cigarettes. Conley light cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes, Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Frank: "There is $200." Conley takes money and looks at it a little bit.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, can't you pay another dollar when that watchman comes, I will pay him myself.

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big, fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right. Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you. Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home. Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

Dorsey Objects to Statement.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Attorney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up, angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix of Gwinett County was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer of Gwinett County was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer of Gwinett County was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Gwinett County.

Q. What is your business?—A. I am a farmer.

Q. How many acres of land do you own?—A. I never counted them.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 800 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He nett County, who had known C. B. declared he was a farmer of Gwin-Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Leaps From Pier to Save Society Woman

MOBILE, Aug. 13.—Mrs. G. Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ward, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians in Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station, where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

JUSTICE IS AIM OF BOTH SIDES IN TRIAL OF FRANK; SQUARE DEAL IS CERTAIN

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will be prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Many Jump at Conclusions.

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

STATE WILL CALL MORE WITNESSES IN REBUTTAL; DEFENSE BUILDS UP ALIBI

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after FranK arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mafy Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

Snores Punctuate Oratory.

The debate which led up to the vote was marked by a dramatic feature, but even fiery oratory could not keep awake the spectators who filled the galleries. The most interested were the women, who remained awake until the final roll call. A number of the men slept in their chairs and a buzz of snores proclaimed the superiority of slumber over forensic.

Majority Leader Levy made the final address before the vote was taken and he blended eloquence with facts in a convincing manner. Mr. Levy read a great part of the testimony taken by the Frawley committee before he declared in solemn tones that, in his mind, William Sulzer should be impeached in the name of the Commonwealth and common honor."

Mr. Levy denied that the impeachment proceedings were being rushed by Tammany leaders, declaring that under the Constitution the impeachment court can not sit until 30 days have elapsed.

Assemblyman Schaah, a Progressive who has been supporting the Governor's direct primary bill, supported Mr. Sulzer in a speech.

No Work for Police Guard.

It was expected that there would be a demonstration and police were on hand to quell disorder, but nothing of an exciting nature occurred.

Eugene Lamb Richards, counsel for the Frawley committee, will probably appear against Mr. Sulzer in court, owing to his familiarity with the case.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges.

"He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Tammany's Hand Is Seen.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to susthin the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

No arguments sufficiently strong to sustain the charge of the Frawley committee were made on the floor, they declare, and that Governor Sulzer will fight back through the medium of exposures of prominent Tammany legislators who so far have been successful in the first round to accomplish his downfall, is also strongly hinted at.

The impeached Governor will have plenty of time to dig up damaging evidence, they declare, and will do his utmost to bring calumny home to those whom he has heretofore more than hinted were grafters, who must be driven out of the party.

More Scandal is Promised.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacremento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand today.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

Millionaire Brewer To Labor on Roads

ST LOUIS, MO., Aug. 13.—St. Louisans who have country homes in St. Louis County are planning house parties for August 20 and 21, when the guests will be expected to work on the roads on "Good Roads Day," set aside by the Governor.

Edwin Lemp, the young millionaire who temperarily has retired from the brewing business, and who has become a farmer, has sent out invitations for an overall party, to be held at his country home.

BOUT FOR ED CLABBY.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Eddie Clabby, brother of Jimmy Clabby, one of the claimants of the middleweight championship, has been matched to box ten rounds with Billy Walters, formerly of the Naval station at Lake Bluff, Ill., at Hammond, Ind., on Labor Day afternoon. The weight for the contest will be 142 pounds six hours before the contest.

HUERTA SHOWS CONCILIATORY SPIRIT

Radicals Call Present Quiet Calm Before Storm—Drunken Students Jeer Lind.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 13.—Following the conference between Special American Envoy John Lind and the Mexican Foreign Minister, Manuel Gamboa, the belief prevailed here today that President Huerta would adopt a conciliatory attitude toward the United States, realizing the hopelessness of trying to combat the vast power of Mexico's big neighbor.

Callers at the National Palace declared that in substance President Huerta had said:

"While Mexico resents interference even from a friendly power in her domestic affairs, nevertheless we do not feel that we are in any way being coerced by the United States. We will make further protest against any efforts of Mr. Lind to settle affairs in this republic if he attempts to do so, but such action on our part will not be of a bellicose nature."

Lind Makes Report.

Mr. Lind is in constant communication with Washington and has notified the State Department of his safe arrival here and of the apparent absence of any anti-American feeling.

It is understood the Carranza rebels in Northeastern Mexico have communicated a desire to Mr. Lind to meet their representatives so that representations may be made in behalf of formal recognition of the Carranza forces as belligerents.

The Foreign Office to-day denied having any official knowledge of Japan's declination to recognize Felix Diaz as a special envoy. In fact, Mexico was assured before Senor Diaz left Mexico that he would be received in an official capacity.

A group of students from the National Military Academy, who evidently had indulged too freely in Mexican rum, attempted to make a hostile demonstration around the Hotel Lascurain, where Mr. Lind and his party are staying. They were driven away by rurales.

Calm Before Storm.

The situation here has remained quiet, but radicals among the supporters of Huerta declare it is only the calm before the storm. Conservatives are counseling Huerta not to antagonize the United States. A delegation of planters called at the National Palace to-day and presented a petition about as follows:

"Having the good of Mexico at heart and desiring to attract foreign capital for the upbuilding of the Republic, we ask President Huerta to maintain the friendliest relations with the United States and not to take action of any nature whatsoever which might offend our peaceful allies."

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "'He jests at scars who never felt a wound,'" she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me oaver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend oaver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till nearly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent them up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much. & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice. What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was vary sweet of her. You see, Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons & you cudent make me believe thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Misses Mace.

I know it, sed Pa, I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interdooce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where do the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

"Wal," drawled the other, "I dunno. I hain't found it yet!"

"No, Fopson. I said you were an uncommon ass."

"Aw, that's different. I cawn't stand having anybody call me common, y'know."

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

CIVILIZED people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

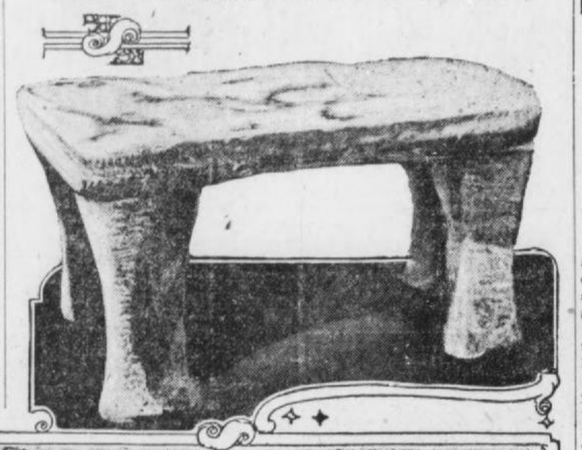

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

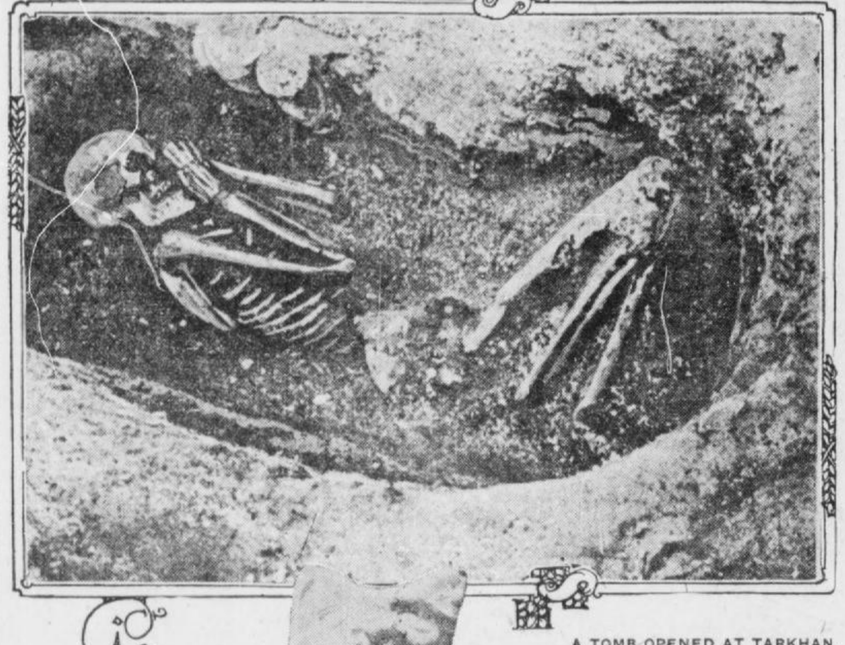

"Halloa!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

ANIMAL FIGURES AT MEMPHIS.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely owled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed.
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and considerateness. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

With the Boy.

Mother—What? With those ragged trousers!

Willie—No; with the boy next door.

CONDENSED BILLING

Is Simple on an L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

Condensed billing has been adopted by many business houses on account of its time-saving features.

The L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter

is particularly adapted to this service and requires no extra attachments.

The pressure roll lock and release device, the tabulator, the back spacer and the paper gauge make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter a complete condensed billing machine.

These conveniences are part of the typewriter—not attachments—and there is no additional cost.

Write for free booklet, "The Measure of Worth." It explains how ball bearings make the L. C. Smith & Bros. typewriter the easiest running and most durable writing machine.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar, which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a flimsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. "No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly. "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card.

"We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her pencilled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead,
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of which you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the rest of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four toothbrushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service, commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; "but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

C. THOMPSON FACES PROUGH IN LAST GAME

By Joe Agler.

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 13.—Carl Thompson is going to get the final shot at the Barons in Birmingham, and Carl is going to do his level best to lick his old teammates. Carl will be on his mettle in this contest, as Prough, the Barons' celebrated right-hander and a sure trial horse in the Big Show next year, has been saved for the last game with the Crackers.

Chapman will catch, and you may be sure we will all do our best to pull the game out for Carl. A few days back, we wouldn't have been very hopeful against a bird like Prough. But in the last two games we have been hammering the ball savagely, and it didn't seem to make any difference who was slinging it. Moley has used up all his pitchers except Prough in the last two games. And maybe we can keep up the good work.

* * *

DENT had an easy game yesterday and let up after the fifth inning, which was the proper thing to do, as we had the game well in hand. Hardgrove was easy and Gregory was no improvement. Evans got into the going after our tongues were hanging out with running around the bases, and got away pretty well.

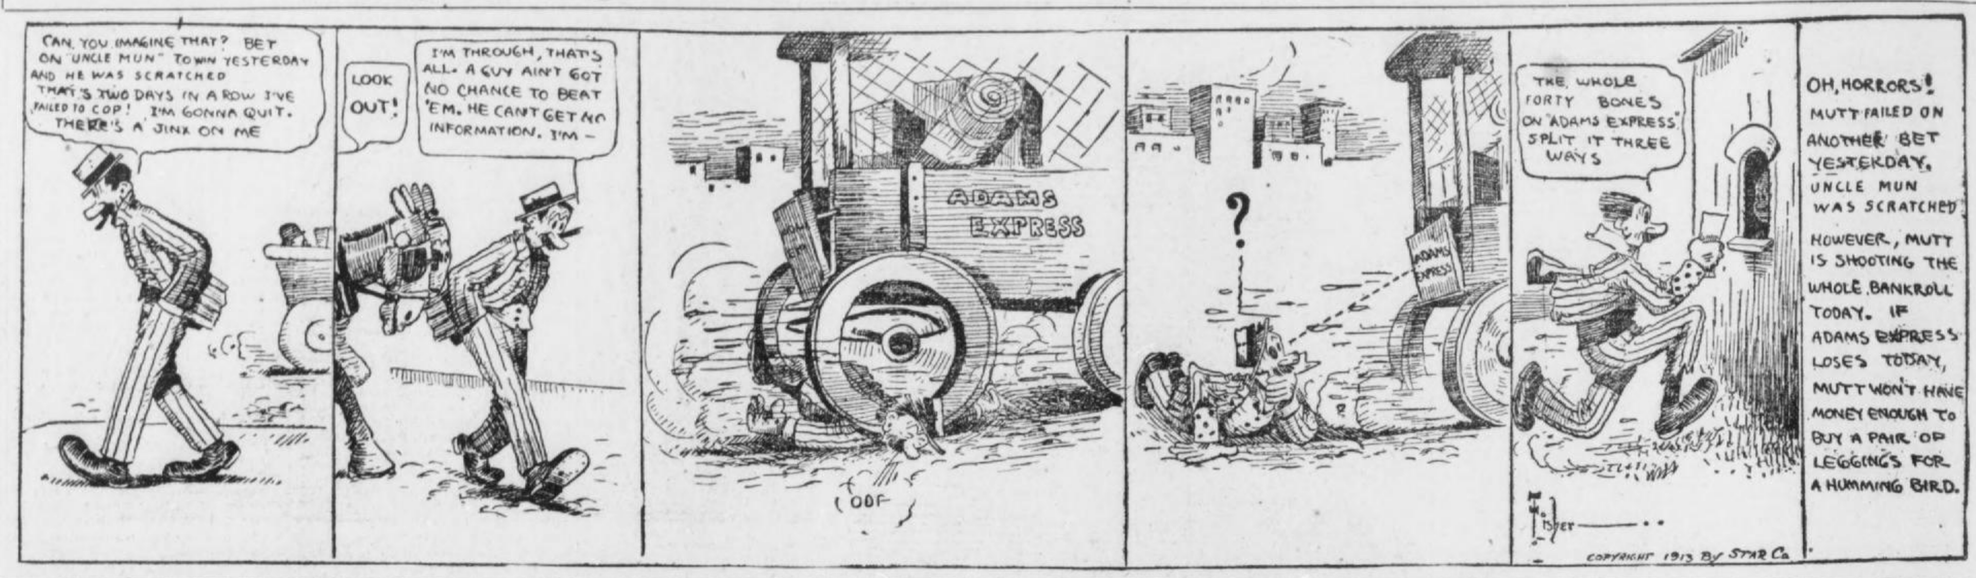

Having taken the first two games straight, we are going to fight hard to make it a clean sweep, so as to go home in the best possible shape for the long and decisive home series.

* * *

MANAGER SMITH has shipped Price, Dent and Conzelman home to rest up for the furious grind that starts Thursday with a doubleheader against the Lookouts. They will get a good rest and should be in fine shape for the critical part of the campaign of 1913. With Thompson, Voss and Love we should be able to worry along through the game today, especially as we are hoping we won't need anybody but Carl.

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V.
The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles in heat and dust, but the allenists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knock-out—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONsistency in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

* * *

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

* * *

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georges Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are floundering. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are asking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew,— not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking speed had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

* * *

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gitting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

REVENGE.
(A Baseball Tragedy in Three Acts.)

ACT I.

Ike Swatt, the mighty baseball star,
was smitten with a dame
Who owned a flock of lucre and an
old and honored name,
But when he offered her his hand
she coldly spurned the same.

ACT II.

It was the final inning and they needed one tie.
Our Hero ambled to the plate and
saw three strikes go by.
The game was lost while she looked on with murder in her eye.

ACT III.

For she had bet her fortune on the
prowess of his bat,
And when he took the final strike it
left the poor girl flat.
"Revenge!" she cried, in accents
wild, "I'll marry him for that!"

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

TRUTH IS STRANGER THAN FICTION.

A heavyweight fighter named Flynn
Was endowed with an ironclad chynn.
He didn't much care
If they walloped him there
Just as long as he gathered the tynn.

Possibly some one can tell us whether the man who picks out the names for motor boats is a victim of the hop habit or is just naturally that way.

The press agent tells us that Mike Schreck is down to 177 pounds. But he does not tell us whether Mike has amputated h isiegs or his chirst.

WHY?

"I came from California," remarked
a Western gent,
"But strange to say, I never won a
tennis tournament."
"It is a noble sight!" he said—"the
river marathon!
It is a noble sight to see the athletes
fighting on.
It is a noble sight to see them stem
the sullen tide,
But why do they prefer to swim when
there are boats to ride?"

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

Southern Merchants' Purse.

Heats, one mile; final, two miles.

First Heat—Jock McNeil, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, :43.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Wilmer Richards, second. Time, :42.

Third Heat—George Lockner, first; Harry Glenn, second. Time, :43.

Final—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:26.

Three-Cornered Match Race.

Best two out of three heats. First heat, one mile; second heat, two; third, three.

First Heat—Morty Graves, first; Harry Swartz, second. Time, :43 1-5.

Second Heat—Morty Graves, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 1:29.

Third Heat—Harry Swartz, first; Jock McNeil, second. Time, 2:12 1-5.

Heats, two miles; final, five miles.

First Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second. Time, 1:27 3-5.

Second Heat—George Renal, first; Freddie Luther, second. Time, 1:26 1-5.

Final—George Lockner, first; Richards won the first heat and George Renal, second; Henry Lewis, third. Time, 3:39 4-5.

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California school boy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-3.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-2.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement had the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

Chicago Boy Rules Favorite Over Fighting Carpenter From Cedar Rapids

WHITE BATTLES WHITNEY IN AUDITORIUM TO-NIGHT

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

WHEN the gong clangs that sends Charley White, of Chicago, against Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, in their 10-round struggle at the Auditorium-Armory to-night, Atlanta patrons of fisticana will have the opportunity of witnessing their first battle that will have a weighty bearing on a world's title.

White is not a champion, but fistic experts the length and breadth of the United States are unanimous in declaring him the most dangerous man in the lightweight division. Beyond doubt he is the hardest hitter in the division.

Nor can Whitney be called a champion, but he is universally regarded as one of the most reliable ringmen that the 133-pound class knows. He has yet to feel a knock-out punch. He has yet to be knocked down.

Both men have appeared before in Atlanta rings. Two more popular boxers have never been introduced to an Atlanta audience. In White's only battle here he stopped Jake Abel, a boy who Atlanta believed had the earmarks of a coming champion.

Abel had been beaten but once before in an Atlanta fight and then Frank Whitney shaded him in a 10-round affair.

There have been shady battles galore staged here in Atlanta, but whenever Frank Whitney was scheduled to box, the fans knew the bout was on the level, and Charley White is too near the championship for him to countenance even a suggestion of crookedness.

• • •

IF White should stop Whitney in their affair to-night, his reputation will be so enhanced that he will be a drawing card of monumental proportions throughout the country, for Whitney has fought successfully in every town in the Middle West and in New Orleans. If Whitney should stop White, he will have proved what he has contended all along, that he has been underrated by the experts and has a right to a high place among the top-notchers.

• • •

CONSIDER the records of the men. White has met such men as Morrie Bloom, Frankie Conley, Abe Attell, Joe Mandot, Danny Webster, Boyo Driscoll, Johnny Kilbane, Tommy Dixon, Johnny Dundee, Owen Moran, Young Shuerue, Pal Moore, Ad Wolgast and Joe Thomas. With the single exception of the Danny Webster battle his record is clean. He was outpointed by Webster in twenty rounds in a coast battle when he first started.

And most of his victories have been by knock-outs. Joe Thomas twice felt the force of his sleep punch. The great Owen Moran fell before it and so did a half-score of others.

• • •

WHITNEY, though an older man, has been boxing a shorter time than White. He went into the ring game to earn a better living for his invalid wife than he could with saw and hammer. He took the glove business as a vacation, and he has tried as hard to succeed in it as ever did financier in conducting the big affairs of a great commercial firm.

Whitney has boxed Jerry Murphy, Grover Hayes, Tommy O'Keefe, Battling Nelson, Clarence English and many other tough boys, and most of his engagements have resulted in victories for him.

• • •

WITH these two men matched, Atlanta fans should see as good an engagement as is staged anywhere in this broad land.

White will probably rule a favorite. His defeat of Abel has convinced Atlanta fans of his cleverness and hitting powers, but Whitney will not be without a horde of supporters. Whitney is always coming in, an excellent fighter at close range, a cool and effective ring general, and a capable man on the defensive.

White will probably weigh about 128, while Whitney has agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 o'clock this afternoon. There is no doubt about his ability to make the weight. When he had finished his work yesterday afternoon, before an admiring throng at the Atlanta Athletic Club, he weighed exactly 133 1-2 pounds and he says he will be at this poundage this afternoon. Whitney has not had to dry out and is sure to be at top strength when he enters the ring.

White, after strenuous work with sparring partners in Chicago, went to Gilbraith Springs, Tenn., to complete his training in the mountain air of that section.

• • •

BUT the White-Whitney battle will not be the only affair to rouse the enthusiasm of the fans. As a curtain-raiser, there will be a six-round go between those ancient enemies, Mike Saul and Terry Nelson. Saul was to have met Eddie Hanlon, the promising Atlanta welterweight, in a ten-round affair, but in training, Hanlon had a gash opened on his chin and blood poisoning set in. Yesterday his doctor refused to allow him to go on and a substitute bout was arranged.

Saul and Nelson boxed to a draw at their last meeting and they gave the crowd a run for their money. Their next meeting is sure to be a whirlwind affair.

ANOTHER grudge battle will be that of Kid Young, the newsboy champion, and Charley Lee. The last time these boys met, Young lost on a foul when it seemed that Lee had him all but out. Young went to work earnestly to regain his laurels and has put in some hard licks. He is confident that he will halt Lee this time, but Lee is just as confident that he will win.

• • •

A BANNER crowd will witness the event. Delegates to the Southern Merchants' Convention will attend by hundreds, while the great nature of the card is sure to pack the house.

Tickets can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

WHAT WHITE AND WHITNEY SAY

By CHARLEY WHITE

I am confident of stopping Whitney. Of course, should he cover up and run I will have a hard time getting over a decisive punch. But they tell me that he is a great mixer. Well, if he will only swap with me I'll guarantee to stop him in about five rounds. I am better to-day than I was the night I stopped Jake Abel here.

By FRANK WHITNEY

If White thinks he is going to stop me he has another guess coming. He is NOT going to knock me out. In fact, I am confident that I will win the decision. I am hitting better now than ever in my life. I am sore over some loose talk that White's manager, Nate Lewis, pulled in Chicago, and I am going to square accounts with Mr. Lewis by giving his boy the finest lacing ever handed out in a ring.

RINGSIDE NEWS

To-night's battle between Frank Whitney and Charley White threatens to be one of those old-fashioned grudge affairs. Neither boy has much love for the other and it would not surprise the writer to see the bout end long before the tenth round.

• • •

The Charley Lee-Kid Young scrap should also be full of thrills. Ever since Lee won from Young on a foul in seven rounds the boys have been arch enemies. They are scheduled to go over the ten-round route.

• • •

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

• • •

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

• • •

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

• • •

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

• • •

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night. Frankie Burns is to be Jack's opponent and the battle is to be staged at Denver, Colo.

• • •

Carl Morris is the champion lemon picker of the country. Morris is to be sent against Fred Lachlan on Friday night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

• • •

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times but the locals clearly had the class.

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More
What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

• • •

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozles* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

Weasand—That part of the human anatomy most in danger during a sword-swallowing performance.

• • •

WE note with mingled emotions the addition of an operatic star to the Cracker troupe.

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

• • •

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a happy juncture.

• • •

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

• • •

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

• • •

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

LAJOIE HAS BEEN IN BIG LEAGUES SEVENTEEN YEARS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—Seventeen years a major and still one of the foremost players of the game is the proud record of Napoleon Lajoie, second baseman of the Naps, who, on Saturday, will celebrate the seventeenth anniversary of his entrance into the big leagues.

TO HAVE "REGULAR" PLANT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The New York American League team's new grounds will be located at 200th and Broadway and Exterior streets. The grandstand will be 665 feet on 225th street and 495 1-2 feet on 227th street, extending the entire block on Broadway end and will be 52 feet deap. The field stand will be erected at the Exterior street end and will be 264 by 54 1-2 feet. These stands will form a stadium, and the cost of the grandstand has been estimated at $250,000 and the field stand at $12,000. The stands will be of brick and terra cotta.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

BAR IS OPPOSING ROAN FOR NEW JUDGESHIP

Fulton County Lawyers Ask Governor to Give Place to an Atlanta Man.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar who have protested to the Governor, it is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Pays Annual Visit To Tomb of Grant

COLUMBUS, Aug. 13.—Friends in Columbus have received messages from Dr. E. B. M. Browne, now of New York, but formerly pastor of Temple B'Nai-Israel in this city, that he has just paid his annual visit to the tomb of General U. S. Grant, it being the twenty-seventh anniversary of the burial of the former President.

Dr. Browne is the sole survivor of the pallbearers who officiated at the funeral of General Grant. His daughter, Mrs. Dave Goldberg, now resides here.

Turks Threaten New War on Bulgarians

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 13.—The Turkish Porte to-day threatened to declare war against Bulgaria unless Bulgarian soldiers ceased their slaughter of defenseless Turkish peasants.

According to reports sent in from Turkish military officers in Adrianopl, many Mussulman men and women are being killed daily in Thrace.

State Urged to Pay For Warship Silver By House Committee

Payment of Georgia's donation to the silver service presented to the battleship Georgia, which has been deferred six years, was recommended Tuesdaye by a vote of 5 to 5, by the House Committee on Appropriations.

It was the overwhelming sentiment of the committee that the debt was an honorable one and should be paid at once. Charles W. Crankshaw, the Atlanta jeweler who has waited patiently for his money, appeared in person before the committee and read a brief history of the gift. It was at the request of the late Joseph M. Terrell, then Governor of Georgia, that the gift was made. The Governor presented the silver service on Georgia Day at the Jamestown Exposition.

The outstanding amount voted paid by the Appropriations Committee was $1,300. The total cost of the service was $7,515. Georgia cities contributed.

Diaz Ignored Because Of Diplomatic Error

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—A cablegram to a local Japanese newspaper from Tokio to-day said:

"As the Government of Mexico has ignored the diplomatic usage of the international intercourse etiquette by sending an envoy to Japan without consulting and making arrangements with the Japanese Government for the mission of General Felix Diaz, Japan advised the Government of Mexico that there is necessity of careful consultations beforehand."

McAdoo Belongs to Buttermilk Brigade

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The Wilson administration just can not agree on the subject of drink. Further disruption came to light to-day with the discovery that William G. McAdoo, Secretary of the Treasury, is a buttermilk "fiend."

William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, insists on grape juice. President Wilson drinks orange juice.

Tuberculosis Spread By Paris Street Dogs

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, Aug. 13.—The French Academy of Medicine is discussing the spreading of tuberculosis by dogs.

It is estimated that from 12,000 to 18,000 tubercular dogs are running loose in the Paris streets out of a total dog population of 200,000.

It is found that dogs give tuberculosis to cats.

CHURCHES WAKE TO CHANCE AT $1,000 GOLD

Several Organizations and Individuals Start in to Win Georgian's Want Ad Contest.

"How many organizations are going in for that $1,000 in gold?" asked the chairman of a church committee of the Want Ad Man. The committee had been appointed to take up the entry of the church in the Want Ad Contest inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian, and was making plans to go out and win.

"Why, quite a number and more coming," explained the Want Ad Man. "But the more the better for everybody.

"You see the more entered the more the vote is split up, just as when four or five candidates run for Mayor. It gives everybody a better chance to win. And remember, there's $500 worth of furniture of your own selection for second prize."

The Want Ad Contest has interested hundreds of Atlantans and the office of the Want Ad Man, fourth floor of the Foote & Davies Building, is one of the busiest places in the city this week. Contestants are calling to have details explained to them, to receive order blanks and other equipment, to have a chat with the Want Ad Man and gain tips on how to succeed.

The announcement of the complete list of prizes aroused new interest. The two grand prizes, a five-passenger automobile and a double tour to California and return with all expenses paid, have made everybody buckle down to work. And besides these, there are five prizes in each of four classes, men's, women's, boys' and girls', so that everybody has a chance to win something worth while. And best of all, there isn't any guesswork or gamble. It is simply a businesslike proposition in which energy brings a certain return.

There is still time to enter the contest. The Want Ad Man will tell you all about it if you'll see him this week.

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Auditorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

Wife of Secretary Is Champion Whistler

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13. — Mrs. Josephus Daniels, the talented wife of the Secretary of the Navy, is to-day considered the champion whistler of the Cabinet circle. Mrs. Daniels learned this unusual accomplishment from her sons.

When she drives down to coax the Secretary from his desk these Mexican days she summons him by giving a sweet high whistle in a code both understand.

Soldiers Shoot Wild; Blacks Fear Bullets

AUGUSTA, GA., Aug. 13.—The new rifle range of the local military companies will have to be abandoned unless better precautions are taken to protect human lives. An injunction is threatened by W. H. Rennison and other property owners in the vicinity because the soldiers are said to be shooting recklessly. Negroes in the neighborhood have stopped work on the farms for fear of being killed.

FIGHT TO RECOVER ZACHRY CHILDREN

Case Will Be Taken to Richmond Superior Court—Divorce Proceedings Do Not Interfere.

AUGUSTA, Aug. 13.—Attorney C. E. Dunbar announces that he will bring action before Judge Henry C. Hammond, of the Richmond Superior Court, for the recovery of the Zachry children.

By a decision of the Supreme Court yesterday Judge Hammond must hear the evidence in the case. The entire matter is, therefore, reopened, and Dunbar believes that he will recover the children on his next attempt.

Ordinary Walton heard the case at first, and he decided that Zachry should have the custody of the children. Subsequently divorce proceedings were brought by Dunbar for Mrs. Zachry, and he asked Judge Hammond to hear the case and decide whether the father or the mother should have the custody of the children.

Judge Hammond declined on the ground that Ordinary Walton had already decided the matter. Dunbar reminded him that at the time the matter was heard before Walton divorce proceedings had not been instituted.

Hammond said it made no difference and that he had no right to hear it. The Supreme Court has ruled that he had and has the right.

President Urges Action on Opium

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—President Wilson to-day sent to the Senate a special message urging legislation concerning the opium traffic in conformity with the report made by Hamilton Wright on the opium conference held at The Hague.

The House passed a bill which meets President Wilson's views, as outlined in this report.

4 Shot Fatally in I. W. W. Riot in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Aug. 13.—None of the four persons wounded by revolver bullets in last night's rioting between citizens and Industrial Workers of the World will die, according to doctors to-day.

The trouble was brought on by the waving of an American flag in the face of an I. W. W. orator.

KILLS HIMSELF IN FEAR OF INSANITY

A. S. Brown, 52, of Jacksonville, Drinks Carbolic Acid on Downtown Corner—Leaves Note.

Declaring in a note found by the side of his body that he was going insane and had suffered for years as "nobody but Noah of the Scriptures" has suffered, A. S. Brown, 52 years old, of Jacksonville, Fla., committed suicide at Hunter and Whitehall streets Tuesday night about 11 o'clock by drinking carbolic acid.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. The body was taken to Bloomfield's morgue and will be held until his relatives, who are supposed to live at No. 112 Jackson avenue, Jacksonville, Fla., are heard from.

On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it so long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Amusement Park for Millionaires' Row

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—William G. Rockefeller and other wealthy New Yorkers, who make up the exclusive millionaire's colony at Greenwich, Conn., are sorely troubled over the purchase, by Lebrati Brothers, of a twenty-acre tract of land next to the country estates of the millionaires, which will be used as a site for an amusement park.

The purchase was made without the knowledge of Rockefeller and his exclusive neighbors.

1,500-Pound Shark Captured in Trap

GLOUCESTER, MASS., Aug. 13.—A 1,500-pound shark, 25 feet long, which was captured in the Milk Island trap by Albert Story and killed, after a bitter battle, is at Story's Wharf where it attracts much attention.

Boston Judge for Free Divorce Law

BOSTON, MASS., Aug. 13.—"There should be a more lenient divorce law, if not one actually patterned on the free divorce of Norway," Judge Albert E. Avery, of the Quincy and Braintree District Court declares.

"There would have to be the proper financial arrangements if divorce were to be freer," he said, "and where there are young children their welfare and disposition should come before the inclinations of the parents.

"But it is unspeakable to make two people live together if they have ceased to care the right way."

Women Join to Aid 'Wets' in Chicago

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—An organization of women to aid the wet forces of Chicago in future municipal campaigns will be effected to-night when the Women's Liberty League of Chicago will come into existence.

More than 10,000 men and women were expected to attend the first meeting of the proposed organization at Pilsner Park.

Missouri Mob Hunts Little Girl's Slayer

LEXINGTON, MO., Aug. 13.—More than 1,000 men to-day are hunting Goldie Winkfield, a negro, determined to lynch him for the murder of 13-year-old Estelle Potter, daughter of Newton Potter, a wealthy farmer, who employed Winkfield.

The child's body was found in a ravine.

Mania to Own Auto Blamed for Slaying

CHAMPAIGN, ILL., Aug. 13.—The police to-day are hunting Gus T. Pennman, charged with the murder of Harold A. Shaw, a student at the University of Illinois and the son of one of the wealthiest citizens of Urbana, Ill. The murder was committed, the police charge, because of Pennman's uncontrollable mania to own the big racing car which Shaw's father had bought.

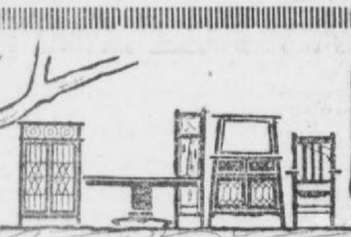

Pennman disappeared in the racing car on Monday. Shaw's body was found last night in a clump of bushes near Philo, in Champaign County.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries cimmitted in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State Courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 102 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 209 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

Massacre of Rebels Continues in China

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

SHANGHAI, Aug. 13.—Government troops are showing no quarter to the southern rebels.

The forts at Woo Sung were captured by the Federals to-day and nearly all the rebel defenders were killed.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Corn showed a further fractional advance at the opening this morning, but the market failed to display as much activity as seen since the present higher price campaign was started. The greater portion of the corn belt received rains, the exceptions being Kansas, Oklahoma and part of Missouri. Temperatures in the Southwest were again higher, and the belief that further deterioration will be seen prevails among the trade here. Argentina shipments for the week are expected to be larger, and an estimate sent out places the exportable surplus of that country 14,000,000 bushels above previous estimates.

Wheat showed a gain of about the same size as registered in the corn market. Offerings of wheat in the local pit were held more tightly and shorts were in the market on the buying side. Liverpool showed an early gain of ¼ to ½c, being influenced largely by the firmer American cables of yesterday. Advices received here were to the effect that no damage had been done in Argentina by the frosts reported there several days ago.

Oat values failed to follow in the course of other grains, declines of ⅛ to ¾c being shown in this market at the opening. Longs were the principal sellers.

Provisions were again being liquidated by some of the holders, and values suffered declines under this selling and the lower market for hogs at the yards.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 99 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

Terre Haute, sprinkling, 75 degrees; Minneapolis, cloudy, 15 degrees; Kansas City, part cloudy, 80 degrees; no rain; Omaha, clear, 80 degrees; light rain last night; St. Louis, light shower last night.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and accordingly sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and on matter how dry it remains, this section will come into the market freely until the receipts from the eastern half of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

BANK OF LAFAYETTE TO INCREASE CAPITAL STOCK

LAFAYETTE, GA., Aug. 13.—At a meeting of the stockholders of the Bank of Lafayette to-day it was unanimously voted to increase the capital stock from $50,000 to $60,000; the additional 100 shares to be sold for $180, which is a little bit less than the actual book value of the stock.

Of the above sale $10,000 will go to capital, $5,000 to surplus, and $3,000 to undivided profits. This will give this bank a capital and surplus of $100,000 and undivided profits of about $10,000.

COTTON GOSSIP

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third dryest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Clarke amendment was likely to be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas, with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showery weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scattered showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi De-Lta Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record; first bale in 1902 being received August 10. This is about six days earlier than the average."

Temperatures: Galveston, clear and warm, good shower last night; Houston clear, 76; San Antonio clear, 82; Taylor, clear, 84; Dallas, clear, 85; Fort Worth, clear, 84; Sherman, clear, 80; Denison, clear, 82; Paris, clear, 80; Texarkana, clear, 76; Little Rock, clear, 78; Oklahoma City, clear, 81; Chickasha, clear, 81; Muskogee, clear, 88; McAlester, clear, 87; rain yesterday. Amite, clear, 69; Baton Rouge, clear, 78; Lafayette, cloudy, 78; Donaldsonville, clear, 72; Alexandria, clear, 75; Franklin, cloudy, 74; Morgan City, cloudy, warm; Robeline, clear, 69; Grand Cane, clear, 71; Minden, clear, 69; Lake Charles, cloudy, 69; Helena, part cloudy, warm; Hattiesburg, clear, 80.

Rainfall: Taylor, .22; Galveston, .42; Palestine, .01; Fort Smith, .02; New Orleans, .24; Mobile, .04; Nashville, .04; Atlanta, .46; Wilmington, .01; Houston, .04

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Were the cotton market freed from the menace of hostile legislation it would probably do better now that crop damage reports are coming in from the west in great numbers. But, as matters stand, the markets reflect a heavy tone even in the presence of a more active demand for forward export freight room. Big crop people adhere to their belief that the drouth affected area in the west does not cover a great amount of territory and that even the dry region has produced crops in dryer years than this.

"Nevertheless, the Weather Bureau stresses the bad state of affairs, resulting from lack of moisture in Oklahoma and Texas, and the detailed reports from 198 Texas stations for July show a rainfull deficiency of 1.62 inches, and a temperature excess of 1.2 degrees over the July normal.

"On the other hand, print cloths are now quoted at 3¾c, or ⅝ of a cent below the quotations at this time last year, which is equal to about 2½c a pound on raw cotton. But raw cotton values are now very little lower than they were at this time last year. Meanwhile, trade attention continues to center on the weather in the west.

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ⅝ to 119⅝, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¼, for a gain of 1¼.

After opening with a gain of ⅛, Southern Pacific went to 91¾, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154¼ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ½, American Smelting ⅝, Bethlehem Steel ½, United States Rubber common ¼, Western Union ½, Utah Copper ⅝, Steel common ⅛, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ⅜. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednsday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get bumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. CASTORIA DOES NOT CONTAIN NARCOTICS, if it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. Alexander E. Mintie, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "I have frequently prescribed your Castoria and have found it a reliable and pleasant remedy for children."

Dr. Agnes V. Swetland, of Omaha, Nebr., says: "Your Castoria is the best remedy in the world for children and the only one I use and recommend."

Dr. J. A. McClellan, of Buffalo, N. Y., says: "I have frequently prescribed your Castoria for children and always got good results. In fact I use Castoria for my own children."

Dr. J. W. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I heartily endorse your Castoria. I have frequently prescribed it in my medical practice, and have always found it to do all that is claimed for it."

Dr. C. H. Glidden, of St. Paul, Minn., says: "My experience as a practitioner with your Castoria has been highly satisfactory, and I consider it an excellent remedy for the young."

Dr. H. D. Benner, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have used your Castoria as a purgative in the cases of children for years past with the most happy effect, and fully endorse it as a safe remedy."

Dr. J. A. Boarman, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria is a splendid remedy for children, known the world over. I use it in my practice and have no hesitancy in recommending it for the complaints of infants and children."

Dr. J. J. Mackey, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I consider your Castoria an excellent preparation for children, being composed of reliable medicines and pleasant to the taste. A good remedy for all disturbances of the digestive organs."

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

.:. BEAUTY .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade,
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain,
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

For Success, Health, Happiness, Look Within!

Why Wait for Somebody Else to Bring Us These Things? Don't Be a Spiritual Looter; Pray Often, but Work, First, Last and Always.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ON retiring at night, just before going off to sleep, say, either mentally or orally as you choose:

I am health, strength, peace, happiness and prosperity and everything that goes to make for good.

Pure, good, rich blood is flowing through my body, removing all obstructions and bringing peace, health and harmony.

I am well and strong and vital.

I am beautiful, pure and good.

I am on the road to eternal youth.

I am opulent, happy and free.

Last but not least:

I will arise with unusual energy and radiance and power of accomplishment in the morning.

All I ask is that you do not try to dictate the way these things shall or may come, and I will guarantee them to cure anything from poverty to rheumatism.—Dr. James W. Cormany, Mount Carroll, Ill.

LET every reader of this column take with seriousness these emphatic statements of Dr. Cormany, and put them to the test.

Nothing Is the Matter With the World, Life or Destiny.

There is nothing the matter with the world, with life, with destiny.

Everything we desire or want or need waits for our claiming.

But the majority of God's children are waiting for SOMEBODY BESIDES THEMSELVES to bring them these things.

Not more than one human being in one thousand looks to HIMSELF and the Power back of himself for success, health and happiness.

The other 999 look to luck; to chance; to influence; to favors of friends and acquaintances; to doctors; to patent medicines; to some hoped-for miracle, and all the time a mine of wealth and reservoir of power within themselves lies unexplored and unused.

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.

EXTRADITION OF ZACHRY IS DENIED

Executive's Action Comes as the Supreme Court Reverses Ruling Favoring Father.

The Supreme Court Tuesday reversed the decision of Judge Hammond, of Augusta, awarding the two Zachry children to the father, thereby further complicating the sensational case in which requisition papers by Governor Cole Blease for Zachry were refused by Governor Slaton Tuesday morning.

According to the ruling of the Supreme Court, the decision awarding the children to the father is reversed and remanded to Judge Hammond's court for further hearing. The ruling further specifies that Judge Hammond may exercise his discretion in awarding the custody of the children, which is contrary to the opinion rendered by Judge Hammond, who held previously that he was forced to award the children to Zachry because of a previous judgment.

The effect of the ruling will be to put the whole matter back in the Augusta courts, with the possibility that Mrs. Zachry will be awarded the custody of the two children.

Governor Slaton based his refusal on the fact that no State law had been violated by Zachry in South Carolina and that the whole case was against the defendant grew out of the desire of Mrs. Zachry to obtain the custody of the two children.

One of the most spectacular fights for the extradition of a citizen ever recorded in Georgia occurred in the Governor's offices Monday. Charges and counter charges were hurled in turn by counsel for the defense and for the State of South Carolina, and at one time a personal mix-up between Attorney Dunbar, representing Mrs. Zachry, and Attorney Phinizy, representing Mr. Zachry, who charged that the case had been prosecuted with all the "vindictiveness" that Mr. Dunbar could summon, was narrowly averted by the Governor.

Slaton Draws Line.

"You may wax just as enthusiastic as you like," said Governor Slaton to Mr. Phinizy, "but you can't say those things. That will not do here."

The hearing was as unique as it was spectacular. With the Governor sitting as both court and jury, attorneys for the defense and plaintiffs were allowed to argue their cases to their hearts' content with frequent interruptions by the Governor, who kept close tab on every bit of evidence offered.

In addition to the three attorneys for Zachry, Cohen and Phinizy, of Augusta, and West, of Thompson, E. D. Clary, Mayor of Harlem, the defendant's home town, testified in behalf of Zachry. Attorneys Rembert, of Columbia, S. C., and Dunbar, of Augusta, represented the State of South Carolina.

Mayor Clary, of Harlem, created a sensation when he testified that he had on one occasion pulled Mrs. Zachry and her mother off Zachry following an attack. Mrs. Zachry, he declared further, had said in his presence that if she did not get her children she would have to kill her husband.

Kidnaping Charge Irrelevant.

The climax of the hearing was reached, however, when the attorneys for Governor Blease virtually admitted to Governor Slaton that the charge of kidnaping, as incorporated in the requisition papers, was not relevant and that practically all that Mrs. Zachry wanted was the custody of the two children.

In substantiation of the latter statement Governor Slaton referred to a letter which he himself had received from Mrs. Zachry, in which, he declared, it seemed that all that Mrs. Zachry wanted was the children.

This testimony of the Governor and the startling admission of Attorney Rembert, representing Governor Blease, broke down the whole argument of the plaintiff and really marked the turning point in the hearing.

CLAYTON IS APPOINTED SENATOR

Governor O'Neal Names Alabama Congressman as Successor to Late Joseph F. Johnston.

MONTGOMERY, Aug. 11.—Governor O'Neal this afternoon appointed Congressman Henry D. Clayton of the —— Alabama district as United States senator to succeed the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston. The commission was immediately issued and Congressman Clayton said he would return to Washington at once to be sworn in. He came to Alabama with the Congressional party that escorted Senator Johnston's body to Birmingham.

Immediately following the appointment Mr. Clayton announced that he would be a candidate to succeed himself in the Senate next year. He will be opposed by Congressman Richmond Pearson Hobson, who was conducting a campaign when Senator Johnston died.

Mr. Clayton, it is understood, will not resign his seat in the House until he is seated in the Senate. Little doubt of the legality of the appointment exists among politicians here, as it is understood that Governor O'Neal acted only after being fully informed by leading politicians in Washington.

Children, Hurt While At Play, Near Death

MILLVILLE, FLA., Aug. 12.—As the result of an accident at their home yesterday afternoon two children of H. W. Harmon, aged 6 and 8 years, are at the point of death, one with a crushed skull and the other with a badly mutilated face. The accident took place while they were riding on an improvised "flying jinny." Both fell while it was revolving fast, the ends striking them as they attempted to get out of the way.

The "flying jinny" was made with a 20-foot scantling on a stump with spike driven through the middle.

Beveridge Accused Of Forming Lobby

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—In an effort to minimize the connection between James Watson, former Representative from Indiana, and the National Association of Manufacturers, counsel for the latter association intends to show the Senate Lobby Committee that former Senator Beveridge, of Indiana, really was responsible for the organization of a tariff commission association to boost his own measure.

The National Tariff Commission Association was put on its feet by the National Association of Manufacturers officials, but only, they will seek to prove, after friends of Beveridge had laid the plans.

Organize to Fight Great White Plague

HUNTSVILLE, Aug. 12.—A meeting will be held here to-morrow for the purpose of organizing an anti-tuberculosis society.

At a recent mass meeting in the First Methodist Church a committee was appointed with R. E. Pettus as chairman to work under the direction of Dr. T. E. Dryer, county health officer, and organize a crusade against the white plague, which has increased 65 per cent since last year.

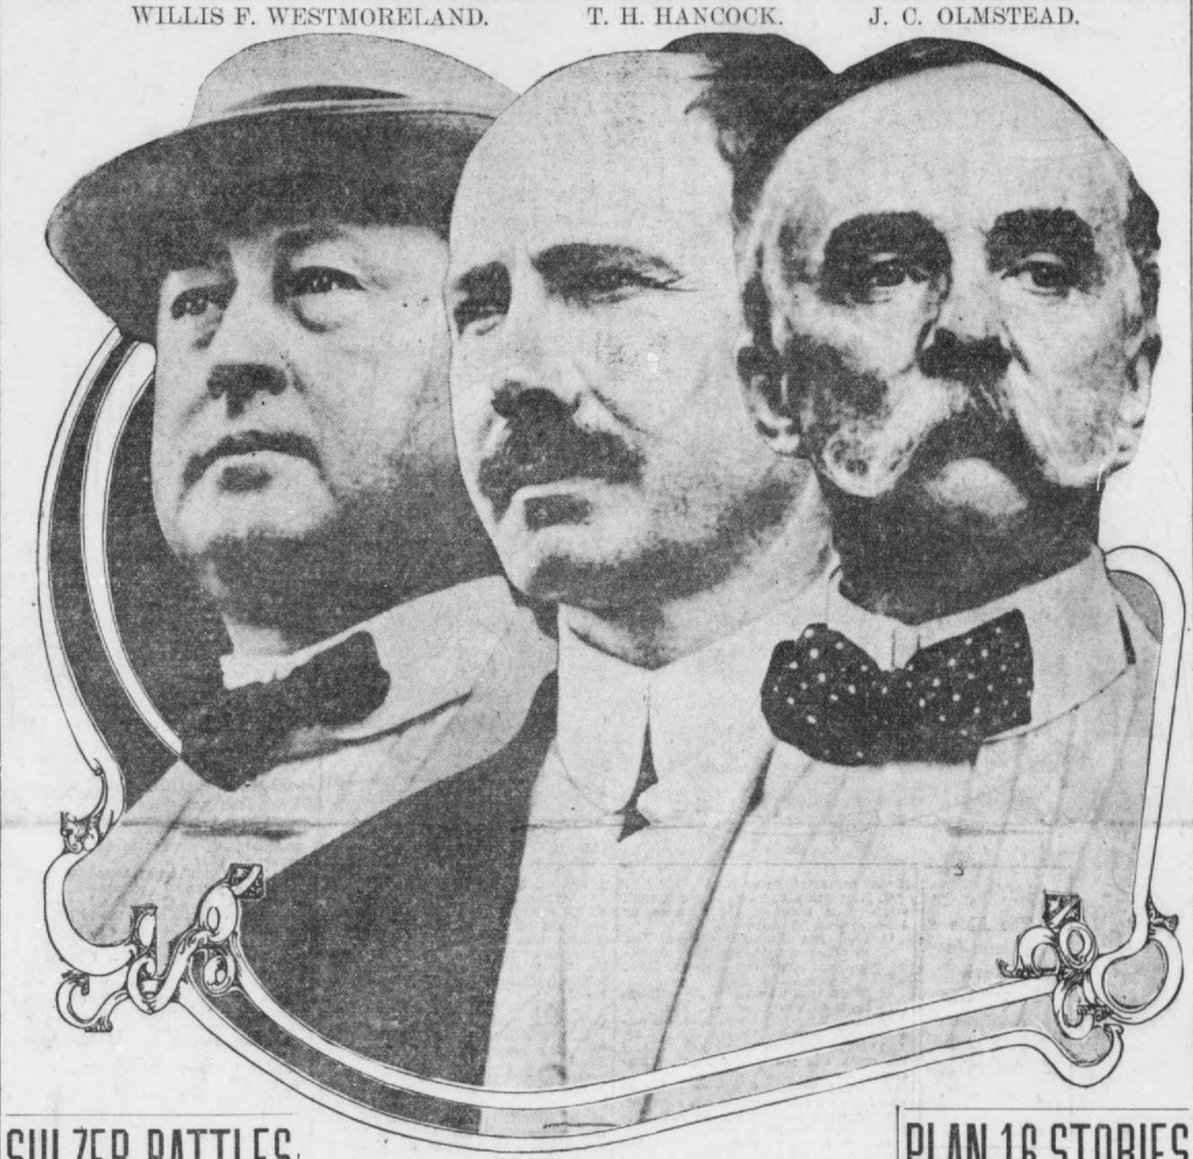

Proposed Rate Cut From West Rejected

RALEIGH, Aug. 12.—Just Freight Rate Association to-day voted unanimously to reject a proposition for reduction of rates from the West to North Carolina points on the ground that the reduction would not put the State on a competitive basis.

The Governor and other State officials are considering the proposition.

SULZER BATTLES IMPEACHMENT PROCEEDINGS

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 12.—At 3:15 p. m. the Assembly took a recess until 8:30 to-night. The majority to pass the impeachment resolution is still lacking, but the anti-Sulzer leaders expect to have the members rounded up to-night.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 12.—Governor William Sulzer's political life hangs in the balance to-day. Faced by a hostile Legislature, Governor Sulzer, with his back to the wall, fought with more vigor than he had pressed into any other contest in his long political career.

Before the Assembly convened to vote on the resolution that Sulzer should be impeached for "high crimes and misdemeanors" for the alleged private use of political funds and speculation in Wall Street, opponents of the Governor claimed to have enough votes to pass the resolution.

At least five of the judges of the Court of Appeals must participate in the impeachment trial, and supporters of Governor Sulzer rely upon the judicial rather than the legislative action of the proposed court of impeachment for a favorable decision in the involved case.

The resolution of impeachment, whose formulation is based on findings of the Frawley legislative committee, was introduced in the Assembly at 12:15 a. m., when 101 of the 150 members were present, but it was predicted that close to a full attendance would be on hand to-day. Democrats opposed to Governor Sulzer appointed committees to see that every member was in his seat.

Says Ellis Fired To Save Own Life

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 12.—James Carlock, a chauffeur, put on the stand by the defense Tuesday morning at the preliminary trial of Ed Ellis, who shot and killed Louie Pat Roney, of Montgomery, on the streets here on the night of July 31, said he saw Ellis and another man talking together, heard an oath and then saw Roney attempt to draw a pistol, and the shooting followed immediately.

Chief of Police Bodeker testified to finding a pistol under the wounded man's body after the shooting.

Citizens Will Work On the Public Roads

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 12.—Prominent citizens of Jefferson County, outside of the cities, are announcing intentions of doing personal work on the roads of the county on Good Road Days, in accordance to the proclamation of Governor O'Neal setting August 14-16 as the days.

Jefferson County promises to do as much as any county in the State on the Good Roads Days and so encourage the movement as to warrant the assertion that it will be a permanent institution.

Convict Recaptured After Second Escape

GADSDEN, Aug. 12.—William Kennedy, the aged principal in the Pierce-Kennedy feud, who is serving a life sentence in the penitentiary at Wetumpka, and who, about ten days ago, escaped and was captured at his home near here a few days later, escaped again last week and was retaken yesterday by Deputy Sheriff Borden, of Calhoun County.

Kennedy will be a din taken to the penitentiary.

Leaves Big Fortune To Wife and Children

HUNTSVILLE, Aug. 12.—The will of James Ed Butler, banker, merchant and farmer of New Hope, who died several weeks ago, has been probated. The executors are James C. Butler, a son, and W. D. Claybrooks, a son-in-law, and their bonds are fixed at $700,000, indicating that the value of the estate is about $350,000. The will directs an equal division of the property among the widow and sons and daughters.

The estate consists of plantations in Madison, Marshall and Morgan Counties, the principal interest in the big mercantile house that bears his name and the bank at New Hope, stock in the First National Bank of Huntsville and majority holdings in the oil mill at Albertville and an oil mill in Birmingham.

Another Entry for Birmingham Mayor

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 12.—The campaign for President of the City Commission of Birmingham has been enlivened considerably by the entry of Vassar Allen, a young attorney of Birmingham, who on the last hour announced his candidacy. He takes a bold stand against George B. Ward, former Mayor of Birmingham, who, it is understood, demands a strict regulation of the liquor traffic.

Clement R. Wood Socialist, at one time Recorder of Birmingham, is still making a strenuous campaign and delivering addresses every day.

The election will be held September 15.

NEGRO CHURCH FESTIVAL.

Bethel, the oldest negro church in Atlanta, will hold a Labor Day celebration at the Speedway during the week of September 1.

PLAN 16 STORIES ON BROWN AND ALLEN SITE

Dr. E. L. Connally and associates will soon start the construction of a sixteen-story office building on the site of Brown & Allen's drug store, southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets, if plans which are under way are consummated. Announcement was made unofficially at noon Tuesday that Dr. Connally has been in consultation with W. L. Stoddart of New York and Atlanta, and other architects, from whom he has received tentative plans.

In fact, an engineer representing a local architect surveyed the ground last week and made measurements of the stores in the building. Dr. Connally could not be reached for an expression as to his plans, and his son, Thomas W. Connally, refused to be quoted.

Such a move has been in contemplation for several years. Two years ago Dr. Connally had an architect sketch a twenty-story building, and since then he has had more or less definite intentions to erect a building that will be a credit to the section and to the city.

The structure which Dr. Connally is planning will cost probably $750,000, and will be a distinct addition to the line of attractive buildings on Whitehall. It will probably be known as the Connally Building, after its builder, who likewise erected the old structure.

The present building is 30 years old and it must soon be repaired or torn down. About a year ago a brick wall was placed in the center. The structure is three stories and of brick.

JUDGE ROAN RULES OUT NEW ATTACK ON FRANK'S CHARACTER

Here are the important developments Tuesday in the trial of Leo M. Frank, charged with the murder of Mary Phagan:

It is announced the state will call more than fifty witnesses in rebuttal of the defense's evidence.

State announces its theory that Frank planned a criminal attack upon Mary Phagan the day before she came to the factory for her money.

The court and chaingang record of C. B. Dalton, the State's witness who testified that he had seen women in Frank's office, was shown up by the defense and admitted by Dalton.

Four acquaintances of Dalton testify that they would not believe him under oath and that his reputation for truth and veracity is bad.

C. E. Pollard, expert accountant, testifies that it required him three hours and eleven minutes to compile the financial sheet that the defense claims Frank prepared the afternoon of the murder.

Miss Hattie Hall, stenographer, says that Frank did no work on the financial sheet Saturday morning, the day of the crime.

Jim Conley's declaration that Lemmie Quinn came into the factory and left before the arrival of Monteen Stover, who came at 12:05 o'clock, is challenged by the testimony of Miss Hall, who swears Quinn did not enter the factory before she left at 12:02 o'clock.

Magnolia Kennedy, worker at the pencil factory, testifies she laid her hand and Helen Ferguson's shoulder when they drew their pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's wages. She says Schiff paid off. Miss Kennedy says hair found in lathe looked like slain girl's.

Sinister intimations made by Solicitor Dorsey in questioning Will Chambers, a boy in the factory, who denies alleged conversations, are ordered ruled out.

Attorney Arnold threatens to move for a mistrial if any further intimations of this sort are allowed to be heard by the jury.

Minola McKnight, cook in the Frank household, gives evidence against that offered by her husband and declares detectives tried to make her swear to lies. She admitted she signed the affidavit reporting alleged conversations between Mrs. Frank and the prisoner, but insisted it was a lie and that she signed because the detectives threatened to lock her up if she did not.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman testified they saw Frank at the factory at 11:35 and left at 11:45. This seems like a strong blow at Jim Conley's story that Frank said to him, "Here comes Corinthia Hall and Emma Clark," when he told him to hide in the wardrobe after the murder—or about 1 o'clock.

However, while Conley swore to this in his third affidavit, after the discrepancy had been pointed out, he said on the stand he wasn't sure what Frank said.

Emil Selig, Frank's father-in-law, testifies to the prisoner's actions at home the day of the murder, and says they were in no way unusual. Several discrepancies in his story compared with his evidence before the coroner's jury are showed up.

Emil Selig, Leo Frank's father-in-law, wa scalled late Tuesdayafternoon to testify to the time Frank left and returned home at the various times on April 26, the day Mary Phagan was slain.

It was announced Tuesday afternoon that the State had subpoened between fifty and sixty witnesse to be on hand Wednesday in readiness to give rebuttal testimony as soon as the defense rests.

Selig was th efirst of the relatives of the accused to be called. Mrs. Selig followed her husband.

Selig declared that he did not see Frank leave Saturday morning, but said he at luncheon with Frank in the afternoon. Frank arrived home at 1:20, Selig testified, and had on him no scratches, bruises or marks of any kind. According to his recollection, Frank's demeanor was in no way unusual.

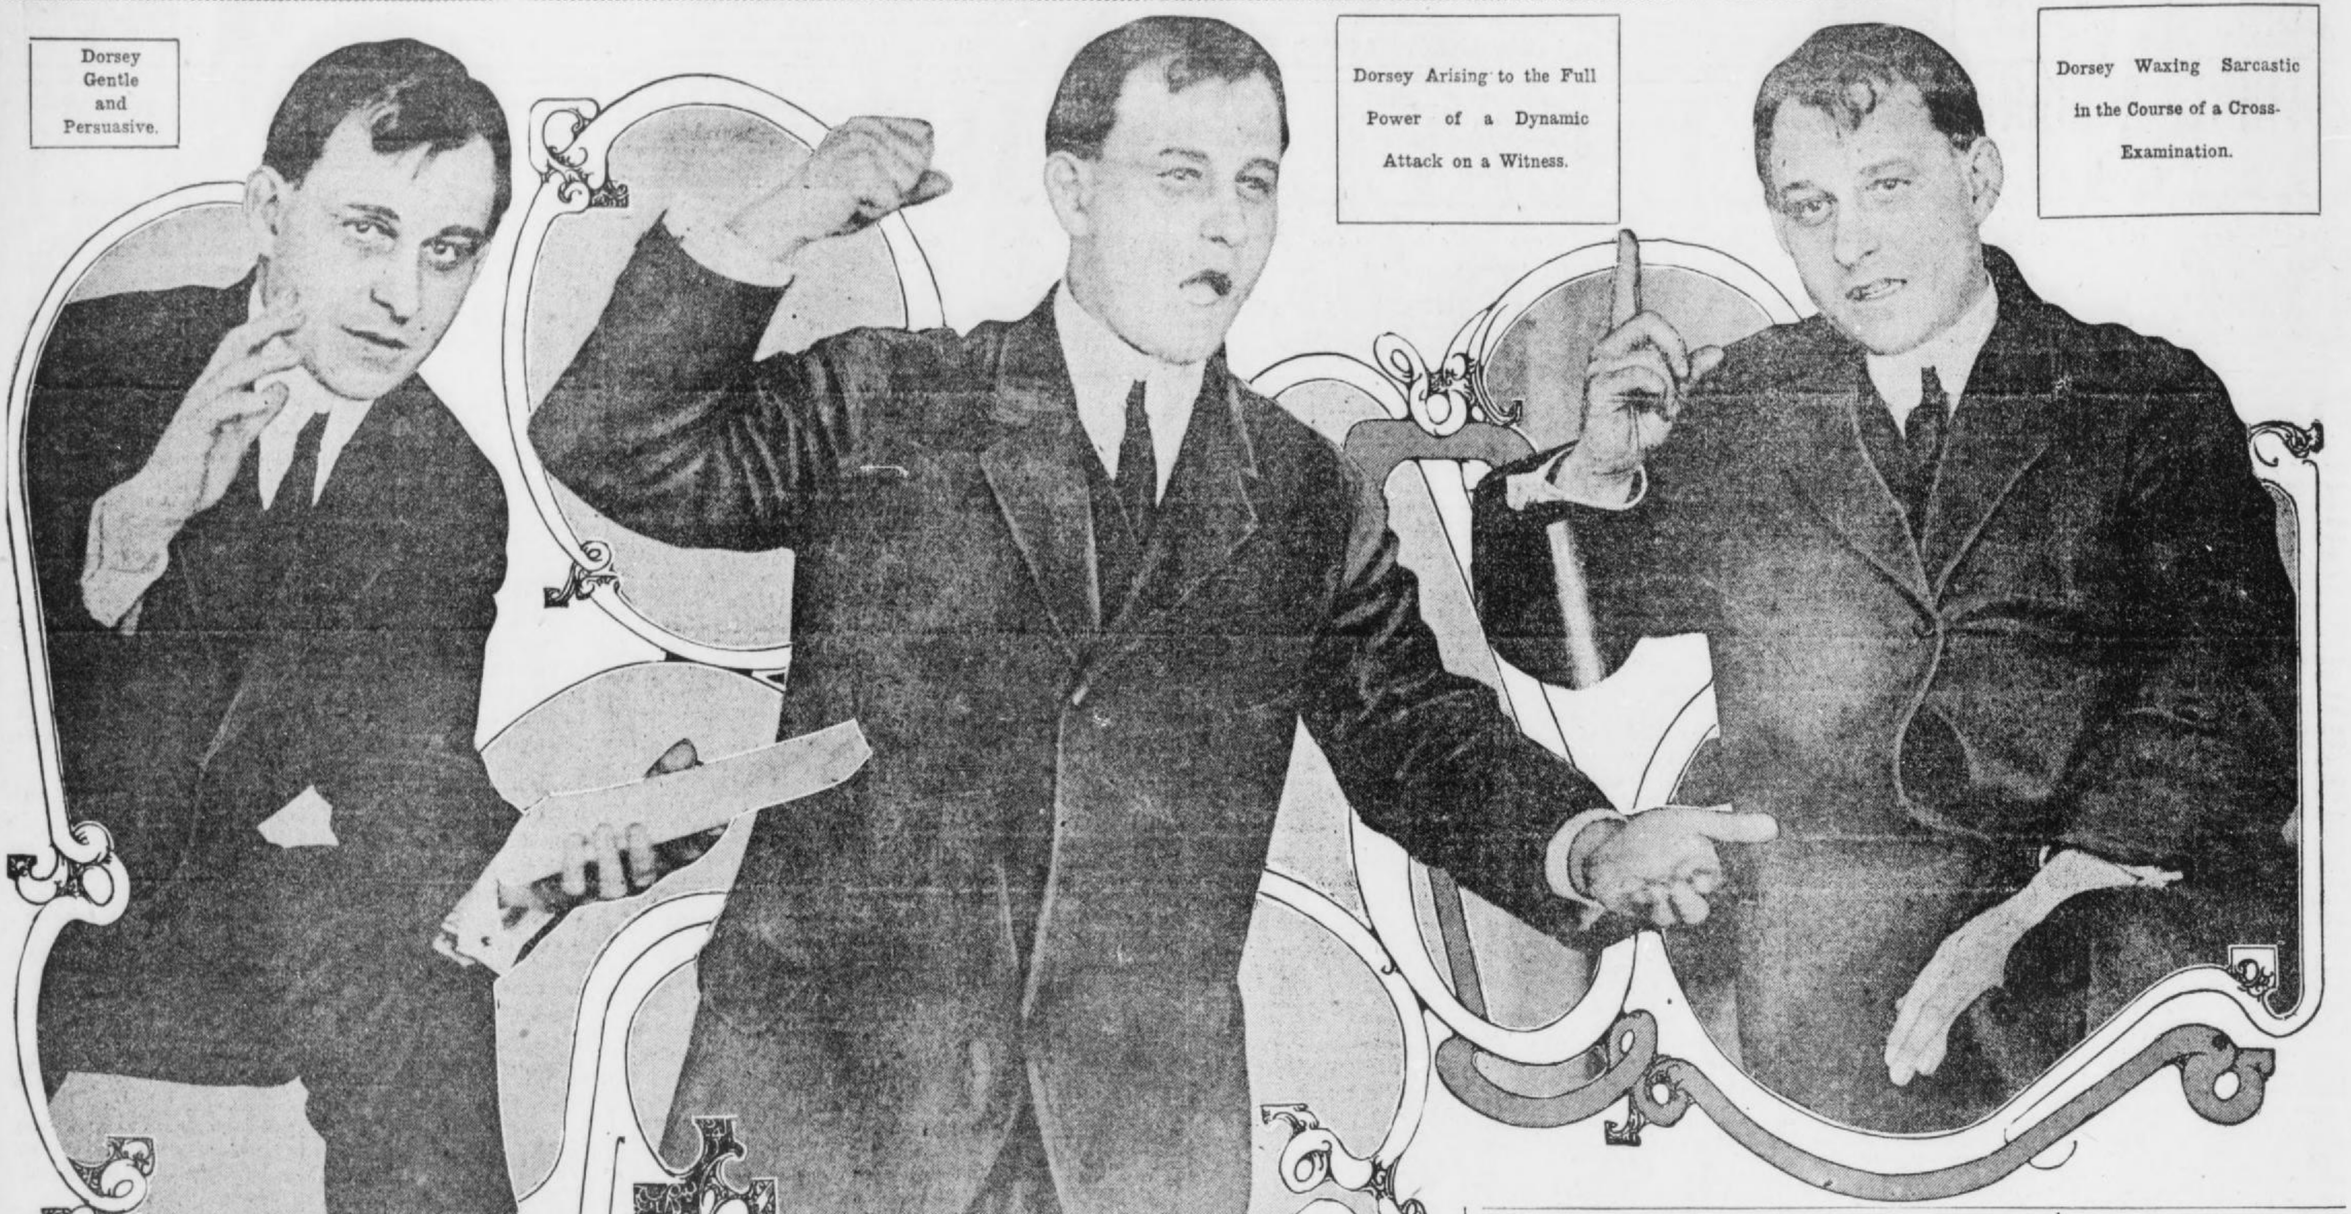

He said he ate with Frank, Mrs. Selig and Mrs. Frank, the women leaving the table a few minutes after Frank's arrival to attend the Grand Opera matinee.

Selig said that Frank returned at night about 8:30 and remained there the rest of the night, going to bed shortly after 10 o'clock.

Solicitor Dorsey gave the witness a grilling cross-examination and sought t oimpeach the testimony by reference to Selig's evidence before the Coroner's inquest. The Solicitor wasable to find anumber of discrepancies. Three witnesses were called by the defense Tuesday afternoon, to discredit the story of Albert McKnight wh otestified the first week of the trial that he had seen Frank come home Saturdayafetrnoon at 1:30 o'clock, go hastily to the sideboard and then leave at once on his return to the factory.

C. W. Barnhart, an architect and contractor; Henry Wood, secretary of the County Board of Cimmissioners, and Julius Fischer, contractor and builder, were the other witnesses. All testified they had visited the Selig home at 68 East Georgia avenue, where Frank lives, and had found that no one could see what thenegro, Albert McKnight, described as seeing Saturday afternoon from where he says he sat.

FRANK PLANNED ATTACK, STATE ALLEGES

Determined attempts by the State to introduce further evidence of the alleged degeneracy of Leo M. Frank were frustrated Tuesday afternoon by the protests and objections of Attorney Reuben Arnold.

"If any further effort is made to introduce such testimony, I shall move for a mistrial," declared Arnold to the court.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to get the testimony from Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy who was in the pencil factory from last December until March. The Solicitor questioned the boy about alleged conversations with J. N. Gantt, and the boy denied them. Arnold objected and all the questions along this line were ruled out. Dorsey said he would call Gantt in rebuttal.

The State definitely announced Tuesday its theory that Frank deliberately premeditated and planned a criminal attack upon Mary Pragan Friday, April 25, the day before she came to the factory and was slain.

Frank A. Hooper, associated with Solicitor Dorsey in the prosecution, made the surprising announcement of the State's attitude during a heated argument over the admissibility of a portion of the testimony of one of the defense's witnesses, Miss Hattie Hall, stenographer at Montag Bros. and occasionally employed at the National Pencil Factory.

That the State was working upon the theory of premeditation was hinted by the questioning of Helen Ferguson several days ago but Attorney Hooper's address to the court was the first open declaration.

The court and chaingang record of C. B. Dalton, a State's witness against Frank, was given an airing by Attorney Arnold. Dalton was recalled to the stand and made to admit that he had been sent to the chaingang in 1894 on three separate counts for stealing in Walton County.

Dalton also admitted that he had been indicted in 1899 in Walton County for theft and had paid a fine of $141.46.

Attorney Arnold showed the witness copies of four indictments and asked if he knew these had been issued against him in Walton County for selling liquor to Don Tillman and Bob Harris. Dalton denied all knowledge of the indictments.

As soon as Dalton left the stand W. S. Cooper, J. H. Patrick, W. T. Mitchell and I. M. Patrick, all residents of Walton County, were called to the stand and testified that they knew Dalton and that they wouldn't believe him on oath in a court of justice.

Misses Laura Atkinson and Minnie Smith were called and denied Walton's testimony in regard to being in their company.

Dalton testified, when he was called by the State last week, that he had visited the factory basement with Miss Daisy Hopkins and that he frequently had seen Frank in his office with women.

An unassailable alibi was the object in view when the attorneys for Frank began the questioning of a long line of witnesses who were called to testify in regard to every known movement of Frank Saturday, April 26, the day that Mary Phagan was slain.

The testimony of Miss Hattie Hall was the first along this line. That of Alonzo Mann, office boy, was next.

That Frank did not do any work on the financial sheet Saturday forenoon was one of the most important declarations made by Miss Hall. She had testified at the Coroner's inquest that she assisted Frank in compiling this sheet, but she explained to Solicitor Dorsey that she was mistaken, and it was only one of the tabulations from which the financial sheet was being made that she had worked on.

Her testimony on this point strikes at the State's theory that Frank did the work in the forenoon.

Miss Hall also testified that Frank signified his desire to have her work for him at the factory in the afternoon and had asked Harry Gotheimer to come back to the factory in the afternoon, requests which the defense will claim establish conclusively that Frank was not arranging for the commission of any crime or wrongdoing Saturday afternoon.

The witness said that she left the factory first at 12 o'clock as the whistles were blowing, but that she forgot her umbrella and returned to Frank's office for it, noting that it was 12:02 as she left finally. She declared that she did not see Lemmie Quinn enter Frank's office. Conley testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before the arrival of Monteen Stover or Mary Phagan. The Stover girl said she reached the office floor at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Hall indignantly denied the imputation of Solicitor Dorsey that her salary had been raised as the result of the testimony she was giving. She said that it had been agreed when she entered the employ of Montag Bros. that she was to get an increase of salary August 1, and that she had been unable to get it before this time.

Wade Campbell, an inspector at the factory, came in for a rigorous grilling at the hands of Solicitor Dorsey. Campbell testified that his sister, Mrs. Arthur White, had told him she had seen a negro at the foot of the stairs on the first floor when she went into the factory at 12:30 o'clock.

Campbell Grilled On Affidavit.

"Don't you know that what she actually said was that she saw the negro at 12:50 when she left?" inquired the Solicitor.

Campbell denied that this was so. The Solicitor then showed Campbell an affidavit and asked if it was not his signature at the bottom. Campbell said that it looked like his writing, but that he would not say positively. He denied that he had made the statement in the affidavit in which he was quoted as saying his sister had told of seeing the negro as she left the factory.

The witness on his redirect examination testified that he had seen Conley reading in the factory several times after the crime. Conley said on the stand that he was unable to read, except for a few simple words.

C. E. Pollard, an expert accountant, was the first witness called. He began to testify as to the time required to make out the finance sheet. Attorney Rosser said that the defense probably would conclude its expert testimony with Mr. Pollard, and that Miss Hattie Hall, stenographer for Montag Brothers, would be the next witness.

Pollard testified that the minimum time in which Frank could have compiled the finance sheet was three hours and eleven minutes. This bore out the testimony of Herbert Schiff, Frank's co-worker, and Joel Hunter, expert accountant.

Over Three Hours To Compile Report.

Q. What is your business?—A. Certified public accountant.

Q. Have you had occasion to go over the financial sheet of the National Pencil Company of the week of April 24 prepared by Leo M. Frank? A. I went over a copy of it.

Q. Have you also seen the factory record called the pencil sheet?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you also furnished data necessary to make that sheet?—A. Yes.

Q. I will get you to state as an expert how long it would take to complete it?—A. I took each sheet, compiled it, and timed myself as to the length of time necessary. I prepared the sheet of the 24th day. It took me ten minutes.

Q. Were there any mistakes?—A. Yes, a little one—of one and one-half gross. It was hard to say whether it was my mistake or his.

Q. Now state the total time it took you?—A. A total of 191 minutes, or 3 hours and 11 minutes.

Q. Was that the quickest?—A. Yes.

Q. In other words, you took exactly the work that he did?—A. Yes; what I was told he did.

Q. That was steady work without interruption, wasn't it—A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been an auditor?—A. Sixteen years.

Q. Have you an office here?—A. I am with the American Audit Company.

Q. That mistake occurred before you took up the sheet, did it not?—A. One mistake was made the Saturday before and one on Friday.

Q. Are those two trifling mistakes—a mistake of 50 cents and a gross and a half of pencils—the only mistakes you found?—A. Yes.

Attorney Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Mr. Pollard, this is rather an unusual assignment for you, is it not, to go over a man's business and undertake to state how long it takes him to do it?—A. No, I think not. Frequently we are called on to estimate the time it takes to do work in changing systems.

Q. Is it not true that a man can work his own books better than anyone else's books?—A. Yes.

Mr. Arnold took the witness.

Q. How many times would a man have to multiply, divide and subtract in making up that sheet?—A. Well, 40 multiplications and 160 additions, and I can't guess on the rest.

Aimed to Show Conduct.

The witness was excused and Miss Hattie Hall was called. She was questioned by Attorney Arnold.

Q. What is your business?—A. Stenographer-bookkeeper at Montag Brothers.

Q. Do you ever go to the National Pencil Company?—A. When necessary.

Q. On Saturday, April 26, did you see Leo M. Frank?—A. About 10 o'clock at Montag Brothers.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. Yes, he asked me if I could come over and do some work. I told him I didn't know, but thought I could.

Dorsey interrupted:

"I object to anything he said to her."

Arnold: "Your honor, it is part of res gestis in this case."

Dorsey: "Here is this dead girl. They would not let her show what she said at 12 o'clock and I can conceive of no principle of law that would let them show what this man said and not let her show what the deceased said."

Arnold: "This is merely to show a course of conduct."

Judge Roan: "I can see no analogy between the two cases. I rather think you can ask the question."

Dorsey: "Well, this is a very important point, your honor, and we would like to give you some authorities."

Judge Roan: "All right."

Dorsey then read at length from the Eighty-fourth Georgia Report.

Judge Roan: "Do you expect to follow that question by showing that he had certain work to do and engaged her to do it?"

Arnold: "Yes."

Judge Roan: "Then I will let you ask it."

Dorsey threw his book on the table and sat down, laughing. Arnold continued the questioning.

Q. When did you call him first?—A. He called me up before 10 o'clock and said he had work enough to do to keep him busy until 6 o'clock.

Dorsey: "Is your honor going to let that telephone conversation in?"

The Solicitor's objection was overruled.

Q. Miss Hall, did you recognize his voice?—A. I certainly did.

Q. What time did you see him that Saturday morning?—A. About 10 o'clock.

Q. Had you worked for him before?—A. I had been accustomed to going over and helping him on Saturdays. I asked him if he was going to need me. He said, "Yes," that he had so much work to do that he would be busy until 6 o'clock.

Dorsey Calls Halt; Roan Sustains Him.

Dorsey interrupted. "You honor, are you going to let that in?"

Judge Roan: "I don't think I will."

Arnold: "Your honor, I wish you would let me argue for a moment. Even the State does not claim any crime was committed at that time. There is no reason in the world to suppose that the accused would not have told the truth at that time. I believe that if a part of the conversation is admissible, all of it is admissible. You must admit it all to explain part. You would do this young man an injustice to shut out this evidence of this day's program, when there was not the slightest motive to be otherwise than truthful."

"Mr. Dorsey has sought to show," continued Mr. Arnold, "that this financial sheet could have been made up in the morning. We are just trying to show that it was impossible. Now I will read you a decision in which I participated with the father of my good friend, the late Judge Dorsey. It was 24 years ago."

Rosser: "Are you that old, Mr. Arnold?"

Arnold: "Yes, I am 24."

"Dorsey: "That case has nothing to do with this one. That was a case where a man on trial for murder swore to a lie."

Arnold: "It was charged that it was a lie. We never did believe it."

Dorsey: "He was convicted."

Arnold: "Yes, he was convicted."

Judge Roan ruled: "Mr. Arnold, this young woman can show that she was called, what she was requested to do, and what was shown her to be done. She can state how long she thinks it would take to finish that work. She can not state, however, what he told her over the telephone about what he expected to do."

Frank Leaves Court With Sheriff.

Arnold: "We want to note an exception to that."

Q. Miss Hall, what time did you go to Mr. Frank's office?—A. Between 10:30 and 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you take dictation in his inner office, or in his outer office?—A. In the inner office.

Q. Where did you write it?—A. In the outer office.

At this point Leo Frank went out of the courtroom with Sheriff Mangum. Mr. Hooper jumped up and whispered to Mr. Arnold.

Arnold—Yes, I waived his presence.

Judge Roan—I excused the prisoner properly.

Hooper—I just wanted to know if the defense had waived his presence.

Q. Now, we only have ten orders here. See if they are the ones Frank handed you?—A. Yes. My initials are on them. They are the ones.

Q. Now, the orders are sometimes acknowledged as the first step?—A. Yes; in that case they were.

Q. Do you recall to whom Frank was talking that morning?—A. Yes, but I don't recall the names. A man and his son came in. Then there was Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. White.

Q. Do you recall what any of them said?—Yes; Mrs. White said she wanted to see her husband.

Q. During this time was Mr. Frank working on this financial sheet or any other similar document?—A. He was not.

Q. Are you familiar with his handwriting?—A. Not very.

Q. I will get you to look on this order book and see if those orders are entered.

The wintess read the eleven orders from the order book.

Q. Now, is that your handwriting?—A. No; I think it is Mr. Frank's.

Q. Did you write any of these requisitions?—A. No.

Q. Do you know who did?—A. I understood Mr. Frank did.

Q. Were the requisitions made before or after the orders were put on the book?—A. After.

Left Factory At 12:02 P. M.

Q. Now look at these letters and see whether Frank dictated them?—A. Yes.

Q. How many?—A. Eight, and one he did not dictate.

Q. Did he sign them?—A. Yes, I took them to him after I had typed them.

Q. Did he do any work on that financial sheet while you were there?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. Just as I got on my hat and started for the door I heard the whistle blow for noon.

Q. Is there a regular whistle that blows for 12 o'clock?—A. Yes, there are several whistles.

Q. What did you do then?—A. I got to the bottom of the steps and remembered that I had forgotten my umbrella. I went back and got it. It was two minutes past 12 o'clock as I passed the time clock.

Q. Did you see any little girl in the building?—A. I did not.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you call Frank or Frank call you that Saturday morning?—A. I called him.

Q. He had a regular stenographer, didn't he?—A. They had a stenographer, but she didn't do but about one-third enough work so I had to go.

Q. Miss Hall, what were you receiving at that time?—A. Ten dollars and fifty cents a week.

Q. What are you getting now?—A. Fifteen dollars a week, and I want to explain——

Q. Never mind, just answer my questions. Didn't you state in a soda fountain last night that the raise came to you without asking for it after it was known that you were to be a witness?—A. Indeed, I did not. I don't go to soda fountains. I want to explain.

Attorney Arnold—Let her explain.

A. I insisted that they give me this raise on July 1, but they wouldn't give it to me until August 1.

Q. Did Frank come to Montag's before or after he called you up?—A. After.

Q. You are the one who called him up?—A. Yes.

Q. You did the insisting about going to his office?—A. I certainly did not.

Q. Did you not swear at the Coroner's inquest that Frank left Montag's before you did?—A. I said I did not recall.

Q. You acknowledged these orders with a postcard and letter?—A. Yes.

Q. You wrote those between 10:30 and 12?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you state to the jury Frank left before you did?—A. I don't recall.

Q. How long would it take you to fill out the blank?—A. I never timed myself.

Talked Over Time With Office Boy

Q. Didn't you swear before the Coroner that it would not take more than one minute?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you say Frank was at the office when you got there?—A. I said I did not recall.

Q. Who came in while you were there?—A. Two men and three women.

Q. What time was it the office boy left?—A. 11:30.

Q. Didn't you tell the Coroner you could not tell the time?—A. Yes.

Q. How do you know now?—A. The boy told me.

Q. You talked it over with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Where were you when those people came in?—A. In the outer office.

Q. How long were you there when these people came in?—A. I do not recall.

Q. Didn't you tell the Coroner it was fifteen minutes?—A. I don't remember.

Q. How long was it after those let-

FRANK TRIAL WITNESS IS SURE, AT LEAST, OF ONE THING--A 'GOOD RAGGING'

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Reader, proverbially gentle, if not always so, be glad, be joyful, and be filled with exceeding thankfulness that you have not been summoned, no matter which way, as a witness in the Frank trial!

Of course, there is a large, fat chance that you have been summoned—most everybody has—but be all those nice things aforesaid, if you haven't.

And even at that, knock on wood.

The trial is young yet—it is not quite three weeks old, three weeks, count 'em—and there still is time for somebody or other to remember that you may know something or other about something or other that may have something or other to do with the case.

Anyway, if you can't be glad and all the rest of it, be just as glad and as nearly all the rest of it as you can, while the being is good or in anywise promising.

If you are a witness in the Frank case, you are skating on about the thinnest ice ever—it makes no difference whatever whose pond you are skating on.

You are ambrosia and cake to one side and, you likewise are gall and wormwood to the other—be very sure of that!

If your wife will have anything at all to do with you, and if the neighbors love you any more, when you get back home, it will be entirely because one side or the other forgot to mention the fact that once upon a time you were a horse thief, or somebody said you were a horse thief, or that you had an uncle who was a horse thief, or some pleasant little thing like that.

They don't care particularly whether you ever look like anything any more, after they get through with you down there in the big court nowadays.

Cross-Examining Is What Hurts.

Always on the direct examination, of course, the sledding is elegant.

The gentlemanly party then asking you gentlemanly questions wouldn't hurt your feelings for the world.

He knows you are a law-abiding citizen, and worthy of any trust. He dotes upon you. He loves you. He is your friend until that thing that now and then breaks loose in Georgia freezes over!

Mighty fine—but you haven't yet discovered what's coming to you!

Wait until the cross-examining attorney gets you in his demoniac clutches!

Far be it from him to remember that you have any kinfolks outside the penitentiary, or that you ever told a truth in your life.

He plainly but pointedly is perfectly willing to bet, right there, that you couldn't tell the truth in three trials, and he will lay you big odds on it, moreover!

Now, of course, the following is not precisely a sample of what has been going on in the courthouse of late, ever since the trial began, in fact, but it is about the way it must seem to many witnesses and spectators to have been, after the day is over and they undertake to recall the things that transpired.

"Mr. Witness," begins the cross-examiner, "you told the learned counsel (sarcastic smile) upon the other side, I believe, that you saw an owl sitting on the back fence about three minutes and two ticks past 8:34 on the night of the killing?"

"Mr. Witness" needn't be the least, tiny bit fooled by that "Mr." business—the cross-examiner would scorn to call a witness "Mister," more than once—after that, it merely is "You, Smith," or "Smith," or "Look here, now," or something snappy and snortish.

Witness: "I said I thought it was an owl—it looked like an owl."

Begins to Shake Finger.

Attorney: "W-H-A-T! Didn't you just now, in the presence of this erudite jury (shaking finger vigorously under witness' nose), swear positively (shake) and without reserve (shake), sir (shake, shake, shake), that it WAS (shake) an OWL?"

Witness: "Why-er-um-I couldn't swear it was an owl exactly—it has big eyes, anyhow!"

Attorney: "Big eyes? B-A-H! Also B-A-H, B-A-H! Likewise B-A-H, B-A-H, B-A-H!! Then (very sarcastically) it might have been a cat, eh?"

Witness: "Well, sir (very apologetically), I don't think it was a cat—it didn't say 'Meow!'"

Attorney: "Come, come, person, I don't want to know what you THINK—how dare you think, anyway?—you didn't hang around there to HEAR whether it said 'Meow,' did you?"

Witness: "No, sir (very much abashed); I admit I didn't hang around. Owls make me nervous, anyway!"

Attorney: "I've no doubt (sardonic smile) they make you nervous! By the way, person, didn't one of your honorable ancestors (profound sarcasm) come over to this country with Captain Kidd, the well-known pirate?"

Witness: "Um, oh, I——"

Attorney: "Come, come now, answer me; speak right out; tell the truth, if you CAN; did he?"

Drags Wife Into Mix-Up.

Witness: "I really can not say, sir. You see that's been so long ago, and I wasn't there, either, and——"

Attorney: "Well, you won't (more finger shaking under witness' nose) DENY that one of your ancestors may have been a pirate, will you?"

Witness: "I-er-hump-can't say. I'll ask my wife when I get home. Maybe she knows."

Attorney: "You'll ask you wife, will you? Is she your OWN wife?"

Here the Pleasant Lawyer gets up, and says:

"Your honor, I object to that question. What has a man's own wife got to do with this case?"

His honor doesn't answer right off the reel, so the other lawyer jumps up and withdraws the question.

This makes the witness feel pretty good, for he knew he had a wife when he left home that morning, but he doubts that he can swear positively to any such circumstance now.

Attorney, beginning cross-examination once more: "Let's go back to that owl. What sort of an owl was it, if (more sarcasm) it WAS an owl?"

Witness: "It LOOKED like a screech owl."

Attorney: "Well, a screech owl goes 'screech' and a hoot-owl goes "hoot," doesn't it?"

Witness: "I am not sure, sir. I think that's the way it is. I don't know much about owls."

Attorney, shocked almost speechless: "And here you have been telling this poor, unprotected, orphaned jury, these swell, elegant gentlemen, ALL about owls, and now you say you don't know anything about them."

Witness: "Well, ah, oh, I sup——"

Attorney: "Don't you know an owl is a member of the striges family?"

Witness: "Of the Who-ges family?"

Attorney: "Come, now, don't get gay with me, atom. Don't you know the owl is a member of the striges family?"

Witness: "Never met such a family. They don't live on my side of town."

Attorney: "Well, if you saw in the big dictionary that the owl is of such a family, would you say it was true?"

Witness, perking up a bit: "If I saw it in the city directory, I might believe it, but what's the dictionary got to do with it?"

Attorney, waxing superlatively sarcastic: "Will you, speck on the face of creation, kindly permit ME to ask the questions? All I ask of you is that you let ME do that, then YOU answer, if you CAN."

Then the Pleasant Lawyer gets up again.

It certainly is a relief to a witness when the P. L. arises to ejaculate a few broken observations. He is the only rainbow in sight, once things get going.

Pleasant Lawyer: "Your honor, I submit that the big dictionary itself is the highest evidence of what the big dictionary says. If the learned counsel on the other side (great gobs, clusters and festoons of sarcasm) wishes to know WHAT the big dictionary says about owls, screech or otherwise, let him tender the BIG DICTIONARY, and stop snarling and beefing at this gentlemanly, talented, honest and exceptionally bright witness!"

The witness thanks the pleasant lawyer for them kind words, all right, for they are the first he has heard in many hours.

Mean Attorney: "Well, animal, have you a big dictionary at home?"

Witness: "No, sir; the one I use is over in the State Library."

Pleasant Lawyer: "Now, then, your honor, since this accommodating witness has answered the questions, I move that the able (withering contempt) counsel on the other side be required to bring the State Library into court, or shut off their questions about owls. I move to strike from the record everything this downtrodden witness has said about owls, unless the State Library be brought over and handed to the jury for inspection."

Mean Attorney: "Does your honor mean to tell me—ME—that I must bring the entire State Library into court, in order to prove that an owl is a member of the striges family, merely because this stubborn and evidently partisan witness will not say?"

His honor, sighing, patiently: "Well, gentlemen, what has this aforesaid and hereinbefore mentioned owl TO DO WITH THIS CASE, ANYWAY?"

Mean Attorney, getting red in the face, probably about to explode with righteous indignation: "What has it to DO with the case? Why, your honor, opposing counsel brought out the question of owls. Didn't this witness, brazenly and with palpable malice aforethought, say to this grand and magnificent jury that when he went home last Thanksgiving night he saw an owl sitting on the back fence?"

The Grand Climax.

Pleasant Attorney: "I don't think the gentleman said Thanksgiving night; I think it was Christmas. It makes a lot of difference in the matter of seeing things at night, as your honor may know, or—er—may have heard, whether it be Thanksgiving or Christmas. Besides, he didn't say he saw an owl sitting on the back fence. He merely said he went home that night on an owl car."

Everything about owls, the owl car and the back fence is ruled out, and the Mean Lawyer sits down, evidently greatly chagrined and angered.

And the witness?

About all the witness hopes as he leaves the stand is that his wife at home—if she's still there—loves him, anyway, and will continue to think well of him hereafter, notwithstanding the fact that he has been a witness in Atlanta's most famous murder trial.

It makes no difference whatever which side summons you to testify in the Frank case, it's tough luck! You can't win.

You will be made to wish you never had been born before they get through with you—that's the surest thing you know!

Augusta to Share Crop-Moving Fund

AUGUSTA, Aug. 12.—Albert S. Hatch, president of the Merchants' Bank and a member of the committee of the Augusta Clearing House Association, sent to Washington to confer with Secretary McAdoo, of the Treasury Department, in regard to money with which to move the crops, has returned and announces that Augusta spoke for $600,000, which she will get if she wants it. Hatch said Augusta could have probably gotten more had she asked for it.

Georgia J. O. U. A. M. In Session at Macon

MACON, Aug. 12.—The nineteenth biennial convention of the Junior Order of United American Mechanics met here to-day, with about 150 delegates, representing the various councils in the State, in attendance.

It is probable that the next meeting will go to Athens, and that Benjamin J. Symons, of Savannah, will be elected councilor to succeed Judge W. W. Shepard, of Savannah. O. H. Puckett, of Atlanta, state treasurer, is assured of re-election.

Attacks on Dr. Harris Give Defense Good Day

The defense had what was probably its best day on Monday. Medical experts were on the witness stand the larger part of the day. The purpose of their testimony was to knock down, one after another, the sensational statements of Dr. H. F. Harris, secretary of the State Board of Health. All of the witnesses joined in ridiculing every important theory or conclusion that was reached by the distinguished chemist and physician.

Experts for Defense.

These are the medical experts called by the defense to combat the testimony of Dr. Harris:

Dr. Willis F. Westmoreland, first president of the Georgia State Board of Health, and president of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Professor George Bachman, demonstrator in physiology at the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons; formerly one of the faculty of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia.

Dr. T. H. Hancock, a specialist in surgical practice.

Dr. J. C. Olmstead, a graduate of Columbia University, and a practitioner in Atlanta for 32 years.

Here is a summary of Dr. Harris' theories on the death of Mary Phagan and the consensus of the four medical experts' opinions in regard to the theories:

How Views Clashed.

Mary Phagan came to her death within half or three-quarters of an hour of the time she ate her meal of cabbage and wheat bread at home. The condition of the cabbage shows it had been in her stomach no longer than that when death stopped the digestive processes.

"No man in the world could examine those specimens of cabbage and tell either from their condition or from the conditions found in the stomach of the murdered girl nine days after death within hours of the time that elapsed between her meal and her death."

The wound on the back of the girl's head indicates that she was knocked unconscious and later strangled to death.

Called Reckless Conjecture.

"From the data at hand, it is absolutely impossible to tell that the wound on the head caused unconsciousness. It is only a rash and reckless conjecture."

Mary Phagan was the victim of criminal violence other than that superficially apparent.

"This is the most extraordinary surmise that could be imagined. As a matter of fact, he could not have told from the conditions he says were present that she was a victim of criminal violence, even if he had made the examination within a few hours after death, instead of nine days later."

Dr. Harris not only was buffeted about on account of his startling theories and conclusions, but because of his conduct in the case. Attorney Reuben Arnold asked Dr. Westmoreland what he would think of a physician or chemist who was called into a case like that of the Phagan murder; who made the examinations admittedly for the reason that he "liked the Solicitor"; who conducted all of his analyses and experiments in absolute secrecy, who had not even a collaborator to check up on him, and who saved none of the material for the use of chemists who might be engaged by the defense.

Solicitor Dorsey at once made objection to the question.

"I don't know that the question is admissible, but it ought to be," retorted Arnold. "We wish to show that Dr. Harris has violated all of the ethics of his profession, as well as the principles of honesty and decency and fairness. A man's life is at stake, your honor. His case should not be affected by one man's word who deliberately has destroyed all of the material upon which he says he bases his theories."

Dr. Westmoreland was permitted to answer. He said:

"It is the ethical rule that a chemist or physician either call in another expert or preserve the specimens of his test."

Solicitor Dorsey endeavored to show that Dr. Westmoreland might be influenced in his testimony by a breach of professional relations with Dr. Harris which occurred some time ago.

Attempts to Show Dislike.

"How is you feeling toward Dr. Harris?" he asked. "Is it kindly or unkindly?"

The witness replied that it was neither one nor the other.

Asked by Attorney Arnold to go into the matter to which the Solicitor referred, Dr. Westmoreland said that he had preferred charges of scientific dishonesty against Dr. Harris and that the charges had been found well grounded, but were not regarded as sufficiently grave to warrant any action. He thereupon resigned from the State Board of Health, he said, leaving Dr. Harris in his position of secretary.

Joel Hunter, an expert public accountant, testified just before adjournment that it would have taken Leo Frank at least three hours to make up the financial sheet and balance his accounts on the day that Mary Phagan was murdered.

"That wouldn't have given him much time to go to the ball game, would it?" inquired Attorney Hooper.

It is the theory of the State that Frank was planning to go to the ball game Saturday afternoon and that he compiled practically all of the financial sheet Saturday forenoon. This is in opposition to the contention of the defense that Frank did all of the difficult mathematical work in the afternoon, something he could not have done had he just committed a brutal murder.

People's Cry for Justice Is Proof Sentiment Still Lives

By L. F. WOODRUFF.

There is as much sentiment in the world to-day as there was in 1861 or 1776 or 1492 or 1066 or any other date that may come to your recollection.

It's not fashionable to say so, but it's true. People to-day are too prone to accuse themselves and their neighbors of being worshippers of Mammon and declaring that the money-grubbing instinct has crushed out sentiment, patriotism and honesty.

But right now in Atlanta, there is a striking example of the goodness that is man's to-day, just as much as it has ever been.

It is the one bright spot in the hideous slaying of Mary Phagan and the terrors of the trial of Leo Frank.

More people are interested in the case probably than in any criminal action the South has ever known. They are thrilled by it, for they knew that the officers of the law and the Government of the State are spending thousands of dollars to find the man guilty of her murder and punish him.

Had Mary Phagan been of a prominent house, had she been wealthy, had her family or friends been influential there would be no room for comment.

The cynic could say, "Oh, she was a rich girl, what chance would there be for a child of the masses?"

But the Phagan case gives this the lie.

Mary Phagan's family is not wealthy. It is not prominent. It is not influential.

And still the great public has arisen with a demand that can be heard the length and breadth of the nation that her slayer be found and punished.

Had Mary Phagan been a princess of Peachtree instead of just a little Atlanta girl—as good as she was pretty—who had to struggle to make her living, the sentiment would not have been half so fervid.

The sympathy that has gone out to her and her family is a lasting proof of Atlanta's and the South's democracy.

"Poor Old Dad," Poem Touches Ham Lewis

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Senator James Hamilton Lewis isn't the Lewis who is advocating a "Father's Day," although hundreds of correspondents think he is; but—

He has received a copy of a song from a man in Decatur, Ill., entitled "Poor Old Dad." The chorus ran:

No, it isn't meant to slight him,
But it looks a little sad;
All the bouquets made for Mother,
Not a bloom for Poor Old Dad.
"Poor Old Dad!" sighed Senator Lewis. "Now I know we must do something for him."

RINGWORM SPREAD ALL OVER HAND

Itched So Scratched Till Bled. Screamed When Washed. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

R. F. D. No. 2, Box 67, Ellijay, Ga.—"My son's ringworm began on the back of his hand. A fiery red spot came about as large as a dime and it would itch so badly he would scratch it till it bled. It began to spread till it went all over his hand. He would just scream every time I went to wash it. The nail came off on the middle finger.

"I used —— and it got worse all the time. The trouble lasted two or three months, then I sent and got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment and began to use them. I would wash his hand with the Cuticura Soap and dry it good and apply the Cuticura Ointment. Relief was found in two or three days and the ringworm was cured in two weeks after using Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Josie Parks, Jan. 4, 1913.

Not only are Cuticura Soap and Ointment most valuable in the treatment of eczemas and other distressing eruptions of skin and scalp, but they are also most effective in the treatment of pimples, blackheads, red, rough skins, itching, scaly scalps, dandruff, dry, thin and falling hair, chapped hands and shapeless nails. A single cake of Cuticura Soap (25c.) and box of Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are often sufficient when all else has failed. Sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

RESIDENTS OF DALTON'S HOME COUNTY RIDDLE HIS CHARACTER ON STAND

ters were dictated that you commenced writing?—A. Two minutes.

Q. Can you tell how long you were writing those letters?—A. No.

Q. When you were writing those letters, where was Frank?—A. In his office.

Q. After you finished, what did he do?—A. I took them in to him.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. He said he would put them in the envelopes and mail them.

Q. He said you need not wait?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you get anything there Monday?—A. I got the timebook and some papers.

Q. The previous Saturday when you were over there, do you remember Frank working on the financial sheet that morning?—A. No; I helped him get up something about gross—I found afterward it was the average sheet.

made it up. I helped him by transferring some of the things to the sheet?"—A. Yes, but I thought it was the financial sheet.

Q. Didn't you state at the coroner's inquest that you helped him the Saturday before?—A. Yes.

Found Her Error Herself, She Says.

Q. When was it you discovered it was not the financial sheet?—A. I don't know, but I want you to know I discovered the mistake myself.

Q. Now, were you not at the factory the previous Saturday and helped him?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not have that financial sheet before you at the Coroner's inquest, and did you not identify it?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Well, you said he was working on the financial sheet that previous morning?—A. He was not.

Q. Did you not tell the Coroner's jury that you were in the outer office the entire time?—A. I don't know.

Q. Now explain how your mind underwent this change. You said then you were not in his office and now you say you were.—A. I was rattled before the Coroner, because I had never been in a courtroom before.

Q. Now, didn't you say in response to the question, "Do you know what a financial sheet is?" that you did?—A. But I was thinking of the average sheet.

Q. Now, what did you mean by telling the Coroner some of those girls came in for their pay and now saying the only one you know anything about came in for her coat?—A. I just forgot.

Q. Now, didn't Frank say that morning that he would not get up that sheet until Herbert Schiff came down and got up the necessary data? A. Yes, he said he could not go on with his work until Schiff came down.

Q. You do know that Frank said positively he could not make up that sheet until Schiff had gotten up certain data?—A. He did not positively say so. He said he did not mind Mr. Schiff being off if he had done his work, but that he had not done his work.

Q. Miss Hall, didn't you swear before the Coroner's jury that you worked on this financial sheet which is written in ink the Saturday previous, and now to-day you swear it was this sheet which is written in pencil?—A. I did not. I was identifying the handwriting on that sheet.

Q. You said lots of people wrote slanting, and it was hard to identify?—A. Yes.

Q. While you were working in Frank's outer office, you said he was very quiet and you did not know what he was doing?—A. Yes.

Q. You do not know whether he was working on the financial sheet or not?—A. Yes; I saw the papers on his desk that he was working on, and the financial sheet was not among them.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. Why did you tell Mr. Frank you had to get away at 12 o'clock?—A. He said something about wanting me to help him in the afternoon. I told him I had to get away at 12 o'clock, and I did get away at 12 o'clock.

Dalton's Prison Record Exposed.

Dorsey objected to the answer, but was overruled.

Miss Hall was excused and C. B. Dalton was recalled to the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Who is Andrew Dalton?—A. A brother-in-law.

Q. With the same name?—A. Yes.

Q. Who is John Dalton?—A. He is my brother.

Q. Weren't you three sent to the chaingang at the special term of the Walton County Superior Court in 1894?—A. No.

Q. You were not?—A. I was, but the others paid out.

Q. What did you steal?—A. A chop hammer.

Q. Didn't you plead guilty to two more charges?—A. That is the only time I ever went to the chaingang. I don't know how long I served, but I was pardoned in March.

Attorney Arnold moved that the witness' reply in reference to being pardoned be struck from the records.

Q. Didn't you plead guilty to three charges all at the same time? And that the sentence was concurrent on the three charges?—A. All I took was a chop hammer. One of the other boys took a plow stock.

Q. At the February term of 1899, were you not indicted for stealing a bale of cotton?—A. For helping.

Q. Were you found guilty?—A. I was fined $146, which I paid.

Q. After that, did you not go into Gwinnett County and steal?—A. I was indicted for stealing some corn, but I was found not guilty.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. How long since you were in trouble?—A. Eighteen years.

Dorsey to Recall Daisy Hopkins.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. Is it not a fact that there are now four indictments against you in Walton County for selling liquor?—A. If there are I don't know it.

Q. Is it not a fact that they let you get out of the county and were glad to get rid of you?—A. I have been back there every year.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. Do you know that Daisy Hopkins knows Leo Frank?—A. I do.

Q. How do you know?—A. She told me she knew him, and then I saw her talking to him.

Arnold interrupted: "I object to what she said."

"That's all right, then," Dorsey replied. "I will recall her."

Dalton was excused and the defense began an attack on his character with witnesses from Walton County.

B. S. Cooper, the first witness called, was accompanied by a small boy of 6. He held the boy on his lap while he testified on the witness stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A farmer.

Q. How long have you been in Walton County?—A. Fifty years.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. I do.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Bad.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. I would not.

Wouldn't Believe Him Under Oath.

At this point C. B. Dalton was called for but could not be found. Dorsey said he would admit that the witness was speaking of the Dalton who had testified against Frank. Hooper was excused and J. H. Patrick was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. In Walton County.

Q. What do you do?—A. Carpenter and bailiff.

Q. Have you seen Dalton here this morning?—A. I shook hands with him.

Q. Do you know his general character for truth and veracity and is it good or bad?—A. Bad.

Q. Would you believe him on oath? A. No.

The witness was excused and W. T. Mitchell was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Walton County.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen him this morning? A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and I. M. Hamilton was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you live?—A. Walton County.

Q. What is your business?—A. Farmer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you believe him under oath?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Miss Laura Atkinson, of No. 30 Ella street, Atlanta, a woman apparently 35 years of age, was called to the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Where do you work?—A. At the Empire Printing Company.

Q. Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes, for two days.

Denies Dalton's Story of Strolls.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever walk home with him from the Busy Bee Cafe on Forsyth street?—A. I did not.

Q. Were you ever with him around the National Pencil Company?—

Dorsey interrupted: "I object," he said. "The witness said nothing that reflected on this woman."

Arnold: "It was a reflection for him to say that he was with her."

The objection was sustained.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. How long have you known Dalton?—A. About six months.

Q. Were you ever in his company?—A. I have been in his company three times.

The witness was excused, and Mrs. Minnie Smith called. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Where do you work?—A. National Pencil Company.

Q. Are you the Mrs. Smith who lives at No. 148 South Pryor street?—A. Yes.

Q. Are you the only Mrs. Smith at that address?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. No.

Q. Were you ever in his company?—A. No.

The witness was excused. Alonzo Mann, the office boy at the National Pencil Factory, was then called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where do you work?—A. At the National Pencil Company as an office boy.

Q. How long have you been there? A. Since April 1 of this year.

Q. Where do you stay when you are not at work?—A. Right outside the office.

Left Frank and Miss Hall in Office.

Q. How late do you work on Saturdays?—A. I had only been there two Saturdays before the murder.

Q. You don't know how late you stayed?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the office Memorial Day?—A. At 11:30.

Q. Who did you leave there?—A. Miss Hall and Mr. Frank.

Q. Do you recall what you did that morning?—A. No.

Q. Did you phone Mr. Schiff?—A. Yes. Mr. Frank told me to, but I could not get him

Q. How late did you stay those other Saturdays?—A. 3:30 to 4 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank bring any women there and buy them drinks?—A. No.

Q. Who do you recall seeing there that day?—A. Mr. Holliday, Mr. Irby, Mr. McCrary and Mr. Darley.

Q. Can you recall anybody else?—A. No.

Q. Did you see Corinthia Hall?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you see a man come in to see about his boy?—A. I don't know.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. What time did Mr. Frank get there that morning?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did he go out?—A. One time, as I recall.

Q. Do you know how long he was gone?—A. No, I can't remember.

The witness was excused and Wade Campbell was called.

Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where are you employed?—A. I have been at the National Pencil Company for a year and a half.

Q. Do you recall a conversation with Mrs. White the Monday following the murder?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what she said?—A. She said that as she went into the factory at 12 o'clock she saw a negro sitting there. She said that when she came down he was not there, and she heard voices, but could not tell where.

Q. Were you at the factory Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. At what time?—A. About 9:35.

Q. Did you see Frank?—A. Yes; I went right to his office.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. Yes; I was jollying him and he was jollying me.

Q. Were you on the fourth floor Tuesday morning?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley up there? A. No.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Do you board with Mr. Darley? A. I did.

Q. Where were you Saturday night of the murder?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't you go to the Bijou that night with Mr. Darley?

"I object," said Rosser.

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

Q. Darley is a married man with five children, is he not?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see Miss Dixon that night?

Rosser—I object.

Judge Roan sustained him.

Q. You reported to Darley on April 28 that your sister had seen a negro in the pencil factory on Saturday, about 10 o'clock?—A. Yes; he sent me to see my sister.

Q. What did she tell you?—A. She said she saw a negro man on the first floor. She said she heard some indistinct voices as she went in.

Q. You saw that blood on the second floor?—A. I saw what they said was blood.

Q. How did it look?—A. I didn't notice it close enough to tell about it.

Grilled Concerning Statement to Dorsey.

Q. Where do you work?—A. As an inspector at the National Pencil Company.

Q. You made a statement on May 12?—A. I made a statement to you. I don't remember the date.

Q. Didn't you state that your sister said she saw the negro as she was coming out?—A. I did not.

Q. You deny it, then?—A. I do.

Q. Is this your signature?—A. It looks very much like it.

Q. You can't swear that this is your signature?—A. No, I would not swear it.

Q. You say that you don't know whether that is your signature?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you deny making this statement?—A. I told you I did.

Q. Did you not read over this statement and make certain corrections?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you not say in this statement that your sister went there at 12:30 and could not see her husband and went back?—A. I don't know.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. How did you come to go to Dorsey's office?—A. I received a subpena.

Q. You thought you had to go?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you know that it was not worth the paper it was written on?—A. No.

Wanted To See Corrections Made.

Q. Did you just point out these corrections, or did you wait and see that they were made?—A. I think I waited.

Q. Who was there?—A. Starnes, Campbell and Dorsey.

Q. Did they all ask you questions?—A. Yes.

Q. All of these 21 pages are your statement?—A. Yes.

Q. You were asked all of these questions?—A. Yes.

Q. Were you asked at the time you were in the office if anyone came in and did you answer "No"?—A. Yes.

Q. You answered that someone came in to get their pay?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know this negro Jim Conley?—A. Yes.

Q. After this murder do you recall seeing him reading newspapers?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. On the fourth floor.

Q. How many times?—A. Twice.

Q. Is it anything unusual to see spots on the metal room floor?—A. No.

Q. Have you seen the place where Conley said he found the body?—A. No.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. Where was Conley sitting when he was reading the paper?—A. By the elevator.

Q. Where was he the second time?—A. In the rear of the building.

Q. What paper was he reading?—A. I don't know.

Q. Do you know whether he was reading about the crime?—A. No.

Q. Was it an extra?—A. I think so.

Q. You knew Conley could write?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not report it to the officers?—A. No.

Q. Did Frank know he could write?—A. I don't know.

Q. Where did you see him writing?—A. In the boxroom.

Q. Did you ever see him writing with a pencil?—A. Yes.

Q. Who did you tell what your sister told you?—A. Mr. Darley.

Q. How often did you see those spots in the metal room?—A. Occasionally.

Q. How often have you seen those spots in the hall?—A. Oh, very often.

Q. Did you see the spots where those chips were taken up?—A. Yes.

Q. You saw those spots everywhere, what everybody said was blood, and yet you tell the jury you didn't pay any attention to it?—A. Yes.

Q. Other people got down and looked at them, didn't they?—A. Yes.

Rosser interrupted.

"I object to what other people said and saw. It is utterly immaterial and irrelevant," he said.

"We want to show," said Mr. Hooper, interrupting, "that this man was interested and that he went out to see his sister about the negro, and yet he came back there and was in no way interested."

"I think you can ask questions along that line," said the court.

"Well, we want to record an objection," said Rosser.

Q. Where and when have you ever seen on that second floor anything that looked like that spot?—A. I did not look close enough at it to know.

Q. When did you see other spots like it on the floor of the metal room?—A. There were other spots, but I don't know whether they were like that spot or not.

Q. Did you talk to your brother-in-law about what your sister said?—A. He told me about it.

Court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Says Girl Didn't Ask For Mary Phagan's Pay.

When court convened at 2 o'clock the defense called for Gordon Bailey, the negro elevator boy at the National Pencil Factory, but he did not answer. Philip Chambers was also called, but failed to respond.

Miss Magnolia Kennedy, one of the pencil factory employees in the metal department, was then called and took the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Where do you work?—A. At the National Pencil Company.

Q. How long have you worked there?—A. Four years.

Q. In what department did you work?—A. In the metal department.

Q. Did you know Mary Phagan?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know Helen Ferguson?—A. Yes.

Q. On the day before April 26, did you draw your pay?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you draw it?—A. From Mr. Schiff at the pay window.

Q. Did you see Helen Ferguson? A. I had my hand on her shoulder when she got her money.

Q. Was Mr. Frank there?—A. No.

Q. Did you ask for Mary Phagan's pay?—A. No.

Q. Did you go out with her?—A. Yes. We went downstairs and waited for Grace Hix.

Q. Did Helen Ferguson ever say anything about Mary's pay?—A. She said at 5 o'clock that Mary was not there.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Were you at the factory April 28?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you find any hair on that lathing machine?—A. Yes.

Q. Whose was it?—A. It looked like Mary's.

Mary and Ferguson Girl Companions.

Q. You and Mary and Grace Hix were the only girls in that department, were you not?—A. Yes.

Q. How did Mary's hair look?—A. It was light.

Q. You don't mean to say you were with Helen all that afternoon?—A. No.

Q. She and Mary were friends and went together all the time, did they not?—A. Yes.

Q. You don't know what she did when you were not with her, do you?—A. No.

Q. You saw those spots on the floor, did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. How did they look?—A. There were white stains all over them.

Q. How large?—A. About as large as that piece of paper, eight by ten inches.

Q. Did you ever notice any spots on the second floor like the one pointed out and said to be blood?—A. No, I never did.

Q. And you have been there four years?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You told Mr. Dorsey you thought that was Mary Phagan's hair on the lathe. You don't know that it was Mary Phagan's hair, do you?—A. No, sir.

Q. You went with Helen Ferguson to get your pay that Friday?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see her speak to Mr. Frank?—A. No.

Q. Was there any necessity for her to see Mr. Frank when Mr. Schiff was at the pay window?—A. No.

Negro Elevator Boy on Stand.

Miss Kennedy was excused and Gordon Bailey, the negro elevator boy, took the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Where did you work in April of this year, Snowball?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. On the Friday before Memorial Day did you see Jim Conley talking to Mr. Frank and hear Mr. Frank ask him to come back Saturday?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Frank tell Jim to come back?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank bring any women there?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see Conley watching at that lower door?—A. No.

Q. Were you at the factory last Thanksgiving Day?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did you ever see Conley reading a newspaper?—A. I saw him looking at papers down there at the station house.

Q. You don't know wether he was reading or not?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank make any improper proposal to any lady in that factory?—A. No.

Q. You never saw Mr. Frank talking to Conley at any time, did you?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever see Mr. Frank at all, Friday?—A. I saw him about 1 o'clock. He was talking to Mr. Schiff.

Dorsey took the witness on the cross-examination.

Q. Snowball, when were you arrested?—A. Monday.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank before you were arrested?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was he?—A. On the second floor.

Q. What was he doing?—A. I don't know.

The negro was excused and Phillip Chambers, a boy 14 years old, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Did you ever work for the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes.

Q. Where and in what capacity?—A. I went there in December and stayed until March.

Q. How late did you stay on Saturdays?—A. Until about 4:30 o'clock.

Q. Were you ever absent on Saturdays during the months you were there?—A. Between 11 and 12 o'clock I was sometimes sent to the Bell street plant to get the payrool.

Q. Did you ever see any women around Mr. Frank's office with beer and drinks?—A. His wife came up there once while I was there. She was the only one I ever saw.

Q. Did you ever see Jim Conley around there?—A. Yes. He was around there sweeping, sometimes.

Q. What time?—A. Saturday afternoons.

Q. Didn't Mr. Holloway issue an order that no more sweeping should be done Saturday afternoons?—A. Mr. Darley did.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You and Frank were pretty good friends, were you not?—A. Just like other folks.

The State here referred to several alleged conversations with J. N. Gantt, along the lines of Jim Conley's most sinister testimony which the boy denied and Attorney Arnold moved that it all be stricken out.

Dorsey arose to speak, but Arnold interrupted.

"Your honor," he said, "are we going to allow a speech before the jury on this subject?"

Judge Roan: "Take the jury out."

Arnold: "Never mind, let them stay." The jury remained.

Solicitor Dorsey: "Your Honor, they have gone into the question of Frank's relations to women. We have a right to show if there was anything improper towards this boy. He denies it. I am laying the ground to impeach him by Gantt."

Judge Roan: "I rule out both questions and answers."

Defense Threatens to Move for a Mistrial.

Arnold. "It is the unfairest thing I have ever heard of, brought in in this illegal way. It has been brought up by this miserable negro. It is beyond indignation to sit here and listen to such stuff. The charge could be brought against you or me or any member of the jury by such inuendos If it comes up again I am going to move for a mistrial."

Judge Roan: "I have already ruled it out."

Dorsey: "Well, we will put up Gantt and let you rule on that."

The witness was excused and Minola McKnight, the cook at the Selig residence, was put on the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Were you working with Mrs. Selig last Memorial Day?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Mr. and Mrs. Frank live with Mr. and Mrs. Selig?—A. Yes.

Q. Where was their room?—A. Upstairs

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank the morning of April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did he get his breakfast?—A. About 8,

Q. Did you see him again that day?—A. Yes, about 1:20.

Q. When he came home to dinner?—A. Yes.

Q. Was Albert McKnight there in the kitchen that day?—A. He was not.

Q. Could you see in that mirror in the dining room from the kitchen?—A. No.

Q. Do you recall what time he left after dinner?—A. Sometime after 2 o'clock.

Says She Made False Statement.

Q. What time did he return?—A. About 6:30 o'clock.

Q. You left him there?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you see him again?—A. Sunday, I don't know what time.

Q. Did the detectives come and arrest you?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did they take you?—A. Over on Central avenue.

Q. To the Thrower Building?—A. Yes.

Q. Was this man Dorsey there?—A. Yes.

Q. And these two detectives?—A. Yes.

Q. Who else?—A. My husband.

Q. What did they do?—A. They said I told my husband things and tried to make me say I had. I told them it was all lies, but they would not listen to me.

Q. What was your husband trying to get you to tell these detectives?—A. That Miss Lucille was telling her mother Sunday morning that Mr. Frank had made her get out of bed.

Q. What did you tell them?—A. That it was a lie.

Q. What did they do?—A. They said they would put me in jail, and they carried me out and put me in the patrol wagon.

Q. Put you in the patrol wagon? What did they ddo next?—A. They had me in a hole and I signed a paper to get away.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Minola, you made a statement May 3 in my office before this visit you were speaking about. Is not this the statement you made: "I was at the Frank home Saturday, April 26. Frank came there at about 1 o'clock. He did not seem to want to go back to work and stayed there until 3 o'clock?"

The negro woman interrupted Solicitor Dorsey at this point to say she said 2 instead of 3 o'clock.

Q. Before June 2 Mrs Pickett and Mr. Graves, of the Beck & Gregg Hardware Company, were out to see

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE OF THE MEN AND RELIGION FORWARD MOVEMENT

NURSES' CLUB TO THROW OPEN NEW HOME

Informal Reception Arranged for Tuesday Afternoon and Evening in Permanent Quarters.

The Atlanta Registered Nurses' Association will formally open its new home in the Herbert Apartments, No. 246 Courtland avenue, Wednesday afternoon with an informal reception. The entertainment will continue into the evening hours.

Several months ago the registered nurses organized a permanent club to establish a central directory and eventually to secure and maintain a nurses' home. The membership includes over 100 graduate nurses who will, as a body, seek to protect the public and promote good fellowship among the members. The home has been comfortablye furnished and will accommodate twenty nurses.

The registered nurses have federated with the City Federation. The association has as its president Miss Kamesky; first vice president, Miss Berta Thompson; second vice president, Miss Caroline Norton; recording secretary; Miss Florence Attwell, corresponding secretary Miss J. M. Candlish; treasurer, Miss Mamie Mobley, and auditor, Miss E. F. Tupman.

The committee work has been divided as follows: Membership, Miss Frances Patton, chairman; register, Miss Alberta Dozier, chairman; nominations, Miss E. B. Whatley, chairman; home, Mrs. Mollie Rosenberg, chairman; auditing, Miss E. F. Tupman, chairman; publicity, Miss C. M. Johnson, chairman, and Miss Virginia Gibbs. The registrar will be Mrs. Theodosia Wardell.

The advisory board is composed of the following: Dr. Charles Boynton, Dr. William Perrin Nicolson, Dr. C. W. Summerall, J. B. Paulin, Dr. C. W. Strickler, Mrs. Charles J. Haden, Mrs. W. B. Price-Smith, Mrs. Fred Hodgson, Mrs. W. L. Peel and Mrs. H. E. W. Palmer.

The association has sent out hundreds of invitations and will be assisted in receiving by the advisory board, the officers of the association and the following superintendents of the hospitals of Atlanta: Miss Phebeck, of Grady Hospital; Miss McGlynn, of the Noble Sanitarium; Miss Morton, of the Davis-Fischer Sanitarium; Miss Morgan, of the Tabernacle Infirmary; Miss Thomas, of the Elkin-Goldsmith Sanitarium, and Miss Albert Dozier, Miss J. M. Candlish, Miss Virginia Gibbs, Miss Mamie Mobley, Miss E. B. Whatley, Miss G. S. Tupman, Mrs. Mollie Rosenberg and Miss C. M. Johnson.

Italy Adds to Its Seacoast Guard

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, Aug. 12.—Thirteen new torpedo boat destroyers have been ordered by the Italian Admiralty, it was learned to-day.

This addition to the navy is made necessary by the extension of seacoast which Italy must guard in Africa.

GILMER TO ELECT SHERIFF.

ELLIJAY.—Sheriff J. H. Penland, of Gilmer County, having been appointed a United States Deputy Marshal and having resigned the office of Sheriff, the Ordinary has called a special election for August 28 to fill the unexpired term. Ex-Sheriff Bob Milton and J. H. Ray, present Tax Receiver, are the opposing candidates.

THERE HAS BEEN NO DULL SEASON OVER OUR LINES

Economy and efficiency are so combined in the Atlanta Telephone service that business houses which use both systems instruct their employees to route all possible calls by preference through our exchange.

No Hostile Feeling Shown Envoy Lind

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy sent a reassuring note to President Wilson to-day, saying not the slightest antagonism to Mr. Lind's presence has been shown in Mexico City.

LIND CAUTIOUSLY HUNTS KEY TO SITUATION

Studies Conditions in Mexico While Administration Awaits Report Before Planning.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 12.—Special Envoy John Lind, sent to Mexico City by President Wilson, is making himself thoroughly acquainted with conditions in Mexico. The watchword of the present situation is caution, as Mr. Lind and the attaches of the United States Embassy fear that a hasty step will cause complete failure of the Ambassador's mission.

It was reported that Nelson O'Shaughnessy, Charge d'Affaires of the United States Embassy, had contrived to arrange an official visit at the National Palace to-day. It was assumed that he might then present to President Huerta or Foreign Minister Aldape the note given him by Envoy Lind.

Mr. Lind called at the embassy again to-day. He refuses to say anything about his instructions from Washington.

Hostile Acts Are Lacking.

To the layman it seems that the Mexican situation is standing still rather than showing improvement, although to official eyes the lack of any direct hostile action by Mexico or Mexicans is a good omen. The Mexican people are apathetic and conservatives believe that President Huerta virtually stood alone in his defiance of the United States. However, allowance is made for the Latin temperament. If anti-American feeling flares up on a grand scale, it may sweep the republic.

Claiming the Government has been misrepresented, President Huerta has placed a strict censorship upon the cable line. Even telegrams to the United States State Department pass under this careful inquiry.

N. A. Jennings, correspondent for the Hearst papers, and Marvin Perree, another American newspaper man, released from prison last night after being detained 24 hours, were kept under close surveillance to-day. Both feared they would be expelled under the undesirable alien law.

Embassy Guard Declined.

The arrival at Vera Cruz of more United States warships has caused bitter comment in the Mexican press. The commandante of the rurales has offered to provide a permanent guard about the United States Embassy, but Mr. O'Shaughnessy informed the Mexican Government that the Stars and Stripes provide enough protection.

Mr. Lind, despite warnings of his friends, walks abroad in the streets or rides in an open automobile, making no effort to hide his identity. At the Hotel Lascurain he mingles freely with the other guests.

Mrs. Lind, who suffered a slight indisposition upon her arrival here, was reported better to-day.

President Waits Message From Lind Before Acting.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—President Wilson to-day awaited word from Mexico City relative to the success of former Governor Lind and his mission of mediation before announcing, or even formulating any definite Mexican policy. Beyond the proposals which Governor Lind carried, it is understood that the administration has no plans, and that no further steps will be taken until the President's envoy reports on his success in dealing with Huerta.

It is considered likely that Governor Lind will transmit President Wilson's message to President Huerta through Charge O'Shaughnessy either to-day or tomorrow.

It is reported the Senate is considering holding an executive session to discuss the Mexican situation to discover the consensus of opinion in the Upper House concerning the steps taken by the administration in dealing with the matter.

Cruiser Pittsburg Sent Back to Mexican Port.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., Aug. 12.—The armored cruiser Pittsburg, which had started for San Diego from Guayamas, turned back to-day to remain at Guayamas pending further instructions from Washington. The Pittsburg was ordered back by wireless.

The supply ship Glacier, which was to have left Guayamas to-day with refugees, was ordered to remain at the Mexican port indefinitely.

Youth Fined Heavily On Flirting Charge

W. R. Livermore, No. 47 Trinity avenue, a bookkeeper, feels convinced that mashing is a costly pastime.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston fined him $25.75 Tuesday for an affront to two girls, sisters, in Trinity avenue, and also gave him 21 days in the stockade for violating the probation ordinance. Livermore admitted that he was intoxicated. He had been on probation since last May for drinking.

Both girls appeared in court.

BILL PROTECTING HEIFER CALVES IS KILLED

House Wastes Time on Measure That Might Have Been Given Child Labor Act.

Take the child slaves, shackle them,
Throttle them if they laugh;
Enslave the women if you will,
But save my darling calf.

That was the burden of the song Monday afternoon in the Georgia House of Representatives—the same House of Representatives that has persistently refused to consider any measure to relieve the condition of the thousands of child-slaves in the State—when the legislators, for two hours, discussed solemnly and earnestly a bill designed to protect the heifer calves of the State from the persecutions of the butcher and the farmer by prohibiting the killing of the "innocent, pure-eyed little things"—that is what one member called them—until they have reached the mature age of 2 years.

Rhetorical thunderbolts were hurled by the champions of the calves at the heads of those who were determined that the last calf should be executed, to be met by bursting bombs of metaphor that shook the rafters and penetrated even to the farthest confines of the gallery; epigrammatic skyrockets threw their trails of fiery language into the running gears of the pinwheels of logic; the defenders of the calf hurled Biblical passages into the camp of the veal eaters, and the bloodthirsty members who wanted blood, red blood, delved into the poets and flung quotation after quotation into the very teeth of the advancing army of calfdom.

Bill Bleated—Then Died.

And after two hours the calf bill poked its head up through the maze of oratory and near-oratory, through the mud of condemnation and the whitewash of appreciation, gave one plaintive, despairing bleat, and died, 91 votes to 73.

Members who had viewed with equanimity and magnificent self-control the smothering of measures to aid the child-slaves felt impelled to rise in their might when the rights of the calf were assailed. Here's how some of them felt:

Mr. Conner, of Spalding—"If this bill is not passed, in five years cows will be as scarce as hens' teeth."

Mr. Ennis, of Baldwin—"Saving the calves is no laughing matter. If you had seen the slaughter of these innocent little things as I have you would vote aye."

Mr. Lloyd, of Newton—"This bill is the worst kind of class legislation. Why can't the bull calf have the same right to life, liberty and pursuit of happiness that is granted the heifer calf? A man's calves are his private property and should not be regulated."

Mr. Culpepper, of Meriwether—"Why is it these men want to protect the heifer calves and allow the bull calves to go to their doom, when it is a fact that the 'female of the species is more deadly than the male?'"

Mr. Picquet, of Richmond—"The Bible says, 'Thou shalt not kill,' and it applies to calves as well as human beings. It makes my heart bleed to see these innocent little calves cruelly, brutally slaughtered to provide a veal eater's holiday."

"Prodigal" Is Provided For.

Mr. Shuptrine, of Chatham—"The bill should not pass under any circumstances. We have the Bible on our side, for it distinctly ordered that the fatted calf be killed for the prodigal son."

Mr. Spence, of Carroll—"I am outraged and indignant. This bill is the most diabolical bill I have ever seen. I vote NO!"

Mr. Wimberly, of Bibb—"To kill this bill means that the slaughter of the innocents will be continued, and what man, be he ever so strong, can endure the sight of the wild-eyed, bleating calf being led to the slaughter? There are 365,000 calves butchered in Georgia every year. If they were saved, think of the number of cows we would have in four years and the lowing herds that would wind slowly over the lea! Think of the rivers and lakes of milk, and if we can raise enough strawberries, think of the strawberries and cream we could have."

Mr. Berry, of Whitfield—"I arise to explain that I am not going to explain my vote."

The bill was introduced by Nelson, of Clayton, and favorably reported by the Committee on General Agriculture, of which Kimbrough, of Harris, is chairman.

Crusade Against Short Weight Ice Peddlers Pushed

The campaign against short weight ice peddlers has taken a more aggressive turn. Chief Beavers has detailed Policeman Holley to assist Inspector of Weights and Measures Buchanan in making cases against offenders.

As a result of this increased activity two negro peddlers were tried and fined by Recorder Pro Tem Preston. Five more cases are set for trial Tuesday afternoon.

The crusade, it is believed, will save Atlantans hundreds of dollars during the remainder of the summer. Inspector Buchanan and Officer Holley got direct evidence against the peddlers by following them and weighing the ice just after it had been weighed by the peddlers and delivered to the consumer.

Electric Light Men To Meet in Macon

MACON, Aug. 12.—The annual convention of the Southeastern section of the National Electric Light Association, comprising the States of Georgia, Florida, Alabama and the Carolinas, will begin in Macon Thursday morning. About 400 electric light men are expected to attend.

Thursday night there will be a reception at the Dempsey Hotel and Friday a barbecue for the visitors at the Log Cabin Club. A number of prominent men are scheduled to make addresses.

Disease Turns White Children Into Black

PHILADELPHIA, PA., Aug. 12.—Eighteen-month-old twin boys in the Children's Homeopathic Hospital are suffering from one of the rarest diseases known to medical science. It has changed their color from white to black.

The disease is pseudo leucamia, or Hodgkin's disease, and it is an affection of the lymphatic glands in which the number of white blood corpuscles is increased and the red blood corpuscles greatly diminished.

Saves Girl From Injury in Runaway

AUGUSTA, Aug. 12.—J. P. Doughty, Jr., a prominent cotton man, proved himself a hero in a runaway here yesterday when he saved Miss Frankie Rubenstein, an attractive Augusta girl, from serious injury. Miss Rubenstein was driving up Broad street when her horse became unmanageable. Doughty attempted to grab the reins, but was unsuccessful, and then he seized a wheel. He was thrown, but he held firm and soon climbed into the buggy and secured the lines, bringing the horse to a stop.

'Sleepiest Man' Is Looking for a Job

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—William O'Leary, described by his wife as the sleepiest man in Chicago, was wide awake to-day and out looking for a job. O'Leary appeared before Judge Sabath to answer charges brought by his wife. She said he had slept all the time during the last two weeks, except the few minutes each day which he spent in eating.

"If you'll kiss your two little babies and promise to wake up and get a job in the next two weeks, I'll let you go," said the judge.

State Pays $1 Per Minute for Prayers

MADISON, WIS., Aug. 12.—Prayers for the Legislature cost the State $843 during the session of 1913. Officiating chaplains receive $3 for each invocation. In the Assembly 153 invocations were offered, at a total compensation of $459, while in the Senate there were 218 invocations, costing $384.

Estimating the length of each of the 251 prayers at three minutes they cost $1 a minute.

SECRET ORDER IN CONTEST FOR BIG PRIZE

Georgian's Want Ad Offer Arouses Enthusiasm Among Organizations and Individuals.

"Our lodge has been planning to move into new quarters for some time, but we have never had quite enough money to fit up a lodgeroom properly," said a prominent Atlanta secret order member to the Want Ad Man Tuesday. "I talked it over with several friends last night, and we're going out to win that $1,000 first prize in your Want Ad Contest."

"Good luck to you," said the Want Ad Man. "Pitch in and win. And even if you don't land first, that $500 worth of furniture for second prize will go a long way toward making your lodgeroom comfortable."

Several organizations, including churches, lodges and charitable societies, have announced their intention of entering The Georgian Want Ad Contest, rounding up want ads by the thousand and rolling up enough votes to win. The women are especially enthusiastic. They are always workers in their churches.

Individual Prizes.

Individuals, too, are taking on renewed interest with the announcement of the complete prize list. The automobile for the first grand prize and the tour to California for two persons, all expenses paid, will be the goal of every worker. But there is consolation for those who fail to win first or second, for five prizes are offered in each of four classes—men, women, boys and girls—and these prizes include motorcycles, player pianos, bicycles, watches, diamonds and other articles worth trying for.

The Want Ad Man is in his office, fourth floor of the Foote & Davies Building, every day until 5 o'clock. On Tuesdays, Thursday and Saturdays he remains at his desk until 8 o'clock at night, and he is anxious to have a heart-to-heart chat with every contestant and prospective contestant. He will give every aid possible, explain all details, show how success is to be had, and give every contestant the benefit of his experience. Every contestant should see him this week.

Pretty Woman Aids Restaurant Bandits

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Assisted by a pretty young woman, two automobile bandits to-day raided the cafe of George Angelica, obtained jewelry from Angelica worth $1,150 and $75 in cash.

Angelica was counting his money when a young man and young woman entered the rear door. He refused to serve them because it was after closig hours, but the young woman pleaded so prettily that he went to the ice box for a bottle of champagne. When he turned about he faced a large revolver and another young man.

Slaying Ends Feud Of North Carolinans

ALEXANDER, N. C., Aug. 12—A feud of four years' standing ended in the killing Monday evening of Dr. W. J. Clontz by O. M. West, a rural mail carrier. Three bullets were fired, either of which would nave been fatal.

West met Dr. Clontz on the street and, with the remark, "I hear you said you would kill me on sight," drew a revolver and began firing.

West surrendered to an officer and later was carried to Asheville and lodged in jail.

Spooning Couple Sit On Turtle; All Move

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 12.—A young couple, strolling on Sullivan's Island became fatigued. Why not sit on that overturned boat over there? They did. But the "boat" moved. She shrieked and the "boat" moved faster. It was a 600-pound turtle asleep on the beach. The turtle carried six men to the water. In its nest were found 200 eggs.

Spooning couples on Sullivan's Island now carry lanterns.

Mourners Forget Corpse When 3 Are Killed at Funeral

MACON, Aug. 12.—The preacher, a deacon and one of the women mourners were killed in a shooting affair at a negro funeral at Round Oak, in Jones County, late yesterday afternoon.

The preacher stopped the services, upon hearing pistol shots near the church, and rushed out to quell the disorder. He was shot just as he stepped out of the doorway. The other two were killed in a general shooting affray that followed. The negro minister was T. M. Howard, of Macon.

In the excitement the funeral was forgotten, and the corpse lay in the church all night, but this morning another preacher was secured and the interment took place.

Sheriff Roberts went to Round Oak early this morning when news of the affair reached him at Grays.

Must Pay Alimony Or Serve Jail Term

MACON, Aug. 12.—D. F. Arnold, a contractor, has been given an extension to September 5, on or before which date he must pay $285 alimony to his wife or go to jail. When arraigned before Judge Mathews on a contempt charge because he had allowed the alimony to become in arrears, Arnold asked for more time, and the judge allowed him 27 more days. He is under order of the court to pay Mrs. Arnold $75 a month.

Two other Macon men have been put in jail in the last 30 days for not paying alimony.

24 Factories Take Space for Exhibits

Only seven days remain for exhibitors to lease space in the permanent manufacturers' exposition, to be held in the Chamber of Commerce Building. Twenty-four manufacturers have already contracted.

Tuesday the committee in charge visited the various manufacturers in the city. Meetings will be held each day until next Tuesday.

On each floor of the Chamber of Commerce Building occupied by the exposition, telephones and desk space will be provided for the transaction of business. A competent man will be employed to show visitors around.

Georgia Girl Bathers Startle Charleston

CHARLESTON, Aug. 12.—Two perfectly attractive girls from Georgia, it is said, have made surf bathing on Sullivan's Island more popular than ever by their somewhat advanced style of ocean garb. They wear men's suits, natty affairs, with stripes about the shoulders and knees.

Sullivan's Islanders say they never saw any handsomer or more becoming men's bathing suits than these.

LOS ANGELES EXAMINER'S NEW HOME IS DEDICATED; MANY NOTED MEN SPEAK

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 12.—Fifteen thousand representative citizens of Los Angeles, including city and county officials, men of the cloth and members of the leading civic and fraternal organizations, witnessed yesterday the ceremonies of laying the cornerstone and raising the California Bear Flag at the new home of The Los Angeles Examiner, now in course of construction.

These ceremonies were preceded by a great parade throughout the downtown streets, which acted as the escort of William Randolph Hearst and Mayor H. H. Rose to the new building site.

In the speakers' stand were leaders of the civic and religious life in Los Angeles, while in the grandstand was a brilliant assemblage.

The ceremonies were held under the auspices of the Los Angeles Advertising Club, and Ernest Ingold, president of the club, introduced James R. H. Wagner, president of the Los Angeles Realty Board, as master of ceremonies. The Rev. Charles Edward Bock, pastor of the First Methodist Church, offered prayer. Mr. Wagner presented the Bear Flag to The Examiner from the people of Southern California. Arthur W. Kinny, president of the Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce, made the speech of acceptance. The Right Rev. Joseph H. Johnson, Episcopal Bishop of the Diocese of Los Angeles, made an address, and the Rev. Father George Donahoo, representing the Right Rev. Thomas J. Conary, Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles, spoke.

Silver Trowel Given Mr. Hearst.

Douglas White, of the Advertising Club, presented a silver trowel to Mayor Rose, who officially laid the cornerstone and then presented the trowel to Mr. Hearst. Dr. Sigmund Hechtal, rabbi of the B'Nai Brith Congregation, made the closing remarks.

It was in acknowledging the gift of the trowel from Mayor Rose that Mr. Hearst delivered his address, in which he voiced his confidence in the great future of Los Angeles and Southern California. The various speakers paid tribute to Mr. Hearst and to The Examiner's influence in the expanding progress and prosperity of Southern California.

A chorus of several hundred voices rendered patriotic music.

Mr. Hearst said in his address:

I thank you most heartily on behalf of the members of the Los Angeles Examiner staff and on my own behalf for this beautiful memento and for the generous sentiments which have accompanied it. It is a pleasant thing for us to to feel that we are here among so many friends, and it is also a pleasant thing for us to feel, as we all do feel, a sincere reciprocal friendship for the citizens of Los Angeles and a deep devotion to the best interests of this great city.

Notable Occasion for Paper.

This is a notable occasion for us of The Examiner. It marks a milestone in the progress of the paper. It is made doubly memorable by the participation of our Mayor, and by the attendance of so many distinguished citizens. Yet with all its importance and significance it is only one of the many occasions which we gratefully remember where you have kindly encouraged our efforts and stimulated us to further endeavor.

Under such encouragement and stimulus The Examiner has grown until it is one of the biggest and best of all my publications. Certainly there is no publication of mine from Los Angeles to London in the success of which I take a greater pride and pleasure.

I take pleasure in the success of The Examiner first because I am a Californian and take pleasure in the success of everything Californian. (Applause.)

I was not born in Los Angeles, but I was born in California.

A man is a Los Angelan, no matter on what street of Los Angeles he is born or lives, and a man is a Californian no matter in what part of California he is born or lives.

Bound Together Closely.

We Californians are learning more and more that we are all bound together by the firm bonds of fraternity and that the combined success of all as individuals make the complete success of all as a community. We are learning that a friendly rivalry does not mean a foolish jealousy; that the fullest achievement is through co-operation, and that whatever operates for the benefit of California operates for the benefit of all of us as Californians.

I take pleasure in the success of The Examiner, too, because I realize that Los Angeles is destined to become, and is fast becoming, one of the greatest cities in the world. (Applause.)

I want my system of publications to be essentially a national institution, and to be national it must have representation in Los Angeles as adequate as in any of the greatest cities of the nation.

Finally, I take pleasure and pride in the success of The Examiner because Los Angeles is not only a leader in material development, but a leader in ethical and intellectual development—a pioneer in political progress.

What are as yet only ideals even in many of the most advanced localities of the world are actualities in Los Angeles.

What are dreaded as threatening theories in conservative centers are established as practical and beneficial facts in this progressive community.

Conservatism a Failing.

The older sections of this country and of every country are hampered and handicapped in their development by also-called conservatism which is too often nothing more than sheer selfishness or inertness.

The phrase "conservatism" is made to cover a multitude of failings.

The lack of imagination to foresee, the lack of energy to attempt, the lack of courage to act, the lack of ability to achieve are all cloaked under that convenient word "conservatism."

Conservatism is the attribute of age. Energy, enthusiasm, courage, confidence and conviction are the characteristics of youth and strength. It is these that have wrought the miracle of Los Angeles.

In New York the citizens are still struggling vainly for that first essential of electoral reform—the direct nomination.

In Los Angeles you have possessed this power long and employed it well. In the East intrenched privilege still is declaring against the awful possibilities of the recall. For years you have exercised that function of popular government justly and judiciously.

In many localities the citizens are timidly hesitating to adopt woman suffrage. You have not only proved the feasibility of their right, but have demonstrated the definite benefi of it.

Noted Political Achievements.

You have made universal suffrage a fact and popular government a reality. You have exercised the initiative and referendum wisely and temperately.

You have divorced your local city government from national politics and have made it what it should be—a business institution conducted for the business benefit of the stockholders, the citizens.

You have brought water from the cool, clear streams of the distant mountains, undefiled, instead of collecting it from the poisoned and polluted puddles of the populated districts.

You have put your public money honestly and intelligently into great public works instead of into the pockets of greedy promoters and corrupt politicians. You are invading confidently and completely the field of public ownership in spite of the forebodings and forbiddings of interested public service corporations.

You have disproved all the arguments of retained corporation attorneys and dissipated all the opposition of paid corporation politicians.

And behold!

Strides Bring Prosperity.

You have prospered incomparably in spite of your bold advances and striking innovations; nay more, my friends, you have prospered because of them.

In the favoring physical atmosphere of this country, trees and fruits grow big and in the favoring moral and spiritual atmosphere of this community human institutions grow to greatness.

I am truly proud and pleased to have a newspaper here to do its share in the development of this Great city, to play its part in the progress of this great State. I am happy, too, to have a newspaper system to sow the seeds of progress in other parts of the nation and to cultivate it there so that it may take root and flourish and blossom and bear fruit.

My devout wish is that Los Angeles may ever continue to be a leader in the moral and material development of the country; in the economic and political progress of the nation and that The Examiner may be a potent factor in this development, an effective force in this progress—a cornerstone in the splendid structure of Californian achievement.

Tribute Paid to Examiner.

Excerpts from the speeches of prominent Los Angelans follow:

MAYOR H. H. ROSE—The construction of the wonderful building is one of the greatest things that was ever done for a city the size of Los Angeles. A building over 300 feet long and large in proportion, devoted to the uses of one newspaper, in the city of Los Angeles is indeed a magnificent enterprise. While this is the first time I have had occasion to lay the cornerstone of a building, except, maybe, a rough log hut or a stone hut in the mountains, I hope I may have occasion to use these trowels for purposes like this many, many times during my administration.

DOUGLAS WHITE, representing the Advertising Club of Los Angeles—The advertising clubs of the Pacific Coast have been extremely successful in their work up to this time. Every movement needs a leader, and so has the movement for truth in advertising on the Pacific Coast. However, when we entered on this movement it already possessed a leader, for 25 years ago, or about that time, in the city of San Francisco, a publisher arose who made the plain statement that no matter what the circulation of his paper might be, that circulation would be given truthfully and honestly to the people who bought space. That publisher was William Randolph Hearst. From that time up to the present, in all the papers which he has owned and published, he has carried out that same idea of honesty and truth in his advertising, because in the circulation depends the sale of advertising.

THE REV. GEORGE DONAHOE, representing the Rt. Rev. Thomas J. Conaty, of the Diocese of Monterey and Los Angeles—What attaches importance to this occasion and to the building that is now laboriously rising here is the fact that this building is destined to become a great center of newspaper activity in our gloriously growing city. As the mission of The Examiner goes forward the power of The Examiner grows stronger. So briefly, then, this is my good wish, first in behalf of us all, newspaper readers of Southern California, that this building which we to-day with ceremony officially begin, may always be to us a source of information, and for the great newspaper genius who honors this occasion with his presence our one hope and good wish and prayer is that the influence, the great influence that he so surely holds—that it may ever be devoted to works of fighting evil in high places, defending the weak and forwarding sound morality the world over.

DR. SIGMUND HECHT, rabbi of the B'nai Brith congregation—In my own and in the name of those whom I have the honor to represent, I bring my meed of congratulations and encouragement and cheer, first of all to those who are primarily affected by this event, to that honored head of this gigantic enterprise, to that man nationally honored for the purity of his character, for the sincerity of his purposes, for the directness of his intentions, for his ability and for the policy with which he inspired The Los Angeles Examiner to favor none and be fair to all—William Randolph Hearst. The Los Angeles Examiner—under God may it grow and prosper and be a power in the development and in the uplift of our glorious country.

ARTHUR W. KINNEY, president of The Los Angeles Chamber of Commerce—The people of Southern California offer The Examiner their sincere congratulations upon this memorable occasion which marks an epoch in its wonderful career in our great city. It has always held an unbounded faith in the marvelous destiny of our Southwestern metropolis and it has ever backed up this faith by striving for everything that might contribute to the prosperity of our people. It has, indeed, been one of the sturdy sentinels at this far Western outpost of American idealism. Long ago it enunciated a policy of civic and industrial progress that must appeal to every person who has the welfare of our city at heart—a policy which, if pursued, must hasten to the unfolding of the great movement that is destined to make our Southwest empire world famed.

M'CRORY IN HOT CLASHES OVER BOOK BILL

Charges Speaker Burwell With Breaking Promise to Bring His Measures to Vote.

A tilt in which Representative McCrory, of Schley County, charged Speaker Burwell with having failed to keep his promise in regard to placing the McCrory schoolbook bill on the calendar, followed by another in which McCrory shook a menacing finger at Representative Holtzclaw and warned him to "look out," enlivened the proceedings of the House Monday afternoon.

Mr. McCrory arose to a question of personal privilege shortly after the disposition of the "calf bill."

"I was promised by the Speaker of this House," he declared, "that he would place my schoolbook bill on the calendar for consideration today. He has not done it. I've heard enough about calves this afternoon to stock a book, and it seems to me that the members of the House consider calves more important than the 500,000 school children of Georgia.

Studied Opposition Charged.

"If any man loves a child better than he does a calf, let him help me get this schoolbook bill up for consideration. It looks to me like there is a studied effort to suppress my bill."

Speaker Burwell denied that he had promised Mr. McCrory to place his bill on the calendar.

"I did not state that I would have the bill placed at the head of the order for the day," replied the Speaker. "I told Mr. McCrory that I would request the Rules Committee to place his bill on the calendar, but not being the entire committee, I had no power to so place it. The bill was placed on the calendar for consideration today, but no one could foresee that the time of the House would be taken up by little things."

Shakes Finger at Holtzclaw.

The clash between McCrory and Holtzclaw came during the consideration of the Western and Atlantic Commission bill. Mr. Holtzclaw objected to a motion to dispense with the reading of the bill when the House went into committee of the whole, and Mr. Crory, who was standing near shook a menacing finger at the Houston County Representative and said:

"Holtzclaw, you are trying to kill time to prevent my bill coming to a vote. You had better look out!"

Mr. Holtzclaw was in conversation with a member at the time. He glanced at Mr. McCrory, but made no reply.

The failure of the House to take action on the McCrory bill Monday kills the measure for the rest of the session, inasmuch as the Senate has served notice that it will not consider any House bill passed after Monday.

THIN FOR YEARS--"GAINS 22 POUNDS IN 23 DAYS"

Remarkable Experience of F. Gagnon. Builds Up Weight Wonderfully.

"I was all run down to the very bottom," writes F. Gagnon. "I had to quit work, I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds in 23 days."

"Sargol has put 10 pounds on me in 14 days," states W. D. Roberts. "It has made me sleep well, enjoy what I ate and enabled me to work with interest and pleasure."

"I weighed 132 pounds when I commenced taking Sargol. After taking 20 days I weighed 144 pounds. Sargol is the most wonderful preparation for flesh building I have ever seen," declares D. Martin, and J. Meier adds: "For the past twenty years I have taken medicine every day for indigestion and got thinner every year. I took Sargol for forty days and feel better than I have felt in twenty years. My weight has increased from 150 to 170 pounds."

When hundreds of men and women—and there are hundreds, with more coming every day—living in every nook and corner of this broad land, voluntarily testify to weight increases ranging all the way from 10 to 35 pounds, given them by Sargol, you must admit, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Thin Reader, that there must be something in this Sargol method of flesh-building after all.

Hadn't you better look into it, just as thousands of others have done? Many thin folks say: "I'd given most anything to put on a little extra weight," but when someone suggests a way they exclaim, "Not a chance. Nothing will make me plump. I'm built to stay thin." Until you have tried Sargol, you do not and can not know that this is true.

Sargol has put pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh on hundreds who doubted and in spite of their doubts. You don't have to believe in Sargol to grow plump from its use. You just take it and watch weight pile up, hollows vanish and your figure round out to pleasing and normal proportions. You weigh yourself when you begin and again when you finish and you let the scales tell the story.

Sargol is absolutely harmless. It is a tiny concentrated tablet. You take one with every meal. It mixes with the food you eat for the purpose of separating all of its flesh-producing ingredients. It prepares these fat-making elements in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily absorb and carry all over your body. Plump, well-developed persons don't need Sargol to produce this result. Their assimilative machinery performs its functions without aid. But thin folks' assimilative organs do not. This fatty portion of their food now goes to waste through their bodies like unburned coal through an open grate. A few days' test of Sargol in your case will surely prove whether or not this is true of you. Isn't it worth trying?

50c BOX FREE

To enable any thin reader, ten pounds or more under weight, to easily make this test we will give a 50c box of Sargol absolutely free. ATTORNEY FOR DEFENSE AGAIN THREATENS TO MOVE FOR A MISTRIAL you and you made certain statements?—A. I did not.

Q. Now this time when you were at my office, did not your husband beg you to tell the truth, and put his arms around you and beg you to say what you told him was the truth?—A. It was all lies, though.

Q. Did you sign this affidavit? A. They made me sign it.

Q. Didn't you sign it in the presence of your attorney, Mr. George Gordon?—A. I told you they made me sign it.

Q. Didn't you sign it in the presence of your husband?—A. I signed it in the presence of a whole lot of people, but it was a lie.

Mr. Dorsey read the affidavit. It stated that the husband, Albert McKnight, was in the kitchen of the Selig home when Frank came to lunch Saturday, April 26.

When Solicitor Dorsey reached the part where it was stated that Mrs. Frank had claimed to Mrs. Selig that her husband was drinking the night before, and wanted her to get a pistol so that he could kill himself, Minola interrupted:

Declares Statement Was All a Lie.

"That is all a lie my husband fixed up," she shouted. "They made me sign it."

Later the negro woman started to interrupt again at the statement that she had asked Mrs. Frank if the girl who was killed was a Jew girl. Mr. Arnold told her to keep quiet until Mr. Dorsey had finished. She demonstrated her feelings again at the statement that they had raised her pay, and told her to be careful how she talked.

Dorsey, after he had finished reading the affidavit, said: "And you signed this statement?"

"They made me sign it," reiterated the negress. "It was all a lie."

Q. How did they make you sign it? A. They told me if I did not, they would lock me up.

Q. Who told you?—All of them.

Attorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. Is this the lie your husband fixed for you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever get any more pay? A. No, sir.

Q. How did the detectives get you? A. They got my husband first.

Q. Did you say anything to Miss Lucille about it being a Jew, and did she say it was a Gentile?—A. No.

Q. Did Mrs. Frank say anything about sleeping on the floor?—A. No.

Q. Is any of this true? Is it a lie out of the whole cloth?—A. Yes, it is all a lie.

Denies Mrs. Selig Gave Her Money.

Q. Did Mrs. Selig ever give you $5?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did she ever tell you to mind how you talk?—A. They told me to tell the whole truth.

Q. Do you know this Man Craven? A. No.

Q. This man Pickett?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Charles Barnhart took the stand. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Contractor and architect.

Q. Have you, at the request of Mr. Haas, visited the Selig home and made a drawing of the kitchen and drawing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you see the mirror in the dining room from any point standing in the kitchen door?—A. No.

Q. Can you see anybody sitting at the table?—A. No.

Q. Could you see anyone sitting on the north side of the table?—A. No.

Q. Is there any position a man can sit at the table and be seen in the mirror?—A. By sitting about two feet away from him.

Q. If a man said he was sitting in a chair against the jam of the kitchen door, and saw the reflection of a man in the mirror, was he telling the truth?—A. I could not see it.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What you could see in that mirror would depend on the location of the sideboard, wouldn't it?—A. Yes.

Moving of Mirror Would Change View.

Q. If that was moved a little, the whole view of the dining room would be changed, would it not?—A. Yes, but my experiments showed that you could not see whether anyone was eating at the table or not, from any view you could get of that mirror from the kitchen.

The witness was excused and Henry Wood, secretary of the County Commission, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Did you, at my request, go to the Selig home on Georgia avenue and take some views?—A. I did.

Q. Did you stand in the kitchen and try to see the mirror in the dining room sideboard?—A. I did.

Q. Could you see the mirror from the back kitchen door?—A. I could not.

Q. Could you see the table and the mirror from any part of the kitchen? A. I stood in the door leading into the pantry between the kitchen and dining roo mand all I could see in the mirror was the arm of one chair.

Attorney Rosser here made a side remark that he himself had been out to the Selig home to see if the negro, Albert McKnight, was telling the truth about watching Frank from the kitchen through the sideboard mirror. He said one could not see the dining room table in the mirror from any point in the kitchen.

Q. What you saw in this mirror was right here (the room)?—A. Yes.

Q. The arrangement of the furniture was like it was April 28?—A. I don't know.

Arnold took the witness on redirect examination.

Q. Coming to that door from the back porch you could not see that mirror?—A. I could not.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. If a man were standing where that chair was could you see him?—A. I might have.

Q. Did you make the test sitting or standing?—A. A. I tried both ways.

Another Tells of Tests With Mirror.

The witness was excused and Julius Fischer, president of the cemetery commission, took the stand.

Q. You are a contractor and builder?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you make an examination of the Selig home?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you stand in that kitchen door to see whether you could see the mirror in the dinir- room?—A. Yes.

Q. Could you?—A No.

Q. Is there any place in the kitchen from which you could see in the mirror a man at the table?—A. No.

Q. Were there any evidences of the mirror having been moved?—A. No, but I moved it to see if I could place it anywhere in the dining room and from the kitche see any reflection of a person sitting at the table.

Q. Well, what did you find?—A. I found I could not.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. Did you turn the mirror flat against the wall on the east side of the room?—A. No.

The witness was excused and Miss Corinthia Hall, an employee of the National Pencil Company, was called. Attorney Arnold questioned her:

Q. Did you go to the factory on April 26, Memorial Day?—A, I did.

Q. Was anyone with you?—A. Emma Clark.

Q. What time was it?—A. About 11:35.

Q. How do you know?—A. I got off the East Lake car at 11:30 o'clock.

Q. Did you go to Mr. Frank's office? A. After we had been up to the fourth floor to get Emma's coat.

Q. How long do you think it took you to go up and come down?—A. We went right up and came right down.

Left Factory at Quarter to Twelve.

Q. What was said?—A. She had just married Mr. Freeman. He asked her if she wasn't a bride. She said yes, and he asked how she was feeling. She said she was feeling fine, and wanted to use the telephone.

Q. What time did you leave the factory?—A. About fifteen minutes to twelve.

Q. Who all did you see in the factory?—A. When we first went in, two men were talking to Mr. Frank. Arthur White's wife and a stenographer were in the outer office.

Q. Who else did you see?—A. On the fourth floor we saw Mae Barrett, Arthur White and Harry Denham. Mrs. Barrett's daughter was also on the second floor.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you meet Mr. Holloway while going to the factory?—A. Yes.

Q. You saw Lemmie Quinn at the restaurant and talked to him?—A. Yes.

Q. You told the coroner you arrived there at 11:45?—. I said I left at that time.

Q. You saw the stenographer?—A. Yes.

Q. Was she the regular stenographer?—A. I don't know.

Q. Didn't you swear before the coroner that she was the regular stenographer?—A. I don't remember. They change stenographers so much.

Q. Can you tell the jury what time it was you saw Lemmie Quinn?Q. I can not Miss Hall was excused and Mrs. May Barrett was called. She did not answer.

Mrs. Emma Clark Freeman was the next witness. She was questioned by Attorney Arnold.

Mrs. Freeman Saw Frank in Office.

Q. Did you ever work at the pencil factory?—A. Yes.

Q. What was your name before you were married?—A. Emma Clark.

Q. What day were you married?—A. April 25.

Q. Did you go to the factory April 26?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. Eleven thirty

Q. What did you go for?—A. To get a coat.

Q. Did you see Mr. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where? A. Talking to two men.

Q. Did you get permission to go on the fourth floor?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank say anything to you?—A. He asked me "How's the bride?" I said all right.

Q. Who was in the office with Frank?—A. The stenographer was in the outer office.

Q. What time did you leave the factory?—A. About 11:45.

Q. Where did you go from there?—A. Alabama and Forsyth streets to use the telephone.

Q. I came back and passed by the factory.

Q. Did you see anybody on the street you knew?—A. Mr. Malsby.

Q. Where did you go?—A. I went on to a cafe and ordered some lunch.

Q. Did anybody come in?—A. Yes. Mr. Quinn came in.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. Yes, he said he had just left Mr. Frank.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. To Harry Molsby's place, where Miss Hall used the phone.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. To Hunter and Whitehall streets.

Q. What time was it then —A. Twenty-five to one.

Q. Did you notice any negro as you went in or out?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey did not care to cross-examine the witness and she was excused.

Attorney Arnold asked the deputies to call Mrs. Barrett again. She did not answer and Emil Selig was called. Mr. Selig is the father-in-law of the accused.

Frank's Father-in-Law Tells of Their Home.

Q. Are you related to Mr. Leo M. Frank, the defendant?—A. Yes, I am his father-in-law.

Q. Do you and your wife and Mr and Mrs Frank live together?—A. We do.

Q. Where?—A. At 68 East Georgia avenue.

Q. How long have you had the sideboard in the dining room in the same place?—A. Ever since I have lived there.

Q. What part of the house is your room in?—A. My wife and I have a room upstairs and so have Mr. and Mrs. Frank.

Q. Where is the telephone?—A. In the dining room.

Q. Can you hear very well from upstairs when the doors are shut?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get home to lunch on Saturday, April 26?—A. About 1:15 o'clock.

Q. Was Mr. Frank there?—A. No. The women were at the table. They were going to Grand Opera that afternoon. Mr. Frank came in about five minutes later.

Women Went to the Grand Opera.

Q. Did he eat?—A. Yes.

Q. Who left first?—A. Mrs. Selig got up and left to go to the Grand Opera and left Mr. Frank and myself at the table.

Q. How long were you at the table?—A. About 10 or 15 minutes. I went out into the yard to look at my chickens. When I came in he was standing in the hall. I went to my room and lay down for anap.

Q. When did you see him again?—A. About 6:30 o'clock.

Q. Were you and Mr. Frank there before the women?—A. I think we were.

Q. Did you notice any scratches or scars on Mr. Frank?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Mr. Frank stay at home that night?—A. Yes.

Q. Were there any visitors there?—Or anything to impress the evening upon you?—A. Yes, we had a little party.

Q. Who was there?—A. Mrs. A. E. Marcus, Mr. and Mrs. M. Gholstein and probably others. We played cards.

Q. Did Frank and his wife play? A. No, we were playing just a little game of poker.

Q. You were playing a little game of poker?—A. Yes, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank did not play.

Q. Did Mr. Frank and his wife go to bed before your visitors left?—A. Yes, they went to bed about 10:30. The guests left about 11:30.

Q. What time did you see him Sunday morning?—A, about 11 o'clock.

Q. He went out before you got up? A. Yes.

Q. Did he eat dinner that day? A. Yes.

Q. Did he eat supper that night? A. Yes.

Dorsey Questions About the Sideboard.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Mr. Selig, you don't undertake to tell the jury that the sideboard has not been moved one way or another? A. It has not been moved.

Q. You observed it so particularly that you say it still occupies the same position?—A. Yes.

Q. How can you be so sure it was 1:20 when Frank came to dinner? A. The folks were going to Grand Opera and I just estimate the time that way.

Q. Didn't you say it was after 1 o'clock at the coroner's inquest? A. Yes.

Can't Recall Testimony At Coroner's Inquest.

Q. Then how do you know, now? A. Well, I got there at 1:10.

Q. Now are you sure your wife and daughter were there when he came to dinner?—A. Yes.

Q. You don't know where Frank was when you took that nap, do you?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. He was there when he came in from the chicken yard, was he not? A. Yes.

Q. And he was gone after you had taken your nap and gotten up, wasn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Didn't you tell the Coroner that he was there when you got up?—A. I can't recall.

Q. Do you deny you said it?—A. I can't recall.

Q. You said there was a card party at your house that night?—Do you know where Frank was while you were playing?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you hear him use the telephone that night?—A. No.

Q. He frequently used the telephone to call the night watchman, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. When you got up the next morning he had gone, hadn't he?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to him when he returned?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say?—A. I cannot recall.

Did Not Refer to Crime All Day.

Q. You knew that a girl had been murdered in that building—the factory where Mr. Frank was superintendent—and you spent the day with your son-in-law—and yet you didn't refer to the finding of this little girl's dead body at all that day?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he say anything about it?—A. I think so, but I cannot recall.

Q. Do you deny then that you told the Coroner that Krank never referred to it during the whole day?—A. I don't deny anything. I cannot recall. He did mention it at dinner.

Q. You did not pay any attention to it?—A. No.

Q. You tell the jury that you did not pay any attention to this murder in the factory of which your son-in-law was superintendent?—A. Yes.

Attorney Arnold then took the witness on the redirect examination.

Q. Mr. Selig, you say you had a party in the house that night?—A. Yes.

Q. What were you doing?—A. We were playing a little game of poker.

Solicitor Dorsey took the witness.

Q. Now didn't you tell the Coroner that you did not go into the chicken yard, but stayed in the house that afternoon?—A. I can not recall.

Mr. Selig was then excused and Mrs. Selig was called to the stand. Arnold examined her.

Q. How long have Mr. and Mrs. Frank been living with you and Mr. Selig?—A. About two years.

Sideboard Not Moved, Says Mrs Selig.

Q. How long has the sideboard been in the same place in the dining room?—A. Ever since we have been living there.

Q. What time did you have lunch on Saturday, April 26?—A. It was about ten minutes past 1 o'clock.

Q. Were Mr. Selig and Mr. Frank there?—A. I don't remember about Mr. Selig, but Mr. Frank did not come in until about 1:20 o'clock.

Q. Did anyone get up from dinner? A. My daughter and I left for the Grand Opera matinee.

Q. When did you see Mr. Frank again?—A. At 6:10 o'clock that afternoon. My daughter and myself were on our way home from the Grand Opera matinee and were on a car when we saw Mr. Frank go into Jacobs' Pharmacy at the corner of Whitehall and Alabama strets.

Q. Did you go directly home?—A. No, I stopped at my sister's on Washington street.

Q. Who was at home when you arrived?—A. Mr. Frank and Mr. Selig.

Q. Did you notice anything unusual about Mr. Frank?—A. Not a thing.

The remainder of Mrs. Selig's story coincided with that of her husband's.

Declares She Saw Frank at Noon.

Dorsey then took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You told the coroner's jury you left Mr. Frank and the cook at home? A. No, I hesitated for a minute and said I thought Mr. Selig was there also.

Q. Aren't you mistaken about seeing Frank at noon?—A. No, I am not mistaken.

Q. That sideboard is on rollers and it hasn't been moved for four or five years? Not even when the room was cleaned—AA. Yes, it was moved for that and moved right back.

Q. Did Mr. Frank mention the crime when he came home for dinner Sunday?—A. Yes, he mentioned it.

Q. Didn't you swear before the Coroner that you did not think the crime was mentioned?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Did Frank seem much concerned over the crime?—A. Yes, he was naturally disturbed.

Q. Didn't you swear before the Coroner that he did not appear concerned?—A. I said that I did not feel particularly concerned.

Q. Didn't you say before the Coroner that he did not express any anxiety or worry over this murder, and did not mention the youth of the child?—A. I don't remember.

Says He Didn't Wear Same Suit.

Q. Didn't you swear before the Coroner that he wore the same suit Saturday, Sunday and Monday?—A. If I said so I was mistaken.

Q. When did you first learn the name of the murdered girl?—A. I don't remember.

Q. You didn't learn it from Mr. Frank?—A. I think I did.

Q. Didn't you first learn the name of the girl from the paper next day? A. I believe so.

Q. And yet you had dinner with him?—A. Yes.

Atorney Arnold took the witness.

Q. You didn't ask about the facts? —A. No.

Q. You were in bad health?—A. I was operated on the next day.

Q. Now, didn't you say that Frank was naturally curious?—A. Yes, it was such a harrowing crime he would naturally be interested.

Mrs. Selig was excused. Court then adjourned until 9 o'clock Wednesday morning.

THE SOCIAL WORLD

A pleasant mode of entertaining at the Executive Mansion is in the informal dinner of six or eight covers which Governor and Mrs. Slaton give often. An affair of this kind was the small dinner of Monday evening, at which Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Burwell were the guests of honor, others present being Mrs. Reed, of Elberton, the house guest of the -wells, and Mrs. W. D. Grant.

Mrs. Slaton was hostess at a pretty luncheon a few days ago for a visitor, Mrs. Charles Donnally, of Pennsylvania, who is the guest of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Stocking.

Pink roses from the gardens of Mrs. Slaton's home on the Peachtree road were decorations for the table, and the guests included Mrs. Donnally, Mrs. R. J. Lowry, Mrs. Clark Howell, Mrs. Albert Howell, Mrs. James L. Dickey, Mrs. W. H. Kiser, Mrs. James D. Robinson, Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mrs. J. K. Ottley, Mrs. Walter Andrews and Miss Stocking.

W. C. T. U. Meeting.

Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, president of the W. C. T. U., has requested the members of the association to bring reports of work accomplished this year to the meeting to be held Thursday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock in the Sunday school room of Trinity Church.

PERIOD FURNITURE

COLONIAL Bed Room

Period Furniture "Blue Tagged"

It is a notable fact that some of the most drastic reductions of the "Blue Tag" Furniture Sale are made on sets and odd pieces of Period Furniture—for the bedroom, living room and dining room.

The homekeeper who would furnish a room in a true and pure style or who would add another piece to a set already started may save richly through the generosity of the "Blue Tag" reductions.

Another notable fact is that ours is the South's greatest stock of Period Furniture—with its many fine reproductions of the old masters—Sheraton, Adam, Hepplewhite, Chippendale—and then the Colonial, William and Mary, Jacobean, Mission and Louis XV. periods.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XIX.

As Mary Danforth rode up home in the elevated on the April afternoon just two years after her first meeting with Gordon Craig, she found the sad thoughts that had been with her so long slipping away. She was sure that her lover was thinking of her and that on this anniversary she would receive happy news of him. She almost believed in premonitions, and she remembered, with a slight shudder, how once a premonition she had had about her father had been the forerunner of his death not long after. Why might not one also have a permonition of joyous happenings?

As she left the train at Eighty-first street a voice said close to her, "Why, Mary Danforth! How do you do?"

Turning with a start, she found herself face to face with a former schoolmate of whom she had seen nothing for two years.

"Which way are you going?" asked the girl after greetings had been exchanged.

"I go westward," replied Mary briefly.

Working Downtown.

"Oh, too bad, for I go to Central Park West. We are living in the same old place, you know, where you used to come to see us. You never come now."

"No," acknowledged Mary. "I have little time. I am working downtown."

"Well, I want to talk to you a bit," said Elizabeth Preston, who had always liked Mary when the Danforths were prosperous. "Suppose you walk with me toward my home, or let me walk with you toward yours. Which shall it be?"

"I will go with you," replied Mary quickly. She felt a reluctance—of which she was ashamed—to have this patronizing acquaintance of former days see the house in which she now lived.

"It must be fine to be working for one's self," said Miss Preston as the two girls sauntered along Eighty-first street toward Central Park. "Of course, I have no excuse for doing that kind of thing, for my father has plenty of money, and I am the only daughter left at home. But sometimes I get a little tired of ease and luxury and long to be independent."

Mary tried to smile. "'He jests at scars who never felt a wound,'" she quoted. "Perhaps if you had to work, you would find what seems independence to you now something like slavery."

She regretted the words as soon as she had spoken them, for her companion turned upon her a look of pity.

"Oh, do you have to work as hard as that?" she exclaimed. "I supposed that you only went into business after your father died so that you would not be entirely dependent upon your mother. Surely your father left her comfortably provided for, did he not?"

"You Needn't Pity Me."

For a moment Mary did not answer. She wondered if Elizabeth Preston was really ignorant of conditions, or if she was pretending not to know how matters stood. In either case, to tell her the truth was the best thing. But it was with an effort that the weary girl spoke.

"My father left all he had to my mother. But he was unfortunate in business just before he—he—died. You are right in thinking I would not be dependent upon my mother. But she has not the means to support us both even if I were willing to have her do so."

"Oh," cooed Miss Preston, "you poor child! I am so sorry for you!"

"Thank you, but you need not pity me at all," retorted Mary testily. "I am not an object of pity. I have a position which I shall keep as long as I wish, which will not be long now."

Her temper was getting the better of her discretion, but Elizabeth Preston's patronage was unbearable to her. She determined to say no more, but her companion's next speech swept away her barriers of reserve.

"It was very fine of you to take that brave tone about it, Mary," the rich girl remarked, "but your trouble has told on you. You are looking ten years older than when you left school. I wonder if my father might not be able to get you an easier situation than you have now."

"I shall not hold any position much longer," said Mary, voice hard and eyes glittering. "I expect soon to change my entire mode of life."

The other girl eyed her shrewdly. "I suspect," she said in a tone that was meant to be playful, "that you are going to get married, my dear."

Mary shrugged her shoulders. "Perhaps!" she said nonchalantly. "Here we are at Eighth avenue, and I must turn back home. Good-bye!"

As she retraced her steps, indignation gave place to joyous anticipation. How strangely happy she was this evening! She remembered that Fletcher was going to call, and a sudden sense of distaste at the prospect of seeing him at this time seized her. She would not let him come. Stepping into a hotel on the corner of Eighty-first street, she called up Pearsons' office. When she had left the office Fletcher had been there with her employer, and the two had been smoking so comfortably that he might possibly be there still. She was not mistaken, and when Pearson answered the telephone she asked for Mr. Fletcher. As briefly as possible she suggested to her would-be caller that she would prefer seeing him on some other evening. He submitted regretfully, but meekly, and she congratulated herself upon the reprieve.

Like a Phophecy.

As the girl walked along Eighty-fourth street to her home, the glow in the western sky seemed to her excited imagination like a symbol or prophecy of happiness ahead of her. Surely there would be a letter awaiting her! After all what did Elizabeth Preston's chatter matter when one's heart was so full of peace? Even the sordid block on which she lived seemed less dingy and dirty than usual at this sunset hour. She pushed her way through the groups of janitors' and tenants' children playing on the front steps of the house in which she lived, and, hurrying into the vestibule, peered into the letter box bearing her name.

Yes, there was the envelope with Craig's handwriting on it. She knew it would be here! With eager fingers she unlocked the letter box and drew forth her treasure. She could not wait until she got upstairs. The sight of the handwriting was like a draught of water to a thirsty soul. Tearing open the envelope, she pulled out the single sheet and read it by the dim light from the hall chandelier.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Pa took Ma & me onver to a lake yesterday ware thare is a lot of city boarders. Ma had a frend oaver thare that used to call on us wen we lived in the city & Ma wanted to see her.

The naim of Ma's frend was Missus Mace. Her husband is a bizness man in the city & every Sommer he sends his wife up to that lake so he can have a few weeks rest, & a good time with the other men.

How do you like it up here, Pa asked Missus Mace.

Oh, I think it is dredfully poky, sed Missus Mace. Thare is so few men around. Look at them old cats setting on the veranda & talking about peepul, she sed. I bet every one of them has ripped all of us up the back beefoar now. If my husband cud afford it, I wud go to sum place ware thare is moar class.

They all look pritty good to me, sed Pa. Who are those two peaches setting on the end of the verandy?

They are two young married wimmen, sed Missus Mace, & the way thay have been flirting at the littel hops we have here is sumthing terribul. Last nite thay went out in a party of young peepul & thare husbands wasent along. The party dident git back till neerly midnite.

Well, sed Pa, what of it? I suppose thare husbands sent twem up here to enjoy themselfs with the young peepul. I wud deerly luv to have been in that party myself, sed Pa.

I doant think you missed much, & thay are all the time talking about what deers thare husbands is, too, sed Missus Mace. Wen I hear a young married woman talking so much about her good husband in the city, I always think thay are putting on a lot. & last nite one of them kissed her husband's letter about twenty times wen she got it at the postoffice.

What if she did? sed Pa. I think that was vary sweet of her. You see, Pa sed to Missus Mace, she is yung & deevoted to her husband & he is deevoted to her. I suppose if they was middle aged, like you & frend wife here, thay wud kiss the money order insted of the letter. That is the kind of letters you wimmen like, Pa sed, the kind that wen you open them sumthing blue pops out.

Nothing of the kind, sed Ma and Missus Mace at onst. We are always glad to git letters from our husbands wether thare is munny in the letters or not.

Well, sed Pa, you cud talk all day about those two young matrons & you cuddent malk me beleeve thare was a rong thing about eether one of them. Why, sed Pa, that brunet one has a face like a angel. I shud like to meet them, Pa sed.

Not so fast, sed Ma. Doant git so enthused all of a sudden. My frend Missus Mace has been here longer than we have and she ought to know if the yung ladies she menshuns are fit company for us.

I like to pick my own cumpany, sed Pa, & eeven if I thought I was gitting simpel minded enuff to have sumbody pick my cumpany, I wouldn't choose a old knocker like yure friend Missus Mace to pick my frends for me.

You are not a gentleman, sed Misses Mace.

I know it, sed Pa. I am a plain old rough-neck wich was all his life so busy trying to see good in everybody that he didnt have time to lern to be yure kind of a gentleman. I beleeve I will get sumbody to interduce me to them two yung matrons. How about it, wife? sed Pa. How about meeting the summer girls?

All rite, sed Ma, sum other summer.

Up-to-the-Minute Jokes

She was hurriedly adjusting her veil, and had but a few moments in which to catch her car.

"Oh, dear," she murmured, "I can't find a pin anywhere. I wonder where all the pins go to, anyway?"

"That's a difficult question to answer," replied her practical husband, who was standing by, "because they are always pointed in one direction and headed in another."

A Yorkshireman suffering from toothache went to a dentist to have the aching tooth out. The dentist pulled out the offending tooth, and was then asked to pull out the double tooth next to it.

"But that is a sound tooth," said the dentist. "The pain is only sympathetic."

"Yank it out, doctor. Hang such sympathy," replied the Tyke.

Two American farmers met a day or two after a cyclone had swept over their farms.

"She shook things up pretty bad out at my place," said one, stroking his whiskers, meditatively. "By the way, Hiram," he added, "that new barn o' yourn get hurt at all?"

"Wal," drawled the other, "I dunno. I hain't found it yet!"

"No, Fopson. I said you were an uncommon ass."

Science

Egypt a Hundred Centuries Ago Brought to Light at Tarkhan.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

ALABASTER TABLE OF FIRST DYNASTY AT GERZEH.

A TOMB OPENED AT TARKHAN.

ANIMAL FIGURES AT MEMPHIS.

Civilized people lived in Egypt ten thousand years ago—so long ago that the North Star, which, from the days of the Phoenician navigators, when commerce was young, until our time, has guided ships at sea, was then many degrees from the pole of the heavens, while another and a brighter star glittered not far from the north point of the celestial sphere!

The excavations recently made by Professor Petrie, of the British School of Archaeology, have established this fact, which must appear very astonishing to those who still retain the old belief that the world itself is only about 6,000 years old!

But such investigations as those of Professor Petrie carry the same overwhelming conviction to the reasoning mind as that which has caused all intelligent persons to accept the conclusions of geology concerning the millions upon millions of years that the earth has been inhabited by a great variety of animals, some of whose descendants, but little changed in their forms, are co-dwellers with us to-day upon this ancient planet.

The nature of the excavations made by Professor Petrie in Egypt may be clearly seen in the photographs which are here reproduced.

Works of Art.

There you see the beautifully carved tables of stone and of alabaster, the animal figures, the sphinxes, the specimens of pottery, and the granite sarcophagi, or coffins, which that wonderful, prehistoric people made for themselves.

There, too, you see some of the skeletons of the "sacred" animals which they honored with burial ceremonies hardly less elaborate than those which were devoted to their kings, queens and rulers. Professor Petrie and his assistants have uncovered not less than 800 ancient graves, none of which are less than about 6,000 years old.

All of them tell the same story, viz: that so long ago as that men had already learned many of the arts which we often think are peculiar to times included within the limits of written history. They could not merely build strong and beautiful structures of masonry and carve statues and shape vases that excite the admiration of architects and artists to-day, but they knew the use of the most precious metals, and formed exquisite ornaments of gold and silver.

These things must set one to thinking, for we know that arts and sciences are long in being developed, requiring thousands of years, and that no civilization can grow up except as the result of many centuries of slow advance. How far back, then, should we have to go in order to find the real beginnings of Egypt? Ten thousand years must be but a step in that long march of human progress! The poles of the heavens may have swung more than once completely round their great 26,000-year orbit since the land of the Nile began to bloom with cultivation, and its human inhabitants started on their upward course.

Nothing can be more interesting than these delvings into the past history of the globe since man came upon it, and the farther that unwritten, but still not unrecorded, history stretches back the more the wonder grows, for every new discovery plunging deeper into the ages shows that we are yet far from the starting point.

Had It Labeled.

A miner, having a large piece of sticking plaster over the bridge of his nose, went into a local public house.

"Halloa!" breezily remarked the landlord. "Going for your holidays, Jim?"

"Holidays? What holidays?"

"Well, I see you've got your trunk labeled," replied the landlord.

Do You Know---

There are 20,000 different kinds of butterflies.

At Holbeach (Lincs) Parish Church, in order to get rid of a swarm of bats, sulphur was burned, and then the bell ropes were whirled round and round. In this way thirty-three bats were killed one evening.

It has been calculated that nearly 300,000,000 feet, or over 55,000 miles, of film are used up yearly to satisfy the world's demand for moving pictures.

Half the men condemned to death are executed. In the case of women, only one out of ten suffers the death penalty.

Rather Late.

A man traveling in the country met a middle-aged farmer who said his father, 90 years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, father is close to 90."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."

Too Lazy.

"Nodles is the laziest man I know. He has an invention fixed so that by merely pulling a wire in bed he can light the fire; but that doesn't seem to improve matters."

"Why not?"

"He's too lazy to pull the wire."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

ARE YOU SURE?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young lady 17 years of age and come in contact with a young man two years my senior.

I know this man loves me, and his love is reciprocated. When we meet, we always act indifferently. Now, in what way can we get together to keep company, as I know our parents would not object, and our friends are aware of the facts? ANTONETTE.

It takes something more than the approval of parents and the knowledge of mutual friends that they do approve to make a young man love a girl.

I want you to have love; it is my fondest hope for you; but I don't believe this man loves you. You say he always acts indifferently toward you. If he loved you, he wouldn't do that, and you would not have to look for a way to win him.

APPEAL TO THE POLICE.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I kept company with a young man for three years and expected to be married in the spring. My parents objected to him. He was very jealous and never took me out or gave me anything. Last summer I became acquainted with a man eight years my senior. He takes me out and says he loves me. My folks like him and I love him very dearly. He wants to marry me. My first lover threatens me when he hears I am going to get married. He writes letters and when I don't answer he hangs around my house.

PERPLEXED.

A jealous man like that is a dangerous person to know. You must marry the second man, for he is the one you love, and you must put an end to all obnoxious attentions from the first man. If your father can not help you, appeal to the authorities.

NOT SURPRISING.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am a young girl of seventeen. About three months ago I met a young man of eighteen. We met by flirtation. When we had been acquainted about a month he professed his love for me, but since then he has been going with other girls and is very cool to me.

L. M.

Lightly won, lightly held. An acquaintance that begins in flirtation usually terminates in the girl's sorrow. The man is convinced she will comfort herself with the next man who flirts with her, and holds her love lightly.

Won't you please be a little more reserved next time?

TREAT HIM THE SAME.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 20, and have been keeping company for about eight months. We had an argument and separated. Now for about two months we have been reconciled, but he seems rather distant. What would you advise me to do?

GWENDOLYN.

Evidently his wrath is still smoldering, which indicates a sullen, resentful disposition. Don't worry, my dear, if you lose him. It will prove a gain in the end.

Clever Hostess.

A German band happened to play under the windows of a house in a fashionable neighborhood the other afternoon, when Mrs. B. was "at home." They were a fair specimen of their kind—blaring and noisy, yet correct in their time and altogether in movement from long practice. The butler started out to drive them away, for they interrupted the music within, but Mrs. B. ordered him to invite them in. A happy thought struck her.

"Ladies and gentlemen," she said, five minutes later, "a party of our friends have consented to give an imitation of a street band. I now have the pleasure of introducing them."

Then the six members of the organization filed awkwardly into place and played a piece. The audience delightedly declared that the mimicry was perfect, especially the make-up of the players, who were recalled half a dozen times.

"Would you take them for anything but genuine street stragglers?" was asked of a belle.

"Indeed, yes," she confidently replied; "they're clever in their mimicry, but one can always tell gentlemen, no matter how disguised. I'm dying to find out who they are."

THE FOOL

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

He did not know who sent us here
To work and rest and die;
He did not trust the aged seer
Who wisely oncled the sky.
Out peered the stars through the heavens' bars;
The fool did not know why.

He could not tell why any man
Should wish his brother ill;
He saw a starving caravan
Tottering up a hill.
He could not see why this should be
When others ate their fill.

He could not understand the scheme
Men call their marriage rite.
He knew a maid that loved and strayed;
He knew her soul was white.
The Church, her sisters, all the good—
They crushed her in their might.

All these and many other things
He could not comprehend.
To wise men here it seemed so clear
They would have shown their friend;
But he was just a fool, they said,
And would be to the end.

Good Manners in the Home

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED.
Author of "The Etiquette of New York To-day."

Parents are conscious of the importance of teaching their children good manners, but very often they forget that children are quick to detect inconsistencies. If the parents fail to observe the courtesies they are trying to teach there will be difficulty in instructing children.

If parents are careful to thank children for any little attention, if they ask a favor of them always in courteous terms, if they reply pleasantly to their questions and never indulge in the rudeness of answering in monosyllables or paying no attention to questions, then the children will learn to be careful in their own manners. Children imitate their parents in word and deed and are susceptible to the influence of their looks, voices and manners.

Feel Resentment.

The resentment children sometimes feel in being required to observe formulas is because they find these things disregarded by older persons in the family. Parents, therefore, have to discipline themselves before they can train their children. This may sometimes require the courage to acknowledge a mistake, for it is as important to say "I was mistaken," or "I beg your pardon," as to say "Thank you."

Conscientious parents know that there can be no training in haphazard methods, or by laying down maxims and precepts, and that it is not by claiming to be infallible that they can hope to influence their children, but by showing that they are striving toward high standards of conduct. If the home atmosphere is that of peace it is sure to promote contentment. If there is the everyday graciousness of speech and action the influence can not fail to foster kindness and consideration. There will not be the mere superficial politeness, but the true graciousness of life, a grace which is deep and enduring.

Home, in its true sense, is the training ground for life. The years at home are most important because habits are being formed which will influence the entire future. It is there that we learn to fill our place in relation to others; there that we learn respect for authority and obedience to law and order. It is in the home that we learn in childhood the necessity of self-control, the importance of truthfulness, dutifulness, unselfishness, sympathies and courtesy. We learn to make concessions, to give up insisting on having our own way, and we learn to look at things from the point of view of other people.

High Ideals.

Boys and girls who are taught high ideals of conduct in the home will not fail to exercise kindness and courtesy toward their companions. As they grow to manhood and womanhood they will feel bound to show their best home training in their intercourse with the world, out of respect to themselves and the dear family life. The home life may be but a memory, distant in the years, but the influence will never be lost.

With the Boy.

Willie—May I go and play now, ma?

Mother—What? With those ragged trousers!

Willie—No; with the boy next door.

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

JUST ahead glittered the huge electric sign "Maxim's."

The six letters in the name of this famous Paris cafe flashed out and blazed into light one at a time.

As they drew nearer Helen was surprised to find the building itself rather small and unpretentious, but the waiting cabs, the lights and the loitering crowd gave the place an air of festivity.

"There, you've always wanted to see a real bar—there's your chance," commented Warren, as they entered and were confronted by a large unscreened bar which ran half way across the room.

Helen gazed with astonished interest at the shining glasses, bottles and all the paraphernalia of a bar, which until now she had only glimpsed behind swinging doors.

But even more astonishing than the unscreened bar were the three young women perched on high stools before it. They were all in decollete gowns, with their French heeled slippers hooked over the rounds of the high stools. Several men in evening dress laughed and chatted with them, and the white-coated attendants were busy pouring out drinks.

"Now, if you want to sit up to a bar, here's the chance of your life," grinned Warren.

But Helen was too absorbed in studying the place and the women to make an indignant retort. A red-jacketed boy, with an opera cloak over his arm and three silk hats carried aloft on as many canes, came by now for Warren's stick and hat, which he hoisted up with the others.

"Guess that's the liveliest room back there," and Warren led the way through to the main room beyond.

Although it was only half-past eleven, which Warren said was "early for Maxim's," the place was well filled.

The arrangement of the tables was curious, for they were placed along the walls, and the people sat behind them on leather-covered benches. In this way the guests sat side by side, and every one faced the center of the room, which was cleared for dancing. A large orchestra, in bright red uniforms, clashed a lively air.

Only Champagne.

Next to Helen was a girl in a filmsy pale, yellow gown, with a black aigret in her hair. As she leaned towards the man beside her, Helen could see only her bare, powdered shoulders.

"Let's get rid of this fellow first," frowned Warren, as a waiter hovered in front of them," and then size up the place. 'No prices here either," glancing over the menu. "Well, let's see," musingly, "Welsh rarebit, Maximette? Guess that'll about do for us. What do you want to drink—claret lemonade?

"Sorry, sir," suavely interrupted the waiter in perfect English, for all the waiters at Maxim's speak several languages, "but we serve only champagne in this room. Other drinks you can get out front."

"So that's your hold-up, is it? All right, we're here and we'll have to stand for it," taking up the wine card. "We could have seen just as much in the front room," protested Helen. "It's a shame to pay for champagne when neither of us like it."

"Well, you're the one who was keen on coming to Maxim's. We're here now, and if there's anything to see, which I doubt, we're going to see it! We'll not sit out in any front room to save a few dollars."

At every place was a silver champagne holder with its napkin-covered bottle. Very few were having anything to eat, but all were sipping wine and smoking cigarettes. As yet no one was dancing, and the polished floor space was deserted except for the hurrying waiters.

"Well, I call this pretty slow," mused Warren, as he reached for a match safe. "Told you Maxim's would be pretty tame. They've made their name for wickedness—now they're living on that reputation."

"But, dear, you said there'd be a lot of American sightseers—I don't see any Americans at all."

"You don't? How about that couple over there by the orchestra—that woman in the blue tailor-made. If she isn't a New England school marm seeing the 'sights of Paris,' I'll eat my hat."

"But I thought one had to dress for the smart supper places here," laughed Helen, looking at the blue tailor-made.

"Oh, Maxim's isn't 'smart.' It only has the name of being wicked—and it even isn't that any more. You can wear anything here."

"What wonderful peaches," exclaimed Helen, as the waiter placed before them a box of six hothouse peaches packed in pink cotton.

All Alone.

"Um-m, wonderful price, too. Better wait till we pass a fruitstand on the way home. You'll pay from 4 to 10 francs for one of those. There's a story about a Chicago man who came over here, ate one of Maxim's peaches and had to cable home for money."

"Oh, look at that girl crushing those strawberries in her champagne!"

"Hope that fellow's pocketbook can stand the bill," commented Warren, for in the leaf-lined box which had evidently held six huge berries only two remained.

The crushing of these expensive fruits in champagne seemed a favorite trick at Maxim's, for strawberries and peaches were being crushed into many glasses by jeweled fingers. A little flat-end stick was used, and one was laid suggestively by each box of fruit.

Everyone turned to look at a striking woman in a shimmering spangled gown, who now swept in unescorted. The waiter who seated her handed her a wine card, from hich she gave an order, and then calmly opened a cigarette case and lit a cigarette.

"Surely she isn't alone?" whispered Helen.

"Don't see anyone with her, do you? But don't worry, she'll not be alone long. Watch her size up the crowd," as the girl under her penciled eyebrows made a leisurely, almost insolent survey of the room.

"Oh, is she one of the—the 'demi-monde' you read about?" asked Helen, with breathless interest.

"Wouldn't be here alone—if she wasn't. Ah, that's more like it!" as a couple now left their seat and waltzed out on the polished floor.

The girl's clinging skirts wrapped around her silken ankles as she danced, and her satin slippers seemed hardly to touch the floor. Now other couples left the tables and glided into the waltz. And it WAS a waltz, a graceful, swinging waltz, with none of the vulgarities of the turkey trot and bunny hug which one sees everywhere in New York.

"Of course, the French dance well," agreed Warren. "They're not going to caper up and down and make monkeys of themselves just to follow some freakish fashion. Takes Americans to do that."

"Oh, do you suppose she knows him?" whispered Helen, as a tall Frenchman who now came in took a seat beside the woman in the shimmering spangled gown and began to talk to her.

"Probably not," shrugged Warren.

More Ladies.

It was getting late and more painted ladies came trailing in. They were all beautifully gowned and glittering with jewels—good jewelry, too! Wonderful diamond pendants set in platinum gleamed on almost every bare throat.

All the women smoked cigarettes, most of them had jeweled cases of their own, but some borrowed from the case of their escort.

"What on earth are you doing?" scowled Warren. "Salt in champagne?"

"But it's so sickening sweet," protested Helen, putting down the salt cellar. "You know I can't bear champagne."

"Well, that's a convenient, economical predilection that I'll not discourage," grinned Warren.

"But, dear, now that we've complied with their rule and ordered champagne—couldn't I have a claret-lemonade?"

"We'll see. Here," signaling their waiter. "This lady doesn't like champagne and wants a claret-lemonade."

"Sorry, sir, but we serve only champagne in this room. You can get a claret lemonade in the front room, sir."

"Well, when we move from here—it'll not be into the front room, but OUT the front door. Get that? You can make a rule that everybody must order champagne, if you choose. But when they order it—it's a blamed outrage that they can't have any other drink they want. Get my check!"

The waiter started a mumbled apology, but Warren cut him short.

"This place's a blamed fake. What have you got here to make people buy champagne? It's all right when a place puts up a good show or something out of the ordinary. But you've got nothing but a played-out name and your nerve! Bring that check, I tell you."

"Oh, Warren, I'm sorry! I wish I hadn't said anything about the champagne," deplored Helen, who wanted to stay longer.

"Well, there's nothing to see here. If you want this sort of thing—there's a dozen places in Paris where you can get the worth of your money. But you'll not get it at any of these cut-and-dried joints—fixed up for the tourist."

Outside they were greeted by the supplicating cabmen. Warren glanced at his watch.

"Come on," putting Helen into the nearest cab. "It's only half-past twelve—Paris doesn't wake up until after one. I'll take you to a place that Watson told me about. He says it's the real thing—hasn't been spoiled by the guidebooks."

Middle Course Needed.

It was after dinner at the club, when, after dining well, and seated in the depths of an easy chair, confidences were exchanged with impunity. Young Brown looked around cautiously before remarking:

"My wife is so exceedingly nervous at night, Jones, that she scarcely sleeps at all."

"What's she afraid of? Burglars?" answered Jones, laconically.

"Yes."

"Well, you'll have to expect that, my boy. My wife was like that. Every time she heard a noise downstairs she'd rout me out and send me at once to investigate, and it ended with me getting no sleep, as well as herself. After a time, however, I convinced her that if a burglar did get into the house he wouldn't make any noise at all."

"That's rather a good idea!" exclaimed the young one. "I've a good mind to try that myself."

"Don't do it," pleaded Jones. "Women never listen to logic, for if your wife's anything like mine she'll worry every time she doesn't hear a noise downstairs!"

The Mexican View

By MINNA IRVING.

IN Mexico, not long ago,
We used to bait the bull,
With much beribboned little darts
We stuck his carcass full.
But now we have a grander sport—
The gringo is our game;
Such loads of fun we have with him,
It makes the bull-fight tame.

We take the bold American
And hit him on the head,
Or slice him up in little strips,
Or pepper him with lead,
Or shut him in a dungeon cell,
Pretend to set him free,
Then stab him neatly in the back,
Or hang him from a tree.

The Yankee navy loafs around,
Their capitans talk big,
But pooh! These gringoes only have
The spirit of a pig.
Si, Senor, they're afraid of us
No matter what they say.
Our cochero could snap his whip,
And they would run away.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

A Host of Valuable Hints from Pretty Carrie Reynolds

Miss Carrie Reynolds.

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

DO you do your own housework, milady, and despise yourself for the doing? Do you loathe the simple routine of daily tasks, and feel sure that it will eventually net you parboiled red hands, and thick-lidded steamed eyes, and grimy dust-laden hair? No, stop, look and listen to flaxen-haired Carrie Reynolds, who appears on the various stages of the Keith theaters under the management of Mr. Richard Lambert—and who still finds time to be the mistress and housekeeper and maid of a dainty four-room apartment out on Riverside Drive, New York City.

From a long line of German ancestors Miss Reynolds has inherited truly Teutonic flax-colored hair—and ability as a "haus-frau." Thrown in for good measure are sparkling tawny brown eyes, clear skin, a good figure and teeth that combine beauty and strength. Of course, Providence sent a few good fairies to the christening; but one of the most important ones was Good Dame Common Sense. Housework, enthusiasm, hard work and a goal ahead are Miss Reynolds' sign posts to success in life and pulchritude.

Splendid Exercise.

"Now, you can't think that any able-bodied woman would want a maid around to bother her in a little four-room-and-bath apartment," said Miss Reynolds. "Think of all the splendid exercise going to waste in these days when one pound added to your weight just about means a gray hair. Why, housework is wonderful for the figure—sweeping and bed-making and basting a roast in the oven are as good exercise as any gymnasium can offer you. Wield a broom for the benefit of arms, shoulders and supple waist muscles; go down on the floor and scrub to strengthen your back; get in a glow of stimulated blood circulation from cleaning and sweeping and dusting and running the countless little errands that the housekeeper knows. Work up an appetite to enjoy your food and so ward off indigestion. Prepare sane, healthy dishes of whose benefit you are sure. And then look with joy and delight at your own spick and span little home, and think: 'Well, it gleams and glistens with cleanness and order—and I did it.' And if that does not make you well and happy and pulsing with the beauty of proud accomplishment, I am a poor guesser—that's all!"

"But, Miss Reynolds," interposed the girl who interviews, "after all your housework, are you not fairly ravenous, and don't you have to eat so heartily that you must work a bit overtime to get the possible fatal pound of flesh off again?"

"Well," confessed Miss Reynolds, "I do not eat three meals a day. When I am out on tour or when I am living in my own little home I have an 8 o'clock breakfast and a 5:30 dinner, and though I become fairly ravenous in between I never indulge in anything more fat-producing that a glass of grape juice. That is my staff when I am hungry between meals; but I am now accustomed to but two meals a day. And at those meals, potatoes, gravies and white breads must be among those absent. And no sweets—I have not eaten candy in five years. It is not good for complexion or figure or teeth. And all these things are worth considering even at the cost of a few sweetmeats."

A Tooth Secret.

"You probably show your teeth a little more consideration than just not eating candy. Won't you tell me what separate benefits they have—since they can scarcely get much help from the housework?" said I.

"Oh, I have a tooth secret, and I'm quite proud of it and quite as willing to pass it along. I use four toothbrushes! No, not a contortion act and not all at a time. Each brush handle is decorated with a wee ribbon of distinguishing color, and I use the brushes in rotation, giving them a rest between jobs. I brush my teeth four times per diem, and each brush works once in 24 hours and has all the time between to air and rest and grow sweet and clean before its next usage. And I stand in front of a mirror to cleanse my teeth and am an interested observer as I work the brush up and down to make sure that I am going over the ground thoroughly. Housework and four toothbrushes—was the interview worth while?" asked Miss Reynolds.

And when you have tried housework and four toothbrushes I think that you will agree with me that it was.

Have Mercy on Mother

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

IF someone did not occasionally point to the burden on every Mother's shoulders, the world would forget she carried one, for she never complains. Could she have the longing of her heart gratified, her burden would always remain invisible to those she loves.

She is happy so long as the burden rests on her back. It is when neglect and inappreciation from her children lift the burden to her heart that her sorrow begins.

Mother is in need of mercy all the year, and her need is particularly great in the hot days of summer. It is then that husband and children seek every bit of cool air in the house and out, and Mother is left in the kitchen. The steam from the cooking vegetables, the wave of hot air from the oven where the strawberry shortcake the family demands is turning a delicate brown; the heat curling up from the iron that is pressing out daughter's dainty white dress—all these, if justice is done, are somewhere, in a world not visible to mortal eyes, turning into the smoke of incense before Mother's shrine.

There must be more garments in summer, which means more making, more mending and a larger pile for the laundry, and Mother has only the two hands she has at other seasons, and the strength poured into them is not so great.

There are preserves, and jams and jellies to be made, all labor that calls for a hot fire; there are basting and beating and stirring, all exertion that quickens the blood and adds to the heat, which is already intolerable.

The puddings and cakes and pies which Daughter spreads on a cool, mossy picnic bank in the evening were prepared in a hot, steamy kitchen in the morning, and they represent the work of Mother's hands. Every call made upon Mother from May till September seems to carry a hot fire with it. There is no one who can do these things but Mother. No one will do them but Mother, and many girls argue there is no one who SHOULD do them but Mother.

It is to these girls the plea is made: have mercy on Mother! She will not ask it for herself; she will not seek it for herself. She will plunge into that fiery furnace of love and service commonly called the kitchen, and suffer there all day that her family may have all the comforts of midsummer without paying the price.

A girl must have wash dresses in summer. She owes that to herself, and she owes it to her mother that they be of a fashion easy to make and easy to launder. Fruits are a summer joy and a necessity, but the benefit gained is lost if the fruit is smothered between rich pie crust that increases the heat of the kitchen in its making, and the heat of the body in its digestion.

The office downtown was hot all day, and the girl who has no mercy on Mother complains all evening because she had to work in it, taking into no account that the hottest office in town is a delightfully cool summer resort compared with the kitchen at home.

And all Mother gets in pay is her board and clothes, a great deal of complaint, and an occasional scrap of love which she glorifies and hugs to her breast, and magnifies after the manner of all mothers.

Have mercy on Mother! Lessen her labors and increase her wages. Pay no heed to the foolish longing of a fond heart that would be satisfied if paid in love alone, but see that she gets more.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

And so another week went by.

But the next was not destined to pass without an event. As Mr. Gryce was deliberating at his own house one morning a stranger entered, in whose important air and courteous but mysterious manner he read news.

"Are you the detective, Gryce?" this person asked.

"That is my name and calling," was the ready answer.

"I have a line or two here which I will trouble you to read," said the gentleman, handing him a note.

It was from the superintendent of police, and ran thus:

"Listen to what the bearer of this has to say. He will undoubtedly interest you."

"May I inquire your name?" inquired Mr. Gryce.

The stranger nodded and gave it. It was one well known in the Union League, and Mr. Gryce, upon hearing it, looked with renewed interest at its owner, whose face and form were of a marked elegance almost approaching dandyism.

New Facts.

"Your business?" the detective now asked, laconically, but not ungraciously. This young scion of one of New York's oldest families had never forfeited the respect of any one. Indeed, he was very favorably known as a young man of great good nature and unquestioned honor.

The young gentleman posed himself—he was not above producing small effects—and then quietly remarked:

"There was an inquest held not long ago over the remains of a young girl who died from poison. Mildred Farley was her name."

Mr. Gryce nodded. He had no difficulty in hiding his intense and sudden interest, for his confidant at this juncture was the elegant seal which hung from the watch chain of his visitor, and that seal was a sphinx.

"I read the account of that inquest," continued the young man, "and one statement made by the gentleman who professed to know the most about the matter was false."

"Ah! let us hear," returned Mr. Gryce.

"He said, if you remember, that he found the young woman on a stoop in Twenty-second street, and that he lifted her up to carry her to his phaeton, when a bottle fell from her hand to the sidewalk and broke."

"I remember."

"As that bottle had held poison and just the poison from which the young girl is known to have died, it is a matter of some importance, I presume, to know the exact truth about it."

"It certainly is, Mr. K——."

The young gentleman took another attitude, less graceful but more impressive than the first.

"I can tell you something about it," he affirmed; "I was there."

"There?"

"I had been—well, it does not matter where, but in a place where I do not smoke and where I should consider it the height of ill manners to light a cigar till I had shut the street door behind me. I therefore prepared to do this in the vestibule, and it being rather a windy night, I had withdrawn into a corner behind the partly closed door when I heard the sound of wheels, and the next moment the slight but unmistakable noise of a small bottle shivering to pieces on the pavement before me. Not understanding the matter, I felt curious, and, looking out, beheld the doctor's phaeton just beyond the house going in the direction of Broadway. It had not stopped in passing and no young woman had been lifted from the steps. For I had glanced down them the moment before and they were entirely unoccupied. I stepped on some of the pieces of that broken phial as I went on my way, and I remember the smell that arose from them distinctly. It was that of bitter almonds."

"I am sure I am very much obliged to you," rejoined Mr. Gryce. "It is certainly an important piece of evidence. I will not ask why it was not given us before."

"But I will tell you," responded the other frankly. "I am not much in the habit of mixing in police matters and I had a natural disinclination to put myself forward. So I let the affair go by. But conscience was too much for me at last. I took my information to the superintendent of police, and he sent me here. That is the history of the matter."

"I accept it," was Mr. Gryce's response, "and I only ask you to be as careful in the future as in the past. Let these facts be considered as ours alone, sir."

"I would be very happy to do this, but unfortunately I was more ready to speak to my friends than I was to the officers of the law. Several members of my club know what I have just told you, and while this is to be regretted, perhaps, it is also the real cause of my being here. For it was in my talk to them that I was led to see the harm which might ensue upon my silence. I will talk no more about it in the future, however."

"And I will be much obliged," remarked Mr. Gryce.

As soon as possible after he had dismissed his visitor the detective went down to police headquarters. He had a talk with the superintendent and that same day at an hour when he knew he should find Dr. Molesworth at home he went to see him with a writ of arrest in his pocket.

The Darkening Cloud.

A SQUARE, dull-looking room with two dim windows facing a high brick wall; a large table covered with phials, boxes of instruments, writing materials and a few books; a black hair-cloth sofa and two chairs; a dingy carpet and a ceiling which has been unwhitened for years; at the table and confronting the only bright thing in the room, a hard coal fire, the stern, immovable figure of a man buried in the deepest thought. Such is Julius Molesworth's office and such the appearance of Julius Molesworth himself on the afternoon of this, his most momentous day.

But first, what is he brooding over? Such intentness and absorption argue the existence of some heavy subject on his mind.

The opportunity of his life was before him, and he felt bound to improve it. Was he meditating upon this case and determining just what his course of treatment should be as he sat there before the fire? His gradually lightening brow seemed to say yes, and the startling fervor with which he suddenly broke the spell which bound him and arose told of a secret found rather than a secret buried.

"Yes, it is"—he cried—"in small but oft-repeated doses. I would willingly stake my life upon it."

And raising his head, he suddenly discerned in the looking glass which hung opposite him over the mantelpiece a face turned toward him from the open door, which though quiet and composed in every feature, had yet that something in it which tells the observer that, expected or unexpected, his hour has come, and the hopes which he has cherished are vainer than the vainest show.

The Arrest.

He saw this face, I say, but he did not at once turn. He had a shock to get over, a course to be resolved upon. When he did turn, it was with courtesy and a slight show of surprise.

"Excuse me," said he, "I do not receive patients at this hour."

"I am not a patient," returned Mr. Gryce.

The doctor gazed slowly round his room. He did not love it, but it held his all, and there was not an object within it but spoke to his soul of some cherished ambition or secret all-absorbing wish.

"But you have some business! I recollect your face, but I can not place you."

"My face is of no account; my business is. Dr. Molesworth, you are a physician of an unrelenting school; the fewest words will answer with you. I am an officer armed with a warrant, and I have come to arrest you as the suspected murderer of Mildred Farley."

The doctor, who had been standing with his back to the table, turned slightly and took up a paper lying there. There were a few words written on it, and he read them before he gave the detective that slight bow which was his only answer to this dread announcement.

"I am charged with placing you in custody," continued the detective; but if there is anything you wish to do——"

"I would like a half-hour," the doctor responded firmly. "I have a case"—his voice broke; he turned to his desk and sat down. "Don't interrupt me," he said, laying down the paper he held and taking up his pen. "I have some memoranda to make. They are important—a matter of life and death to one poor woman."

"Write," said the detective; "I am no gabbler."

And Dr. Molesworth wrote, calmly, thoughtfully, with entire absorption in his subject, or so it seemed to the eye who saw all, though it dwelt only on a vial marked "Poison" that stood on the doctor's table. Nor did that same eye detect any break in this extraordinary calmness when, the last word written, the physician turned and handing him the paper, said:

"It will probably prove unintelligible to you, but it can be easily read by any physician. Keep it till I ask you for it."

Then he turned again to his table and wrote three or four letters, all of which he handed over to the other for inspection, before sealing and directing them. When all this was done, he rose, and confronting the detective, observed:

"Now I am ready to go with you. The question is where will you take me. You have arrested me on suspicion of murder; for this you must have good reasons, better reasons than appeared at the inquest, or you would not have delayed this arrest. I will not question them, I will only say that your evidence against me is circumstantial, must be, since I did not do this deed; and as circumstantial evidence is never absolute proof, you are doing me a great injustice by this action, and my patients an irreparable harm. But you are not the principal in this matter and I will not argue with you concerning my innocence, but only ask one favor in return for the possible wrong you do me. This is the privilege of a short interview with a person I am willing to name and whom I only desire to see in your presence and, if you wish, in your hearing."

Facts in Nature

FOR centuries it has been known that Nature's most valuable health giving agents for the cure of disease are found in our American forests. Over forty years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute at Buffalo, N.Y., used the powdered extracts as well as the liquid extracts of native medicinal plants, such as Bloodroot and Queen's root, Golden Seal and Stone root, Cherry bark and Mandrake, for the cure of blood diseases. This prescription as put up in liquid form was called and has enjoyed a large sale for all these years in every drug store in the land. You can now obtain the powdered extract in sugar-coated tablet form of your medicine dealer, or send 50c in one-cent postage stamps for trial box to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and tablets will be mailed, postage prepaid.

DR. PIERCE'S

The "Golden Medical Discovery" makes rich, red blood, invigorates the stomach, liver and bowels and through them the whole system. Skin affections, blotches, boils, pimples and eruptions—result of bad blood—are eradicated by this alterative extract—as thousands have testified.

LAST COUPON IS PRINTED IN TO-DAY'S PAPER

Popularity Race Comes to an End. Final Count Will Be Published Sunday.

YOUR last chance, fans. The popularity coupon is printed for the last time to-day. The greatest race for honors that ball players in the Empire State League have ever participated in off the diamond is about to close.

The dash for votes is over with to-day. No longer will the coupon appear in Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian. The last available figures show that Dick Mancher, Otto Jordan, "Pat" Murphy and "Goat" Halliday are leading the race for the loving cup to be donated by this paper.

THE final count will be published in next Sunday's American and Monday's Georgian. The great number of votes sent in yesterday makes it impossible to state just who is in the lead. All votes sent in after to-day will be worthless.

• • •

RUSH in your belated votes if you wish them included. The contest to determine the most popular player has not been won. Your favorite may still have a chance.

CITY AMATEUR TEAMS TO BATTLE FOR TITLE

What should prove interesting to the fans and followers of amateur ball in the city is the announcement of a proposed city championship.

The winners of the pennants of each league will contest for the title. All details are to be worked out later.

The championship of the city will be decided by the following teams:

Atlanta National Bank (Manufacturers' League); First Baptist or St. Philip's (Sunday School); Standard Oil Co. (Railroad League); Agogas or Wesley (Baraca League); Exposition Mills (Saturday Afternoon League).

TIGERS TO GET CAVET.

MOBILE, ALA., Aug. 12.—The Detroit American League club has exercised its option on Pitcher Teller Cavet, of Mobile, and the latter will report to Jennings at the close of the season. With Cavet and Coveleskie on the staff for next season, the Tigers have two of the best minor league southpaws to help the veterans.

Yankees Pay $9,000 For Three Pitchers

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Realizing that he has one of the best managers that the game can claim, but that in order to have a winning organization he must have the material, President Farrell, of the Yankees, is spending money right and left securing new men. Following his spending of $12,000 and giving two regular players for Infielder Maisel, of Baltimore, Farrell yesterday invested $9,000 for three minor league pitchers.

Pitcher Marty McHale, formerly with the Red Sox, was purchased from the Jersey City club for $6,000, and will report to Manager Chance here to-day. McHale, though a member of a tail-end club, has won more than half his games this season, and Manager Schlafly, of the Jersey City club, says he is now ripe for a return to the big leagues.

Farrell has also purchased Cy Pieh from the Dayton club, of the Central League, for $1,500. Pieh is a right-handed pitcher. The third pitcher is Paddy Cooper, of the Petersburg team, of the Virginia League. He also cost $1,500.

PHILLIES SECURE DEVORE FROM CINCINNATI REDS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 12.—Josh Devore, center fielder of the Cincinnati Reds for the past few weeks, is now the property of the Philadelphia Nationals. He left the team last night for Philadelphia. Devore declared himself satisfied with the transfer, as it gives him a chance in the fight against McGraw's Giants, who discarded him.

Bulgarian Heir Is Ill; Poison Plot Reported

SOFIA, Aug. 12.—A mysterious illness has seized Crown Prince Boris of Bulgaria. It was announced to-day that the Crown Prince is suffering from a nervous breakdown due to the rigors of the recent military campaign.

In view of Czar Ferdinand's trepidation over the safety of his heir reports were current in some quarters that an attempt had been made to kill Boris with poison.

ANOTHER FOR REDS.

SEATTLE, WASH., Aug. 12.—Second Baseman Rawlings, of the Victoria Northwestern League team, was sold to the Cincinnati team of the National League for $2,000. Rawlings will report to Cincinnati next spring.

DR. ROUGLIN RETURNS.

Dr. Louis C. Rouglin returned to-day from a two weeks' vacation at Eastern resorts. He spent a week fishing off Ocean CView and reported several big catches.

Great Hurler Declares Champions Unperturbed by Philly Spurt

GIANTS NOT UNDER STRAIN, SAYS MARQUARD

By Rube Marquard.

(Star Southpaw of the Champion Giants and Holder of the World's Record for Consecutive Victories at Nineteen Straight.)

CINCINNATI, Aug. 9.—Our second Western trip did not prove so successful as did the first. The Phillies gained some ground on us. But I do not think our pennant chances have been materially damaged. Indeed, our team has done remarkably well on the road, and but for the unusual spurt of the Quakers no one would be at all anxious over the fact that the race has tightened a bit.

Pittsburg jolted us in a manner I did not expect. But then the Pirates did no better than two out of three; and goodness knows, it was about time they won a series from us at Forbes Field. It has been long enough coming to be excused, and did not wipe out the rough treatment we handed Clarke's men on their last call at the Polo Grounds.

As a usual thing, our club trims the Pirates in Smoke Town, while the Buccaneers, in turn, make life miserable for us at home. If these conditions have been reversed it makes practically no difference.

I was pretty sore when that Smoke Town gang handed me a drubbing on Tuesday. It broke a string of ten straight victories. I didn't care to attempt to better my championship performance of a year ago. That involves too much strain. Yet I should have liked very much to beat the eleven straight of young Boehling, my illustrious contemporary of the American League.

Within Game of Record.

I was somewhat piqued because of the fact that I was within one game of his mark. Only the fact that he was a southpaw and a recruit aroused my ambition to go out for a season's record. One day cured all my disappointment and made me look upon my reverse in a philosophical manner.

I was much more disappointed when Matty lost out on Wednesday. We had all been pulling for the "grand old master" to maintain his wonderful performance when it became apparent that he had a chance for a record of straight wins. He had rung up seven straight before he fell a victim to the Pirates.

Now, I think that these reverses will do us both a lot of good. Neither of us had been under any strain and we should come back stronger than ever. It was simply a case of Pittsburg catching us when, by all law of percentage, we were overdue to lose.

I have learned from bitter experience that record making is no good thing for a pitcher who happens to be a main dependency of a box corps. The reaction from the first defeat unsettles him for a long time.

Phillies Hang On Grimly.

We have not won the pennant yet, but Philadelphia will have the merriest time of its life catching us. To my mind, the only chance of the Quakers is for them to clean up the games remaining with us. Such a possibility, in the light of what we have done to Doolin's men to date, seems far-fetched. Philadelphia has played great ball lately and hung on grimly to us. But, sooner or later, the slump must hit them.

We haven't had exactly what you might call a slump on this trip, but we have had our share of the bad breaks. Larry Doyle has been out of commission most of the time, while Chief Meyers is in New York with a lacerated thumb. This pair has always been of inestimable strength to our team, both offensively and defensively. I think that we have done very well in the West considering their absence from the line-up.

I have never seen a man who was so set upon winning a pennant and a world's championship as is McGraw this season. Our manager wishes to take a real club around the world with the White Sox. McGraw is continually drilling into us the importance of fighting every game to the last ditch. He is not worrying over the Quakers, but he is trying to impress upon all of us the importance of never for a moment letting up in our work.

And I think he has all of us pulling together as harmoniously as any club in the history of baseball. Every man on the club is doing his level best—more, I believe, to please the boss than for the financial consideration of October's classic.

Need of Backstop.

has been reflected in the trade he negotiated just before he left Pittsburg for this city. He traded Otis Crandall for Larry McLean. With Meyers out of commission McGraw realized that the hitting strength of his club would be affected. McLean is a finished backstop and a very fine sticker. Crandall, one of the grandest fellows who ever drew breath, had been of great service in former years as a relief twirler and pinch hitter.

But McGraw was well provided with pitching talent that could go the route. He strengthened the club by the trade. We were all very sorry to bid good-bye to Otis. He was a grand influence. Many a time his pleasing personality has helped to chase the blues from camp when we happened to meet with some unexpected misfortune.

I have said, in a previous article, that our pitching staff is the best in the major leagues. With the acquisition of Larry McLean I will back our catching department against any other.

Heretofore, the class was naturally ascribed to the Cubs in Archer and Bresnahan. With the best pitchers and two of the four greatest catchers in the game, I think fandom will agree that New York will boast the greatest battery strength in its company.

Upon the battery strength I confidently rely. I think it will prove an insurmountable obstacle to Philadelphia's pennant hopes.

Lupus Worst Form of Skin Diseases

Here is a Home Treatment that Overcomes even Worst Cases.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. S., the famous blood specific. Its action is quite remarkable and has direct influence upon the network of small blood vessels and glands in the skin.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and insist upon having it. For illustrated book on skin diseases write The Swift Specific Co., 153 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga. Do not allow some zealous clerk to barrup the atmosphere in eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. Beware of all substitutes.

WHITE-WHITNEY BOUT TO BE GRUDGE AFFAIR

By Left Hook.

FRANK WHITNEY is hot under the collar. Frank holds a personal grudge against Nate Lewis, manager of Charley White, and says he will get his revenge when he meets White at the Auditorium-Armory Wednesday night.

Several days ago Whitney was in Chicago. Nate Lewis and White were also in the Windy City. Last Wednesday afternoon Lewis and White took a trip to Whitney's training quarters to see the latter in action. They had the opportunity. Frank donned the mitts with Packey McFarland for three rounds and the air was full of flying gloves.

A LARGE crowd witnessed the affair and, when it was over, an argument at once took place between the White and Whitney factions. Frank is also a great favorite in Chicago. Just as Whitney was about to leave the gymnasium he encountered Nate Lewis. One word followed the other, and before many minutes had passed, Whitney told Lewis to get White and he would fight him then and there.

The wrangle started when Lewis told Whitney that he had better get into shape for Charley or he would follow the path of Joe Thomas and Jake Abel. Evidently Lewis was trying to get Frank's goat. Whitney was not in love with this line of talk and it did not take him long to get heated up.

"GO get your champion and I'll fight him right here," flashed Frank when Lewis told him to get a reputation. "That's a go," retorted Lewis, who started after White. Cooler heads, however, prevailed and Lewis let Whitney go on his way.

This information did not come from Frank first-handed. True, Frank admitted to the quarrel after a bit of sharp questioning. A personal friend of White wrote us yesterday telling of the encounter between the pair.

"I'M sick of hearing these people saying that White will stop me," said Frank yesterday after he finished boxing three rounds at the Atlanta Athletic Club. "In the first place, I have never been stopped in my fighting career and am ready to bet my end of the purse that White doesn't floor me. This fellow might be a wonder, but, believe me, he isn't stopping Frank Whitney. And besides, don't be surprised if Referee Castro lifts my hand at the end of the tenth round.

"Frank Whitney is going into tomorrow's fight ready to do or die. This Lewis fellow has gone far enough with me and I look for him to be a pretty sad-eyed fellow after the fifth round. I have watched White fight and know his style. On the other hand, he has never seen me in action. This talk of mine may seem like boasting, but nevertheless I mean every word of it. Anyway, those who think White is going to beat Whitney kindly be at the Auditorium and they will get the surprise of their life."

THE above quarrel between White and Lewis means that the two boys are to clash in a grudge affair. Lewis will send White after Frank from the gong, and Whitney has never backed up for an opponent in an Atlanta ring. Will he do it to-morrow night? This is the question puzzling fight fans around these parts.

White and Lewis will be here today. Charley has finished training and will step in the ring in the pink of condition. Those who have seen Whitney will tell you that Frank was never better in his life. Therefore, neither boy will have an excuse to offer if defeated.

• • •

FANS around town are going wild over the fight. On nearly every street corner the name White and Whitney can be heard. Many of them are for White and others for Frank.

Tickets for the fight are going fast and a banner house should attend the affair. The pasteboards can be purchased at Shepherd's Segar Store, Pryor and Edgewood, and at The Rex.

VAUGHN HURLS ONE-HIT GAME AGAINST INDIANS

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 12.—Jim Vaughn, recently acquired by the Cubs in exchange for Lew Richie, added another sensational victory to his string by defeating Indianapolis, 2 to 0. Vaughn allowed the Indians one hit. He has pitched in more games than any other American Association hurler and leads the league in strikeouts and bases on balls. In forty games he has struck out 165 batters and has given 145 free transportations to first base. He also has a no-hit game to his credit for this year. Vaughn left after the game to join the Cubs in Boston.

Detroit Gets Williams, Vols' Star Southpaw

NASHVILLE, TENN., Aug. 12.—President Hirsig left last night for Detroit to close a deal involving Pitcher Claude Williams, the sensational young southpaw of the Vols, for whom the Tigers have offered $3,500. Williams will report at the end of the season.

The purchase of Williams completes the "corner" obtained by the Tigers on the three leading southpaws in the Southern League, options on Coveleskie and Cavet having already been secured by that club.

Announcement was also made of the recall of Pitcher Sam Hendee, from the Cairo Club of the Kitty League, and of Pitcher Johnson, from Hopkinsville, of the same league, in an effort to strengthen the Vols' slab corps.

MOTHER IS GIVEN EQUAL RIGHT TO CHILDREN

House Passes Bill Leaving Power to Award Custody in Divorce Cases to the Judge.

A bill giving the mother an equal right with the father to the custody of minor children after decision in divorce cases, and leaving the disposition of the child with the trial judge, was passed by the House Tuesday morning. The vote was 96 to 62. The fight lasted more than an hour.

It was a substitute to the bill introduced by Smith of Fulton and Olive of Richmond, and to the substitute of the General Judiciary Committee. The substitute was offered by Mr. Smith, who stated it was acceptable to the Senate and would be acted upon by that body at this session. The original bill transferred the prima facie right to the child from the father to the mother.

Mr. Smith, explaining his bill, declared the measure is designed to correct an injustice under which Georgia mothers have been held for years. Speeches in favor of the bill were also made by Miller of Bibb and Olive of Richmond.

A number of members opposed the bill, either declaring the present law is good enough or defining their positions clearly by stating the mother is not competent to care for her child.

Those who spoke against the bill were Conner of Spalding, Darlington of Richmond, Moye of Johnson, Picquet of Richmond and Slater of Bryan.

The House concurred in the Senate amendments to the Atlanta charter bill, providing for a popular vote on the charter, the referendum and the reduction of the power of the Recorder.

OBITUARY

John W. Adair, seventy-nine years old, a well-known resident of Fulton County, died Tuesday morning on his farm on the West Hunter road. He is survived by his wife and one son, Rufus. Six daughters also survive. They are Mrs. W. T. Huff and Mrs. J. M. Thompson, of Savannah; Mrs. J. M. Spinks, of Marietta; Mrs. J. T. Griffith, of Camilla; Mrs. Charles Williams, of Columbia, and Mrs. L. A. Garrison, of Atlanta. The funeral will be held at 3 p. m. at the Sharon Church. Interment will be in the church-yard.

Susan E. Landers, fifty-five years old, No. 28 Inman street, died Tuesday at 9 o'clock. She is survived by her husband. Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

The funeral services of Mrs. Julia Heeden, who died Monday, will be held at 3:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. C. H. Barnes, No. 132 Glennwood avenue. Interment at Hollywood.

South Georgia Road In Receiver's Hands

VALDOSTA, Aug. 12.—The Valdosta, Moultrie and Western Railroad, operating 42 miles from this city to Moultrie, has been placed in the hands of a temporary receiver through foreclosure of a mortgage held by the Valdosta Bank and Trust Company, trustee, acting for the bondholder. B. P. Jones, of this city, owner of the $300,000 bonds, was appointed receiver and the railroad cited to show cause on August 23 why the action should not be made permanent.

The railroad was built entirely with local capital four years ago. It was started on a capital stock of $100,000. The $300,000 of bonds were issued before it was completed.

C. I. Harrel, general manager, will continue to operate the road for the receiver.

$100,000 in Stock For Use of Name

GADSDEN, ALA., Aug. 12.—Oliver Hall, a rich merchant of Collinsville, testified in the case of E. C. Drew, the Fort Payne promoter, charged with using the mail to defraud in promoting the DeKalb Etowah Oil and Gas Company, how he had been selected president by Drew and tendered $100,000 in stock in a $300,000 corporation. He said he never gave anything for the stock, but permitted the use of his name. His son, Irby Hall, was made vice president and given $500 in stock.

A sensation developed when it was shown the company had never been incorporated and that there was no system of bookkeeping.

Attorney Shot When Officer Aims at Dog

W. C. Munday, a member of the law firm of Munday & Cornwell, No. 318 Kiser Building, was shot in the leg Monday night when a bullet fired by Policeman Jaffares at a mad dog glanced from the sidewalk at Capitol avenue and Hunter street.

Munday's wound was slight, the bullet penetrating the flesh only and passing out. He was removed to his home.

The dog had created a panic among children playing in the street. The officer ran up and fired. Munday, fifteen feet away, received the bullet.

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 12.—Governor O'Neal returned to Montgomery this morning and left the impression here that he would appoint a successor to Senator Johnson shortly, notwithstanding advice from Washington to call a special session of the Legislature.

TAX REFORM BILL IS PASSED BY SENATE

Question Put Squarely Up to the House—Validity of Slaton Revenue Bills in Doubt.

With the Senate substitute for the Sheppard House taxing bill back in the House for ratification after passage in the Senate in a night session Monday, and the possibility of the Administration taxing bills being thrown out on constitutional grounds, the wave of tax reform in this session of the Legislature reached its crest Tuesday morning.

Leaders in the Senate declared Tuesday morning that a serious doubt exists as to the constitutionality of presenting the three Administration taxing bills which were defeated in the House last week. The legal point is said to rest upon the constitutionality of presenting bills in one house after they have been defeated in the other. Should this opinion hold, the three bills offered for the Administration by Senators Miller, McNeill and Tarver will be thrown out and the Senate will rest on its laurels earned late Monday evening when the substitute to the Sheppard bill was passed, 29 to 12.

Senate leaders declared Tuesday morning that it was now squarely up to the Lower House to redeem itself and adopt the taxing bill as passed by the Senate. Should the House assume a generous attitude in the matter and ratify the Senate bill, the Senate in turn, the leaders of this body say, will put back the $280,000 appropriation which it sliced off of the House general appropriation bill last week. This can be done, it is claimed, without financially embarrassing the State Treasury with such a taxing law on the statute books as the Miller-Anderson bill passed by the Senate.

The bill provides for a State tax commissioner with offices in the State Capitol and county boards of tax assessors. According to the claims of the authors and supporters of the bill, it will increase the annual revenue of the State by at least $1,000,000, sufficient to pay off the present deficit within the next three years, as well as the teachers.

Passed After Hot Debate.

The bill was passed in the Senate after nearly five hours of debate Monday afternoon. Senator Miller, of the Twenty-fourth, joint author of the bill, made a vigorous defense of the measure in a two and a half hour speech. Senator DuBose, of the Thirtieth, followed Senator Miller in a vigorous attack on the bill. He declared the bill did not provide an adequate personal property tax.

Other Senators who spoke briefly in opposition to the bill were McGregor, of the Nineteenth, and Olliff, of the Fourth. Senator McNeill, in supporting the bill, charged that the Lipscomb bill, defeated in the House, had been framed by the Chamber of Commerce of Athens, the home town of Senator DuBose. It was for this reason, he intimated, that the Senator from the Thirtieth opposed the present bill.

Upon motion of Senator Tarver, the previous question was called and the final vote was taken. Following the vote, which was 29 to 12 in favor, President Anderson for the first time during the session congratulated the Senate. The bill was transmitted immediately to the House.

SNOW SAYS LOSS IN CORN CROP 300,000,000 BUSHELS

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—B. W. Snow says: "With the indication Saturday of the possibility of a breaking up of the drouth I sent a special circular of inquiry to my country clients asking for a report on corn condition August 11, and have received sufficient reports to justify the statement that the decline in prospects since the Government report and my own of August 1 was gathered has been much heavier than is generally appreciated.

"I have returns enough to indicate that Indiana has dropped 10 points in condition, Illinois 15 points with an average around 55, Iowa 13 and Missouri 20. Returns from Kansas and Nebraska are as yet scattered, but sufficient to put Kansas out of the field as a corn-producer this year, and the Nebraska crop is of small importance, except in the northwest counties.

"My returns already cover almost one-third of the important corn counties, and if the later reports are in line with those already received, it is quite possible that the loss since August may have reached 300,000,000 bushels."

COTTON RULED QUITE STRONG

Continued Dry Weather in Southwest Causes Active Bidding, but Sales Were Light.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—An absence of weather news of features in the cables caused the cotton market to open dull to-day and first prices were from unchanged to 1 point off to 4 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday. After the call strength developed and prices rallied 3 to 10 points from the initial level, due mainly to the dry map in the Western belt. The ring apparently seemed to want cotton and purchased rather freely at times. Many of the larger spot houses were noted buyers.

Cordill was out with a report on parts of the Eastern belt, which was considered very favorable. This, coupled with a private telegram from Austin, Texas, stating that no change of consequence is noted in conditions, while the weather has been hot and dry, the temperatures were only 90 degrees yesterday and the entire State toward Oklahoma, cotton is opening fast and in ten days it will be moving freely all south of Waco. This brought out rather active selling from Wall street, but offerings were so rapidly absorbed that prices during the late forenoon were firmly maintained around the early high point.

The high temperatures continue in the West and the weekly weather report just posted shows a bullish condition existing west of the Mississippi, though the Eastern belt is favorable and scattered showers are shown in this section to-day for yesterday, though there are private reports of deterioration in Georgia and Alabama from the lack of moisture in some sections.

Sentiment to-day is somewhat more bullish and higher prices are predicted for the present at least, but there is an element who believe the market is entirely too high and are awaiting rain developments in the West to sell.

At the close the market was steady, with prices showing irregularity, being 3 points lower to 3 points higher than the closing quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—Precipitation overnight in the west occurred at a few isolated places only. No general rains yet, although it continues generally cloudy over Texas. The map shows cloudy weather in North Carolina and in the south central Gulf states. Indications are unchanged, and prospects continue for unsettled weather and precipitation to come on the western States in the near future. Cloudy weather and showers, with a decided fall in temperatures in New Mexico and Colorado promise speedier rain developments for Texas and Oklahoma.

Liverpool is steady but cables that heavy hedge selling is weighing on the market. Manchester cables: "Weaving worse. Yarns slack. Lower unless bad crop prospects." Our market opened 2 points higher and advanced steadily on small buying to cover on the absence of general rains in the west and in anticipation of an unfavorable weather report for the week.

New York wires that Weld's traveling man reports 12 points deterioration in Texas since July 25. It must be borne in mind, however, that the crop condition in Texas was unusually high up to that date.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—There will be showers within the next thirty-six hours in the Lake regions and the North and Middle Atlantic States on the eastern and showers will continue in Florida. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi the weather will be generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

The temperatures will rise slowly in the northwestern districts during to-night and Wednesday.

General Forecast.

General forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Virginia—Fair in west, showers in east portion to-night or Wednesday; warmer to-night.

North Carolina—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; warmer to-night.

South Carolina—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama and Mississippi—Fair except showers in north portion to-night or Wednesday.

Tennessee—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 12.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows mostly cloudy in Texas and North Carolina, generally fair over rest of the belt. No rains shown on the map, except light shower at Galveston and Amarillo, and raining in far west Texas at El Paso. Nice rains fell over south central Gulf and North Carolina, but little rain elsewhere.

* * *

F. M. Cordill wires: "Charlotte, Greenville, Atlanta to Montgomery an unbroken stretch of excellent crops is noted. Atlantics show uninterrupted improvement since my last trip. The weather conditions have been exceptionally favorable. Conditions were never better at this date."

* * *

Waxahatchie, Texas, wires: "Hot winds hurting cotton badly. We have reports stating western Oklahoma is deteriorating rapidly. Only showers reported to-day at Yoakum and Brenham."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Expected rains did not fall in Oklahoma and Texas and the market was due to advance on the opening Monday morning. But Europe reflected no alarm, Arkansas reported splendid rains, Washington unsettled weather over Oklahoma and the weather prophets among the trade said that Texas rains are imminent. Under the circumstances the market continued under the spell of Washington legislative threat and hung fire.

"Recently students of the crop have devoted much time and thought to the effect of dry weather in Texas. One faction, predicating its opinion on the general reports of lack of moisture made by the Weather Bureau and on the great number of crop damage advices now coming from the west, says the crop in Texas and Oklahoma has deteriorated sharply, and that those States no longer promise a wonderful yield. Another faction, which has looked up the western rainfall records of other years is equally certain that the present drouthy spell is not only not abnormal, but is confined to a very much smaller area than the trade realizes.

"Thus it is that some traders adhere to the belief that a very large crop is on the way, conditions east of the Mississippi River being excellent, while others are now becoming convinced another year's need will exceed production. Meantime new crop cotton is being absorbed by previously created requirement just as the talent expected it would be, but the demand for later shipments is small, a fact that robs the bull side of the account of much attractiveness."

The Journal of Commerce says the volume of business passing in the cotton goods markets is being underestimated. Jobbers are doing a good general trade. Cotton yarn prices are easier. The lower trend of prices on the cotton exchanges has caused some setback in the goods markets, but there are few goods available for spot delivery. Most mills do not care to go far into another cotton crop until they are better satisfied of the outcome of the crop.

Dallas wires: "Texas—Generally clear; rain at Amarillo and El Paso. Oklahoma—Clear and hot."

The Government's official record of Texas gives the rainfall average for the month of July as 1.29 inches, which is 1.69 below normal, but .09 inch higher than it was last year.

* * *

Official temperature average for Oklahoma yesterday was 104 degrees; Texas, 98, with seven stations recording 100; five 102, and one 104 degrees.

The market steadied up on dry map in the Western belt after the call. Weld, Mitchell and Cone were the leading buyers on the advance. Smith was possibly the best seller, supposed to be for Wall street.

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Mean temperatures ranged from 1 to 8 degrees above normal, except in Central North Carolina, north Central South Carolina and in the lower coast region of Texas, where there was a slight deficiency. The greatest excess in temperature occurred in Northwestern Arkansas and Northeastern Oklahoma.

Weekly mean temperatures ranged from 72 to 82 degrees over the eastern belt, from 82 to 84 degrees over the central and from 82 to 88 degrees over the western portion of the cotton region. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 72 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 88, occurred at Fort Worth, Texas, and Fort Smith, Ark.

No precipitation occurred during the week in Oklahoma and there was very little in Texas. Rain fell generally over the other portions of the cotton region, except that there was none in the extreme northern portion of Alabama and the southern portion of Middle Tennessee.

The precipitation was unevenly distributed and more than 2 inches occurred in parts of Louisiana, the central portion of Northern Arkansas, Southern Florida and at one station in Alabama and one in North Carolina. The greatest weekly precipitation, 8 inches, occurred at Calico Rock, Ark., and there was 5.66 inches at Minden, La.

MARKED ACTIVITY NOTED IN STOCKS

Street More Cheerful Over Cheap Money Talk—Standard Railroads Led Advance.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—Union Pacific made a new high mark for the present movement at the opening of the stock market to-day, when it began selling at 154¼, or ½ above Monday's final.

The tone was strong and most of the issues showed fractional gains. The accumulation arose from scattered sources and include some shares which for a long time have been neglected.

Among the advances were Woolworth, ½; Steel common, ⅛; United States Rubber common, ⅝; Union Pacific, ½; Amalgamated Copper, ½; American Can, ¼; Anaconda Copper, ¼; Bethlehem Steel, ¼; Canadian Pacific, ⅛; Texas Company, ½; Southern Pacific, ¼; Reading, ⅝; Pennsylvania Railroad, ⅛; Northern Pacific, ⅝; Norfolk and Western, ¼; Erie first preferred ⅝, and Erie common, ⅛.

New Haven, which closed last night at ⅞, crossed par, opening at 100⅛.

St. Paul, which sold ex-dividend, opened at 107⅛, against 109¾ at the closing last night.

The curb was firm.

Americans and Canadian Pacific in London were strong.

Toward the end of the first hour, large buying orders appeared and nearly everything on the list moved up to new high records for the past six weeks. Gains of more than a point were noted in the leading railroads and industrials, while substantial fractional upturns were recorded in many other issues.

Amalgamated Copper led the upward movement, advancing 1¾ to 74¾. Union Pacific moved up 1⅝ to 155⅝, and similar gains were recorded in Canadian Pacific, Reading, St. Paul, Steel common, Wabash common, United States Rubber, Utah Copper and Tennessee Copper advanced more than ½ point. Southern Pacific was under slight pressure, however, declining ⅛ to 91¾.

Call money is loaning and renewing at 2¼ per cent.

Union Pacific will sell ex-rights Wednesday.

The tone was strong in the last hour, and a number of issues made substantial gains. United States Rubber common advanced to more than 62, a net gain of more than 1 points since the opening. Steel was strong, selling around 65 for a gain of ¼ since noon. Canadian Pacific was off fractionally. Lehigh Valley and St. Paul held firm and Texas Company was very strong, selling at 118¾, for a gain of more than 2 points on the day. Brokers said there was a good deal of investment buying in Europe.

STOCK GOSSIP

"As I have said many times of late, any activity the stock market displays is when prices are advancing. I hear that the large interests are heavily long of securities and are accumulating more from day to day.

"Although prices have had a good advance from the low of June 11, the advance under way will continue until stocks are at a considerably higher level. I am especially bullish on Union Pacific, Steel, Copper and the Tractions, and believe holdings should be increased in all of these issues on any moderate recession."—G. D. Potter.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red	85¾@87¾
Corn—No. 2	77½
Oats—No. 2	41½@42½

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—September corn was up as much as 1½c to-day, but it lost ½c later, yet the closing price was about 1c higher.

A report was received during the session saying that the losses throughout the dry districts in the corn belt have been sensational since the Government August report made its appearance.

On this a great deal of corn was bought and it was bought by the larger holders and bulls in the trade. December was quite strong and closed 1⅛c higher, and May was up a little over 1c. The big corn market was chock full of excited humanity, as many speculators left the other pits to try their luck in corn.

Wheat closed with gains of ⅛ to ¼c and oats were up ⅛ to ⅜c.

Provisions were lower all around.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Plans for Erection of Sixteen-Story Bldg. At Whitehall and Ala.

Dr. E. L. Connally Consults Architects—United Cigar Stores May Take Brown & Allen Corner.

Announcement was made Tuesday of plans for a sixteen-story office building on the Brown & Allen site, southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets, a full account of which appears elsewhere. Dr. E. L. Connally owns the present building and will erect the new one.

This action will bring about some interesting changes, and may mean that Brown & Allen will move across the street to the place now occupied by Thomas H. Pitts, the tobacconist, and that the United Cigar Stores Company will be located where Brown & Allen now are.

The corner on which the building will stand is one of the busiest in Atlanta and brings a handsome rental.

List of 24 Exhibitors.

Success of the plan to exhibit Atlanta-made goods on the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building seems to be assured. Already 24 merchants and manufacturers have signed up for space. They are the Whittier Mills Company, Marcus-Loeb & Co., Nunnally & McCrea, Southern Engraving Company, Frederick Disinfectant Company, J. K. Orr Shoe Company, E. Van Winkle Motor Truck Company, Atlanta Gas Light Company, Southern Upholstering Company, Atlanta Stove Works, Southern Spring Bed Company, Burnett, Bell & Klapper, Ghoistin-Cunningham Company, All Star Manufacturing Company, Byrd Printing Company, Norris, Inc., Willingham-Tift Lumber Company, Tripod Paint Company, J. P. Stevens Engraving Company, Atlanta Blank Book Manufacturing Company, White Provision Company, Dowman-Dozier, Foote & Davies.

The plan of the committee has been to put so many "spaces" 10 feet square at the disposal of exhibitors.

Moving on Whitehall.

The Eugene V. Haynes jewelry establishment will move soon from No. 37 to No. 49 Whitehall street. The firm has renovated the latter place and Mr. Haynes has carried out many ideas of the jewelry business gained on trips abroad. Under the old lease this concern was paying $4,000 a year rental, but the owner of No. 37 Whitehall, A. B. Steele, asked $12,000. Unable to reach a compromise at $8,000 the jewelry concern announced that it would move. The change will take place about September 1. An up-to-date moving picture house, it is said, will occupy the old location.

Peachtree Creek Plans.

What can be done to reclaim or "renovate" Peachtree Creek? More than a hundred property owners would like to know. The County Commissioners have a plan to clear out the bed and remove driftwood from the banks. This, they believe, will prevent to a large extent the present overflow in the rainy season, and keep the low places free from standing water. Mosquitoes won't have a chance, and as for the sewage of former days it has been largely removed by the erection of the Peachtree Creek disposal plant.

Some time ago the sugestion was made that the creek be bridged over for a considerable distance. This plan met opposition from Eretus Rivers, who declared that the city and the county had so few streams of size that they should be left exposed to view.

The main permanent trouble with Peachtree Creek seems to be that it is muddy rather than clear. Were it a stream of sparkling water rather than a ditch carrying off Georgia red clay its possibilities would be unlimited. If it were a good stream in this sense the lowlands that now border it could be turned into attractive park spaces for present and future generations.

Spring Street Improvement.

Sooner or later there is going to be a big improvement on Spring street to make it as much as possible a help to Peachtree. The proposition to extend Spring northward to Brookwood has already been announced. It rests where many other good propositions rest, to be revived later when the need becomes greater than it is at present.

Now comes the suggestion that Spring street be turned slightly from its course as it strikes Carnegie way—that a slice be cut from the northeast corner of Cain street (the Governor's Mansion lot) and Spring street be connected up with Cone street, which now ends at Carnegie way, and extended across the railroad tracks by way of a concrete viaduct.

Cone street ends on the south at Marietta street and it is suggested that the street be continued. The viaduct would go straight until the tracks were crossed and then curve slightly to the left, or about due south, and land on Madison avenue, to serve the entire Terminal Station district.

This arrangement, it is pointed out, would make it possible for the viaduct to pass safely to the east of the W. & A. freight depot, and it would put a leading thoroughfare one block closer to the retail district than a viaduct which jumped from the foot of the present Spring street. Not only that, but a first-class, straight-line thoroughfare would be opened up for traffic that would otherwise use Peachtree, and travelers using the Terminal Station could reach their North Side homes much more quickly than by the circuitous route that it is now necessary to travel.

Legislators To Be Paid at Once; Sum Due Them $70,000

That the Georgia legislators will receive every penny of the money due them for their services in the present session of the General Assembly was indicated Tuesday morning following a conference between Governor Slaton and State Treasurer Speer.

The total amount which will be paid to the legislators for salaries and mileage will be $70,000.

State Treasurer Speer declared Tuesday the legislators would be paid in full, regardless of the depleted condition of the treasury, sufficient funds for this purpose being in hand.

A large part of the $70,000 has been paid to the legislators already.

Senate Passes Bill Limiting Militia's Use

Apparently weary from the strenuous campaign for tax revision which culminated in the passage of the substitute to the Shepard bill Monday night, Georgia Senators adjourned Tuesday at noon following the passage of two general bills by McGregor, of the Nineteenth, providing for a revision of the military laws of the State. The vote was 29 to 0. There was no debate.

The bills provide affidavits shall be made by civic authorities before request is made upon the Governor for troops in case of riot or insurrection, thereby decreasing the power of the civil authorities and increasing that of the executive. The measure, according to its supporters, aims to prevent riots between citizens and soldiers such as occurred in Augusta last year.

Tubercular Cattle Barred From State

An order designed to prevent the shipment of tubercular cattle into Georgia was issued Tuesday morning by Dr. Peter F. Balmsen, State Veterinarian, from the office of the Commissioner of Agriculture. The order provides that all cattle originating in New York or Illinois, destined to any point in Georgia, must be accompanied by a certificate of health issued by a veterinary inspector of the United States Bureau of Animal Industry.

The order goes into effect immediately.

Girl's Plea for Man Softens Policewoman

CHICAGO, Aug. 12.—Policewoman Alice Clement to-day was sorry she made an arrest. She was proud of the accomplishment in capturing a young man who insisted upon following her in the downtown streets.

But Miss Alice Brow, the young woman fiance, went to Policewoman Clement and pleaded that she recommend his release. Miss Brown, after several minutes' pleading, cried and then fainted.

When Policewoman Clement started to court to appear against Fred Bentley, 26, the young man she had arrested, she said: "I'm sorry I pinched him."

Parcel Post Stamps Going to Waste Here

The Atlanta postoffice has more than half a million parcel post stamps as a dead weight. Postmaster Hugh McKee has been instructed to sell them at once, but is having a hard job doing it.

Under an order which went into effect July 1 parcel post stamps were declared no longer necessary.

The parcel post stamps immediately fell into disuse, although they are of the same value as other stamps of the same denominations and can be used on all classes of matter.

POSSE SEARCHING FOR LEE SLAYER

South Georgia Farmer Shot Dead by Black He Attempted to Disarm.

LEESBURG, Aug. 12.—Searching parties to-day are scouring the country near this place in an effort to capture Doc Mathis, a negro, who shot and killed R. L. Jessey, a prominent Lee County farmer, last night.

Berry Wallace, a brother-in-law of Jossey, had a difficulty with Will Mathis, a son of the slayer, for beating a mule.

Returning from Leesburg in the automobile of Wallace, accompanied by several other men, a stop was made at the home of the negro, who, it was reported, had secured a rifle with which to avenge the whipping of his boy. It was the intention of the party to disarm the negro. They called to him and he came out, but returned to the house, saying: "Wait until I get my shoes."

Jossey followed and told the negro to wait, but the negro shut and fastened the door. His son, Will Mathis, began firing at the party in the automobile from a window. Doc Mathis cracked the door open and fired at Jossey, the ball passing through the right breast.

Jossey's body was secured by the party and brought to Leesburg, where the posse was formed. The negroes in the meantime had escaped.

U. S. Peace Delegate To the Hague Is Dead

LITTLE ROCK, Aug. 12.—The funeral of Judge U. M. Rose, member of The Hague Peace Conference, who died here to-day, will be held Thursday from the family residence. Judge Rose was one of the most distinguished members of the Southern bar and at one time was president of the American Bar Association. In 1905, following a visit of President Roosevelt to Little Rock, he was appointed a member of the International Peace Conference at The Hague.

Judge Rose was 79 years of age. His death was hastened by a recent fall, when he sustained a fractured arm.

Rain Halts Mercury As It Starts on Climb

A light shower shortly after noon Tuesday cooled the atmosphere and brought Atlanta relief from heat. The mercury in the official thermometer was forced from 88 degrees down to 78 in less than a half hour. The day started off with the thermometer registering 76 degrees.

Fair weather and cooler is predicted by Government Forecaster VonHerrmann.

Castro's Revolt in Venezuela Crushed

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—The revolution in Venezuela, reported to have been led by General Cipriano Castro and his cousin, General Torres Castro, has collapsed entirely, according to information received at the State Department to-day.

General Torres Castro and all his staff have been captured by the Federal forces.

Preference Given Whites by Blalock

Collector of Internal Revenue A. O. Blalock, recently appointed successor to Henry S. Jackson, has started to carry out his pledge to appoint no negroes to any position that a white man may fill without demeaning himself.

Tuesday morning Mr. Blalock appointed a white man to succeed a negro elevator runner in the Federal building.

Morgan's Art Aide Takes Fatal Plunge

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—David C. Preyer, aged 60, one of the best known art critics in America, jumped or fell from the fifth-story window in his apartment-house home to-day and was instantly killed.

Mr. Preyer was frequently consulted by J. Pierpont Morgan during the financier's life.

Elopers Are Halted By Tifton Sheriff

TIFTON, Aug. 12.—Sheriff Shaw arrested Arthur Harrington, 17-year-old son of Deputy Sheriff R. M. Harrington, of Ocilla, in answer to a telephone message from the young man's father.

Harrington, with a Miss Smith, aged 16, of Ocilla, came to Tifton in an automobile intending to secure a license and get married. When they arrived here Harrington was taken in custody and held until his father came, when he was taken back to Ocilla.

Shirt a la Bulgarian Blouse Jails 2 Men

EAST ST. LOUIS, ILL., Aug. 12.—Two men were arrested here while strolling along the main thoroughfare wearing shirts hanging loose, a la Bulgarian blouse.

When asked for an explanation, the men said: "Women are wearing suspenders nowadays. Guess we can wear Bulgarian blouses if we want to."

Resents 'Weakling;' Wants to Box Heflin

NEW YORK, Aug. 12.—John Black, secretary of the Bronx Men's League for Woman Suffrage, has sent a letter to Representative J. Thomas Heflin, of Alabama, protesting against the characterization of men who believe in equal suffrage as effeminate and weaklings.

He says perhaps an offer to go ten rounds with the Congressman at some local club would please him, adding that some things have to be whipped into some men.

Urges U. S. Ban on Alien Conspirators

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12.—Senator William Alden Smith, of Michigan, to-day introduced a bill aiming at the deportation of Mexicans in this country who may be stirring up trouble between the United States and Mexico.

His bill provides that any alien who shall take advantage of his residence in the United States to conspire for the overthrow of a foreign government in North or South America, with which this country is on friendly terms, shall be deported.

This Is a Land for the Rich.

The Rich Interest Us, Attract Special Attention and Enjoy Special Sympathy, Whether They Give Monkey Dinners, Dance Foolish Dances, Marry Idiotic Noblemen, or Sit in Prison for Robbery.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Some enthusiastic and deluded gentlemen, far back in 1776, started in to establish a country of EQUALITY, one in which all men should be equal in the eyes of the law and of other men.

Jefferson, Franklin, Patrick Henry, Washington and all the rest of them were very enthusiastic about equality. BUT THEY DIDN'T SUCCEED IN PLANTING IT IN THIS COUNTRY. Or, if they did, it hasn't sprouted yet.

Consider, if you please, the case of a criminal and thief named Cardenio F. King, who died the other day in a Massachusettes State prison.

King was included in the list of prosperous criminals. He had stolen tens of thousands from those that trusted him.

And when he died in prison all of the newspapers printed doleful stories, telling how the pardon that was rushing toward him arrived just too late to get him out of jail and permit him to die a free man. King was well known in Georgia, especially in Atlanta, where he resided for several years before going East.

Consider also the case of Walsh in Illinois, a distinguished banker, who used to run a Chicago newspaper and preach virtue to others. They let him out to save him from dying in jail. And he died soon afterward.

And consider the interesting gentleman Morse, the Ice King, whose Ice Trust conspiracy in New York inflicted suffering upon hundreds of thousands of women and children, and who finally went a little too far and landed in prison.

They got the sad word that he was dying, and he was released from jail by President Taft.

And he is back in Wall Street now making more money, whether in the same old way or in a new way thought out in prison nobody knows.

It is interesting to consider these men, all of them rich, all of them widely noticed in the newspapers, all of them apparently the most natural objects in the world for pardon and sympathy.

And then consider the ordinary miserable criminal, who dies in jail every day in the year.

Consider the poor brute with a low forehead, badly born, badly fed, badly taught, constantly tempted.

Consider this man and thousands like him.

They are dying in hospital wards in prisons all over the country. And they are carted one after another to be buried without a name above their graves.

Nobody is in a rush to send special pardons for them that THEY may die free men.

Nobody endeavors, as in the case of the criminal, Cardenio F. King, to transmit a pardon by telephone a little ahead of time.

Consider those criminals, who, indeed, deserve sympathy.

The criminal usually starts in a miserable home; his mother has not the strength to feed him, nor the money to buy food; his infancy is starved.

Consider the childhood of that criminal, climbing wearily up and down tenement house stairs, playing in a filthy gutter, dodging the wheels of trucks, frightened and pursued by policemen as soon as he is big enough to play in the streets, tempted, and at last caught when he is old enough to steal.

From the beginning he has had no chance; he lands in jail. He dies. Thousands of him die there—and no pardon comes, no sympathy, no pity—no pity even for those that know him, none for his unhappy mother, who knows that he never had a chance, and who mourns him as sincerely, perhaps, and feels his shame as keenly as any polite lady living in satin and writing pitiful notes in behalf of the imprisoned husband who keeps her well supplied with part of the money that he has stolen.

Consider the rich criminals, dangerous, betrayers of trust, robbers of women and of children, showered with sympathy when the prison at last catches them, and pardoned promptly when they show serious signs of ill health.

And then consider the poor, miserable criminals, WHO ARE MADE CRIMINALS BY OUR ROTTEN CIVILIZATION, condemned to crime through poverty, ignorance and physical weakness, the criminals to whose sickness and death less attention is paid than to the death of a mange-eaten cat in the gutter.

And after you have considered these two sets of criminals in a grand republic of "equality" consider also what a fine joke that equality is, and to what an extent this country, its sympathies and its interests are controlled by the money that men have accumulated, whether it be displayed by some fool who marries his daughter to a foreign idiot, some "aristocrat" who squanders wealth in stupid display, or some prosperous captured criminal, whose troublesome cough alarms his friends—until a convenient pardon has set him free.

There are many good jokes in this country, and about the best of them is "human equality."

For Success, Health, Happiness, Look Within!

Why Wait for Somebody Else to Bring Us These Things? Don't Be a Spiritual Looter; Pray Often, but Work, First, Last and Always.

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

ON retiring at night, just before going off to sleep, say, either mentally or orally as you choose:

I am health, strength, peace, happiness and prosperity and everything that goes to make for good.

Pure, good, rich blood is flowing through my body, removing all obstructions and bringing peace, health and harmony.

I am well and strong and vital.

I am beautiful, pure and good.

I am on the road to eternal youth.

I am opulent, happy and free.

Last but not least:

I will arise with unusual energy and radiance and power of accomplishment in the morning.

All I ask is that you do not try to dictate the way these things shall or may come, and I will guarantee them to cure anything from poverty to rheumatism.—Dr. James W. Cormany, Mount Carroll, Ill.

LET every reader of this column take with seriousness these emphatic statements of Dr. Cormany, and put them to the test.

Nothing Is the Matter With the World, Life or Destiny.

There is nothing the matter with the world, with life, with destiny. Everything we desire or want or need waits for our claiming.

But the majority of God's children are waiting for SOMEBODY BESIDES THEMSELVES to bring them these things.

Not more than one human being in one thousand looks to HIMSELF and the Power back of himself for success, health and happiness.

The other 999 look to luck; to chance; to influence; to favors of friends and acquaintances; to doctors; to patent medicines; to some hoped-for miracle, and all the time a mine of wealth and reservoir of power within themselves lies unexplored and unused.

If you have a garden and reservoir of water, which is fed from an inexhaustible mountain stream, and you spend hours in prayer to God for rain to water your garden, do not feel that God has been unkind if in a season of drouth your plants wither and die.

It is your own fault that you did not USE THE WATER IN THE RESERVOIR.

Prayer is a great force; it puts our highest mental and moral powers in touch with the whole magnificent universe, and with the clouds of witnesses and the hosts of ministering angels, who are waiting to do the Father's bidding on earth; and the Father's bidding is eternal usefulness to humanity.

These Invisible Helpers are ever ready to HELP US HELP OURSELVES.

But they would not answer our prayers for rain, to save our gardens, if we did not use the water in the reservoir which had been supplied to us.

An inexhaustible reservoir lies in every soul born upon earth.

The one thing for you to do is to PIPE YOUR MENTAL FACULTIES TO THIS RESERVOIR.

Then follow the instructions which are quoted above. Every time you make those assertions, you are TURNING ON A FAUCET.

It is of little use, in a dry, arid season, to turn the water on your garden ONCE A WEEK.

It must be done EVERY DAY.

If you watered your plants once, and then after a month complained how badly they looked, despite your having watered them, that would be as reasonable as the attempts of many people to put metaphysical thought into practice. Every trade, profession, business and art is brought to perfection by PERSISTENT AND UNREMITTING EFFORTS.

The great philosophy of THOUGHT POWER can only be proven and demonstrated by the same unremitting, untiring methods.

The little formula given by Dr. Cormany holds the whole philosophy in a concise form.

It is a spiritual homeopathic pill.

Take one every night on retiring, and after three months you will be astonished at results.

Pray often; lift your heart on high; but WORK FIRST, LAST AND ALWAYS.

Look to Your Own Soul for Light; Don't Be a Spiritual Loafer.

Do not be a spiritual loafer, and expect angels to perform your work with no effort on your part. Do not talk about your methods; and do not ask any one for advice or counsel. Look only to your own soul for light.

GOD'S ANSWER.

Once in a time of trouble and of care
I dreamed I talked with God about my pain;
With sleepland courage, daring to complain
Of what I deemed ungracious and unfair.
"Lord, I have groveled on my knees in prayer
Hour after hour," I cried; "yet all in vain;
No hand leads up to heights I would attain,
No path is shown me out of my despair."

Then answered God: "Three things I gave to thee—
Clear brain, brave will and strength of mind and heart,
All implements divine to shape the way.
Why shift the burden of the toil on Me?
Till to the utmost he has done his part
With all his might, let no man DARE to pray."

BEAUTY

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

PUT not your trust in beauty. It was made
To please the eye and soothe the nervous brain,
To cause forgetfulness in hours of pain
And work its magic when the soul is flayed.
Beauty can smile near Sorrow's somber shade.
But when you need it, it will not sustain,
And when you seek its help, you seek in vain.
And when you die its charms are still displayed.

Beauty is all men's mistress, and its wiles
Can comfort one and let another moan.
It smiles, but only as a wanton smiles—
A fleeting ripple o'er a mask of stone.
The rose was blushing red, yet Juliet sighed;
The sky was smiling blue when Caesar died.

WINIFRED BLACK

Writes on

Mother's Too Fussy.

What if She Should Be Over Particular---That's Better Than Being Too Easy-Going When a Little Daughter Is To Be Considered.

By WINIFRED BLACK.

SO "mother's too fussy," is she? Poor mother—and poor daughter.

"Mother's too fussy." Dear girl, I wish I could take you with me down to the police court some bright, sunny morning and see your face when the girls whose mothers are not "too fussy" come into the court—poor, silly things—just for being out on the street at night and running around with all sorts of strangers.

"Mother's too fussy!" Well, well, I suppose my little boy thinks the same thing about me. I took a sharp knife away from him the other day when I saw him running with it open in his hand. He cried and said I was cross.

Her Mother Not "Fussy."

I wonder what he would have said about me when he grew older if I had let him put his bright eyes out with that very knife, just because I didn't want to be "too fussy?"

I saw a girl this very morning who had a mother who wasn't "fussy" at all. The girl goes to public dances—with the "other girls"—and she goes to moving picture shows every night, too—with "the rest of the crowd." And a few months ago a nice-looking stranger came and sat with the "crowd," and when the show was over he took the whole party to have some ice cream.

Such a nice fellow he was—so polite and respectful. How "fussy" it would have been to refuse to let him speak to a girl just because she didn't know just who he was.

That's what the girl I know thought. And yesterday she was a witness in court and had to tell the judge how she came to know the man and where she got the pin he gave her—for he turned out to be a thief, and he was trying to teach the girl to steal, too—for him.

The mother who wasn't too "fussy" cried when the judge asked her what she was thinking of to let her growing girl run about like that. I'm afraid she wishes now that she'd been "fussy" in time.

I Think She's Right.

There was another girl in court whose mother hadn't been "fussy" either. She ran away with a man she'd met twice at a high school dance and married him "just for fun;" and he deserted her and left her friendless and penniless in a strange town and someone had her arrested for begging.

So you're too young for beaus, mother thinks? Well, little sister, I think mother is right and you are wrong, dead wrong—why shouldn't you be? Who knows most about life, dear child—the mother who's lived it or you who only just begin to even look on?

It's not a game, child, this life you're so crazy to get into. It isn't all fun. It's something very much like work, and hard work at that. Your mother wants to save you—to help you, to keep you from harm and trouble. Why won't you let her, foolish little thing that you are?

"Don't go near the pretty light," says the mother to her silly little daughter. "Careful, careful; I singed my own wings there. Yes, I know it's bright, but it's fatal, too—there. Oh, I knew it, I knew." And in she pops, the little foolish moth, and flops out if she's lucky, one wing gone, the other singed—burned, frightened, hurt, puzzled—home to mother, who's "too fussy" about lights, because she knows what they are and what will happen to little foolish moths who persist in flying too close to them.

Your mother isn't your enemy, child. She isn't trying to spite you when she tells you you are too young for beaus. She's trying to save you. Can't you listen to her? What if she should be over-particular—that's better than being too easygoing when a little daughter is to be considered. What if she does want to keep you young? You'll have a long life to live without her. Can't you give her a few little happy years, the mother who loves you so?

Wait a Little Longer.

Some day you'll wish you had. Some day you'd give every hair in your foolish little head to have mother there to be "fussy" about you, and she'll be gone and there'll be no one to take her place, no one to care whether you go wrong or go right; whether you are well or ill, happy or miserable—and then?

Wait, little foolish girl; wait a little longer—just for mother's sake and your own. You'll have a whole lifetime for beaus. Would you believe it if I should tell you that some day you'll wonder what you ever saw in the dark-eyed stranger who calls you over the phone? He's pigeon-toed—honestly he is—and not so awfully bright—and, whisper again, who bought him that tie? Did he earn it himself or did mother buy it for him, and sister tell him how to wear it, and are they all laughing at you for being such a goose over him, whom you don't even know?

Think it over. It pays to think once in a while, even when you're just in high school; honestly it does.

The Ether Theory

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN.

Q.—Is the ether theory necessary for explanation of magnetic lines of force, the flow of electric currents through conductors, and the forces of gravity? Is it not possible that some of the substance of the magnets passes out and through space?

A.—The passage of magnetism, heat, light or any other phase of radiant energy from suns through space seems to require the presence of ether in all space and within all matter.

In all problems of space-energy-transmission the ablest mathematicians have formulated equations seeking to discover properties of an ether that will convey light waves varying in length between limits of 33,000 and 63,000 to one inch, with set specific speed of 186,380 miles per second; and with rates of oscillation ranging from 428 trillion for low red to 739 trillion per second for high violet. The results of the computations are diverse, varying in deduced densities from millions of times less than hydrogen to the enormous density of "2,000 million times that of lead," according to J. J. Thomson.

I heard this great scientist, the discoverer of the base of nature, electrons, say this. But this density of ether, he stated, was that immediately surrounding electrons. The question comes in here with great appropriateness. Thus, if electrons are shot from the sun with known velocity of light, and they surely are, then the density of ether exceedingly close to the flying particle is of this enormous degree. This deduction does not relate to the density of ether in space when at absolute rest, if it can be quiescent. It may be millions of times rarer than hydrogen. This is unknown, for the most refined experiments ever made, those by Michelson, failed utterly to detect the existence of ether.

All that is known is that the space surrounding an electron is an electric field whose intensity is powerful beyond all imagination. These are a few arguments for ether. The question is, "Do not particles fly from magnets?" This may never be known, for let 1,000,000 electrons per second escape from an ordinary steel magnet during 1,000,000 years, then only instruments of precision could detect the loss.

Nothing whatever is known of the real nature of gravitation, so that part of the query can not be replied to. Gravitation is supposed to be electrical, however. So is everything, for that matter.
