MOTHER-IN-LAW OF FRANK, ON STAND, IS ANGERED BY DORSEY

Testimony by W. M. Matthews and W. T. Hollis, motorman and conductor on the car which brought Mary Phagan to town April 26, that the car could not have been ahead of time, was attacked Thursday afternoon by Solicitor Dorsey through J. R. Leach, assistant division superintendent for the street railway company.

Leach admitted that the street cars frequently ran ahead of time, although the company tried to prevent it. He admitted he had suspended a man only last week for running six minutes ahead of time. Matthews and Hollis both testified that they never brought their car in ahead of time and that they arrived at Broad and Marietta streets about 12:07 o'clock the day the Phagan girl was killed.

Leach was called by the defense to tell of the running of the cars between Frank's home and Whitehall and Alabama streets. Leach estimated that it was about 10 minutes on both the Georgia avenue and Washington street lines. He added that the English avenue line was a hard run and that he knew of no report against Hollis or Matthews for running ahead of time on that day.

Professor C. D. Albert, professor of machine design at Cornell, and J. E. Vanderhlt, freman of the foundry department at Cornell, were called as character witnesses in the afternoon. Both declared the defendant was of good character.

Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Ursenabch, No. 52 Washington street, were called to tell of conversations with Frank before and after the crime. Ursenbach said he had asked Frank on Friday to go to the ball game the next day, but that Frank had called up the Ursenbach hme Saturday afternoon at 1:30 saying he could not go.

Mrs. Selig Resents Queries.

Another dramatic scene in the trial appeared imminent Thursday when Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's mother-in-law, was on the stand.

Mrs. Selig was several times on the verge of indignant tears and plainly was greatly angered by Solicitor Dorsey's manner of questioning her. She muttered at him spitefully and glared at him with hatred in her eyes as he asked her if the sensational statements in Minola McKnight's affidavit were not absolutely true and if it was not a fact that Mrs. Frank never went to see her husband for weeks after he was arrested on suspicion of having murdered the Phagan girl.

The Solicitor aroused the ire of the witness again when he, asked her if it was not true that she gave the McKnight woman, her negro cook, extra sums of money and that Mrs. Frank gave her a hat after the crime was committed. Mrs. Selig denied that extra sums of money had been given the cook. She said that money had been advanced the woman and that this explained the extra sums.

Mrs. Selig made emphatic denial of all the assertions contained in the Minola McKnight affidavit, which the McKnight woman repudiated on the witness stand.

The defense scored a point in the testimony of Harry Denham, who swore he did not know of the factory elevator running any time Saturday. He said that he was on the fourth floor where he was able to see the wheels of the elevator if he happened to look in that direction. He testified that there is a perecptible shaking of the building when the elevator is stopped or started, but that he noticed nothing of the sort Saturday. Solicitor Dorsey made the witness admit there was a great deal of noise on th fourth floor that day.

The defense at the opening of the afternoon session introduced several othr character and alibi witnesses. Mrs. M. Marcus, 483 Washington street, and M. J. Goldstein, No. 285 Washington street, testified to being at a card party Saturday night at the Selig home. Both said they saw Frank, and Goldstein told of Frank's reading a magazine and lughing heartily at a funny story. The defense has emphasized this feature of his demeanor by the testimony of several witnesses.

All records for the transcription of testimony in criminal cases in the State of Georgia have been broken in the Frank trial, it was announced Thursday by the court reporter.

Two thousand three hundred pages of typewritten testimony of about 300 words each, have been transcribed, making a total of 690,000 words. The next nearest was the McNaughton case, which ran to a total of about 450,000,000 words.

Girl Is Strong Alibi Witness.

Miss Helen Curran, a pretty girl of 17 years, proved one of the strongest witnesses Thursday for the defense in establishing what will be claimed as an alibi for Frank. She testified that she saw Frank at 1:10 o'clock by Jacobs' Drug Store, Whitehall and Alabama street, apparently waiting for his car home.

The defense devoted most of the forenoon session to producing persons who had seen Frank on the day of the tragedy. Miss Curran was probably the most important, as she was the only one who professed to have seen Frank immediately after

ANDERSON IS UPHELD BY SENATE

Charging that President Randolph Anderson has usurped power as presiding officer of the State Senate, and charging further that the Senate Rules Committee, which is appointed by the President, is a "fraud and a cheat and a swindle on the public," Fred Kea, Senator from the Sixteenth District, Thursday rose to a question of personal privilege at the final session of the Senate.

Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, created a sensation by vigorously denouncing Senator Kea because of the latter's attack, as published exclusively in The Georgian earlier in the afternoon.

Senator McNeill then offered a resolution commending President Anderson for his fairness during the present session and extending to him the thanks of the entire Senate.

Senator Kea immediately rose to his feet on a question of personal privilege, and renewed his attack on the Senate head, charging that Anderson had exceeded his authority and had blocked certain bills.

The resolution was passed by a rising vote, Senator Kea alone remaining seated.

President Anderson then took the floor and attributed the attack by Senator Kea to "youth, inexperience and ignorance of the rules."

Senator Kea declared that the Rules, or Steering Committee has deliberately blocked bills through the efforts of the "city lawyers" which compose its membership.

Here are the charges as stated by Senator Kea:

I charge the President of the Senate with usurping power, and I back up the charge with a statement made to me by a member of the House to the effect that President Anderson made statements to one member of the Houes that if a certain member voted against the kindergarten bill that he would see that that member did not pass any bill by the Senate.

I further charge that he, Anderson, took Senate Bill No. 66 after it had been reported by the committee that it do pass, and held it up for the third reading more than two weeks on the pretense that he desired to make some minor changes in said bill. But under this pretense he without authority referred the bill back to the committee, which had no authority to act on same, and by undermining they killed it.

I charge that the Rules Committee is a fraud and a cheat and swindle on the public. I back up this charge with the fact that the Rules Committee is composed entirely of corporation lawyers with the exception of one or two, therefor giving the farmer no representative in that important body, which steers much of the legislation which goes through the Senate.

As a result of the fact that this body is made up of corporation lawyers, with the exception of one or two and the farmer having no represenetation, many measures purporting to help the farmer have been choked out of existence during the present session.

I further charge that Senate Bill No. 87, which I presented in the Senate at the beginning of the session, has been ready for the third reading since July 17, but has been blocked by this same Rules Committee.

Holland Sold for $3,000

Harry Holland, former Tech star, now playing third base for the Crackers, was sold this afternoon by the local club to Washington. The former collegian is to report to Manager Clark Griffith at the finish of the Southern League season. It was an outright cash sale, Washington paying $3,000 for the player.

Holland was one of the greatest college ball players the South ever boasted. He was a corking infielder, a smashing and timely hitter, possessed a grand arm and was fast on the bases. And he has proved a marvel during his short sojourn with the Crackers.

Holland was graduated from Tech in June 1912. Nearly every big league club tried to sign him, but Harry's family were dead set against him becoming a professional player. Two weeks ago, however, President Frank Calloway, of the local club, induced him to join the Crackers.

CONLEY'S STORY IS RE-ENACTED BY DEFENSE TO DISPROVE IT

The diagram shows how the defense re-enacted the disposition of Mary Phagan's body as described by Jim Conley to prove that it could not have been done in the time specified. The defense's men had a 107-pound sack representing the body and reproduced the negro's story in detail—beginning in Frank's office, going back to the metal room, to the elevator, into the basement, back to the office, hiding in the wardrobe and the writing of the notes.

FRANK NERVOUS, MONTAG ADMITS, 'AND I WAS, TOO'

Others were called who saw him as he arrived home at about 1:20 o'clock, or as he was on his way back to the factory later in the afternoon. It was the purpose of Frank's lawyers, so far as they could, to account for every minute of his time during the day.

Appreciating that the case of the State against the defendant was hit by Miss Curran's story, Attorney Frank A. Hooper made a determined effort to confuse or break down the young witness, but failed to shake her in the least.

The significance of the girl's testimony is apparent in the light of Jim Conley's story. The negro said he and Frank started to dispose of Mary Phagan's body at 12:56. Allowing two minutes for Frank to get from the factory to Whitehall and Alabama streets, he would have had to leave the building at 1:08. This would have left but 12 minutes for the two to dispose of the body and do everything else the negro mentioned.

Conley testified that he was in the closet in Frank's office eight minutes. This would have reduced the remaining time to four minutes. Part of this was occupied in writing the notes, Conley says.

Thirty-two Minutes to Dispose of Body.

If the negro could have written the four notes in two minutes, two minutes would have been left for the disposal of the body. But Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, said that Conley took six or seven minutes in writing one test note exactly like the shorter note that was found by the slain girl's body. The defense contended that this, in view of Miss Curran's testimony, puts Conley's story in the realm of the impossible.

Miss Curran said that she lived at No. 160 Ashby street and that she knew Frank from trying to get a position as stenographer at the factory one time. She said that on the day she saw Frank she had an appointment to meet a girl friend at Jacobs' store at 1:15. She left Kress' store at 1:05, she testified, and had been at Jacobs' only a short time when she observed Frank.

Attorney Hooper brought out the fact that her father is employed by Montag Bros., who also are interested in the pencil factory. He asked her at one point in his examination:

"Don't you know that Kress' store was closed all of Saturday afternoon, April 26?"

"It wasn't closed at the time I went in there in the afternoon," she replied.

The attorney also sought to show that the crowds were so dense that afternoon that she would not have been likely to see Frank.

Miss Rebecca Carson, called primarily as an alibi witness, told of suspicious conversations and actions of the negro Jim Conley.

"No, Miss Rebecca, I wasn't at the factory Saturday. I was so drunk that I don't know what I did or where I was," she testified that Conley said when she asked him on the Monday after the crime if he had been in the factory at the time the murder was committed.

She also said that Conley had appeared greatly startled when Mrs. Carson, her mother, had said in his presence that she thought they would find the murderer when they found the negro that Mrs. Arthur White saw at the foot of the stairs.

Two more character witnesses, Harry E. Lewis, of Brooklyn, formerly the District Attorney of New York, and Herbert Lasher, of Fleischmans, N. Y., a classmate of Frank's at Cornell, testified that they knew the defendant well and that they knew his character to be very good.

Sig Montag of Montag Bros., treasurer of the National Pencil Company, told of his part in the hiring of the Pinkertons and of Frank's demeanor the Sunday the body of the girl was found. He testified, in refutation of Jim Conleys' story about watching at the front door at the direction of Frank, that the first floor on occasions of which Conley told was the property of the Clark Woodenware Company, and that it was used by the pencil company only as an entrance.

Montag was asked by Dorsey just before he left the stand if he tried several times to hire a horse and buggy the afternoon of April 26 from W. D. Brown, a West End liveryman. The witness said he had not.

Miss Curran was the first of a long string of alibi witnesses for Frank. Still others are to be called to present to the jury a record of the defendant's every movement throughout the day so far as it is known.

Important Battle Lost by Defense.

An important battle was lost by the defense in the Frank trial Thursday in the over-ruling of Luther Rosser's motion for the expunging of Solicitor Dorsey's questions of the day before relating to Frank alleged acts of immorality.

The defeat of Attorney Rosser came immediately after Solicitor Dorsey had failed in an attempt to have Frank's mother and wife excluded from the courtroom because of the elder woman's sensational outburst of the afternoon before, when she dramatically denounced the Solicitor for his charge of grossly improper conduct against her son, the defendant.

Judge Roan refused the motion of the Solicitor, but said that he would refuse them admission if another outbreak of the sort took place.

With the preliminary skirmishes of the day settled, the defense set out with great minuteness to complete its record of Frank's movements throughout the day of the crime.

Miss Helen Curran, No. 160 Ashby street, testified that she saw Frank near Jacobs' drug store, Whitehall and Alabama streets, at 1:10 o'clock Saturday afternoon apparently waiting for his car home.

Saw Frank Get Off Car.

Mrs. Albert P. Levy, No. 69 East Georgia avenue, swore that she saw Frank get off his car on Georgia avenue at 1:20 o'clock the afternoon of the crime.

Mrs. M. G. Michael, of Athens, Ga., aunt of Mrs. Leo Frank, said that she was visiting at the home of Mrs. C. Wolfsheimer, No. 387 Washington street, three doors from Georgia avenue, and that Frank came up to the steps at about 2 o'clock to speak to her, leaving a moment later to catch a Washington street car at Glenn street.

Jerome Michael, son of the previous witness, testified that he was on the steps at the time and that Frank walked up the street between 1:55 and 2 o'clock.

Mrs. Wolfsheimer, who lives at No. 387 Washington street, said she saw Frank at this time.

J. Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, told the jury he rode partway to town with Frank and that the defendant boarded the Washington street car at about 2 o'clock.

Miss Rebecca Carson, a factory employee, testified to seeing Frank on the street at 2:20 and also at 2:50.

Solicitor Dorsey, before the jury was brought in, said he wanted to make a request that the mother and wife of Leo M. Frank be excluded from the court as the witnesses have been because of the outbreak of the elder Mrs. Frank Wednesday afternoon.

"I appreciate the feeling of the wife and mother," he said; "it is a terrible strain on them. I am sorry for them. But I must have protection and I think they should be excluded when we are subjected to outbreaks like that yesterday."

Attorney Arnold in reply said:

"Without criticising Mrs. Frank, I want to state that the Solicitor's examination of the witness yesterday was far worse than her outbreak. He was undertaking to get in evidence in an illegal way. He could not get it in in a legal way. He was appealing to the crowd and to the feelings of the jury. Does you honor think that good practice—honorable practice—especially when a man is on trial for his life?

Arnold Calls Dorsey Overzealous.

"My friend is zealous—he is a little overzealous, I think, but that is not a matter for me to criticise. Your honor, our jury system is very lame if we admit this sort of evidence. They are good men, but simple men. It's hard for them to distinguish between things that condemn a man and things that prove him guilty. I won't say that the conduct of the Solicitor is illegal, but it is a little more culpable than the act of the mother. It's a pretty pass if a man's wife and mother are to be barred at the hour of his trial. This evidence of the State was put in to poison the minds of the jury. It was hard to bear—awfully hard to bear—but I promise it shall not occur again. We will do all we can to prevent a recurrence."

"Your honor, I didn't ask Mr. Jones all the questions I might have asked him," replied Dorsey. "You ruled the questions I did ask were legal. I asked only questions I can substantiate by reputable witnesses—some of them high-class women, I regard them.

"It's a mistaken idea about me being overzealous. I am trying to do my duty. I want to protect myself and the court. You have excluded other women. There is no reason why these should be allowed to remain to offend the dignity of the court. An accused man should not be allowed to bankrupt his wife and mother. Mr. Arnold criticises my act. The courts have held it is highly improper for a lawyer to express his opinion on the evidence. Mr. Arnold has branded this evidence as lies before I put these good women on the stand."

Judge Roan ruled, after more arguing:

"You are entirely right, Mr. Dorsey, in saying that you are entitled to protection. Other women were put out because the evidence was of such a nature as to be indecent to be heard by them. It is a matter in the discretion of the court to state whether these ladies should be allowed to remain. I will say that if there are any more such outbreaks as yesterday I shall be forced to exclude them."

Mrs. Frank, the mother, and the prisoner's wife were both in court while the argument was in progress.

DEFENSE SHIFTS BURDEN BY MAKING CHARACTER OF LEO FRANK AN ISSUE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense in the Frank case did the expected thing when it boldly and unequivocally put Frank's character in issue.

It indicated its confidence in the justice of the deefndant's cause in doing that, and it met thus a crisis that it hardly could have successfully overcome otherwise, if it so happen that it does overcome it eventually.

Having taken the initiative in the matter of thrashing out Frank's character, the State will now be forced to make out an unmistakable case of bad character against Frank, or it is likely that the State's injection of the sinister charge against him, in addition to the charge of murder, may operate as a boomerang to the State's great hurt finally.

It is not to be wondered at that the defendant's mother, tried and racked in spirit and pride as she surely must have been, should have let her feelings overcome her for an instant during the course of Wednesday afternoon's hearing. I do not suppose it is even remotely possible for any person not a mother to understand all she has gone through.

Her vehement protest against the vile things being said and hinted about her boy—true or untrue, though such things always are untrue in mother love, I take it—serves to illustrate, however, how very vital to the defense now is the establishing of Frank's good character.

I doubt that anything thus far said to the jury has so profoundly impressed it as the unspeakable thing Conley said of the defendant. The jury is only human, and it can no more dodge impressions than other people can.

Impression Must Be Erased.

The defense is up against the herculean task of removing all of that impression from the mind of the jury—the twelve minds of the jury, indeed—for it will not do to leave even a fraction of Conley's story undemolished!

Manifestly, therefore, the defense could not, if it would, get away altogether from the matter of Frank's character. It found itself necessarily forced to the other extreme of the situation set up by the State.

The State, on the other hand, by reason of the defense's challenging attitude in the matter of forcing the issue of Frank's ch racter, must now corroborate the frightful story of Conley, or I think it may suffer before the jury irreparable injury.

Curiously enough, the burden of proof in the Frank case seemed to have been shifted a week ago—that is, whereas the burden is legally imposed upon the State, it being the theory of the law that a defendant goes into court with the presumption of innocence in his favor, it appeared, after Conley had made his awful charge, that the burden then was shifted onto the defense to prove Frank's innocence, rather than that the State should prove his guilt.

In putting Frank's character in issue, however, I now think the defense has shifted back the burden, in large measure, anyway, to where the law contemplates it shall rest.

The State must complete its proof of Frank's depravity, or the State will not have made out such a case as likely will stand to the last analysis.

Defense Plans Its Climax.

As the State moved in the beginning of the Frank trial, steadily and consistently to the negro sweeper, Jim Conley, as the climax of its case, so to-day the defense is moving, every bit as steadily and as persistently, to the defendant, Leo Frank, as the climax of its case.

The State's case progressed ever up to Conley—the defense's case is progressing ever up to Frank.

It is Conley vs. Frank no less than it is the State vs. Frank.

No intelligent and discriminating observer, abreast with the status of the trial, doubts that, or has doubted it for days.

Either Leo Frank's life will answer for Mary Phagan's, or Jim Conley's will!

The capstone of the defense undoubtedly will be the defendant's statement. He will make it just before the defense rests its pleading.

Already, this anticipated dramatic event has cast its shadow before. The public is looking forward to Frank's attorneys. He simply states what he personal statement with no less keen interest than it looked forward, perhaps, to the terrible story of Conley.

Frank will be permitted, under the law, to make a statement to the jury, but without being permitted to swear to its truthfulness. The jury will be instructed that it may accept that statement, if it so elects, in preference to all the sworn testimony in the case; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject it altogether.

The jury alone and finally is made the sole judge of the defendant's credibility on the stand.

The defendant can not be impeached; he can not be cross-examined; he can not be prompted by his pleases, in the exact way he pleases, and in such detail or lack of detail as he pleases. It is strictly a matter between the defendant and the jury.

Leo Frank is one of the few defendants in murder cases coming under my observation, who absolutely refrained from discussing his case, in any phase of it, in advance of his trial.

Only at the Coroner's inquest, where he was obliged to talk, has he opened his lips to speak concerning the charge brought against him. In adopting this course, he unquestionably was well within his legal rights, and well within the bounds of common sense, too, no doubt—but the fact remains that the course he pursued is the unusual one.

I said in a former article that Frank apparently is a very patient man—and such men fight mighty hard when once aroused—and the more I reflect upon that observation, the more I am inclined to emphasize it.

He has waited four months to tell his story—but when he does tell it, it will be related in the proper presence, the court and the jury.

It is unlikely that the public wishes to hear anything quite so much as exactly what Frank himself has to say of the charges lodged against him.

It has heard what everybody else, both intimately and distantly concerned, has had to say. It has heard Conley's story from Conley's own lips—but thus far Frank has been as silent as the grave of the dead girl itself!

It is impossible to forecast the effect of Frank's statement upon the jury. It may have as powerful an effect in clearing him as Conley's horrible statement surely must have had by way of then condemning him.

Juries Have Accepted It.

I have seen cases in which the defendant's statement alone evidently served to clear him. I have known juries to accept it as the truth, over and above all the sworn testimony—just as the jury has the unquestioned right to do.

On the other hand, I have seen the defendant's statement fall flat and stale. I have seen it have no more effect upon the jury than rain has upon a duck's back.

It all depends upon the defendant's manner and bearing on the stand, the seeming sincerity of his recital, its plausibility and probability, the character of the man making it, his intelligence and apparent directness of purpose, the necessity of the statement as bearing alone and entirely upon weak points in either his own or the State's case, and many other things.

The defendant's statement presumably dovetails, of course, into the case his lawyers theretofore have made out—and yet I have known the defense to introduce the defendant the first thing, and proceed thereafter to the building of a case around his statement.

As this case is so thoroughly a fight between Conley and Frank—that is, between Conley's evidence and Frank's evidence—it will be intensely interesting to watch and see how eventually the jury views the relative value of both.

Much Rests on Defendant.

Conley's story, as amazing and as shocking as it is in parts, nevertheless has been accepted by many as the truth. Presumably, those people who already have made up their minds still are willing to be convinced—as violent as the presumption may be in some cases—if Frank can convince them.

Upon Frank's statement, therefore, it is entirely possible the entire case may turn finally.

To discredit Frank's statement, to be sure, will be his heavy self-interest and the fact that it is not upon oath and not subject to cross-examination.

To discredit Conley's story, however, is his also heavy self-interest and the fact that, while his story was delivered on oath, his character admittedly is very bad and his numerous previous sworn statements admittedly false in many important details.

The situation thus set up is about as pretty as it could be, from an abstract legal standpoint. If it were a surgical problem we were considering, I should predict that the operation will be beautiful and brilliant in any event—but as for the patient—well, I really could not say!

ONE OF THE FIFTY NEW WITNESSES SUMMONED BY THE PROSECUTION

Miss Fannie Atherson, who has been called to aid State.

Frank's Mother Resents Questioning of Dorsey

The calling of four character witnesses Wednesday opened the floodgates for the State to get before the jury all of its accusations against Frank, and was the direct cause of a frantic outburst on the part of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, who rose from her chair and dramatically denounced Solicitor General Dorsey.

It was the first scene created by any of the members of the prisoner's family. Frank's wife and mother were perceptibly affected when the Solicitor previously was hurling his charges of gross misconduct against the defendant, but both had restrained themselves from any marked demonstration.

Feeling Reaches Bursting Point.

The elder woman persistently had maintained an almost expressionless face while the most abhorrent charges were being made. Save that she looked away from the crowd as if it were a terrible ordeal to listen to the testimony, it would have been impossible to tell that it was one of her loved ones against whom the charges were being made.

Her feelings, however, had reached the bursting point Wednesday. She could stand the attack against her son's character no longer. From the impassive and quietly suffering woman she was goaded to the fury of a tigress.

From the lips of the Solicitor General flowed a stream of implied accusations. He asked about alleged incidents in Frank's office at the factory, about incidents in the girls' dressing room which the Solicitor intimated that Frank invaded without apology or excuse.

The mother of Frank lifted her eyes to the Solicitor. There was in them no longer the look of resignation with which the other charges had been met. In its place blazed hate and outraged mother love. She was willing no longer to await the end of the trial for her son's vindication.

The Solicitor continued. He gave the names of girls of tender years. He narrated circumstances that brought a crimson flood to the face of the younger Mrs. Frank.

"Haven't you heard of these stories?" he asked insinuatingly of the witness, Ashley Jones.

"No, nor you either!" cried the mother.

She was on her feet. The courtroom was astounded at the suddenness and dramatic intensity of the outburst. Persons rose here and there among the spectators, oblivious of the calls for order of the court attaches.

Mrs. Frank stood in hysterical indignation before the Solicitor. She said things to him that were lost in the confusion. She would have continued her tirade had she not been restrained by court deputies and members of her own family who rushed to her side to quiet and comfort her.

"My God, my God," she moaned as she was led sobbing from the courtroom. She was taken home in a hysterical condition. She returned toward the close of the afternoon session, but did not re-enter the courtroom.

If the denunciation affected the Solicitor, he did not show it unless it was by a line of questioning even more severe than he had pursued before.

Testimony Aids Frank.

Jones, an insurance man, in whose company Frank holds a policy, denied that he had heard any of the reports of alleged immorality. He said that the young man's record, in respect to health, habits and morals, had been very thoroughly investigated before the policy was issued. He testified that Frank showed an unusually clean record.

The bars were let down for the introduction of testimony against Frank's character when the defense put on the stand Alfred L. Lane, of Brooklyn, a classmate of Frank in Pratt Institute. Lane said that he had known Frank for fifteen years and that he knew he possessed a good character.

Lane was followed by two other of Frank's classmates.

They were Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, a clerical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J. Both testified as to his good character. Several witnesses intervened and then Ashley Jones was called.

Important testimony was given by Dr. William Owens, who was one of four men who sought to reproduce the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as Jim Conley described it. William A. Fleming took the part of Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley. Conley said that he and Frank carried the body downstairs and returned to Frank's office in about five minutes.

Dr. Owens said that it took them about eighteen and a half minutes to carry out the drama in the pencil factory, exclusive of writing the notes and also exclusive of the time that Conley said he spent in the wardrobe in Frank's office.

If the defense is able to make the jurors believe that it would have taken Frank and Conley eighteen and a half minutes to accomplish this, they will have established what is considered a very strong alibi for the superintendent. To this must be added the eight minutes that Conley declares he was in Frank's wardrobe and about twelve minutes for the writing of the four notes—this is half of the time that it probably would have taken the negro to write them according to the testimony of Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective. This makes a total of thirty-nine and one-half minutes. Conley said they started with the body at 12:56. The thirty-eight and one-half minutes would have brought the time to 1:34 1-2.

But, according to one of the State's own witnesses, Frank had left the factory and had arrived home at 1:30—or, in other words, had arrived home before the disposal of the body could have been accomplished.

Quinn Severely Grilled.

Lemmie Quinn, metal department foreman, received a severe grilling from Solicitor Dorsey in the afternoon, but stuck to his story that he visited the office of Frank at about 12:20 the afternoon of the murder. This is in contradiction of Conley's story, who testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came. The Solicitor displayed affidavits of Quinn in which the foreman said he had been at the factory sometime between 12 and 12:20 o'clock. Quinn said that at the time he made the affidavit he had not estimated the time so closely as he had been able to do since.

Other witnesses of the day were Dr. William S. Kendrick, head of the chair of medicine of the new Atlanta Medical School; Frank Payne, a former office boy for Frank, and Oscar Pappenheimer, a stockholder in the National Pencil Factory.

STEEL WORKERS ENTHRALLED BY FRANK TRIAL

By L. F. Woodruff.

There is one class of men to whom death is supposed to hold no horrors. They can not think of it and earn their daily bread. Were the fear of loss of life to enter their brain for one single second during their daily task they would be as useless as a motorless automobile.

Their pay is high for scorning the grave. They can see one of their companions fall victim to the perils of their calling and go back to work on the same job a few minutes later without a tremor, and encounter those same dangers with footstep firm and their minds only on the work they have to do.

These men are the structural steel workers. They are as picturesque a class as the struggle for dollars has developed. The fascination of their calling is universal. No man can pass the place where a building is slowly reaching its way into the clouds without standing in an awe-struck trance watching these men scamper around between heaven and earth as though they were walking about a place as safe as the quiet walk under the shade trees of Grant Park.

Furnish a Bizarre Feature.

Just across Hunter street from Judge Roan's courtroom, where the factory superintendent is fighting to clear his name of the charge of having killed Mary Phagan, Fulton County's magnificent new temple of justice is nearing completion.

But there is still work to be done on the dizzy heights of the upper stories. The men of the building trades are there and their interest in the dramatic court battle that is being waged within a stone's throw of them is as intense as is the interest of any of those who have sat through the tedious days of the hearing constant spectators of the trial.

These builders, from their lofty working place across the street, can peer through the courtroom windows and see the trial as it progresses. They can not hear a word of the evidence. They miss the forensic clashes of the counsel.

Dare Death to Watch.

But still there is not a moment of the time that the case is in progress that life and limb are not risked by these men as they stare into the courtroom.

They can see Frank as he sits through hour after hour of his great ordeal. They can get glimpses of the faces of his wife and mother, of the witnesses as they take the stand, and of the Judge on the bench. They can see the bulky back of Luther Rosser and the energetic gestures of Hugh Dorsey. That is all.

To see these things they must lean far out from their insecure perches, with death certain if they should fall to the pavement a hundred feet below.

There is but one explanation for their interest. They know a man is fighting for his life in that courtroom across the street.

And while death may have no terrors for them, it has a fascination as subtle as the stare of a serpent's eye to a bird, as strong as the rivets of steel with which they earn their livelihood.

STATE'S SOLE AIM IS TO CONVICT, DEFENSE'S TO CLEAR IN MODERN TRIAL

By O. B. KEELER.

Right in the first jump, please understand that (1) this is merely the opinion of a layman, unlearned in the law; that (2) he may be the only layman in existence who feels this way about it; and (3) the Frank trial is not being singled out in the following comment, except as it is a fair example of the great criminal trials of this country.

* * *

In following the trial of Leo Frank, two points keep prodding me with increasing fervor.

These are the points:

(1) That the prosecution's efforts are centered on producing evidence that will convict Leo Frank.

(2) That the efforts of the defense are devoted to producing evidence that will acquit Leo Frank.

Now, having read thus far, you probably are smiling to yourself at the idea that anybody should undertake to write a newspaper story about a great trial, basing it on such an absurdly simple and obvious observation.

State's Evidence All Damaging.

That (you say) is something everybody knows.

That (you say) is taken for granted.

I sat in Judge Roan's courtroom, right at the edge of the jury box, and I heard the State present its case.

Every bit of the State's evidence was damaging to Leo Frank.

If the State of Georgia knew anything good about Leo Frank, or had any evidence that tended to cast a doubt on his guilt of a horrid crime, the State of Georgia kept that information strictly to itself.

I heard the defense begin attacking the evidence offered by the State, and offering (in turn) evidence that tended to show the innocence of Leo Frank.

If the lawyers of the defense knew, down in their hearts, that certain points made by the State were true; if they realized that certain facts were unshakable; if in their investigation they had found certain things that tended to fasten on their client the murder of Mary Phagan—if any of this was in the mind of the defense, it did not get out where the jury could see it.

How About Investigation?

Well (you say), it would be a pretty kind of defense that would produce evidence that would hang the defenant. And (you added) isn't that what the State of Georgia pays its prosecutors for?

For what?

Conviction?

Or INVESTIGATION?

That was the most unmerciful of the prodding points.

Of course, now, the State's attorneys in the Phagan case say they believe Frank is guilty, and equally, of course, the lawyers for the defense declare they are convinced of the innocence of their client. But that is always the case in important murder cases, and furthermore, as I have said, I am not talking about the Frank trial as much as about a system of justice.

I asked a lawyer about it; a widely-read and learned lawyer, with something in his head besides the law he has absorbed.

I said:

"Honestly, now—isn't this system of criminal prosecution all wrong? Oughtn't the State have investigators instead of prosecutors? Why should the accused have any defending counsel, if the State were not prosecuting, but making a fair and impartial investigation?"

I thought the idea was highly original.

I learned something, right away.

The widely-read and learned lawyer informed me, kindly but firmly, that that was an Original idea a good many hundred years ago. That it was THE original idea of dealing with criminal cases, in fact. That it was pretty nearly fixed in the basis of good old English law.

He went on to explain that in the early days when a crime was committed, the proper officer—I forget what his title was—the proper officer started an investigation. If a man apparently was implicated by the first evidence brought to light, that man was detained. If he had already "beat it," that was added to the suspicious circumstances against him, and the pursuit began.

But if he was well in hand, and the case was a regular mystery, the investigator for the Crown, or whatever it was, went into that case exactly like a certified accountant examining a set of books, suspected by the firm of not being correct.

Auditor Has No Interest.

The auditor doesn't care a whoop whether he finds the suspected bookkeeper guilty or innocent. That is, he has no interest at stake. He is paid for making a correct audit. He is paid by the job. Probably, unless his liver is out of whack, he would rather see the poor bookkeeper cleared. But he has no interest in the matter.

Well, it seems from what the lawyer told me, that was the original plan of criminal prosecution by the State.

The State didn't prosecute. It just investigated. If the facts produced by the investigation warranted a jury in "sticking" the accused, well and good. If the evidence warranted the jury in turning him loose, also well and good.

The accused had no "counsel," the way we understand it. If he was a rich person, or had rich friends, he was privileged to employ an investigator, or investigators, who would assist the public investigator in his investigation.

Hired Help Might Convict.

But it was understood that if the hired help turned up anything damning, the daming thing would be allowed to go ahead and damn as hard as it could, without concealment or mitigation on the part of the assistant investigators.

And now, reverting to the enlightened present, what have we on exhibition?

Not singling out the Frank trial, you understand, but in it, as in every big criminal trial in this country, where the accused is able to employ talented counsel, we have the spectacle of two sets of able lawyers, fighting each other with all the resources of their learning and shrewdness and ability.

The life and honor of the accused may be at stake—the prosecution, once committed to its task, will seek no evidence but what will incriminate him.

The high claims of justice are at stake—the defense must permit no shred of evidence to be presented, saving only what will tend to clear their client.

And He Didn't Explain Why.

It is no fault of the prosecutor that this is so.

And as to the system?

Well, this is just the opinion of a layman, you remember. It may be that there is a good reason in law why the investigator has become a prosecutor, and is paid as such; and why the defendant may employ expensive counsel to combat the investigation — or prosecution — at all points.

There may be a good reason for all this.

Only, my friend, the lawyer, didn't explain it to me.

Relief for Catarrh Sufferers Now FREE

You Can Now Treat This Trouble in Your Own Home and Get Relief at Once

How the Remedy for Catarrh Was Discovered

THIS terrible disease has raged unchecked for years simply because symptoms have been treated while the vicious germs that cause the trouble have been left to circulate in the blood, and bring the disease back as fast as local treatments could relieve it.

C. E. Gauss, who experimented for years on a treatment for Catarrh, found that after perfecting a balm that relieved the nose and throat troubles quickly, he could not prevent the trouble beginning all over again.

On test cases, he could completely remove all signs of Catarrh from nose and throat, but in a few weeks they were back.

By the new method the nose and throat are treated by an effective local remedy applied directly to the afflicted membranes.

The Elixir, taken into the stomach, has a direct influence upon the mucous membranes of the body and cures the disease by removing the cause.

Careful experiments and investigations have shown that as the troubles were expelled from the nose and throat, the real cause of the disease was overlooked and in a short time the Catarrh would return stronger than ever. Mr. Gauss has done way ahead of the ordinary methods of treatment and has provided a remedy that

and immediately gives relief to the nose and throat

He perfected the New Combined Treatment, since admitted to be the logical, sure, scientific method.

Reese Jones, of Scranton, Penn., says that after trying many other treatments, he used this new method and— "My nose is now entirely clear and free and I am not bothered by the disease any more. The New Combined Treatment is worth its weight in gold."

Temporary relief from catarrh may be obtained in other ways, but the New Combined Treatment must inevitably be accepted for permanent results.

Sarah J. Cupe, Mount Pella, Tenn., says, "I suffered the pains and distress of catarrh for thirteen years and needless to state, tried nearly every method. But by your new method I was completely cured and you can not imagine the joy that has come over me."

Trial Treatment FREE

This new method is so important to the welfare of humanity, so vital to every person suffering from any form of catarrh, that the opportunity to actually test it and prove its results, will be gladly extended without one cent of cost.

A large trial treatment, with complete, minute directions, will be sent free to any catarrh-sufferer.

Send no money, take no risks, make no promises. Simply clip, sign and mail the coupon and the test package of the New Combined Treatment will be sent fully prepaid, together with the valuable book on Catarrh.

Q. You were sitting on the right side of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. Next to the window?—A. No; Mr. Frank was next to the window.

Q. Did you see Mr. Hinchey?—A. No, but I recognized his car.

Q. Do you know the number of his car?—A. No, but I recognized it by its dark color.

Q. How many dark-colored cars are there in the city?—A. Well, the street car struck this one and impressed it upon me. I found out later——

Hooper—Wait a minute. I am not asking what you found out later.

Arnold—Mr. Loeb, you found out later that it was Mr. Hinchey's car, did you not?—A. I did.

Hooper—I object.

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

The witness was excused and Henry Smith, another employee of the pencil factory, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What department are you in?—A. Metal room.

Q. Do you know a man named Barrett?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he ever say anything about getting a reward if Frank was convicted?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say about it?—A. He said he would get the first hook of about $4,300 because he found the blod and hair.

Q. Anything else?—A. Well, when he passed me he would play like he was counting money.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Has he ever spent any of that imaginary money?—A. No.

Th witness was excused and Charles Lee was called, but did not answer. Harry Lewis, of No. 156 Underhill avenue, Brooklyn, took the stand.

Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you know Leo Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him when he lived next door to me.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Very good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination.

Q. What is your business?—A. I manage my father's establishment.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I was with him at Cornell in 1903-4-5.

Q. Did you live with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character, and is it good or bad?—A. Very good.

The witness was excused.

Q. Do you remember an accident to a fellow named Duffy in October 1912?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he hurt?—A. His finger was badly cut and bled freely. The blood spirted out.

Q. Where was he taken?—A. To Quinn's office.

Q. Did that take him by the water cooler near the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he bleed there?—A. Yes.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How much do you get?—A. Thirty-two and one-half cents an hour.

Q. How long have you been getting that?—A. Two weeks.

Q. Who gave you the raise?—A. Mr. Darley.

Q. How large a raise?—A. Two and one-half cents.

Q. Have you talked about it to anyone?—A. No.

Q. Not to the lawyers in the case?—A. No.

Q. They didn't know what you were going to swear when you went on the stand?—A. No.

Q. How did they know about it?—A. I made a statement at the time.

Q. When did you see it last?—A. About two months ago.

Q. Who had it?—A. Mr. Schiff.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. He just wanted to know if I remembered it.

Q. Where did Duffy drop blood?—A. All along here (pointing to the diagram). It was just streaming down.

Q. Well, how large was the largest spot?—A. I couldn't say. It was just all over the floor.

Q. Did he step anywhere?—A. Right there by the water cooler.

Q. How far from it?—A. About 3 or 4 feet.

Q. How long did he stop there?—A. About 8 or 10 minutes.

Q. Did you see the spot where the blood was found?—A. I saw the spot after it was chipped up.

Q. Did this man Duffy stand at the same spot and drop blood from his fingers?—A. It might have been the same spot.

Q. Wasn't it the same spot?—A. It might have been a step away.

The witness was excused and Sig Montag, an officer of the National Pencil Company, was called to the stand. Rosser questioned him.

Q. How long have you lived in Atlanta?—A. About 25 years.

Q. What was your connection with the pencil factory on April 26?—A. I was treasurer.

Q. Did the mail come to your office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank ever come to your office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he come there Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes, about 10 o'clock.

Q. How long did he stay?—A. About an hour.

Q. What was your habit prior to twelve months ago about visiting the pencil factory?—A. I went there every Saturday afternoon.

Q. What did you find Frank doing on those Saturdays?—A. Working on the financial sheet.

Plan to Show Conley Lied About Watching.

Q. Mr. Montag, who occupied that first floor up to January 1?—A. The Clark Woodenware Company.

Q. What did the pencil company have to do with it?—A. Nothing, except as an entrance and to use the elevator.

Q. Where were the offices of the woodenware company?—A. In the front of the building.

The defense regards this evidence as extremely important to show that Conley lied about watching for Frank at the front door. They showed by Montag that the pencil company had nothing to do with this floor except as an entrance.

The model of the factory was again brought in to demonstrate the witness' statement.

Rosser—Let's take Sunday morning. Have you a telephone at your home?—A. Yes, about 20 feet from my bed.

Q. Were you aroused by the telephone Sunday morning?—A. No, but my wife was, and she told me someone wanted to speak to me.

Q. What did the voice say?—A. A man wanted to know if I could identify a girl who had been killed in the factory. I referred him to Mr. Darley, who then and now has charge of the help.

Q. Did Mr. Frank come to your home?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you of what had happened and that he had been routed out of bed without any breakfast?

Dorsey—I object to that.

Judge Roan—You can bring out the fact that the witness talked with him, but not what he said.

A. Yes, he told me about him.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. No more nervous than I was when he explained to me what had happened.

Dorsey—I must object again. That is irrelevant.

The objection was sustained.

Q. Was Mr. Frank nervous?—A. Yes; naturally he was nervous in telling of this terrible crime.

Q. Were you nervous?—A. I was.

Q. How did your wife take the news?—A. She was very much agitated and cried.

Q. Did you have a good opportunity for observing Frank? Where was he when he told you of the tragedy?—A. He was in my sitting room and I had a good opportunity of observing him.

Q. Were there any scratches on his face or spots on his clothes?—A. There were not.

Q. Did you go to the factory?—A. I did.

Q. Did you make an examination of the factory?—A. I made a general examination.

Q. Were there any accidents when you used the building the pencil factory is in?—A. Yes; a great many.

Q. Where were the injured people taken?—A. To the front office.

Q. They would have to go down those stairs, wouldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you hear of Frank being taken to headquarters by the police?—A. Monday.

Calls Frank's Acquaintance Limited.

Q. You have known Frank for a good while. Was his acquaintance large or limited?—A. I would call it limited.

Q. Knowing he had a limited acquaintance, what did you do?—A. I called Mr. Haas, my personal friend.

Q. What did he do?—A. He went to the police station to see Frank. Mr. Haas came back and said he couldn't see Frank.

Dorsey—I object. Are you going to let that go in?

Judge Roan—Yes, it explains the conduct of this man.

Q. Well, what did you do then?—A. Mr. Haas telephoned Mr. Rosser.

Q. What time was that?—A. 11 or 12 o'clock.

Q. What time did he get there?—A. About 40 minutes later.

Judge Roan at this point read to Mr. Dorsey the rule that made this evidence admissible.

Q. You don't know what happened upstairs?—A. No.

Q. How long before Frank left was it after I got there?—A. You got there about 40 or 50 minutes after, Mr. Rosser.

Q. Who was with him?—A. Detective Black and Mr. Haas.

Q. You receive those financial sheets, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get it that Monday?—A. About 2 o'clock.

Q. Was that financial sheet brought you before or after you got that message about detectives?—A. After.

Q. Who called you?—A. Mr. Schiff. He wanted to know whether I would sanction the employment of detectives and I told him certainly.

Q. Did you give any instructions? A. Yes, I told him to give the authorities every assistance.

Q. Did you know that Miss Hall, the stenographer, anticipated the raise in her salary before the murder?—A. I don't employ the stenographer and would not have known.

Frank's Friends Not Around Police Station.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Mr. Montag, you said Frank had a limited acquaintance in the city?—A. Yes.

Q. In this patent litigation with the American Pencil Company he came in contact with a number of attorneys, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. He was president of the B'nai Brith Society and came in contact with lots of people in that organization, did he not?—A. Yes, he came in contact with the members, I suppose. I never went to the meetings.

Q. How many members are there?—A. Four or five hundred.

Q. What did you mean by telling the jury he had a limited acquaintance?—A. I meant the people he knew would not be around the police station.

Q. Did Frank ask for a lawyer?—A. No.

Q. Did he ask for the Pinkertons?—A. I only know what Mr. Schiff said.

Q. Did he explain to you why he was nervous?—A. Yes, he said they took him into a dark room and suddenly turned a light on the girl's body.

Q. Did he say he saw the body?—A. He described it.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said her face was scratched, her eye bruised, and her tongue out. I don't remember anything else.

Q. You can't remember all of it?—A. I said I couldn't remember all. Now do not twist what I say.

Arnold—He will if you don't watch him.

Dorsey—I submit that the remark of Attorney Arnold is improper and should be stricken from the record. It is untrue.

Judge Roan—I sustain you.

Charges Dorsey With Heckling Witnesses.

Arnold—It is true and proper and I call for the records to sustain me. The whole trouble is that the Solicitor quarrels with the witnesses instead of cross-examining them.

Dorsey—All I want is for your honor to rule him out of order.

Judge Roan—I have, Mr. Dorsey, go on. Let's not be interrupted by quarreling.

Q. Did you mention to him the fact that he was nervous?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything about being asked to go to police headquarters?—A. No.

Q. Who made the trade about paying the attorney?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't agree to pay Mr. Rosser's fee?—A. No.

Q. No part of it?—A. No.

Q. All you agreed to pay was the Pinkertons?—A. Yes.

Q. Have they been paid?

Rosser—I object to that, your honor.

Dorsey—Your honor, I want to show that these people have made frequent demands for their money and have not gotten it. I want to show the bias on the part of this witness.

Judge Roan—You can ask it.

Q. Have the Pinkertons been paid?—A. No.

Q. Have they asked for the money?—A. No, but they sent two or three bills.

Q. You haven't paid them, have you?—A. No.

Q. You got a report from the Pinkertons daily, didn't you?—A. Practically.

Q. Now, when did you hea about the finding of the stick?—A. When I read it in the report.

Read First of Stick Being Found.

Q. Now, did you tell Mr. Pierce, of the Pinkertons, not to report the finding of the stick and envelope to the police?—A. I did not.

Q. When was there any accident in the National Pencil Factory?—A. There was one big accident about a year ago. A man by the name of Gilbert got his head burst.

Q. Do you remember any other?—A. Not definitely.

Q. Why do you remember this one?—A. It was a very bad accident.

Q. You say Frank brought you the financial sheet Monday afternoon after the murder?—A. He did.

Q. How long after this tragedy was it that the insurance company made you clean up that factory?—A. Some time within the week.

Q. When did you pay for it?—A. I don't remember. The records in my office will show that.

Q. You were in the factory on June 14 with a number of detectives, were you not?—A. I don't remember the day.

Q. Did you telephone the residence of W. D. Brown, a livery stable man, on the afternoon of April 26 that you wanted a horse and buggy?—A. I did not.

At this time court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Frank Was Composed On Night of Slaying.

Mrs. M. Marcus, No. 483 Washington street, was the first witness called at the opening of the afternoon session. Arnold did the questioning.

Q. Did you see the defendant, Leo M. Frank, on Memorial Day?—A. Yes, I saw him in the evening between 8:30 and 9 o'clock.

Q. Where did you see him?—A. I went to his home, the Selig residence, to play cards, and he was there.

Q. Where did you play cards?—A. In the dining room.

Q. Where was he?—A. In the sitting room, reading.

Q. Did he return to the dining room before you left?—A. Yes, he went to bed something after 10 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 12 o'clock.

Q. Were you accustomed to go to the Frank home to play cards?—A. Yes, I have been there frequently.

Q. Did you notice Frank particularly on that occasion?—A. No, but he did not appear at all unnatural.

Mrs. Marcus was excused and M. J. Goldstein, of No. 285 Washington street, took the stand. Arnold questioned her.

Q. Were you at Mr. Frank's home the eevning of last Memorial Day at 8 o'clock?—A. Yes.

Q. Has the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Frank been happy?—A. Exceedingly happy.

Dorsey: "Your honor, I object to that as wholly irrelevant."

Rosser: "It is just about as irrelevant as those questions he asked about her visits to the jail. If I married a virago and she never went to see me, what would it indicate about my guilt? On the other hand, if my wife loved me truly, and with the manhood that every man ought to possess I tried to keep her away from seeing me in jail, what would that show? Where is our common sense? To what limits of suspicion are we going? (Aside)): By George, I am going to keep my feet on the ground, at least."

Dorsey: "Your honor, these are very important circumstances. I want to go further and show that Frank sent for her."

Judge Roan: "I rule it all out—her visits and their married life."

CHARLTON IS TAKEN TO ITALY FOR TRIAL

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Dapper and self-possessed, Porter Charlton, who confessed murdering his wife in their villa at Lake Como, Italy, June 10, 1910, started for Italy, where he must stand trial. Two officers of the Royal Italian Carabineers took young Charlton on board the liner Rea d'Italia at the York street pier.

Charlton was in a happy mood apparently. Only once did he display any emotion. That was when he bade good-bye to his uncle, John Charlton, in the Hudson County jail. The young prisoner sobbed as he wrung his uncle's hand.

"I believe that I will be free to come back home before the year is out," declared the self-confessed slayer.

"Stick it out, boy, and keep your courage up," said John Charlton in parting.

With an officer on either side of him, young Charlton waved good-bye to those on the pier as the liner steamed down the bay.

MOORE ATTORNEY EXPLAINS CHARGE

Declares Allegations in the Suit Against Former Macon Pastor Did Not Justify Reports.

O. C. Hancock, prominent attorney of Macon, in a letter to The Georgian, declares that the allegations in his suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore, a Baptist minister of Andersonville, formerly of Macon, do not support the sensational statements that the pastor extorted $1,500 from his own brother as a price for silence in court as to his brother's alleged intimacy with Mrs. Moore. Here is the letter:

Editor of The Atlanta Georgian:

Certain publications in reference to my suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore have done me and several of his brothers an injustice. In the first place, the allegations in my suit do not support the sensational statements published in the newspapers.

There had been rumors connecting the name of Mrs. E. T. Moore with that of L. V. Moore, a brother of her husband, but my suit did not allege that. It was stated in the press merely that the charges involved a brother of E. T. Moore without giving any initials of that brother, which, of course, directed public attention to men against whom not even any suspicion had been cast.

My fee was settled, and I trust that the incident has been closed.

Very truly yours,

O. C. HANCOCK.

HAIR CAME OUT IN BUNCHES

Route No. 3, Box 20A, Broken Arrow, Okla. — "My trouble began with an itching of the scalp of my head. My scalp at first became covered with flakes of dandruff which caused me to scratch and this caused a breaking out here and there on the scalp. It became so irritated until I could not rest at night and my hair would come out in bunches and became short and rough.

"Everything I used would cause it to grow worse and it continued that way for about three or four years. While reading the paper I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a sample. It proved so good that I decided to get some more. I used them as directed and in two weeks I saw a good effect. Now my hair is longer and looks better than I have ever known it to be. I give all the credit of my cure of scalp trouble to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Ella Sheffield, Nov. 30, 1912.

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE HAS NOT PUT OIL LETTERS BEFORE LOBBY PROBERS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 14.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Slayer Freed Under $5,000 Bonds Raised By Engineer Friends

W. D. Partee, the Georgia Railroad engineer who killed another engineer, Sam Jackson, a short while ago, was released from the Tower Thursday morning under a $5,000 bond, furnished by a number of engineers, friends of Partee. Bond was granted by Judge J. T. Pendleton following application for bail by Partee. A plea of self-defense was made.

The killing grew out of remarks which Jackson was quoted as saying about Partee being familiar with another engineer's wife. Her husband went to Partee and the two of them started in search of Jackson. They met near the Georgia Railroad roundhouse and the shooting followed, Jackson being killed almost instantly.

A number of Partee's friends were at the Tower Thursday morning to greet him on his release from the Tower.

Angry Bachelors to 'Strike' Because of Tax; Girls With 'Em

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

REIZ, REUSS, Aug. 14.—A "general strike" of the eligible bachelors is threatened here to-day because of the State tax placed on those who should marry but won't.

"We men must stand together," is the slogan of the 50-odd bachelors' associations, organized to oppose the laying of the tax. And the girls, most of them, are with the men, declaring they are perfectly capable of looking after the selecting of a life partner.

The latest development is th preparation of a ptition by marriagable young women of Reuss begging for the remission of taxation on the ground that the Government's action is removing their only hope of escaping spinsterhood.

COCHRAN DENIES OPPOSING REFORM

Voted Against Tax Bill Out of Hate for "Spy System," Not to Aid Candidacy, He Says.

Ralph O. Cochran, member of the Georgia Legislature and candidate for United States Senator, in a statement issued Thursday made denial of the accusations hedeclared appeared in a morning newspaper concerning his attitude toward school appropriations and tax equalization.

"The feature that I regret," the statement declares, "is the insinuation that I cast my votes this way on account of my candidacy for the United States Senate. I wish to say that I would have voted just as I have done.

"The assertion that I opposed equalization in all the forms in which it has been presented is not true. I have uniformly been opposed to the State board and spy system that has become a part of this law. And when I voted for a 7 per cent reduction on the appropriations for the University of Georgia and the Technological School, my vote was for the same reduction in the common school fund of the State as well. I did not discriminate.

"The hue and cry has been to get the State out of debt, and it occurred to me that it would be wise to concur in the Senate amendments and hold the appropriations down for the next two years."

FIND MAIL STOLEN THREE YEARS AGO

Letters Uncovered by Workmen Between Walls of the Depot at Decatur.

Remodeling of the Georgia Railroad depot in Decatur has served to partially clear up a series of mail robberies three years old.

In 1910, about the time Agnes Scott College opened for the year, letters addressed to college officials and students and citizens of Decatur began to disappear. Some of them contained checks and money orders, and complaints by the hundred were filed. Postoffice inspectors worked, but could find no clew, and the investigation was finally given up as hopeless.

But the other day workmen at the depot found all the missing letters stacked behind the plastering. A hole large enough to admit a man's hand was found. Through this hole the letters had been placed between the plastering and the outer wall. Some of the letters still contained checks. The letters had all been opened.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the postmaster, is now engaged in forwarding the long-delayed letters to the addressees. She is writing a note of explanation to accompany each letter.

The theory has been advanced that the letters were taken by some railway mail clerk and handed out to a trusted confederate in Decatur, who would extract what money and negotiable paper he would find and then place the letters in hiding behind the plastering in the depot.

There is no clew to the guilty parties.

SENATE WILL RESTORE $280,000 EXCESS OVER REVENUE TO BUDGET

With the close of the 1913 session of the General Assembly but a few hours away, Senate leaders Thursday morning, following a conference with Governor Slaton, decided to recede from the Senate's action on appropriations, thereby restoring the $280,000 excess of disbursements over revenues. This action will be concurred in probably in a night session Thursday.

The decision to recede was made on indirect recommendation of Governor Slaton, who, according to his own statement, will have sufficient revenues to more than balance the $280,000 deficit.

"The silver lining has been removed from behind the dark clouds," said the Governor after the conference, "and I am now prepared to announce that the State Treasury will have more than enough to make up the difference as appropriated by the House and rejected by the Senate.

Governor Lauds Assembly.

"I am exceedingly pleased to be able to make this announcement, and in this connection I wish to congratulate the legislators for they work which they have performed. At times there have been differences, but in the end everything has worked out satisfactorily and all the huge financial obstacles which loomed up before us in the early part of the session have been removed. I feel sincerely that the lawmakers of the State may go to their homes with the knowledge that they have done a good summer's work that will redound to the glory and add to the progress of the State and her people."

According to the Governor's figures, the State Treasurer will have something like $500,000 in current revenues to meet over the $280,00 deficiency which was passed by the House and then rejected by the Senate.

The Senate Thursday prepared for action on appropriations in the closing sesison. Among the bills which were passed was the inheritance tax measure, sent over from the House. The vote was unanimous. The House automobile tax law, appropriating the fees annually collected to the road fund of the State, also was passed after a spirited debate in which an amendment of the Senate committee giving the funds to the general State fund was defeated. The bill giving the custody of the child to the mother also was passed in a 30-minute extension of the morning session.

Hart Granted Privileges.

Upon motion of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-fourth, the Senate indorsed a resolution agreeing to allow Tax Collector Hart to continue his services as an attorney for the State in suits against certain railroads before the Supreme Court. Mr. Hart's nomination will be confirmed by both Houses Thursday afternoon.

Preparations for passage of final bills had no monopoly on the time and attention of the Senators, who are much perturbed over the controversy between Senator McNeill and the Commissioner of Agriculture. Outwardly everything is smooth, but the Senators are free in discussing the matter among themselves.

The controversy, which almost ended in a serious cutting affray between the Macon Senator and the Commissioner, took place Wednesday afternoon in President Anderson's private room in the Senate Chamber.

McNeill and Price Quarrel.

According to eyewitnesses, Senator McNeill met Mr. Price in the room just after taking part in a heated debate on the bill to provide for the printing of the agricultural bulletins.

"Well, you got your bill through, you old lobbyist," said Senator McNeill to Mr. Price in a spirit of levity.

"Yes, but your statement on the floor of the Senate was not exactly true."

It was here, the eyewitnesses say, that the fireworks started, Senator McNeill inquiring of the Commissioner as to whether or not he (Price) intended to call him a liar.

Price, it is said, repeated his statement in substance, whereupon Senator McNeill drew his knife, at the same time telling Price that he would "cut his throat." W. C. Bryant grabbed the Senator's arm and drew him back. The Senator broke away, it is said, but was persuaded from going further by a number of Senators who had gathered.

It is understood that both Senator McNeill and Mr. Price are willing to let the matter drop where it is.

Primary Bill Goes Over.

Following a spectacular filibuster led by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, the Senate late Wednesday afternoon postponed action on the proposed primary bill until next session. This bill was killed Wednesday morning, but was resurrected by its friends, including Senator Tarver, in the afternoon. After a sharp parliamentary skirmish Senator Harrell succeeded in getting the floor, whereupon he blandly announced that he intended to stay there until the hour of adjournment. The Senator filibustered for a half hour when the supporters of the bill decided to stop the flow of oratory by agreeing to postpone action on the bill until next year.

The Senate also adopted the House resolution providing for a commission to investigate school book conditins in Georgia with an amendment. A resolution giving the Governor the power to act in the Ducktown copper matter was also passed, as was the bill creating a commission form of government for Columbus.

The August Sale of Undermuslins

A sale of undermuslins to live long in the memory of Atlanta women!

There is no fair way to compare it with any that they have ever been invited to. Its opportunities and economies are too great, in proof whereof we submit the prices below, and offer this suggestion to guide you as to whether you could possibly afford to miss the sale---the garments are those that won their way into the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. stocks because they were worth their former prices, the reductions are true and real.

The woman who knows Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose values at regular prices need not be told what to expect in the way of sheer fabrics, of soft laces and dainty embroideries.

What an opportunity, then, it is for women in general, for brides-to-be in particular, even for brides-to-be within six months or a year!

Read on!

Gowns

Formerly $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $2.25, $2.50 to $3.00, are $1.25

Formerly $3.25, $3.50 to $5.00, are $1.59

Those now 95c show yokes and sleeves trimmed with shadow, imitation cluny and round thread laces; short sleeves, slip-over styles. Those now $1.25 are more elaborate, many with Empire yokes, medallions of embroidery surrounded by fine laces. Those now $1.59 have exquisite French valenciennes and shadow lace trimmings. Some are hand-embroidered. The nainsook is a wonderfully soft sheer fabric.

Princess Slips

Formerly 95c to $1.00, are 69c

Formerly $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.98

At 69c you may choose from a number of serviceable and neatly trimmed styles with linen laces in both the yokes and the flounces. Many of those at 95c have imitation Irish crochet laces in yokes and flounces. Others round thread and cluny laces and embroideries, ribbon-run—a fine variety. Those at $1.98 are truly charming affairs made dainty with fine laces and ribbon-run embroidery. All are flat trimmed and narrow.

French Combinations that were $7.50 to $15.00 are marked now, $2.98. Corset Cover and Circular Cut Drawers. The hand-embroidery---done only as the French can---is in eyelet and floral designs. Some are trimmed with hand-made cluny laces.

Petticoats

Formerly $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50, are 69c

Formerly $2.00, $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.59

Many of those at 69c are the straight petticoats with narrow flounces of embroidery that women want for wear under the princess slip. Others show wider and more elaborate flounces of ribbon-run embroideries. Those at $1.59 are notable values, even in this sale—the materials would cost much more than the $1.59. Any number of lace and embroidery trimmed styles and one is as pretty as another. Also at this price are sheer mull petticoats in pink, light blue and lavender, trimmed with laces and satin rosettes.

Princess Slips

Formerly $7.50 to $15.00 (French) are $3.25

Formerly $7.50 to $12.00 (American Made) are $3.25

The French hand-made slips are reduced to this extremely low price because the skirts are wider than is now the vogue, but the smart women will quickly see how to convert them into the narrow style and save a hand-embroidered flounce for another. The hand-embroidery is beautifully worked. The American-made slips are elaborate with fine laces and embroideries and ribbons, in yokes, in panels, in flounces, cluny, filet and valenciennes lace.

French hand-made petticoats that were $10.00 to $25.00, are now $6.98. The embroidery is in floral and eyelet designs. They are the wide skirts that you will doubtless cut down. Only a few of these.

HUERTA'S BLUFF CALLED; HEARS ENVOY LIND

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—Special Envoy John Lind, sent here on a diplomatic mission by President Wilson, finally has established direct communication with President Huerta despite Huerta's repeated announcements that he would not recognize Lind as an Ambassador or receive him officially.

It was learned here to-day that Foreign Minister Gamboa is the agency through which Mr. Lind was able to communicate with President Huerta, although it is not known whether or not Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy has presented the note brought by Mr. Lind from the State Department.

It has begun to appear that Huerta's bluff of defiance has been called. No steps have been taken by the Mexican Government for the expulsion of Mr. Lind, although President Huerta declared this would be done. Indications are that Lind's presence will be tolerated, although the Government will not go out of its way to assist him in bringing peace.

"The result of that fight, which was an overwhelming victory for the Government, proves conclusively that we are able to maintain our own," said Blyanquet. "The Government forces are winning in every section of the republic, and we will soon be able to restore peace without outside aid.

"Despite all the hindrances thrown in our way by the United States Government, we have been making progress since Victoriano Huerta was elected President. President Huerta is a constructive executive. In addition to restoring peace he is building up a strong diplomatic corps abroad and is inviting the investment of foreign capital."

Mrs. Lind, wife of the envoy, who was indisposed upon her arrival here, has recovered. Her ailment arose chiefly from fear for her husband's safety.

Ambassador Lind now has headquarters at the United States Embassy.

Diaz to Offer Valuable Concessions to Japanese.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—It was learned here to-day from an authentic source that Colonel Felix Diaz, en route to Japan to thank Japan for taking part in the Mexican centennial, carries with him a proposal for valuable concessions to Japan upon the west coast.

The Government hopes to establish a big Japanese colony in Sinaloa and Sonora, where small farms will be conferred upon each immigrant who promises to remain in the republic and respect its laws. Marine and fishing concessions will be offered to a Japanese Government steamship line and a big depot for coaling ships may be built near Guayamas.

The Foreign Department is striving to get on familiar relations with Japan for a number of reasons. The principal one, it is pointed out, is that Mexico's ranks of workers have been decimated by war and labor is needed here.

Fresh capital is sought and it is believed that Japanese are as efficient as any others in opening up the country's resources.

Envoy Wilson Regarded As Deliberate Meddler.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The sensational re-entrance of Henry Lane Wilson into the Mexican situation has brought the administration face to face with the dilemma of either discharging the Ambassador at once or of ignoring his attacks on the British Foreign Office, which, coming from a man still a member of the American diplomatic service, is unprecedented. Ambassador Wilson's statement is regarded in administration circles as a deliberate attempt to muddle a situation which was beginning to clear satisfactorily.

The progress Envoy Lind has been making in Mexico City in bringing about a condition of affairs favorable to the presentation of the President's proposal is taken to mean that he has all the qualifications of a trained diplomat for the difficult task in which he is now engaged. The feeling is growing that the risk of serious trouble with Mexico over his entrance into the treacherous arena of Mexican politics has passed.

State Department officials refuse to say whether they expect Mr. Lind to call on President Huerta to-day, although there is a strong impression that he will do so.

Rip! Rip! Pretty Girl Blushes and Faints

DENVER, Aug. 14. — Downtown streets were congested to-day when thousands of people thronged the business section to greet the Knights Templar Conclave vicitors this week.

One incident was quite embarrassing to a pretty girl and her escort.

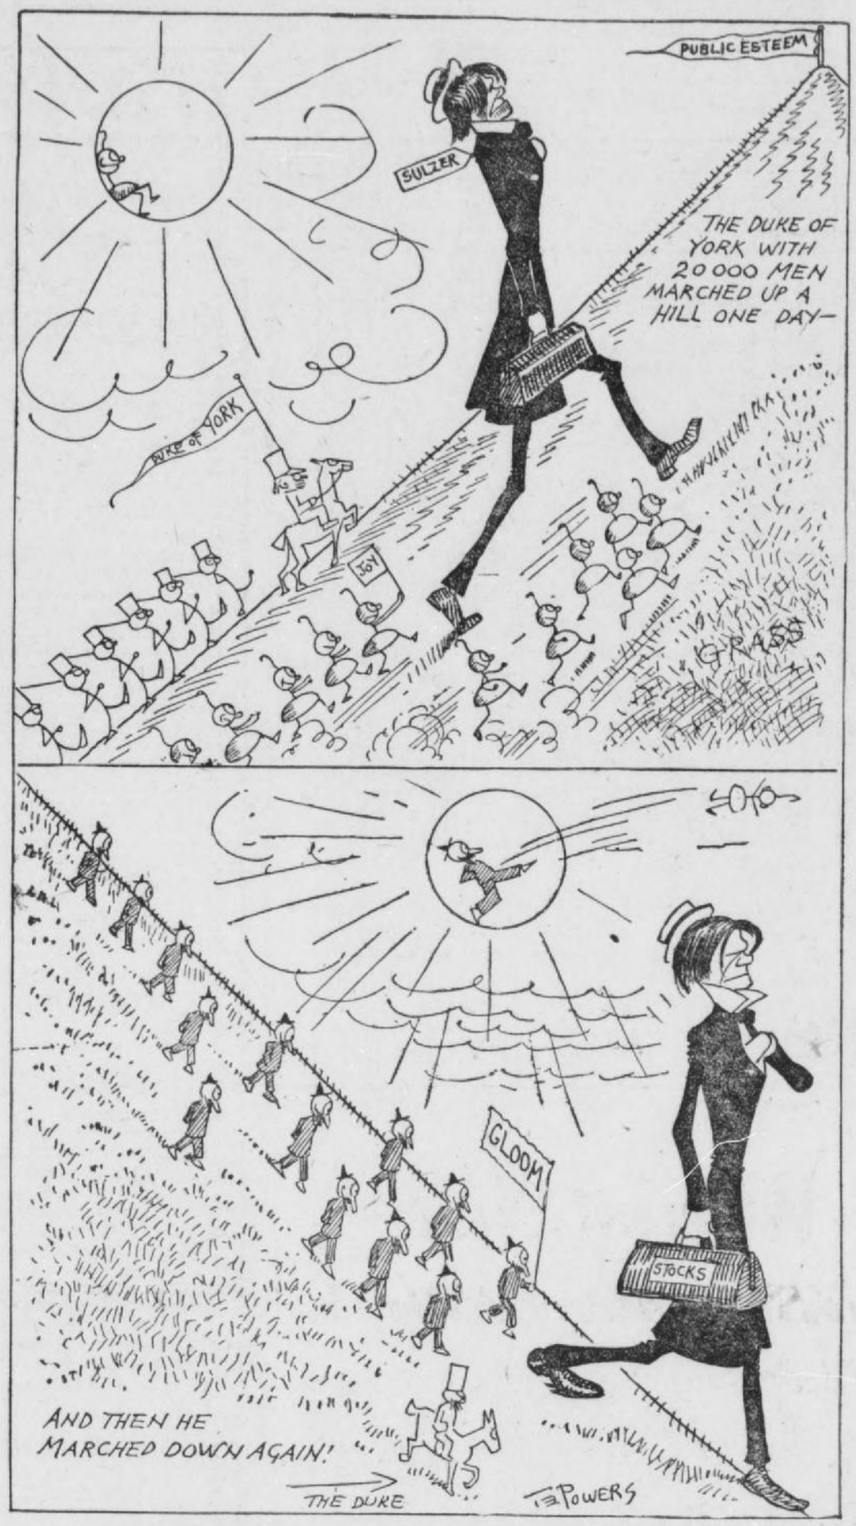

The two found themselves wedged hopelessly in the crowd. The man tried to free his companion, and as he grasped her hands and pulled something ripped.

In a moment what had been the girl's skirt lay limp and loose at her feet. She fainted.

Policemen forced the men to fall back, and the young woman's escort considerately and blushingly wrapped his coat around her.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—Three Bulgarian army officers were arrested by Turks in Adrianople to-day charged with being spies. Word was received by the War Office to-day that documents had been found on the prisoners showing that they were trying to create a mutiny in the Turkish army. They will be court-martialed.

These arrests and the information which they disclosed showed that Bulgaria will not remain passive so long as Turkey is in possession of Adrianople.

Militant Firebugs Taunt Government

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Firebrands among the young militant suffragettes extended their depredations to the Isle of Man to-day. Laxey Glen Gardens were destroyed by fire, with a loss of $25,000.

The women left placards scattered about the ruins taunting the Government for its inability to find the women who have been carrying on an organized campaign of incendiarism.

Southeast Georgia Crops in Fine Shape

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Farmers in this section are complaining of the hot, dry winds, which they say will prove disastrous to the cotton crop if they continue long. The crop is in splendid condition and with several more well distributed rains this section will make a splendid yield.

Augusta received more than 500,000 bales of cotton in 1911, and this year expects to receive about the same amount.

Things were going so well on Ade's Indiana farm he took a trip abroad with Roger Sullivan and ex-Mayor Hopkins, of Chicago. The pair insisted Ade see some of Berlin's Gay White Way. Here is his verdict: "It's all very nice, but too slow, boys. It will take more than this to keep me awake."

MILITARY AID IS REFUSED TO SULZER

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Formal notice was served on Governor William Sulzer to-day that he had been impeached by the New York State Assembly for "high crimes and misdemeanors," including the alleged use of money contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street.

At the same time the bitter fight between Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn for control of the Great Seal of the State waxed more bitter. Acting Adjutant General E. V. Howard, replying to reports that Governor Sulzer would call out the national guard if necessary to keep possession of the Executive Mansion, declared that he recognizes Mr. Glynn as the constitutional Governor of the Commonwealth and would respect any orders signed by the Lieutenant Governor. This renders Governor Sulzer helpless so far as the military is concerned.

Mrs. Sulzer Is Prostrated.

Official notice to quit the duties of Governor was tendered to Governor Sulzer by Patrick H. McCabe, of the Senate. Mrs. Sulzer, who is prostrated over the attack made upon her husband's honesty, was in serious condition to-day. Doctors were rushed from New York City to attend her.

Accompanied by a bodyguard of strong-arm men, Governor Sulzer walked from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol shortly before noon. Asked for a statment, he said:

"Not a word. I am now in the hands of my counsel."

A special detail of policemen also was provided for the Governor's safety.

Await Ruling of Court.

Governor Sulzer told friends he would not relinquish the reins of power until removed by the Court of Impeachment, composed of the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, whirh will sit September 18.

A number of friends greeted the Governor after he arrived at the Capitol. In answer to inquiries about the condition of Mrs. Sulzer, he said:

"Mrs. Sulzer is seriously ill. We are gravely concerned. She has been hysterical and during the night was in a state of nervous collapse."

In spite of this pathetic feature the political enemies of the Governor did not lessen their efforts. On the other hand, it seemed that the bitterness had increased.

With the details of the actual service of the Governor out of the way, everybody settled back to watch the fight for the possession of the office of Governor.

President Sends No Message to Sulzer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The White House has sent no word either or advice or sympathy to Governor Sulzer in the present crisis in his career. Rumors that the President was interfering in the situation met a strong denial to-day.

The Central of Georgia undertook to construct the tracks after permission had been denied it by the city officials.

BUILDER DRINKS POISON WHILE DESPONDENT

A. J. Grubb Found Dying by His Son at His Home in Decatur.

A. J. Grubb, a wealthy contractor and builder, living at the old Mell homestead, No. 1508 DeKalb avenue, North Decatur, committed suicide shortly before noon Thursday by taking strychnine. He had been despondent for several days over business affairs and also was in failing health. His favorite sister, Mrs. Sophia Smith, died Tuesday, and this seemed to affect Grubb deeply.

The funeral of Mrs. Smith was held Thursday morning, but Grubb said that he did not feel well and would not attend. Harvey Grubb, his 19-year-old son, worrying about his father, also stayed away from the funeral services.

About 10 o'clock Mr. Grubb went to a drug store near his home and purchased a vial of strychnine, stating that he wished to poison a dog. Shortly after he returned to the house, his son Harvey was aroused by groans issuing from Mr. Grubb's bedroom. Rushing into the room, Harvey found his father writhing on the bed. He at once called the Grady Hospital, and an ambulance made a record run to the Grubb home. It was too late, however, as Mr. Grubb died in his son's arms a few moments before the ambulance arrived.

Mr. Grubb was one of the pioneer citizens of North Decatur, and had been a successful business man. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Grubb; one daughter, Mrs. H. Pierce, and four sons, Jack, Harvey, William and Claude Grubb.

Of its 5,000 inhabitants, fewer than 500 are white.

It so happens that at the present time the United States is negotiating for the purchase of the island, on which to establish a naval depot.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Fearing one of her most important naval secrets will become known to a rival power Japan has offered $1,000 for the recovery of a torpedo lost from the new battleship Kongo on her recent trial trip off the Irish coast. It is said the torpedo is deadlier than the newest style of British torpedo, and is propelled by engines heated by air.

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Well, we can't stand here on the street," laughed Helen. "Let's go somewhere for tea—where we can really talk."

"Come to my studio! I've got the quaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus, laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobble-stoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dust-cloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over here—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the living room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not, we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! It isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners, and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes, it isn't bad," mused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week, put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's seemed only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Mirrors and Millinery

As It Is for Her Now - - - - - - - - - and Used To Be

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a brocaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP .:. .:. .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk, and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shot and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She hears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school luncheons is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

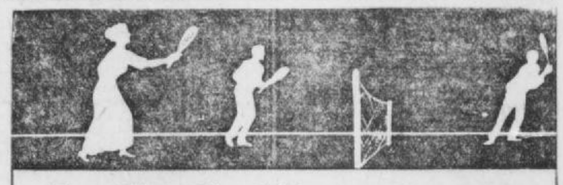

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you, here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall. But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisitor was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

"Praise be the Lord!" he sighed, when he saw the starlit sky above his head. He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused; he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had failed him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

JOHNNY EVERS PROVES HE IS BOSS OF CUBS

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 14.—All doubts as to who is manager of the Cubs have been dispelled during the past few days, for Jawn Evers is not only the Keystone King, but he rules with an iron hand, and those who dare to resent his ruling power have been relegated to the minors or disposd of in some other manner.

It is less than a week since the manager of the Cubs learned through the columns of a certain morning newspaper that he was about to be dethroned.

In other words, according to the word of one who claimed to have the inside info, Jawn was about to be Maderoized.

Your humble servant hurried to the throne of the Keystone King in an effort to learn just hom badly King Jawn felt over the sad news.

"If all of the sport scribes in Chicago were as certain of their jobs as I am of mine," said Jawn, "they would be purchasing benzine buggies on the installment plan. Some scribes can't get real news, so they manufacture it.

"The main trouble with the ball club has been that there were too many players on the club who thought they knew more about running the affairs of the club than does the owner or manager."

Rather pointed words, these, but they flowed as freely from Jawn's mouth as milk and honey in that land where one never knows hunger.

"To whom do you refer?" was the first one, and Jawn replied:

"Well, there are a number of pitchers on my staff who know so much about pitching that they refuse to take any orders," was the rather evasive reply.

"I'd rather not just now, but it will all come out in the wash," spake the oracle.

Reulbach Let Out.

Ed Reulbach has been traded to Brooklyn, Overall has bepn forwarded to Frisco by parcel post, and Lurid Lew Richie will grace Kansas City with his august and comical presence.

Nuff sed. Who are the pitchers who were treading on Jawn's artistic bunions?

Reulbach, Overall and Richie, and they are no longer Cubs.

That's the answer. John Evers is ruler of the Cubs, and he has been given to understand that his job is as secure as the Constitution of the United States.

Evers Shows Hand.

He intends to manage the affairs of the club without either outside or inside influences or assistance, and when he finds a person in the little family who can't see things his way, it's a 10 to 1 bet that person is going to enjoy some scenery en route to somewhere.

True, neither Overall, Reulbach nor Richie has shown anything aside from an enthusiastic desire to connect with the pay roll this season, and that alone is reason for a change of climate for the trio, but the fact that they toiled under Chance when Evers was but a common layman and with them is ample evidence that they are lodged among the pitchers "who know too much about pitching to take orders."

The developments in the Cub camp during the past week mean much for the future of the Cubs.

He has about decided that the old Cub machine that won three pennants is becoming worn and that the club that won a pennant two years ago can not be depended upon to repeat five years hence.

In other words, when the Cubs board the rattler for the sunny climes of Florida next March there will be a number of familiar physiogs missing.

No Shift on Infield.

It is the firm belief of yours truly that the Cub infield will be intact next season, with Saier at first, Evers on the throne and Zim at third. We are making no prognostications as to who will jerk the pill out of the dust in and around short.

Fred Williams will be among those who will cavort in the outer pastures, and further than that affiant sayeth not.

It will be a new club in the way of pitchers, and there may be a new face behind the bat, which means that another face, familiar to all the baseball fans, will be missing. No names mentioned, but he couldn't get along with Mrs. Britton.

Evers will have a club that will answer to him and not try to dictate the managerial policies.

Overall, Reulbach and Richie have outlived their usefulness with the Cubs. They may show a flash of class with the clubs to whom they have been sent, but they will never wear Cub uniforms again.

And the season will end in a few short weeks, then—watch for some new developments and some young twirlers.

PROUGH AND MAYER ARE SOLD TO CHICAGO SOX

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 14.—The star Birmingham battery, Prough and Mayer, has been secured by the Chicago American League club. Exercising an optional agreement, Walter Mayer, the young Baron catcher, was regained ofr $1,500.

When Chicago placed Mayer with the Baron club, a blanket option was exacted for the choice of a player for $2,500. Prough's wonderful pitching attracted the attention of the White Sox, and he was chosen.

Leading the league with a record of twenty victories and five defeats, Prough will gain his third trial in the majors. Previously Pittsburg and Cincinnati have tried out the elongated pitcher and have returned him to the minors.

Crackers Facing Supreme Test

Mobile Has Lead of 5 1-2 Games

By O. B. Keeler.

HAVING duly touched off the red fire, ignited the Roman candles and called out the fire department, we will now get out the old chewed-at-one-end section of pencil and put down a few of the things popularly supposed not to mislead, which, by the way, is one of the most staggering fallacies the twentieth century staggers under.

It is plainly to be seen, and may be set down in signs like the following: !!!!, that the Crackers trimmed Birmingham a severely straight series, copped the final road trip in the ratio of seven to four, and are in something of a position to contest against Mobile and Montgomery for the possession of the title of Southern champeens.

* * *

Atlanta has 26 games left to play—all at home.

Mobile has a lead of five and one-half full games over the Crackers.

Montgomery has an edge of three full games.

But—

Mobile has only two more games scheduled at home.

* * *

MAKING the matter as personal as possible, the Crackers will get a regular crack at each of their principal rivals in the long home wind-up. The Billikens will be here August 21, 22 and 23, and the Gulls, September 2, 3, 4 and 5—about the time the last spurt for the wire is on, provided things become that acute.

The Gulls and the Billies do not play each other any more, the latter probably being rather more than content with that arrangement, judging by the recent trouble in Gullville.

* * *

SO that's the lay-out.

Chattanooga is here to-day, opening with a double-header. The Lookouts also will play Friday and Saturday, and then the Barons will sneak in Monday and try for a little of the revenge stuff. The following Thursday—the 21st—the Montgomery series starts. Then comes Memphis for four games, then New Orleans and Mobile, four each, and then the Lookouts return to wind up the season with a single contest—September 6.

* * *

INTERESTING, is it not?

No?

Well, it'll look a lot different, with a regular shoe-horn crowd wadded into the old Cow Pasture, and a sunburned bunch of men in white uniforms trotting out on the grass, and some sawed-off, second-story artist pulling off his ild and bellowing:

That's something else again.

* * *

WOUGH!

A foxy young Pitcher named Prough
Got into a bit of a rough
With some Walloping Guys,
And to his surprise,
He found out he didn't know hough!

* * *

WHICH bit of gloating in a strictly minor key leads up to the fact that, as G. Cleveland once eruditely remarked, it is not a theory but a condition that confronts us.

The condition, roughly set forth, is to win two-thirds of twenty-six games—or better.

Two-thirds ought just about to pass Montgomery and overtake Mobile, who will have to travel on the high speed to break even on the long road trip that confronts each.

But two-thirds of 26 games is between seventeen and eighteen.

And that is a good many games to win, when it is mixed up with at least four double-headers.

Also, it may rain.

* * *

WHICH brings on the subject of clouds. And just now, on the heels of five straight victories on the road, the everlasting rout of the Barons, the busting of Mr. Prough's proud record, and the beginning of a long stay at home—well, just now, we are inclined to think the said cloud is turning outward a bit of the well-known silver lining.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

The Georgia-Alabama season will close Saturday, and while hardly any of the clubs in the circuit have made money this year from the attendance, it is expected that several will realize on the sale of players. The abnormal speed of the Class D Southeastern last year militated against the sport in Anniston, Gadsden and Talladega this year, but it is believed that the fans are getting satisfied with real Class D ball and that the league will be kept intact.

* * *

Gadsden has had the best club from the start, and they probably have the best manager in the league, considered from the standpoint of both his playing and managerial ability. Randall brought several men from New Orleans who had been playing all winter and they were in good form when the season opened. Although Gadsden has never been off the top, however, the attendance at that place was the poorest in the league, and it was the only city to get games transferred.

* * *

A fine spirit of bon homme prevailed among both the fans and players at the banquet held in Anniston last Saturday night, when an inspiring address was made to the men by Hon. E. D. Willett, a well-known attorney and former president of the Anniston club in the Southeastern. At this meeting, Proctor, Anniston's star centerfielder, also proved himself a fine orator. He's a graduate of a Texas college and promises to go up.

* * *

If the league is kept together, there will be a unanimous apeal made for the re-election of President W. J. Boykin, of Gadsden, who has shown himself to be a live wire, a man of backbone and uniform fairness. He has pleased all the clubs.

* * *

White, the one-armed phenom, who for a while played with the Anniston club, holding the unique record of being the first one-armed man to perform in professional company, has made good as an umpire. Joe Burke, an old-timer with the indicator, also gave better satisfaction this year than ever before.

* * *

Boyd, whom Birmingham released to Talladega, will probably go back to the Southern when this league closes. His arm is getting in shape again and he has had pretty easy sailing. Rice, Newman's catcher, is one of those rare backstops who hit the ball and perform well at the same time with the mitt. In the last series at Anniston he got ten hits out of thirteen times at bat.

* * *

The Anniston club this year encountered a hoodoo in the .500 limit. Every time the Chickens would get to the half perfect mark something would happen, and down the ladder they would go again. They almost reached there last Saturday, but in the game Monday they hit the toboggan.

* * *

The two Georgia towns, Newnan and LaGrange, led in attendance this year, Opelika did well considering the size of the place, but Gadsden, Anniston and Talladega had been used to faster ball, and when salaries were reduced this year the fans got the idea that the sport would not be interesting. This proved erroneous, however.

FRANK WHITNEY EASY FOR CHARLEY WHITE

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN by far the most thrilling, exciting and scientifically waged ring battle ever seen in Atlanta, Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Atlanta favorite, was for the first time in his Southern ring career compelled to leave the roped arena a beaten man. For ten rounds he was scientifically hammered by Charley White, the marvelous Chicago lightweight.

And though Whitney left the ring beaten, he did not leave there with any smirch on his record. It is doubtful if he ever fought more brilliantly. It is certain that no man ever showed more gameness than did the Iowa carpenter. There were cheers for the victor, but there were more cheers for the vanquished.

It was simply a case of Whitney meeting a better man, but, though, at no stage of the game did he appear to have a shade, time and again when the crowd was on its feet expecting to see him feel his first knockout, instead saw him rally brilliantly, give blow for blow, never wincing under White's terrible punching. Whitney was always a great big figure.

But credit must be given White. The little Chicagoan seems every inch a champion. He had a desp and abiding respect for Frank, though, and boxed carefully. Not until the seventh round did he begin to take anything like a chance, and then he was quick to crawl back behind his breastworks whenever Whitney seemed dangerous.

* * *

AS a result, Atlanta boxing fans saw boxing in the real sense of the word. Both men fought marvelous defensive battles. The sparring was fast and perfectly executed. Both used excellent ring generalship. It was White's superior strength and his youth that told the story.

Whitney's entire attack was from his right side. The few times he used his left it seemed to possess little power, but at that he did quite as much leading as his opponent. In the fourth round his right landed and White was turned completeyl around by the force of the blow. In this round Whitney had the shade, but all the others were either even or White's.

* * *

WHEN the gong rang for the seventh round, the battle was apparently all even. Then White took the lead. Both men had been cautious in reference to infighting, but in this session White got busy at this part of the game and beat Whitney at the feature of fighting in which he is most skilled.

In the eighth Whitney was very, very tired. His face was completely smeared, but his magnificent condition told the tale. In the ninth it was the same story, and in the last part of the tenth it seemed inevitable that Whitney would be floored before the gong. He weathered it bravely and was on his feet fighting to the end, but there was not a dissenting voice when Referee Castro raised the Chicago boy's glove.

* * *

IN the semi-windup Kid Young was decisively beaten by Charley Lee. Young seemed to have none of his old dash and virility and in the fourth round after Lee had dropped him and Young arose to continue his tactics of crawling under cover, Castro announced Lee the winner.

At times Young showed a flash, but it was never more than a flash. It seems that the promising newsboy boxer has about run his course.

* * *

IN the third round of their scheduled six-round go Terry Nelson dropped Mike Saul with a terrific clip on the jaw. Saul came up on the count of nine, and after clinching desperately backed into his corner and covered. He was apparently badly hurt, not only from Nelson's blow, but also from the blow he received when his head struck the canvas with a bump that could be heard for feet.

Saul was apparently unable to fight back, and the referee declared Nelson the winner to save the Atlanta milkman from further punishment. Up to the knockdown Saul had a big lead over the little Greek and was apparently boxing in his best style.

* * *

IN the opening engagement "Mary" Payne knocked out Battling O'Leary in the second round of their four-round go. Both boys were novices, but both were willing.

A fair house saw an excellent fight card.

Tesreau and Matty After Auto "Big Six" Making Good Record

JOHN M'GRAW has called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 1, the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assigament to the big spit-baller 25 times. Jeff only went the route on eight occasions, but on many of the times he was derricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

Were Hugh Chalmers to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead of the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773.

Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

The club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

The figures below show the number of games started and completed by the Giants' pitchers this season:

	Games Started	Complete Games Pitched	P.C.
Crandall	1	1	1.000
Mathewson	22	17	.773
Marquard	20	13	.650
Demaree	16	7	.437
Ames	5	2	.400
Fromme	6	2	.333
Tesreau	25	8	.320
Wiltse	2	0	.000

CINCINNATI ASKS FOR WAIVERS ON 4 PLAYERS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 14.—Before the Cincinnati Nationals left Pittsburg it was reported from their camp that waivers had been asked on Suggs, Sheckard, Egan and Bates, veterans of the team. All the clubs in the league have waived on Bates and Egan, and President Herrmann and Manager Tinker are trying to make deals for them with American League teams. They expect to pull off a trade for Egan with either the White Sox or the Highlanders, both being in need of infielders of Egan's class.

It is likely that several other changes will be made. On the present eastern trip all the clubs have also waived on Suggs, for whom Manager Tinker has been trying to pull a deal. Trades are under way for Sheckard.

WORLD'S SERIES GAMES WILL START OCTOBER 6

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The world's series games are to start on Monday, October 6. This was the information President Ban Johnson, of the American League, gave out. The play will continue on each succeeding day thereafter until one club has won four out of seven games.

Should two Eastern teams be fortunate enough to take down the glory in the National and American Leagues—and it looks certain—then Sunday will be an off-day, for the "blue" laws of the East forbid the parading of our national pastime on the Sabbath.

Conzelman and Price Will Work

Fans Will See Calvo in Right Field

By Joe Agler.

HOME again! And glad to be here, you may be sure. Especially as we won't have to hook any more rattlers and ride any more until the season of 1913 is history.

The boys talked it over, coming this way from Birmingham last night, and they decided the Crackers had one grand little chance to knock the everlasting lining out of about six other clubs in the next three weeks, and bring home another flag to Crackerville.

That's what we will try our best to do.

The Birmingham series has given us all a lot of confidence. We pounded the ball back of good work by our own pitchers, and put up a great fielding game. That combination will win regularly against anything in this league, if only we can keep it working.

* * *

CONZELMAN and Price will work in the double-header with Chattanooga this afternoon, and Dunn probably will have to catch in both, as Chapman has a bad ankle.

Chris Holtz has been released out right, and Jacinto Calvo, the Cuban outfielder Clark Griffith sent us, will be in right field. We hear he is a bear with the wood and fast on the bases, and that is what we will need from now on. Holtz is a crack fielder, but weak at the plate.

* * *

RETURNING to the last battle in Slagville, which is a very pleasant topic with us, it will be noted that Carl Thompson, Baron cast-off, pitched rings around his famous rival, Clinton Prough, stopping his winning streak at ten games, where he is tied with Coveleskie.

Prough showed the stuff in holding down the runs as well as he did, for the Crackers were surely hitting the old pill. Once McBride, by a great running catch, robbed Harry Holland of what looked like a sure homer, with the bases full at the time. Harry kept up his hitting streak, and is now in the charmed circle of the .300 wallopers.

And please don't forget Wally Smith. His drive to the center field fence probably was the longest hit of the season in Birmingham, and just about settled things for Mr. Prough and his help. The help also cracked under punishment, while we kept up our good work in the field.

* * *

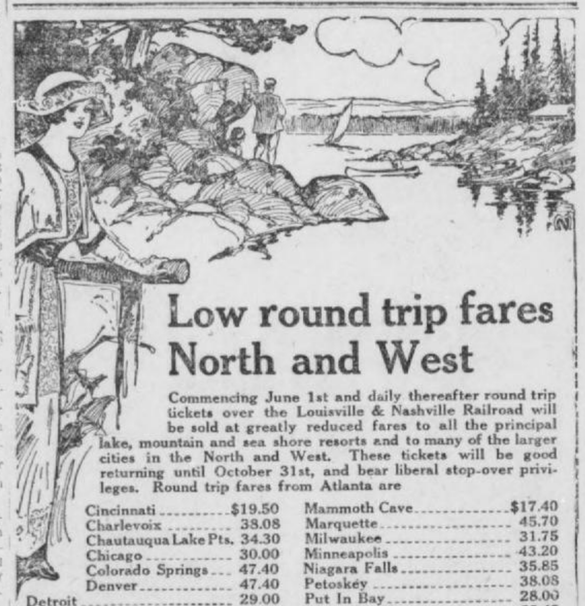

WELL, the Barons are out of the race, it seems, and it was our bunch that put them out when the rest of the league seemed powerless to head them.

Now we will have a chance at the others.

We'll do our best.

REDS BUY CATCHER.

ROANOKE, VA., Aug. 14.—Mark Stewart, the big catcher of the Norfolk club, in the Virginia State League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Red Sox for $2,000. Stewart is a young catcher, and was playing college ball at Washington and Lee University a year ago. His batting average has been .300. He will finish the season with the Norfolk club and report to Manager Tinker at the conclusion of the season.

Holtz Given Release; Chapman Is Injured

The Crackers arrived, right side up with care, early this morning and went immediately to their quarters to rest for the double battle with Chattanooga this afternoon.

Every man was in tip-top shape, except Chapman, Manager Smith reported. The useful backstop turned an ankle in the last game at Birmingham, and, while he pluckily finished the game, he suffered with a god deal of swelling last night, and is not in condition to play to-day. Joe Dunn will have to catch games, and possibly the other two contests with the Lookouts.

Chris Holtz was released yesterday in Birmingham and turned back to Selma. He showed much class as a fielder, but his hitting was not of the caliber needed by the Crackers in their final dash for the flag. Jacinto Calvo, the chunky little Cuban sent on by Clark Griffith, will play right field the rest of the season.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

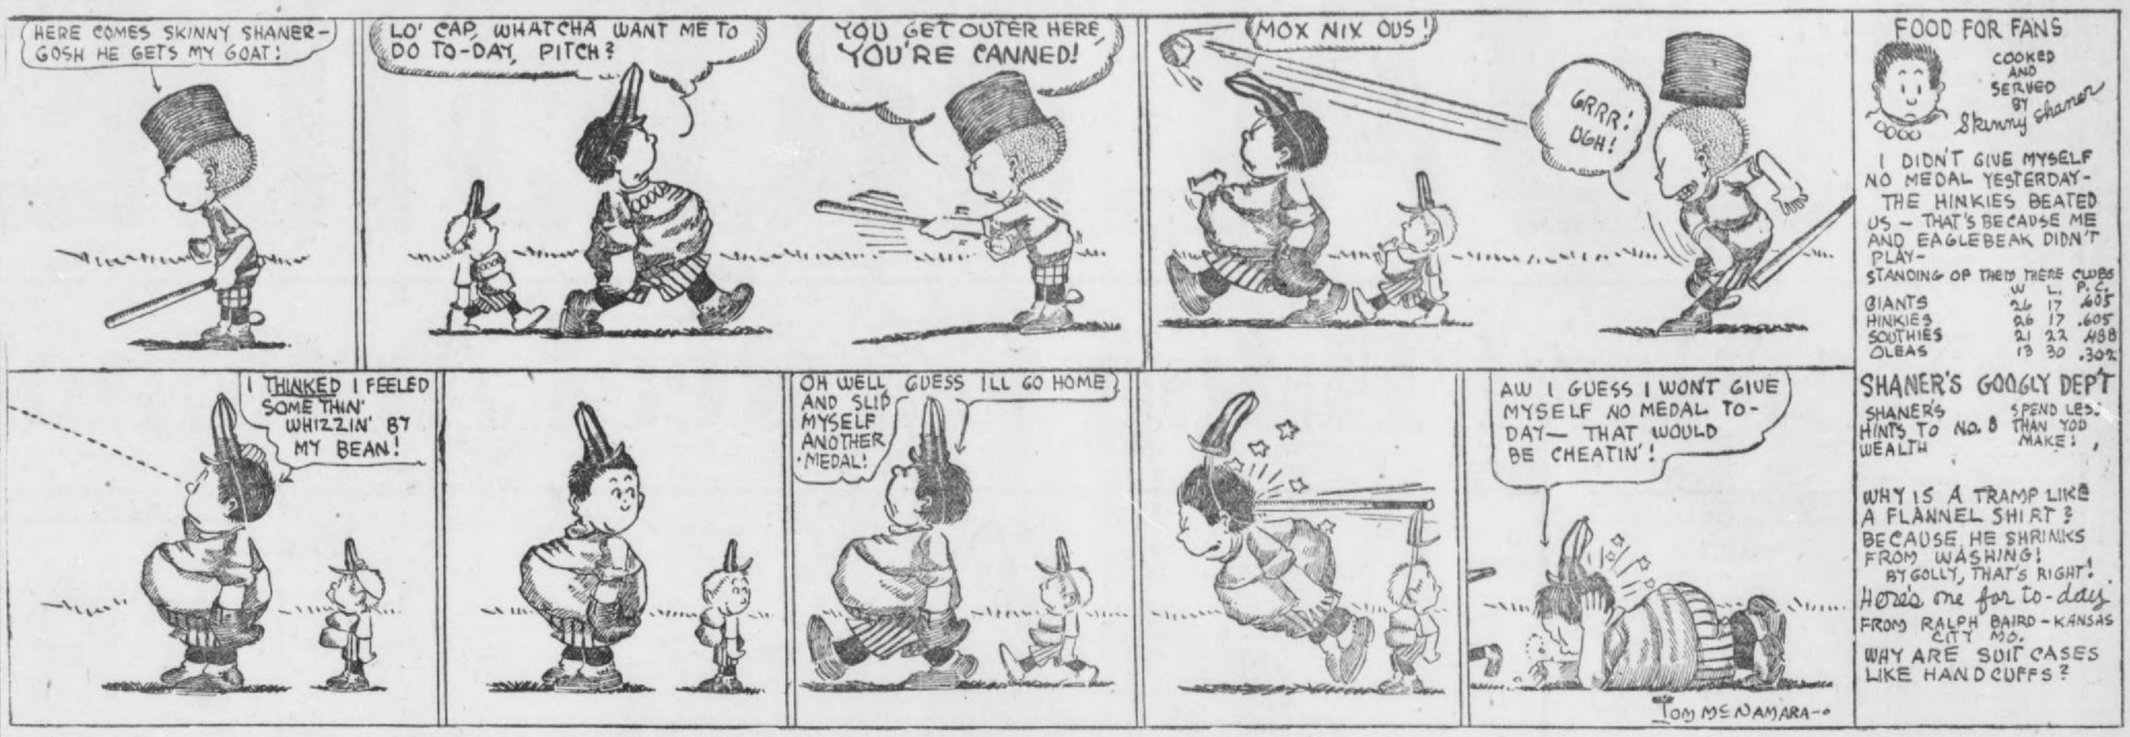

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

STARS.

Oft in the early fall,
With baseball fights near ended,
One stops to think where all
The springtime stars have wended.
The Second Cobbs have lost their jobs
And left us broken-hearted;
The Wagners, too, have up and blew,
The Speakers have departed.
Oft, as the autumn comes,
And pennant scraps are ended,
Lord knows where all the bums
Who starred in spring have wended.

Speaking of George McBride as manager of the Red Sox, McAleer could travel from here to Gehenna and back and not find a better one.

McBride never was a Lajoie at the plate nor a Cobb on the bases, but he can think twice before the average athlete gets a start.

The report that Hugh Jennings has signed Messrs. Tutweiler and Fadrique simply shows how hard it is to get rid of a hobby.

It is important to know that the Pelicans won a game the other day from Memphis. This shows that the Pels can beat somebody.

While Packey McFarland depends more on his cleverness than on his punch, his recent effort at song writing has demonstrated that he can punch the English language without mercy.

Were we the manager of a white hope our first move would be to sign him with the Giants, where he could get a postgraduate course in the art of rough house.

ODE TO THE WALKING GHOST.

They say time drags on Sunday
When there is naught to do,
But, gee! it drags on Monday—
It seems to stick like glue.

It sure does drag that one day
From half-past twelve till one,
For one o'clock on Monday
*Is when we cop the mon.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR SPEAKER TO BE TRADED

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—While it is an open secret that President McAleer is pretty well disgusted at the way certain members of the Red Sox team have been going this season, there is very little ground for believing he has ever thought of trading Tris Speaker to the Washington club.

Of course, if, as a morning paper prints under a Milwaukee date, he intends making George McBride the Red Sox manager next year, he will have to get rid of Carrigan, for Bill would not be likely to show unusual enthusiasm for the common cause if he were deposed without a fair trial, and the tag end of a season can hardly be considered enough time in which to gauge any man's managerial ability.

* * *

BUT why Speaker? Especially if Carrigan is no longer with the team. A few weeks ago dopesters were figuring that Speaker would have to be traded because he could not get along with the new manager. Waiving the question as to whether Speaker has or has not given his best services to the team since Carrigan's appointment (in our opinion he has done his best), why should it be necessary to trade him after the cause of his discontent, if discontent he ever had, has been removed?

* * *

FOR is it at all likely that "Old Fox" Griffith is likely to let go the best base-runner in the American League, even if he should consent to break up his infield by releasing his shortstop.

Either Milan or Speaker would be a notable addition to any club, but the departure of either would, conversely, be a great loss to the team with which he is now connected.

McAleer is entirely willing to secure Milan, and Griffith, no doubt, could be prevailed upon to take Speaker. But neither cares much about letting his own star depart.

RED SOX TO GIVE $10,000 IN PLAYERS FOR REHG

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 14.—A baseball deal was engineered here whereby the Boston Red Sox will give $10,000 in players for Left Fielder Walter Rehg, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association. A big cash price was offered to Manager Friel, of the St. Paul club, but he turned down these offers for a trade.

ROCKFORD WINS LONG GAME.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Aug. 14.—A double and a single in the nineteenth inning gave Rockford the victory over Racine yesterday, 3 to 2.

RINGSIDE NEWS

After a layoff of two months Eddie McGoorty is ready to don the padded mitts again. Jim Coffroth has offered him either Sailor Petroskey or Bob McAllister, who boxed a twenty-round draw on the coast last week. McGoorty isn't particular which he meets, and has wired the California promoter to that effect.

* * *

Jimmy Grant, the Chicago bantamweight, who holds a knock-out victory over Spider Britt, is back in our midst once more. Jimmy has been spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla., and is now anxious to get on with some of the local talent. Jimmy is one of the classiest fellows of his weight and should find little trouble in getting on here.

* * *

Johnny Dundee will make his next fight against Ad Wolgast on Admission Day. Dundee, by stopping Jack White, has won a warm spot in the hearts of the coast fans. He should not lack for admirers when he stacks up against the ex-champion.

* * *

Two clever newspaper men of Chicago, George S. Robbins and Joseph B. Bowles, have gotten out a bright and interesting little book covering the career of Frank A. Gotch. The wrestling champion is credited with the following: "In training, it is brains over brawn. The man who trains with his brain can get more good out of twirling a match than an athlete who does not use his brain can out of a 5-pound dumb-bell.

* * *

Joe Rivers, having had two chances against a world's lightweight champion, finds himself further from the 133-pound title than when he started to box in this division. The Mexican is carded to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, and unless he wins decisively, Joe will find himself in a class with Anderson and Baldwin.

* * *

* * *

For the 99th time Jack Dillon and Toni Caponi are matched. Reports from Winnipeg state that the two middleweights will clash in a scheduled twelve-round set-to some time next month.

* * *

It is even hinted that Welsh and Ritchie will pull the wool over the eyes of Vancouver sports, as each man is said to have an understanding that they will box for the benefit of the moving pictures only.

* * *

And now we learn Ritchie fears Murphy, too. One wonders what Ritchie does when he isn't looking up some new person to fear.

* * *

Promoter Coffroth, of San Francisco, is reported to have Arthur Pelky signed for three bouts. Charley Miller will be one of his opponents.

* * *

The manager of Gunboat Smith will now try and fill all the sporting pages in the country telling what a wonder Smith is and that he is the real champion. And all because he trimmed Jim Flynn.

PITCHER GIVES ONLY ONE HIT IN DOUBLE BILL

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 14.—Pitcher Hedgepeth established a new world's record here yesterday, when he pitched both games of a double-header against Richmond and was hit safely but once in the eighteen consecutive innings. He was not scored against; only gave three bases on balls—one in the first game and two in the second—and did not hit a batsman. Hedgepeth was sold to the Washington Americans several weeks ago.

Manager Stallings, of the Boston Braves, has bought Outfielder Zwilling from the St. Joseph, Mo., club. Zwilling was formerly a member of the White Sox.

The Pirates are again tied with Chicago for third place in the National League, having been trounced twice yesterday by the Brooklyn Dodgers. No other games were played owing to rain. No games were scheduled in the American League.

Left Fielder Gilhooley, of the Montreal club in the International League, will probably be sold to a mortgage, Owner Lichenstein, of the Montreal club, demands $10,000 for Gilhooley.

The Dodgers celebrated "McKeever day" at Ebbet's field in victorious style and afterward the loyal Brooklyn fans were heard to wish that every day was "McKeever day" in the city of rubber plants.

Detailed Description of This Wonderful Machine

Body metal, one passenger, wheel base 56 inches, 16-inch steel wheels, with 3-4-inch rubber tires; tread of wheel, 21 1-2 inches, made of material that gives spring and strength. This is a real vehicle—not a toy—and will uphold the weight of a grown man. The big racing hood is sheet steel and slanting seat, giving the driver real racing position; one big feature is the steering knuckle gear. The front wheels turn in response to the steering wheel, just as the front wheels of a real automobile, the axle being stationary. This eliminates danger of upsetting on curves.

These cars are carefully finished and beautifully painted. This model can be used with pleasure and safety by girls as well as boys. Remember, this machine is not a toy or plaything. It is a real miniature race car, according to the skill and endurance of the driver.

TREND OF STOCKS IS TO GO LOWER

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Many of the railroad shares were under pressure at the opening of the stock market to-day. The tone was heavy, although some issues made good rains. Texas Company continued to climb, beginning ½ up.

Wabash lost 1 point, selling at 4½. Chesapeake and Ohio declined ⅞. Canadian Pacific began ¼ lower, but at the end of half an hour had recovered and was ¼ above Wednesday's final. Among the other losses were: Western Union, ⅝; Reading, ⅛; Steel common, ⅝; Union Pacific, ⅛; Amalgamated Copper, ¾; Mexican Petroleum ½, and Atchison ¼.

Southern Pacific began ½ up, but lost it. At the end of 45 minutes, however, a better tone prevailed all the way round. American Telephone and Telegraph climbed ⅜, while fractional gains were also scored by United States Rubber common and Erie.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were firm.

Westinghouse was one of the strongest features of the late trading, crossing 69 for a net goin of more than a point on the day. Union Pacific was ⅝ above the noon price. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined a point from the midday range. Texas Company sold off on profit-taking. Southern Pacific also was lower. The tone was steady.

The market closed heavy. Governments unchanged; other bonds strong.

COTTON WAS SOLD FREELY ALL DAY

At the Start Traders Were Timid, but Expert Promise of Rains in West Causes Drop.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Good cables and absence of rains over the Texas belt, except at one or two places, resulted in the cotton market opening steady to-day and first prices ranged from 1 point off to 5 points higher than Wednesday's final. There was a little outside support, however, and the list being bolstered by buying from room shorts.

This, coupled with the Government report on supply and distribution, which placed the number of cotton bales consumed during July at 486,246 running bales, as compared with 467,000 bales in June. The report was considered bullish, but failed to stimulate any buying of consequence and the market developed a sagging tendency after the call, based on active selling, which was encouraged by a New Orleans weather expert prediction of rains in the western belt within the next forty-eight house. Later the selling became general and by noon the decline aggregated 5 to 11 points from the initial range.

After the English market had reported better cables than expected, price movement at the close showed a decline of 2 to 3½ points from the previous close.

Ring traders are persistent bears on the new crop positions, but they are not heavy sellers, especially of August. Most of them seem to be waiting rains in the western belt before committing themselves to any great extent to the short side. But a world of cotton will fall upon the market if rains should come in the west. One thing that prevents any material decline in prices is that the feeling among the average trader is to the effect that the Clarke anti-option bill will be killed and that nothing along that line will be done at the present session of Congress.

During the afternoon session the market ruled rather dull and prices fluctuated within a very moderate range. The trade was less aggressive and at the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 2 to 7 points from the closing quotations of Wednesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14.—The map shows cloudy weather in nearly all of East Texas, the south central Gulf districts and the Carolinas. Precipitation is shown in Central and South Texas and the Gulf districts and showers in Tennessee and the Atlantics. Cooler weather in North Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for unsettled weather in the western half of the belt, with good indications for more general rains in the next forty-eight hours. Partly cloudy and scattered showers in the eastern half of the belt.

First trades here were at a decline of 2 points, and the market soon weakened to 10.96 for October on numerous private reports of rain this morning, principally from South Central and South Texas points. Continued unfavorable views from Manchester contributed to the weakness.

An official forecast of fair weather for Texas checked selling pressure during the afternoon session, but prices were held at the low point.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "London investors are gaining confidence and are relieving the underwriters of recent new issues of their holdings. Sentiment is improving on the Paris Bourse, Copper shares being a strong feature.

"An announcement of the allotments of Southern Pacific stock to syndicate members will be made known to-day. The offering has been over-subscribed. Liggett & Myers and American Tobacco will sell ex-dividend Friday. Southern Pacific directors are scheduled to meet for dividend action to-day. No change is reported in the Bank of England rate of discount.

"Information channels favor profit-taking. We would look for attractive buying opportunities, with the intention to secure moderate profits."

* * *

Some profit-taking yesterday was responsible for the reactionary tendency at the close. I would not be surprised if the market was reactionary to-day, as prices have had a good advance without any setback. Southern Pacific, which is behind the balance of the list, looks as if the pool would put it higher. I am bullish for the long pull and on any reaction believe stocks are a purchase.—G. D. Potter.

Triple holiday in Paris beginning to-day.

Some of the smaller banks throughout the country are requesting a share of the $50,000,000 crop-moving fund.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Better things are expected of the wheat market, and many bullish arguments are put forth in favor of the maintenance of a gradual hardening of values, although the market is not expected to run away. Traders who were in the pit said that the pressure from hedgers has become much lighter than the last few days. It was largely a case of one bull taking the place of another in the corn market yesterday. One of the most rampant bulls said that, while he believes in higher prices, he expects a choppy market for the present."

* * *

Chicago, raining, 70 degrees, heavy rain early; Minneapolis, raining, 70; Terre Haute, sprinkling, 75, heavy rain last night; Springfield, partly cloudy, 78, no rain; Peoria, cloudy, 80, threatening; Omaha, clear, 84; Kansas City, clear, 88, no rain; St. Louis, clear, 80.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. say: "Wheat: The weather map shows scattered rains in spring wheat country. The market shows decidedly more ability to tally and in our opinion is gaining friends daily.

"Corn—The weather map shows light rains in Iowa and one in Nebraska. A fair amount of precipitation at a number of Illinois points and in the Ohio Valley. Notwithstanding considerable liquidation all through the session yesterday closing prices were within a fraction of the high point, demonstrating the prevailing inherent strength.

"Oats—The market shows a steady undertone, but the volume of trade is not large; the strength in other grains is helping prices to some extent. We prefer the buying side on the weak spots.

Kansas City corn and wheat region bulletin shows Kansas rainfall: Macksville .04; no rain Missouri or Oklahoma. Maximum temperatures Kansas 98 to 108; Missouri 99 to 105; Oklahoma 98 to 108 degrees.

Omaha corn and wheat bulletin: Broken Bow, rain, .04; North Platte .01. Highest temperature yesterday 108 degrees at Fairbury and 106 at Auburn, Ashland and Lincoln. State generally clear this morning.

'Cotton Is King, but Must Serve Farmer'

CUTHBERT, Aug. 14.—That cotton is king, but that the king must be subservient to the people, was the theme of an address of President John T. Williams, of the Georgia Agricultural Society, at the opening session of the annual convention here. Diversified farming in all branches is the salvation of Georgia farms, said President Williams.

Other speakers were Benjamin Milliken, of Wayne; Mayor Richard Terry, Chancellor David C. Barrow, of the University of Georgia; Hon. L. P. Hillyer, banker and farmer, of Macon; P. L. Twitty, of Laurens; J. Phil Campbell, of Clarke, and W. G. Middlebrooks, of Bibb.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red ....86⅝@88½
Corn—No. 2 ....77½
Oats—No. 2 ....41½@42

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The bulls in corn failed to hold the price up around the closing level of last night, or to hold the best prices of to-day's session.

September closed unchanged at 73 and it ranged between 72⅝ and 73½. December and May showed losses of ⅛c to ¼c. The trade again was large, and there was little corn on the market when it was wanted most.

Wheat was up ⅛c to ⅛c and oats were ⅛c higher to unchanged. The feature in wheat was the buying of 75,000 bushels of Septemebr and the selling of an equal amount of December by "Billy" Long.

Provisions were lower.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

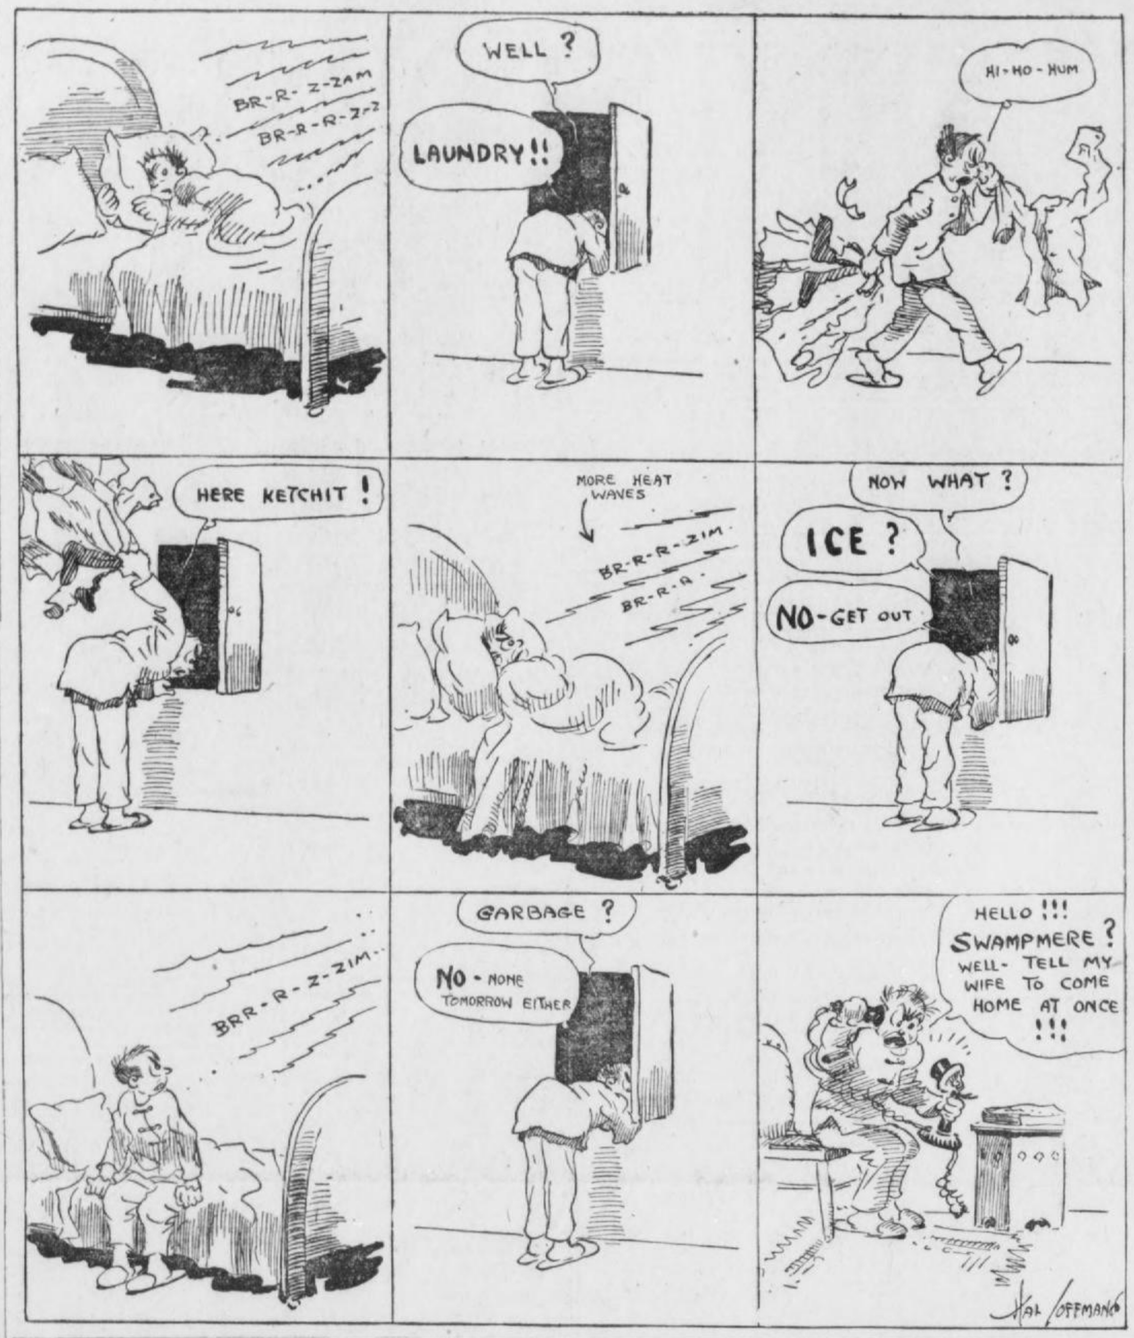

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the political forum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

.:. The New Remedy .:.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch,
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger,
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and childlike exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spendiffig an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.

WOMAN RESENTS DORSEY'S QUERIES

Conley Drunk Day of Crime, Girl Says He Told Her

MOTHER-IN-LAW OF FRANK, ON STAND, IS ANGERED BY DORSEY

Another dramatic scene in the trial of Leo Frank appeared imminent Thursday when Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's mother-in-law, was on the stand.

Mrs. Selig was several times on the verge of indignant tears and plainly was greatly angered by Solicitor Dorsey's manner of questioning her. She muttered at him spitefully and glared at him with hatred in her eyes as he asked her if the sensational statements in Minola McKnight's affidavit were not absolutely true and if it was not a fact that Mrs. Frank never went to see her husband for weeks after he was arrested on suspicion of having murdered the Phagan girl.

The Solicitor aroused the ire of the witness again when he, asked her if it was not true that she gave the McKnight woman, her negro cook, extra sums of money and that Mrs. Frank gave her a hat after the crime was committed. Mrs. Selig denied that extra sums of money had been given the cook. She said that money had been advanced the woman and that this explained the extra sums.

Mrs. Selig made emphatic denial of all the assertions contained in the Minola McKnight affidavit, which the McKnight woman repudiated on the witness stand.

The defense scored a point in the testimony of Harry Denham, who swore he did not know of the factory elevator running any time Saturday. He said that he was on the fourth floor where he was able to see the wheels of the elevator if he happened to look in that direction. He testified that there is a perecptible shaking of the building when the elevator is stopped or started, but that he noticed nothing of the sort Saturday. Solicitor Dorsey made the witness admit there was a great deal of noise on th fourth floor that day.

The defense at the opening of the afternoon session introduced several othr character and alibi witnesses. Mrs. M. Marcus, 483 Washington street, and M. J. Goldstein, No. 285 Washington street, testified to being at a card party Saturday night at the Selig home. Both said they saw Frank, and Goldstein told of Frank's reading a magazine and laughing heartily at a funny story. The defense has emphasized this feature of his demeanor by the testimony of several witnesses.

All records for the transcription of testimony in criminal cases in the State of Georgia have been broken in the Frank trial, it was announced Thursday by the court reporter.

Two thousand three hundred pages of typewritten testimony of about 300 words each, have been transcribed, making a total of 690,000 words. The next nearest was the McNaughton case, which ran to a total of about 450,000,000 words.

Girl Is Strong Alibi Witness.

Miss Helen Curran, a pretty girl of 17 years, proved one of the strongest witnesses Thursday for the defense in establishing what will be claimed as an alibi for Frank. She testified that she saw Frank at 1:10 o'clock by Jacobs' Drug Store, Whitehall and Alabama street, apparently waiting for his car home.

The defense devoted most of the forenoon session to producing persons who had seen Frank on the day of the tragedy. Miss Curran was probably the most important, as she was the only one who professed to have seen Frank immediately after the time he has stated he left the factory.

Others were called who saw him as he arrived home at about 1:20 o'clock, or as he was on his way back to the factory later in the afternoon. It was the purpose of Frank's lawyers, so far as they could, to account for every minute of his time during the day.

Appreciating that the case of the State against the defendant was hit by Miss Curran's story, Attorney Frank A. Hooper made a determined effort to confuse or break down the young witness, but failed to shake her in the least.

The significance of the girl's testimony is apparent in the light of Jim Conley's story. The negro said he and Frank started to dispose of Mary Phagan's body at 12:56. Allowing two minutes for Frank to get from the factory to Whitehall and Alabama streets, he would have had to leave the building at 1:08. This would have left but 12 minutes for the two to dispose of the body and do everything else the negro mentioned.

Conley testified that he was in the closet in Frank's office eight minutes. This would have reduced the remaining time to four minutes. Part of this was occupied in writing the notes, Conley says.

Thirty-two Minutes to Dispose of Body.

If the negro could have written the four notes in two minutes, two minutes would have been left for the disposal of the body. But Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, said that Conley took six or seven minutes in writing one test note exactly like the shorter note that was found by the slain girl's body. The defense contended that this, in view of Miss Curran's testimony, puts Conley's story in the realm of the impossible.

Miss Curran said that she lived at No. 160 Ashby street and that she knew Frank from trying to get a position as stenographer at the factory one time. She said that on the day she saw Frank she had an appointment to meet a girl friend at Jacobs' store at 1:15. She left Kress' store at 1:05, she testified, and had been at Jacobs' only a short time when she observed Frank.

Attorney Hooper brought out the fact that her father is employed by Montag Bros., who also are interested in the pencil factory. He asked her at one point in his examination:

Miss Rebecca Carson, called primarily as an alibi witness, told of suspicious conversations and actions of the negro Jim Conley.

"No, Miss Rebecca, I wasn't at the factory Saturday. I was so drunk that I don't know what I did or where

RICH DECATUR MAN SUICIDE BY POISON

A. J. Grubb, a wealthy contractor and builder, living at the old Mell homestead, No. 1508 DeKalb avenue, North Decatur, committed suicide shortly before noon Thursday by taking strychnine. He had been despondent for several days over business affairs and also was in failing health. His favorite sister, Mrs. Sophia Smith, died Tuesday, and this seemed to affect Grubb deeply.

The funeral of Mrs. Smith was held Thursday morning, but Grubb said that he did not feel well and would not attend. Harvey Grubb, his 19-year-old son, worrying about his father, also stayed away from the funeral services.

About 10 o'clock Mr. Grubb went to a drug store near his home and purchased a vial of strychnine, stating that he wished to poison a dog. Shortly after he returned to the house, his son Harvey was aroused by groans issuing from Mr. Grubb's bedroom. Rushing into the room, Harvey found his father writhing on the bed. He at once called the Grady Hospital, and an ambulance made a record run to the Grubb home. It was too late, however, as Mr. Grubb died in his son's arms a few moments before the ambulance arrived.

Mr. Grubb was one of the pioneer citizens of North Decatur, and had been a successful business man. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Grubb; one daughter, Mrs. H. Pierce, and four sons, Jack, Harvey, William and Claude Grubb.

The direct action of the sun and air, he asserted, is the most energetic tonic. It also reduces pain, forms a powerful microbe-killing agent, and conduces most powerfully to the growth of new skin.

SENATE HEAD ATTACKED BY KEA

Charging that President Randolph Anderson has usurped power as presiding officer of the State Senate, and charging further that the Senate Rules Committee, which is appointed by the President, is a "fraud and a cheat and a swindle on the public," Fred Kea, Senator from the Sixteenth District, Thursday declared he would rise to a question of personal privilege to state his charges when the Senate convenes for its final session at 3 o'clock.

Senator Kea declared that the Rules, or Steering Committee has deliberately blocked bills through the efforts of the "city lawyers" which compose its membership.

Here are the charges as stated by Senator Kea:

I charge the President of the Senate with usurping power, and I back up the charge with a statement made to me by a member of the House to the effect that President Anderson made statements to one member of the Houes that if a certain member voted against the kindergarten bill that he would see that that member did not pass any bill by the Senate.

I further charge that he, Anderson, took Senate Bill No. 66 after it had been reported by the committee that it do pass, and held it up for the third reading more than two weeks on the pretense that he desired to make some minor changes in said bill. But under this pretense he without authority referred the bill back to the committee, which had no authority to act on same, and by undermining they killed it.

I charge that the Rules Committee is a fraud and a cheat and swindle on the public. I back up this charge with the fact that the Rules Committee is composed entirely of corporation lawyers with the exception of one or two, therefor giving the farmer no representative in that important body, which steers much of the legislation which goes through the Senate.

As a result of the fact that this body is made up of corporation lawyers, with the exception of one or two and the farmer having no represenetation, many measures purporting to help the farmer have been choked out of existence during the present session.

I further charge that Senate Bill No. 87, which I presented in the Senate at the beginning of the session, has been ready for the third reading since July 17, but has been blocked by this same Rules Committee.

Holland Sold for $3,000

Harry Holland, former Tech star, now playing third base for the Crackers, was sold this afternoon by the local club to Washington. The former collegian is to report to Manager Clark Griffith at the finish of the Southern League season. It was an outright cash sale, Washington paying $3,000 for the player.

Holland was one of the greatest college ball players the South ever boasted. He was a corking infielder, a smashing and timely hitter, possessed a grand arm and was fast on the bases. And he has proved a marvel during his short sojourn with the Crackers.

Holland graduated from Tech in June 1912. Nearly every big league club tried to sign him, but Harry's family were detad set against him becoming a professional player. Two weeks ago, however, President Frank Calloway, of the local club, induced him to join the Crackers.

MILITARY AID IS REFUSED SULZER

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Formal notice was served on Governor William Sulzer to-day that he had been impeached by the New York State Assembly for "high crimes and misdemeanors," including the alleged use of money contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street.

At the same time the bitter fight between Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn for control of the Great Seal of the State waxed more bitter. Acting Adjutant General E. V. Howard, replying to reports that Governor Sulzer would call out the national guard if necessary to keep possession of the Executive Mansion, declared that he recognizes Mr. Glynn as the constitutional Governor of the Commonwealth and would respect any orders signed by the Lieutenant Governor. This renders Governor Sulzer helpless so far as the military is concerned.

Mrs. Sulzer Is Prostrated.

Official notice to quit the duties of Governor was tendered to Governor Sulzer by Patrick H. McCabe, of the Senate. Mrs. Sulzer, who is prostrated over the attack made upon her husband's honesty, was in serious condition to-day. Doctors were rushed from New York City to attend her.

Accompanied by a bodyguard of strong-arm men, Governor Sulzer walked from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol shortly before noon. Asked for a statment, he said:

"Not a word. I am now in the hands of my counsel."

A special detail of policemen also was provided for the Governor's safety.

Await Ruling of Court.

Governor Sulzer told friends he would not relinquish the reins of power until removed by the Court of Impeachment, composed of the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, whirh will sit September 18.

A number of friends greeted the Governor after he arrived at the Capitol. In answer to inquiries about the condition of Mrs. Sulzer, he said:

"Mrs. Sulzer is seriously ill. We are gravely concerned. She has been hysterical and during the night was in a state of nervous collapse."

In spite of this pathetic feature the political enemies of the Governor did not lessen their efforts. On the other hand, it seemed that the bitterness had increased.

With the details of the actual service of the Governor out of the way, everybody settled back to watch the fight for the possession of the office of Governor.

President Sends No Message to Sulzer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The White House has sent no word either or advice or sympathy to Governor Sulzer in the present crisis in his career. Rumors that the President was interfering in the situation met a strong denial to-day.

CONLEY'S STORY IS RE-ENACTED BY DEFENSE TO DISPROVE IT

The diagram shows how the defense re-enacted the disposition of Mary Phagan's body as described by Jim Conley to prove that it could not have been done in the time specified. The defense's men had a 107-pound sack representing the body and reproduced the negro's story in detail—beginning in Frank's office, going back to the metal room, to the elevator, into the basement, back to the office, hiding in the wardrobe and the writing of the notes.

I was," she testified that Conley said when she asked him on the Monday after the crime if he had been in the factory at the time the murder was committed.

She also said that Conley had appeared greatly startled when Mrs. Carson, her mother, had said in his presence that she thought they would find the murderer when they found the negro that Mrs. Arthur White saw at the foot of the stairs.

Two more character witnesses, Harry E. Lewis, of Brooklyn, formerly the District Attorney of New York, and Herbert Lasher, of Fleischmans, N. Y., a classmate of Frank's at Cornell, testified that they knew the defendant well and that they knew his character to be very good.

Sig Montag, of Montag Bros., treasurer of the National Pencil Company, told of his part in the hiring of the Pinkertons and of Frank's demeanor the Sunday the body of the girl was found. He testified, in refutation of Jim Conleys' story about watching at the front door at the direction of Frank, that the first floor on occasions of which Conley told was the property of the Clark Woodenware Company, and that it was used by the pencil company only as an entrance.

Montag was asked by Dorsey just before he left the stand if he tried several times to hire a horse and buggy the afternoon of April 26 from W. D. Brown, a West End liveryman. The witness said he had not.

"Don't you know that Kress' store was closed all of Saturday afternoon, April 26?"

"It wasn't closed at the time I went in there in the afternoon," she replied.

The attorney also sought to show that the crowds were so dense that afternoon that she would not have been likely to see Frank.

Miss Curran was the first of a long string of alibi witnesses for Frank. Still others are to be called to present to the jury a record of the defendant's every movement throughout the day so far as it is known.

Important Battle Lost by Defense.

An important battle was lost by the defense in the Frank trial Thursday in the over-ruling of Luther Rosser's motion for the expunging of Solicitor Dorsey's questions of the day before relating to Frank alleged acts of immorality.

The defeat of Attorney Rosser came immediately after Solicitor Dorsey had failed in an attempt to have Frank's mother and wife excluded from the courtroom because of the elder woman's sensational outburst of the afternoon before, when she dramatically denounced the Solicitor for his charge of grossly improper conduct against her son, the defendant.

Judge Roan refused the motion of the Solicitor, but said that he would refuse them admission if another outbreak of the sort took place.

With the preliminary skirmishes of the day settled, the defense set out with great minuteness to complete its record of Frank's movements throughout the day of the crime.

Miss Helen Curran, No. 160 Ashby street, testified that she saw Frank near Jacobs' drug store, Whitehall and Alabama streets, at 1:10 o'clock Saturday afternoon apparently waiting for his car home.

Saw Frank Get Off Car.

Mrs. Albert P. Levy, No. 69 East Georgia avenue, swore that she saw Frank get off his car on Georgia avenue at 1:20 o'clock the afternoon of the crime.

Mrs. M. G. Michael, of Athens, Ga., aunt of Mrs. Leo Frank, said that she was visiting at the home of Mrs. C. Wolfsheimer, No. 387 Washington street, three doors from Georgia avenue, and that Frank came up to the steps at about 2 o'clock to speak to her, leaving a moment later to catch a Washington street car at Glenn street.

Jerome Michael, son of the previous witness, testified that he was on the steps at the time and that Frank walked up the street between 1:55 and 2 o'clock.

Mrs. Wolfsheimer, who lives at No. 387 Washington street, said she saw Frank at this time.

J. Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, told the jury he rode partway to town with Frank and that the defendant boarded the Washington street car at about 2 o'clock.

Miss Rebecca Carson, a factory employee, testified to seeing Frank on the street at 2:20 and also at 2:50.

Solicitor Dorsey, before the jury was brought in, said he wanted to make a request that the mother and wife of Leo M. Frank be excluded from the court as the witnesses have been because of the outbreak of the elder Mrs. Frank Wednesday afternoon.

"I appreciate the feeling of the wife and mother," he said; "it is a terrible strain on them. I am sorry for them. But I must have protection and I think they should be excluded when we are subjected to outbreaks like that yesterday."

Attorney Arnold in reply said:

"Without criticising Mrs. Frank, I want to state that the Solicitor's examination of the witness yesterday was far worse than her outbreak. He was undertaking to get in evidence in an illegal way. He could not get it in in a legal way. He was appealing to the crowd and to the feelings of the jury. Does you honor think that good practice—honorable practice—especially when a man is on trial for his life?

Arnold Calls Dorsey Overzealous.

"My friend is zealous—he is a little overzealous, I think, but that is not a matter for me to criticise. Your honor, our jury system is very lame if we admit this sort of evidence. They are good men, but simple men. It's hard for them to distinguish between things that condemn a man and things that prove him guilty. I won't say that the conduct of the Solicitor is illegal, but it is a little more culpable than the act of the mother. It's a pretty pass if a man's wife and mother are to be barred at the hour of his trial. This evidence of the State was put in to poison the minds of the jury. It was hard to bear—awfully hard to bear—but I promise it shall not occur again. We will do all we can to prevent a recurrence."

"Your honor, I didn't ask Mr. Jones all the questions I might have asked him," replied Dorsey. "You ruled the questions I did ask were legal. I asked only questions I can substantiate by reputable witnesses—some of them high-class women, I regard them.

"It's a mistaken idea about me being overzealous. I am trying to do my duty. I want to protect myself and the court. You have excluded other women. There is no reason why these should be allowed to remain to offend the dignity of the court. An accused man should not be allowed to bankrupt his wife and mother. Mr. Arnold criticises my act. The courts have held it is highly improper for a lawyer to express his opinion on the evidence. Mr. Arnold has branded this evidence as lies before I put these good women on the stand."

Judge Roan ruled, after more arguing:

"You are entirely right, Mr. Dorsey, in saying that you are entitled to protection. Other women were put out because the evidence was of such a nature as to be indecent to be heard by them. It is a matter in the discretion of the court to state whether these ladies should be allowed to remain. I will say that if there are any more such outbreaks as yesterday I shall be forced to exclude them."

Mrs. Frank, the mother, and the prisoner's wife were both in court while the argument was in progress.

Q. Did you overhear any conversation between Jim Conley and your mother?—A. Yes. On Thursday he was sweeping. Mother said to him: "Well, Jim, I see they haven't got you yet." He said: "No Missis, I ain't done nothing." She said: "No, and Mr. Frank hasn't either, but they took him." Conley said: "No, Missis, he's as innocent as you is and you is as innocent as an angel." Mother remarked: "Well, when they find out who murdered that little girl, it will be that negro Mrs. White saw sitting on the box back of the stairs." Jim dropped his broom and looked very scared.

Q. How long was this before Jim was arrested?—A. About an hour.

Q. What day was that?—A. Thursday.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. You looked at the clock both times before you saw him? Are you certain of the time?—A. Yes.

Q. The first time you noticed him, it was between 2:20 and 2:25 o'clock. How did you get that so certain?—A. My sister just asked me the time and it was only a short time later when I saw him.

Salary Not Raised Since Last January.

Q. How long have you been forelady?—A. About three years.

Q. Would you mind telling your salary?—A. $10 a week.

Q. Did you ever stay there Saturday afternoon?—A. No.

Q. Did you know Mr. Frank very well?—A. Only in a business way.

Q. When was your salary raised last?—A. January.

Q. He came right out with it?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it make any impression on you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell anyone else?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Rosser.

Q. Why did you tell Mr. Rosser?—A. He came to the factory and sent for some of the girls to tell them what we thought of Conley.

Q. You don't know what time Frank came out of Jacobs' drug store?—A. No.

Q. Did you see anything like blood in the factory?—A. No.

Q. You didn't go back there?—A. Not that day.

Q. When did you go back there?—A. Tuesday; I went back there with Mr. Frank.

Q. You didn't see the blood?—A. No, I wasn't looking for any.

Saw Frank on Way Down Town.

The witness was excused and Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, a brother of Julian Loeb, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you remember seeing Leo Frank on Memorial Day, April 26?—A. Yes, on the trolley car coming to town.

Q. Where did you get on the car?—A. At Georgia avenue.

Q. Where did he get on?—A. At Glenn street.

Q. Did you see him get on?—A. Yes, we sat together.

Q. Where did you go?—A. The car was blockaded at Hunter street by the crowds watching the parade. We got off.

Q. Where did he go?—A. Down Hunter street.

Q. What time was that?—A. I would say about 2:10 o'clock.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. Did you see anyone else that morning?—A. I saw Arthur Harris

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense in the Frank case did the expected thing when it boldly and unequivocally put Frank's character in issue.

It indicated its confidence in the justice of the deefndant's cause in doing that, and it met thus a crisis that it hardly could have successfully overcome otherwise, if it so happen that it does overcome it eventually.

Having taken the initiative in the matter of thrashing out Frank's character, the State will now be forced to make out an unmistakable case of bad character against Frank, or it is likely that the State's injection of the sinister charge against him, in addition to the charge of murder, may operate as a boomerang to the State's great hurt finally.

It is not to be wondered at that the defendant's mother, tried and racked in spirit and pride as she surely must have been, should have let her feelings overcome her for an instant during the course of Wednesday afternoon's hearing. I do not suppose it is even remotely possible for any person not a mother to understand all she has gone through.

Her vehement protest against the vile things being said and hinted about her boy—true or untrue, though such things always are untrue in mother love, I take it—serves to illustrate, however, how very vital to the defense now is the establishing of Frank's good character.

I doubt that anything thus far said to the jury has so profoundly impressed it as the unspeakable thing Conley said of the defendant. The jury is only human, and it can no more dodge impressions than other people can.

Impression Must Be Erased.

The defense is up against the herculean task of removing all of that impression from the mind of the jury—the twelve minds of the jury, indeed—for it will not do to leave even a fraction of Conley's story undemolished!

Manifestly, therefore, the defense could not, if it would, get away altogether from the matter of Frank's character. It found itself necessarily forced to the other extreme of the situation set up by the State.

The State, on the other hand, by reason of the defense's challenging attitude in the matter of forcing the issue of Frank's character, must now corroborate the frightful story of Conley, or I think it may suffer before the jury irreparable injury.

Curiously enough, the burden of proof in the Frank case seemed to have been shifted a week ago—that is, whereas the burden is legally imposed upon the State, it being the theory of the law that a defendant goes into court with the presumption of innocence in his favor, it appeared, after Conley had made his awful charge, that the burden then was shifted onto the defense to prove Frank's innocence, rather than that the State should prove his guilt.

In putting Frank's character in issue, however, I now think the defense has shifted back the burden, in large measure, anyway, to where the law contemplates it shall rest.

The State must complete its proof of Frank's depravity, or the State will not have made out such a case as likely will stand to the last analysis.

Defense Plans Its Climax.

As the State moved in the beginning of the Frank trial, steadily and consistently to the negro sweeper, Jim Conley, as the climax of its case, so to-day the defense is moving, every bit as steadily and as persistently, to the defendant, Leo Frank, as the climax of its case.

The State's case progressed ever up to Conley—the defense's case is progressing ever up to Frank.

It is Conley vs. Frank no less than it is the State vs. Frank.

No intelligent and discriminating observer, abreast with the status of the trial, doubts that, or has doubted it for days.

Either Leo Frank's life will answer for Mary Phagan's, or Jim Conley's will!

The capstone of the defense undoubtedly will be the defendant's statement. He will make it just before the defense rests its pleading.

Already, this anticipated dramatic event has cast its shadow before. The public is looking forward to Frank's attorneys. He simply states what he personal statement with no less keen interest than it looked forward, perhaps, to the terrible story of Conley.

Frank will be permitted, under the law, to make a statement to the jury, but without being permitted to swear to its truthfulness. The jury will be instructed that it may accept that statement, if it so elects, in preference to all the sworn testimony in the case; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject it altogether.

The jury alone and finally is made the sole judge of the defendant's credibility on the stand.

The defendant can not be impeached; he can not be cross-examined; he can not be prompted by his pleases, in the exact way he pleases, and in such detail or lack of detail as he pleases. It is strictly a matter between the defendant and the jury.

Miss Fannie Atherson, who has been called to aid State.

Leo Frank is one of the few defendants in murder cases coming under my observation, who absolutely refrained from discussing his case, in any phase of it, in advance of his trial.

Only at the Coroner's inquest, where he was obliged to talk, has he opened his lips to speak concerning the charge brought against him. In adopting this course, he unquestionably was well within his legal rights, and well within the bounds of common sense, too, no doubt—but the fact remains that the course he pursued is the unusual one.

I said in a former article that Frank apparently is a very patient man—and such men fight mighty hard when once aroused—and the more I reflect upon that observation, the more I am inclined to emphasize it.

He has waited four months to tell his story—but when he does tell it, it will be related in the proper presence, the court and the jury.

It is unlikely that the public wishes to hear anything quite so much as exactly what Frank himself has to say of the charges lodged against him.

It has heard what everybody else, both intimately and distantly concerned, has had to say. It has heard Conley's story from Conley's own lips—but thus far Frank has been as silent as the grave of the dead girl itself!

It is impossible to forecast the effect of Frank's statement upon the jury. It may have as powerful an effect in clearing him as Conley's horrible statement surely must have had by way of then condemning him.

Juries Have Accepted It.

I have seen cases in which the defendant's statement alone evidently served to clear him. I have known juries to accept it as the truth, over and above all the sworn testimony—just as the jury has the unquestioned right to do.

On the other hand, I have seen the defendant's statement fall flat and stale. I have seen it have no more effect upon the jury than rain has upon a duck's back.

It all depends upon the defendant's manner and bearing on the stand, the seeming sincerity of his recital, its plausibility and probability, the character of the man making it, his intelligence and apparent directness of purpose, the necessity of the statement as bearing alone and entirely upon weak points in either his own or the State's case, and many other things.

The defendant's statement presumably dovetails, of course, into the case his lawyers theretofore have made out—and yet I have known the defense to introduce the defendant the first thing, and proceed thereafter to the building of a case around his statement.

As this case is so thoroughly a fight between Conley and Frank—that is, between Conley's evidence and Frank's evidence—it will be intensely interesting to watch and see how eventually the jury views the relative value of both.

Much Rests on Defendant.

Conley's story, as amazing and as shocking as it is in parts, nevertheless has been accepted by many as the truth. Presumably, those people who already have made up their minds still are willing to be convinced—as violent as the presumption may be in some cases—if Frank can convince them.

Upon Frank's statement, therefore, it is entirely possible the entire case may turn finally.

To discredit Frank's statement, to be sure, will be his heavy self-interest and the fact that it is not upon oath and not subject to cross-examination.

To discredit Conley's story, however, is his also heavy self-interest and the fact that, while his story was delivered on oath, his character admittedly is very bad and his numerous previous sworn statements admittedly false in many important details.

The situation thus set up is about as pretty as it could be, from an abstract legal standpoint. If it were a surgical problem we were considering, I should predict that the operation will be beautiful and brilliant in any event—but as for the patient—well, I really could not say!

Frank's Mother Resents Questioning of Dorsey

The calling of four character witnesses Wednesday opened the floodgates for the State to get before the jury all of its accusations against Frank, and was the direct cause of a frantic outburst on the part of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, who rose from her chair and dramatically denounced Solicitor General Dorsey.

It was the first scene created by any of the members of the prisoner's family. Frank's wife and mother were perceptibly affected when the Solicitor previously was hurling his charges of gross misconduct against the defendant, but both had restrained themselves from any marked demonstration.

Feeling Reaches Bursting Point.

The elder woman persistently had maintained an almost expressionless face while the most abhorrent charges were being made. Save that she looked away from the crowd as if it were a terrible ordeal to listen to the testimony, it would have been impossible to tell that it was one of her loved ones against whom the charges were being made.

Her feelings, however, had reached the bursting point Wednesday. She could stand the attack against her son's character no longer. From the impassive and quietly suffering woman she was goaded to the fury of a tigress.

From the lips of the Solicitor General flowed a stream of implied accusations. He asked about alleged incidents in Frank's office at the factory, about incidents in the girls' dressing room which the Solicitor intimated that Frank invaded without apology or excuse.

The mother of Frank lifted her eyes to the Solicitor. There was in them no longer the look of resignation with which the other charges had been met. In its place blazed hate and outraged mother love. She was willing no longer to await the end of the trial for her son's vindication.

The Solicitor continued. He gave the names of girls of tender years. He narrated circumstances that brought a crimson flood to the face of the younger Mrs. Frank.

"Haven't you heard of these stories?" he asked insinuatingly of the witness, Ashley Jones.

"No, nor you either!" cried the mother.

She was on her feet. The courtroom was astounded at the suddenness and dramatic intensity of the outburst. Persons rose here and there among the spectators, oblivious of the calls for order of the court attaches.

Mrs. Frank stood in hysterical indignation before the Solicitor. She said things to him that were lost in the confusion. She would have continued her tirade had she not been restrained by court deputies and members of her own family who rushed to her side to quiet and comfort her.

"My God, my God," she moaned as she was led sobbing from the courtroom. She was taken home in a hysterical condition. She returned toward the close of the afternoon session, but did not re-enter the courtroom.

If the denunciation affected the Solicitor, he did not show it unless it was by a line of questioning even more severe than he had pursued before.

Testimony Aids Frank.

Jones, an insurance man, in whose company Frank holds a policy, denied that he had heard any of the reports of alleged immorality. He said that the young man's record, in respect to health, habits and morals, had been very thoroughly investigated before the policy was issued. He testified that Frank showed an unusually clean record.

The bars were let down for the introduction of testimony against Frank's character when the defense put on the stand Alfred L. Lane, of Brooklyn, a classmate of Frank in Pratt Institute. Lane said that he had known Frank for fifteen years and that he knew he possessed a good character.

Lane was followed by two other of Frank's classmates.

They were Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, a clerical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J. Both testified as to his good character. Several witnesses intervened and then Ashley Jones was called.

Important testimony was given by Dr. William Owens, who was one of four men who sought to reproduce the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as Jim Conley described it. William A. Fleming took the part of Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley. Conley said that he and Frank carried the body downstairs and returned to Frank's office in about five minutes.

Dr. Owens said that it took them about eighteen and a half minutes to carry out the drama in the pencil factory, exclusive of writing the notes and also exclusive of the time that Conley said he spent in the wardrobe in Frank's office.

If the defense is able to make the jurors believe that it would have taken Frank and Conley eighteen and a half minutes to accomplish this, they will have established what is considered a very strong alibi for the superintendent. To this must be added the eight minutes that Conley declares he was in Frank's wardrobe and about twelve minutes for the writing of the four notes—this is half of the time that it probably would have taken the negro to write them according to the testimony of Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective. This makes a total of thirty-nine and one-half minutes. Conley said they started with the body at 12:56. The thirty-eight and one-half minutes would have brought the time to 1:34 1-2.

But, according to one of the State's own witnesses, Frank had left the factory and had arrived home at 1:30—or, in other words, had arrived home before the disposal of the body could have been accomplished.

Quinn Severely Grilled.

Lemmie Quinn, metal department foreman, received a severe grilling from Solicitor Dorsey in the afternoon, but stuck to his story that he visited the office of Frank at about 12:20 the afternoon of the murder. This is in contradiction of Conley's story, who testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came. The Solicitor displayed affidavits of Quinn in which the foreman said he had been at the factory sometime between 12 and 12:20 o'clock. Quinn said that at the time he made the affidavit he had not estimated the time so closely as he had been able to do since.

Other witnesses of the day were Dr. William S. Kendrick, head of the chair of medicine of the new Atlanta Medical School; Frank Payne, a former office boy for Frank, and Oscar Pappenheimer, a stockholder in the National Pencil Factory.

STEEL WORKERS ENTHRALLED BY FRANK TRIAL

By L. F. Woodruff.

There is one class of men to whom death is supposed to hold no horrors. They can not think of it and earn their daily bread. Were the fear of loss of life to enter their brain for one single second during their daily task they would be as useless as a motorless automobile.

Their pay is high for scorning the grave. They can see one of their companions fall victim to the perils of their calling and go back to work on the same job a few minutes later without a tremor, and encounter those same dangers with footstep firm and their minds only on the work they have to do.

These men are the structural steel workers. They are as picturesque a class as the struggle for dollars has developed. The fascination of their calling is universal. No man can pass the place where a building is slowly reaching its way into the clouds without standing in an awe-struck trance watching these men scamper around between heaven and earth as though they were walking about a place as safe as the quiet walk under the shade trees of Grant Park.

Furnish a Bizarre Feature.

Just across Hunter street from Judge Roan's courtroom, where the factory superintendant is fighting to clear his name of the charge of having killed Mary Phagan, Fulton County's magnificent new temple of justice is nearing completion.

But there is still work to be done on the dizzy heights of the upper stories. The men of the building trades are there and their interest in the dramatic court battle that is being waged within a stone's throw of them is as intense as is the interest of any of those who have sat through the tedious days of the hearing constant spectators of the trial.

These builders, from their lofty working place across the street, can peer through the courtroom windows and see the trial as it progresses. They can not hear a word of the evidence. They miss the forensic clashes of the counsel.

Dare Death to Watch.

But still there is not a moment of the time that the case is in progress that life and limb are not risked by these men as they stare into the courtroom.

They can see Frank as he sits through hour after hour of his great ordeal. They can get glimpses of the faces of his wife and mother, of the witnesses as they take the stand, and of the Judge on the bench. They can see the bulky back of Luther Rosser and the energetic gestures of Hugh Dorsey. That is all.

To see these, things they must lean far out from their insecure perches, with death certain if they should fall to the pavement a hundred feet below.

There is but one explanation for their interest. They know a man is fighting for his life in that courtroom across the street.

And while death may have no terrors for them, it has a fascination as subtle as the stare of a serpent's eye to a bird, as strong as the rivets of steel with which they earn their livelihood.

STATE'S SOLE AIM IS TO CONVICT, DEFENSE'S TO CLEAR IN MODERN TRIAL

By O. B. KEELER.

Right in the first jump, please understand that (1) this is merely the opinion of a layman, unlearned in the law; that (2) he may be the only layman in existence who feels this way about it; and (3) the Frank trial is not being singled out in the following comment, except as it is a fair example of the great criminal trials of this country.

* * *

In following the trial of Leo Frank, two points keep prodding me with increasing fervor.

These are the points:

(1) That the prosecution's efforts are centered on producing evidence that will convict Leo Frank.

(2) That the efforts of the defense are devoted to producing evidence that will acquit Leo Frank.

Now, having read thus far, you probably are smiling to yourself at the idea that anybody should undertake to write a newspaper story about a great trial, basing it on such an absurdly simple and obvious observation.

State's Evidence All Damaging.

That (you say) is something everybody knows.

That (you say) is taken for granted.

Nevertheless (I say), that doesn't make it right.

I sat in Judge Roan's courtroom, right at the edge of the jury box, and I heard the State present its case.

Every bit of the State's evidence was damaging to Leo Frank.

If the State of Georgia knew anything good about Leo Frank, or had any evidence that tended to cast a doubt on his guilt of a horrid crime, the State of Georgia kept that information strictly to itself.

I heard the defense begin attacking the evidence offered by the State, and offering (in turn) evidence that tended to show the innocence of Leo Frank.

If the lawyers of the defense knew, down in their hearts, that certain points made by the State were true; if they realized that certain facts were unshakable; if in their investigation they had found certain things that tended to fasten on their client the murder of Mary Phagan—if any of this was in the mind of the defense it did not get out where the jury could see it.

How About Investigation?

Well (you say), it would be a pretty kind of defense that would produce evidence that would hang the defenant. And (you added) isn't that what the State of Georgia pays its prosecutors for?

For what?

Conviction?

Or INVESTIGATION?

That was the most unmerciful of the prodding points.

Of course, now, the State's attorneys in the Phagan case say they believe Frank is guilty, and equally, of course, the lawyers for the defense declare they are convinced of the innocence of their client. But that is always the case in important murder cases, and furthermore, as I have said, I am not talking about the Frank trial as much as about a system of justice.

I asked a lawyer about it; a widely-read and learned lawyer, with something in his head besides the law he has absorbed.

I said:

"Honestly, now—isn't this system of criminal prosecution all wrong? Oughn't the State have investigators instead of prosecutors? Why should the accused have any defending counsel, if the State were not prosecuting, but making a fair and impartial investigation?"

I thought the idea was highly original.

I learned something, right away.

The widely-read and learned lawyer informed me, kindly but firmly, that that was an Original Idea a good many hundred years ago. That it was THE original idea of dealing with criminal cases, in fact. That it was pretty nearly fixed in the basis of good old English law.

He went on to explain that in the early days when a crime was committed, the proper officer—I forget what his title was—the proper officer started an investigation. If a man apparently was implicated by the first evidence brought to light, that man was detained. If he had already "beat it," that was added to the suspicious circumstances against him, and the pursuit began.

But if he was well in hand, and the case was a regular mystery, the investigator for the Crown, or whatever it was, went into that case exactly like a certified accountant examining a set of books suspected by the firm of not being correct.

Auditor Has No Interest.

The auditor doesn't care a whoop whether he finds the suspected bookkeeper guilty or innocent. That is, he has no interest at stake. He is paid for making a correct audit. He is paid by the job. Probably, unless his liver is out of whack, he would rather see the poor bookkeeper cleared. But he has no interest in the matter.

Well, it seems from what the lawyer told me, that was the original plan of criminal prosecution by the State.

The State didn't prosecute. It just investigated. If the facts produced by the investigation warranted a jury in "sticking" the accused, well and good. If the evidence warranted the jury in turning him loose, also well and good.

The accused had no "counsel," the way we understand it. If he was a rich person, or had rich friends, he was privileged to employ an investigator, or investigators, who would assist the public investigator in his investigation.

Hired Help Might Convict.

But it was understood that if the hired help turned up anything damning, the daming thing would be allowed to go ahead and damn as hard as it could, without concealment or mitigation on the part of the assistant investigators.

And now, reverting to the enlightened present, what have we on exhibition?

Not singling out the Frank trial, you understand, but in it, as in every big criminal trial in this country, where the accused is able to employ talented counsel, we have the spectacle of two sets of abl lawyers, fighting each other with all the resources of their learning and shrewdness and ability.

The life and honor of the accused may be at stake—the prosecution, once committed to its task, will seek no evidence but what will incriminate him.

The high claims of justice are at stake—the defense must permit no shred of evidence to be presented, saving only what will tend to clear their client.

And He Didn't Explain Why.

It is no fault of the prosecutor that this is so.

And as to the system?

Well, this is just the opinion of a layman, you remember. It may be that there is a good reason in law why the investigator has become a prosecutor, and is paid as such; and why the defendant may employ expensive counsel to combat the investigation — or prosecution — at all points.

There may be a good reason for all this.

Only, my friend, the lawyer, didn't explain it to me.

Relief for Catarrh Sufferers Now FREE

You Can Now Treat This Trouble in Your Own Home and Get Relief at Once

How the Remedy for Catarrh Was Discovered

By the new method the nose and throat are treated by an effective local remedy applied directly to the affected membranes.

The Elixir, taken into the stomach, has a direct influence upon the mucous membranes of the body and cures the disease by removing the cause.

THIS terrible disease has raged unchecked for years simply because symptoms have been treated while the vicious germs that cause the trouble have been left to circulate in the blood, and bring the disease back as fast as local treatments could relieve it.

C. E. Gauss, who experimented for years on a treatment for Catarrh, found that after perfecting a balm that relieved the nose and throat troubles quickly, he could not prevent the trouble beginning all over again.

On test cases, he could completely remove all signs of Catarrh from nose and throat, but in a few weeks they were back.

Careful experiments and investigations have shown that as the troubles were expelled from the nose and throat, the real cause of the disease was overlooked and in a short time the Catarrh would return stronger than ever. Mr. Gauss has gone way ahead of the ordinary methods of treatment and has provided a remedy that

and immediately gives relief to the nose and throat

He perfected the New Combined Treatment, since admitted to be the logical, sure, scientific method.

Reese Jones, of Scranton, Penn., says that after trying many other treatments, he used this new method and— "My nose is now entirely clear and free and I am not bothered by the disease any more. The New Combined Treatment is worth its weight in gold."

Temporary relief from catarrh may be obtained in other ways, but the New Combined Treatment must inevitably be accepted for permanent results.

Sarah J. Cape, Mount Pelia, Tenn., says, "I suffered the pains and distress of catarrh for thirteen years and needless to state, tried nearly every method. But by your new method I was completely cured and you can not imagine the joy that has come over me."

Trial Treatment FREE

This new method is so important to the welfare of humanity, so vital to every person suffering from any form of catarrh, that the opportunity to actually test it and prove its results, will be gladly extended without one cent of cost.

A large trial treatment, with complete, minute directions, will be sent free to any catarrh-sufferer.

Send no money, take no risks, make no promises. Simply clip, sign and mail the coupon and the test package of the New Combined Treatment will be sent fully prepaid, together with the valuable book on Catarrh.

Q. Do you know the number of his car?—A. No, but I recognized it by its dark color.

Q. How many dark-colored cars are there in the city?—A. Well, the street car struck this one and impressed it upon me. I found out later——

Hooper—Wait a minute. I am not asking what you found out later.

Arnold—Mr. Loeb, you found out later that it was Mr. Hinchey's car, did you not?—A. I did.

Hooper—I object.

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

The witness was excused and Henry Smith, another employee of the pencil factory was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What department are you in?—A. Metal room.

Q. Do you know a man named Barrett?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he ever say anything about getting a reward if Frank was convicted?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say about it?—A. He said he would get the first hook of about $4,300 because he found the blod and hair.

Q. Anything else?—A. Well, when he passed me he would play like he was counting money.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Has he ever spent any of that imaginary money?—A. No.

Q. Did that take him by the water cooler near the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he bleed there?—A. Yes.

Plan to Show Conley Lied About Watching.

Q. Mr. Montag, who occupied that first floor up to January 1?—A. The Clark Woodenware Company.

Q. What did the pencil company have to do with it?—A. Nothing, except as an entrance and to use the elevator.

Q. Where were the offices of the woodenware company?—A. In the front of the building.

The defense regards this evidence as extremely important to show that Conley lied about watching for Frank at the front door. They showed by Montag that the pencil company had nothing to do with this floor except as an entrance.

The model of the factory was again brought in to demonstrate the witness' statement.

Rosser—Let's take Sunday morning. Have you a telephone at your home?—A. Yes, about 20 feet from my bed.

Q. Were you aroused by the telephone Sunday morning?—A. No, but my wife was, and she told me someone wanted to speak to me.

Q. What did the voice say?—A. A man wanted to know if I could identify a girl who had been killed in the factory. I referred him to Mr. Darley, who then and now has charge of the help.

Q. Did Mr. Frank come to your home?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you of what had happened and that he had been routed out of bed without any breakfast?

Dorsey—I object to that.

Judge Roan—You can bring out the fact that the witness talked with him, but not what he said.

A. Yes, he told me about him.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. No more nervous than I was when he explained to me what had happened.

Dorsey—I must object again. That is irrelevant.

The objection was sustained.

Q. Was Mr. Frank nervous?—A. Yes; naturally he was nervous in telling of this terrible crime.

Q. Were you nervous?—A. I was.

Q. How did your wife take the news?—A. She was very much agitated and cried.

Q. Were there any accidents when you used the building the pencil factory is in?—A. Yes; a great many.

Q. Where were the injured people taken?—A. To the front office.

Q. They would have to go down those stairs, wouldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you hear of Frank being taken to headquarters by the police?—A. Monday.

Calls Frank's Acquaintance Limited.

Q. You have known Frank for a good while. Was his acquaintance large or limited?—A. I would call it limited.

Q. Knowing he had a limited acquaintance, what did you do?—A. I called Mr. Haas, my personal friend.

Q. What did he do?—A. He went to the police station to see Frank. Mr. Haas came back and said he couldn't see Frank.

Dorsey—I object. Are you going to let that go in?

Judge Roan—Yes, it explains the conduct of this man.

Q. Well, what did you do then?—A. Mr. Haas telephoned Mr. Rosser.

Q. What time was that?—A. 11 or 12 o'clock.

Q. What time did he get there?—A. About 40 minutes later.

Judge Roan at this point read to Mr. Dorsey the rule that made this evidence admissible.

Q. You don't know what happened upstairs?—A. No.

Q. How long before Frank left was it after I got there?—A. You got there about 40 or 50 minutes after Mr. Rosser.

Q. Who was with him?—A. Detective Black and Mr. Haas.

Q. You receive those financial sheets, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get it that Monday?—A. About 2 o'clock.

Q. Was that financial sheet brought you before or after you got that message about detectives?—A. After.

Q. Who called you?—A. Mr. Schiff. He wanted to know whether I would sanction the employment of detectives and I told him certainly.

Q. Did you give any instructions? A. Yes, I told him to give the authorities every assistance.

Q. Did you know that Miss Hall, the stenographer, anticipated the raise in her salary before the murder?—A. I don't employ the stenographer and would not have known.

Frank's Friends Not Around Police Station.

Q. In this patent litigation with the American Pencil Company he came in contact with a number of attorneys, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. He was president of the B'nai Brith Society and came in contact with lots of people in that organization, did he not?—A. Yes he came in contact with the members, I suppose, I never went to the meetings.

Q. How many members are there?—A. Four or five hundred.

Q. What did you mean by telling the jury he had a limited acquaintance?—A. I meant the people he knew would not be around the police station.

Q. Did Frank ask for a lawyer?—A. No.

Q. Did he ask for the Pinkertons?—A. I only know what Mr. Schiff said.

Q. Did he explain to you why he was nervous?—A. Yes, he said they took him into a dark room and suddenly turned a light on the girl's body.

Q. Did he say he saw the body?—A. He described it.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said her face was scratched, her eye bruised, and her tongue out. I don't remember anything else.

Q. You can't remember all of it?—A. I said I couldn't remember all. Now do not twist what I say.

Arnold—He will if you don't watch him.

Dorsey—I submit that the remark of Attorney Arnold is improper and should be stricken from the record. It is untrue.

Judge Roan—I sustain you.

Charges Dorsey With Heckling Witnesses.

Arnold—It is true and proper and I call for the records to sustain me. The whole trouble is that the Solicitor quarrels with the witnesses instead of cross-examining them.

Dorsey—All I want is for your honor to rule him out of order

Judge Roan—I have. Mr. Dorsey, go on. Let's not be interrupted by quarreling.

Q. Did you mention to him the fact that he was nervous?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything about being asked to go to police headquarters?—A. No.

Q. Who made the trade about paying the attorney?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't agree to pay Mr. Rosser's fee?—A. No.

Q. No part of it?—A. No.

Q. All you agreed to pay was the Pinkertons?—A. Yes.

Q. Have they been paid?

Rosser—I object to that, your honor.

Dorsey—Your honor, I want to show that these people have made frequent demands for their money and have not gotten it. I want to show the bias on the part of this witness.

Judge Roan—You can ask it.

Q. Have the Pinkertons been paid?—A. No.

Q. Have they asked for the money?—A. No, but they sent two or three bills.

Q. You haven't paid them, have you?—A. No.

Q. You got a report from the Pinkertons daily, didn't you?—A. Practically.

Q. Now, when did you hear about the finding of the stick?—A. When I read it in the report.

Read First of Stick Being Found.

Q. Now, did you tell Mr. Pierce, of the Pinkertons, not to report the finding of the stick and envelope to the police?—A. I did not.

Q. How long after this tragedy was it that the insurance company made you clean up that factory?—A. Some time within the week.

Q. You were in the factory on June 14 with a number of detectives, were you not?—A. I don't remember the day.

Q. Did you telephone the residence of W. D. Brown, a livery stable man, on the afternoon of April 26 that you wanted a horse and buggy?—A. I did not.

At this time court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

Q. Were you accustomed to go to the Frank home to play cards?—A. Yes, I have been there frequently.

Q. Did you notice Frank particularly on that occasion?—A. No, but he did not appear at all unnatural.

Q. How long did you sit in the game?—A. About an hour.

Q. How did you come out?—A. I don't remember.

The witness was excused and Mrs. Emil Selig was recalled to the stand.

Attorney Arnolds—On the Sunday following Memorial Day, Mrs. Selig, did you, your husband, Mrs. Frank or anybody say that Frank was caught at his office with a girl, or anything like it?—A. Absolutely no.

Q. On Tuesday, did you hear Mrs. Ersenbach tell Mrs. Frank it was mighty bad?—A. No.

Q. On Sunday did Mrs. Frank say to you that Mr. Frank was drunk and did not rest well and made her sleep on the floor?—A. No.

Arnold took the witness on redirect examination.

Q. Has the married life of Mr. and Mrs. Frank been happy?—A. Exceedingly happy.

Dorsey: "Your honor, I object to that as wholly irrelevant."

Rosser: "It is just about as irrelevant as those questions he asked about her visits to the jail. If I married a virago and she never went to see me, what would it indicate about my guilt? On the other hand, if my wife loved me truly, and with the manhood that every man ought to possess I tried to keep her away from seeing me in jail, what would that show? Where is our common sense? To what limits of suspicion are we going? (Aside)): By George, I am going to keep my feet on the ground, at least."

Dorsey: "Your honor, these are very important circumstances. I want to go further and show that Frank sent for her."

Judge Roan: "I rule it all out—her visits and their married life."

GIRLS FLOCK TO TRIAL OF DIGGS AS SLAVER

Marsha Warrington Again Grilled Concerning Trip to Reno and Life There.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 14.—Only 30 minutes further cross-examination was permitted to-day by Federal Judge Van Fleet, when Marsha Warrington, the 20-year-old Sacramento girl, resumed the stand against Maury I. Diggs, former State Architect, on trial charged with violating the white slave law. The girl was extremely worn out by the grilling she underwent yesterday at the hands of Attorney Nat Coghlan, chief counsel for Diggs. The girl was forced to relate every misdeed she could remember during the last year.

Before she was permitted to begin her story to-day Judge Van Fleet looked around the crowded room and said: "I see there are some very young girls in the courtroom. I want to ask whether they are accompanied by their parents."

Several girls who appeared to be under 20, nodded their heads anxiously.

"Very well," said the court, "the parents can take the responsibility for your being here."

Miss Warrington began her testimony by declaring that after the separation of the party at Reno, she had no intention of ever seeing Diggs again, and that she had made no arrangement with him to meet after they were brought back to California.

"I went because I was afraid not to go," replied Miss Warrington.

DIVORCED WOMAN A SUICIDE.

COLUMBUS.—Mrs. Lula Burton, 16 years of age, committed suicide by drinking carbolic acid. It is believed despondency was the cause. She had been divorced.

HAIR CAME OUT IN BUNCHES

Route No. 3, Box 20A, Broken Arrow, Okla. — "My trouble began with an itching of the scalp of my head. My scalp at first became covered with flakes of dandruff which caused me to scratch and this caused a breaking out here and there on the scalp. It became so irritated until I could not rest at night and my hair would come out in bunches and became short and rough.

"Everything I used would cause it to grow worse and it continued that way for about three or four years. While reading the paper I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a sample. It proved so good that I decided to get some more. I used them as directed and in two weeks I saw a good effect. Now my hair is longer and looks better than I have ever known it to be. I give all the credit of my cure of scalp trouble to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Ella Sheffield, Nov. 30, 1912.

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

CANDLER WOULD SELL EUROPE COCA-COLA

An invasion of Europe with Coca-Cola is being contemplated by Asa G. Candler, who Thursday returned to his offices after an extended trip abroad.

"Europe," he said, "has taken a sudden fancy for soft drinks. Ten years ago I sent a man abroad to study the field, and his report was not encouraging, but now things look so promising that we are considering seriously—I do not want to say too much, because no decision has been reached—but we are considering a vigorous campaign abroad.

Europe "Tempting Field."

"Ice, you know, is not served generally as here. One must ask for it even in the best hotels. But Europe all at once has found out that iced drinks are good, and wants them. It is a very tempting field."

"I am just as cheerful as I was when I left here," said Mr. Candler, when reminded of his optimistic interview in Hearst's Sunday American on the eve of his departure, in which he remarked that he saw nothing but prosperity ahead for Atlanta. Mr. Candler reasserted that he sees no cause for changing his opinion.

"Europe is full of American buyers; I met them everywhere," he continued. "They are buying extensive lines, they tell me, and have every confidence they will sell their goods at profitable prices.

Tourists Prove Cash Plentiful.

"The flood of American tourists in Europe shows, too, that there can be no particular shortage of funds, for travel in Europe is pay, pay, pay.

"Financial conditions abroad are disturbed because of the talk of a war which never will happen, and because of the Balkan war, which actually has burned up great amounts of money.

"Europe must look to America as Israel did to Egypt in Bible days for corn.

Impressed by Immigrants.

"I was impressed most by the tide of immigration to America. On the Caronia alone were 1,200 emigrants from Europe. What will we do with these people? Will we make them like ourselves or will they mold us? Europe looks to its past, America to its future. What will this future be? That is the most interesting thing I have to think about as a result of my trip.

"Trite as it may be I must say that I was glad all the while to be an American, and I saw nothing abroad ahead of Atlanta."

President Decides to Dismiss Envoy Wilson.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, it is said, will be dismissed summarily from the diplomatic service of the United States as soon as the State Department verifies the authenticity of the statement of the British Foreign Office relative to its attitude toward Mexico upon which the Ambassador based his criticism.

Senator Bacon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, was called into conference by Secretary of State Bryan to-day on the question of who will carry word to the Senate of the projected action of the department before it is announced officially.

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan, it is said, held a 30-minute conference to-day at which it was decided that Ambassador Wilson should be dismissed without delay and the course of action outlined above was determined upon.

House Defeats Bill Giving Risk Firms Investment Liberty

A bill designed to enable insurance companies to invest their funds without the consent and approval of the Comptroller General was defeated in the House of Representatives Thursday morning, by a vote of 70 to 64. A motion to reconsider, by Ledbetter, of Polk, was defeated 84 to 33. Mr. Ledbetter's intention, he stated, was to table the bill.

The original bill passed by the Senate provided that the investments should consist of United States bonds or real estate, and that loans could be made on "real estate acquired for office purposes." The bill limited the investments to 10 per cent, the $30,000 limitation being added after the bill reached the House.

LYNCH OBJECTS TO AFFILIATION

NASHVILLE, Aug. 14.—The appearance of George L. Berry, head of the International Pressmen's Union, for an address before the International Typographical Union to-day, was the occasion of great applause from the anti-administrationists, Berry and President Lynch, of the I. T. U., having been regarded as enemies since the Chicago pressmen's strike.

Berry took to task selfish labor leaders who only looked out for their own interest and said that the difficulty was that there were too many separate and distinct trades unions. He pleaded for a closer affiliation of the five unions of the printing industry.

It was with some heat that President Lynch replied to President Berry's proposition of closer affiliation. He said he wanted to know what this affiliation was to be before he would agree to anything of the kind. He did not want the Typographical Union placed in the attitude of becoming involved in difficulties without having a say on the original trouble. He criticised Berry for the action of the pressmen in making a contract with the United Typothetae of America when the I. T. U. plead with them at the Rochester convention not to do so. On the other hand, he said, he had served notice on the American Newspaper Association time and again that he would stand by the pressmen if the newspapers sought to dissolve the pressmen's union.

Lynch said he would not stand for any affiliation that was under the control of the American Federation of Labor.

Berry's address was referred to the committee on allied printing trades unions.

SONG SERVICE AT LAST SESSION OF HOUSE

Members Warble Camp Meeting Hymns While Waiting for Appropriations Measure.

With nothing to do but wait for the Senate to conclude its consideration of the appropriations bill, the House of Representatives convened for the final session of the year at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, with the members intent on having a good time and showing their prowess in the world of song. Just prior to adjournment Thursday morning James of Gilmer County was chosen "official song-h'lster," and he will start the ball rolling on all the old-time hymns. He will be assisted by Bob Blackburn, of Fulton County, who, though small in stature, has a voice that would be a credit to an elephant.

Blackburn has been rehearsing the choir—or the "gang," as he calls it—for several days, and after the House adjourned Thursday morning he put the finishing touches to his work. "'Tis the Old-Time Religion" is the favorite hymn of the members, and parodies ringing in the names of Speaker Burwell, the Rules Committee and prominent members of the House have been arranged for the concert.

House Work Is Completed.

The House Thursday morning practically concluded its work, with the exception of receiving the appropriations bill from the Senate. The measures passed were all Senate measures, and most of them passed the House without a fight. Those that met defeat were as follows:

A bill providing that trust companies may be county administrators.

A bill to authorize judges to revise the jury lists of the smaller counties yearly instead of every two years.

The latter bill developed the greatest fight of the morning. Wisdom, of Forsyth led the fight in favor of the bill, declaring that the smaller counties have as much right to have their jury lists revised annually as the larger ones. Representative Hardeman declared, in a speech opposing the bill, that it was an attempt to induce the House to settle a political dispute in Gilmer County and the Blue Ridge Judicial District. Smith, of Fannin, also opposed the bill, while Moss, of Cobb, and Darrough, of Franklin, favored it.

Many Senate Bills Passed.

The following bills of general importance, already passed by the Senate, were passed by the House:

A bill to provide for safety signboards at certain designated points along railroad tracks.

A bill to amend the portion of the code relating to the boards of directors of navigation companies, so the directors can number not less than three nor more than fifteen.

A bill to amend section 414 of the penal code of 1910, so as to permit the running of freight trains on Sunday.

A bill to provide for the maintenance of approaches to bridges on county lines.

Two companion bills regulating the calling out of the State militia by the Governor, and providing that the Sheriff of the county to which they are called shall command them, were tabled on motion of Shuptrine, of Chatham, killing them for this session.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Barbecue to Celebrate Road Work.

Now that Marietta street repaving is completed from the center of the city to the Chattahoochee River, thoughts of the projectors of this improvement have turned to the monster barbecue which has been planned to celebrate the completion of the work. This outing was first planned for July 4, but was postponed until early in September. The place will be either the river or Howell Station. City officials, real estate men and County Commissioners will be invited and the Marietta street property owners will be the hosts.

Since Marietta street is the direct line between the center of Atlanta and most of Cobb County, it will now be the leading thoroughfare for a large part of the country traffic that has used Peachtree, and will save about a mile and a half in distance over the old route. Travelers who have been using Pace's Ferry road to Peachtree will now turn into Howell Mill road from Pace's Ferry, and thence into Marietta street. Howell Mill road will be finished in about ten days, and then the convicts will be put on Ivy street.

Most of the credit for the repaving of Marietta street and the reclamation of a large part of the Fifth Ward is due W. Tom Winn, formerly City Councilman and now County Commissioner, who started the fight four years ago in Council. So appreciative was one local real estate man that he suggested a monument be erected to Mr. Winn.

Lots Bring $25,200.

J. R. Smith and W. D. Manley, owners, have sold through Dr. Joel T. Daves and John H. Maddox, of the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency, 63 lots at East Point, on Main street and Eubanks, Harrison, Maryland and Pennsylvania avenues, to a client, for $25,200, or $400 per lot. Five of these are improved, and the new owner will improve the balance with small houses costing a total of about $46,400.

The lots average 50 by 150 feet.

Many New Residences.

Announcement was made Thursday of many new residences which will soon be built in Peachtree Heights Park, the E. Rivers subdivision to the west of Peachtree road and a few hundred yards north of Peachtree Creek.

Mr. Rivers next spring will start the erection of a $30,000 two-story residence on a 6-acre tract on Wesley avenue near the homes of Clark Howell and General Clifford L. Anderson. Mr. Rivers has combined two 100-foot lots, and his tract widens at the rear. His location is on the north side of the thoroughfare, half a block from the junction of Habersham drive and a few hundred yards west of Peachtree. In this immediate neighborhood is the newly started home of Hunt Chipley.

F. P. Ayers has bought lot 10 of block 16 in Peachtree Heights Park, 100 by 400 feet on Wesley avenue, and will build a handsome residence.

Edgar Watkins has bought on Rivers road lot 19 of block 11, 2 1-2 acres with 150 feet of frontage, and will likewise build. Mr. Watkins lives on West Peachtree, and he is expected soon to sell his present home.

Mrs. Margaret C. McGovern has bought lot 12 of block 10 on the same road, 100 by 275 feet, and will build.

Mrs. Lily C. Beall owns lot 9 of block 9 on North Muscogee avenue, and she will also erect a home in the near future.

Sam H. Pegram will start in a few days the erection of his house at the southeast corner of Muscogee avenue and Rivers road, and E. R. Kirk is building on Andrews avenue. Others who will soon move to the country in this subdivision are J. Bulow Campbell, E. Lee Worsham and David Woodward.

Mrs. Brenner has broken ground for a two-story brick veneer dwelling on the east side of Peachtree near Mayson's avenue and directly south of E. Anthony's home.

Interesting Small Sales.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company report the sale for Mrs. M. E. Broom to Mrs. Nora E. Bennett of a house and lot, 50 by 150 feet, on John Wesley avenue, College Park, for $2,500, and the following in their Howell Mill road subdivision:

To J. J. Campbell, a 54 by 145-foot lot on Belle Meade avenue, $600; to C. G. Moore, R. H. Vance and A. L. Nicholson, same.

Marietta Store Lot Sold.

J. T. Stover has bought from a client of the A. J. & H. F. West real estate agency a cottage on Gordon street, West End, south of Georgia avenue, for $2,500, and the West agency reports the sale for H. F. West to Dr. W. E. Beckham of a 25 by 100 foot store property on Marietta street, near Hampton street, for $2,000, and the resale of the same to J. Frank Beck.

Satisfactory Strength Test.

Building Inspector Ed R. Hays has reported the most satisfactory strength test for concrete beams ever made in Atlanta. This was for the beams of the Red Men's new wigwam at No. 86 Central avenue, which supported at the middle a freight car of cement, a car of sand and a lot of hollow tile—160,000 pounds—with maximum of one-fourth of an inch deflection in 24 hours. The wigwam, says Mr. Hays, has the longest between-support beams in the city. Longer beams are in the Forsyth Theater, but they differ in that they are built after the cantilever system.

More Apartments Rented.

Henry Inman and Oscar Elsas have leased housekeeping apartments in the Ponce DeLeon through Albert S. Adams, of the B. M. Grant Real Estate Agency, and Albert Howell will also be quartered there. Mr. Elsas has placed his Washington street home on the market. The leases which H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have signed are for three years.

MOORE ATTORNEY EXPLAINS CHARGE

O. C. Hancock, prominent attorney of Macon, in a letter to The Georgian, declares that the allegations in his suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore, a Baptist minister of Andersonville, formerly of Macon, do not support the sensational statements that the pastor extorted $1,500 from his own brother as a price for silence in court as to his brother's alleged intimacy with Mrs. Moore. Here is the letter:

Editor of The Atlanta Georgian:

Certain publications in reference to my suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore have done me and several of his brothers an injustice. In the first place, the allegations in my suit do not support the sensational statements published in the newspapers.

There had been rumors connecting the name of Mrs. E. T. Moore with that of L. V. Moore, a brother of her husband, but my suit did not allege that. It was stated in the press merely that the charges involved a brother of E. T. Moore, without giving any initials of that brother, which, of course, directed public attention to men against whom not even any suspicion had been cast.

My fee was settled, and I trust that the incident has been closed.

Very truly yours,
O. C. HANCOCK.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE HAS NOT PUT OIL LETTERS BEFORE LOBBY PROBERS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 14.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Slayer Freed Under $5,000 Bonds Raised By Engineer Friends

W. D. Partee, the Georgia Railroad engineer who killed another engineer, Sam Jackson, a short while ago, was released from the Tower Thursday morning under a $5,000 bond, furnished by a number of engineers, friends of Partee. Bond was granted by Judge J. T. Pendleton following application for bail by Partee. A plea of self-defense was made.

The killing grew out of remarks which Jackson was quoted as saying about Partee being familiar with another engineer's wife. Her husband went to Partee and the two of them started in search of Jackson. They met near the Georgia Railroad roundhouse and the shooting followed, Jackson being killed almost instantly.

A number of Partee's friends were at the Tower Thursday morning to greet him on his release from the Tower.

Angry Bachelors to 'Strike' Because of Tax; Girls With 'Em

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

REIZ, REUSS, Aug. 14.—A "general strike" of the eligible bachelors is threatened here to-day because of the State tax placed on those who should marry but won't.

"We men must stand together," is the slogan of the 50-odd bachelors' associations, organized to oppose the laying of the tax. And the girls, most of them, are with the men, declaring they are perfectly capable of looking after the selecting of a life partner.

The latest development is th preparation of a ptition by marriagable young women of Reuss begging for the remission of taxation on the ground that the Government's action is removing their only hope of escaping spinsterhood.

COCHRAN DENIES OPPOSING REFORM

Voted Against Tax Bill Out of Hate for "Spy System," Not to Aid Candidacy, He Says.

Ralph O. Cochran, member of the Georgia Legislature and candidate for United States Senator, in a statement issued Thursday made denial of the accusations hedeclared appeared in a morning newspaper concerning his attitude toward school appropriations and tax equalization.

"The feature that I regret," the statement declares, "is the insinuation that I cast my votes this way on account of my candidacy for the United States Senate. I wish to say that I would have voted just as I have done.

"The assertion that I opposed equalization in all the forms in which it has been presented is not true. I have uniformly been opposed to the State board and spy system that has become a part of this law. And when I voted for a 7 per cent reduction on the appropriations for the University of Georgia and the Technological School, my vote was for the same reduction in the common school fund of the State as well. I did not discriminate.

"The hue and cry has been to get the State out of debt, and it occurred to me that it would be wise to concur in the Senate amendments and hold the appropriations down for the next two years."

FIND MAIL STOLEN THREE YEARS AGO

Letters Uncovered by Workmen Between Walls of the Depot at Decatur.

Remodeling of the Georgia Railroad depot in Decatur has served to partially clear up a series of mail robberies three years old.

In 1910, about the time Agnes Scott College opened for the year, letters addressed to college officials and students and citizens of Decatur began to disappear. Some of them contained checks and money orders, and complaints by the hundred were filed. Postoffice inspectors worked, but could find no clew, and the investigation was finally given up as hopeless.

But the other day workmen at the depot found all the missing letters stacked behind the plastering. A hole large enough to admit a man's hand was found. Through this hole the letters had been placed between the plastering and the outer wall. Some of the letters still contained checks. The letters had all been opened.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the postmaster, is now engaged in forwarding the long-delayed letters to the addressees. She is writing a note of explanation to accompany each letter.

The theory has been advanced that the letters were taken by some railway mail clerk and handed out to a trusted confederate in Decatur, who would extract what money and negotiable paper he would find and then place the letters in hiding behind the plastering in the depot.

There is no clew to the guilty parties.

SENATE WILL RESTORE $280,000 EXCESS OVER REVENUE TO BUDGET

With the close of the 1913 session of the General Assembly but a few hours away, Senate leaders Thursday morning, following a conference with Governor Slaton, decided to recede from the Senate's action on appropriations, thereby restoring the $280,000 excess of disbursements over revenues. This action will be concurred in probably in a night session Thursday.

The decision to recede was made on indirect recommendation of Governor Slaton, who, according to his own statement, will have sufficient revenues to more than balance the $280,000 deficit.

"The silver lining has been removed from behind the dark clouds," said the Governor after the conference, "and I am now prepared to announce that the State Treasury will have more than enough to make up the difference as appropriated by the House and rejected by the Senate.

Governor Lauds Assembly.

"I am exceedingly pleased to be able to make this announcement, and in this connection I wish to congratulate the legislators for they work which they have performed. At times there have been differences, but in the end everything has worked out satisfactorily and all the huge financial obstacles which loomed up before us in the early part of the session have been removed. I feel sincerely that the lawmakers of the State may go to their homes with the knowledge that they have done a good summer's work that will redound to the glory and add to the progress of the State and her people."

According to the Governor's figures, the State Treasurer will have something like $500,000 in current revenues to meet over the $280,00 deficiency which was passed by the House and then rejected by the Senate.

The Senate Thursday prepared for action on appropriations in the closing sesison. Among the bills which were passed was the inheritance tax measure, sent over from the House. The vote was unanimous. The House automobile tax law, appropriating the fees annually collected to the road fund of the State, also was passed after spirited debate in which an amendment of the Senate committee giving the funds to the general State fund was defeated. The bill giving the custody of the child to the mother also was passed in a 30-minute extension of the morning session.

Hart Granted Privileges.

Upon motion of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-fourth, the Senate indorsed a resolution agreeing to allow Tax Collector Hart to continue his services as an attorney for the State in suits against certain railroads before the Supreme Court. Mr. Hart's nomination will be confirmed by both Houses Thursday afternoon.

Preparations for passage of final bills had no monopoly on the time and attention of the Senators, who are much perturbed over the controversy between Senator McNeill and the Commissioner of Agriculture. Outwardly everything is smooth, but the Senators are free in discussing the matter among themselves.

The controversy, which almost ended in a serious cutting affray between the Macon Senator and the Commissioner, took place Wednesday afternoon in President Anderson's private room in the Senate Chamber.

McNeill and Price Quarrel.

According to eyewitnesses, Senator McNeill met Mr. Price in the room just after taking part in a heated debate on the bill to provide for the printing of the agricultural bulletins.

"Well, you got your bill through, you old lobbyist," said Senator McNeill to Mr. Price in a spirit of levity.

"Yes, but your statement on the floor of the Senate was not exactly true."

It was here, the eyewitnesses say, that the fireworks started, Senator McNeill inquiring of the Commissioner as to whether or not he (Price) intended to call him a liar.

Price, it is said, repeated his statement in substance, whereupon Senator McNeill drew his knife, at the same time telling Price that he would "cut his throat." Dr. W. C. Bryant grabbed the Senator's arm and drew him back. The Senator broke away, it is said, but was persuaded from going further by a number of Senators who had gathered.

It is understood that both Senator McNeill and Mr. Price are willing to let the matter drop where it is.

Primary Bill Goes Over.

Following a spectacular filibuster led by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, the Senate late Wednesday afternoon postponed action on the proposed primary bill until next session. This bill was killed Wednesday morning, but was resurrected by its friends, including Senator Tarver, in the afternoon. After a sharp parliamentary skirmish Senator Harrell succeeded in getting the floor, whereupon he blandly announced that he intended to stay there until the hour of adjournment. The Senator filibustered for a half hour when the supporters of the bill decided to stop the flow of oratory by agreeing to postpone action on the bill until next year.

The Senate also adopted the House resolution providing for a commission to investigate school book conditions in Georgia with an amendment. A resolution giving the Governor the power to act in the Ducktown copper matter was also passed, as was the bill creating a commission form of government for Columbus.

A sale of undermuslins to live long in the memory of Atlanta women!

There is no fair way to compare it with any that they have ever been invited to. The woman who knows Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose values at regular prices need not be told what to expect in the way of sheer fabrics, of soft laces and dainty embroideries.

What an opportunity, then, it is for women in general, for brides-to-be in particular, even for brides-to-be within six months or a year!

Read on!

Gowns

Formerly $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $2.25, $2.50 to $3.00, are $1.25

Formerly $3.25, $3.50 to $5.00, are $1.59

Those now 95c show yokes and sleeves trimmed with shadow, imitation cluny and round thread laces; short sleeves, slip-over styles. Those now $1.25 are more elaborate, many with Empire yokes, medallions of embroidery surrounded by fine laces. Those now $1.59 have exquisite French valenciennes and shadow lace trimmings. Some are hand-embroidered. The nainsook is a wonderfully soft sheer fabric.

Princess Slips

Formerly 95c to $1.00, are 69c

Formerly $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.98

At 69c you may choose from a number of serviceable and neatly trimmed styles with linen laces in both the yokes and the flounces. Many of those at 95c have imitation Irish crochet laces in yokes and flounces. Others round thread and cluny laces and embroideries, ribbon-run—a fine variety. Those at $1.98 are truly charming affairs made dainty with fine laces and ribbon-run embroidery. All are flat trimmed and narrow.

French Combinations that were $7.50 to $15.00 are marked now, $2.98. Corset Cover and Circular Cut Drawers. The hand-embroidery---done only as the French can---is in eyelet and floral designs. Some are trimmed with hand-made cluny laces.

Petticoats

Formerly $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50, are 69c

Formerly $2.00, $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.59

Many of those at 69c are the straight petticoats with narrow flounces of embroidery that women want for wear under the princess slip. Others show wider and more elaborate flounces of ribbon-run embroideries. Those at $1.59 are notable values, even in this sale—the materials would cost much more than the $1.59. Any number of lace and embroidery trimmed styles and one is as pretty as another. Also at this price are sheer mull petticoats in pink, light blue and lavender, trimmed with laces and satin rosettes.

Princess Slips

Formerly $7.50 to $15.00 (French) are $3.25

Formerly $7.50 to $12.00 (American Made) are $3.25

The French hand-made slips are reduced to this extremely low price because the skirts are wider than is now the vogue, but the smart women will quickly see how to convert them into the narrow style and save a hand-embroidered flounce for another. The hand-embroidery is beautifully worked. The American-made slips are elaborate with fine laces and embroideries and ribbons, in yokes, in panels, in flounces, cluny, filet and valenciennes lace.

French hand-made petticoats that were $10.00 to $25.00, are now $6.98. The embroidery is in floral and eyelet designs. They are the wide skirts that you will doubtless cut down. Only a few of these.

HUERTA'S BLUFF CALLED; HEARS ENVOY LIND

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—Special Envoy John Lind, sent here on a diplomatic mission by President Wilson, finally has established direct communication with President Huerta despite Huerta's repeated announcements that he would not recognize Lind as an Ambassador or receive him officially.

It was learned here to-day that Foreign Minister Gamboa is the agency through which Mr. Lind was able to communicate with President Huerta, although it is not known whether or not Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy has presented the note brought by Mr. Lind from the State Department.

It has begun to appear that Huerta's bluff of defiance has been called. No steps have been taken by the Mexican Government for the expulsion of Mr. Lind, although President Huerta declared this would be done. Indications are that Lind's presence will be tolerated, although the Government will not go out of its way to assist him in bringing peace.

"The result of that fight, which was an overwhelming victory for the Government, proves conclusively that we are able to maintain our own," said Blyanquet. "The Government forces are winning in every section of the republic, and we will soon be able to restore peace without outside aid.

"Despite all the hindrances thrown in our way by the United States Government, we have been making progress since Victoriano Huerta was elected President. President Huerta is a constructive executive. In addition to restoring peace he is building up a strong diplomatic corps abroad and is inviting the investment of foreign capital."

Mrs. Lind, wife of the envoy, who was indisposed upon her arrival here, has recovered. Her ailment arose chiefly from fear for her husband's safety.

Ambassador Lind now has headquarters at the United States Embassy.

Diaz to Offer Valuable Concessions to Japanese.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—It was learned here to-day from an authentic source that Colonel Felix Diaz, en route to Japan to thank Japan for taking part in the Mexican centennial, carries with him a proposal for valuable concessions to Japan upon the west coast.

The Government hopes to establish a big Japanese colony in Sinaloa and Sonora, where small farms will be conferred upon each immigrant who promises to remain in the republic and respect its laws. Marine and fishing concessions will be offered to a Japanese Government steamship line and a big depot for coaling ships may be built near Guayamas.

The Foreign Department is striving to get on familiar relations with Japan for a number of reasons. The principal one, it is pointed out, is that Mexico's ranks of workers have been decimated by war and labor is needed here.

Fresh capital is sought and it is believed that Japanese are as efficient as any others in opening up the country's resources.

Envoy Wilson Regarded As Deliberate Meddler.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The sensational re-entrance of Henry Lane Wilson into the Mexican situation has brought the administration face to face with the dilemma of either discharging the Ambassador at once or of ignoring his attacks on the British Foreign Office, which, coming from a man still a member of the American diplomatic service, is unprecedented. Ambassador Wilson's statement is regarded in administration circles as a deliberate attempt to muddle a situation which was beginning to clear satisfactorily.

The progress Envoy Lind has been making in Mexico City in bringing about a condition of affairs favorable to the presentation of the President's proposal is taken to mean that he has all the qualifications of a trained diplomat for the difficult task in which he is now engaged. The feeling is growing that the risk of serious trouble with Mexico over his entrance into the treacherous arena of Mexican politics has passed.

State Department officials refuse to say whether they expect Mr. Lind to call on President Huerta to-day, although there is a strong impression that he will do so.

Rip! Rip! Pretty Girl Blushes and Faints

DENVER, Aug. 14. — Downtown streets were congested to-day when thousands of people thronged the business section to greet the Knights Templar Conclave vicitors this week.

One incident was quite embarrassing to a pretty girl and her escort.

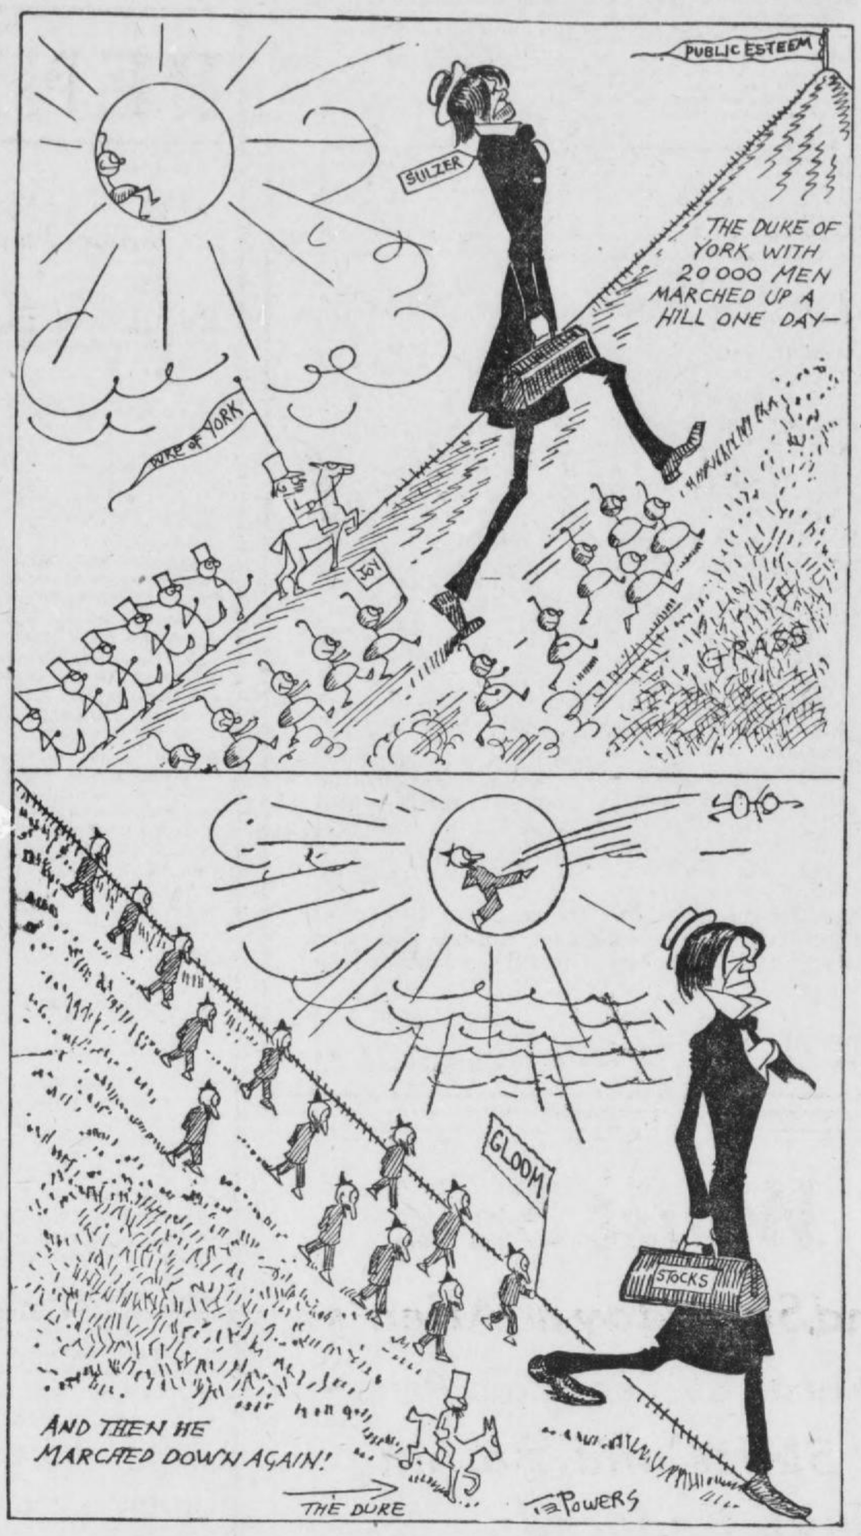

The two found themselves wedged hopelessly in the crowd. The man tried to free his companion, and as he grasped her hands and pulled something ripped.

In a moment what had been the girl's skirt lay limp and loose at her feet. She fainted.

Policemen forced the men to fall back, and the young woman's escort considerately and blushingly wrapped his coat around her.

Bulgarians Stirring Mutiny Among Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—Three Bulgarian army officers were arrested by Turks in Adrianople to-day charged with being spies. Word was received by the War Office to-day that documents had been found on the prisoners showing that they were trying to create a mutiny in the Turkish army. They will be court-martialed.

These arrests and the information which they disclosed showed that Bulgaria will not remain passive so long as Turkey is in possession of Adrianople.

Militant Firebugs Taunt Government

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Firebrands among the young militant suffragettes extended their depredations to the Isle of Man to-day. Laxey Glen Gardens were destroyed by fire, with a loss of $25,000.

The women left placards scattered about the ruins taunting the Government for its inability to find the women who have been carrying on an organized campaign of incendiarism.

Southeast Georgia Crops in Fine Shape

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Farmers in this section are complaining of the hot, dry winds, which they say will prove disastrous to the cotton crop if they continue long. The crop is in splendid condition and with several more well distributed rains this section will make a splendid yield.

Augusta received more than 500,000 bales of cotton in 1911, and this year expects to receive about the same amount.

CHARLTON IS TAKEN TO ITALY FOR TRIAL

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Dapper and self-possessed, Porter Charlton, who confessed murdering his wife in their villa at Lake Como, Italy, June 10, 1910, started for Italy, where he must stand trial. Two officers of the Royal Italian Carabineers took young Charlton on board the liner Rea d'Italia at the York street pier.

Charlton was in a happy mood apparently. Only once did he display any emotion. That was when he bade good-bye to his uncle, John Charlton, in the Hudson County jail. The young prisoner sobbed as he wrung his uncle's hand.

"I believe that I will be free to come back home before the year is out," declared the self-confessed slayer.

"Stick it out, boy, and keep your courage up," said John Charlton in parting.

With an officer on either side of him, young Charlton waved good-bye to those on the pier as the liner steamed down the bay.

Dangerous Crossing Cause of Injunction

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—The city of Columbus has enjoined the Central of Georgia Railway from constructing additional tracks across Eleventh street, the city claiming that traffic is exceedingly dangerous at that point already on account of the large number of tracks which cross the street.

Eleventh street is the principal outlet to Wynnton and all of the section east of the city, and thousands of persons cross the tracks every day.

The Central of Georgia undertook to construct the tracks after permission had been denied it by the city officials.

COMMISSION RULE IS GIVEN MARIETTA

House Passes Bill to Change the City's Charter—Accepts Senate Amendment.

A bill providing for changes in the charter of Marietta to give the Cobb County city a commission form of government was adopted by the House Thursday morning by a vote of 98 to 4.

The bill had been disposed of by the House, but was referred back by the Senate, which had added an unimportant amendment.

The bill provides that the proposition to change the charter shall be submitted to the people of Marietta at a special election to be called by the Mayor within 30 days.

The consideration of the bill brought forth the usual fight between the members of the Cobb County delegation. Mr. Cheney is the author of the bill.

Mr. Moss, who always opposes Mr. Cheney's measures, endeavored to gain the passage of an amendment that the commission should not assume any new debt or any pre-existing debt of the town. Mr. Cheney declared the Moss amendment would kill his bill, and asked the House to vote it down. The amendment was defeated, 69 to 38.

It so happens that at the present time the United States is negotiating for the purchase of the island, on which to establish a naval depot.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Come to my studio! I've got the quaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobblestoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dustcloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over here—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the living room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not, we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! It isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners, and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes, it isn't bad," mused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week, put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's seemed only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Mirrors and Millinery

As It Is for Her Now - - - - - - - - - and Used To Be

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a brocaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP .:. .:. .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk, and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shot and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She hears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school lunches is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well, they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you, here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisitor was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused: he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had failed him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 14.—All doubts as to who is manager of the Cubs have been dispelled during the past few days, for Jawn Evers is not only the Keystone King, but he rules with an iron hand, and those who dare to resent his ruling power have been relegated to the minors or disposd of in some other manner.

It is less than a week since the manager of the Cubs learned through the columns of a certain morning newspaper that he was about to be dethroned.

In other words, according to the word of one who claimed to have the inside info, Jawn was about to be Maderoized.

Your humble servant hurried to the throne of the Keystone King in an effort to learn just hom badly King Jawn felt over the sad news.

"If all of the sport scribes in Chicago were as certain of their jobs as I am of mine," said Jawn, "they would be purchasing benzine buggies on the installment plan. Some scribes can't get real news, so they manufacture it.

"The main trouble with the ball club has been that there were too many players on the club who thought they knew more about running the affairs of the club than does the owner or manager."

Rather pointed words, these, but they flowed as freely from Jawn's mouth as milk and honey in that land where one never knows hunger.

"To whom do you refer?" was the first one, and Jawn replied:

"Well, there are a number of pitchers on my staff who know so much about pitching that they refuse to take any orders," was the rather evasive reply.

"Name them," was the next hot one fired at Jawn.

"I'd rather not just now, but it will all come out in the wash," spake the oracle.

Stop, look, listen and cogitate.

Reulbach Let Out.

Ed Reulbach has been traded to Brooklyn, Overall has been forwarded to Frisco by parcel post, and Lurid Lew Richie will grace Kansas City with his august and comical presence.

Nuff sed. Who are the pitchers who were treading on Jawn's artistic bunions?

Reulbach, Overall and Richie, and they are no longer Cubs.

That's the answer. John Evers is ruler of the Cubs, and he has been given to understand that his job is as secure as the Constitution of the United States.

Evers Shows Hand.

He intends to manage the affairs of the club without either outside or inside influences or assistance, and when he finds a person in the little family who can't see things his way, it's a 10 to 1 bet that person is going to enjoy some scenery en route to somewhere.

True, neither Overall, Reulbach nor Richie has shown anything aside from an enthusiastic desire to connect with the pay roll this season, and that alone is reason for a change of climate for the trio, but the fact that they tolled under Chance when Evers was but a common layman and with them is ample evidence that they are included among the pitchers "who know too much about pitching to take orders."

The developments in the Cub camp during the past week mean much for the future of the Cubs.

He has about decided that the old Cub machine that won three pennants is becoming worn and that the club that won a pennant two years ago can not be depended upon to repeat five years hence.

In other words, when the Cubs board the rattler for the sunny climes of Florida next March there will be a number of familiar physiogs missing.

No Shift on Infield.

It is the firm belief of yours truly that the Cub infield will be intact next season, with Saier at first, Evers on the throne and Zim at third. We are making no prognostications as to who will jerk the pill out of the dust in and around short.

Fred Williams will be among those who will cavort in the outer pastures, and further than that affiant sayeth not.

It will be a new club in the way of pitchers, and there may be a new face behind the bat, which means that another face, familiar to all the baseball fans, will be missing. No names mentioned, but he couldn't get along with Mrs. Britton.

Evers will have a club that will answer to him and not try to dictate the managerial policies.

Overall, Reulbach and Richie have outlived their usefulness with the Cubs. They may show a flash of class with the clubs to whom they have been sent, but they will never wear Cub uniforms again.

And the season will end in a few short weeks, then—watch for some new developments and some young twirlers.

PROUGH AND MAYER ARE SOLD TO CHICAGO SOX

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 14.—The star Birmingham battery, Prough and Mayer, has been secured by the Chicago American League club. Exercising an optional agreement, Walter Mayer, the young Baron catcher, was regained ofr $1,500.

When Chicago placed Mayer with the Baron club, a blanket option was exacted for the choice of a player for $2,500. Prough's wonderful pitching attracted the attention of the White Sox, and he was chosen.

Leading the league with a record of twenty victories and five defeats, Prough will gain his third trial in the majors. Previously Pittsburg and Cincinnati have tried out the elongated pitcher and have returned him to the minors.

Crackers Facing Supreme Test

Mobile Has Lead of 5 1-2 Games

By O. B. Keeler.

HAVING duly touched off the red fire, ignited the Roman candles and called out the fire department, we will now get out the old chewed-at-one-end section of pencil and put down a few of the things popularly supposed not to mislead, which, by the way, is one of the most staggering fallacies the twentieth century staggers under.

It is plainly to be seen, and may be set down in signs like the following: !!!!, that the Crackers trimmed Birmingham a severely straight series, copped the final road trip in the ratio of seven to four and are in something of a position to contest against Mobile and Montgomery for the possession of the title of Southern champeens.

* * *

THE exact situation is this:

Atlanta has 26 games left to play—all at home.

Mobile has a lead of five and one-half full games over the Crackers.

Montgomery has an edge of three full games.

But—

Mobile has only two more games scheduled at home.

* * *

MAKING the matter as personal as possible, the Crackers will get a regular crack at each of their principal rivals in the long home wind-up. The Billikens will be here August 21, 22 and 23, and the Gulls, September 2, 3, 4 and 5—about the time the last spurt for the wire is on, provided things become that acute.

The Gulls and the Billies do not play each other any more, the latter probably being rather more than content with that arrangement, judging by the recent trouble in Gullville.

* * *

SO that's the lay-out.

Chattanooga is here to-day, opening with a double-header. The Lookouts also will play Friday and Saturday, and then the Barons will sneak in Monday and try for a little of the revenge stuff. The following Thursday—the 21st—the Montgomery series starts. Then comes Memphis for four games, then New Orleans and Mobile, four each, and then the Lookouts return to wind up the season with a single contest—September 6.

* * *

INTERESTING, is it not?

No?

Well, it'll look a lot different, with a regular shoe-horn crowd wadded into the old Cow Pasture, and a sunburned bunch of men in white uniforms trotting out on the grass, and some sawed-off second-story artist pulling off his id and bellowing:

"The bat-t-tree-ees fr t'day's game: Muggum'ry, Brown an' Gribbings; 'Flanta, Dunton Chipmunk!"

That's something else again.

* * *

WOUGH!

A foxy young Pitcher named Prough
Got into a bit of a rough
With some Walloping Guys,
And to his surprise,
He found out he didn't know hough!

* * *

WHICH bit of gloating in a strictly minor key leads up to the fact that, as G. Cleveland once eruditely remarked, it is not a theory but a condition that confronts us.

The condition, roughly set forth, is to win two-thirds of twenty-six games—or better.

Two-thirds ought just about to pass Montgomery and overtake Mobile, who will have to travel on the high speed to break even on the long road trip that confronts each.

But two-thirds of 26 games is between seventeen and eighteen.

And that is a good many games to win, when it is mixed up with at least four double-headers.

Also, it may rain.

* * *

WHICH brings on the subject of clouds. And just now, on the heels of five straight victories on the road, the everlasting rout of the Barons, the busting of Mr. Prough's proud record, and the beginning of a long stay at home—well, just now, we are inclined to think the said cloud is turning outward a bit of the well-known silver lining.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

The Georgia-Alabama season will close Saturday, and while hardly any of the clubs in the circuit have made money this year from the attendance, it is expected that several will realize on the sale of players. The abnormal speed of the Class D Southeastern last year militated against the sport in Anniston, Gadsden and Talladega this year, but it is believed that the fans are getting satisfied with real Class D ball and that the league will be kept intact.

* * *

Gadsden has had the best club from the start, and they probably have the best manager in the league, considered from the standpoint of both his playing and managerial ability. Randall brought several men from New Orleans who had been playing all winter and they were in good form when the season opened. Although Gadsden has never been off the top, however, the attendance at that place was the poorest in the league, and it was the only city to get games transferred.

* * *

A fine spirit of bon homme prevailed among both the fans and players at the banquet held in Anniston last Saturday night, when an inspiring address was made to the men by Hon. E. D. Willett, a well-known attorney and former president of the Anniston club in the Southeastern. At this meeting, Proctor, Anniston's star centerfielder, also proved himself a fine orator. He's a graduate of a Texas college and promises to go up.

* * *

If the league is kept together, there will be a unanimous speal made for the re-election of President W. J. Boykin, of Gadsden, who has shown himself to be a live wire, a man of backbone and uniform fairness. He has pleased all the clubs.

* * *

White, the one-armed phenom, who for a while played with the Anniston club, holding the unique record of being the first one-armed man to perform in professional company, has made good as an umpire. Joe Burke, an old-timer with the indicator, also gave better satisfaction this year than ever before.

* * *

Boyd, whom Birmingham released to Talladega, will probably go back to the Southern when this league closes. His arm is getting in shape again and he has had pretty easy sailing. Rice, Newnan's catcher, is one of those rare backstops who hit the ball and perform well at the same time with the mitt. In the last series at Anniston he got ten hits out of thirteen times at bat.

* * *

The Anniston club this year encountered a hoodoo in the .500 limit. Every time the Chickens would get to the half per cent mark something would happen. Down the ladder they would go again. They almost reached there last Saturday, but in the game Monday they hit the toboggan.

* * *

The two Georgia towns, Newnan and LaGrange, led in attendance this year. Opelika did well considering the size of the place, but Gadsden, Anniston and Talladega had been used to faster ball and when salaries were reduced this year the fans got the idea that the sport would not be interesting. This proved erroneous, however.

FRANK WHITNEY EASY FOR CHARLEY WHITE

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN by far the most thrilling, exciting and scientifically waged ring battle ever seen in Atlanta, Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Atlanta favorite, was for the first time in his Southern ring career compelled to leave the roped arena a beaten man. For ten rounds he was scientifically hammered by Charley White, the marvelous Chicago lightweight.

And though Whitney left the ring beaten, he did not leave there with any smirch on his record. It is doubtful if he ever fought more brilliantly. It is certain that no man ever showed more gameness than did the Iowa carpenter. There were cheers for the victor, but there were more cheers for the vanquished.

It was simply a case of Whitney meeting a better man, but, though, at no stage of the game did he appear to have a shade, time and again when the crowd was on its feet expecting to see him feel his first knockout instead saw him rally brilliantly, give blow for blow, never wincing under White's terrible punching. Whitney was always a great big figure.

But credit must be given White. The little Chicagoan seems every inch a champion. He had a deep and abiding respect for Frank, though, and boxed carefully. Not until the seventh round did he begin to take anything like a chance, and then he was quick to crawl back behind his breastworks whenever Whitney seemed dangerous.

* * *

AS a result, Atlanta boxing fans saw boxing in the real sense of the word. Both men fought marvelous defensive battles. The sparring was fast and perfectly executed. Both used excellent ring generalship. It was White's superior strength and his youth that told the story.

Whitney's entire attack was from his right side. The few times he used his left it seemed to possess little power, but at that he did quite as much leading as his opponent. In the fourth round his right landed and White was turned completeyl around by the force of the blow. In this round Whitney had the shade, but all the others were either even or White's.

* * *

WHEN the gong rang for the seventh round, the battle was apparently all even. Then White took the lead. Both men had been cautious in reference to infighting, but in this session White got busy at this part of the game and beat Whitney at the feature of fighting in which he is most skilled.

In the eighth Whitney was very, very tired. His face was completely smeared, but his magnificent condition told the tale. In the ninth it was the same story, and in the last part of the tenth it seemed inevitable that Whitney would be floored before the gong. He weathered it bravely and was on his feet fighting to the end, but there was not a dissenting voice when Referee Castro raised the Chicago boy's glove.

* * *

IN the semi-windup Kid Young was decisively beaten by Charley Lee. Young seemed to have none of his old dash and virility and in the fourth round after Lee had dropped him and Young arose to continue his tactics of crawling under cover, Castro announced Lee the winner.

At times Young showed a flash, but it was never more than a flash. It seems that the promising newsboy boxer has about run his course.

* * *

IN the third round of their scheduled six-round go Terry Nelson dropped Mike Saul with a terrific clip on the jaw. Saul came up on the count of nine, and after clinching desperately backed into his corner and covered. He was apparently badly hurt, not only from Nelson's blow, but also from the blow he received when his head struck the canvas with a bump that could be heard for feet.

Saul was apparently unable to fight back, and the referee declared Nelson the winner to save the Atlanta milkman from further punishment. Up to the knockdown Saul had a big lead over the little Greek and was apparently boxing in his best style.

* * *

IN the opening engagement "Mary" Payne knocked out Battling O'Leary in the second round of their four-round go. Both boys were novices, but both were willing.

A fair house saw an excellent fight card.

Tesreau and Matty After Auto "Big Six" Making Good Record

JOHN M'GRAW has called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 1, the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spit-baller 25 times. Jeff only went the route on eight occasions, but on many of the times he was derricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

Were Hugh Chalmers to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead of the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773.

Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

The club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Marnaville, of Boston.

The figures below show the number of games started and completed by the Giants' pitchers this season:

	Games Started	Complete Games Pitched	P.C.
Crandall	1	1	1.000
Mathewson	22	17	.773
Marquard	20	14	.650
Demaree	16	7	.437
Ames	5	2	.400
Fromme	6	2	.333
Tesreau	25	8	.320
Wiltse	2	0	.000
Totals	97	50	.515

CINCINNATI ASKS FOR WAIVERS ON 4 PLAYERS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 14.—Before the Cincinnati Nationals left Pittsburg it was reported from their camp that waivers had been asked on Suggs, Sheckard, Egan and Bates, veterans of the team. All the clubs in the league have waived on Bates and Egan, and President Herrmann and Manager Tinker are trying to make deals for them with American League teams. They expect to pull off a trade for Egan with either the White Sox or the Highlanders, both being in need of infielders of Egan's class.

It is likely that several other changes will be made at the present eastern trip all the clubs have also waived on Suggs, for whom Manager Tinker has been trying to pull a deal. Trades are under way for Sheckard.

WORLD'S SERIES GAMES WILL START OCTOBER 6

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The world's series games are to start on Monday, October 6. This was the information President Ban Johnson, of the American League, gave out. The play will continue on each succeeding day thereafter until one club has won four out of seven games.

Should two Eastern teams be fortunate enough to take down the glory in the National and American Leagues—and it looks certain—then Sunday will be an off-day, for the "blue" laws of the East forbid the parading of our national pastime on the Sabbath.

Conzelman and Price Will Work

Fans Will See Calvo in Right Field

By Joe Agler.

HOME again! And glad to be here, you may be sure. Especially as we won't have to hook any more rattlers and ride any more until the season of 1913 is history.

The boys talked it over, coming this way from Birmingham last night, and they decided the Crackers had one grand little chance to knock the everlasting lining out of about six other clubs in the next three weeks, and bring home another flag to Crackerville.

That's what we will try our best to do.

The Birmingham series has given us all a lot of confidence. We pounded the ball back of good work by our own pitchers, and put up a great fielding game. That combination will win regularly against anything in this league, if only we can keep it working.

* * *

CONZELMAN and Price will work in the double-header with Chattanooga this afternoon, and Dunt, probably will have to catch in both, as Chapman has a bad ankle.

Chris Holtz has been released outright, and Jacinto Calvo, the Cuban outfielder Clark Griffith sent us, will be in right field. We hear he is a bear with the wood and fast on the bases, and that is what we will need from now on. Holtz is a crack fielder, but weak at the plate.

* * *

RETURNING to the last battle in Slagville, which is a very pleasant topic with us, it will be noted that Carl Thompson, Baron cast-off, pitched rings around his famous rival, Clinton Prough, stopping his winning streak at ten games, where he is tied with Coveleskie.

Prough showed the stuff in holding down the runs as well as he did, for the Crackers were surely hitting the old pill. Once McBride, by a great running catch, robbed Harry Holland of what looked like a sure homer, with the bases full at the time. Harry kept up his hitting streak, and is now in the charmed circle of the .300 wallopers.

And please don't forget Wally Smith. His drive to the center field fence probably was the longest hit of the season in Birmingham, and just about settled things for Mr. Prough and his help. The help also cracked under punishment, while we kept up our good work in the field.

* * *

WELL, the Barons are out of the race, it seems, and it was our bunch that put them out when the rest of the league seemed powerless to head 'thm.

Now we will have a chance at the others.

We'll do our best.

REDS BUY CATCHER.

ROANOKE, VA., Aug. 14.—Mark Stewart, the big catcher of the Norfolk club, in the Virginia State League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Red Sox for $2,000. Stewart is a young catcher, and was playing college ball at Washington and Lee University a year ago. His batting average has been .300. He will finish the season with the Norfolk club and report to Manager Tinker at the conclusion of the season.

Holtz Given Release; Chapman Is Injured

The Crackers arrived right side up with care, early this morning and went immediately to their quarters to rest for the double battle with Chattanooga this afternoon.

Every man was in tip-top shape, except Chapman, Manager Smith reported. The useful backstop turned an ankle in the last game at Birmingham, and, while he pluckily finished the game, he suffered with a god deal of swelling last night, and is not in condition to play to-day. Joe Dunn will have to catch games, and possibly the other two contests with the Lookouts.

Chris Holtz was released yesterday in Birmingham and turned back to Selma. He showed much class as a fielder, but his hitting was not of the caliber needed by the Crackers in their final dash for the flag. Jacinto Calvo, the chunky little Cuban sent on by Clark Griffith, will play right field the rest of the season.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start acttvities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

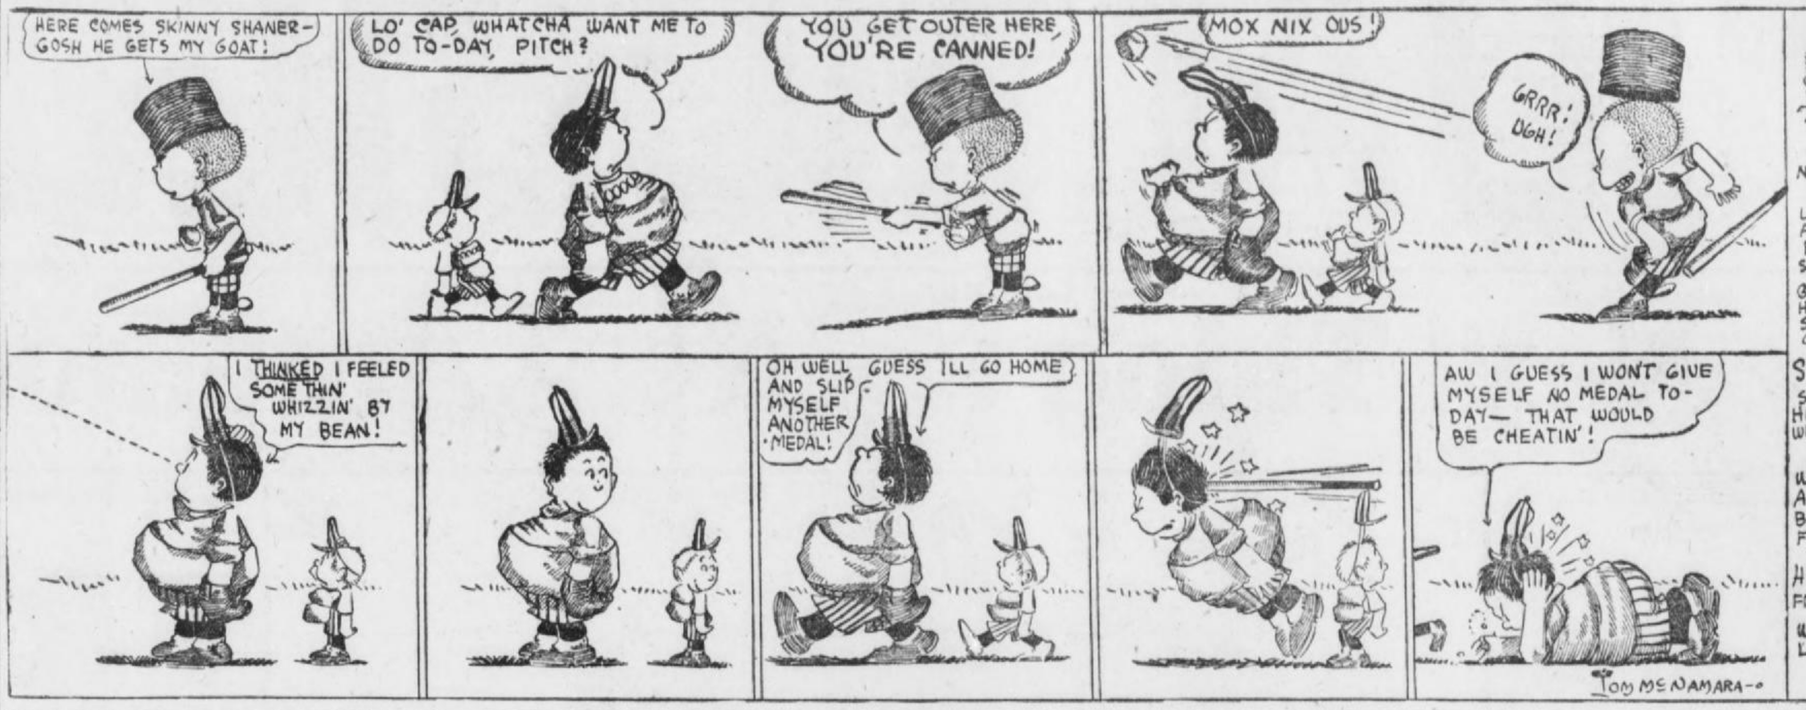

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

STARS.

Oft in the early fall,
With baseball fights near ended,
One stops to think where all
The springtime stars have wended.
The Second Cobbs have lost their jobs
And left us broken-hearted;
The Wagners, too, have up and blew,
The Speakers have departed.
Oft, as the autumn comes,
And pennant scraps are ended,
Lord knows where all the hums
Who starred in spring have wended.

Speaking of George McBride as manager of the Red Sox, McAleer could travel from here to Gehenna and back and not find a better one.

McBride never was a Lajoie at the plate nor a Cobb on the bases, but he can think twice before the average athlete gets a start.

The report that Hugh Jennings has signed Messrs. Tutweiler and Fadrique simply shows how hard it is to get rid of a hobby.

It is important to know that the Pells cans won a game the other day from Memphis. This shows that the Pels can beat somebody.

While Packey McFarland depends more on his cleverness than on his punch, his recent effort at song writing has demonstrated that he can punch the English language without mercy.

Were we the manager of a white hope our first move would be to sign him with the Giants, where he could get a postgraduate course in the art of rough house.

ODE TO THE WALKING GHOST.

They say time drags on Sunday
When there is naught to do.
But, gee! it drags on Monday—
It seems to stick like glue.

It sure does drag that one day
From half-past twelve till one,
For one o'clock on Monday
*Is when we cop the mon.

*Slang for stipend.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR SPEAKER TO BE TRADED

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—While it is an open secret that President McAleer is pretty well disgusted at the way certain members of the Red Sox team have been going this season, there is very little ground for believing he has ever thought of trading Tris Speaker to the Washington club.

Of course, if, as a morning paper prints under a Milwaukee date, he intends making George McBride the Red Sox manager next year, he will have to get rid of Carrigan, for Bill would not be likely to show unusual enthusiasm for the common cause if he were deposed without a fair trial, and the tag end of a season can hardly be considered enough time in which to gauge any man's managerial ability.

* * *

BUT why Speaker? Especially if Carrigan is no longer with the team. A few weeks ago dopesters were figuring that Speaker would have to be traded because he could not get along with the new manager. Waiving the question as to whether Speaker has or has not given his best services to the team since Carrigan's appointment (in our opinion he has done his best), why should it be necessary to trade him after the cause of his discontent, if discontent he ever had, has been removed?

* * *

FOR is it at all likely that "Old Fox" Griffith is likely to let go the best base-runner in the American League, even if he should consent to break up his infield by releasing his shortstop.

Either Milan or Speaker would be a notable addition to any club, but the departure of either would, conversely, be a great loss to the team with which he is now connected.

McAleer is entirely willing to secure Milan, and Griffith, no doubt, could be prevailed upon to take Speaker. But neither cares much about letting his own star depart.

RED SOX TO GIVE $10,000 IN PLAYERS FOR REHG

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 14.—A baseball deal was engineered here whereby the Boston Red Sox will give $10,000 in players for Left Fielder Walter Rehg, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association. A big cash price was offered to Manager Friel, of the St. Paul club, but he turned down these offers for a trade.

ROCKFORD WINS LONG GAME.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Aug. 14.—A double and a single in the nineteenth inning gave Rockford the victory over Racine yesterday, 3 to 2.

RINGSIDE NEWS

After a layoff of two months Eddie McGoorty is ready to don the padded mitts again. Jim Coffroth has offered him either Sailor Petroskey or Bob McAllister, who boxed a twenty-round draw on the coast last week. McGoorty isn't particular which he meets, and has wired the California promoter to that effect.

* * *

Jimmy Grant, the Chicago bantamweight, who holds a knock-out victory over Spider Britt, is back in our midst once more. Jimmy has been spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla., and is now anxious to get on with some of the local talent. Jimmy is one of the classiest fellows of his weight and should find little trouble in getting on here.

* * *

Johnny Dundee will make his next fight against Ad Wolgast on Admission Day. Dundee, by stopping Jack White, has won a warm spot in the hearts of the coast fans. He should not lack for admirers when he stacks up against the ex-champion.

* * *

Two clever newspaper men of Chicago, George S. Robbins and Joseph B. Boweles, have gotten out a bright and interesting little book covering the career of Frank A. Gotch. The wrestling champion is credited with the following: "In training, it is brains over brawn. The man who trains with his brain can get more good out of twirling a match than an athlete who does not use his brain can out of a 5-pound dumb-bell.

* * *

Joe Rivers, having had two chances against a world's lightweight champion, finds himself further from the 133-pound title than when he started to box in this division. The Mexican is carded to box Leach Cross on Labor Day and unless he wins decisively, Joe will find himself in a class with Anderson and Baldwin.

* * *

* * *

For the 99th time Jack Dillon and Tom Caponi are matched. Reports from Winnipeg state that the two middleweights will clash in a scheduled twelve-round set-to some time next month.

* * *

It is even hinted that Welsh and Ritchie will pull the wool over the eyes of Vancouver sports, as each man is said to have an understanding that they will box for the benefit of the moving pictures only.

* *

And now we learn Ritchie fears Murphy, too? One wonders what Ritchie does when he isn't looking up some new person to fear.

* * *

Promoter Coffroth, of San Francisco, is reported to have Arthur Pelky signed for three bouts. Charley Miller will be one of his opponents.

* * *

The manager of Gunboat Smith will now try and fill all the sporting pages in the country telling what a wonder Smith is and that he is the real champion. And all because he trimmed Jim Flynn.

PITCHER GIVES ONLY ONE HIT IN DOUBLE BILL

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 14.—Pitcher Hedgepeth established a new world's record here yesterday, when he pitched both games of a double-header against Richmond and was hit safely but once in the eighteen consecutive innings. He was not scored against; only gave three bases on balls—one in the first game and two in the second—and did not hit a batsman. Hedgepeth was sold to the Washington Americans several weeks ago.

The Pirates are again tied with Chicago for third place in the National League, having been trounced twice yesterday by the Brooklyn Dodgers. No other games were played owing to rain. No games were scheduled in the American League.

Left Fielder Gilhooley, of the Montreal club in the International League, will probably be sold to a mortgage, Owner Lichenstein, of the Montreal club, demands $10,000 for Gilhooley.

Detailed Description of This Wonderful Machine

Body metal, one passenger, wheel base 56 inches, 16-inch steel wheels, with 3-4-inch rubber tires; tread of wheel, 21 1-2 inches, made of material that gives spring and strength. This is a real vehicle—not a toy—and will uphold the weight of a grown man. The big racing hood is sheet steel and slanting seat, giving the driver real racing position; one big feature is the steering knuckle gear. The front wheels turn in response to the steering wheel, just as the front wheels of a real automobile, the axle being stationary. This eliminates danger of upsetting on curves.

These cars are carefully finished and beautifully painted. This model can be used with pleasure and safety by girls as well as boys. Remember, this machine is not a toy or plaything. It is a real miniature race car, according to the skill and endurance of the driver.

TREND OF STOCKS IS TO GO LOWER

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Many of the railroad shares were under pressure at the opening of the stock market to-day. The tone was heavy, although some issues made good rains. Texas Company continued to climb, beginning ½ up.

Wabash lost 1 point, selling at 4½. Chesapeake and Ohio declined ⅞. Canadian Pacific began ¼ lower, but at the end of half an hour had recovered and was ¼ above Wednesday's final. Among the other losses were: Western Union, ⅝; Reading, ⅛; Steel common, ⅝; Union Pacific, ⅛; Amalgamated Copper, ¾; Mexican Petroleum ½, and Atchison ¼.

Southern Pacific began ⅛ up, but lost it. At the end of 45 minutes, however, a better tone prevailed all the way round. American Telephone and Telegraph climbed ⅝, while fractional gains were also scored by United States Rubber common and Erie.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were firm.

Westinghouse was one of the strongest features of the late trading, crossing 69 for a net goin of more than a point on the day. Union Pacific was ⅝ above the noon price. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined a point from the midday range. Texas Company sold off on profit-taking. Southern Pacific also was lower. The tone was steady.

The market closed heavy. Governments unchanged; other bonds strong.

COTTON WAS SOLD FREELY ALL DAY

At the Start Traders Were Timid, but Expert Promise of Rains in West Causes Drop.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Good cables and absence of rains over the Texas belt, except at one or two places, resulted in the cotton market opening steady to-day and first prices ranged from 1 point off to 5 points higher than Wednesday's final. There was a little outside support, however, and the list being bolstered by buying from room shorts.

This, coupled with the Government report on supply and distribution, which placed the number of cotton bales consumed during July at 486,246 running bales, as compared with 467,000 bales in June. The report was considered bullish, but failed to stimulate any buying of consequence and the market developed a sagging tendency after the call, based on active selling, which was encouraged by a New Orleans weather expert prediction of rains in the western belt within the next forty-eight house. Later the selling became general and by noon the decline aggregated 5 to 11 points from the initial range.

After the English market had reported better cables than expected, price movement at the close showed a decline of 2 to 3½ points from the previous close.

Ring traders are persistent bears on the new crop positions, but they are not heavy sellers, especially of August. Most of them seem to be waiting rains in the western belt before committing themselves to any great extent to the short side. But a world of cotton will fall upon the market if rains should come in the west. One thing that prevents any material decline in prices is that the feeling among the average trader is to the effect that the Clarke anti-option bill will be killed and that nothing along that line will be done at the present session of Congress.

During the afternoon session the market ruled rather dull and prices fluctuated within a very moderate range. The trade was less aggressive and at the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 2 to 7 points from the closing quotations of Wednesday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: August 11.53, October 10.94, December 10.85, January 10.76, March 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: August 11.39, October 10.98, December 10.95, January 10.96, March 11.05.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14.—The map shows cloudy weather in nearly all of East Texas, the south central Gulf districts and the Carolinas. Precipitation is shown in Central and South Texas and the Gulf districts and showers in Tennessee and the Atlantics. Cooler weather in North Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for unsettled weather in the western half of the belt, with good indications for more general rains in the next forty-eight hours. Partly cloudy and scattered showers in the eastern half of the belt.

First trades here were at a decline of 2 points, and the market soon weakened to 10.96 for October on numerous private reports of rain this morning, principally from South Central and South Texas points. Continued unfavorable views from Manchester contributed to the weakness.

An official forecast of fair weather for Texas checked selling pressure during the afternoon session, but prices were held at the low point.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "London investors are gaining confidence and are relieving the underwriters of recent new issues of their holdings. Sentiment is improving on the Paris Bourse, Copper shares being a strong feature.

"An announcement of the allotments of Southern Pacific stock to syndicate members will be made known to-day. The offering has been over-subscribed. Liggett & Myers and American Tobacco will sell ex-dividend Friday. Southern Pacific directors are scheduled to meet for dividend action to-day. No change is reported in the Bank of England rate of discount.

"Information channels favor profit-taking. We would look for attractive buying opportunities, with the intention to secure moderate profits."

* * *

Some profit-taking yesterday was responsible for the reactionary tendency at the close. I would not be surprised if the market was reactionary to-day, as prices have had a good advance without any setback. Southern Pacific, which is behind the balance of the list, looks as if the pool would put it higher. I am bullish for the long pull and on any reaction believe stocks are a purchase.—G. D. Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Better things are expected of the wheat market, and many bullish arguments are put forth in favor of the maintenance of a gradual hardening of values, although the market is not expected to run away. Traders who were in the pit said that the pressure from hedgers has become much lighter than the last few days. It was largely a case of one bull taking the place of another in the corn market yesterday. One of the most rampant bulls said that, while he believes in higher prices, he expects a choppy market for the present."

Chicago, raining, 70 degrees, heavy rain early; Minneapolis, raining, 70; Terre Haute, sprinkling, 75, heavy rain last night; Springfield, partly cloudy, 78, no rain; Peoria, cloudy, 80, threatening; Omaha, clear, 84; Kansas City, clear, 88, no rain; St. Louis, clear, 80.

Bartlett, Frazier & Co. say: "Wheat: The weather map shows scattered rains in spring wheat country. The market shows decidedly more ability to tally and in our opinion is gaining friends daily.

"Corn—The weather map shows light rains in Iowa and one in Nebraska. A fair amount of precipitation at a number of Illinois points and in the Ohio Valley. Notwithstanding considerable liquidation all through the session yesterday closing prices were within a fraction of the high point, demonstrating the prevailing inherent strength.

"Oats—The market shows a steady undertone, but the volume of trade is not large; the strength in other grains is helping prices to some extent. We prefer the buying side on the weak spots.

Kansas City corn and wheat region bulletin shows Kansas rainfall: Macksville .04; no rain Missouri or Oklahoma. Maximum temperatures Kansas 98 to 108; Missouri 99 to 105; Oklahoma 98 to 108 deegrees.

Omaha corn and wheat bulletin: Broken Bow, rain, .04; North Platte .01. Highest temperature yesterday 108 degrees at Fairbury and 106 at Auburn, Ashland and Lincoln. State generally clear this morning.

'Cotton Is King, but Must Serve Farmer'

CUTHBERT, Aug. 14.—That cotton is king, but that the king must be subservient to the people, was the theme of an address of President John T. Williams, of the Georgia Agricultural Society, at the opening session of the annual convention here. Diversified farming in all branches is the salvation of Georgia farms, said President Williams.

Other speakers were Benjamin Milliken, of Wayne; Mayor Richard Terry, Chancellor David C. Barrow, of the University of Georgia; Hon. L. P. Hillyer, banker and farmer, of Macon; P. L. Twitty, of Laurens; J. Phil Campbell, of Clarke, and W. G. Middlebrooks, of Bibb.

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The bulls in corn failed to hold the price up around the closing level of last night, or to hold the best prices of to-day's session.

September closed unchanged at 73 and it ranged between 72⅝ and 73½. December and May showed losses of ⅛c to ¼c. The trade again was large, and there was little corn on the market when it was wanted most.

Wheat was up ⅛c to ½c and oats were ⅛c higher to unchanged. The feature in wheat was the buying of 75,000 bushels of Septemebr and the selling of an equal amount of December by "Billy" Long.

Provisions were lower.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

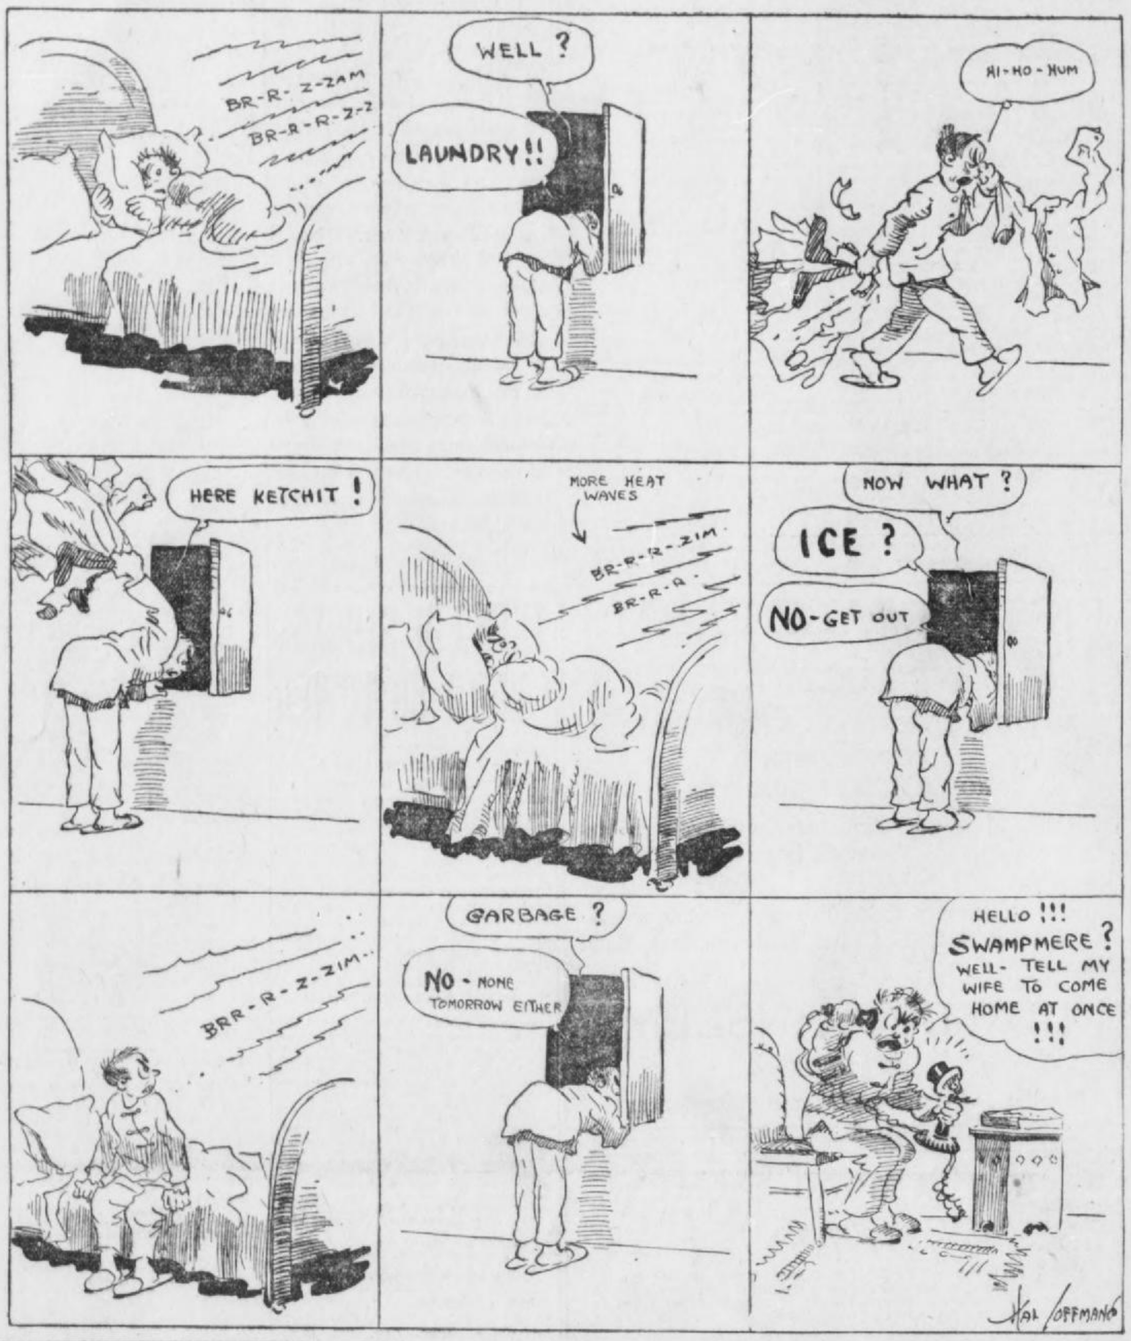

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

When the Wife's Away

And You Happen to Live in an Apartment House.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the political forum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

.:. The New Remedy .:.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch.
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger,
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

DOROTHY DIX

Writes on

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and child-like exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spendilig an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.

STATE FIGHTS FRANK'S ALIBI

Conley Admitted Mind Was Blank Day of Crime, Girl Says

MILITARY AID IS REFUSED SULZER

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—Formal nptice was served on Governor William Sulzer to-day that he had been impeached by the New York State Assembly for "high crimes and misdemeanors," including the alleged use of money contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street.

At the same time the bitter fight between Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn for control of the Great Seal of the State waxed more bitter. Acting Adjutant General E. V. Howard, replying to reports that Governor Sulzer would call out the national guard if necessary to keep possession of the Executive Mansion, declared that he recognizes Mr. Glynn as the constitutional Governor of the Commonwealth and would respect any orders signed by the Lieutenant Governor. This renders Governor Sulzer helpless so far as the military is concerned.

Mrs. Sulzer Is Prostrated.

Official notice to quit the duties of Governor was tendered to Governor Sulzer by Patrick H. McCabe, of the Senate. Mrs. Sulzer, who is prostrated over the attack made upon her husband's honesty, was in serious condition to-day. Doctors were rushed from New York City to attend her.

Accompanied by a bodyguard of strong-arm men, Governor Sulzer walked from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol shortly before noon. Asked for a statment, he said:

"Not a word. I am now in the hands of my counsel."

A special detail of policemen also was provided for the Governor's safety.

Await Ruling of Court.

Governor Sulzer told friends he would not relinquish the reins of power until removed by the Court of Impeachment, composed of the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, whirh will sit September 18.

A number of friends greeted the Governor after he arrived at the Capitol. In answer to inquiries about the condition of Mrs. Sulzer, he said:

"Mrs. Sulzer is seriously ill. We are gravely concerned. She has been hysterical and during the night was in a state of nervous collapse."

In spite of this pathetic feature the political enemies of the Governor did not lessen their efforts. On the other hand, it seemed that the bitterness had increased.

With the details of the actual service of the Governor out of the way, everybody settled back to watch the fight for the possession of the office of Governor.

President Sends No Message to Sulzer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The White House has sent no word either or advice or sympathy to Governor Sulzer in the present crisis in his career. Rumors that the President was interfering in the situation met a strong denial to-day.

Dies From Well Gas Saving Friend's Life

DALTON, Aug. 14.—Volunteering to go to the assistance of Jim Seay, who had been overcome by gas while cleaning a well on the Looper farm south of here, E. A. Harden, an aged farmer, gave up his own life after saving that of his friend.

Harden entered the well and succeeded in tying a rope around Seay's body before he himself was overcome. Seay was hauled to safety, but no one volunteered to go after Harden until life was extinct.

$200,000 BANK SHORTAGE.

TRENTON, N. J., Aug. 14.—The Roseville Trust Company, of Roseville, N. J., was ordered closed by the State banking department to-day. A shortage of $200,000 is reported.

SENATE HEAD ATTACKED BY KEA

Charging that President Randolph Anderson has usurped power as presiding officer of the State Senate, and charging further that the Senate Rules Committee, which is appointed by the President, is a "fraud and a cheat and a swindle on the public," Fred Kea, Senator from the Sixteenth District, Thursday declared he would rise to a question of personal privilege to state his charges when the Senate convenes for its final session at 3 o'clock.

Senator Kea declared that the Rules, or Steering Committee has deliberately blocked bills through the efforts of the "city lawyers" which compose its membership.

Here are the charges as stated by Senator Kea:

I charge the President of the Senate with usurping power, and I back up the charge with a statement made to me by a member of the House to the effect that President Anderson made statements to one member of the Houes that if a certain member voted against the kindergarten bill that he would see that that member did not pass any bill by the Senate.

I further charge that he, Anderson, took Senate Bill No. 66 after it had been reported by the committee that it do pass, and held it up for the third reading more than two weeks on the pretense that he desired to make some minor changes in said bill. But under this pretense he without authority referred the bill back to the committee, which had no authority to act on same, and by undermining they killed it.

I charge that the Rules Committee is a fraud and a cheat and swindle on the public. I back up this charge with the fact that the Rules Committee is composed entirely of corporation lawyers with the exception of one or two, therefor giving the farmer no representative in that important body, which steers much of the legislation which goes through the Senate.

As a result of the fact that this body is made up of corporation lawyers, with the exception of one or two and the farmer having no represenetation, many measures purporting to help the farmer have been choked out of existence during the present session.

I further charge that Senate Bill No. 87, which I presented in the Senate at the beginning of the session, has been ready for the third reading since July 17, but has been blocked by this same Rules Committee.

Mrs. John Astor Joins Sunday Dance Antis

NEWPORT, Aug. 14.—Mrs. John Astor let her guests go at 11:59 o'clock Saturday night, so they could not dance on Sunday, and thus joined forces with Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish to stop Sunday dancing at Newport.

But there are those who entertain who will dance Sunday or any other time, as did the Sidney Colford guests Saturday night at the Clambake Club, which extended into Sunday.

RICH DECATUR MAN SUICIDE BY POISON

A. J. Grubb, a wealthy contractor and builder, living at the old Mell homestead, No. 1508 DeKalb avenue, North Decatur, committed suicide shortly before noon Thursday by taking strychnine. He had been despondent for several days over business affairs and also was in failing health. His favorite sister, Mrs. Sophia Smith, died Tuesday, and this seemed to affect Grubb deeply.

The funeral of Mrs. Smith was held Thursday morning, but Grubb said that he did not feel well and would not attend. Harvey Grubb, his 19-year-old son, worrying about his father, also stayed away from the funeral services.

About 10 o'clock Mr. Grubb went to a drug store near his home and purchased a vial of strychnine, stating that he wished to poison a dog. Shortly after he returned to the house, his son Harvey was aroused by groans issuing from Mr. Grubb's bedroom. Rushing into the room, Harvey found his father writhing on the bed. He at once called the Grady Hospital, and an ambulance made a record run to the Grubb home. It was too late, however, as Mr. Grubb died in his son's arms a few moments before the ambulance arrived.

Mr. Grubb was one of the pioneer citizens of North Decatur, and had been a successful business man. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Grubb; one daughter, Mrs. H. Pierce, and four sons, Jack, Harvey, William and Claude Grubb.

Calls Sunbath Best Tuberculosis Cure

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The virtues of the sunbath cure, or heliotherapeutics, were sung by Dr. Rollier, of Leysin, at the Medical Congress today. This treatment, he said, cures external forms of tuberculosis of every variety at all degrees and all ages.

The direct action of the sun and air, he asserted, is the most energetic tonic. It also reduces pain, forms a powerful microbe-killing agent, and conduces most powerfully to the growth of new skin.

THE WEATHER.

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Generally fair Thursday and Friday.

Wilson Halts Move To Delay Money Act

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—President Wilson to-day sent word to the Democratic Senators at the Capitol through Secretary Tumulty that he was opposed to any Congressional recess which would postpone consideration of the currency bill until October 14 or November 1.

Word was brought back to the White House that the President's wishes would be followed.

The President views the proposed recess as a menace to the passage of any currency legislation. He believes the recess talk was instigated by the minority.

NEGRO DRUNK DAY OF CRIME, MISS CARSON SWEARS HE TOLD HER

Miss Helen Curran, a pretty girl of 17 years, proved one of the strongest witnesses Thursday for the defense in establishing what will be claimed as an alibi for Leo M. Frank. She testified that she saw Frank at 1:10 o'clock the afternoon Mary Phagan was murdered standing by Jacobs' Drug Store, Whitehall and Alabama streets, apparently waiting for his car home.

The defense devoted most of the forenoon session to producing persons who had seen Frank on the day of the tragedy. Miss Curran was probably the most important as she was the only one who professed to have seen Frank immediately after the time he has stated he left the factory.

Others were called who saw him as he arrived home at about 1:20 o'clock, or as he was on his way back to the factory later in the afternoon. It was the purpose of Frank's lawyers, so far as they could, to account for every minute of his time furing the day.

Appreciating that the case of the State against the defendant was hit by Miss Curran's story, Attorney Frank A. Hooper made a determined effort to confuse or break down the young witness, but failed to shake her in the least.

The significance of the girl's testimony is apparent in the light of Jim Conley's story. The negro said he and Frank started to dispose of Mary Phagan's body at 12:56. Allowing two minutes for Frank to get from the factory to Whitehall and Alabama streets, he would have had to leave the building at 1:08. This would have left but 12 minutes for the two to dispose of the body and do everything else the negro mentioned.

Conley testified that he was in the closet in Frank's office eight minutes. This would have reduced the remaining time to four minutes. Part of this was occupied in writing the notes, Conley says.

Thirty-two Minutes to Dispose of Body.

If the negro could have written the four notes in two minutes, two minutes would have been left for the disposal of the body. But Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, said that Conley took six or seven minutes in writing one test note exactly like the shorter note that was found by the slain girl's body. The defense contended that this, in view of Miss Curran's testimony, puts Conley's story in the realm of the impossible.

Miss Curran said that she lived at No. 160 Ashby street and that she knew Frank from trying to get a position as stenographer at the factory one time. She said that on the day she saw Frank she had an appointment to meet a girl friend at Jacobs' store at 1:15. She left Kress' store at 1:05, she testified, and had been at Jacobs' only a short time when she observed Frank.

Attorney Hooper brought out the fact that her father is employed by Montag Bros., who also are interested in the pencil factory. He asked her at one point in his examination:

"Miss Rebecca Carson, called primarily as an alibi witness, told of suspicious conversations and actions of the negro Jim Conley.

"No, Miss Rebecca, I wasn't at the factory Saturday. I was so drunk that I don't know what I did or where I was," she testified that Conley said when she asked him on the Monday after the crime if he had been in the factory at the time the murder was committed.

She also said that Conley had appeared greatly startled when Mrs. Carson, her mother, had said in his presence that she thought they would find the murderer when they found the negro that Mrs. Arthur White saw at the foot of the stairs.

Two more character witnesses, Harry E. Lewis, of Brooklyn, formerly the District Attorney of New York, and Herbert Lasher, of Fleischmans, N. Y., a classmate of Frank's at Cornell, testified that they knew the defendant well and that they knew his character to be very good.

Sig Montag of Montag Bros., treasurer of the National Pencil Company, told of his part in the hiring of the Pinkertons and of Frank's demeanor the Sunday the body of the girl was found. He testified, in refutation of Jim Conleys' story about watching at the front door at the direction of Frank, that the first floor on occasions of which Conley told was the property of the Clark Woodenware Company, and that it was used by the pencil company only as an entrance.

Montag was asked by Dorsey just before he left the stand if he tried several times to hire a horse and buggy the afternoon of April 26 from W. D. Brown, a West End liveryman. The witness said he had not.

"Don't you know that Kress' store was closed all of Saturday afternoon, April 26?"

"It wasn't closed at the time I went in there in the afternoon," she replied.

The attorney also sought to show that the crowds were so dense that afternoon that she would not have been likely to see Frank.

Miss Curran was the first of a long string of alibi witnesses for Frank. Still others are to be called to present to the jury a record of the defendant's every movement throughout the day so far as it is known.

Important Battle Lost by Defense.

An important battle was lost by the defense in the Frank trial Thursday in the over-ruling of Luther Rosser's motion for the expunging of Solicitor Dorsey's questions of the day before relating to Frank alleged acts of immorality.

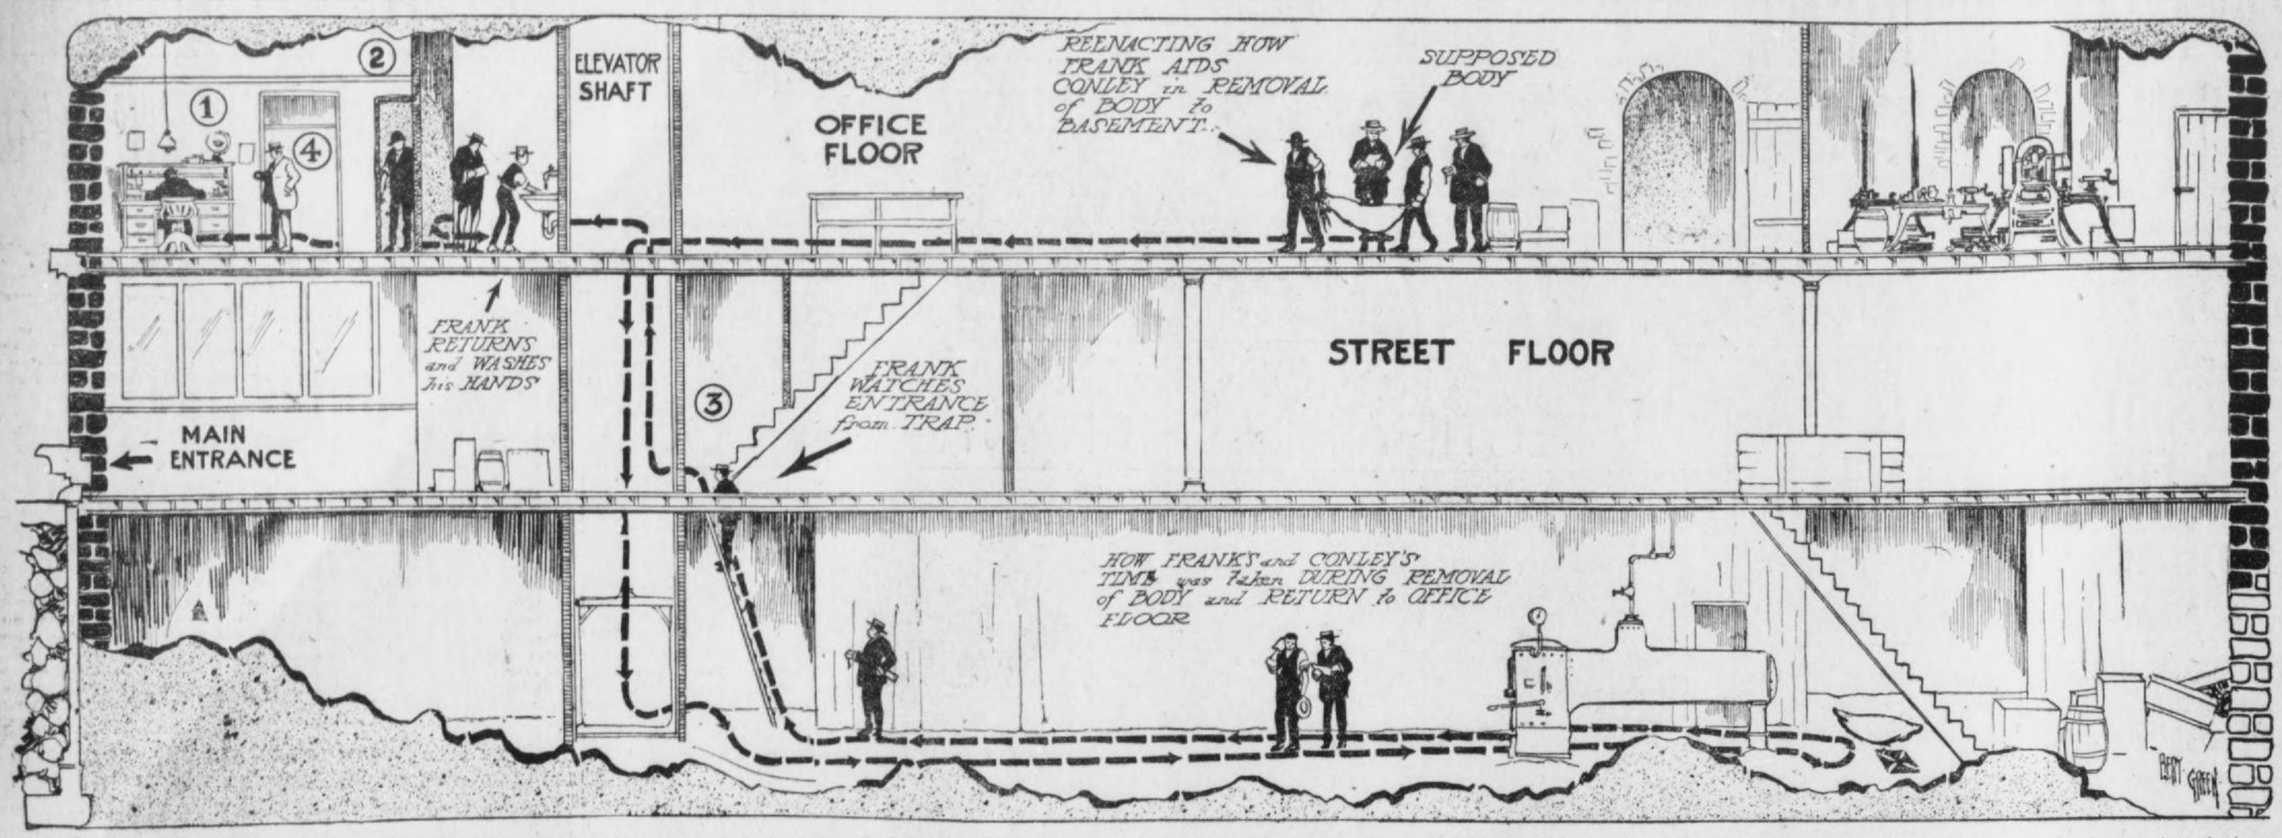

The defeat of Attorney Rosser came immediately after Solicitor Dorsey had failed in an attempt to have Frank's mother and wife excluded from the courtroom because of the elder woman's sensational outburst of the afternoon before, when she dramatically denounced the Solicitor for his charge of grossly improper conduct against her son, the defendant.

Judge Roan refused the motion of the Solicitor, but said that he would refuse them admission if another outbreak of the sort took place.

With the preliminary skirmishes of the day settled, the defense set out with great minuteness to complete its record of Frank's movements throughout the day of the crime.

Miss Helen Curran, No. 160 Ashby

CONLEY'S STORY IS RE-ENACTED BY DEFENSE TO DISPROVE IT

The diagram shows how the defense re-enacted the disposition of Mary Phagan's body as described by Jim Conley to prove that it could not have been done in the time specified. The defense's men had a 107-pound sack representing the body and reproduced the negro's story in detail—beginning in Frank's office, going back to the metal room, to the elevator, into the basement, back to the office, hiding in the wardrobe and the writing of the notes.

street, testified that she saw Frank near Jacobs' drug store, Whitehall and Alabama streets, at 1:10 o'clock Saturday afternoon apparently waiting for his car home.

Saw Frank Get Off Car.

Mrs. Albert P. Levy, No. 69 East Georgia avenue, swore that she saw Frank get off his car on Georgia avenue at 1:20 o'clock the afternoon of the crime.

Mrs. M. G. Michael, of Athens, Ga., aunt of Mrs. Leo Frank, said that she was visiting at the home of Mrs. C. Wolfsheimer, No. 387 Washington street, three doors from Georgia avenue, and that Frank came up to the steps at about 2 o'clock to speak to her, leaving a moment later to catch a Washington street car at Glenn street.

Jerome Michael, son of the previous witness, testified that he was on the steps at the time and that Frank walked up the street between 1:55 and 2 o'clock.

Mrs. Wolfsheimer, who lives at No 387 Washington street, said she saw Frank at this time.

Julian Loeb, No. 380 Washington street, testified to the same effect.

J. Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, told the jury he rode partway to town with Frank and that the defendant boarded the Washington street car at about 2 o'clock.

Miss Rebecca Carson, a factory employee, testified to seeing Frank on the street at 2:20 and also at 2:50.

Asks Women Be Excluded.

Solicitor Dorsey, before the jury was brought in, said he wanted to make a request that the mother and wife of Leo M. Frank be excluded from the court as the witnesses have been because of the outbreak of the elder Mrs. Frank Wednesday afternoon.

"I appreciate the feeling of the wife and mother," he said; "it is a terrible strain on them. I am sorry for them. But I must have protection and I think they should be excluded when we are subjected to outbreaks like that yesterday."

Attorney Arnold in reply said:

"Without criticising Mrs. Frank, I want to state that the Solicitor's examination of the witness yesterday was far worse than her outbreak. He was undertaking to get in evidence in an illegal way. He could not get it in in a legal way. He was appealing to the crowd and to the feelings of the jury. Does you honor think that good practice—honorable practice—especially when a man is on trial for his life?

Arnold Calls Dorsey Overzealous.

"My friend is zealous—he is a little overzealous, I think, but that is not a matter for me to criticise. Your honor, our jury system is very lame if we admit this sort of evidence. They are good men, but simple men. It's hard for them to distinguish between things that condemn a man and things that prove him guilty. I won't say that the conduct of the Solicitor is illegal, but it is a little more culpable than the act of the mother. It's a pretty pass if a man's wife and mother are to be barred at the hour of his trial. This evidence of the State was put in to poison the minds of the jury. It was hard to bear—awfully hard to bear—but I promise it shall not occur again. We will do all we can to prevent a recurrence."

"Your honor, I didn't ask Mr. Jones all the questions I might have asked him," replied Dorsey. "You ruled the questions I did ask were legal. I asked only questions I can substantiate by reputable witnesses—some of them high-class women, I regard them.

"It's a mistaken idea about me being overzealous. I am trying to do my duty. I want to protect myself and the court. You have excluded other women. There is no reason why these should be allowed to remain to offend the dignity of the court. An accused man should not be allowed to bankrupt his wife and mother. Mr. Arnold criticises my act. The courts have held it is highly improper for a lawyer to express his opinion on the evidence. Mr. Arnold has branded this evidence as lies before I put these good women on the stand."

Judge Roan ruled, after more arguing:

"You are entirely right, Mr. Dorsey, in saying that you are entitled to protection. Other women were put out because the evidence was of such a nature as to be indecent to be heard by them. It is a matter in the discretion of the court to state whether these ladies should be allowed to remain. I will say that if there are any more such outbreaks as yesterday I shall be forced to exclude them."

Mrs. Frank, the mother, and the prisoner's wife were both in court while the argument was in progress.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What was it that made you remember the time so positively?—A. My husband was late for dinner.

The witness was excused, and Julian Loeb, of No. 380 Washington street, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Is your residence next door to the Wolfsheimer residence?—A. It is across the street.

Says Conley Told Her He Was Drunk.

The witness was excused, and Miss Rebecca Carson, an employee of the National Pencil Company, was the next witness. She smiled and bowed to Frank as she took her seat. Arnold questioned her.

The witness said she was forelady of the assortment department on the fourth floor and had been there three years.

Q. How noticeable is that elevator to you on the fourth floor when it is running?—A. It is quite noticeable. There is a noticeable vibration and a knocking noise.

Q. Did you say anything to him?—A. I asked him where he was on Saturday. He said: "Miss Rebecca, I was so drunk I didn't know where I was."

Q. Did you overhear any conversation between Jim Conley and your mother?—A. Yes. On Thursday he was sweeping. Mother said to him: "Well, Jim, I see they haven't got you yet." He said: "No Missis, I ain't done nothing." She said: "No, and Mr. Frank hasn't either, but they took him." Conley said: "No, Missis, he's as innocent as you is and you is as innocent as a... angel." Mother remarked: "Well, when they find out who murdered that little girl, it will be that negro Mrs. White saw sitting on the box back of the stairs." Jim dropped his broom and looked very scared.

Q. How long was this before Jim was arrested?—A. About an hour.

Q. What day was that?—A. Thursday.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. That was Monday when Jim Conley made the remark to you about him having been too drunk Saturday to know anything?—A. Yes.

Q. What time?—A. About 8 o'clock.

Q. When did you tell of that before?—A. To mother right away.

Q. You all work on the fourth floor?—A. Yes.

Q. That elevator makes very little noise?—A. It makes some noise.

Q. Could you hear it with those doors closed?—A. You might not.

Q. Where was that clock you saw the first time Memorial Day?—A. In front of the jewelry store.

Q. The other clock?—A. Above Kress' store.

Q. You looked at the clock both times before you saw him? Are you certain of the time?—A. Yes.

Q. The first time you noticed him, it was between 2:20 and 2:25 o'clock. How did you get that so certain?—A. My sister just asked me the time and it was only a short time later when I saw him.

Salary Not Raised Since Last January.

Q. How long have you been forelady?—A. About three years.

Q. Would you mind telling your salary?—A. $10 a week.

Q. Did you ever stay there Saturday afternoon?—A. No.

Q. Did you know Mr. Frank very well?—A. Only in a business way.

Q. When was your salary raised last?—A. January.

Q. Do you know whether Conley stayed there Saturday afternoon, or not?—A. I heard he stayed there and I reckon he did.

Q. Conley told you right away he was so drunk he didn't remember where he was?—A. He certainly did.

Q. He came right out with it?—A. Yes.

Q. Did it make any impression on you?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you tell anyone else?—A. Mr. Darley and Mr. Rosser.

Q. Why did you tell Mr. Rosser?—A. He came to the factory and sent for some of the girls to tell them what we thought of Conley.

Q. You don't know what time Frank came out of Jacobs' drug store?—A. No.

Q. Did you see anything like blood in the factory?—A. No.

Q. You didn't go back there?—A. Not that day.

Q. When did you go back there?—A. Tuesday; I went back there with Mr. Frank.

Q. You didn't see the blood?—A. No. I wasn't looking for any.

Saw Frank on Way Down Town.

The witness was excused and Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, a brother of Julian Loeb, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Do you remember seeing Leo Frank on Memorial Day, April 26?—A. Yes, on the trolley car coming to town.

Q. Where did you get on the car?—A. At Georgia avenue.

Q. Where did he get on?—A. At Glenn street.

Q. Did you see him get on?—A. Yes, we sat together.

Q. Where did you go?—A. The car was blockaded at Hunter street by the crowds watching the parade. We got off.

Q. Where did he go?—A. Down Hunter street.

Q. What time was that?—A. I would say about 2:10 o'clock.

Hooper took the witness.

Q. Did you see anyone else that morning?—A. I saw Arthur Harris

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense in the Frank case did the expected thing when it boldly and unequivocally put Frank's character in issue.

It indicated its confidence in the justice of the deefndant's cause in doing that, and it met thus a crisis that it hardly could have successfully overcome otherwise, if it so happen that it does overcome it eventually.

Having taken the initiative in the matter of thrashing out Frank's character, the State will now be forced to make out an unmistakable case of bad character against Frank, or it is likely that the State's injection of the sinister charge against him, in addition to the charge of murder, may operate as a boomerang to the State's great hurt finally.

It is not to be wondered at that the defendant's mother, tried and racked in spirit and pride as she surely must have been, should have let her feelings overcome her for an instant during the course of Wednesday afternoon's hearing. I do not suppose it is even remotely possible for any person not a mother to understand all she has gone through.

Her vehement protest against the vile things being said and hinted about her boy—true or untrue, though such things always are untrue in mother love, I take it—serves to illustrate, however, how very vital to the defense now is the establishing of Frank's good character.

I doubt that anything thus far said to the jury has so profoundly impressed it as the unspeakable thing Conley said of the defendant. The jury is only human, and it can no more dodge impressions than other people can.

Impression Must Be Erased.

The defense is up against the herculean task of removing all of that impression from the mind of the jury—the twelve minds of the jury, indeed—for it will not do to leave even a fraction of Conley's story undemolished!

Manifestly, therefore, the defense could not, if it would, get away altogether from the matter of Frank's character. It found itself necessarily forced to the other extreme of the situation set up by the State.

The State, on the other hand, by reason of the defense's challenging attitude in the matter of forcing the issue of Frank's character, must now corroborate the frightful story of Conley, or I think it may suffer before the jury irreparable injury.

Curiously enough, the burden of proof in the Frank case seemed to have been shifted a week ago—that is, whereas the burden is legally imposed upon the State, it being the theory of the law that a defendant goes into court with the presumption of innocence in his favor, it appeared, after Conley had made his awful charge, that the burden then was shifted onto the defense to prove Frank's innocence, rather than that the State should prove his guilt.

In putting Frank character in issue, however, I now think the defense has shifted back the burden, in large measure, anyway, to where the law contemplates it shall rest.

The State must complete its proof of Frank's depravity, or the State will not have made out such a case as likely will stand to the last analysis.

Defense Plans Its Climax.

As the State moved in the beginning of the Frank trial, steadily and consistently to the negro sweeper, Jim Conley, as the climax of its case, so to-day the defense is moving, every bit as steadily and as persistently, to the defendant, Leo Frank, as the climax of its case.

The State's case progressed ever up to Conley—the defense's case is progressing ever up to Frank.

It is Conley vs. Frank no less than it is the State vs. Frank.

No intelligent and discriminating observer, abreast with the status of the trial, doubts that, or has doubted it for days.

Either Leo Frank's life will answer for Mary Phagan's, or Jim Conley's will!

The capstone of the defense undoubtedly will be the defendant's statement. He will make it just before the defense rests its pleading.

Already, this anticipated dramatic event has cast its shadow before. The public is looking forward to Frank's attorneys. He simply states what he personal statement with no less keen interest than it looked forward, perhaps, to the terrible story of Conley.

Frank will be permitted, under the law, to make a statement to the jury, but without being permitted to swear to its truthfulness. The jury will be instructed that it may accept that statement, if it so elects, in preference to all the sworn testimony in the case; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject it altogether.

The jury alone and finally is made the sole judge of the defendant's credibility on the stand.

The defendant can not be impeached; he can not be cross-examined; he can not be prompted by his pleases, in the exact way he pleases, and in such detail or lack of detail as he pleases. It is strictly a matter between the defendant and the jury.

Leo Frank is one of the few defendants in murder cases coming under my observation, who absolutely refrained from discussing his case, in any phase of it, in advance of his trial.

Only at the Coroner's inquest, where he was obliged to talk, has he opened his lips to speak concerning the charge brought against him. In adopting this course, he unquestionably was well within his legal rights, and well within the bounds of common sense, too, no doubt—but the fact remains that the course he pursued is the unusual one.

I said in a former article that Frank apparently is a very patient man—and such men fight mighty hard when once aroused—and the more I reflect upon that observation, the more I am inclined to emphasize it.

He has waited four months to tell his story—but when he does tell it, it will be related in the proper presence, the court and the jury.

It is unlikely that the public wishes to hear anything quite so much as exactly what Frank himself has to say of the charges lodged against him.

It has heard what everybody else, both intimately and distantly concerned, has had to say. It has heard Conley's story from Conley's own lips—but thus far Frank has been as silent as the grave of the dead girl itself!

It is impossible to forecast the effect of Frank's statement upon the jury. It may have as powerful an effect in clearing him as Conley's horrible statement surely must have had by way of then condemning him.

Juries Have Accepted It.

I have seen cases in which the defendant's statement alone evidently served to clear him. I have known juries to accept it as the truth, over and above all the sworn testimony—just as the jury has the unquestioned right to do.

On the other hand, I have seen the defendant's statement fall flat and stale. I have seen it have no more effect upon the jury than rain has upon a duck's back.

It all depends upon the defendant's manner and bearing on the stand, the seeming sincerity of his recital, its plausibility and probability, the character of the man making it, his intelligence and apparent directness of purpose, the necessity of the statement as bearing alone and entirely upon weak points in either his own or the State's case, and many other things.

The defendant's statement presumably dovetails, of course, into the case his lawyers theretofore have made out—and yet I have known the defense to introduce the defendant the first thing, and proceed thereafter to the building of a case around his statement.

As this case is so thoroughly a fight between Conley and Frank—that is, between Conley's evidence and Frank's evidence—it will be intensely interesting to watch and see how eventually the jury views the relative value of both.

Much Rests on Defendant.

Conley's story, as amazing and as shocking as it is in parts, nevertheless has been accepted by many as the truth. Presumably, those people who already have made up their minds still are willing to be convinced—as violent as the presumption may be in some cases—if Frank can convince them.

Upon Frank's statement, therefore, it is entirely possible the entire case may turn finally.

To discredit Frank's statement, to be sure, will be his heavy self-interest and the fact that it is not upon oath and not subject to cross-examination.

To discredit Conley's story, however, is his also heavy self-interest and the fact that, while his story was delivered on oath, his character admittedly is very bad and his numerous previous sworn statements admittedly false in many important details.

The situation thus set up is about as pretty as it could be, from an abstract legal standpoint. If it were a surgical problem we were considering, I should predict that the operation will be beautiful and brilliant in any event—but as for the patient—well, I really could not say!

ONE OF THE FIFTY NEW WITNESSES SUMMONED BY THE PROSECUTION

Miss Fannie Atherson, who has been called to aid State.

Frank's Mother Resents Questioning of Dorsey

The calling of four character witnesses Wednesday opened the floodgates for the State to get before the jury all of its accusations against Frank, and was the direct cause of a frantic outburst on the part of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, who rose from her chair and dramatically denounced Solicitor General Dorsey.

It was the first scene created by any of the members of the prisoner's family. Frank's wife and mother were perceptibly affected when the Solicitor previously was hurling his charges of gross misconduct against the defendant, but both had restrained themselves from any marked demonstration.

Feeling Reaches Bursting Point.

The elder woman persistently had maintained an almost expressionless face while the most abhorrent charges were being made. Save that she looked away from the crowd as if it were a terrible ordeal to listen to the testimony, it would have been impossible to tell that it was one of her loved ones against whom the charges were being made.

Her feelings, however, had reached the bursting point Wednesday. She could stand the attack against her son's character no longer. From the impassive and quietly suffering woman she was goaded to the fury of a tigress.

From the lips of the Solicitor General flowed a stream of implied accusations. He asked about alleged incidents in Frank's office at the factory, about incidents in the girls' dressing room which the Solicitor intimated that Frank invaded without apology or excuse.

The mother of Frank lifted her eyes to the Solicitor. There was in them no longer the look of resignation with which the other charges had been met. In its place blazed hate and outraged mother love. She was willing no longer to await the end of the trial for her son's vindication.

The Solicitor continued. He gave the names of girls of tender years. He narrated circumstances that brought a crimson flood to the face of the younger Mrs. Frank.

"Haven't you heard of these stories?" he asked insinuatingly of the witness, Ashley Jones.

"No, nor you either!" cried the mother.

She was on her feet. The courtroom was astounded at the suddenness and dramatic intensity of the outburst. Persons rose here and there among the spectators, oblivious of the calls for order of the court attaches.

Mrs. Frank stood in hysterical indignation before the Solicitor. She said things to him that were lost in the confusion. She would have continued her tirade had she not been restrained by court deputies and members of her own family who rushed to her side to quiet and comfort her.

"My God, my God," she moaned as she was led sobbing from the courtroom. She was taken home in a hysterical condition. She returned toward the close of the afternoon session, but did not re-enter the courtroom.

If the denunciation affected the Solicitor, he did not show it unless it was by a line of questioning even more severe than he had pursued before.

Testimony Aids Frank.

Jones, an insurance man, in whose company Frank holds a policy, denied that he had heard any of the reports of alleged immorality. He said that the young man's record, in respect to health, habits and morals, had been very thoroughly investigated before the policy was issued. He testified that Frank showed an unusually clean record.

The bars were let down for the introduction of testimony against Frank's character when the defense put on the stand Alfred L. Lane, of Brooklyn, a classmate of Frank in Pratt Institute. Lane said that he had known Frank for fifteen years and that he knew he possessed a good character.

Lane was followed by two other of Frank's classmates.

They were Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, a clerical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J. Both testified as to his good character. Several witnesses intervened and then Ashley Jones was called.

Important testimony was given by Dr. William Owens, who was one of four men who sought to reproduce the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as Jim Conley described it. William A. Fleming took the part of Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley. Conley said that he and Frank carried the body downstairs and returned to Frank's office in about five minutes.

Dr. Owens said that it took them about eighteen and a half minutes to carry out the drama in the pencil factory, exclusive of writing the notes and also exclusive of the time that Conley said he spent in the wardrobe in Frank's office.

If the defense is able to make the jurors believe that it would have taken Frank and Conley eighteen and a half minutes to accomplish this, they will have established what is considered a very strong alibi for the superintendent. To this must be added the eight minutes that Conley declares he was in Frank's wardrobe and about twelve minutes for the writing of the four notes—this is half of the time that it probably would have taken the negro to write them according to the testimony of Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective. This makes a total of thirty-nine and one-half minutes. Conley said they started with the body at 12:56. The thirty-eight and one-half minutes would have brought the time to 1:34 1-2.

But, according to one of the State's own witnesses, Frank had left the factory and had arrived home at 1:30—or, in other words, had arrived home before the disposal of the body could have been accomplished.

Quinn Severely Grilled.

Lemmie Quinn, metal department foreman, received a severe grilling from Solicitor Dorsey in the afternoon, but stuck to his story that he visited the office of Frank at about 12:20 the afternoon of the murder. This is in contradiction of Conley's story, who testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came. The Solicitor displayed affidavits of Quinn in which the foreman said he had been at the factory sometime between 12 and 12:20 o'clock. Quinn said that at the time he made the affidavit he had not estimated the time so closely as he had been able to do since.

Other witnesses of the day were Dr. William S. Kendrick, head of the chair of medicine of the new Atlanta Medical School; Frank Payne, a former office boy for Frank, and Oscar Pappenheimer, a stockholder in the National Pencil Factory.

STEEL WORKERS ENTHRALLED BY FRANK TRIAL

By L. F. Woodruff.

There is one class of men to whom death is supposed to hold no horrors. They can not think of it and earn their daily bread. Were the fear of loss of life to enter their brain for one single second during their daily task they would be as useless as a motorless automobile.

Their pay is high for scorning the grave. They can see one of their companions fall victim to the perils of their calling and go back to work on the same job a few minutes later without a tremor, and encounter those same dangers with footstep firm and their minds only on the work they have to do.

These men are the structural steel workers. They are as picturesque a class as the struggle for dollars has developed. The fascination of their calling is universal. No man can pass the place where a building is slowly reaching its way into the clouds without standing in an awe-struck trance watching these men scamper around between heaven and earth as though they were walking about a place as safe as the quiet walk under the shade trees of Grant Park.

Furnish a Bizarre Feature.

Just across Hunter street from Judge Roan's courtroom, where the factory superintendent is fighting to clear his name of the charge of having killed Mary Phagan, Fulton County's magnificent new temple of justice is nearing completion.

But there is still work to be done on the dizzy heights of the upper stories. The men of the building trades are there and their interest in the dramatic court battle that is being waged within a stone's throw of them is as intense as is the interest of any of those who have sat through the tedious days of the hearing constant spectators of the trial.

These builders, from their lofty working place across the street, can peer through the courtroom windows and see the trial as it progresses. They can not hear a word of the evidence. They miss the forensic clashes of the counsel.

Dare Death to Watch.

But still there is not a moment of the time that the case is in progress that life and limb are not risked by these men as they stare into the courtroom.

They can see Frank as he sits through hour after hour of his great ordeal. They can get glimpses of the faces of his wife and mother, of the witnesses as they take the stand, and of the Judge on the bench. They can see the bulky back of Luther Rosser and the energetic gestures of Hugh Dorsey. That is all.

To see these things they must lean far out from their insecure perches, with death certain if they should fall to the pavement a hundred feet below.

There is but one explanation for their interest. They know a man is fighting for his life in that courtroom across the street.

And while death may have no terrors for them, it has a fascination as subtle as the stare of a serpent's eye to a bird, as strong as the rivets of steel with which they earn their livelihood.

STATE'S SOLE AIM IS TO CONVICT, DEFENSE'S TO CLEAR IN MODERN TRIAL

By O. B. KEELER.

Right in the first jump, please understand that (1) this is merely the opinion of a layman, unlearned in the law; that (2) he may be the only layman in existence who feels this way about it; and (3) the Frank trial is not being singled out in the following comment, except as it is a fair example of the great criminal trials of this country.

* * *

In following the trial of Leo Frank, two points keep prodding me with increasing fervor.

These are the points:

(1) That the prosecution's efforts are centered on producing evidence that will convict Leo Frank.

(2) That the efforts of the defense are devoted to producing evidence that will acquit Leo Frank.

Now, having read thus far, you probably are smiling to yourself at the idea that anybody should undertake to write a newspaper story about a great trial, basing it on such an absurdly simple and obvious observation.

State's Evidence All Damaging.

That (you say) is something everybody knows.

That (you say) is taken for granted.

Nevertheless (I say), that doesn't make it right.

I sat in Judge Roan's courtroom, right at the edge of the jury box, and I heard the State present its case.

Every bit of the State's evidence was damaging to Leo Frank.

If the State of Georgia knew anything good about Leo Frank, or had any evidence that tended to cast a doubt on his guilt of a horrid crime, the State of Georgia kept that information strictly to itself.

I heard the defense begin attacking the evidence offered by the State, and offering (in turn) evidence that tended to show the innocence of Leo Frank.

If the lawyers of the defense knew, down in their hearts, that certain points made by the State were true; if they realized that certain facts were unshakable; if in their investigation they had found certain things that tended to fasten on their client the murder of Mary Phagan—if any of this was in the mind of the defense, it did not get out where the jury could see it.

How About Investigation?

Well (you say), it would be a pretty kind of defense that would produce evidence that would hang the defenant. And (you added) isn't that what the State of Georgia pays its prosecutors for?

For what?

Conviction?

Or INVESTIGATION?

That was the most unmerciful of the prodding points.

Of course, now, the State's attorneys in the Phagan case say they believe Frank is guilty, and equally, of course, the lawyers for the defense declare they are convinced of the innocence of their client. But that is always the case in important murder cases, and furthermore, as I have said, I am not talking about the Frank trial as much as about a system of justice.

I asked a lawyer about it; a widely-read and learned lawyer, with something in his head besides the law he has absorbed.

I said:

"Honestly, now—isn't this system of criminal prosecution all wrong? Oughn't the State have investigators instead of prosecutors? Why should the accused have any defending counsel, if the State were not prosecuting, but making a fair and impartial investigation?"

I thought the idea was highly original.

I learned something, right away.

The widely-read and learned lawyer informed me, kindly but firmly, that that was an Original Idea a good many hundred years ago. That it was THE original idea of dealing with criminal cases, in fact. That it was pretty nearly fixed in the basis of good old English law.

He went on to explain that in the early days when a crime was committed, the proper officer—I forget what his title was—the proper officer started an investigation. If a man apparently was implicated by the first evidence brought to light, that man was detained. If he had already "beat it," that was added to the suspicious circumstances against him, and the pursuit began.

But if he was well in hand, and the case was a regular mystery, the investigator for the Crown, or whatever it was, went into that case exactly like a certified accountant examining a set of books, suspected by the firm of not being correct.

Auditor Has No Interest.

The auditor doesn't care a whoop whether he finds the suspected bookkeeper guilty or innocent. That is, he has no interest at stake. He is paid for making a correct audit. He is paid by the job. Probably, unless his liver is out of whack, he would rather see the poor bookkeeper cleared. But he has no interest in the matter.

Well, it seems from what the lawyer told me, that was the original plan of criminal prosecution by the State.

The State didn't prosecute. It just investigated. If the facts produced by the investigation warranted a jury in "sticking" the accused, well and good. If the evidence warranted the jury in turning him loose, also well and good.

The accused had no "counsel," the way we understand it. If he was a rich person, or had rich friends, he was privileged to employ an investigator, or investigators, who would assist the public investigator in his investigation.

Hired Help Might Convict.

But it was understood that if the hired help turned up anything damning, the daming thing would be allowed to go ahead and damn as hard as it could, without concealment or mitigation on the part of the assistant investigators.

And now, reverting to the enlightened present, what have we on exhibition?

Not singling out the Frank trial, you understand, but in it, as in every big criminal trial in this country, where the accused is able to employ talented counsel, we have the spectacle of two sets of abl lawyers, fighting each other with all the resources of their learning and shrewdness and ability.

The life and honor of the accused may be at stake—the prosecution, once committed to its task, will seek no evidence but what will incriminate him.

The high claims of justice are at stake—the defense must permit no shred of evidence to be presented, saving only what will tend to clear their client.

And He Didn't Explain Why.

It is no fault of the prosecutor that this is so.

And as to the system?

Well, this is just the opinion of a layman, you remember. It may be that there is a good reason in law why the investigator has become a prosecutor, and is paid as such; and why the defendant may employ expensive counsel to combat the investigation — or prosecution — at all points.

There may be a good reason for all this.

Only, my friend, the lawyer, didn't explain it to me.

Relief for Catarrh Sufferers Now FREE

You Can Now Treat This Trouble in Your Own Home and Get Relief at Once

How the Remedy for Catarrh Was Discovered

THIS terrible disease has raged unchecked for years simply because symptoms have been treated while the vicious germs that cause the trouble have been left to circulate in the blood, and bring the disease back as fast as local treatments could relieve it.

C. E. Gauss, who experimented for years on a treatment for Catarrh, found that after perfecting a balm that relieved the nose and throat troubles quickly, he could not prevent the trouble beginning all over again.

On test cases, he could completely remove all signs of Catarrh from nose and throat, but in a few weeks they were back.

By the new method the nose and throat are treated by an effective local remedy applied directly to the affected membranes.

The Elixir, taken into the stomach, has a direct influence upon the mucous membranes of the body and cures the disease by removing the cause.

Careful experiments and investigations have shown that as the troubles were expelled from the nose and throat, the real cause of the disease was overlooked and in a short time the Catarrh would return stronger than ever. Mr. Gauss has gone way ahead of the ordinary methods of treatment and has provided a remedy that

Kills the Germs in the Blood and immediately gives relief to the nose and throat

He perfected the New Combined Treatment, since admitted to be the logical, sure, scientific method.

Reese Jones, of Scranton, Penn., says that after trying many other treatments, he used this new method and— "My nose is now entirely clear and free and I am not bothered by the disease any more. The New Combined Treatment is worth its weight in gold."

Temporary relief from catarrh may be obtained in other ways, but the New Combined Treatment must inevitably be accepted for permanent results.

Sarah J. Cape, Mount Pelia, Tenn., says, "I suffered the pains and distress of catarrh for thirteen years and needless to state, tried nearly every method. But by your new method I was completely cured and you can not imagine the joy that has come over me."

Trial Treatment FREE

This new method is so important to the welfare of humanity, so vital to every person suffering from any form of catarrh, that the opportunity to actually test it and prove its results, will be gladly extended without one cent of cost.

A large trial treatment, with complete, minute directions, will be sent free to any catarrh-sufferer.

Send no money, take no risks, make no promises. Simply clip, sign and mail the coupon and the test package of the New Combined Treatment will be sent fully prepaid, together with the valuable book on Catarrh.

and Ike Liebman pass in an automobile near the Capitol.

Q. You were sitting on the right side of the car?—A. Yes.

Q. Next to the window?—A. No; Mr. Frank was next to the window.

Q. Did you see Mr. Hinchey?—A. No, but I recognized his car.

Q. Do you know the number of his car?—A. No, but I recognized it by its dark color.

Q. How many dark-colored cars are there in the city?—A. Well, the street car struck this one and impressed it upon me. I found out later——

Hooper—Wait a minute. I am not asking what you found out later.

Arnold—Mr. Loeb, you found out later that it was Mr. Hinchey's car, did you not?—A. I did.

Hooper—I object.

Judge Roan sustained the objection.

Miss Carson was excused and Henry Smith, another employee of the pencil factory was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What department are you in?—A. Metal room.

Q. Do you know a man named Barrett?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he ever say anything about getting a reward if Frank was convicted?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he say about it?—A. He said he would get the first hook of about $4,300 because he found the blod and hair.

Q. Anything else?—A. Well, when he passed me he would play like he was counting money.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Has he ever spent any of that imaginary money?—A. No.

Th witness was excused and Charles Lee was called, but did not answer. Harry Lewis, of No. 156 Underhill avenue, Brooklyn, took the stand.

Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Practicing attorney.

Q. Were you ever in the District Attorney's office?—A. I was his assistant.

Q. Do you know Leo Frank?—A. Yes, I knew him when he lived next door to me.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Very good.

The witness was excused without cross-examination.

Herbert Lasher, of Fleischman's, New York, was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. I manage my father's establishment.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes, I was with him at Cornell in 1903-4-5.

Q. Did you live with him?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character, and is it good or bad?—A. Very good.

The witness was excused.

Tells of Man Bleeding on Floor.

Charley Lee, No. 109 Washington street, was the next witness.

Q. Do you remember an accident to a fellow named Duffy in October 1912?—A. Yes.

Q. How was he hurt?—A. His finger was badly cut and bled freely. The blood spurted out.

Q. Where was he taken?—A. To Quinn's office.

Q. Did that take him by the water cooler near the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he bleed there?—A. Yes.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. How much do you get?—A. Thirty-two and one-half cents an hour.

Q. How long have you been getting that?—A. Two weeks.

Q. Who gave you the raise?—A. Mr. Darley.

Q. How large a raise?—A. Two and one-half cents.

Q. Have you talked about it to anyone?—A. No.

Q. Not to the lawyers in the case?—A. No.

Q. They didn't know what you were going to swear when you went on the stand?—A. No.

Q. How did they know about it?—A. I made a statement at the time.

Q. When did you see it last?—A. About two months ago.

Q. Who had it?—A. Mr. Schiff.

Q. Did he say anything?—A. He just wanted to know if I remembered it.

Q. Where did Duffy drop blood?—A. All along here (pointing to the diagram). It was just streaming down.

Q. Well, how large was the largest spot?—A. I couldn't say. It was just all over the floor.

Q. Did he stop anywhere?—A. Right there by the water cooler.

Q. How far from it?—A. About 3 or 4 feet.

Q. How long did he stop there?—A. About 8 or 10 minutes.

Saw Blood Drops on Floor.

Q. He just stood there with the blood dripping?—A. Yes.

Q. You were the only man who saw the accident?—A. Yes.

Q. You are the only one who saw him drop the blood there?—A. No; somebody else saw him.

Q. Who is your father?—A. Henry Lee.

Q. Where did this man stop and spill the blood?—A. In the office. Nowhere else.

Q. Did you see the spot where the blood was found?—A. I saw the spot after it was chipped up.

Q. Did this man Duffy stand at the same spot and drop blood from his fingers?—A. It might have been the same spot.

Q. Wasn't it the same spot?—A. It might have been a step away.

The witness was excused and Sig Montag, an officer of the National Pencil Company, was called to the stand. Rosser questioned him.

Q. How long have you lived in Atlanta?—A. About 25 years.

Q. What was your connection with the pencil factory on April 26?—A. I was treasurer.

Q. Did the mail come to your office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did Frank ever come to your office?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he come there Saturday, April 26?—A. Yes, about 10 o'clock.

Q. How long did he stay?—A. About an hour.

Q. What was your habit prior to twelve months ago about visiting the pencil factory?—A. I went there every Saturday afternoon.

Q. What did you find Frank doing on those Saturdays?—A. Working on the financial sheet.

Plan to Show Conley Lied About Watching.

Q. Mr. Montag, who occupied that first floor up to January 1?—A. The Clark Woodenware Company.

Q. What did the pencil company have to do with it?—A. Nothing, except as an entrance and to use the elevator.

Q. Where were the offices of the woodenware company?—A. In the front of the building.

The defense regards this evidence as extremely important to show that Conley lied about watching for Frank at the front door. They showed by Montag that the pencil company had nothing to do with this floor except as an entrance.

The model of the factory was again brought in to demonstrate the witness' statement.

Rosser—Let's take Sunday morning. Have you a telephone at your home?—A. Yes, about 20 feet from my bed.

Q. Were you aroused by the telephone Sunday morning?—A. No, but my wife was, and she told me someone wanted to speak to me.

Q. What did the voice say?—A. A man wanted to know if I could identify a girl who had been killed in the factory. I referred him to Mr. Darley, who then and now has charge of the help.

Q. Did Mr. Frank come to your home?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he tell you of what had happened and that he had been routed out of bed without any breakfast?

Dorsey—I object to that.

Judge Roan—You can bring out the fact that the witness talked with him, but not what he said.

A. Yes, he told me about him.

Q. Was he nervous?—A. No more nervous than I was when he explained to me what had happened.

Dorsey—I must object again. That is irrelevant.

The objection was sustained.

Q. Was Mr. Frank nervous?—A. Yes; naturally he was nervous in telling of this terrible crime.

Q. Were you nervous?—A. I was.

Q. How did your wife take the news?—A. She was very much agitated and cried.

Q. Did you have a good opportunity for observing Frank? Where was he when he told you of the tragedy?—A. He was in my sitting room and I had a good opportunity of observing him.

Q. Were there any scratches on his face or spots on his clothes?—A. There were not.

Q. Did you go to the factory?—A. I did.

Q. Did you make an examination of the factory?—A. I made a general examination.

Q. Were there any accidents when you used the building the pencil factory is in?—A. Yes; a great many.

Q. Where were the injured people taken?—A. To the front office.

Q. They would have to go down those stairs, wouldn't they?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you hear of Frank being taken to headquarters by the police?—A. Monday.

Calls Frank's Acquaintance Limited.

Q. You have known Frank for a good while. Was his acquaintance large or limited?—A. I would call it limited.

Q. Knowing he had a limited acquaintance, what did you do?—A. I called Mr. Haas, my personal friend.

Q. What did he do?—A. He went to the police station to see Frank. Mr. Haas came back and said he couldn't see Frank.

Dorsey—I object. Are you going to let that go in?

Judge Roan—Yes, it explains the conduct of this man.

Q. Well, what did you do then?—A. Mr. Haas telephoned Mr. Rosser.

Q. What time was that?—A. 11 or 12 o'clock.

Q. What time did he get there?—A. About 40 minutes later.

Judge Roan at this point read to Mr. Dorsey the rule that made this evidence admissible.

Q. You don't know what happened upstairs?—A. No.

Q. How long before Frank left was it after I got there?—A. You got there about 40 or 50 minutes after, Mr. Rosser.

Q. Who was with him?—A. Detective Black and Mr. Haas.

Q. You receive those financial sheets, don't you?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get it that Monday?—A. About 2 o'clock.

Q. Was that financial sheet brought you before or after you got that message about detectives?—A. After.

Q. Who called you?—A. Mr. Schiff. He wanted to know whether I would sanction the employment of detectives and I told him certainly.

Q. Did you give any instructions?—A. Yes, I told him to give the authorities every assistance.

Q. Did you know that Miss Hall, the stenographer, anticipated the raise in her salary before the murder?—A. I don't employ the stenographer and would not have known.

Frank's Friends Not Around Police Station.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Mr. Montag, you said Frank had a limited acquaintance in the city?—A. Yes.

Q. In this patent litigation with the American Pencil Company he came in contact with a number of attorneys, did he not?—A. Yes.

Q. He was president of the B'nai Brith Society and came in contact with lots of people in that organization, did he not?—A. Yes, he came in contact with the members, I suppose. I never went to the meetings.

Q. How many members are there?—A. Four or five hundred.

Q. What did you mean by telling the jury he had a limited acquaintance?—A. I meant the people he knew would not be around the police station.

Q. Did Frank ask for a lawyer?—A. No.

Q. Did he ask for the Pinkertons?—A. I only know what Mr. Schiff said.

Q. Did he explain to you why he was nervous?—A. Yes, he said they took him into a dark room and suddenly turned a light on the girl's body.

Q. Did he say he saw the body?—A. He described it.

Q. What did he say?—A. He said her face was scratched her eye bruised, and her tongue out. I don't remember anything else.

Q. You can't remember all of it?—A. I said I couldn't remember all. Now do not twist what I say.

Arnold—He will if you don't watch him.

Dorsey—I submit that the remark of Attorney Arnold is improper and should be stricken from the record. It is untrue.

Judge Roan—I sustain you.

Charges Dorsey With Heckling Witnesses.

Arnold—It is true and proper and I call for the records to sustain me. The whole trouble is that the Solicitor quarrels with the witnesses instead of cross-examining them.

Dorsey—All I want is for your honor to rule him out of order.

Judge Roan—I have, Mr. Dorsey, go on. Let's not be interrupted by quarreling.

Q. Did you mention to him the fact that he was nervous?—A. No.

Q. Did he say anything about being asked to go to police headquarters?—A. No.

Q. Who made the trade about paying the attorney?—A. I don't know.

Q. You didn't agree to pay Mr. Rosser's fee?—A. No.

Q. No part of it?—A. No.

Q. All you agreed to pay was the Pinkertons?—A. Yes.

Q. Have they been paid?

Rosser—I object to that, your honor.

Dorsey—Your honor, I want to show that these people have made frequent demands for their money and have not gotten it. I want to show the bias on the part of this witness.

Judge Roan—You can ask it.

Q. Have the Pinkertons been paid?—A. No.

Q. Have they asked for the money?—A. No, but they sent two or three bills.

Q. You haven't paid them, have you?—A. No.

Q. You got a report from the Pinkertons daily, didn't you?—A. Practically.

Q. Now, when did you hear about the finding of the stick?—A. When I read it in the report.

Read First of Stick Being Found.

Q. Now, did you tell Mr. Pierce, of the Pinkertons, not to report the finding of the stick and envelope to the police?—A. I did not.

Q. When was there any accident in the National Pencil Factory?—A. There was one big accident about a year ago. A man by the name of Gilbert got his head burst.

Q. Do you remember any other?—A. Not definitely.

Q. Why do you remember this one?—A. It was a very bad accident.

Q. You say Frank brought you the financial sheet Monday afternoon after the murder?—A. He did.

Q. How long after this tragedy was it that the insurance company made you clean up that factory?—A. Some time within the week.

Q. When did you pay for it?—A. I don't remember. The records in my office will show that.

Q. You were in the factory on June 14 with a number of detectives, were you not?—A. I don't remember the day.

Q. Did you telephone the residence of W. D. Brown, a livery stable man, on the afternoon of April 26 that you wanted a horse and buggy?—A. I did not.

At this time court adjourned until 2 o'clock.

President Decides to Dismiss Envoy Wilson.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, it is said, will be dismissed summarily from the diplomatic service of the United States as soon as the State Department verifies the authenticity of the statement of the British Foreign Office relative to its attitude toward Mexico upon which the Ambassador based his criticism.

Senator Bacon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, was called into conference by Secretary of State Bryan to-day on the question of who will carry word to the Senate of the projected action of the department before it is announced officially.

President Wilson and Secretary Bryan, it is said, held a 30-minute conference to-day at which it was decided that Ambassador Wilson should be dismissed without delay and the course of action outlined above was determined upon.

TARIFF ENEMIES OPPOSE EARLY VOTE MOVE

G. O. P. Senators Demand Time to Attack Underwood Measure. Charge Coercion.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—When the Senate assembled to-day Chairman Simmons, of the Finance Committee, asked for unanimous consent for a final vote on the tariff bill August 25. Republican Leader Gallinger objected. Senator Simmons asked why.

"I refuse to be catechised," said Senator Gallinger.

Senator Penrose, of Pennsylvania, interrupted to say that never in the history of the American Government had there taken place a similar instance of legislation in secret as the pending tariff bill.

"For two months," said the Senator, "the Finance Committee and the Democratic caucus had the bill in charge and the country was kept in the dark regarding it."

Bacon Defends Caucus.

Senator Bacon, of Georgia, defended the Democratic caucus action on the bill, and denied emphatically that the President had coerced members of the Senate or that the caucus had exerted coercion.

"Then the Senator is the victim of a bunco game or he is an unsophisticated gentleman from the country," declared Senator Penrose.

Senator Williams, of Mississippi, then said:

"I would suggest that we recall the chaplain so that we may properly give thanks for the conversion of the Senator from Pennsylvania. Of all men to lecture us because of secret action none could have done so with less propriety than the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Promises Democratic Bill.

"To be rebuked in this manner by the Senator is almost equal to the devil rebuking sin. We are the majority party and we are going to put through a tariff bill, just as you would do if you were in the majority.

"The Democrats are going to put through a Democratic tariff bill as far as possible, and we are acting as a party and not as individuals. To that extent we are coerced."

Senator Bristow, of Kansas, said he would never consent to a date for the final vote upon this tariff bill.

Senator Gallinger said that the debate in the Senate on the tariff had opened less than 30 days ago and now it was proposed to close the debate in eleven more days. He pointed out that the debate on the Payne-Aldrich law lasted 80 days.

HEAD OF COUNTY BOARD PRAISES AUTO TOUR

The campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American for an all-Southern highway reaching from Atlanta to San Francisco received another boost Thursday when Shelby Smith, chairman of the Fulton County Board of Commissioners, declared the project to be an epoch in the progress of the South.

"The proposed highway from Atlanta to San Francisco," said Mr. Smith, "is splendid and the most commendable movement for good roads all over the South that has been launched in recent years. This road is unlike other roads, for the coast-to-coast route leads somewhere. In other words, it has a definite point as its destination.

"Each State, as well as each town all along the route, is bound to be materially benefited by this monster highway. We have many railroads in the United States, but how many really good roads have we in proportion—roads that could be used if there were no railroads?

Expects Laws on Topic.

"I repeat that this campaign means big things, not only for Georgia, but for the entire South and Southwest, and I do not hesitate to say I am more pleased than I can tell to know that Hearst's Sunday American has taken up the movement to push it through to ultimate success."

Mr. Smith said further that he expected to see great development in the laws, including the creation of a State highway commission, as a result of just such definite movements as proposed by Hearst's American.

Commissioner Smith's remarks concerning the great highway emphasize the marvelous interest manifested in the campaign which will be inaugurated by The American next Monday. Tuesday Governor John M. Slaton placed his stamp of approval on the campaign, and Wednesday morning the Georgia Senate passed unanimously a resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second District, indorsing the coast-to-coast project.

All of these expressions of approval are distinctly pleasing to Official Trail Blazer Ferguson, according to his statement Thursday.

"We are going to conduct this campaign strictly on a scientific basis," declared Mr. Ferguson, "and intend to check up the entire trip in detail, so that adequate road maps may be prepared, to be compared later preparatory to selecting the very best route from coast to coast.

"I will carry several instruments, including a thermometer, which I shall use to make records daily, in an effort to demonstrate beyond question that the South and Southwest offer the very best facilities for extended motor touring, such as is contemplated on this monster transcontinental highway."

To Make Trip in Easy Stages.

Mr. Ferguson declared the trip would be made in easy stages, so that every detail in connection with the plan for the highway may be examined en route.

Stops will be made in all the principal towns and cities en route, and information concerning the promotion of better roads and interstate highways given to those interested. The first official stop between Atlanta and Birmingham, the first lap of the long journey, will be made at Anniston, Ala.

The official start will be made Monday, following a monster parade of automobiles and motorcycles, including the private car of the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief and various city officials. Plans for this parade were completed Thursday.

HAIR CAME OUT IN BUNCHES

Route No. 3, Box 20A, Broken Arrow, Okla. — "My trouble began with an itching of the scalp of my head. My scalp at first became covered with flakes of dandruff which caused me to scratch and this caused a breaking out here and there on the scalp. It became so irritated until I could not rest at night and my hair would come out in bunches and became short and rough.

"Everything I used would cause it to grow worse and it continued that way for about three or four years. While reading the paper I saw the advertisement of Cuticura Soap and Ointment and sent for a sample. It proved so good that I decided to get some more. I used them as directed and in two weeks I saw a good effect. Now my hair is longer and looks better than I have ever known it to be. I give all the credit of my cure of scalp trouble to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Mrs. Ella Sheffield, Nov. 30, 1912.

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

CANDLER WOULD SELL EUROPE COCA-COLA

An invasion of Europe with Coca-Cola is being contemplated by Asa G. Candler, who Thursday returned to his offices after an extended trip abroad.

"Europe," he said, "has taken a sudden fancy for soft drinks. Ten years ago I sent a man abroad to study the field, and his report was not encouraging, but now things look so promising that we are considering seriously—I do not want to say too much, because no decision has been reached—but we are considering a vigorous campaign abroad.

Europe "Tempting Field."

"Ice, you know, is not served generally as here. One must ask for it even in the best hotels. But Europe all at once has found out that iced drinks are good, and wants them. It is a very tempting field."

"I am just as cheerful as I was when I left here," said Mr. Candler, when reminded of his optimistic interview in Hearst's Sunday American on the eve of his departure, in which he remarked that he saw nothing but prosperity ahead for Atlanta. Mr. Candler reasserted that he sees no cause for changing his opinion.

"Europe is full of American buyers; I met them everywhere," he continued. "They are buying extensive lines, they tell me, and have every confidence they will sell their goods at profitable prices.

Tourists Prove Cash Plentiful.

"The flood of American tourists in Europe shows, too, that there can be no particular shortage of funds, for travel in Europe is pay, pay, pay.

"Financial conditions abroad are disturbed because of the talk of a war which never will happen, and because of the Balkan war, which actually has burned up great amounts of money.

"Europe must look to America as Israel did to Egypt in Bible days for corn.

Impressed by Immigrants.

"I was impressed most by the tide of immigration to America. On the Caronia alone were 1,200 emigrants from Europe. What will we do with these people? Will we make them like ourselves or will they mold us? Europe looks to its past, America to its future. What will this future be? That is the most interesting thing I have to think about as a result of my trip.

"Trite as it may be, I must say that I was glad all the while to be an American, and I saw nothing abroad ahead of Atlanta."

House Defeats Bill Giving Risk Firms Investment Liberty

A bill designed to enable insurance companies to invest their funds without the consent and approval of the Comptroller General was defeated in the House of Representatives Thursday morning, by a vote of 70 to 64. A motion to reconsider, by Ledbetter, of Polk, was defeated 84 to 33. Mr. Ledbetter's intention, he stated, was to table the bill.

The original bill passed by the Senate provided that the investments should consist of United States bonds or real estate, and that loans could be made on "real estate acquired for office purposes." The bill limited the investments to 10 per cent, the $30,000 limitation being added after the bill reached the House.

LONG SERVICE AT LAST SESSION OF HOUSE

Members Warble Camp Meeting Hymns While Waiting for Appropriations Measure.

With nothing to do but wait for the Senate to conclude its consideration of the appropriations bill, the House of Representatives convened for the final session of the year at 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon, with the members intent on having a good time and showing their prowess in the world of song. Just prior to adjournment Thursday morning James of Gilmer County was chosen "official song-hister," and he will start the ball rolling on all the old-time hymns. He will be assisted by Bob Blackburn, of Fulton County, who, though small in stature, has a voice that would do credit to an elephant.

Blackburn has been rehearsing the choir—or the "gang," as he calls it—for several days, and after the House adjourned Thursday morning he put the finishing touches to his work. "'Tis the Old-Time Religion" is the favorite hymn of the members, and parodies ringing in the names of Speaker Burwell, the Rules Committee and prominent members of the House have been arranged for the concert.

House Work Is Completed.

The House Thursday morning practically concluded its work, with the exception of receiving the appropriations bill from the Senate. The measures passed were all Senate measures, and most of them passed the House without a fight. Those that met defeat were as follows:

A bill providing that trust companies may be county administrators.

A bill to authorize judges to revise the jury lists of the smaller counties yearly instead of eevry two years.

The latter bill developed in the greatest fight of the morning. Wisdom, of Forsyth, led the fight in favor of the bill, declaring that the smaller counties have as much right to have their jury lists revised annually as the larger ones. Representative Hardeman declared, in a speech opposing the bill, that it was an attempt to induce the House to settle a political dispute in Gilmer County and the Blue Ridge Judicial District. Smith, of Fannin, also opposed the bill, while Moss, of Cobb, and Darrough, of Franklin, favored it.

Many Senate Bills Passed.

The following bills of general importance already passed by the Senate, were passed by the House:

A bill to provide for safety signboards at certain designated points along railroad tracks.

A bill to amend the portion of the code relatnig to the boards of directors of navigation companies, so the directors can number not less than three nor more than fifteen.

A bill to amend section 414 of the penal code of 1910, so as to permit the running of freight trains on Sunday.

A bill to provide for the maintenance of approaches to bridges on county lines.

Two companion bills regulating the calling out of the State militia by the Governor, and providing that the Sheriff of the county to which they are called shall command them, were tabled on motion of Shuptrine, of Chatham, killing them for this session.

Asa G. Candler Views Big Buildings Abroad

Return to Local Realty Market Expected—$75,000 in Lots and Improvements.

The return of Asa G. Candler from his first trip to Europe is expected to have a stimulating effect on local real estate, since it is anticipated that Mr. Candler will soon begin realty operations again in Atlanta. Mr. Candler has been virtually out of the local market for some time, and his movements have consequently been watched with more than ordinary interest. Desiring to extend in other fields, Mr. Candler has acquired property in New York, Chicago, Baltimore and Washington, and this has kept him busy. Like William T. Healey, who finds it impossible to build on the Elkin Drug corner at Five Points because he is occupied around the postoffice Mr. Candler has had his hands full. This explains to a considerable extent why there has been no improvement on the extensive Candler frontage at the northwest corner of Peachtree and Ellis streets.

Mr. Candler arrived in Atlanta Wednesday and was at his office Thursday morning. Asked if he intended to begin realty operations, he said: "Maybe after a while, but just now I will let the other fellow."

One of the things that impressed Mr. Candler greatly in London was the modest height of office buildings. Gazing on six-story "skyscrapers" he was impelled to compare them with Atlanta's towering structures. There was nothing in the smoky London streets that rose above the Peters Building, the Lowndes Building, the McKenzie Building, the Temple Court Building, the Gould Building and a half dozen other structures which have long been outstripped by Atlanta skyscrapers.

In Liverpool, however, Mr. Candler gazed upon the pride of all England—a ten or twelve story building at Pier Head.

Real estate conditions on the Continent were found to be somewhat unusual. In England, explained Mr. Candler, only 12 per cent of the landowners live on and cultivate the land they own. The remaining 88 per cent live abroad and away from their tracts. "In that country," he said, "there is so little land and so many people, while in America there is so much land and so comparatively few people. One thing I found characteristic—the universal bowing down before royalty and the eating of potatoes."

Lots Bring $25,200.

J. R. Smith and W. D. Manley, owners, have sold through Dr. Joel T. Daves and John H. Maddox, of the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency, 63 lots at East Point, on Main street and Eubanks, Harrison, Maryland and Pennsylvania avenues, to a client, for $25,200, or $400 per lot. Five of these are improved, and the new owner will improve the balance with small houses costing a total of about $46,400.

The lots average 50 by 150 feet.

Many New Residences.

Announcement was made Thursday of many new residences which will soon be built in Peachtree Heights Park, the E. Rivers subdivision to the west of Peachtree road and a few hundred yards north of Peachtree Creek.

Mr. Rivers next spring will start the erection of a $30,000 two-story residence on a 6-acre tract on Wesley avenue near the homes of Clark Howell and General Clifford L. Anderson. Mr. Rivers has combined two 100-foot lots, and his tract widens at the rear. His location is on the north side of the thoroughfare, half a block from the junction of Habersham drive and a few hundred yards west of Peachtree. In this immediate neighborhood is the newly started home of Hunt Chipley.

F. P. Ayers has bought lot 10 of block 16 in Peachtree Heights Park, 100 by 400 feet on Wesley avenue, and will build a handsome residence.

Edgar Watkins has bought on Rivers road lot 19 of block 11, 2 1-2 acres with 150 feet of frontage, and will likewise build. Mr. Watkins lives on West Peachtree, and he is expected soon to sell his present home.

Mrs. Margaret C. McGovern has bought lot 12 of block 10 on the same road, 100 by 275 feet, and will build.

Mrs. Lily C. Beall owns lot 9 of block 9 on North Muscogee avenue, and she will also erect a home in the near future.

Sam H. Pegram will start in a few days the erection of his house at the southeast corner of Muscogee avenue and Rivers road, and E. R. Kirk is building on Andrews avenue. Others who will soon move to the country in this subdivision are J. Bulow Campbell, E. Lee Worsham and David Woodward.

Mrs. Brenner has broken ground for a two-story brick veneer dwelling on the east side of Peachtree near Mayson's avenue and directly south of E. Anthony's home.

Interesting Small Sales.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company report the sale for Mrs. M. E. Broom to Mrs. Nora E. Bennett of a house and lot, 50 by 150 feet, on John Wesley avenue, College Park, for $2,500, and the following in their Howell Mill road subdivision:

To J. J. Campbell, a 54 by 145-foot lot on Belle Meade avenue, $600; to C. G. Moore, R. H. Vance and A. L. Nicholson, same.

Marietta Store Lot Sold.

J. T. Stover has bought from a client of the A. J. & H. F. West real estate agency a cottage on Gordon street, West End, south of Georgia avenue, for $2,500, and the West agency reports the sale for H. F. West to Dr. W. E. Beckham of a 25 by 100 foot store property on Marietta street, near Hampton street, for $2,000, and the resale of the same to J. Frank Beck.

Satisfactory Strength Test.

Building Inspector Ed R. Hays has reported the most satisfactory strength test for concrete beams ever made in Atlanta. This was for the beams of the Red Men's new wigwam at No. 86 Central avenue, which supported at the middle a freight car of cement, a car of sand and a lot of hollow tile—160,000 pounds—with maximum of one-fourth of an inch deflection in 24 hours. The wigwam, says Mr. Hays, has the longest between-support beams in the city. Longer beams are in the Forsyth Theater, but they differ in that they are built after the cantilever system.

MOORE ATTORNEY EXPLAINS CHARGE

Declares Allegations in the Suit Against Former Macon Pastor Did Not Justify Reports.

O. C. Hancock, prominent attorney of Macon, in a letter to The Georgian, declares that the allegations in his suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore, a Baptist minister of Andersonville, formerly of Macon, do not support the sensational statements that the pastor extorted $1,500 from his own brother as a price for silence in court as to his brother's alleged intimacy with Mrs. Moore. Here is the letter:

Editor of The Atlanta Georgian:

Certain publications in reference to my suit against the Rev. E. T. Moore have done me and several of his brothers an injustice. In the first place, the allegations in my suit do not support the sensational statements published in the newspapers.

There had been rumors connecting the name of Mrs. E. T. Moore with that of L. V. Moore, a brother of her husband, but my suit did not allege that. It was stated in the press merely that the charges involved a brother of E. T. Moore without giving any initials of that brother, which, of course, directed public attention to men against whom not even any suspicion had been cast.

My fee was settled, and I trust that the incident has been closed.

Very truly yours,
O. C. HANCOCK.

Camden Veteran Is Stricken Fatally in Street by Apoplexy

Allen Deas, 72 years old, died Wednesday night from a stroke of apoplexy, as he was on his way to the boxing match at the Auditorium. He was a native of Camden, S. C., and had, with his wife, been visiting his children in Atlanta for several days.

In company with his son-in-law, L. W. Watson, Mr. Deas had reached the Grand Theater on Peachtree street, when he fell. He was taken into the Elkin Drug Store, but failed to revive and died in five minutes.

Mr. Deas was a prominent citizen of Camden, and a Confederate veteran. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Allen Deas, Jr., of Atlanta, and John Deas, of Montgomery, Ala.; two daughters, Mrs. Lynch Read, of Plantersville, S. C., and Mrs. L. W. Watson, of this city.

The body is at Patterson's chapel waiting the arrival of his son, Allen, Jr., from South Carolina, when funeral arrangements will be made.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE HAS NOT PUT OIL LETTERS BEFORE LOBBY PROBERS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 14.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

Slayer Freed Under $5,000 Bonds Raised By Engineer Friends

W. D. Partee, the Georgia Railroad engineer who killed another engineer, Sam Jackson, a short while ago, was released from the Tower Thursday morning under a $5,000 bond, furnished by a number of engineers, friends of Partee. Bond was granted by Judge J. T. Pendleton following application for bail by Partee. A plea of self-defense was made.

The killing grew out of remarks which Jackson was quoted as saying about Partee being familiar with another engineer's wife. Her husband went to Partee and the two of them started in search of Jackson. They met near the Georgia Railroad roundhouse and the shooting followed, Jackson being killed almost instantly.

A number of Partee's friends were at the Tower Thursday morning to greet him on his release from the Tower.

Angry Bachelors to 'Strike' Because of Tax; Girls With 'Em

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

REIZ, REUSS, Aug. 14.—A "general strike" of the eligible bachelors is threatened here to-day because of the State tax placed on those who should marry but won't.

"We men must stand together," is the slogan of the 50-odd bachelors' associations, organized to oppose the laying of the tax. And the girls, most of them, are with the men, declaring they are perfectly capable of looking after the selecting of a life partner.

The latest development is th preparation of a ptition by marriagable young women of Reuss begging for the remission of taxation on the ground that the Government's action is removing their only hope of escaping spinsterhood.

COCHRAN DENIES OPPOSING REFORM

Voted Against Tax Bill Out of Hate for "Spy System," Not to Aid Candidacy, He Says.

Ralph O. Cochran, member of the Georgia Legislature and candidate for United States Senator, in a statement issued Thursday made denial of the accusations heedeclared appeared in a morning newspaper concerning his attitude toward school appropriations and tax equalization.

"The feature that I regret," the statement declares, "is the insinuation that I cast my votes this way on account of my candidacy for the United States Senate. I wish to say that I would have voted just as I have done.

"The assertion that I opposed equalization in all the forms in which it has been presented is not true. I have uniformly been opposed to the State board and spy system that has become a part of this law. And when I voted for a 7 per cent reduction on the appropriations for the University of Georgia and the Technological School, my vote was for the same reduction in the common school fund of the State as well. I did not discriminate.

"The hue and cry has been to get the State out of debt, and it occurred to me that it would be wise to concur in the Senate amendments and hold the appropriations down for the next two years."

FIND MAIL STOLEN THREE YEARS AGO

Letters Uncovered by Workmen Between Walls of the Depot at Decatur.

Remodeling of the Georgia Railroad depot in Decatur has served to partially clear up a series of mail robberies three years old.

In 1910, about the time Agnes Scott College opened for the year, letters addressed to college officials and students and citizens of Decatur began to disappear. Some of them contained checks and money orders, and complaints by the hundred were filed. Postoffice inspectors worked, but could find no clew, and the investigation was finally given up as hopeless.

But the other day workmen at the depot found all the missing letters stacked behind the plastering. A hole large enough to admit a man's hand was found. Through this hole the letters had been placed between the plastering and the outer wall. Some of the letters still contained checks. The letters had all been opened.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the postmaster, is now engaged in forwarding the long-delayed letters to the addressees. She is writing a note of explanation to accompany each letter.

The theory has been advanced that the letters were taken by some railway mail clerk and handed out to a trusted confederate in Decatur, who would extract what money and negotiable paper he would find and then place the letters in hiding behind the plastering in the depot.

There is no clew to the guilty parties.

SENATE WILL RESTORE $280,000 EXCESS OVER REVENUE TO BUDGET

With the close of the 1913 session of the General Assembly but a few hours away, Senate leaders Thursday morning, following a conference with Governor Slaton, decided to recede from the Senate's action on appropriations, thereby restoring the $280,000 excess of disbursements over revenues. This action will be concurred in probably in a night session Thursday.

The decision to recede was made on indirect recommendation of Governor Slaton who, according to his own statement, will have sufficient revenues to more than balance the $280,000 deficit.

"The silver lining has been removed from behind the dark clouds," said the Governor after the conference, "and I am now prepared to announce that the State Treasury will have more than enough to make up the difference as appropriated by the House and rejected by the Senate.

Governor Lauds Assembly.

"I am exceedingly pleased to be able to make this announcement, and in this connection I wish to congratulate the legislators for they work which they have performed. At times there have been differences, but in the end everything has worked out satisfactorily and all the huge financial obstacles which loomed up before us in the early part of the session have been removed. I feel sincerely that the lawmakers of the State may go to their homes with the knowledge that they have done a good summer's work that will redound to the glory and add to the progress of the State and her people."

According to the Governor's figures, the State Treasurer will have something like $500,000 in current revenues to meet over the $280,00 deficiency which was passed by the House and then rejected by the Senate.

The Senate Thursday prepared for action on appropriations in the closing session. Among the bills which were passed was the inheritance tax measure, sent over from the House. The vote was unanimous. The House automobile tax law, appropriating the fees annually collected to the road fund of the State, also was passed after spirited debate in which an amendment of the Senate committee giving the funds to the general State fund was defeated. The bill giving the custody of the child to the mother also was passed in a 30-minute extension of the morning session.

Hart Granted Privileges.

Upon motion of Senator McNeil, of the Twenty-fourth, the Senate indorsed a resolution agreeing to allow Tax Collector Hart to continue his services as an attorney for the State in suits against certain railroads before the Supreme Court. Mr. Hart's nomination will be confirmed by both Houses Thursday afternoon.

Preparations for passage of final bills had to monopoly on the time and attention of the Senators, who are much perturbed over the controversy between Senator McNeill and the Commissioner of Agriculture. Outwardly everything is smooth, but the Senators are free in discussing the matter among themselves.

The controversy, which almost ended in a serious cutting affray between the Macon Senator and the Commissioner, took place Wednesday afternoon in President Anderson's private room in the Senate Chamber.

McNeill and Price Quarrel.

According to eyewitnesses, Senator McNeill met Mr. Price in the room just after taking part in a heated debate on the bill to provide for the printing of the agricultural bulletins.

"Well, you got your bill through, you old lobbyist," said Senator McNeill to Mr. Price in a spirit of levity.

"Yes, but your statement on the floor of the Senate was not exactly true."

It was here the eyewitnesses say, that the fireworks started, Senator McNeill inquiring of the Commissioner as to whether or not he (Price) intended to call him a liar.

Price, it is said, repeated his statement in substance, whereupon Senator McNeill drew his knife, at the same time telling Price that he would "cut his throat." Dr. W. C. Bryant grabbed the Senator's arm and drew him back. The Senator broke away, it is said, but was persuaded from going further by a number of Senators who had gathered.

It is understood that both Senator McNeil and Mr. Price are willing to let the matter drop where it is.

Primary Bill Goes Over.

Following a spectacular filibuster led by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, the Senate late Wednesday afternoon postponed action on the proposed primary bill until next session. This bill was killed Wednesday morning, but was resurrected by its friends, including Senator Tarver, in the afternoon. After a sharp parliamentary skirmish Senator Harrell succeeded in getting the floor, whereupon he blandly announced that he intended to stay here until the hour of adjournment. The Senator filibustered for a half hour when the supporters of the bill decided to stop the flow of oratory by agreeing to postpone action on the bill until next year.

The Senate also adopted the House resolution providing for a commission to investigate school book conditions in Georgia with an amendment. A resolution giving the Governor the power to act in the Ducktown copper matter was also passed, as was the bill creating a commission form of government for Columbus.

The August Sale of Undermuslins

A sale of undermuslins to live long in the memory of Atlanta women!

There is no fair way to compare it with any that they have ever been invited to. Its opportunities and economies are too great, in proof whereof we submit the prices below, and offer this suggestion to guide you as to whether you could possibly afford to miss the sale---the garments are those that won their way into the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. stocks because they were worth their former prices, the reductions are true and real.

The woman who knows Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose values at regular prices need not be told what to expect in the way of sheer fabrics, of soft laces and dainty embroideries.

What an opportunity, then, it is for women in general, for brides-to-be in particular, even for brides-to-be within six months or a year!

Read on!

Gowns

Formerly $1.25, $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $2.25, $2.50 to $3.00, are $1.25

Formerly $3.25, $3.50 to $5.00, are $1.59

Those now 95c show yokes and sleeves trimmed with shadow, imitation cluny and round thread laces; short sleeves, slip-over styles. Those now $1.25 are more elaborate, many with Empire yokes, medallions of embroidery surrounded by fine laces. Those now $1.59 have exquisite French valenciennes and shadow lace trimmings. Some are hand-embroidered. The nainsook is a wonderfully soft sheer fabric.

Princess Slips

Formerly 95c to $1.00, are 69c

Formerly $1.50 to $2.00, are 95c

Formerly $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.98

At 69c you may choose from a number of serviceable and neatly trimmed styles with linen laces in both the yokes and the flounces. Many of those at 95c have imitation Irish crochet laces in yokes and flounces. Others round thread and cluny laces and embroideries, ribbon-run—a fine variety. Those at $1.98 are truly charming affairs made dainty with fine laces and ribbon-run embroidery. All are flat trimmed and narrow.

French Combinations that were $7.50 to $15.00 are marked now, $2.98. Corset Cover and Circular Cut Drawers. The hand-embroidery---done only as the French can---is in eyelet and floral designs. Some are trimmed with hand-made cluny laces.

Petticoats

Formerly $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50, are 69c

Formerly $2.00, $3.00 to $5.00, are $1.59

Many of those at 69c are the straight petticoats with narrow flounces of embroidery that women want for wear under the princess slip. Others show wider and more elaborate flounces of ribbon-run embroideries. Those at $1.59 are notable values, even in this sale—the materials would cost much more than the $1.59. Any number of lace and embroidery trimmed styles and one is as pretty as another. Also at this price are sheer mull petticoats in pink, light blue and lavender, trimmed with laces and satin rosettes.

Princess Slips

Formerly $7.50 to $15.00 (French) are $3.25

Formerly $7.50 to $12.00 (American Made) are $3.25

The French hand-made slips are reduced to this extremely low price because the skirts are wider than is now the vogue, but the smart women will quickly see how to convert them into the narrow style and save a hand-embroidered flounce for another. The hand-embroidery is beautifully worked. The American-made slips are elaborate with fine laces and embroideries and ribbons, in yokes, in panels, in flounces, cluny, filet and valenciennes lace.

French hand-made petticoats that were $10.00 to $25.00, are now $6.98. The embroidery is in floral and eyelet designs. They are the wide skirts that you will doubtless cut down. Only a few of these.

HUERTA'S BLUFF CALLED; HEARS ENVOY LIND

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—Special Envoy John Lind, sent here on a diplomatic mission by President Wilson, finally has established direct communication with President Huerta despite Huerta's repeated announcements that he would not recognize Lind as an Ambassador or receive him officially.

It was learned here to-day that Foreign Minister Gamboa is the agency through which Mr. Lind was able to communicate with President Huerta, although it is not known whether or not Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy has presented the note brought by Mr. Lind from the State Department.

It has begun to appear that Huerta's bluff of defiance has been called. No steps have been taken by the Mexican Government for the expulsion of Mr. Lind, although President Huerta declared this would be done. Indications are that Lind's presence will be tolerated, although the Government will not go out of its way to assist him in bringing peace.

"The result of that fight, which was an overwhelming victory for the Government, proves conclusively that we are able to maintain our own" said Blyanquet. "The Government forces are winning in every section of the republic, and we will soon be able to restore peace without outside aid.

"Despite all the hindrances thrown in our way by the United States Government, we have been making progress since Victoriano Huerta was elected President. President Huerta is a constructive executive. In addition to restoring peace he is building up a strong diplomatic corps abroad and is inviting the investment of foreign capital."

Mrs. Lind, wife of the envoy, who was indisposed upon her arrival here, has recovered. Her ailment arose chiefly from fear for her husband's safety.

Ambassador Lind now has headquarters at the United States Embassy.

Diaz to Offer Valuable Concessions to Japanese.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—It was learned here to-day from an authentic source that Colonel Felix Diaz, en route to Japan to thank Japan for taking part in the Mexican centennial, carries with him a proposal for valuable concessions to Japan upon the west coast.

The Government hopes to establish a big Japanese colony in Sinaloa and Sonora, where small farms will be conferred upon each immigrant who promises to remain in the republic and respect its laws. Marine and fishing concessions will be offered to a Japanese Government steamship line and a big depot for coaling ships may be built near Guayamas.

The Foreign Department is striving to get on familiar relations with Japan for a number of reasons. The principal one, it is pointed out, is that Mexico's ranks of workers have been decimated by war and labor is needed here.

Fresh capital is sought and it is believed that Japanese are as efficient as any others in opening up the country's resources.

Envoy Wilson Regarded As Deliberate Meddler.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The sensational re-entrance of Henry Lane Wilson into the Mexican situation has brought the administration face to face with the dilemma of either discharging the Ambassador at once or of ignoring his attacks on the British Foreign Office, which, coming from a man still a member of the American diplomatic service, is unprecedented. Ambassador Wilson's statement is regarded in administration circles as a deliberate attempt to muddle a situation which was beginning to clear satisfactorily.

The progress Envoy Lind has been making in Mexico City in bringing about a condition of affairs favorable to the presentation of the President's proposal is taken to mean that he has all the qualifications of a trained diplomat for the difficult task in which he is now engaged. The feeling is growing that the risk of serious trouble with Mexico over his entrance into the treacherous arena of Mexican politics has passed.

State Department officials refuse to say whether they expect Mr. Lind to call on President Huerta to-day, although there is a strong impression that he will do so.

Rip! Rip! Pretty Girl Blushes and Faints

DENVER, Aug. 14. — Downtown streets were congested to-day when thousands of people thronged the business section to greet the Knights Templar Conclave vicitors this week.

One incident was quite embarrassing to a pretty girl and her escort.

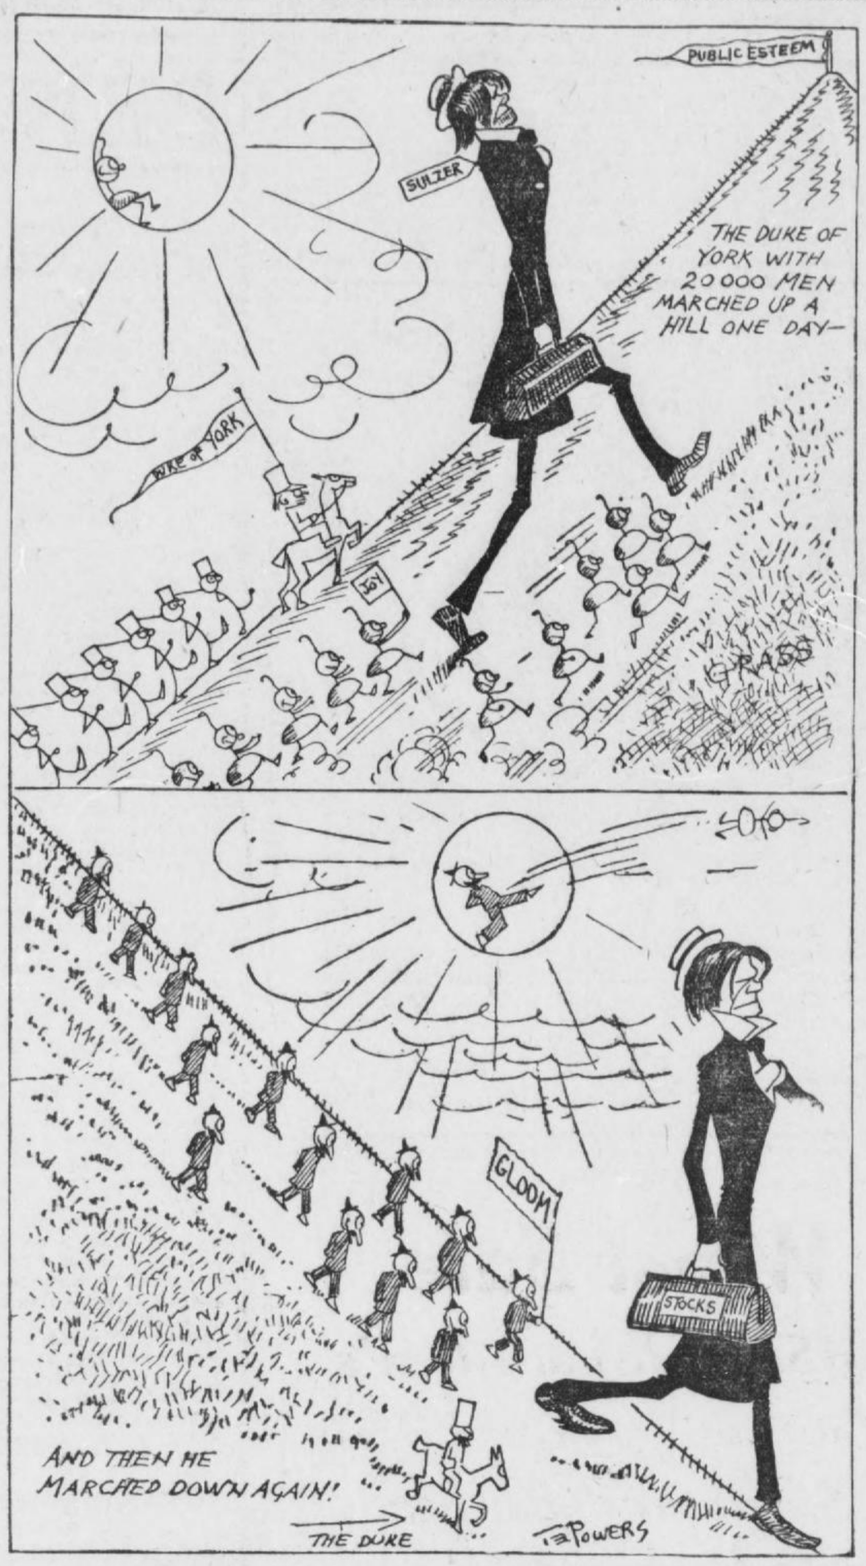

The two found themselves wedged hopelessly in the crowd. The man tried to free his companion, and as he grasped her hands and pulled something ripped.

In a moment what had been the girl's skirt lay limp and loose at her feet. She fainted.

Policemen forced the men to fall back, and the young woman's escort considerately and blushingly wrapped a coat around her.

Bulgarians Stirring Mutiny Among Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—Three Bulgarian army officers were arrested by Turks in Adrianople to-day charged with being spies. Word was received by the War Office to-day that documents had been found on the prisoners showing that they were trying to create a mutiny in the Turkish army. They will be court-martialed.

These arrests and the information which they disclosed showed that Bulgaria will not remain passive so long as Turkey is in possession of Adrianople.

Militant Firebugs Taunt Government

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Firebrands among the young militant suffragettes extended their depredations to the Isle of Man to-day. Laxey Glen Gardens were destroyed by fire, with a loss of $25,000.

The women left placards scattered about the ruins taunting the Government for its inability to find the women who have been carrying on an organized campaign of incendiarism.

Southeast Georgia Crops in Fine Shape

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Farmers in this section are complaining of the hot, dry winds, which they say will prove disastrous to the cotton crop if they continue long. The crop is in splendid condition and with several more well distributed rains this section will make a splendid yield.

Augusta received more than 500,000 bales of cotton in 1911, and this year expects to receive about the same amount.

CHARLTON IS TAKEN TO ITALY FOR TRIAL

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Dapper and self-possessed, Porter Charlton, who confessed murdering his wife in their villa at Lake Como, Italy, June 10, 1910, started for Italy, where he must stand trial. Two officers of the Royal Italian Carabineers took young Charlton on board the liner Rea d'Italia at the York street pier.

Charlton was in a happy mood apparently. Only once did he display any emotion. That was when he bade good-bye to his uncle, John Charlton, in the Hudson County jail. The young prisoner sobbed as he wrung his uncle's hand.

"I believe that I will be free to come back home before the year is out," declared the self-confessed slayer.

"Stick it out, boy, and keep your courage up," said John Charlton in parting.

With an officer on either side of him, young Charlton waved good-bye to those on the pier as the liner steamed down the bay.

Eleventh street is the principal outlet to Wynnton and all of the section east of the city, and thousands of persons cross the tracks every day.

The Central of Georgia undertook to construct the tracks after permission had been denied it by the city officials.

COMMISSION RULE IS GIVEN MARIETTA

House Passes Bill to Change the City's Charter—Accepts Senate Amendment.

A bill providing for changes in the charter of Marietta to give the Cobb County city a commission form of government was adopted by the House Thursday morning by a vote of 98 to 4.

The bill had been disposed of by the House, but was referred back by the Senate, which had added an unimportant amendment.

The bill provides that the proposition to change the charter shall be submitted to the people of Marietta at a special election to be called by the Mayor within 30 days.

The consideration of the bill brought forth the usual fight between the members of the Cobb County delegation. Mr. Cheney is the author of the bill.

Mr. Moss, who always opposes Mr. Cheney's measures, endeavored to gain the passage of an amendment that the commission should not assume any new debt or any pre-existing debt of the town. Mr. Cheney declared the Moss amendment would kill his bill, and asked the House to vote it down. The amendment was defeated, 69 to 38.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Well, we can't stand here on the street," laughed Helen. "Let's go somewhere for tea—where we can really talk."

"Come to my studio! I've got the quaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus, laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobble-stoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dust-cloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over here—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

"Just look around—I'll be back in a minute," as she caught up a small pitcher and ran out bareheaded.

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the living room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare, and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not, we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! It isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners, and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes, it isn't bad," mused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week, put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's seemed only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a brocaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk—and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shot and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She hears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school lunches is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

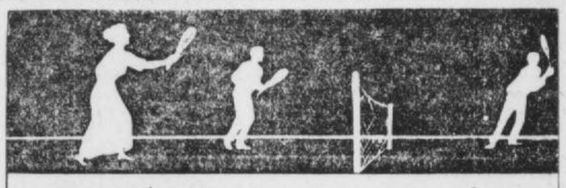

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well, they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

As Mr. Gryce was buying the tickets, Dr. Molesworth whispered in his ear:

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out from under the shadow. You look almost brilliant to-day."

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose [illegible] and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you, here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Fashions of the Moment

No. 1.

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

Then they left him and the Jew gazed at the closed door.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall. But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisitor was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

"Praise be the Lord!" he sighed, when he saw the starlit sky above his head. He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused; he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had failed him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

JOHNNY EVERS PROVES HE IS BOSS OF CUBS

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 14.—All doubts as to who is manager of the Cubs have been dispelled during the past few days, for Jawn Evers is not only the Keystone King, but he rules with an iron hand, and those who dare to resent his ruling power have been relegated to the minors or disposd of in some other manner.

It is less than a week since the manager of the Cubs learned through the columns of a certain morning newspaper that he was about to be dethroned.

In other words, according to the word of one who claimed to have the inside info, Jawn was about to be Maderoized.

Your humble servant hurried to the throne of the Keystone King in an effort to learn just hom badly King Jawn felt over the sad news.

"If all of the sport scribes in Chicago were as certain of their jobs as I am of mine," said Jawn, "they would be purchasing benzine buggies on the installment plan. Some scribes can't get real news, so they manufacture it.

"The main trouble with the ball club has been that there were too many players on the club who thought they knew more about running the affairs of the club than does the owner or manager."

Rather pointed words, these, but they flowed as freely from Jawn's mouth as milk and honey in that land where one never knows hunger.

The cross-examiner shot a few pointed questions at the King.

"To whom do you refer?" was the first one, and Jawn replied:

"Well, there are a number of pitchers on my staff who know so much about pitching that they refuse to take any orders," was the rather evasive reply.

"Name them," was the next hot one fired at Jawn.

"I'd rather not just now, but it will all come out in the wash," spake the oracle.

Stop, look, listen and cogitate.

Reulbach Let Out.

Ed Reulbach has been traded to Brooklyn. Overall has been forwarded to Frisco by parcel post and Lurid Lew Richie will grace Kansas City with his august and comical presence.

Nuff sed. Who are the pitchers who were treading on Jawn's artistic bunions?

Reulbach, Overall and Richie, and they are no longer Cubs.

That's the answer. John Evers is ruler of the Cubs, and he has been given to understand that his job is as secure as the Constitution of the United States.

Evers Shows Hand.

He intends to manage the affairs of the club without either outside or inside influences or assistance, and when he finds a person in the little family who can't see things his way, it's a 10 to 1 bet that person is going to enjoy some scenery en route to somewhere.

True, neither Overall, Reulbach nor Richie has shown anything aside from an enthusiastic desire to connect with the pay roll this season, and that alone is reason for a change of climate for the trio, but the fact that they toiled under Chance when Evers was but a common layman and with them is ample evidence that they are included among the pitchers "who know too much about pitching to take orders."

The developments in the Cub camp during the past week mean much for the future of the Cubs.

They mean that President Murphy is determined to inject new blood into his ball club.

He has about decided that the old Cub machine that won three pennants is becoming worn and that the club that won a pennant two years ago can not be depended upon to repeat five years hence.

In other words, when the Cubs board the rattler for the sunny climes of Florida next March there will be a number of familiar physiogs missing.

No Shift on Infield.

It is the firm belief of yours truly that the Cub infield will be intact next season, with Sater at first, Evers on the throne and Zim at third. We are making no prognostications as to who will jerk the pill out of the dust in and around short.

Fred Williams will be among those who will cavort in the outer pastures, and further than that affiant sayeth not.

It will be a new club in the way of pitchers, and there may be a new face behind the bat, which means that another face, familiar to all the baseball fans, will be missing. No names mentioned, but he couldn't get along with Mrs. Britton.

Evers will have a club that will answer to him and not try to dictate the managerial policies.

Overall, Reulbach and Richie have outlived their usefulness with the Cubs. They may show a flash of class with the clubs to whom they have been sent, but they will never wear Cub uniforms again.

This wholesale canning business leaves Evers with six twirlers to finish the season, Cheney, Humphries, Lavender, Pierce, Smith and Stack.

And the season will end in a few short weeks, then—watch for some new developments and some young twirlers.

PROUGH AND MAYER ARE SOLD TO CHICAGO SOX

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 14.—The star Birmingham battery, Prough and Mayer, has been secured by the Chicago American League club. Exercising an optional agreement, Walter Mayer, the young Baron catcher, was regained off $1,500.

When Chicago placed Mayer with the Baron club, a blanket option was exacted for the choice of a player for $2,500. Prough's wonderful pitching attracted the attention of the White Sox, and he was chosen.

Leading the league with a record of twenty victories and five defeats, Prough will gain his third trial in the majors. Previously Pittsburg and Cincinnati have tried out the elongated pitcher and have returned him to the minors.

Crackers Facing Supreme Test

Mobile Has Lead of 5 1-2 Games

By O. B. Keeler.

HAVING duly touched off the red fire, ignited the Roman candles and called out the fire department, we will now get out the old chewed-at-one-end section of pencil and put down a few of the things popularly supposed not to mislead, which, by the way, is one of the most staggering fallacies the twentieth century staggers under.

It is plainly to be seen, and may be set down in signs like the following: !!!!, that the Crackers trimmed Birmingham a severely straight series, copped the final road trip in the ratio of seven to four, and are in something of a position to contest against Mobile and Montgomery for the possession of the title of Southern champeens.

* * *

THE exact situation is this:

Atlanta has 26 games left to play—all at home.

Mobile has a lead of five and one-half full games over the Crackers.

Montgomery has an edge of three full games.

But—

Mobile has only two more games scheduled at home.

And Montgomery is not much better off, having th[illegible].

* * *

MAKING the matter as personal as possible, the Crackers will get a regular crack at each of their principal rivals in the long home wind-up. The Billikens will be here August 21, 22 and 23, and the Gulls, September 2, 3, 4 and 5—about the time the last spurt for the wire is on, provided things become that acute.

The Gulls and the Billies do not play each other any more, the latter probably being rather more than content with that arrangement, judging by the recent trouble in Gullville.

* * *

SO that's the lay-out.

Chattanooga is here to-day, opening with a double-header. The Lookouts also will play Friday and Saturday, and then the Barons will sneak in Monday and try for a little of the revenge stuff. The following Thursday—the 21st—the Montgomery series starts. Then comes Memphis for four games, then New Orleans and Mobile, four each, and then the Lookouts return to wind up the season with a single contest—September 6.

* * *

INTERESTING, is it not?

No?

Well, it'll look a lot different, with a regular shoe-horn crowd wadded into the old Cow Pasture, and a sun-burned bunch of men in white uniforms trotting out on the grass, and some sawed-off, second-story artist pulling off his lid and bellowing:

"The bat-t-tree-ees f'r t'day's game: Muggum'ry, Brown an' Gribbings; 'Tlanta, Dunton Chipmunk!"

That's something else again.

* * *

WOUGH!

A foxy young Pitcher named Prough
Got into a bit of a rough
With some Walloping Guys,
And to his surprise,
He found out he didn't know hough!

* * *

WHICH bit of gloating in a strictly minor key leads up to the fact that, as G. Cleveland once eruditely remarked, it is not a theory but a condition that confronts us.

The condition, roughly set forth, is to win two-thirds of twenty-six games—or better.

Two-thirds ought just about to pass Montgomery and overtake Mobile, who will have to travel on the high speed to break even on the long road trip that confronts each.

But two-thirds of 26 games is between seventeen and eighteen.

And that is a good many games to win, when it is mixed up with at least four double-headers.

Also, it may rain.

* * *

WHICH brings on the subject of clouds. And just now, on the heels of five straight victories on the road, the everlasting rout of the Barons, the busting of Mr. Prough's proud record, and the beginning of a long stay at home—well, just now, we are inclined to think the said cloud is turning outward a bit of the well-known silver lining.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

The Georgia-Alabama season will close Saturday, and while hardly any of the clubs in the circuit have made money this year from the attendance, it is expected that several will realize on the sale of players. The abnormal speed of the Class D Southeastern last year militated against the sport in Anniston, Gadsden and Talladega this year, but it is believed that the fans are getting satisfied with real Class D ball and that the league will be kept intact.

* * *

Gadsden has had the best club from the start, and they probably have the best manager in the league, considered from the standpoint of both his playing and managerial ability. Randall brought several men from New Orleans who had been playing all winter and they were in good form when the season opened. Although Gadsden has never been off the top, however, the attendance at that place was the poorest in the league, and it was the only city to get games transferred.

* * *

A fine spirit of bon homme prevailed among both the fans and players at the banquet held in Anniston last Saturday night, when an inspiring address was made to the men by Hon. E. D. Willett, a well-known attorney and former president of the Anniston club in the Southeastern. At this meeting, Proctor, Anniston's star centerfielder, also proved himself a fine orator. He's a graduate of a Texas college and promises to go up.

* * *

If the league is kept together, there will be a unanimous apeal made for the re-election of President W. J. Boykin, of Gadsden, who has shown himself to be a live wire, a man of backbone and uniform fairness. He has pleased all the clubs.

* * *

White, the one-armed phenom, who for a while played with the Anniston club, holding the unique record of being the first one-armed man to perform in professional company, has made good as an umpire. Joe Burke, an old-timer with the indicator, also gave better satisfaction this year than ever before.

* * *

Boyd, whom Birmingham released to Talladega, will probably go back to the Southern when this league closes. His arm is getting in shape again and he has had pretty easy sailing. Rice, Newnan's catcher, is one of those rare backstops who hit the ball and perform well at the same time with the mitt. In the last series at Anniston he got ten hits out of thirteen times at bat.

* * *

The Anniston club this year encountered a hoodoo in the .500 limit. Every time the Chickens would get to the half perfect mark something would happen, and down the ladder they would go again. They almost reached there last Saturday, but in the game Monday they hit the toboggan.

* * *

The two Georgia towns, Newnan and LaGrange, led in attendance this year. Opelika did well considering the size of the place, but Gadsden, Anniston and Talladega had been used to faster ball, and when salaries were reduced this year the fans got the idea that the sport would not be interesting. This proved erroneous, however.

Fighting Carpenter Shows Remarkable Gameness in Great Battle

FRANK WHITNEY EASY FOR CHARLEY WHITE

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN by far the most thrilling, exciting and scientifically waged ring battle ever seen in Atlanta, Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Atlanta favorite, was for the first time in his Southern ring career compelled to leave the roped arena a beaten man. For ten rounds he was scientifically hammered by Charley White, the marvelous Chicago lightweight.

And though Whitney left the ring beaten, he did not leave there with any smirch on his record. It is doubtful if he ever fought more brilliantly. It is certain that no man ever showed more gameness than did the Iowa carpenter. There were cheers for the victor, but there were more cheers for the vanquished.

It was simply a case of Whitney meeting a better man, but, though, at no stage of the game did he appear to have a shade, time and again when the crowd was on its feet expecting to see him feel his first knockout instead saw him rally brilliantly, give blow for blow, never wincing under White's terrible punching. Whitney was always a great big figure.

But credit must be given White. The little Chicagoan seems every inch a champion. He had a deep and abiding respect for Frank, though, and boxed carefully. Not until the seventh round did he begin to take anything like a chance, and then he was quick to crawl back behind his breastworks whenever Whitney seemed dangerous.

* * *

AS a result, Atlanta boxing fans saw boxing in the real sense of the word. Both men fought marvelous defensive battles. The sparring was fast and perfectly executed. Both used excellent ring generalship. It was White's superior strength and his youth that told the story.

Whitney's entire attack was from his right side. The few times he used his left it seemed to possess little power, but at that he did quite as much leading as his opponent. In the fourth round his right landed and White was turned completely around by the force of the blow. In this round Whitney had the shade, but all the others were either even or White's.

* * *

WHEN the gong rang for the seventh round, the battle was apparently all even. Then White took the lead. Both men had been cautious in reference to infighting, but in this session White got busy at this part of the game and beat Whitney at the feature of fighting in which he is most skilled.

In the eighth Whitney was very, very tired. His face was completely smeared, but his magnificent condition told the tale. In the ninth it was the same story, and in the last part of the tenth it seemed inevitable that Whitney would be floored before the gong. He weathered it bravely and was on his feet fighting to the end, but there was not a dissenting voice when Referee Castro raised the Chicago boy's glove.

* * *

IN the semi-windup Kid Young was decisively beaten by Charley Lee. Young seemed to have none of his old dash and virility and in the fourth round after Lee had dropped him and Young arose to continue his tactics of crawling under cover. Castro announced Lee the winner.

At times Young showed a flash, but it was never more than a flash. It seems that the promising newsboy boxer has about run his course.

* * *

IN the third round of their scheduled six-round go Terry Nelson dropped Mike Saul with a terrific clip on the jaw. Saul came up on the count of nine, and after clinching desperately backed into his corner and covered. He was apparently badly hurt, not only from Nelson's blow, but also from the blow he received when his head struck the canvas with a bump that could be heard for feet.

Saul was apparently unable to fight back, and the referee declared Nelson the winner to save the Atlanta milkman from further punishment. Up to the knockdown Saul had a big lead over the little Greek and was apparently boxing in his best style.

* * *

IN the opening engagement "Mary" Payne knocked out Battling O'Leary in the second round of their four-round go. Both boys were novices, but both were willing.

A fair house saw an excellent fight card.

Tesreau and Matty After Auto "Big Six" Making Good Record

JOHN M'GRAW has called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 1, the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spit-baller 25 times. Jeff only went the route on eight occasions, but on many of the times he was derricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

Were Hugh Chalmers to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead of the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773.

Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

The club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two at a Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

The figures below show the number of games started and completed by the Giants' pitchers this season:

	Games Started	Complete Games Pitched	P.C.
Crandall	1	1	1.000
Mathewson	22	17	.773
Marquard	20	13	.650
Demaree	16	7	.437
Ames	5	2	.400
Fromme	6	2	.333
Tesreau	25	8	.320
Wiltse	2	0	.000
Totals	97	50	.515

CINCINNATI ASKS FOR WAIVERS ON 4 PLAYERS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 14.—Before the Cincinnati Nationals left Pittsburg it was reported from their camp that waivers had been asked on Suggs, Sheckard, Egan and Bates, veterans of the team. All the clubs in the league have waived on Bates and Egan, and President Herrmann and Manager Tinker are trying to make deals for them with American League teams. They expect to pull off a trade for Egan with either the White Sox or the Highlanders, both being in need of infielders of Egan's class.

It is likely that several other changes will be made. On the present eastern trip all the clubs have also waived on Suggs, for whom Manager Tinker has been trying to pull a deal. Trades are under way for Sheckard.

WORLD'S SERIES GAMES WILL START OCTOBER 6

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The world's series games are to start on Monday, October 6. This was the information President Ban Johnson, of the American League, gave out. The play will continue on each succeeding day thereafter until one club has won four out of seven games.

Should two Eastern teams be fortunate enough to take down the glory in the National and American Leagues—and it looks certain—then Sunday will be an off-day, for the "blue" laws of the East forbid the parading of our national pastime on the Sabbath.

Conzelman and Price Will Work

Fans Will See Calvo in Right Field

By Joe Agler.

HOME again! And glad to be here, you may be sure. Especially as we won't have to hook any more rattlers and ride any more until the season of 1913 is history.

The boys talked it over, coming this way from Birmingham last night, and they decided the Crackers had one grand little chance to knock the everlasting lining out of about six other clubs in the next three weeks, and bring home another flag to Crackerville.

That's what we will try our best to do.

The Birmingham series has given us all a lot of confidence. We pounded the ball back of good work by our own pitchers, and put up a great fielding game. That combination will win regularly against anything in this league, if only we can keep it working.

* * *

CONZELMAN and Price will work in the double-header with Chattanooga this afternoon, and Dunn probably will have to catch in both, as Chapman has a bad ankle.

Chris Holtz has been released outright, and Jacinto Calvo, the Cuban outfielder Clark Griffith sent us, will be in right field. We hear he is a bear with the wood and fast on the bases, and that is what we will need from now on. Holtz is a crack fielder, but weak at the plate.

* * *

RETURNING to the last battle in Slagville, which is a very pleasant topic with us, it will be noted that Carl Thompson, Baron cast-off, pitched rings around his famous rival, Clinton Prough, stopping his winning streak at ten games, where he is tied with Coveleskie.

Prough showed the stuff in holding down the runs as well as he did, for the Crackers were surely hitting the old pill. Once McBride, by a great running catch, robbed Harry Holland of what looked like a sure homer, with the bases full at the time. Harry kept up his hitting streak, and is now in the charmed circle of the .300 walopers.

And please don't forget Wally Smith. His drive to the center field fence probably was the longest hit of the season in Birmingham, and just about settled things for Mr. Prough and his help. The help also cracked under punishment, while we kept up our good work in the field.

* * *

WELL, the Barons are out of the race, it seems, and it was our bunch that put them out when the rest of the league seemed powerless to head them.

Now we will have a chance at the others.

We'll do our best.

REDS BUY CATCHER.

ROANOKE, VA., Aug. 14.—Mark Stewart, the big catcher of the Norfolk club, in the Virginia State League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Red Sox for $2,000. Stewart is a young catcher, and was playing college ball at Washington and Lee University a year ago. His batting average has been .300. He will finish the season with the Norfolk club and report to Manager Tinker at the conclusion of the season.

Holtz Given Release; Chapman Is Injured

The Crackers arrived, right side up with care, early this morning and went immediately to their quarters to rest for the double battle with Chattanooga this afternoon.

Every man was in tip-top shape, except Chapman, Manager Smith reported. The useful backstop turned an ankle in the last game at Birmingham, and, while he pluckily finished the game, he suffered with a god deal of swelling last night, and is not in condition to play to-day. Joe Dunn will have to catch games, and possibly the other two contests with the Lookouts.

Chris Holtz was released yesterday in Birmingham and turned back to Selma. He showed much class as a fielder, but his hitting was not of the caliber needed by the Crackers in their final dash for the flag. Jacinto Calvo, the chunky little Cuban sent on by Clark Griffith, will play right field the rest of the season.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

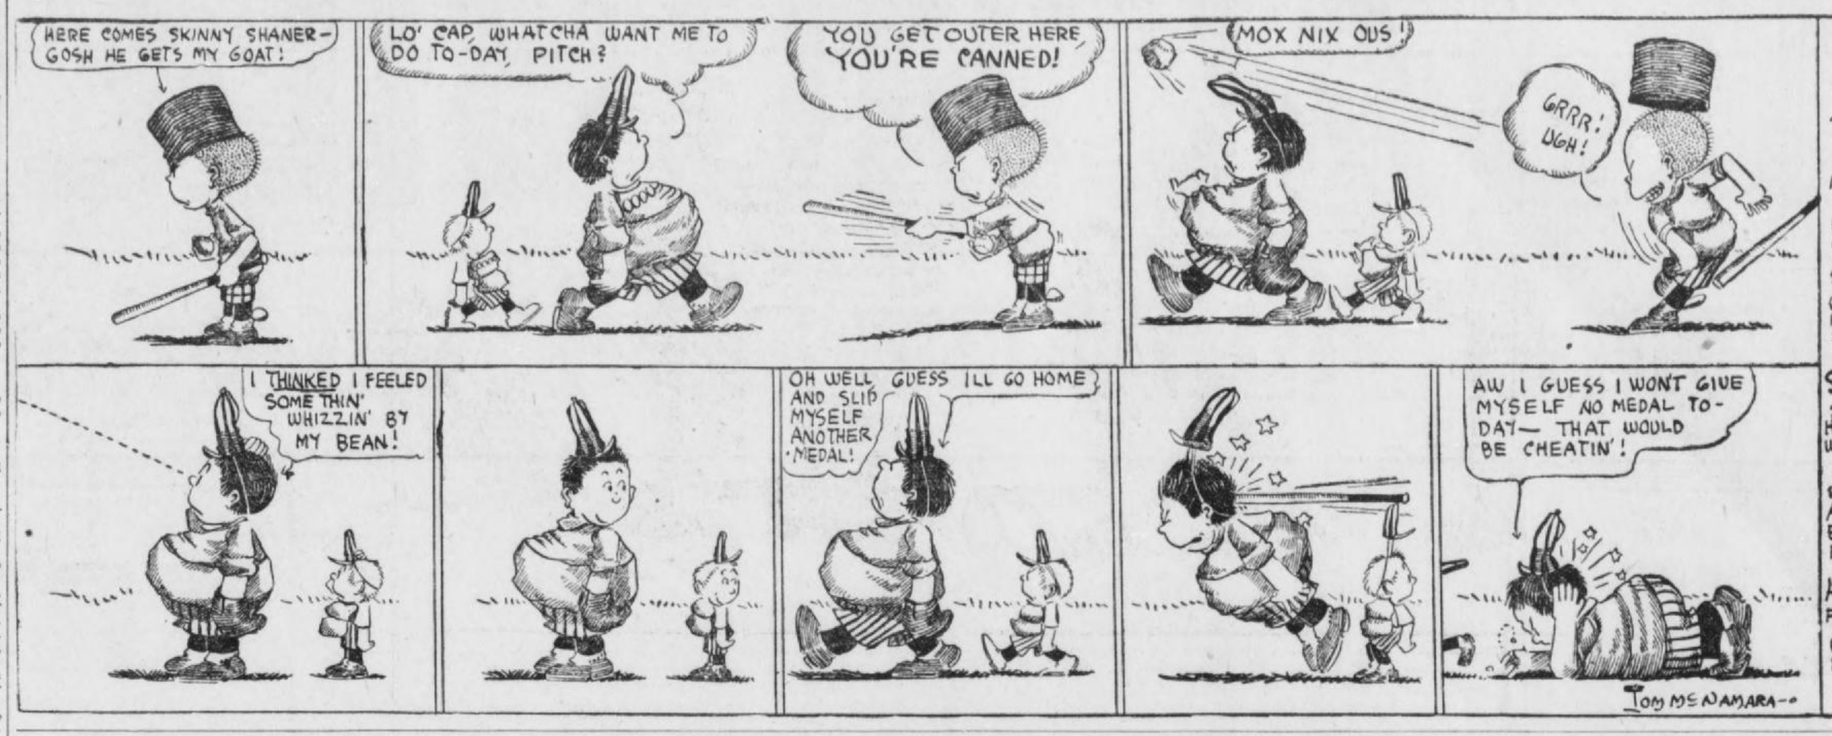

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

STARS.

Oft in the early fall,
With baseball fights near ended,
One stops to think where all
The springtime stars have wended.
The Second Cobbs have lost their jobs
And left us broken-hearted;
The Wagners, too, have up and blew,
The Speakers have departed.
Oft, as the autumn comes,
And pennant scraps are ended,
Lord knows where all the bums
Who starred in spring have wended.

Speaking of George McBride as manager of the Red Sox, McAleer could travel from here to Gehenna and back and not find a better one.

McBride never was a Lajoie at the plate nor a Cobb on the bases, but he can think twice before the average athlete gets a start.

The report that Hugh Jennings has signed seven players, Tutweiler and Fadrique simply shows how hard it is to get rid of a hobby.

It is important to know that the Pelicans won a game the other day from Memphis. This shows that the Pels can beat somebody.

While Packey McFarland depends more on his cleverness than on his punch, his recent effort at song writing has demonstrated that he can punch the English language without mercy.

Were we the manager of a white hope our first move would be to sign him with the Giants, where he could get a post-graduate course in the art of rough house.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR SPEAKER TO BE TRADED

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—While it is an open secret that President McAleer is pretty well disgusted at the way certain members of the Red Sox team have been going this season, there is very little ground for believing he has ever thought of trading Tris Speaker to the Washington club.

Of course, if, as a morning paper prints under a Milwaukee date, he intends making George McBride the Red Sox manager next year, he will have to get rid of Carrigan, for Bill would not be likely to show unusual enthusiasm for the common cause if he were deposed without a fair trial, and the tag end of a season can hardly be considered enough time in which to gauge any man's managerial ability.

* * *

BUT why Speaker? Especially if Carrigan is no longer with the team. A few weeks ago dopesters were figuring that Speaker would have to be traded because he could not get along with the new manager. Waiving the question as to whether Speaker has or has not given his best services to the team since Carrigan's appointment (in our opinion he has done his best), why should it be necessary to trade him after the cause of his discontent, if discontent he ever had, has been removed?

* * *

FOR is it at all likely that "Old Fox" Griffith is likely to let go the best base-runner in the American League, even if he should consent to break up his infield by releasing his shortstop.

Either Milan or Speaker would be a notable addition to any club, but the departure of either would, conversely, be a great loss to the team with which he is now connected.

McAleer is entirely willing to secure Milan, and Griffith, no doubt, could be prevailed upon to take Speaker. But neither cares much about letting his own star depart.

RED SOX TO GIVE $10,000 IN PLAYERS FOR REHG

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 14.—A baseball deal was engineered here whereby the Boston Red Sox will give $10,000 in players for Left Fielder Walter Rehg, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association. A big cash price was offered to Manager Friel, of the St. Paul club, but he turned down these offers for a trade.

ROCKFORD WINS LONG GAME.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Aug. 14.—A double and a single in the nineteenth inning gave Rockford the victory over Racine yesterday, 2 to 1.

RINGSIDE NEWS

After a layoff of two months Eddie McGoorty is ready to don the padded mitts again. Jim Coffroth has offered him either Sailor Petroskey or Bob McAllister, who boxed a twenty-round draw on the coast last week. McGoorty isn't particular which he meets, and has wired the California promoter to that effect.

* * *

Jimmy Grant, the Chicago bantamweight, who holds a knock-out victory over Spider Britt, is back in our midst once more. Jimmy has been spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla., and is now anxious to get on with some of the local talent. Jimmy is one of the classiest fellows of his weight and should find little trouble in getting on here.

* * *

Johnny Dundee will make his next fight against Ad Wolgast on Admission Day. Dundee, by stopping Jack White, has won a warm spot in the hearts of the coast fans. He should not lack for admirers when he stacks up against the ex-champion.

* * *

Two clever newspaper men of Chicago, George S. Robbins and Joseph B. Bowles, have gotten out a bright and interesting little book covering the career of Frank A. Gotch. The wrestling champion is credited with the following: "In training, it is brains over brawn. The man who trains with his brain can get more good out of twirling a match than an athlete who does not use his brain can out of a 5-pound dumb-bell.

* * *

Joe Rivers, having had two chances against a world's lightweight champion, finds himself further from the 133-pound title than when he started to box in this division. The Mexican is carded to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, and unless he wins decisively, Joe will find himself in a class with Anderson and Baldwin.

* * *

* * *

For the 59th time Jack Dillon and Tom Caponi are matched. Reports from Winnipeg state that the two middleweights will clash in a scheduled twelve-round set-to some time next month.

* * *

It is even hinted that Welsh and Ritchie will pull the wool over the eyes of Vancouver sports, as each man is said to have an understanding that they will box for the benefit of the moving pictures only.

* * *

And now we learn Ritchie fears Murphy, too. One wonders what Ritchie does when he isn't looking up some new person to fear.

* * *

Promoter Coffroth, of San Francisco, is reported to have Arthur Pelky signed for three bouts. Charley Miller will be one of his opponents.

* * *

The manager of Gunboat Smith will now try and fill all the sporting pages in the country telling what a wonder Smith is and that he is the real champion. And all because he trimmed Jim Flynn.

PITCHER GIVES ONLY ONE HIT IN DOUBLE BILL

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 14.—Pitcher Hedgepeth established a new world's record here yesterday, when he pitched both games of a double-header against Richmond and was hit safely but once in the eighteen consecutive innings. He was not scored against; only gave three bases on balls—one in the first game and two in the second—and did not hit a batsman. Hedgepeth was sold to the Washington Americans several weeks ago.

As the Giants-Cardinals game was postponed on account of rain a double-header is scheduled for this afternoon at the Polo Grounds.

Manager Stallings, of the Boston Braves, has bought Outfielder Zwilling from the St. Joseph, Mo., club. Zwilling was formerly a member of the White Sox.

The Pirates are again tied with Chicago for third place in the National League, having been trounced twice yesterday by the Brooklyn Dodgers. No other games were played owing to rain. No games were scheduled in the American League.

Left Fielder Gilhooley, of the Montreal club in the International League, will probably be sold to a mortgage. Owner Lichenstein, of the Montreal club, demands $10,000 for Gilhooley.

The Dodgers celebrated "McKeever day" at Ebbet's field in victorious style and afterward the loyal Brooklyn fans were heard to wish that every day was "McKeever day" in the city of rubber plants.

Detailed Description of This Wonderful Machine

Body metal, one passenger, wheel base 56 inches, 16-inch steel wheels, with 3-4-inch rubber tires; tread of wheel, 21 1-2 inches, made of material that gives spring and strength. This is a real vehicle—not a toy—and will uphold the weight of a grown man. The big racing hood is sheet steel and slanting seat, giving the driver real racing position; one big feature is the steering knuckle gear. The front wheels turn in response to the steering wheel, just as the front wheels of a real automobile, the axle being stationary. This eliminates danger of upsetting on curves.

These cars are carefully finished and beautifully painted. This model can be used with pleasure and safety by girls as well as boys. Remember, this machine is not a toy or plaything. It is a real miniature race car, according to the skill and endurance of the driver.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Bryan: The temper of the trade is intensely bearish, and should general rains make their appearance in Texas and Oklahoma in the near future, the ultimate result would be lower prices. Unsatisfactory trade advices from abroad is also a depressing influence.

COTTON WAS SOLD FREELY ALL DAY

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Good cables and absence of rains over the Texas belt, except at one or two places, resulted in the cotton market opening steady to-day and first prices ranged from 1 point off to 5 points higher than Wednesday's final. There was a little outside support, however, and the list being bolstered by buying from room shorts.

This, coupled with the Government report on supply and distribution, which placed the number of cotton bales consumed during July at 486,246 running bales, as compared with 467,000 bales in June. The report was considered bullish, but failed to stimulate any buying of consequence and the market developed a sagging tendency after the call, based on active selling, which was encouraged by a New Orleans weather expert prediction of rains in the western belt within the next forty-eight house. Later the selling became general and by noon the decline aggregated 5 to 11 points from the initial range.

After the English market had reported better cables than expected, price movement at the close showed a decline of 2 to 3½ points from the previous close.

Ring traders are persistent bears on the new crop positions, but they are not heavy sellers, especially of August. Most of them seem to be waiting rains in the western belt before committing themselves to any great extent to the short side. But a world of cotton will fall upon the market if rains should come in the west. One thing that prevents any material decline in prices is that the feeling among the average trader is to the effect that the Clarke anti-option bill will be killed and that nothing along that line will be done at the present session of Congress.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14.—The map shows cloudy weather in nearly all of East Texas, the south central Gulf districts and the Carolinas. Precipitation is shown in Central and South Texas and the Gulf districts and showers in Tennessee and the Atlantics. Cooler weather in North Texas and Oklahoma. Indications are for unsettled weather in the western half of the belt, with good indications for more general rains in the next forty-eight hours. Partly cloudy and scattered showers in the eastern half of the belt.

First trades here were at a decline of 2 points, and the market soon weakened to 10.98 for October on numerous private reports of rain this morning, principally from South Central and South Texas points. Continued unfavorable views from Manchester contributed to the weakness.

An official forecast of fair weather for Texas checked selling pressure during the afternoon session, but prices were held at the low point.

TREND OF STOCKS IS TO GO LOWER

Standard Issues Were Predominant Early, but Dullnes Causes Reaction Toward Close.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Many of the railroad shares were under pressure at the opening of the stock market to-day. The tone was heavy, although some issues made good rains. Texas Company continued to climb, beginning ½ up.

Wabash lost 1 point, selling at 4½. Chesapeake and Ohio declined ½. Canadian Pacific began ¼ lower, but at the end of half an hour had recovered and was ¼ above Wednesday's final. Among the other losses were: Western Union, ⅜; Reading, ⅛; Steel common, ⅝; Union Pacific, ⅛; Amalgamated Copper, ⅜; Mexican Petroleum ⅛, and Atchison ¼.

Southern Pacific began ⅛ up, but lost it. At the end of 45 minutes, however, a better tone prevailed all the way round. American Telephone and Telegraph climbed ⅝, while fractional gains were also scored by United States Rubber common and Erie.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were firm.

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "London investors are gaining confidence and are relieving the underwriters of recent new issues of their holdings. Sentiment is improving on the Paris Bourse. Copper shares being a strong feature.

"An announcement of the allotments of Southern Pacific stock to syndicate members will be made known to-day. The offering has been over-subscribed. Liggett & Myers and American Tobacco will sell ex-dividend Friday. Southern Pacific directors are scheduled to meet for dividend action to-day. No change is reported in the Bank of England rate of discount.

"Information channels favor profit-taking. We would look for attractive buying opportunities with the intention to secure moderate profits."

* * *

Some profit-taking yesterday was responsible for the reactionary tendency at the close. I would not be surprised if the market was reactionary to-day, as prices have had a good advance without any setback. Southern Pacific, which is behind the balance of the list, looks as if the pool would put it higher. I am bullish for the long pull and on any reaction believe stocks are a purchase.—G. D. Potter.

* * *

Triple holiday in Paris beginning to-day.

* * *

Some of the smaller banks throughout the country are requesting a share of the $50,000,000 crop-moving fund.

* * *

Marconi Company, of London, reports a net profit of $2,056,470 in 1912, as compared with $706,585 in 1911.

* * *

The failure of Governor's representative to bring about a conference between mine operators and miners results in a continuation of the deadlock in the Michigan copper strike.

* * *

* * *

Buyers in New York are said to be placing big orders. The Bank of England rate unchanged at 4½ per cent and London stocks are irregular.

* * *

* * *

The tendency of the stock market is toward dullness and the reaction is a favorable sign. We are still of the opinion that stocks are worth more than present quotations, as the best issues yield the investor over 6 per cent. Sentiment is becoming quite optimistic and the large interests who have been active on the constructive side of prices will probably continue operations until a much higher level of prices has been attained.—G. D. Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Better things are expected of the wheat market, and many bullish arguments are put forth in favor of the maintenance of a gradual hardening of values, although the market is not expected to run away. Traders who were in the pit said that the pressure from hedgers has become much lighter than the last few days. It was largely a case of one bull taking the place of another in the corn market yesterday. One of the most rampant bulls said that, while he believes in higher prices, he expects a choppy market for the present."

Bartlett Frazier & Co. say: "Wheat: The weather map shows scattered rains in spring wheat country. The market shows decidedly more ability to rally and in our opinion is gaining friends daily.

"Corn—The weather map shows light rains in Iowa and one in Nebraska. A fair amount of precipitation at a number of Illinois points and in the Ohio Valley. Notwithstanding considerable liquidation all through the session yesterday closing prices were within a fraction of the high point, demonstrating the prevailing inherent strength.

"Oats—The market shows a steady undertone, but the volume of trade is not large; the strength in other grains is helping prices to some extent. We prefer the buying side on the weak spots.

"Provisions—Prices are under the influence of the volume of the movement and new buying power at the moment seems rather limited."

Lyle says: "Conditions of the corn crop in Northern Illinois are suggestive of an average crop. Rain has fallen to sufficient extent to carry the crop to maturity. Fields are well cared for, and there is no ground for reasonable complaint. Pastures good."

'Cotton Is King, but Must Serve Farmer'

CUTHBERT, Aug. 14.—That cotton is king, but that the king must be subservient to the people, was the theme of an address of President John T. Williams, of the Georgia Agricultural Society, at the opening session of the annual convention here. Diversified farming in all branches is the salvation of Georgia farms, said President Williams.

Other speakers were Benjamin Milliken, of Wayne; Mayor Richard Terry, Chancellor David C. Barrow, of the University of Georgia; Hon. L. P. Hillyer, banker and farmer, of Macon; P. L. Twitty, of Laurens; J. Phil Campbell, of Clarke, and W. G. Middlebrooks, of Bibb.

486,246 COTTON BALES CONSUMED DURING JULY

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—A report issued by the Census Bureau to-day shows cotton consumed during July 486,246 running bales. Cotton in manufacturing establishments July 31, 1,032,548 totaled bales, and in independent warehouses, 410,954 bales. Imports 9,496, equivalent to 500-pound bales; exports, 140,710 running bales.

Cotton spindles active during July, 3,022,654.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 14.—Increased probability for rains in southern Texas, with reports of precipitation at several points in coastal territory has stimulated selling and the market acts weak. It is quite evident that trade sentiment is bearish, and hence prices decline on good news much more rapidly than they advance on unfavorable accounts.

Corn—No. 2 ..... 77⅝
Oats—No. 2 ..... 41½@42

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—Corn was ¼@⅝ lower early to-day, but there was a strong undercurrent, and in case of the offerings failing to press on the market a reaction and advance was among the probabilities. While there were gains in many sections, the country most needing it failed to get any moisture whatever. The forecast is for generally fair and continued warm to-night and Friday in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska.

Wheat was a shade better on the strength shown abroad and the general belief that the market here was oversold.

Oats were easier early, but they firmed up later.

Provisions were lower.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

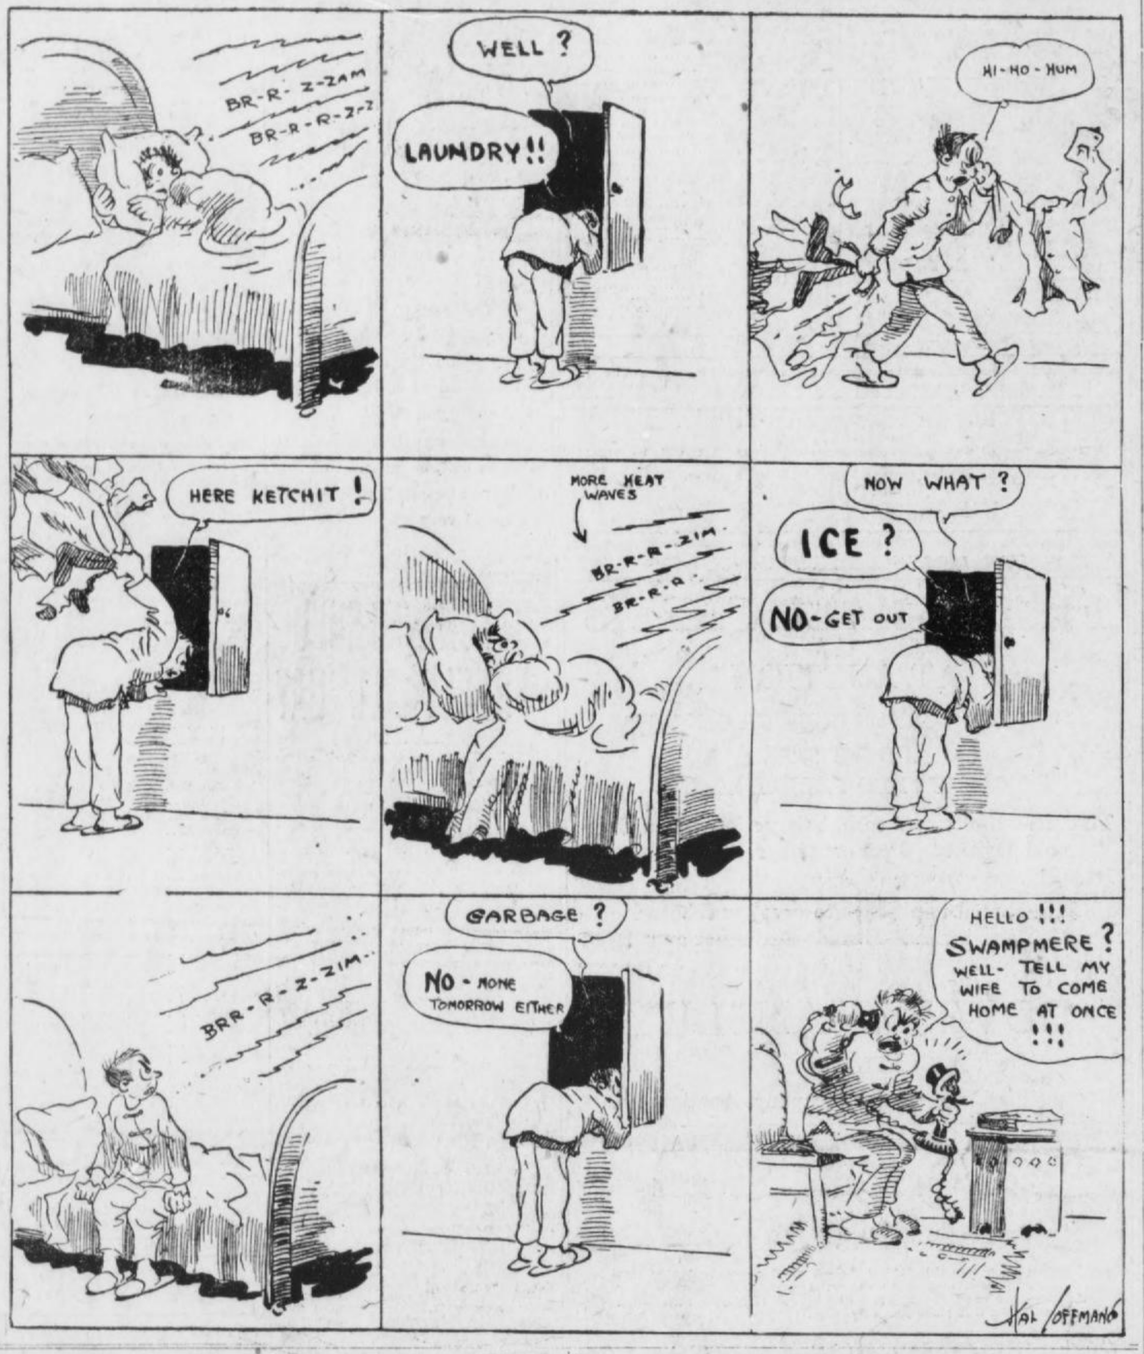

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the political forum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

.:. The New Remedy .:.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch,
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger,
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

DOROTHY DIX

Writes on

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and child-like exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spendilig an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.

SAYS CONLEY ADMITTED BEING DRUNK

Defense Is Fighting Hard to Establish an Alibi

FINISH FIGHT BEGUN BY SULZER

Threatens to Call Out Militia to Prevent Removal as Governor After Impeachment.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—For the first time in history, New York State to-day has two Governors. Although impeached by the Assembly by a vote of 79 to 45, Governor William Sulzer refuses to give up office and threatens to call out the National Guard to prevent his removal. Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, who automatically became Governor when the resolution of impeachment was adopted in the Assembly, contests Governor Sulzer's right to the prerogatives of the office.

Mr. Glynn told his friends he would send a special message to the Legislature, when it convenes August 19, to test his authority as Acting Governor.

Governor Sulzer to-day began an active preparation of the defense he will make when arraigned before the court of impeachment, which will consist of the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals. He will contend that he is the victim of a plot hatched by political enemies, and will deny every detail of the charges that he used money contributed ot his campaign for speculation in Wall Street.

Governor Sulzer to-day was served with a certified copy of the impeachment articles as required by the constitution. They were served upon him by Senate Clerk Patrick E. McCabe.

"Governor, I am directed by the President of the Senate to hand you this," said Mr. McCabe as he extended a folded paper to the Governor.

"All right," was the only comment of Governor Sulzer.

Governor Builds Defense.

Judge D. Cady Herrick, chief of counsel for Governor Sulzer, is drawing up the defense, but the work is being directed by the Governor himself, who is a lawyer. A big split has been caused among the politicians of the State by the impeachment.

Adherents of Sulzer are standing firm, while his adversaries are attempting to rake up fresh evidence of wrongdoing against him.

Governor Sulzer's attitude is that, until the State Court of Appeals ousts him, he is the rightful executive. He informed his friends that he will hold the fort by physical force if necessary, and that he is planning to make a test of his powers by appointing a Sheriff for Livingston County, to succeed the official who recently died there

Guards, in the pay of the Governor, occupy the executive chamber night and day, with instructions to hurl from the building any persons trying to oust Governor Sulzer or his family. Any night raid upon the Sulzer stronghold will be stoutly resisted.

The impression prevails that strenuous times, possibly involving violence and bloodshed, are impending. The State machinery has been completely demoralized. Executive affairs are at a standstill and factions are forming.

Secretary of State May is said to have lined up with Governor Sulzer.

Mrs. Sulzer Is Ill.

If Governor Sulzer asks for State troops Adjutant General Hamilton probably will honor the orders, as he is an appointee of the Governor. This gave rise to the contention that if Sulzer seizes the State troops Lieutenant Governor Glynn will have the power to enlist troops of his own.

Sick and extremely nervous, Mrs. Sulzer was unable to leave her bed to-day. Since the revelation from her lips that it was she and not the Governor who took checks and indorsed them in an account with the stock brokers in the name of William Sulzer, she has kept very much to herself in the Executive Mansion.

Girl in Diggs Case Grilled by Defense

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 14.—Marsha Warrington again submitted to the merciless cross-examination of Attorney Coghlan when the trial of Maury I. Diggs, charged with violation of the white slave law, was resumed.

Attorney Coghlan continued the cross-examination along the same lines as on yesterday in an effort to bring out more strongly the contention of the defense that instead of being coerced into the trip to Reno, Miss Warrington and the Norris girl were willing participants in the escapade.

Owen to Force Issue On Currency Reform

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The Democratic majority in the Senate went into conference at 10 o'clock today to consider committee appointments to vacancies caused by the death of Senator Joseph Johnston, of Alabama, and to consider amendments to the tariff bill.

Senator Owen, chairman of the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, went into the conference, however, with the intention of forcing the issue on currency legislation at this session.

Heroic Priests Save School From Flames

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—Fire from lightning damaged St. Joseph Institute and St. Mary Mission Home 20 miles north of here to-day. The two institutions were saved by the heroic work of the priests. One man, a carpenter, was reported missing. The loss on four buildings was $60,000.

A terrific crash shook the dormitories of the institute, awakening the 84 priests and brothers. Two hundred boys were thrown into a panic.

Mrs. John Astor Joins Sunday Dance Antis

NEWPORT, Aug. 14.—Mrs. John Astor let her guests go at 11:59 o'clock Saturday night, so they could not dance on Sunday, and thus joined forces with Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish to stop Sunday dancing at Newport.

But there are those who entertain who will dance Sunday or any other time, as did the Sidney Colford guests Saturday night at the Clambake Club, which extended into Sunday.

Wilson Halts Move To Delay Money Act

Word was brought back to the White House that the President's wishes would be followed.

BUDGET WAR STIRS LAST SESSION

Senate Struggles With Mass of Important Work — O'Neill-Price Affair Dropped.

Visibly stirred over the heated controversy between Senator McNeil of the Twenty-second and Commissioner of Agriculture Price, who almost came to blows Wednesday, the Georgia State Senators Thursday morning, on the eve of the end of the session, prepared for the final siege.

The first dark spot on the Senatorial horizon was the House general appropriations bill, which was shot back to the Senate Thursday morning with the $280,000 excess of disbursement over revenue tacked on over the protest of the Senate, which sliced off this amount last week.

Just what the Senate will do about it is problematical. The generosity of the House in passing the Senate taxing bill by one vote, it is said, may create a similar spirit in the hearts of the Senate finance leaders, although this is not certain.

Other Bills Face Struggle.

Senator Stark, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, declared Thursday that he did not favor putting back the entire appropriation, but he may be overridden by the more generous Senators.

Two other bills of importance will occupy the attention of the Senators in the closing hours, namely, the inheritance tax bill and the bill giving mothers custody of their children. That one of the sharpest fights yet seen in the Senate will be made on these bills is said to be practically certain, and it is not unlikely the final session may be extended well into the afternoon or possibly Thursday night.

Preparations for the passage of the last bills, however, has no monopoly on the time and attention of the Senators, who are much perturbed over the controversy between Senator McNeill and the Commissioner of Agriculture. Outwardly everything is smooth, but the Senators are free in discussing the matter among themselves.

The controversy, which almost ended in a serious cutting affray between the Macon Senator and the Commissioner, took place Wednesday afternoon in President Anderson's private room in the Senate Chamber.

McNeill and Price Quarrel.

According to eyewitnesses, Senator McNeill met Mr. Price in the room just after taking part in a heated debate on the bill to provide for the printing of the agricultural bulletins.

"Well, you go, your bill through, you old lobbyist," said Senator McNeill to Mr. Price in a spirit of levity.

"Yes, but your statement on the floor of the Senate was not exactly true."

It was here, the eyewitnesses say, that the fireworks started, Senator McNeill inquiring of the Commissioner as to whether or not he (Price) intended to call him a liar.

Price, it is said, repeated his statement in substance, whereupon Senator McNeill drew his knife, at the same time telling Price that he would "cut his throat." Dr. W. C. Bryant grabbed the Senator's arm and drew him back. The Senator broke away, it is said, but was persuaded from going further by a number of Senators who had gathered.

It is understood that both Senator McNeill and Mr. Price are willing to let the matter drop where it is.

Primary Bill Goes Over.

Following a spectacular filibuster led by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, the Senate late Wednesday afternoon postponed action on the proposed primary bill until next session. This bill was killed Wednesday morning, but was resurrected by its friends, including Senator Tarver, in the afternoon. After a sharp parliamentary skirmish Senator Harrell succeeded in getting the floor, whereupon he blandly announced that he intended to stay there until the hour of adjournment. The Senator filibustered for a half hour when the supporters of the bill decided to stop the flow of oratory by

LIND CALLS HUERTA'S BLUFF

Finds Way to Communicate With President Despite Threat of Non-recognition.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—Special Envoy John Lind, sent here on a diplomatic mission by President Wilson, finally has established direct communication with President Huerta despite Huerta's repeated announcements that he would not recognize Lind as an Ambassador or receive him officially.

It was learned here to-day that Foreign Minister Gamboa is the agency through which Mr. Lind was able to communicate with President Huerta, although it is not known whether or not Charge d'Affaires O'Shaughnessy has presented the note brought by Mr. Lind from the State Department.

It has begun to appear that Huerta's bluff of defiance has been called. No steps have been taken by the Mexican Government for the expulsion of Mr. Lind, although President Huerta declared this would be done. Indications are that Lind's presence will be tolerated, although the Government will not go out of its way to assist him in bringing peace.

"The result of that fight, which was an overwhelming victory for the Government, proves conclusively that we are able to maintain our own," said Blyanquet. "The Government forces are winning in every section of the republic, and we will soon be able to restore peace without outside aid.

"Despite all the hindrances thrown in our way by the United States Government, we have been making progress since Victoriano Huerta was elected President. President Huerta is a constructive executive. In addition to restoring pence he is building up a strong diplomatic corps abroad and is inviting the investment of foreign capital."

Mrs. Lind, wife of the envoy, who was indisposed upon her arrival here, has recovered. Her ailment arose chiefly from fear for her husband's safety.

Ambassador Lind now has headquarters at the United States Embassy.

Diaz to Offer Valuable Concessions to Japanese.

MEXICO CITY, Aug. 14.—It was learned here to-day from an authentic source that Colonel Felix Diaz, en route to Japan to thank Japan for taking part in the Mexican centennial, carries with him a proposal for valuable concessions to Japan upon the west coast.

The Government hopes to establish a big Japanese colony in Sinaloa and Sonora, where small farms will be conferred upon each immigrant who promises to remain in the republic and respect its laws. Marine and fishing concessions will be offered to a Japanese Government steamship line and a big depot for coaling ships may be built near Guayamas.

The Foreign Department is striving to get on familiar relations with Japan for a number of reasons. The principal one, it is pointed out, is that Mexico's ranks of workers have been decimated by war and labor is needed here.

Fresh capital is sought and it is believed that Japanese are as efficient as any others in opening up the country's resources.

President Sends No Message to Sulzer.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—The White House has sent no word either or advice or sympathy to Governor Sulzer in the present crisis in his career. Rumors that the President was interfering in the situation met a strong denial to-day.

Mother of Accused Who Denounced the Solicitor in Court

Mrs. Rea Frank, who was moved to demonstration by attacks on her son's character.

'I DON'T KNOW WHERE I WAS ON DAY OF KILLING,' GIRL AVERS NEGRO SAID

Miss Rebecca Carson, forelady at the National Pencil Company, testified at the Frank trial Thursday that Jim Conley said to her the Monday after the murder of Mary Phagan: "No, Miss Rebecca I was not at the factory Saturday. I was so drunk I don't know what I did or where I was."

When Miss Carson's mother remarked in the presence of Conley that the officers would find the person guilty of the murder when they found the negro Mrs. Arthur White saw at the foot of the stairs Saturday afternoon of the crime, Miss Carson said, Conley dropped the broom he was using and quit sweeping entirely.

Through Miss Carson and a long array of other witnesses the defense went to work Thursday to complete Frank's alibi.

An important battle was lost by the defense in the Frank trial Thursday in the over-ruling of Luther Rosser's motion for the expunging of Solicitor Dorsey's questions of the day before relating to Frank's alleged acts of immorality.

The defeat of Attorney Rosser came immediately after Solicitor Dorsey had failed in an attempt to have Frank's mother and wife excluded from the courtroom because of the elder woman's sensational outburst of the afternoon before, when she dramatically denounced the Solicitor for his charges of grossly improper conduct against her son, the defendant.

Judge Roan refused the motion of the Solicitor, but said that he would refuse them admission if another outbreak of the sort took place.

Defense at Work Tom oCmplete Alibi.

With the preliminary skirmishes of the day settled, the defense set out with great minuteness to complete its record of Frank's movements throughout the day of the crime.

Miss Helen Curran, No. 160 Ashby street, testified that she saw Frank near Jacobs' drug store, Whitehall and Alabama streets, at 1:10 o'clock Saturday afternoon apparently waiting for his car home.

Mrs. Albert P. Levy, No. 69 East Georgia avenue, swore that she saw Frank get off his car on Georgia avenue at 1:20 o'clock the afternoon of the crime.

Mrs. M. G. Michael, of Athens, Ga., aunt of Mrs. Leo Frank, said that she was visiting at the home of Mrs. C. Wolfsheimer, No. 387 Washington street, three doors from Georgia avenue, and that Frank came up to the steps at about 2 o'clock to speak to her, leaving a moment later to catch a Washington street car at Glenn street.

Jerome Michael, son of the previous witness, testified that he was on the steps at the time and that Frank walked up the street between 1:55 and 2 o'clock.

Mrs. Wolfsheimer, who lives at No. 387 Washington street, said she saw Frank at this time.

Julian Loeb, No. 380 Washington street, testified to the same effect.

J. Cohen Loeb, No. 445 Washington street, told the jury he rode partway to town with Frank and that the defendant boarded the Washington street car at about 2 o'clock.

Miss Rebecca Carson, a factory employee, testified to seeing Frank on the street at 2:20 and also at 2:50.

Asks Women Be Excluded.

Solicitor Dorsey, before the jury was brought in, said he wanted to make a request that the mother and wife of Leo M. Frank be excluded from the court as the witnesses have been because of the outbreak of the elder Mrs. Frank Wednesday afternoon.

"I appreciate the feeling of the wife and mother," he said; "it is a terrible strain on them. I am sorry for them. But I must have protection and I think they should be excluded when we are subjected to outbreaks like that yesterday."

Attorney Arnold in reply said:

"Without criticising Mrs. Frank, I want to state that the Solicitor's examination of the witness yesterday was far worse than her outbreak. He was undertaking to get in evidence in an illegal way. He could not get it in in a legal way. He was appeal-

CHARLTON IS TAKEN TO ITALY FOR TRIAL

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Dapper and self-possessed, Porter Charlton, who confessed murdering his wife in their villa at Lake Como, Italy, June 10, 1910, started for Italy, where he must stand trial. Two officers of the Royal Italian Carabineers took young Charlton on board the liner Re d'Italia at the York street pier.

Charlton was in a happy mood apparently. Only once did he display any emotion. That was when he bade good-bye to his uncle, John Charlton, in the Hudson County jail. The young prisoner sobbed as he wrung his uncle's hand.

"I believe that I will be free to come back home before the year is out," declared the self-confessed slayer.

"Stick it out, boy, and keep your courage up," said John Charlton in parting.

With an officer on either side of him, young Charlton waved good-bye to those on the pier as the liner steamed down the bay.

War on Misbranded Soft Drinks Opened

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—In an effort to protect the public from misbranded products the Department of Agriculture has assailed certain soda fountain drinks.

Announcement of judgment against a consignment of orangeade was made to-day. The product, shipped by a Chicago concern and branded "orangeade," was discovered to be made of a solution of invert sugar and tartaric acid, artificially colored.

A resolution indorsing Governor Slaton's appointment of John C. Hart as Tax Commissioner was introduced into the House Thursday morning by Judge Hopkins, of Thomas, and passed unanimously.

The resolution sets forth that "it is the opinion of the House that no more judicious appointment could have been made," and that "the house do congratulate the Governor and the people of Georgia upon this most excellent appointment."

ing to the crowd and to the feelings of the jury. Does you honor think that good practice—honorable practice—especially when a man is on trial for his life?

Arnold Calls Dorsey Overzealous.

"My friend is zealous—he is a little overzealous, I think, but that is not a matter for me to criticise. Your honor, our jury system is very lame if we admit this sort of evidence. They are good men, but simple men. It's hard for them to distinguish between things that condemn a man and things that prove him guilty. I won't say that the conduct of the Solicitor is illegal, but it is a little more culpable than the act of the mother. It's a pretty pass if a man's wife and mother are to be barred at the hour of his trial. This evidence of the State was put in to poison the minds of the jury. It was hard to bear—awfully hard to bear—but I promise it shall not occur again. We will do all we can to prevent a recurrence."

"Your honor, I didn't ask Mr. Jones all the questions I might have asked him," replied Dorsey. "You ruled the questions I did ask were legal. I asked only questions I can substantiate by reputable witnesses—some of them high-class women, I regard them.

"It's a mistaken idea about me being overzealous. I am trying to do my duty. I want to protect myself and the court. You have excluded other women. There is no reason why these should be allowed to remain to offend the dignity of the court. An accused man should not be allowed to bankrupt his wife and mother. Mr. Arnold criticises my act. The courts have held it is highly improper for a lawyer to express his opinion on the evidence. Mr. Arnold has branded this evidence as lies before I put these good women on the stand."

Judge Roan ruled, after more arguing:

"You are entirely right, Mr. Dorsey, in saying that you are entitled to protection. Other women were put out because the evidence was of such a nature as to be indecent to be heard by them. It is a matter in the discretion of the court to state whether these ladies should be allowed to remain. I will say that if there are any more such outbreaks as yesterday I shall be forced to exclude them."

Mrs. Frank, the mother, and the prisoner's wife were both in court while the argument was in progress.

Slayer Freed Under $5,000 Bonds Raised By Engineer Friends

W. D. Partee, the Georgia Railroad engineer who killed another engineer, Sam Jackson, a short while ago, was released from the Tower Thursday morning under a $5,000 bond, furnished by a number of engineers, friends of Partee. Bond was granted by Judge J. T. Pendleton following application for bail by Partee. A plea of self-defense was made.

The killing grew out of remarks which Jackson was quoted as saying about Partee being familiar with another engineer's wife. Her husband went to Partee and the two of them started in search of Jackson. They met near the Georgia Railroad roundhouse and the shooting followed, Jackson being killed almost instantly.

A number of Partee's friends were at the Tower Thursday morning to greet him on his release from the Tower.

FIND MAIL STOLEN THREE YEARS AGO

Letters Uncovered by Workmen Between Walls of the Depot at Decatur.

Remodeling of the Georgia Railroad depot in Decatur has served to partially clear up a series of mail robberies three years old.

In 1910, about the time Agnes Scott College opened for the year, letters addressed to college officials and students and citizens of Decatur began to disappear. Some of them contained checks and money orders, and complaints by the hundred were filed. Postoffice inspectors worked, but could find no clew, and the investigation was finally given up as hopeless.

But the other day workmen at the depot found all the missing letters stacked behind the plastering. A hole large enough to admit a man's hand was found. Through this hole the letters had been placed between the plastering and the outer wall. Some of the letters still contained checks. The letters had all been opened.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the postmaster, is now engaged in forwarding the long-delayed letters to the addressees. She is writing a note of explanation to accompany each letter.

The theory has been advanced that the letters were taken by some railway mail clerk and handed out to a trusted confederate in Decatur, who would extract what money and negotiable paper he would find and then place the letters in hiding behind the plastering in the depot.

There is no clew to the guilty parties.

Relief for Catarrh Sufferers Now FREE

You Can Now Treat This Trouble in Your Own Home and Get Relief at Once

How the Remedy for Catarrh Was Discovered

By the new method the nose and throat are treated by an effective local remedy applied directly to the affected membranes.

The Elixir, taken into the stomach, has a direct influence upon the mucous membranes of the body and cures the disease by removing the cause.

THIS terrible disease has raged unchecked for years simply because symptoms have been treated while the vicious germs that cause the trouble have been left to circulate in the blood, and bring the disease back as fast as local treatments could relieve it.

C. E. Gauss, who experimented for years on a treatment for Catarrh, found that after perfecting a balm that relieved the nose and throat troubles quickly, he could not prevent the trouble beginning all over again.

On test cases, he could completely remove all signs of Catarrh from nose and throat, but in a few weeks they were back.

Careful experiments and investigations have shown that as the troubles were expelled from the nose and throat, the real cause of the disease was overlooked and in a short time the Catarrh would return stronger than ever. Mr. Gauss has gone way ahead of the ordinary methods of treatment and has provided a remedy that

and immediately gives relief to the nose and throat

He perfected the New Combined Treatment, since admitted to be the logical, sure, scientific method.

Reese Jones, of Scranton, Penn., says that after trying many other treatments, he used this new method and—"My nose is now entirely clear and free and I am not bothered by the disease any more. The New Combined Treatment is worth its weight in gold."

Temporary relief from catarrh may be obtained in other ways, but the New Combined Treatment must inevitably be accepted for permanent results.

Sarah J. Cape, Mount Pella, Tenn., says, "I suffered the pains and distress of catarrh for thirteen years and needless to state, tried nearly every method. But by your new method I was completely cured and you can not imagine the joy that has come over me."

Trial Treatment FREE

This new method is so important to the welfare of humanity, so vital to every person suffering from any form of catarrh, that the opportunity to actually test it and prove its results, will be gladly extended without one cent of cost.

A large trial treatment, with complete, minute directions, will be sent free to any catarrh-sufferer.

Send no money, take no risks, make no promises. Simply clip, sign and mail the coupon and the test package of the New Combined Treatment will be sent fully prepaid, together with the valuable book on Catarrh.

DEFENSE SHIFTS BURDEN BY MAKING CHARACTER OF LEO FRANK AN ISSUE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense in the Frank case did the expected thing when it boldly and unequivocally put Frank's character in issue.

It indicated its confidence in the justice of the deefndant's cause in doing that, and it met thus a crisis that it hardly could have successfully overcome otherwise, if it so happen that it does overcome it eventually.

Having taken the initiative in the matter of thrashing out Frank's character, the State will now be forced to make out an unmistakable case of bad character against Frank, or it is likely that the State's injection of the sinister charge against him, in addition to the charge of murder, may operate as a boomerang to the State's great hurt finally.

It is not to be wondered at that the defendant's mother, tried and racked in spirit and pride as she surely must have been, should have let her feelings overcome her for an instant during the course of Wednesday afternoon's hearing. I do not suppose it is even remotely possible for any person not a mother to understand all she has gone through.

Her vehement protest against the vile things being said and hinted about her boy—true or untrue, though such things always are untrue in mother love, I take it—serves to illustrate, however, how very vital to the defense now is the establishing of Frank's good character.

I doubt that anything thus far said to the jury has so profoundly impressed it as the unspeakable thing Conley said of the defendant. The jury is only human, and it can no more dodge impressions than other people can.

Impression Must Be Erased.

The defense is up against the herculean task of removing all of that impression from the mind of the jury—the twelve minds of the jury, indeed—for it will not do to leave even a fraction of Conley's story undemolished!

Manifestly, therefore, the defense could not, if it would, get away altogether from the matter of Frank's character. It found itself necessarily forced to the other extreme of the situation set up by the State.

The State, on the other hand, by reason of the defense's challenging attitude in the matter of forcing the issue of Frank's character, must now corroborate the frightful story of Conley, or I think it may suffer before the jury irreparable injury.

Curiously enough, the burden of proof in the Frank case seemed to have been shifted a week ago—that is, whereas the burden is legally imposed upon the State, it being the theory of the law that a defendant goes into court with the presumption of innocence in his favor, it appeared, after Conley had made his awful charge, that the burden then was shifted onto the defense to prove Frank's innocence, rather than that the State should prove his guilt.

In putting Frank's character in issue, however, I now think the defense has shifted back the burden, in large measure, anyway, to where the law contemplates it shall rest.

The State must complete its proof of Frank's depravity, or the State will not have made out such a case as likely will stand to the last analysis.

Defense Plans Its Climax.

As the State moved in the beginning of the Frank trial, steadily and consistently to the negro sweeper, Jim Conley, as the climax of its case, so to-day the defense is moving, every bit as steadily and as persistently, to the defendant, Leo Frank, as the climax of its case.

The State's case progressed ever up to Conley—the defense's case is progressing ever up to Frank.

It is Conley vs. Frank no less than it is the State vs. Frank.

No intelligent and discriminating observer, abreast with the status of the trial, doubts that, or has doubted it for days.

Either Leo Frank's life will answer for Mary Phagan's, or Jim Conley's will!

The capstone of the defense undoubtedly will be the defendant's statement. He will make it just before the defense rests its pleading.

Already, this anticipated dramatic event has cast its shadow before. The public is looking forward to Frank's personal statement with no less keen interest than it looked forward, perhaps, to the terrible story of Conley.

Frank will be permitted, under the law, to make a statement to the jury, but without being permitted to swear to its truthfulness. The jury will be instructed that it may accept that statement, if it so elects, in preference to all the sworn testimony in the case; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject it altogether.

The jury alone and finally is made the sole judge of the defendant's credibility on the stand.

The defendant can not be impeached; he can not be cross-examined; he can not be prompted by his attorneys. He simply states what he pleases, in the exact way he pleases, and in such detail or lack of detail as he pleases. It is strictly a matter between the defendant and the jury.

Leo Frank is one of the few defendants in murder cases coming under my observation, who absolutely refrained from discussing his case, in any phase of it, in advance of his trial.

Only at the Coroner's inquest, where he was obliged to talk, has he opened his lips to speak concerning the charge brought against him. In adopting this course, he unquestionably was well within his legal rights, and well within the bounds of common sense, too, no doubt—but the fact remains that the course he pursued is the unusual one.

I said in a former article that Frank apparently is a very patient man—and such men fight mighty hard when once aroused—and the more I reflect upon that observation, the more I am inclined to emphasize it.

He has waited four months to tell his story—but when he does tell it, it will be related in the proper presence, the court and the jury.

It is unlikely that the public wishes to hear anything quite so much as exactly what Frank himself has to say of the charges lodged against him.

It has heard what everybody else, both intimately and distantly concerned, has had to say. It has heard Conley's story from Conley's own lips—but thus far Frank has been as silent as the grave of the dead girl itself!

It is impossible to forecast the effect of Frank's statement upon the jury. It may have as powerful an effect in clearing him as Conley's horrible statement surely must have had by way of then condemning him.

Juries Have Accepted It.

I have seen cases in which the defendant's statement alone evidently served to clear him. I have known juries to accept it as the truth, over and above all the sworn testimony—just as the jury has the unquestioned right to do.

On the other hand, I have seen the defendant's statement fall flat and stale. I have seen it have no more effect upon the jury than rain has upon a duck's back.

It all depends upon the defendant's manner and bearing on the stand, the seeming sincerity of his recital, its plausibility and probability, the character of the man making it, his intelligence and apparent directness of purpose, the necessity of the statement as bearing alone and entirely upon weak points in either his own or the State's case, and many other things.

The defendant's statement presumably dovetails, of course, into the case his lawyers theretofore have made out—and yet I have known the defense to introduce the defendant the first thing, and proceed thereafter to the building of a case around his statement.

As this case is so thoroughly a fight between Conley and Frank—that is, between Conley's evidence and Frank's evidence—it will be intensely interesting to watch and see how eventually the jury views the relative value of both.

Much Rests on Defendant.

Conley's story, as amazing and as shocking as it is in parts, nevertheless has been accepted by many as the truth. Presumably, those people who already have made up their minds still are willing to be convinced—as violent as the presumption may be in some cases—if Frank can convince them.

Upon Frank's statement, therefore, it is entirely possible the entire case may turn finally.

To discredit Frank's statement, to be sure, will be his heavy self-interest and the fact that it is not upon oath and not subject to cross-examination.

To discredit Conley's story, however, is his also heavy self-interest and the fact that, while his story was delivered on oath, his character admittedly is very bad and his numerous previous sworn statements admittedly false in many important details.

The situation thus set up is about as pretty as it could be, from an abstract legal standpoint. If it were a surgical problem we were considering, I should predict that the operation will be beautiful and brilliant in any event—but as for the patient—well, I really could not say!

STEEL WORKERS ENTHRALLED BY FRANK TRIAL

By L. F. Woodruff.

There is one class of men to whom death is supposed to hold no horrors. They can not think of it and earn their daily bread. Were the fear of loss of life to enter their brain for one single second during their daily task they would be as useless as a motorless automobile.

Their pay is high for scorning the grave. They can see one of their companions fall victim to the perils of their calling and go back to work on the same job a few minutes later without a tremor, and encounter those same dangers with footstep firm and their minds only on the work they have to do.

These men are the structural steel workers. They are as picturesque a class as the struggle for dollars has developed. The fascination of their calling is universal. No man can pass the place where a building is slowly reaching its way into the clouds without standing in an awe-struck trance watching these men scamper around between heaven and earth as though they were walking about a place as safe as the quiet walk under the shade trees of Grant Park.

Furnish a Bizarre Feature.

Just across Hunter street from Judge Roan's courtroom, where the factory superintendent is fighting to clear his name of the charge of having killed Mary Phagan, Fulton County's magnificent new temple of justice is nearing completion.

But there is still work to be done on the dizzy heights of the upper stories. The men of the building trades are there and their interest in the dramatic court battle that is being waged within a stone's throw of them is as intense as is the interest of any of those who have sat through the tedious days of the hearing constant spectators of the trial.

These builders, from their lofty working place across the street, can peer through the courtroom windows and see the trial as it progresses. They can not hear a word of the evidence. They miss the forensic clashes of the counsel.

Dare Death to Watch.

But still there is not a moment of the time that the case is in progress that life and limb are not risked by these men as they stare into the courtroom.

They can see Frank as he sits through hour after hour of his great ordeal. They can get glimpses of the faces of his wife and mother, of the witnesses as they take the stand, and of the Judge on the bench. They can see the bulky back of Luther Rosser and the energetic gestures of Hugh Dorsey. That is all.

To see these things they must lean far out from their insecure perches, with death certain if they should fall to the pavement a hundred feet below.

There is but one explanation for their interest. They know a man is fighting for his life in that courtroom across the street.

And while death may have no terrors for them, it has a fascination as subtle as the stare of a serpent's eye to a bird, as strong as the rivets of steel with which they earn their livelihood.

Frank's Mother Resents Questioning of Dorsey

The calling of four character witnesses Wednesday opened the floodgates for the State to get before the jury all of its accusations against Frank, and was the direct cause of a frantic outburst on the part of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, who rose from her chair and dramatically denounced Solicitor General Dorsey.

It was the first scene created by any of the members of the prisoner's family. Frank's wife and mother were perceptibly affected when the Solicitor previously was hurling his charges of gross misconduct against the defendant, but both had restrained themselves from any marked demonstration.

Feeling Reaches Bursting Point.

The elder woman persistently had maintained an almost expressionless face while the most abhorrent charges were being made. Save that she looked away from the crowd as if it were a terrible ordeal to listen to the testimony, it would have been impossible to tell that it was one of her loved ones against whom the charges were being made.

Her feelings, however, had reached the bursting point Wednesday. She could stand the attack against her son's character no longer. From the impassive and quietly suffering woman she was goaded to the fury of a tigress.

From the lips of the Solicitor General flowed a stream of implied accusations. He asked about alleged incidents in Frank's office at the factory, about incidents in the girls' dressing room which the Solicitor intimated that Frank invaded without apology or excuse.

The mother of Frank lifted her eyes to the Solicitor. There was in them no longer the look of resignation with which the other charges had been met. In its place blazed hate and outraged mother love. She was willing no longer to await the end of the trial for her son's vindication.

The Solicitor continued. He gave the names of girls of tender years. He narrated circumstances that brought a crimson flood to the face of the younger Mrs. Frank.

"Haven't you heard of these stories?" he asked insinuatingly of the witness. As he spoke,

"No, nor you either!" cried the mother.

She was on her feet. The courtroom was astounded at the suddenness and dramatic intensity of the outburst. Persons rose here and there among the spectators, oblivious of the calls for order of the court attaches.

Mrs. Frank stood in hysterical indignation before the Solicitor. She said things to him that were lost in the confusion. She would have continued her tirade had she not been restrained by court deputies and members of her own family who rushed to her side to quiet and comfort her.

"My God, my God," she moaned as she was led sobbing from the courtroom. She was taken home in a hysterical condition. She returned toward the close of the afternoon session, but did not re-enter the courtroom.

If the denunciation affected the Solicitor, he did not show it unless it was by a line of questioning even more severe than he had pursued before.

Testimony Aids Frank.

Jones, an insurance man, in whose company Frank holds a policy, denied that he had heard any of the reports of alleged immorality. He said that the young man's record, in respect to health, habits and morals, had been very thoroughly investigated before the policy was issued. He testified that Frank showed an unusually clean record.

The bars were let down for the introduction of testimony against Frank's character when the defense put on the stand Alfred L. Lane, of Brooklyn, a classmate of Frank in Pratt Institute. Lane said that he had known Frank for fifteen years and that he knew he possessed a good character.

Lane was followed by two other of Frank's classmates.

They were Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, a clerical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J. Both testified as to his good character. Several witnesses intervened and then Ashley Jones was called.

Important testimony was given by Dr. William Owens, who was one of four men who sought to reproduce the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as Jim Conley described it. William A. Fleming took the part of Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley. Conley said that he and Frank carried the body downstairs and returned to Frank's office in about five minutes.

Dr. Owens said that it took them about eighteen and a half minutes to carry out the drama in the pencil factory, exclusive of writing the notes and also exclusive of the time that Conley said he spent in the wardrobe in Frank's office.

If the defense is able to make the jurors believe that it would have taken Frank and Conley eighteen and a half minutes to accomplish this, they will have established what is considered a very strong alibi for the superintendent. To this must be added the eight minutes that Conley declares he was in Frank's wardrobe and about twelve minutes for the writing of the four notes—this is half of the time that it probably would have taken the negro to write them according to the testimony of Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective. This makes a total of thirty-nine and one-half minutes. Conley said they started with the body at 12:56. The thirty-eight and one-half minutes would have brought the time to 1:34 1-2.

But, according to one of the State's own witnesses, Frank had left the factory and had arrived home at 1:30—or, in other words, had arrived home before the disposal of the body could have been accomplished.

Quinn Severely Grilled.

Lemmie Quinn, metal department foreman, received a severe grilling from Solicitor Dorsey in the afternoon, but stuck to his story that he visited the office of Frank at about 12:20 the afternoon of the murder. This is in contradiction of Conley's story, who testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came. The Solicitor displayed affidavits of Quinn in which the foreman said he had been at the factory sometime between 12 and 12:20 o'clock. Quinn said that at the time he made the affidavit he had not estimated the time so closely as he had been able to do since.

Other witnesses of the day were Dr. William S. Kendrick, head of the chair of medicine of the new Atlanta Medical School; Frank Payne, a former office boy for Frank, and Oscar Pappenheimer, a stockholder in the National Pencil Factory.

STATE'S SOLE AIM IS TO CONVICT, DEFENSE'S TO CLEAR IN MODERN TRIAL

By O. B. KEELER.

Right in the first jump, please understand that (1) this is merely the opinion of a layman, unlearned in the law; that (2) he may be the only layman in existence who feels this way about it; and (3) the Frank trial is not being singled out in the following comment, except as it is a fair example of the great criminal trials of this country.

* * *

In following the trial of Leo Frank, two points keep prodding me with increasing fervor.

Those are the points:

(1) That the prosecution's efforts are centered on producing evidence that will convict Leo Frank.

(2) That the efforts of the defense are devoted to producing evidence that will acquit Leo Frank.

Now, having read thus far, you probably are smiling to yourself at the idea that anybody should undertake to write a newspaper story about a great trial, basing it on such an absurdly simple and obvious observation.

State's Evidence All Damaging.

That (you say) is something everybody knows.

That (you say) is taken for granted.

Nevertheless (I say), that doesn't make it right.

I sat in Judge Roan's courtroom, right at the edge of the jury box, and I heard the State prerent its case.

Every bit of the State's evidence was damaging to Leo Frank.

If the State of Georgia knew anything good about Leo Frank, or had any evidence that tended to cast a doubt on his guilt of a horrid crime, the State of Georgia kept that information strictly to itself.

I heard the defense begin attacking the evidence offered by the State, and offering (in turn) evidence that tended to show the innocence of Leo Frank.

If the lawyers of the defense knew, down in their hearts, that certain points made by the State were true; if they realized that certain facts were unshakable; if in their investigation they had found certain things that tended to fasten on their client the murder of Mary Phagan—if any of this was in the mind of the defense it did not get out where the jury could see it.

How About Investigation?

Well (you say), it would be a pretty kind of defense that would produce evidence that would hang the defenant. And (you added) isn't that what the State of Georgia pays its prosecutors for?

For what?

Conviction?

Or INVESTIGATION?

That was the most unmerciful of the prodding points.

Of course, now, the State's attorneys in the Phagan case say they believe Frank is guilty, and equally, of course, the lawyers for the defense declare they are convinced of the innocence of their client. But that is always the case in important murder cases, and furthermore, as I have said, I am not talking about the Frank trial as much as about a system of justice.

I asked a lawyer about it; a widely-read and learned lawyer, with something in his head besides the law he has absorbed.

I said:

"Honestly, now—isn't this system of criminal prosecution all wrong? Oughtn't the State have investigators instead of prosecutors? Why should the accused have any defending counsel if the State were not prosecuting, but making a fair and impartial investigation?"

I thought the idea was highly original.

I learned something, right away.

The widely-read and learned lawyer informed me, kindly but firmly, that that was an Original Idea a good many hundred years ago. That it was THE original idea of dealing with criminal cases, in fact. That it was pretty nearly fixed in the basis of good old English law.

He went on to explain that in the early days when a crime was committed, the proper officer—I forget what his title was—the proper officer started an investigation. If a man apparently was implicated by the first evidence brought to light, that man was detained. If he had already "beat it," that was added to the suspicious circumstances against him, and the pursuit began.

But if he was well in hand, and the case was a regular mystery, the investigator for the Crown, or whatever it was, went into that case exactly like a certified accountant examining a set of books suspected by the firm of not being correct.

Auditor Has No Interest.

The auditor doesn't care a whoop whether he finds the suspected bookkeeper guilty or innocent. That is, he has no interest at stake. He is paid for making a correct audit. He is paid by the job. Probably, unless his liver is out of whack, he would rather see the poor bookkeeper cleared. But he has no interest in the matter.

Well, it seems from what the lawyer told me, that was the original plan of criminal prosecution by the State.

The State didn't prosecute. It just investigated. If the facts produced by the investigation warranted a jury in "sticking" the accused, well and good. If the evidence warranted the jury in turning him loose, also well and good.

The accused had no "counsel," the way we understand it. If he was a rich person, or had rich friends, he was privileged to employ an investigator, or investigators, who would assist the public investigator in his investigation.

Hired Help Might Convict.

But it was understood that if the hired help turned up anything damning, the daming thing would be allowed to go ahead and damn as hard as it could, without concealment or mitigation on the part of the assistant investigators.

Wherefore, it was not the prudent part of guilt to employ additional investigators.

And now, reverting to the enlightened present, what have we on exhibition?

Not singling out the Frank trial, you understand, but in it, as in every big criminal trial in this country, where the accused is able to employ talented counsel, we have the spectacle of two sets of abl lawyers, fighting each other with all the resources of their learning and shrewdness and ability.

The life and honor of the accused may be at stake—the prosecution, once committed to its task, will seek no evidence but what will incriminate him.

The high claims of justice are at stake—the defense must permit no shred of evidence to be presented, saving only what will tend to clear their client.

And He Didn't Explain Why.

It is no fault of the prosecutor that this is so.

It is no fault of the lawyers for the defense.

And as to the system?

Well, this is just the opinion of a layman, you remember. It may be that there is a good reason in law why the investigator has become a prosecutor, and is paid as such; and why the defendant may employ expensive counsel to combat the investigation — or prosecution — at all points.

There may be a good reason for all this.

Only, my friend, the lawyer, didn't explain it to me.

THE GEORGIAN'S MAGAZINE PAGE

.:. Their Married Life .:.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Well, we can't stand here on the street," laughed Helen. "Let's go somewhere for tea—where we can really talk."

"Come to my studio! I've got the quaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus, laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobblestoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dust-cloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over here—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

"Just look around—I'll be back in a minute," as she caught up a small pitcher and ran out bareheaded.

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the living room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not, we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! It isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners, and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes, it isn't bad," roused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week, put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's seemed only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

"James Patterson," promptly replied the man on the right.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Mirrors and Millinery

As It Is for Her Now - - - - - - - - - - and Used To Be

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a brocaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

She sat on a little gilt chair with her satin-clad feet making their pretty imprint in the green depths of a velvet carpet.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP .:. .:. .:.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk, and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shoe and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She hears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school lunches is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well, they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

As Mr. Gryce was buying the tickets, Dr. Molesworth whispered in his ear:

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out from under the shadow. You look almost brilliant to-day."

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you, here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Fashions of the Moment

No. 1.

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

Then they left him and the Jew gazed at the closed door.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisitor was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

"Praise be the Lord!" he sighed, when he saw the starlit sky above his head. He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused; he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had failed him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

JOHNNY EVERS PROVES HE IS BOSS OF CUBS

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 14.—All doubts as to who is manager of the Cubs have been dispelled during the past few days, for Jawn Evers is not only the Keystone King, but he rules with an iron hand, and those who dare to resent his ruling power have been relegated to the minors or disposd of in some other manner.

It is less than a week since the manager of the Cubs learned through the columns of a certain morning newspaper that he was about to be dethroned.

In other words, according to the word of one who claimed to have the inside info, Jawn was about to be Maderoized.

Your humble servant hurried to the throne of the Keystone King in an effort to learn just hom badly King Jawn felt over the sad news.

"If all of the sport scribes in Chicago were as certain of their jobs as I am of mine," said Jawn, "they would be purchasing benzine buggies on the installment plan. Some scribes can't get real news, so they manufacture it.

"The main trouble with the ball club has been that there were too many players on the club who thought they knew more about running the affairs of the club than does the owner or manager."

Rather pointed words, these, but they flowed as freely from Jawn's mouth as milk and honey in that land where one never knows hunger.

The cross-examiner shot a few pointed questions at the King.

"To whom do you refer?" was the first one, and Jawn replied:

"Well, there are a number of pitchers on my staff who know so much about pitching that they refuse to take any orders," was the rather evasive reply.

"Name them," was the next hot one fired at Jawn.

"I'd rather not just now, but it will all come out in the wash," spake the oracle.

Stop, look, listen and cogitate.

Reulbach Let Out.

Ed Reulbach has been traded to Brooklyn, Overall has been forwarded to Frisco by parcel post, and Lurid Lew Richie will grace Kansas City with his august and comical presence.

Nuff sed. Who are the pitchers who were treading on Jawn's artistic bunions?

Reulbach, Overall and Richie, and they are no longer Cubs.

That's the answer. John Evers is ruler of the Cubs, and he has been given to understand that his job is as secure as the Constitution of the United States.

Evers Shows Hand.

He intends to manage the affairs of the club without either outside or inside influences or assistance, and when he finds a person in the little family who can't see things his way, it's a 10 to 1 bet that person is going to enjoy some scenery en route to somewhere.

True, neither Overall, Reulbach nor Richie has shown anything aside from an enthusiastic desire to connect with the pay roll this season, and that alone is reason for a change of climate for the trio, but the fact that they toiled under Chance when Evers was but a common layman and with them is ample evidence that they are included among the pitchers "who know too much about pitching to take orders."

The developments in the Cub camp during the past week mean much for the future of the Cubs.

They mean that President Murphy is determined to inject new blood into his ball club.

He has about decided that the old Cub machine that won three pennants is becoming worn and that the club that won a pennant two years ago can not be depended upon to repeat five years hence.

In other words, when the Cubs board the rattler for the sunny climes of Florida next March there will be a number of familiar physogs missing.

No Shift on Infield.

It is the firm belief of yours truly that the Cub infield will be intact next season, with Saier at first, Evers on the throne and Zim at third. We are making no prognostications as to who will jerk the pill out of the dust in and around short.

Fred Williams will be among those who will cavort in the outer pastures, and further than that affiant sayeth not.

It will be a new club in the way of pitchers, and there may be a new face behind the bat, which means that another face, familiar to all the baseball fans, will be missing. No names mentioned, but he couldn't get along with Mrs. Britton.

Evers will have a club that will answer to him and not try to dictate the managerial policies.

Overall, Reulbach and Richie have outlived their usefulness with the Cubs. They may show a flash of class with the clubs to whom they have been sent, but they will never wear Cub uniforms again.

This wholesale canning business leaves Evers with six twirlers to finish the season, Cheney, Humphries, Lavender, Pierce, Smith and Stack.

And the season will end in a few short weeks, then—watch for some new developments and some young twirlers.

PROUGH AND MAYER ARE SOLD TO CHICAGO SOX

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 14.—The star Birmingham battery, Prough and Mayer, has been secured by the Chicago American League club. Exercising an optional agreement, Walter Mayer, the young Baron catcher, was regained ofr $1,500.

When Chicago placed Mayer with the Baron club, a blanket option was exacted for the choice of a player for $1,500. Prough's wonderful pitching attracted the attention of the White Sox, and he was chosen.

Leading the league with a record of twenty victories and five defeats, Prough will gain his third trial in the majors. Previously Pittsburg and Cincinnati have tried out the elevated pitcher and have returned him to the minors.

Crackers Facing Supreme Test

Mobile Has Lead of 5 1-2 Games

By O. B. Keeler.

HAVING duly touched off the red fire, ignited the Roman candles and called out the fire department, we will now get out the old chewed-at-one-end section of pencil and put down a few of the things popularly supposed not to mislead, which, by the way, is one of the most staggering fallacies the twentieth century staggers under.

It is plainly to be seen, and may be set down in signs like the following: !!!!, that the Crackers trimmed Birmingham a severely straight series, copped the final road trip in the ratio of seven to four, and are in something of a position to contest against Mobile and Montgomery for the possession of the title of Southern champeens.

* * *

THE exact situation is this:

Atlanta has 26 games left to play—all at home.

Mobile has a lead of five and one-half full games over the Crackers.

Montgomery has an edge of three full games.

But—

Mobile has only two more games scheduled at home.

And Montgomery is not much better off, having three.

* * *

MAKING the matter as personal as possible, the Crackers will get a regular crack at each of their principal rivals in the long home wind-up. The Billikens will be here August 21, 22 and 23, and the Gulls, September 2, 3, 4 and 5—about the time the last spurt for the wire is on, provided things become that acute.

The Gulls and the Billies do not play each other any more, the latter probably being rather more than content with that arrangement, judging by the recent trouble in Gullville.

* * *

SO that's the lay-out.

Chattanooga is here to-day, opening with a double-header. The Lookouts also will play Friday and Saturday, and then the Barons will sneak in Monday and try for a little of the revenge stuff. The following Thursday—the 21st—the Montgomery series starts. Then comes Memphis for four games, then New Orleans and Mobile, four each, and then the Lookouts return to wind up the season with a single contest—September 6.

* * *

INTERESTING, is it not?

No?

Well, it'll look a lot different, with a regular shoe-horn crowd wadded into the old Cow Pasture, and a sunburned bunch of men in white uniforms trotting out on the grass, and some sawed-off, second-story artist pulling off his lid and bellowing:

"The bat-t-tree-ees f'r t'day's game: Muggum'ry, Brown an' Gribbings; 'Tlanta, Dunton Caipmunk!"

That's something else again.

* * *

WOUGH!

A foxy young Pitcher named Prough
Got into a bit of a rough
With some Walloping Guys,
And to his surprise,
He found out he didn't know hough!

* * *

WHICH bit of gloating in a strictly minor key leads up to the fact that, as G. Cleveland once eruditely remarked, it is not a theory but a condition that confronts us.

The condition, roughly set forth, is to win two-thirds of twenty-six games—or better.

Two-thirds ought just about to pass Montgomery and overtake Mobile, who will have to travel on the high speed to break even on the long road trip that confronts each.

But two-thirds of 26 games is between seventeen and eighteen.

And that is a good many games to win, when it is mixed up with at least four double-headers.

Also, it may rain.

* * *

WHICH brings on the subject of clouds. And just now, on the heels of five straight victories on the road, the everlasting rout of the Barons, the busting of Mr. Prough's proud record, and the beginning of a long stay at home—well, just now, we are inclined to think the said cloud is turning outward a bit of the well-known silver lining.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

The Georgia-Alabama season will close Saturday, and while hardly any of the clubs in the circuit have made money this year from the attendance, it is expected that several will realize on the sale of players. The abnormal speed of the Class D Southeastern last year militated against the sport in Anniston, Gadsden and Talladega this year, but it is believed that the fans are getting satisfied with real Class D ball and that the league will be kept intact.

* * *

Gadsden has had the best club from the start, and they probably have the best manager in the league, considered from the standpoint of both his playing and managerial ability. Randall brought several men from New Orleans who had been playing all winter and they were in good form when the season opened. Although Gadsden has never been off the top, however, the attendance at that place was the poorest in the league, and it was the only city to get games transferred.

* * *

A fine spirit of bon homme prevailed among both the fans and players at the banquet held in Anniston last Saturday night, when an inspiring address was made to the men by Hon. E. D. Willett, a well-known attorney and former president of the Anniston club in the Southeastern. At this meeting, Proctor, Anniston's star centerfielder, also proved himself a fine orator. He's a graduate of a Texas college and promises to go up.

* * *

If the league is kept together, there will be a unanimous apeal made for the re-election of President W. J. Boykin, of Gadsden, who has shown himself to be a live wire, a man of backbone and uniform fairness. He has pleased all the clubs.

* * *

White, the one-armed phenom, who for a while played with the Anniston club, holding the unique record of being the first one-armed man to perform in professional company, has made good as an umpire. Joe Burke, an old-timer with the indicator, also gave better satisfaction this year than ever before.

* * *

Boyd, whom Birmingham released to Talladega, will probably go back to the Southern when this league closes. His arm is getting in shape again and he has had pretty easy sailing. Rice, Newnan's catcher, is one of those rare backstops who hit the ball and perform well at the same time with the mitt. In the first series at Anniston he got ten hits out of thirteen times at bat.

* * *

The Anniston club this year encountered a hoodoo in the .500 limit. Every time the Chickens would get to the half perfect mark something would happen, and down the ladder they would go again. They almost reached there last Saturday, but in the game Monday they hit the toboggan.

* * *

The two Georgia towns, Newnan and LaGrange, led in attendance this year. Opelika did well considering the size of the place, but Gadsden, Anniston and Talladega had been used to faster ball, and when salaries were reduced this year the fans got the idea that the sport would not be interesting. This proved erroneous, however.

Fighting Carpenter Shows Remarkable Gameness in Great Battle

FRANK WHITNEY EASY FOR CHARLEY WHITE

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN by far the most thrilling, exciting and scientifically waged ring battle ever seen in Atlanta, Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Atlanta favorite, was for the first time in his Southern ring career compelled to leave the roped arena a beaten man. For ten rounds he was scientifically hammered by Charley White, the marvelous Chicago lightweight.

And though Whitney left the ring beaten, he did not leave there with any smirch on his record. It is doubtful if he ever fought more brilliantly. It is certain that no man ever showed more gameness than did the Iowa carpenter. There were cheers for the victor, but there were more cheers for the vanquished.

It was simply a case of Whitney meeting a better man, but, though, at no stage of the game did he appear to have a shade, time and again when the crowd was on its feet expecting to see him feel his first knockout instead saw him rally brilliantly, give blow for blow, never wincing under White's terrible punching. Whitney was always a great big figure.

But credit must be given White. The little Chicagoan seems every inch a champion. He had a deep and abiding respect for Frank, though, and boxed carefully. Not until the seventh round did he begin to take anything like a chance, and then he was quick to crawl back behind his breastworks whenever Whitney seemed dangerous.

* * *

AS a result, Atlanta boxing fans saw boxing in the real sense of the word. Both men fought marvelous defensive battles. The sparring was fast and perfectly executed. Both used excellent ring generalship. It was White's superior strength and his youth that told the story.

Whitney's entire attack was from his right side. The few times he used his left it seemed to possess little power, but at that he did quite as much leading as his opponent. In the fourth round his right landed and White was turned completeyl around by the force of the blow. In this round Whitney had the shade, but all the others were either even or White's.

* * *

WHEN the gong rang for the seventh round, the battle was apparently all even. Then White took the lead. Both men had been cautious in reference to infighting, but in this session White got busy at this part of the game and beat Whitney at the feature of fighting in which he is most skilled.

In the eighth Whitney was very, very tired. His face was completely smeared, but his magnificent condition told the tale. In the ninth it was the same story, and in the last part of the tenth it seemed inevitable that Whitney would be floored before the gong. He weathered it bravely and was on his feet fighting to the end, but there was not a dissenting voice when Referee Castro raised the Chicago boy's glove.

* * *

IN the semi-windup Kid Young was decisively beaten by Charley Lee. Young seemed to have none of his old dash and virility and in the fourth round after Lee had dropped him and Young arose to continue his tactics of crawling under cover Castro announced Lee the winner.

At times Young showed a flash, but it was never more than a flash. It seems that the promising newsboy boxer has about run his course.

* * *

IN the third round of their scheduled six-round go Terry Nelson dropped Mike Saul with a terrific clip on the jaw. Saul came up on the count of nine, and after clinching desperately backed into his corner and covered. He was apparently badly hurt, not only from Nelson's blow, but also from the blow he received when his head struck the canvas with a bump that could be heard for feet.

Saul was apparently unable to fight back, and the referee declared Nelson the winner to save the Atlanta milkman from further punishment. Up to the knockdown Saul had a big lead over the little Greek and was apparently boxing in his best style.

* * *

IN the opening engagement "Mary" Payne knocked out Battling O'Leary in the second round of their four-round go. Both boys were novices, but both were willing.

A fair house saw an excellent fight card.

Tesreau and Matty After Auto "Big Six" Making Good Record

JOHN M'GRAW has called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 1, the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assignment to the big spit-baller 25 times. Jeff only went the route on eight occasions, but on many of the times he was dereicked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

Were Hugh Chalmers to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead of the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773.

Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

The club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bates and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

The figures below show the number of games started and completed by the Giants' pitchers this season:

	Games Started	Complete Games Pitched	P.C.
Crandall	1	1	1.000
Mathewson	22	17	.773
Marquard	20	13	.650
Demaree	16	7	.437
Ames	5	2	.400
Fromme	6	2	.333
Tesreau	25	8	.320
Wiltse	2	0	.000
Totals	97	50	.515

CINCINNATI ASKS FOR WAIVERS ON 4 PLAYERS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 14.—Before the Cincinnati Nationals left Pittsburg it was reported from their camp that waivers had been asked on Suggs, Sheckard, Egan and Bates, veterans of the team. All the clubs in the league have waived on Bates and Egan, and President Herrmann and Manager Tinker are trying to make deals for them with American League teams. They expect to pull off a trade for Egan with either the White Sox or the Highlanders, both being in need of infielders of Egan's class.

It is likely that several other changes will be made. On the present eastern trip all the clubs have also waived on Suggs, for whom Manager Tinker has been trying to pull a deal. Trades are under way for Sheckard.

WORLD'S SERIES GAMES WILL START OCTOBER 6

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The world's series games are to start on Monday, October 6. This was the information President Ban Johnson, of the American League, gave out. The play will continue on each succeeding day thereafter until one club has won four out of seven games.

Should two Eastern teams be fortunate enough to take down the glory in the National and American Leagues—and it looks certain—then Sunday will be an off-day, for the "blue" laws of the East forbid the parading of our national pastime on the Sabbath.

Conzelman and Price Will Work

Fans Will See Calvo in Right Field

By Joe Agler.

HOME again! And glad to be here, you may be sure. Especially as we won't have to hook any more rattlers and ride any more until the season of 1913 is history.

The boys talked it over, coming this way from Birmingham last night, and they decided the Crackers had one grand little chance to knock the everlasting lining out of about six other clubs in the next three weeks, and bring home another flag to Crackerville.

That's what we will try our best to do.

The Birmingham series has given us all a lot of confidence. We pounded the ball back of good work by our own pitchers, and put up a great fielding game. That combination will win regularly against anything in this league, if only we can keep it working.

* * *

CONZELMAN and Price will work in the double-header with Chattanooga this afternoon, and Dunn probably will have to catch in both, as Chapman has a bad ankle.

Chris Holtz has been released outright, and Jacinto Calvo, the Cuban outfielder Clark Griffith sent us, will be in right field. We hear he is a bear with the wood and fast on the bases, and that is what we will need from now on. Holtz is a crack fielder, but weak at the plate.

* * *

RETURNING to the last battle in Slagville, which is a very pleasant topic with us, it will be noted that Carl Thompson, Baron cast-off, pitched rings around his famous rival, Clinton Prough, stopping his winning streak at ten games, where he is tied with Covleskie.

Prough showed the stuff in holding down the runs as well as he did, for the Crackers were surely hitting the old pill. Once McBride, by a great running catch, robbed Harry Holland of what looked like a sure homer, with the bases full at the time. Harry kept up his hitting streak, and is now in the charmed circle of the .300 wallopers.

And please don't forget Wally Smith. His drive to the center field fence probably was the longest hit of the season in Birmingham, and just about settled things for Mr. Prough and his help. The help also cracked under punishment, while we kept up our good work in the field.

* * *

WELL, the Barons are out of the race, it seems, and it was our bunch that put them out when the rest of the league seemed powerless to head thm.

Now we will have a chance at the others.

We'll do our best.

REDS BUY CATCHER.

ROANOKE, VA., Aug. 14.—Mark Stewart, the big catcher of the Norfolk club, in the Virginia State League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Red Sox for $2,000. Stewart is a young catcher, and was playing college ball at Washington and Lee University a year ago. His batting average has been .300. He will finish the season with the Norfolk club and report to Manager Tinker at the conclusion of the season.

Holtz Given Release; Chapman Is Injured

The Crackers arrived, right side up with care, early this morning and went immediately to their quarters to rest for the double battle with Chattanooga this afternoon.

Every man was in tip-top shape, except Chapman, Manager Smith reported. The useful backstop turned an ankle in the last game at Birmingham, and, while he pluckily finished the game, he suffered with a god deal of swelling last night, and is not in condition to play to-day. Joe Dunn will have to catch games, and possibly the other two contests with the Lookouts.

Chris Holtz was released yesterday in Birmingham and turned back to Selma. He showed much class as a fielder, but his hitting was not of the caliber needed by the Crackers in their final dash for the flag. Jacinto Calvo, the chunky little Cuban sent on by Clark Griffith, will play right field the rest of the season.

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

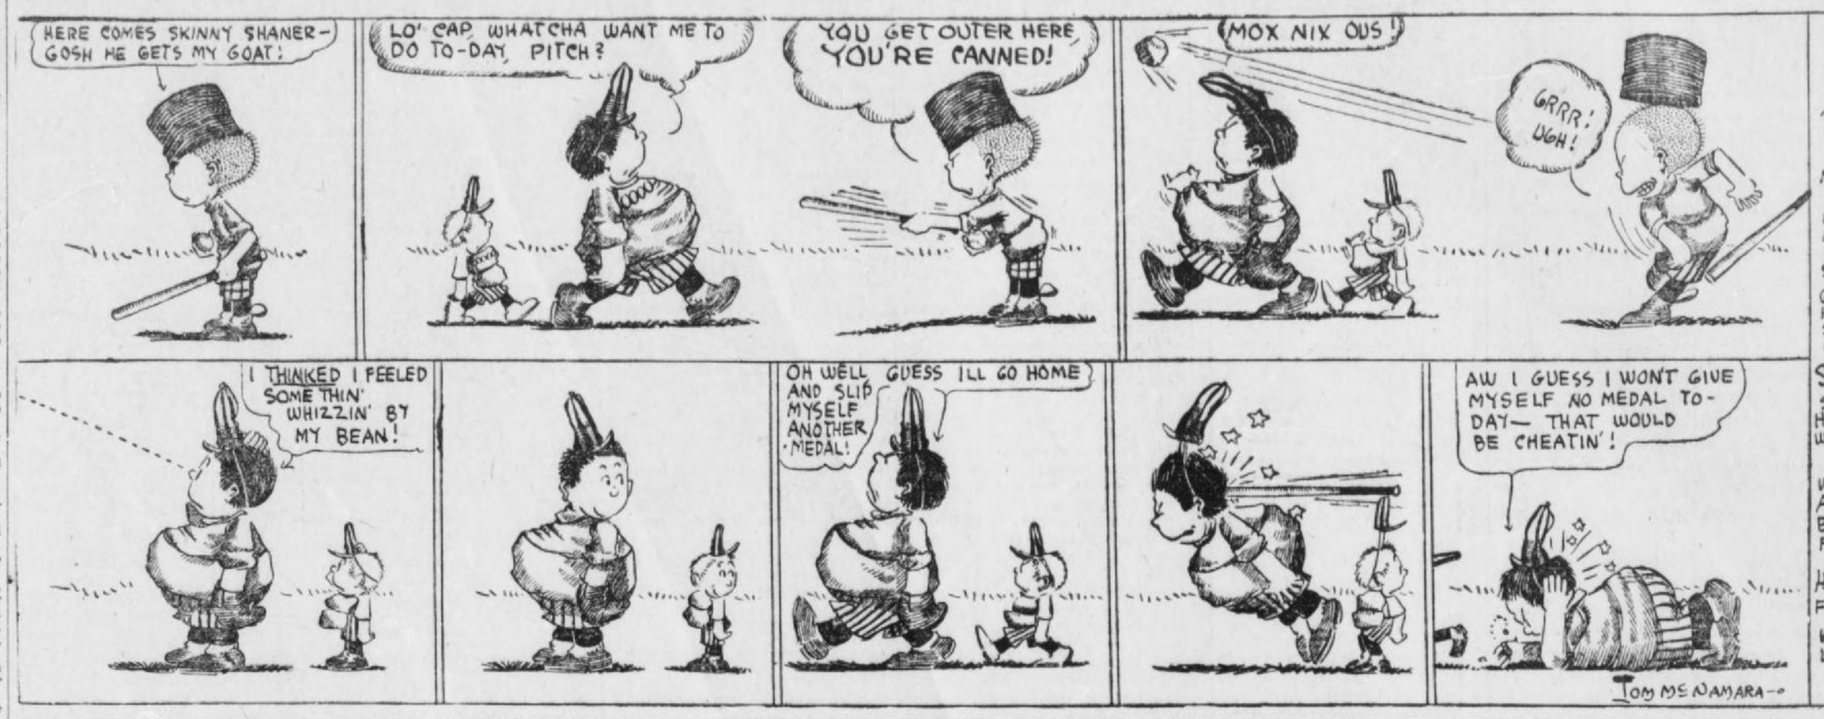

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

STARS.

Oft in the early fall,
With baseball fights near ended,
One stops to think where all
The springtime stars have wended.
The Second Cobbs have lost their jobs
And left us broken-hearted;
The Wagners, too, have up and blew,
The Speakers have departed.
Oft, as the autumn comes,
And pennant scraps are ended,
Lord knows where all the bums
Who starred in spring have wended.

Speaking of George McBride as manager of the Red Sox, McAleer could travel from here to Gehenna and back and not find a better one.

McBride never was a Lajoie at the plate nor a Cobb on the bases, but he can think twice before the average athlete gets a start.

The report that Hugh Jennings has signed Messrs. Tutweiler and Fadrique simply shows how hard it is to get rid of a hobby.

It is important to know that the Pelicans won a game the other day from Memphis. This shows that the Pels can beat somebody.

While Packey McFarland depends more on his cleverness than on his punch, his recent effort at song writing has demonstrated that he can punch the English language without mercy.

Were we the manager of a white hope our first move would be to sign him with the Giants, where he could get a post-graduate course in the art of rough house.

ODE TO THE WALKING GHOST.

They say time drags on Sunday
When there is naught to do.
But, gee! it drags on Monday—
It seems to stick like glue.

It sure does drag that one day
From half-past twelve till one,
For one o'clock on Monday
*Is when ice cop the mon.

*Slang for stipend.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR SPEAKER TO BE TRADED

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—While it is an open secret that President McAleer is pretty well disgusted at the way certain members of the Red Sox team have been going this season, there is very little ground for believing he has ever thought of trading Tris Speaker to the Washington club.

Of course, if, as a morning paper prints under a Milwaukee date, he intends making George McBride the Red Sox manager next year, he will have to get rid of Carrigan, for Bill would not be likely to show unusual enthusiasm for the common cause if he were deposed without a fair trial, and the tag end of a season can hardly be considered enough time in which to gauge any man's managerial ability.

* * *

BUT why Speaker? Especially if Carrigan is no longer with the team. A few weeks ago dopesters were figuring that Speaker would have to be traded because he could not get along with the new manager. Waiving the question as to whether Speaker has or has not given his best services to the team since Carrigan's appointment (in our opinion he has done his best), why should it be necessary to trade him after the cause of his discontent, if discontent he ever had, has been removed?

* * *

FOR is it at all likely that "Old Fox" Griffith is likely to let go the best base-runner in the American League, even if he should consent to break up his infield by releasing his shortstop.

Either Milan or Speaker would be a notable addition to any club, but the departure of either would, conversely, be a great loss to the team with which he is now connected.

McAleer is entirely willing to secure Milan, and Griffith, no doubt, could be prevailed upon to take Speaker. But neither cares much about letting his own star depart.

RED SOX TO GIVE $10,000 IN PLAYERS FOR REHG

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 14.—A baseball deal was engineered here whereby the Boston Red Sox will give $10,000 in players for Left Fielder Walter Rehg, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association. A big cash price was offered to Manager Friel, of the St. Paul club, but he turned down these offers for a trade.

ROCKFORD WINS LONG GAME.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Aug. 14.—A double and a single in the nineteenth inning gave Rockford the victory over Racine yesterday, 3 to 2.

RINGSIDE NEWS

After a layoff of two months Eddie McGoorty is ready to don the padded mitts again. Jim Coffroth has offered him either Sailor Petroskey or Bob McAllister, who boxed a twenty-round draw on the coast last week. McGoorty isn't particular which he meets, and has wired the California promoter to that effect.

Jimmy Grant, the Chicago bantamweight, who holds a knock-out victory over Spider Britt, is back in our midst once more. Jimmy has been spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla., and is now anxious to get on with some of the local talent. Jimmy is one of the classiest fellows of his weight and should find little trouble in getting on here.

* * *

Johnny Dundee will make his next fight against Ad Wolgast on Admission Day. Dundee, by stopping Jack White, has won a warm spot in the hearts of the coast fans. He should not lack for admirers when he stacks up against the ex-champion.

Two clever newspaper men of Chicago, George S. Robbins and Joseph B. Bowles, have gotten out a tright and interesting little book covering the career of Frank A. Gotch. The wrestling champion is credited with the following: "In training, it is brains over brawn. The man who trains with his brain can get more good out of twirling a match than an athlete who does not use his brain can out of a 5-pound dumb-bell.

* * *

Joe Rivers, having had two chances against a world's lightweight champion, finds himself further from the 133-pound title than when he started to box in this division. The Mexican is carded to box Leach Cross on Labor Day and unless he wins decisively, Joe will find himself in a class with Anderson and Baldwin.

* * *

* * *

For the 99th time Jack Dillon and Tom Caponi are matched. Reports from Winnipeg state that the two middleweights will clash in a scheduled twelve-round set-to some time next month.

* * *

It is even hinted that Welsh and Ritchie will pull the wool over the eyes of Vancouver sports, as each man is said to have an understanding that they will box for the benefit of the moving pictures only.

* * *

And now we learn Ritchie fears Murphy, too. One wonders what Ritchie does when he isn't looking up some new person to fear.

* * *

Promoter Coffroth, of San Francisco, is reported to have Arthur Pelky signed for three bouts. Charley Miller will be one of his opponents.

* * *

The manager of Gunboat Smith will now try and fill all the sporting pages in the country telling what a wonder Smith is and that he is the real champion. And all because he trimmed Jim Flynn.

PITCHER GIVES ONLY ONE HIT IN DOUBLE BILL

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 14.—Pitcher Hedgepeth established a new world's record here yesterday, when he pitched both games of a double-header against Richmond and was hit safely but once in the eighteen consecutive innings. He was not scored against; only gave three bases on balls—one in the first game and two in the second—and did not hit a batsman. Hedgepeth was sold to the Washington Americans several weeks ago.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE HAS NOT PUT OIL LETTERS BEFORE LOBBY PROBERS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 14.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the House of Representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the Congressional committee or to any responsible body the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents, and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore, our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege-seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters, which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied, because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course, I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

HEAD OF COUNTY BOARD PRAISES AUTO TOUR

SMmith Says Coast Route Means Much to South—Senate Indorses American's Plan.

The campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American for an all-Southern highway reaching from Atlanta to San Francisco received another boost Thursday when Shelby Smith, chairman of the Fulton County Board of Commissioners, declared the project to be an epoch in the progress of the South.

"The proposed highway from Atlanta to San Francisco," said Mr. Smith, "is splendid and the most commendable movement for good roads all over the South that has been launched in recent years. This road is unlike other roads, for the coast-to-coast route leads somewhere. In other words, it has a definite point as its destination.

"Each State, as well as each town all along the route, is bound to be materially benefited by this monster highway. We have many railroads in the United States, but how many really good roads have we in proportion—roads that could be used if there were no railroads?

Expects Laws on Topic.

"I repeat that this campaign means big things, not only for Georgia, but for the entire South and Southwest, and I do not hesitate to say I am more pleased than I can tell to know that Hearst's Sunday American has taken up the movement to push it through to ultimate success."

Mr. Smith said further that he expected to see great development in the laws, including the creation of a State highway commission, as a result of just such definite movements as proposed by Hearst's American.

Commissioner Smith's remarks concerning the great highway emphasize the marvelous interest manifested in the campaign which will be inaugurated by The American next Monday, Tuesday Governor John M. Slaton placed his stamp of approval on the campaign, and Wednesday morning the Georgia Senate passed unanimously a resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second District, indorsing the coast-to-coast project.

All of these expressions of approval are distinctly pleasing to Official Trail Blazer Ferguson, according to his statement Thursday.

"We are going to conduct this campaign strictly on a scientific basis," declared Mr. Ferguson, "and intend to check up the entire trip in detail, so that adequate road maps may be prepared, to be compared later preparatory to selecting the very best route from coast to coast.

"I will carry several instruments, including a thermometer, which I shall use to make records daily, in an effort to demonstrate beyond question that the South and Southwest offer the very best facilities for extended motor touring, such as is contemplated on this monster transcontinental highway."

To Make Trip in Easy Stages.

Mr. Ferguson declared the trip would be made in easy stages, so that every detail in connection with the plan for the highway may be examined en route.

Stops will be made in all the principal towns and cities en route, and information concerning the promotion of better roads and interstate highways given to those interested. The first official stop between Atlanta and Birmingham, the first lap of the long journey, will be made at Anniston, Ala.

The official start will be made Monday, following a monster parade of automobiles and motorcycles, including the private car of the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief and various city officials. Plans for this parade were completed Thursday.

$100,000 Offered by Griffith for Ty Cobb

WASHINGTON, Aug. 14.—One hundred thousand dollars has been offered by Clark Griffith, manager of the Washington baseball club, for the release of Tyrus Cobb, of the Detroit club.

This is the world's record price for a baseball player, and it is even said that if the Detroit club turns down the offer Griffith will increase the figure. Griffith says that with Cobb he can win the pennant.

For the first time in 24 years the glacier of solid ice that has remained visible throughout the summer, had disappeared to-day.

Rip! Rip! Pretty Girl Blushes and Faints

DENVER, Aug. 14. — Downtown streets were congested to-day when thousands of people thronged the business section to greet the Knights Templar Conclave visitors this week.

One incident was quite embarrassing to a pretty girl and her escort.

The two found themselves wedged hopelessly in the crowd. The man tried to free his companion, and as he grasped her hands and pulled something ripped.

In a moment what had been the girl's skirt lay limp and loose at her feet. She fainted.

Policemen forced the men to fall back, and the young woman's escort considerately and blushingly wrapped his coat around her.

Dangerous Crossing Cause of Injunction

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—The city of Columbus has enjoined the Central of Georgia Railway from constructing additional tracks across Eleventh street, the city claiming that traffic is exceedingly dangerous at that point already on account of the large number of tracks which cross the street.

Eleventh street is the principal outlet to Wynnton and all of the section east of the city, and thousands of persons cross the tracks every day.

The Central of Georgia undertook to construct the tracks after permission had been denied it by the city officials.

Daly Enters Contest For New Judgeship

George Ade Finds Berlin 'Too Slow'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, Aug. 14.—George Ade is about to write the modern fable of "The Farmer Who Fell Asleep Among the High Places."

Things were going so well on Ade's Indiana farm he took a trip abroad with Roger Sullivan and ex-Mayor Hopkins, of Chicago. The pair insisted Ade see some of Berlin's Gay White Way. Here is his verdict: "It's all very nice, but too slow, boys. It will take more than this to keep me awake."

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Borings to the depth of 44 feet have been made on the site of the Empire Life Building, but rock has not yet been struck. The borings will continue to whatever depth is necessary to strike rock.

The Empire Building is to be erected on the present site of the Royal Cafe and the Augusta Trunk Factory. Bids to remove the present structures have been advertised for and work of tearing them down will begin October 1 and must be completed by November 1.

Bulgarians Stirring Mutiny Among Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—Three Bulgarian army officers were arrested by Turks in Adrianople to-day charged with being spies. Word was received by the War Office to-day that documents had been found on the prisoners showing that they were trying to create a mutiny in the Turkish army. They will be court-martialed.

These arrests and the information which they disclosed showed that Bulgaria will not remain passive so long as Turkey is in possession of Adrianople.

ASSEMBLY, NEAR CLOSE, TACKLES HEAVY WORK

The Senate also adopted the House resolution providing for a commission to investigate school book conditins in Georgia with an amendment. A resolution giving the Governor the power to act in the Ducktown copper matter was also passed, as was the bill creating a commission form of government for Columbus.

Legislative Session to End in Jollification.

Happy because it has placed the taxation system of Georgia upon a business basis, the General Assembly will adjourn to-night, after 50 days of hard work. Because of the speed with which measures have been handled and the "work-together" spirit shown by most of the members, the Legislature probably will adjourn without holding a night session on the last day.

Indications are that the House will adjourn at 5 o'clock, the regular time, with all the business completed except the bills that have been held over until the next session by common consent.

To-day only bills passed by the Senate and needing action by the House to become laws will be considered. It is the intention of the Rules Committee to place on the order for the day only such bills as can be gotten through without an extended fight.

Jollification Planned.

The members of the House, especially those successful in the fight for tax reform, are planning to close the session with a jollification and congfest that will eclipse anything the House has ever done. Bob Blackburn, of Fulton County, is the big mogul of the singing, and has been training his choir for several days.

"'Tis the Old-Time Religion" seems to be their favorite, and that is the one on which the choir will depend when the jollification over the close of the session begins. Parodies on the song, ringing in such phrases as "it's good for Speaker Burwell" and "'twould be good for the Rules Committee," have been prepared, and will be sung at the final concert.

The Wednesday afternoon session was taken up with the consideration of two bills—the indeterminate sentence bill and the probation bill. Both passed the Senate. The former, on motion of Conner of Spalding, was tabled by almost unanimous vote, and is dead for the present session. It may be resurrected and considered when the Legislature meets again, but there is no chance of its passing this year.

Wohlwender Fights Bill.

The other bill, the probation measure, giving the trial judge authority to place prisoners convicted of misdemeanors on probation, was passed after a hard fight. The bill also provides for the appointment of county probation officers.

The fight against the bills was led by Wohlwender of Muscogee. He declared the probation bill would work in the interests of the offender with money and influence and against the poor man who has neither. An amendment offered by Miller of Bibb that the provisions of the bill should not apply unless the defendant were under 17 years of age was lost by a large vote. Pickett of Terrell County aided Wohlwender in his fight against the bill.

Those who were active for the bill were Nunnally of Floyd, Blackburn of Fulton, Myrick of Chatham, Olive of Richmond, Culpepper of Meriwether and Wright of Floyd County. The final vote on the measure was 114 to 38.

Southeast Georgia Crops in Fine Shape

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Farmers in this section are complaining of the hot, dry winds, which they say will prove disastrous to the cotton crop if they continue long. The crop is in splendid condition and with several more well distributed rains this section will make a splendid yield.

Augusta received more than 500,000 bales of cotton in 1911, and this year expects to receive about the same amount.

COTTON GOSSIP

It is said a New Orleans cotton exchange seat has been sold for $2,100. It is understood the last price was $1,500.

* * *

A Texas crop reporter says Bell, McGennan, Ellis and High Counties, which last season produced 519,000 bales, will fall short of last season by 100,000 bales. He also adds the Texas crop has deteriorated fully 10 per cent since July 25.

* * *

Bob Ollinger, a river planter, brought in the first bale of new crop cotton to Texarkana Tuesday. This breaks the previous record by fifteen days.

* * *

It is said that unless the trend of events in Mexico soon takes another and more favorable turn, cotton growers of Texas are liable to face the worst labor famine in years.

* * *

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 14.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map complete shows good indications for unsettled weather and more general rains for Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Louisiana. Scattered showers fell in rest of the belt. Map favorable, shows cloudy over nearly all of East Texas and cloudy over Louisiana, South Mississippi, South Alabama and the Carolinas. Some nice rains fell in East Texas; also nice rains fell in south central Gulf districts, and scattered showers fell in the Atlantics. Lower temperatures in both Texas and Oklahoma.

* * *

Rainfall for the past twenty-four hours: Taylor, .58; Galveston, .56; Shreveport, raining; New Orleans, .14; Mobile, Augusta, .06; Knoxville, .01; Chattanooga, .44; Charleston, .34; Raleigh, N. C., .64; Houston, .02; Anniston, Ala., .04; raining at Gregory, Texas.

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Yesterday's cotton market was easier, not so much on account of the dry weather west as because unfavorable trade reports came from England. After being fed during two years on continuously optimistic advices from Liverpool, the assertion made by a prominent Liverpool merchant that 'Manchester is dead' must strike the rings in a vulnerable spot.

"In so far as the weather is concerned, the effect is by no means one-sided. Drouth in Texas helps the bullish cause, but splendid weather and improving prospects east of the Mississippi River pester the bull every day.

"The fine bearish promise in the East is marred by the generally admitted fact that the crop is going backwards in Texas and Oklahoma, but here a controversy arises. Big people claim that serious drouth exists over only a limited portion of Texas and Oklahoma, and moderate crop people claim that the crop east of the river is still small in size and late as regards normal seasons. Each denies the premise of the other. Thus common ground is lacking. Meanwhile, there is increasing evidence of demand as well as of requirement, in spite of the unfavorable reports from Manchester, and it is said several cotton-laden ships will clear from Aransas Pass during August. Yesterday Houston reported actual cotton sales (spot and to arrive) of 3,186 bales, at 11¼c for middling, while Norfolk sold 2,894 bales at 11¾c, the latter a decline of ⅛c."

STOCK GOSSIP

The New York Financial Bureau says: "London investors are gaining confidence and are relieving the underwriters of recent new issues of their holdings. Sentiment is improving on the Paris Bourse. Copper shares being a strong feature.

"An announcement of the allotments of Southern Pacific stock to syndicate members will be made known to-day. The offering has been over-subscribed. Liggett & Myers and American Tobacco will sell ex-dividend Friday. Southern Pacific directors are scheduled to meet for dividend action to-day. No change is reported in the Bank of England rate of discount.

Infomation channels favor profit-taking. We would look for attractive buying opportunities, with the intention to secure medorate profits.

* * *

Some profit-taking yesterday was responsible for the reactionary tendency at the close. I would not be surprised if the market was reactionary to-day, as prices have had a good advance without any setback. Southern Pacific, which is behind the balance of the list, looks as if the pool would put it higher. I am bullish for the long pull and on any reaction believe stocks are a purchase.—G. D. Potter.

Triple holiday in Paris beginning to-day.

Some of the smaller banks throughout the country are requesting a share of the $50,000,000 crop-moving fund.

Marconi Company, of London, reports a net profit of $2,056,470 in 1912, as compared with $708,585 in 1911.

The failure of Governor's representative to bring about a conference between mine operators and miners results in a continuation of the deadlock in the Michigan copper strike.

The big over-subscriptions for underwriting of the Southern Pacific certificates of interest creates a god impression in Europe.

Buyers in New York are said to be placing big orders. The Bank of England rate unchanged at 4½ per cent and London stocks are irregular.

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Good cables and absence of rains over the Texas belt, except at one or two places, resulted in the cotton market opening steady to-day and first prices ranged from 1 point off to 5 points higher than Wednesday's final. There was a little outside support, however, and the list being bolstered by buying from room shorts.

This, coupled with the Government report on supply and distribution, which placed the number of cotton bales consumed during July at 486,246 running bales, as compared with 467,000 bales in June. The report was considered bullish, but failed to stimulate any buying of consequence and the market developed a sagging tendency after the call, based on active selling, which was encouraged by a New Orleans weather expert prediction of rains in the western belt within the next forty-eight house. Later the selling became general and by noon the decline aggregated 5 to 11 points from the initial range.

After the English market had reported better cables than expected, price movement at the close showed a decline of 2 to 3½ points from the previous close.

Ring traders are persistent bears on the new crop positions, but they are not heavy sellers, especially of August. Most of them seem to be waiting rains in the western belt before committing themselves to any great extent to the short side. But a world of cotton will fall upon the market if rains should come in the west. One thing that prevents any material decline in prices is that the feeling among the average trader is to the effect that the Clarke anti-option bill will be killed and that nothing along that line will be done at the present session of Congress.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Bryan: The temper of the trade is intensely bearish, and should general rains make their appearance in Texas and Oklahoma in the near future, the ultimate result would be lower prices. Unsatisfactory trade advices from abroad is also a depressing influence.

'Cotton Is King, but Must Serve Farmer'

CUTHBERT, Aug. 14.—That cotton is king, but that the king must be subservient to the people, was the theme of an address of President John T. Williams, of the Georgia Agricultural Society, at the opening session of the annual convention here. Diversified farming in all branches is the salvation of Georgia farms, said President Williams.

Other speakers were Benjamin Milliken, of Wayne; Mayor Richard Terry, Chancellor David C. Barrow, of the University of Georgia; Hon. L. P. Hillyer, banker and farmer, of Macon; P. L. Twitty, of Laurens; J. Phil Campbell, of Clarke, and W. G. Middlebrooks, of Bibb.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, Aug 14.—Corn was ¼@⅜ lower early to-day, but there was a strong undercurrent, and in case of the offerings failing to press on the market a reaction and advance was among the probabilities. While there were gains in many sections, the country most needing it failed to get any moisture whatever. The forecast is for generaally fair and continued warm to-night and Friday in Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska.

Wheat was a shade better on the strength shown abroad and the general belief that the market here was oversold.

Oats were easier early, but they firmed up later.

Provisions were lower.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Better things are expected of the wheat market, and many bullish arguments are put forth in favor of the maintenance of a gradual hardening of values, although the market is not expected to run away. Traders who were in the pit said that the pressure from hedgers has become much lighter than the last few days. It was largely a case of one bull taking the place of another in the corn market yesterday. One of the most rampant bulls said that, while he believes in higher prices, he expects a choppy market for the present."

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 14.—Many of the railroad shares were under pressure at the opening of the stock market to-day. The tone was heavy, although some issues made good rains. Texas Company continued to climb, beginning ½ up.

Wabash lost 1 point, selling at 4½. Chesapeake and Ohio declined ⅜. Canadian Pacific began ¼ lower, but at the end of half an hour had recovered and was ½ above Wednesday's final. Among the other losses were: Western Union, ⅜; Reading, ⅛; Steel common, ⅜; Union Pacific, ⅛; Amalgamated Copper, ⅜; Mexican Petroleum ⅛, and Atchison ⅛.

Southern Pacific began ⅛ up, but lost it. At the end of 45 minutes, however, a better tone prevailed all the way round. American Telephone and Telegraph climbed ⅜, while fractional gains were also scored by United States Rubber common and Erie.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were firm.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

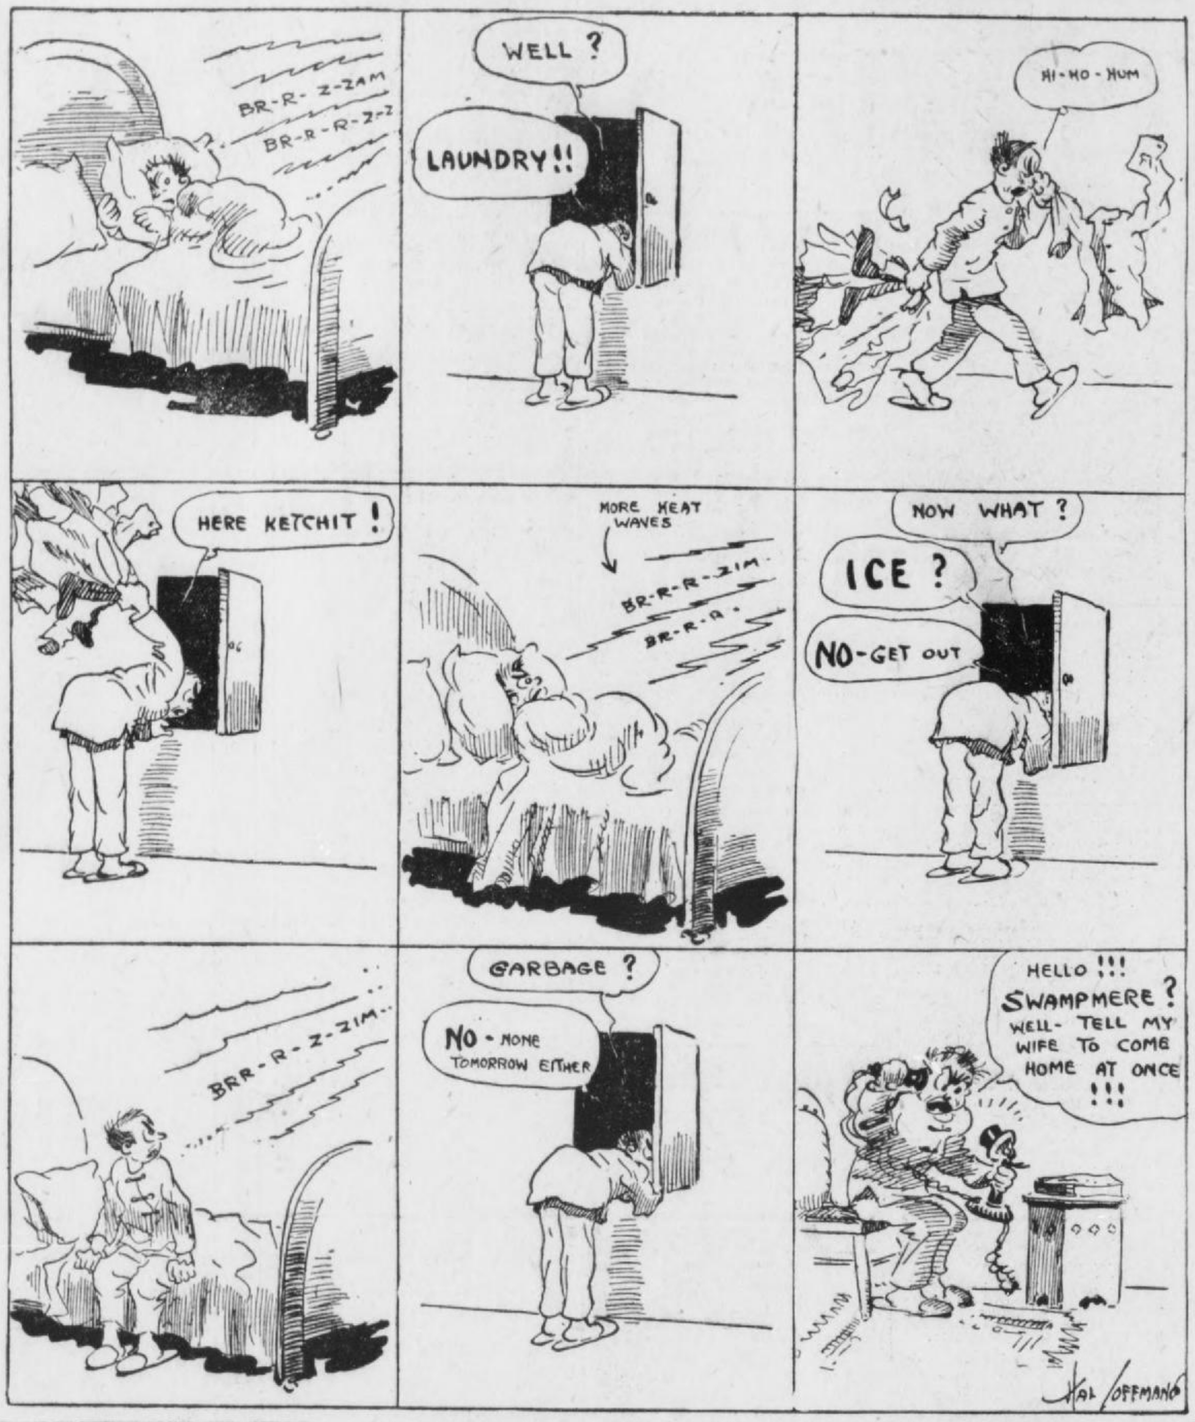

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

When the Wife's Away

And You Happen to Live in an Apartment House.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the politicalforum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

.:. The New Remedy .:.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch,
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger,
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

DOROTHY DIX

Writes on

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and child-like exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spending an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.

HEAD OF COUNTY BOARD PRAISES AUTO TOUR

SMmith Says Coast Route Means Much to South—Senate Indorses American's Plan.

The campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American for an all-Southern highway reaching from Atlanta to San Francisco received another boost Thursday when Shelby Smith, chairman of the Fulton County Boaru of Commissioners, declared the project to be an epoch in the progress of the South.

"The proposed highway from Atlanta to San Francisco," said Mr. Smith, "is splendid and the most commendable movement for good roads all over the South that has been launched in recent years. This road is unlike other roads, for the coast-to-coast route leads somewhere. In other words, it has a definite point as its destination.

"Each State, as well as each town all along the route, is bound to be materially benefited by this monster highway. We have many railroads in the United States, but how many really good roads have we in proportion—roads that could be used if there were no railroads?

Expects Laws on Topic.

"I repeat that this campaign means big things, not only for Georgia, but for the entire South and Southwest, and I do not hesitate to say I am more pleased than I can tell to know that Hearst's Sunday American has taken up the movement to push it through to ultimate success."

Mr. Smith said further that he expected to see great development in the laws, including the creation of a State highway commission, as a result of just such definite movements as proposed by Hearst's American.

Commissioner Smith's remarks concerning the great highway emphasize the marvelous interest manifested in the campaign which will be inaugurated by The American next Monday. Tuesday Governor John M. Slaton placed his stamp of approval on the campaign, and Wednesday morning the Georgia Senate passed unanimously a resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second District, indorsing the coast-to-coast project.

All of these expressions of approval are distinctly pleasing to Official Trail Blazer Ferguson, according to his statement Thursday.

"We are going to conduct this campaign strictly on a 'scientific basis,'" declared Mr. Ferguson, "and intend to check up the entire trip in detail, so that adequate road maps may be prepared, to be compared later preparatory to selecting the very best route from coast to coast.

"I will carry several instruments, including a thermometer, which I shall use to make records daily, in an effort to demonstrate beyond question that the South and Southwest offer the very best facilities for extended motor touring, such as is contemplated on this monster transcontinental highway."

To Make Trip in Easy Stages.

Mr. Ferguson declared the trip would be made in easy stages, so that every detail in connection with the plan for the highway may be examined en route.

Stops will be made in all the principal towns and cities en route, and information concerning the promotion of better roads and interstate highways given to those interested. The first official stop between Atlanta and Birmingham, the first lap of the long journey, will be made at Anniston, Ala.

The official start will be made Monday, following a monster parade of automobiles and motorcycles, including the private car of the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief and various city officials. Plans for this parade were completed Thursday.

Bulgarians Stirring Mutiny Among Turks

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 18.—Three Bulgarian army officers were arrested by Turks in Adrianople to-day charged with being spies. Word was received by the War Office to-day that documents had been found on the prisoners showing that they were trying to create a mutiny in the Turkish army. They will be court-martialed.

These arrests and the information which they disclosed showed that Bulgaria will not remain passive so long as Turkey is in possession of Adrianople.

Rip! Rip! Pretty Girl Blushes and Faints

DENVER, Aug. 14. — Downtown streets were congested to-day when thousands of people thronged the business section to greet the Knights Templar Conclave vicitors this week.

One incident was quite embarrassing to a pretty girl and her escort.

The two found themselves wedged hopelessly in the crowd. The man tried to free his companion, and as he grasped her hands and pulled something ripped.

In a moment what had been the girl's skirt lay limp and loose at her feet. She fainted.

Policemen forced the men to fall back, and the young woman's escort considerately and blushingly wrapped his coat around her.

FINISH FIGHT BEGUN BY SULZER

Threatens to Call Out Militia to Prevent Removal as Governor After Impeachment.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 14.—For the first time in history, New York State to-day has two Governors. Although impeached by the Assembly by a vote of 79 to 45, Governor William Sulzer refuses to give up office and threatens to call out the National Guard to prevent his removal. Lieutenant Governor Martin H. Glynn, who automatically became Governor when the resolution of impeachment was adopted in the Assembly, contests Governor Sulzer's right to the prerogatives of the office.

Mr. Glynn told his friends he would send a special message to the Legislature, when it convenes August 19, to test his authority as Acting Governor. The foundations of such a test were laid to-day when Deputy Comptroller Walsh asked Attorney General Carmody for a legal opinion on the status of Governor Sulzer and Lieutenant Governor Glynn. Mr. Walsh wanted to determine whether or not he was legally entitled to pay out money on orders signed by Governor Sulzer.

Sulzer to Charge Plot.

Governor Sulzer to-day began an active preparation of the defense he will make when arraigned before the court of impeachment, which will consist of the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals. He will contend that he is the victim of a plot hatched by political enemies, and will deny every detail of the charges that he used money contributed ot his campaign for speculation in Wall Street.

Judge D. Cady Herrick, chief of counsel for Governor Sulzer, is drawing up the defense, but the work is being directed by the Governor himself, who is a lawyer. A big split has been caused among the politicians of the State by the impeachment.

Adherents of Sulzer are standing firm, while his adversaries are attempting to rake up fresh evidence of wrongdoing against him.

Lieutenant Governor Glynn, who is a newspaper owner in this city, and who is friendly with the Governor, said he would not make an aggressive fight to get into the Executive Mansion. He said his sole desire is to get the rights accorded him under the Constitution.

Awaits Ruling of Court.

Governor Sulzer's attitude is that, until the State Court of Appeals ousts him, he is the rightful executive. He informed his friends that he will hold the fort by physical force if necessary, and that he is planning to make a test of his powers by appointing a Sheriff for Livingston County, to succeed the official who recently died there.

Guards, in the pay of the Governor, occupy the executive chamber night and day, with instructions to hurl from the building any persons trying to oust Governor Sulzer or his family. Any night raid upon the Sulzer stronghold will be stoutly resisted.

BUDGET WAR STIRS LAST SESSION

Senate Struggles With Mass of Important Work — O'Neill-Price Affair Dropped.

Visibly stirred over the heated controversy between Senator McNeil of the Twenty-second and Commissioner of Agriculture Price, who almost came to blows Wednesday, the Georgia State Senators Thursday morning, on the eve of the end of the session, prepared for the final siege.

The first dark spot on the Senatorial horizon was the House general appropriations bill, which was shot back to the Senate Thursday morning with the $280,000 excess of disbursement over revenue tacked on over the protest of the Senate, which sliced off this amount last week.

Just what the Senate will do about it is problematical. The generosity of the House in passing the Senate taxing bill by one vote, it is said, may create a similar spirit in the hearts of the Senate finance leaders, although this is not certain.

Other Bills Face Struggle.

Senator Starfl, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, declared Thursday that he did not favor putting back the entire appropriation, but he may be overridden by the more generous Senators.

Two other bills of importance will occupy the attention of the Senators in the closing hours, namely, the inheritance tax bill and the bill giving mothers custody of their child. That one of the sharpest fights yet seen in the Senate will be made on these bills is said to be practically certain, and it is not unlikely the final session may be extended well into the afternoon or possibly Thursday night.

Preparations for the passage of the last bills, however, has no monopoly on the time and attention of the Senators who are much perturbed over the controversy between Senator McNeill and the Commissioner of Agriculture. Outwardly everything is smooth, but the Senators are free in discussing the matter among themselves.

The controversy which almost ended in a serious cutting affray between the Macon Senator and the Commissioner, took place Wednesday afternoon in President Anderson's private room in the Senate Chamber.

McNeill and Price Quarrel.

According to eyewitnesses, Senator McNeill met Mr. Price in the room just after taking part in a heated debate on the bill to provide for the printing of the agricultural bulletins.

"Well, you go, your bill through, you old lobbyist," said Senator McNeill to Mr. Price in a spirit of levity.

"Yes, but your statement on the floor of the Senate was not exactly true."

It was here, the eyewitnesses say, that the fireworks started, Senator McNeill inquiring of the Commissioner as to whether or not he (Price) intended to call him a liar.

Price, it is said, repeated his statement in substance, whereupon Senator McNeill drew his knife; at the same time telling Price that he would "cut his throat." Dr. W. C. Bryant grabbed the Senator's arm and drew him back. The Senator broke away, it is said, but was persuaded from going further by a number of Senators who had gathered.

It is understood that both Senator McNeill and Mr. Price are willing to let the matter drop where it is.

Primary Bill Goes Over.

Following a spectacular filibuster led by Senator Harrell, of the Twelfth, the Senate late Wednesday afternoon postponed action on the proposed primary bill until next session. This bill was killed Wednesday morning, but was resurrected by its friends, including Senator Tarver, in the afternoon. After a sharp parliamentary skirmish Senator Harrell succeeded in getting the floor, whereupon he blandly announced that he intended to stay there until the hour of adjournment. The Senator filibustered for a half hour when the supporters of the bill decided to stop the flow of oratory by

Camden Veteran Is Stricken Fatally in Street by Apoplexy

Allen Deas, 72 years old, died Wednesday night from a stroke of apoplexy, as he was on his way to the boxing match at the Auditorium. He was a native of Camden, S. C., and had, with his wife, been visiting his children in Atlanta for several days.

In company with his son-in-law, L. W. Watson, Mr. Deas had reached the Grand Theater on Peachtree street when he fell. He was taken into the Elkin Drug Store, but failed to revive and died in five minutes.

Mr. Deas was a prominent citizen of Camden, and a Confederate veteran. He is survived by his wife, two sons, Allen Deas, Jr., of Atlanta, and John Deas, of Montgomery, Ala.; two daughters, Mrs. Lynch Read, of Plantersville, S. C., and Mrs. L. W. Watson, of this city.

The body is at Patterson's chapel waiting the arrival of his son, Allen, Jr., from South Carolina, when funeral arrangements will be made.

Angry Bachelors to 'Strike' Because of Tax; Girls With 'Em

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

REIZ, REUSS, Aug. 14.—A "general strike" of the eligible bachelors is threatened here to-day because of the State tax placed on those who should marry but won't.

"We men must stand together," is the slogan of the 50-odd bachelors' associations, organized to oppose the laying of the tax. And the girls, most of them, are with the men, declaring they are perfectly capable of looking after the selecting of a life partner.

The latest development is th preparation of a ptition by marriagable young women of Reuss begging for the remission of taxation on the ground that the Government's action is removing their only hope of escaping spinsterhood.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—The virtues of the sunbath cure, or heliotherapeutics, were sung by Dr. Rollier, of Leysin, at the Medical Congress today. This treatment, he said, cures external forms of tuberculosis of every variety at all degrees and all ages.

The direct action of the sun and air, he asserted, is the most energetic tonic. It also reduces pain, forms a powerful microbe-killing agent, and conduces most powerfully to the growth of new skin.

Castro Directs New Rebellion by Proxy

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

WILLEMSTAD, Aug. 14.—The whereabouts of Cipriano Castro, who is trying to overthrow the Gomez government in Venezuela, has been discovered. Castro is not in Venezuela, but is directing his operations from a small island called Buen Ayre, which lies in latitude 12 degrees and 20 minutes north. Of its 5,000 inhabitants, fewer than 500 are white.

It so happens that at the present time the United States is negotiating for the purchase of the island, on which to establish a naval depot.

WIFE AND MOTHER OF ACCUSED ARE WARNED AGAINST OUTBREAKS

Nearly a score more of alibi witnesses were to be called by the defense in the Frank trial when court opened Thursday morning. Frank's attorneys thought that they would not be able to conclude before the early part of next week.

A number of character witnesses also will be called before the defense ends its case in behalf of the factory superintendnt.

Solicitor Dorsey, before the jury was brought in, said he wanted to make a request that the mother and wife of Leo M. Frank be excluded from the court as the witnesses have been because of the outbreak of the elder Mrs. Frank Wednesday afternoon.

"I appreciate the feeling of the wife and mother" he said, "it is a terrible strain on them. I am sorry for them. But I must have protection and I think they should be excluded when we are subjected to outbreaks like that of yesterday."

Attorney Reuben in reply said:

"Without criticising Mrs. Frank, I want to state that the Solicitor's examination of the witness yesterday was far worse than her outbreak. He was undertaking to get in evidence in an illegal way. He could not get it i nin a legal way. He was appeling to the crowd and to the feelings of the jury. Does your honor think that good practice—honorable practice—especially when a man is on trial for his life?"

Judge Roan ruled, after more arguing:

"You are entirely right, Mr. Dorsey, in saying that you are entitled to protection. Other women were put out because the evidence was of such a nature as to be indecent to be heard by thm. It is a matter in the discretion of the court to state whether these ladies should be allowed to remain. I will say that ift here are any more such outbreaks as yesterday I shall be forced to exclude them."

Mr. Frank, the mother and the prisoner's wife were both in court while the argument was in progress.

The calling of four character witnesses Wednesday opened the floodgates for the State to get before the jury all of its accusations against Frank, and was the direct cause of a frantic outburst on the part of Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of the defendant, who rose from her chair and dramatically denounced Solicitor General Dorsey.

It was the first scene created by any of the members of the prisoner's family. Frank's wife and mother were perceptibly affected when the Solicitor previously was hurling his charges of gross misconduct against the defendant, but both had restrained themselves from any marked demonstration.

Feeling Reaches Bursting Point.

The elder woman persistently had maintained an almost expressionless face while the most abhorrent charges were being made. Save that she looked away from the crowd as if it were a terrible ordeal to listen to the testimony, it would have been impossible to tell that it was one of her loved ones against whom the charges were being made.

Her feelings, however, had reached the bursting point Wednesday. She could stand the attack against her son's character no longer. From the impassive and quietly suffering woman she was goaded to the fury of a tigress.

From the lips of the Solicitor General flowed a stream of implied accusations. He asked about alleged incidents in Frank's office at the factory, about incidents in the girls' dressing room which the Solicitor intimated that Frank invaded without apology or excuse.

The mother of Frank lifted her eyes to the Solicitor. There was in them no longer the look of resignation with which the other charges had been met. In its place blazed hate and ing no longer to await the end of the trial for her son's vindication.

Denounces Solicitor.

The Solicitor continued. He gave the names of girls of tender years. He narrated circumstances that brought a crimson flood to the face of the younger Mrs. Frank.

"Haven't you heard of these stories?" he asked insinuatingly of the witness, Ashley Jones.

"No, nor you either!" cried the mother.

She was on her feet. The courtroom was astounded at the suddenness and dramatic intensity of the outburst. Persons rose here and there among the spectators, oblivious of the calls for order of the court attaches.

Mrs. Frank stood in hysterical indignation before the Solicitor. She said things to him that were lost in the confusion. She would have continued her tirade had she not been restrained by court deputies and members of her own family who rushed to her side to quiet and comfort her.

"My God, my God," she moaned as she was led sobbing from the courtroom. She was taken home in a hysterical condition. She returned toward the close of the afternoon session, but did not re-enter the courtroom.

If the denunciation affected the Solicitor, the did not show it unless it was by a line of questioning even more severe than he had pursued before.

Testimony Aids Frank.

Jones, an insurance man, in whose company Frank holds a policy, denied that he had heard any of the reports of alleged immorality. He said that the young man's record, in respect to health, habits and morals, had been very thoroughly investigated before the policy was issued. He testified that Frank showed an unusually clean record.

The bars were let down for the introduction of testimony against Frank's character when the defense put on the stand Alfred L. Lane, of Brooklyn, a classmate of Frank in Pratt Institute. Lane said that he had known Frank for fifteen years and that he knew he possessed a good character.

Lane was followed by two other of Frank's classmates.

They were Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer of Brooklyn, and Philip Nash, a clerical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J. Both testified as to his good character. Several witnesses intervened and then Ashley Jones was called.

Important testimony was given by Dr. William Owens, who was one of four men who sought to reproduce the disposal of Mary Phagan's body as Jim Conley described it. William A. Fleming took the part of Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley. Conley said that he and Frank carried the body downstairs and returned to Frank's office in about five minutes.

Dr. Owens said that it took them about eighteen and a half minutes to carry out the drama in the pencil factory, exclusive of writing the notes

FRANK DEFENSE CALLS SCORE MORE WITNESSES TO AID BUILDING OF ALIBI

Conley said he spent in the wardrobe in Frank's office.

If the defense is able to make the jurors believe that it would have taken Frank and Conley eighteen and a half minutes to accomplish this, they will have established what is considered a very strong alibi for the superintendent. To this must be added the eight minutes that Conley declares he was in Frank's wardrobe and about twelve minutes for the writing of the four notes—this is half of the time that it probably would have taken the negro to write them according to the testimony of Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective. This makes a total of thirty-nine and one-half minutes. Conley said they started with the body at 12:56. The thirty-eight and one-half minutes would have brought the time to 1:34 1-2.

But, according to one of the State's own witnesses, Frank had left the factory and had arrived home at 1:30—or, in other words, had arrived home before the disposal of the body could have been accomplished.

Quinn Severely Grilled.

Lemmie Quinn, metal department foreman, received a severe grilling from Solicitor Dorsey in the afternoon, but stuck to his story that he visited the office of Frank at about 12:20 the afternoon of the murder. This is in contradiction of Conley's story, who testified that he saw Quinn enter the factory before Mary Phagan and Monteen Stover came. The Solicitor displayed affidavits of Quinn in which the foreman said he had been at the factory sometime between 12 and 12:20 o'clock. Quinn said that at the time he made the affidavit he had not estimated the time so closely as he had been able to do since.

Other witnesses of the day were Dr. William S. Kendrick, head of the chair of medicine of the new Atlanta Medical School; Frank Payne, a former office boy for Frank, and Oscar Pappenheimer, a stockholder in the National Pencil Factory.

Dangerous Crossing Cause of Injunction

COLUMBUS, Aug. 14.—The city of Columbus has enjoined the Central of Georgia Railway from constructing additional tracks across Eleventh street, the city claiming that traffic is exceedingly dangerous at that point already on account of the large number of tracks which cross the street.

Eleventh street is the principal outlet to Wynnton and all of the section east of the city, and thousands of persons cross the tracks every day.

The Central of Georgia undertook to construct the tracks after permission had been denied it by the city officials.

FIND MAIL STOLEN THREE YEARS AGO

Letters Uncovered by Workmen Between Walls of the Depot at Decatur.

Remodeling of the Georgia Railroad depot in Decatur has served to partially clear up a series of mail robberies three years old.

In 1910, about the time Agnes Scott College opened for the year, letters addressed to college officials and students and citizens of Decatur began to disappear. Some of them contained checks and money orders, and complaints by the hundred were filed. Postoffice inspectors worked, but could find no clew, and the investigation was finally given up as hopeless.

But the other day workmen at the depot found all the missing letters stacked behind the plastering. A hole large enough to admit a man's hand was found. Through this hole the letters had been placed between the plastering and the outer wall. Some of the letters still contained checks. The letters had all been opened.

Mrs. Kirkpatrick, the postmaster, is now engaged in forwarding the long-delayed letters to the addressees. She is writing a note of explanation to accompany each letter.

The theory has been advanced that the letters were taken by some railway mail clerk and handed out to a trusted confederate in Decatur, who would extract what money and negotiable paper he would find and then place the letters in hiding behind the plastering in the depot.

There is no clew to the guilty parties.

Legislative Session to End in Jollification.

Happy because it has placed the taxation system of Georgia upon a business basis, the General Assembly will adjourn to-night, after 50 days of hard work. Because of the speed with which measures have been handled and the "work-together" spirit shown by most of the members, the Legislature probably will adjourn without holding a night session on the last day.

Indications are that the House will adjourn at 5 o'clock, the regular time, with all the business completed except the bills that have been held over until the next session by common consent.

To-day only bills passed by the Senate and needing action by the House to become laws will be considered. It is the intention of the Rules Committee to place on the order for the day only such bills as can be gotten through without an extended fight.

Jollification Planned.

The members of the House, especially those successful in the fight for tax reform, are planning to close the session with a jollification and congfest that will eclipse anything the House has ever done. Bob Blackburn, of Fulton County, is the big mogul of the singing, and has been training his choir for several days.

"'Tis the Old-Time Religion" seems to be their favorite, and that is the one on which the choir will depend when the jollification over the close of the session begins. Parodies on the song, ringing in such phrases as "It's good for Speaker Burwell" and "twould be good for the Rules Committee," have been prepared, and will be sung at the final concert.

The Wednesday afternoon session was taken up with the consideration of two bills—the indeterminate sentence bill and the probation bill. Both passed the Senate. The former, on motion of Conner of Spalding, was tabled by almost unanimous vote, and is dead for the present session. It may be resurrected and considered when the Legislature meets again, but there is no chance of its passing this year.

Wohlwender Fights Bill.

The other bill, the probation measure, giving the trial judge authority to place prisoners convicted of misdemeanors on probation, was passed after a hard fight. The bill also provides for the appointment of county probation officers.

The fight against the bills was led by Wohlwender of Muscogee. He declared the probation bill would work in the interests of the offender with money and influence and against the poor man who has neither. An amendment offered by Miller of Bibb that the provisions of the bill should not apply unless the defendant were under 17 years of age was lost by a large vote. Pickett of Terrell County aided Wohlwender in his fight against the bill.

Those who were active for the bill were Nunnally of Floyd, Blackburn of Fulton, Myrick of Chatham, Olive of Richmond, Culpepper of Meriwether and Wright of Floyd County. The final vote on the measure was 114 to 38.

Slayer Freed Under $5,000 Bonds Raised By Engineer Friends

W. D. Partee, the Georgia Railroad engineer who killed another engineer, Sam Jackson, a short while ago, was released from the Tower Thursday morning under a $5,00 bond, furnished by a number of engineers, friends of Partee. Bond was granted by Judge J. T. Pendleton following application for bail by Partee. A plea of self-defense was made.

The killing grew out of remarks which Jackson was quoted as saying about Partee being familiar with another engineer's wife. Her husband went to Partee and the two of them started in search of Jackson. They met near the Georgia Railroad roundhouse and the shooting followed, Jackson being killed almost instantly.

A number of Partee's friends were at the Tower Thursday morning to greet him on his release from the Tower.

Japan Offers $1,000 For a Lost Torpedo

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, Aug. 14.—Fearing one of her most important naval secrets will become known to a rival power Japan has offered $1,000 for the recovery of a torpedo lost from the new battleship Kongo on her recent trial trip off the Irish coast. The reward is five times greater than that usually offered by Great Britain in similar circumstances.

It is said the torpedo is deadlier than the newest style of British torpedo, and is propelled by engines heated by air.

Southeast Georgia Crops in Fine Shape

AUGUSTA, Aug. 14.—Farmers in this section are complaining of the hot, dry winds, which they say will prove disastrous to the cotton crop if they continue long. The crop is in splendid condition and with several more well distributed rains this section will make a splendid yield.

Augusta received more than 500,000 bales of cotton in 1911, and this year expects to receive about the same amount.

MR. HEARST TELLS WHY HE HAS NOT PUT OIL LETTERS BEFORE LOBBY PROBERS

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—The following is a letter from Mr. William Randolph Hearst in reply to a letter sent to him by Congressman Clyde H. Tavenner asking Mr. Hearst to put the Standard Oil letters before the Garrett lobby investigation committee in the house of representatives:

Los Angeles, Cal., Aug. 5, 1913.

Hon. Clyde H. Tavenner, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Sir:

Did you write me a letter and make the letter public, asking me to submit all the Standard Oil letters that I have in my possession to the House Committee now investigating the charges of lobbying made by a certain Mulhall?

I would be very glad to submit again to the congressional committee or to any responsible body, the Standard Oil letters which I have already submitted many times to the public and to bodies which more or less accurately and sincerely represent the public.

I would prefer, however, not to submit these Standard Oil letters in connection with the Mulhall letters and charges for the simple reason that the Standard Oil letters are very important to the nation, very serious in their incriminations and wholly authoritative and genuine, while the Mulhall letters and documentary evidence have never appeared to me especially important or serious or genuine.

The Mulhall letters and charges were offered to one of my magazines, the one that published the Standard Oil letters, but the editors of the magazine with my approval declined to purchase or publish the Mulhall documents and confession. The reason we did not purchase the Mulhall letters was not at all because of the price. That question was not even considered.

The reason we failed to purchase them was because we had not full confidence in them. We felt that the more or less innocent or at least moderate wording of the documents did not justify the extravagant allegations on which Mulhall based the documents and we felt if that any part of Mulhall's evidence or testimony was untrue that all of it was open to suspicion.

Furthermore our magazine had just performed what we had every right and reason to believe a great public service. We had performed this service with the utmost sincerity and consciousness and with the most scrupulous care.

We had exposed the corrupting influence of privilege seeking corporations in politics. We had revealed the connection between these corrupt corporations and certain important public officials who were supposed to represent the people in office, but who in reality, prostituted their offices to serve the illegitimate interests of criminal trusts.

The editors of the magazine were agreed that we did not wish to diminish or discredit the effect of these genuine revelations by the publication of Mulhall's letters which seemed to us less serious and sincere.

The Standard Oil letters can not be denied because there always have been additional documents to disprove every denial made to confuse and confound every falsifier.

We did not wish our magazine to associate a great public service and a vital political exposure like this with an extravagant series of exaggerated accusations, as the Mulhall confessions appeared to us to be, and I would rather not associate the genuine with the questionable at your Congressional investigation.

Of course I am expressing only my preference. I can control the course of my magazine, but I do not seek to control or influence the action of your committee. I shall always be ready to submit to any such committee any such information I have which can be considered of public interest or importance.

Very sincerely yours,
WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST.

DEFENSE SLIPS LOAD BY PUTTING UP CHARACTER OF LEO FRANK AS ISSUE

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The defense in the Frank case did the expected thing when it boldly and unequivocally put Frank's character in issue.

It indicated its confidence in the justice of the deefndant's cause in doing that, and it met thus a crisis that it hardly could have successfully overcome otherwise, if it so happen that it does overcome it eventually.

Having taken the initiative in the matter of thrashing out Frank's character, the State will now be forced to make out an unmistakable case of bad character against Frank, or it is likely that the State's injection of the sinister charge against him, in addition to the charge of murder, may operate as a boomerang to the State's great hurt finally.

It is not to be wondered at that the defendant's mother, tried and racked in spirit and pride as she surely must have been, should have let her feelings overcome her for an instant during the course of Wednesday afternoon's hearing. I do not suppose it is even remotely possible for any person not a mother to understand all she has gone through.

Her vehement protest against the vile things being said and hinted about her boy—true or untrue, though such things always are untrue in mother love, I take it—serves to illustrate, however, how very vital to the defense now is the establishing of Frank's good character.

I doubt that anything thus far said to the jury has so profoundly impressed it as the unspeakable thing Conley said of the defendant. The jury is only human, and it can no more dodge impressions than other people can.

Impression Must Be Erased.

The defense is up against the herculean task of removing all of that impression from the mind of the jury—the twelve minds of the jury, indeed—for it will not do to leave even a fraction of Conley's story undemolished!

Manifestly, therefore, the defense could not, if it would, get away altogether from the matter of Frank's character. It found itself necessarily forced to the other extreme of the situation set up by the State.

The State, on the other hand, by reason of the defense's challenging attitude in the matter of forcing the issue of Frank's character, must now corroborate the frightful story of Conley, or I think it may suffer before the jury irreparable injury.

Curiously enough, the burden of proof in the Frank case seemed to have been shifted a week ago—that is, whereas the burden is legally imposed upon the State, it being the theory of the law that a defendant goes into court with the presumption of innocence in his favor, it appeared, after Conley had made his awful charge, that the burden then was shifted onto the defense to prove Frank's innocence, rather than that the State should prove his guilt.

In putting Frank's character in issue, however, I now think the defense has shifted back the burden, in large measure, anyway, to where the law contemplates it shall rest.

The State must complete its proof of Frank's depravity, or the State will not have made out such a case as likely will stand to the last analysis.

Defense Plans Its Climax.

As the State moved in the beginning of the Frank trial, steadily and consistently to the negro sweeper, Jim Conley, as the climax of its case, so to-day the defense is moving, every bit as steadily and as persistently, to the defendant, Leo Frank, as the climax of its case.

The State's case progressed ever up to Conley—the defense's case is progressing ever up to Frank.

It is Conley vs. Frank no less than it is the State vs. Frank.

No intelligent and discriminating observer, abreast with the status of the trial, doubts that, or has doubted it for days.

Either Leo Frank's life will answer for Mary Phagan's, or Jim Conley's will!

The capstone of the defense undoubtedly will be the defendant's statement. He will make it just before the defense rests its pleading.

Already, this anticipated dramatic event has cast its shadow before. The public is looking forward to Frank's personal statement with no less keen interest than it looked forward, perhaps, to the terrible story of Conley.

Frank will be permitted, under the law, to make a statement to the jury, but without being permitted to swear to its truthfulness. The jury will be instructed that it may accept that statement, if it so elects, in preference to all the sworn testimony in the case; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject it altogether.

The jury alone and finally is made the sole judge of the defendant's credibility on the stand.

Tells What He Pleases.

The defendant can not be impeached; he can not be cross-examined; he can not be prompted by his attorneys. He simply states what he pleases, in the exact way he pleases, and in such detail or lack of detail as he pleases. It is strictly a matter between the defendant and the jury.

Leo Frank is one of the few defendants in murder cases coming under my observation, who absolutely refrained from discussing his case, in any phase of it, in advance of his trial.

Only at the Coroner's inquest, where he was obliged to talk, has he opened his lips to speak concerning the charge brought against him. In adopting this course, he unquestionably was well within his legal rights, and well within the bounds of common sense, too, no doubt—but the fact remains that the course he pursued is the unusual one.

I said in a former article that Frank apparently is a very patient man—and such men fight mighty hard when once aroused—and the more I reflect upon that observation, the more I am inclined to emphasize it.

He has waited four months to tell his story—but when he does tell it, it will be related in the proper presence, the court and the jury.

It is unlikely that the public wishes to hear anything quite so much as exactly what Frank himself has to say of the charges lodged against him.

It has heard what everybody else, both intimately and distantly concerned, has had to say. It has heard Conley's story from Conley's own lips—but thus far Frank has been as silent as the grave of the dead girl itself!

It is impossible to forecast the effect of Frank's statement upon the jury. It may have as powerful an effect in clearing him as Conley's horrible statement surely must have had by way of then condemning him.

Juries Have Accepted It.

I have seen cases in which the defendant's statement alone evidently served to clear him. I have known juries to accept it as the truth, over and above all the sworn testimony—just as the jury has the unquestioned right to do.

On the other hand, I have seen the defendant's statement fall flat and stale. I have seen it have no more effect upon the jury than rain has upon a duck's back.

It all depends upon the defendant's manner and bearing on the stand, the seeming sincerity of his recital, its plausibility and probability, the character of the man making it, his intelligence and apparent directness of purpose, the necessity of the statement as bearing alone and entirely upon weak points in either his own or the State's case, and many other things.

The defendant's statement presumably dovetails, of course, into the case his lawyers theretofore have made out—and yet I have known the defense to introduce the defendant the first thing, and proceed thereafter to the building of a case around his statement.

As this case is so thoroughly a fight between Conley and Frank—that is, between Conley's evidence and Frank's evidence—it will be intensely interesting to watch and see how eventually the jury views the relative value of both.

Much Rests on Defendant.

Conley's story, as amazing and as shocking as it is in parts, nevertheless has been accepted by many as the truth. Presumably, those people who already have made up their minds still are willing to be convinced—as violent as the presumption may be in some cases—if Frank can convince them.

Upon Frank's statement, therefore, it is entirely possible the entire case may turn finally.

To discredit Frank's statement, to be sure, will be his heavy self-interest and the fact that it is not upon oath and not subject to cross-examination.

To discredit Conley's story, however, is his also heavy self-interest and the fact that, while his story was delivered on oath, his character admittedly is very bad and his numerous previous sworn statements admittedly false in many important details.

The situation thus set up is about as pretty as it could be, from an abstract legal standpoint. If it were a surgical problem we were considering, I should predict that the operation will be beautiful and brilliant in any event—but as for the patient—well, I really could not say!

STEEL WORKERS ENTHRALLED BY FRANK TRIAL

By L. F. Woodruff.

There is one class of men to whom death is supposed to hold no horrors. They can not think of it and earn their daily bread. Were the fear of loss of life to enter their brain for one single second during their daily task they would be as useless as a motorless automobile.

Their pay is high for scorning the grave. They can see one of their companions fall victim to the perils of their calling and go back to work on the same job a few minutes later without a tremor, and encounter those same dangers with footstep firm and their minds only on the work they have to do.

These men are the structural steel workers. They are as picturesque a class as the struggle for dollars has developed. The fascination of their calling is universal. No man can pass the place where a building is slowly reaching its way into the clouds without standing in an awe-struck trance watching these men scamper around between heaven and earth as though they were walking about a place as safe as the quiet walk under the shade trees of Grant Park.

Furnish a Bizarre Feature.

Just across Hunter street from Judge Roan's courtroom, where the factory superintendent is fighting to clear his name of the charge of having killed Mary Phagan, Fulton County's magnificent new temple of justice is nearing completion.

But there is still work to be done on the dizzy heights of the upper stories. The men of the building trades are there and their interest in the dramatic court battle that is being waged within a stone's throw of them is as intense as is the interest of any of those who have sat through the tedious days of the hearing constant spectators of the trial.

These builders, from their lofty working place across the street, can peer through the courtroom windows and see the trial as it progresses. They can not hear a word of the evidence. They miss the forensic clashes of the counsel.

Dare Death to Watch.

But still there is not a moment of the time that the case is in progress that life and limb are not risked by these men as they stare into the courtroom.

They can see Frank as he sits through hour after hour of his great ordeal. They can get glimpses of the faces of his wife and mother, of the witnesses as they take the stand, and of the Judge on the bench. They can see the bulky back of Luther Rosser and the energetic gestures of Hugh Dorsey. That is all.

To see these things they must lean far out from their insecure perches, with death certain if they should fall to the pavement a hundred feet below.

There is but one explanation for their interest. They know a man is fighting for his life in that courtroom across the street.

And while death may have no terrors for them, it has a fascination as subtle as the stare of a serpent's eye to a bird, as strong as the rivets of steel with which they earn their livelihood.

STATE'S SOLE AIM IS TO CONVICT, DEFENSE'S TO CLEAR IN MODERN TRIAL

By O. B. KEELER.

Right in the first jump, please understand that (1) this is merely the opinion of a layman, unlearned in the law; that (2) he may be the only layman in existence who feels this way about it; and (3) the Frank trial is not being singled out in the following comment, except as it is a fair example of the great criminal trials of this country.

* * *

In following the trial of Leo Frank, two points keep prodding me with increasing fervor.

These are the points:

(1) That the prosecution's efforts are centered on producing evidence that will convict Leo Frank.

(2) That the efforts of the defense are devoted to producing evidence that will acquit Leo Frank.

Now, having read thus far, you probably are smiling to yourself at the idea that anybody should undertake to write a newspaper story about a great trial, basing it on such an absurdly simple and obvious observation.

State's Evidence All Damaging.

That (you say) is something everybody knows.

That (you say) is taken for granted.

Nevertheless (I say), that doesn't make it right.

I sat in Judge Roan's courtroom, right at the edge of the jury box, and I heard the State prerent its case.

Every bit of the State's evidence was damaging to Leo Frank.

If the State of Georgia knew anything good about Leo Frank, or had any evidence that tended to cast a doubt on his guilt of a horrid crime, the State of Georgia kept that information strictly to itself.

I heard the defense begin attacking the evidence offered by the State, and offering (in turn) evidence that tended to show the innocence of Leo Frank.

If the lawyers of the defense knew, down in their hearts, that certain points made by the State were true; if they realized that certain facts were unshakable; if in their investigation they had found certain things that tended to fasten on their client the murder of Mary Phagan—if any of this was in the mind of the defense it did not get out where the jury could see it.

How About Investigation?

Well (you say), it would be a pretty kind of defense that would produce evidence that would hang the defenant. And (you added) isn't that what the State of Georgia pays its prosecutors for?

For what?

Conviction?

Or INVESTIGATION?

That was the most unmerciful of the prodding points.

Of course, now, the State's attorneys in the Phagan case say they believe Frank is guilty, and equally, of course, the lawyers for the defense declare they are convinced of the innocence of their client. But that is always the case in important murder cases, and furthermore, as I have said, I am not talking about the Frank trial. As much as about a system of justice.

I asked a lawyer about it; a widely-read and learned lawyer, with something in his head besides the law he has absorbed.

I said:

"Honestly, now—isn't this system of criminal prosecution all wrong? Oughtn't the State have investigators instead of prosecutors? Why should the accused have any defending counsel, if the State were not prosecuting, but making a fair and impartial investigation?"

I thought the idea was highly original.

I learned something, right away.

The widely-read and learned lawyer informed me, kindly but firmly, that that was an Original Idea a good many hundred years ago. That it was THE original idea of dealing with criminal cases, in fact. That it was pretty nearly fixed in the basis of good old English law.

He went on to explain that in the early days when a crime was committed, the proper officer—I forget what his title was—the proper officer started an investigation. If a man apparently was implicated by the first evidence brought to light, that man was detained. If he had already "beat it," that was added to the suspicious circumstances against him, and the pursuit began.

But if he was well in hand, and the case was a regular mystery, the investigator for the Crown, or whatever it was, went into that case exactly like a certified accountant examining a set of books, suspected by the firm of not being correct.

Auditor Has No Interest.

The auditor doesn't care a whoop whether he finds the suspected bookkeeper guilty or innocent. That is, he has no interest at stake. He is paid for making a correct audit. He is paid by the job. Probably, unless his liver is out of whack, he would rather see the poor bookkeeper cleared. But he has no interest in the matter.

Well, it seems from what the lawyer told me, that was the original plan of criminal prosecution by the State.

The State didn't prosecute. It just investigated. If the facts produced by the investigation warranted a jury in "sticking" the accused, well and good. If the evidence warranted the jury in turning him loose, also well and good.

The accused had no "counsel," the way we understand it. If he was a rich person, or had rich friends, he was privileged to employ an investigator, or investigators, who would assist the public investigator in his investigation.

Hired Help Might Convict.

But it was understood that if the hired help turned up anything damning, the damning thing would be allowed to go ahead and damn as hard as it could, without concealment or mitigation on the part of the assistant investigators.

Wherefore, it was not the prudent part of guilt to employ additional investigators.

And now, reverting to the enlightened present, what have we on exhibition?

Not singling out the Frank trial, you understand, but in it, as in every big criminal trial in this country, where the accused is able to employ talented counsel, we have the spectacle of two sets of abl lawyers, fighting each other with all the resources of their learning and shrewdness and ability.

The life and honor of the accused may be at stake—the prosecution, once committed to its task, will seek no evidence but what will incriminate him.

The high claims of justice are at stake—the defense must permit no shred of evidence to be presented, saving only what will tend to clear their client.

And He Didn't Explain Why.

It is no fault of the prosecutor that this is so.

It is no fault of the lawyers for the defense.

And as to the system?

Well, this is just the opinion of a layman, you remember. It may be that there is a good reason in law why the investigator has become a prosecutor, and is paid as such; and why the defendant may employ expensive counsel to combat the investigation — or prosecution — at all points.

There may be a good reason for all this.

Only, my friend, the lawyer, didn't explain it to me.

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Well, we can't stand here on the street," laughed Helen. "Let's go somewhere for tea—where we can really talk."

"Come to my studio! I've got the quaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobblestoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dust cloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over there—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

"Just look around—I'll be back in a minute," as she caught up a small pitcher and ran out bareheaded.

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the dining room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! it isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes it isn't bad," mused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's scarcely only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Mirrors and Millinery

As It Is for Her Now - - - - - - - - - - and Used To Be

By NELL BRINKLEY

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a broaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

She sat on a little gilt chair with her satin-clad feet making their pretty imprint in the green depths of a velvet carpet.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school lunches is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well, they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shot and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She nears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.

(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

As Mr. Gryce was buying the tickets, Dr. Molesworth whispered in his ear:

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out from under the shadow. You look almost brilliant to-day."

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you, here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Fashions of the Moment

No. 1.

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

Then they left him and the Jew gazed at the closed door.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall. But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisiter was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

"Praise be the Lord!" he sighed, when he saw the starlit sky above his head.

He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused; he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had faltered him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

JOHNNY EVERS PROVES HE IS BOSS OF CUBS

By Davenport.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug. 14.—All doubts as to who is manager of the Cubs have been dispelled during the past few days, for Jawn Evers is not only the Keystone King, but he rules with an iron hand, and those who dare to resent his ruling power have been relegated to the minors or disposd of in some other manner.

It is less than a week since the manager of the Cubs learned through the columns of a certain morning newspaper that he was about to be dethroned.

In other words, according to the word of one who claimed to have the inside info, Jawn was about to be Maderoized.

Your humble servant hurried to the throne of the Keystone King in an effort to learn just hom badly King Jawn felt over the sad news.

"If all of the sport scribes in Chicago were as certain of their jobs as I am of mine," said Jawn, "they would be purchasing benzine buggies on the installment plan. Some scribes can't get real news, so they manufacture it.

"The main trouble with the ball club has been that there were too many players on the club who thought they knew more about running the affairs of the club than does the owner or manager."

Rather pointed words, these, but they flowed as freely from Jawn's mouth as milk and honey in that land where one never knows hunger.

The cross-examiner shot a few pointed questions at the King.

"To whom do you refer?" was the first one, and Jawn replied:

"Well, there are a number of pitchers on my staff who know so much about pitching that they refuse to take any orders," was the rather evasive reply.

"Name them," was the next hot one fired at Jawn.

"I'd rather not just now, but it will all come out in the wash," spake the oracle.

Stop, look, listen and cogitate.

Reulbach Let Out.

Ed Reulbach has been traded to Brooklyn, Overall has been forwarded to Frisco by parcel post, and Lurid Lew Richie will grace Kansas City with his august and comical presence.

Nuff sed. Who are the pitchers who were treading on Jawn's artistic bunions?

Reulbach, Overall and Richie, and they are no longer Cubs.

That's the answer. John Evers is ruler of the Cubs, and he has been given to understand that his job is as secure as the Constitution of the United States.

Evers Shows Hand.

He intends to manage the affairs of the club without either outside or inside influences or assistance, and when he finds a person in the little family who can't see things his way, it's a 10 to 1 bet that person is going to enjoy some scenery en route to somewhere.

True, neither Overall, Reulbach nor Richie has shown anything aside from an enthusiastic desire to connect with the pay roll this season, and that alone is reason for a change of climate for the trio, but the fact that they toiled under Chance when Evers was but a common layman and with them is ample evidence that they are included among the pitchers "who know too much about pitching to take orders."

The developments in the Cub camp during the past week mean much for the future of the Cubs.

They mean that President Murphy is determined to inject new blood into his ball club.

He has about decided that the old Cub machine that won three pennants is becoming worn and that the club that won a pennant two years ago can not be depended upon to repeat five years hence.

In other words, when the Cubs board the rattler for the sunny climes of Florida next March there will be a number of familiar physiogs missing.

No Shift on Infield.

It is the firm belief of yours truly that the Cub infield will be intact next season, with Saier at first, Evers on the throne and Zim at third. We are making no prognostications as to who will jerk the pill out of the dust in and around short.

Fred Williams will be among those who will cavort in the outer pastures, and further than that affiant sayeth not.

It will be a new club in the way of pitchers, and there may be a new face behind the bat, which means that another face, familiar to all the baseball fans, will be missing. No names mentioned, but he couldn't get along with Mrs. Britton.

Evers will have a club that will answer to him and not try to dictate the managerial policies.

Overall, Reulbach and Richie have outlived their usefulness with the Cubs. They may show a flash of class with the clubs to whom they have been sent, but they will never wear Cub uniforms again.

This wholesale canning business leaves Evers with six twirlers to finish the season, Cheney, Humphries, Lavender, Pierce, Smith and Stack.

And the season will end in a few short weeks, then—watch for some new developments and some young twirlers.

Crackers Facing Supreme Test

Mobile Has Lead of 5 1-2 Games

By O. B. Keeler.

HAVING duly touched off the red fire, ignited the Roman candles and called out the fire department, we will now get out the old chewed-at-one-end section of pencil and put down a few of the things popularly supposed not to mislead, which, by the way, is one of the most staggering fallacies the twentieth century staggers under.

It is plainly to be seen, and may be set down in signs like the following: !!!!, that the Crackers trimmed Birmingham a severely straight series, copped the fiscal road trip in the ratio of seven to four, and are in something of a position to contest against Mobile and Montgomery for the possession of the title of Southern champeens.

* * *

THE exact situation is this:

Atlanta has 26 games left to play—all at home.

Mobile has a lead of five and one-half full games over the Crackers.

Montgomery has an edge of three full games.

But—

Mobile has only two more games scheduled at home.

And Montgomery is not much better off, having three.

* * *

MAKING the matter as personal as possible, the Crackers will get a regular crack at each of their principal rivals in the long home wind-up. The Billikens will be here August 21, 22 and 23, and the Gulls, September 2, 3, 4 and 5—about the time the last spurt for the wire is on, provided things become that acute.

The Gulls and the Billies do not play each other any more, the latter probably being rather more than content with that arrangement, judging by the recent trouble in Gullville.

* * *

SO that's the lay-out.

Chattanooga is here to-day, opening with a double-header. The Lookouts also will play Friday and Saturday, and then the Barons will sneak in Monday and try for a little of the revenge stuff. The following Thursday—the 21st—the Montgomery series starts. Then comes Memphis for four games, then New Orleans and Mobile, four each, and then the Lookouts return to wind up the season with a single contest—September 6.

* * *

INTERESTING, is it not?

No?

Well, it'll look a lot different, with a regular shoe-horn crowd wadded into the old Cow Pasture, and a sunburned bunch of men in white uniforms trotting out on the grass, and some sawed-off, second-story artist pulling off his lid and bellowing:

"The bat-t-tree-ees f'r t'day's game: Muggum'ry, Brown an' Gribbings; 'Tlanta, Dunton Chipmunk!"

That's something else again.

* * *

WOUGH!

A foxy young Pitcher named Prough
Got into a bit of a rough
With some Walloping Guys,
And to his surprise,
He found out he didn't know hough!

* * *

WHICH bit of gloating in a strictly minor key leads up to the fact that, as G. Cleveland once eruditely remarked, it is not a theory but a condition that confronts us.

The condition, roughly set forth, is to win two-thirds of twenty-six games—or better.

Two-thirds ought just about to pass Montgomery and overtake Mobile, who will have to travel on the high speed to break even on the long road trip that confronts each.

But two-thirds of 26 games is between seventeen and eighteen.

And that is a good many games to win, when it is mixed up with at least four double-headers.

* * *

WHICH brings on the subject of clouds. And just now, on the heels of five straight victories on the road, the everlasting rout of the Barons, the busting of Mr. Prough's proud record, and the beginning of a long stay at home—well, just now, we are inclined to think the said cloud is turning outward a bit of the well-known silver lining.

GA.-ALA. LEAGUE NOTES

The Georgia-Alabama season will close Saturday, and while hardly any of the clubs in the circuit have made money this year from the attendance, it is expected that several will realize on the sale of players. The abnormal speed of the Class D Southeastern last year militated against the sport in Anniston, Gadsden and Talladega this year, but it is believed that the fans are getting satisfied with real Class D ball and that the league will be kept intact.

* * *

Gadsden has had the best club from the start, and they probably have the best manager in the league, considered from the standpoint of both his playing and managerial ability. Randall brought several men from New Orleans who had been playing all winter and they were in good form when the season opened. Although Gadsden has never been off the top, however, the attendance at that place was the poorest in the league, and it was the only city to get games transferred.

* * *

A fine spirit of bon homme prevailed among both the fans and players at the banquet held in Anniston last Saturday night, when an inspiring address was made to the men by Hon. E. P. Willett, a well-known attorney and former president of the Anniston club in the Southeastern. At this meetng, Proctor, Anniston's star centerfielder, also proved himself a fine orator. He's a graduate of a Texas college and promises to go up.

* * *

If the league is kept together, there will be a unanimous apeal made for the re-election of President W. J. Boykin, of Gadsden, who has shown himself to be a live wire, a man of backbone and uniform fairness. He has pleased all the clubs.

* * *

White, the one-armed phenom, who for a while played with the Anniston club, holding the unique record of being the first one-armed man to perform in professional company, has made good as an umpire. Joe Burke, an old-timer with the indicator, also gave better satisfaction this year than ever before.

* * *

Boyd, whom Birmingham released to Talladega, will probably go back to the Southern when this league closes. His arm is getting in shape again and he has had pretty easy sailing. Rice, Newman's catcher, is one of those rare backstops who hit the ball and perform well at the same time with the mitt. In the last series at Anniston he got ten hits out of thirteen times at bat.

* * *

The Anniston club this year encountered a hoodoo in the .500 limit. Every time the Chickens would get to the half perfect mark something would happen, and down the ladder they would go again. They almost reached there last Saturday, but in the game Monday they hit the toboggan.

* * *

The two Georgia towns, Newnan and LaGrange, led in attendance this year. Opelika did well considering the size of the place, but Gadsden, Anniston and Talladega had been used to faster ball, and when salaries were reduced this year the fans got the idea that the sport would not be interesting. This proved erroneous, however.

PROUGH AND MAYER ARE SOLD TO CHICAGO SOX

BIRMINGHAM, ALA., Aug. 14.—The star Birmingham battery, Prough and Mayer, has been secured by the Chicago American League club. Exercising an optional agreement, Walter Mayer, the young Baron catcher, was regained ofr $1,500.

When Chicago placed Mayer with the Baron club, a blanket option was exacted for the choice of a player for $2,500. Prough's wonderful pitching attracted the attention of the White Sox, and he was chosen.

Leading the league with a record of twenty victories and five defeats, Prough will gain his third trial in the majors. Previously Pittsburg and Cincinnati have tried out the elongated pitcher and have returned him to the minors.

Fighting Carpenter Shows Remarkable Gameness in Great Battle

FRANK WHITNEY EASY FOR CHARLEY WHITE

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN by far the most thrilling, exciting and scientifically waged ring battle ever seen in Atlanta, Frank Whitney, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Atlanta favorite, was for the first time in his Southern ring career compelled to leave the roped arena a beaten man. For ten rounds he was scientifically hammered by Charley White, the marvelous Chicago lightweight.

And though Whitney left the ring beaten, he did not leave there with any smirch on his record. It is doubtful if he ever fought more brilliantly. It is certain that no man ever showed more gameness than did the Iowa carpenter. There were cheers for the victor, but there were more cheers for the vanquished.

It was simply a case of Whitney meeting a better man, but, though, at no stage of the game did he appear to have a shade, time and again when the crowd was on its feet expecting to see him feel his first knockout instead saw him rally brilliantly, give blow for blow, never wincing under White's terrible punching. Whitney was always a great big figure.

But credit must be given White. The little Chicagoan seems every inch a champion. He had a deep and abiding respect for Frank, though, and boxed carefully. Not until the seventh round did he begin to take anything like a chance, and then he was quick to crawl back behind his breastworks whenever Whitney seemed dangerous.

* * *

AS a result, Atlanta boxing fans saw boxing in the real sense of the word. Both men fought marvelous defensive battles. The sparring was fast and perfectly executed. Both used excellent ring generalship. It was White's superior strength and his youth that told the story.

Whitney's entire attack was from his right side. The few times he used his left it seemed to possess little power, but at that he did quite as much leading as his opponent. In the fourth round his right landed and White was turned completeyl around by the force of the blow. In this round Whitney had the shade, but all the others were either even or White's.

* * *

WHEN the gong rang for the seventh round, the battle was apparently all even. Then White took the lead. Both men had been cautious in reference to infighting, but in this session White got busy at this part of the game and beat Whitney at the feature of fighting in which he is most skilled.

In the eighth Whitney was very, very tired. His face was completely smeared, but his magnificent condition told the tale. In the ninth it was the same story, and in the last part of the tenth it seemed inevitable that Whitney would be floored before the gong. He weathered it bravely and was on his feet fighting to the end, but there was not a dissenting voice when Referee Castro raised the Chicago boy's glove.

* * *

IN the semi-windup Kid Young was decisively beaten by Charley Lee. Young seemed to have none of his old dash and virility and in the fourth round after Lee had dropped him and Young arose to continue his tactics of crawling under cover Castro announced Lee the winner.

At times Young showed a flash, but it was never more than a flash. It seems that the promising newsboy boxer has about run his course.

* * *

IN the third round of their scheduled six-round go Terry Nelson dropped Mike Saul with a terrific clip on the jaw. Saul came up on the count of nine, and after clinching desperately backed into his corner and covered. He was apparently badly hurt, not only from Nelson's blow, but also from the blow he received when his head struck the canvas with a bump that could be heard for feet.

Saul was apparently unable to fight back, and the referee declared Nelson the winner to save the Atlanta milkman from further punishment. Up to the knockdown Saul had a big lead over the little Greek and was apparently boxing in his best style.

* * *

IN the opening engagement "Mary" Payne knocked out Battling O'Leary in the second round of their four-round go. Both boys were novices, but both were willing.

A fair house saw an excellent fight card.

Tesreau and Matty After Auto "Big Six" Making Good Record

JOHN M'GRAW has called on Jeff Tesreau oftener to start battles this year than any other member of the Giants' pitching staff. Up to August 1, the "Little Napoleon" had given the pitching assigament to the big spit-baller 25 times. Jeff only went the route on eight occasions, but on many of the times he was derricked he was lifted to allow a pinch hitter to be inserted into the proceedings and not because he was not performing to the satisfaction of his commander.

Were Hugh Chalmers to offer a car to the National League pitcher who twirled the greatest number of complete games instead of the player who is most valuable to his team, Christy Mathewson undoubtedly would be riding around in a new auto next fall. "Big Six" has opened on the firing line in 22 skirmishes for the Giants this year and has lasted through 17 engagements, which gives him a finishing average of .773.

Matty quit twice because he had to, twice because his team had an enormous lead and once because McGraw wished to shove Harry McCormick in as a pinch hitter.

The club that has compelled Mathewson to retire under fire is St. Louis, the team that handed him his first beating twelve years ago, when he first became famous. The Cardinals ought to be proud of themselves for their showing against "Big Six" this year. They have received five of the thirteen passes Matty has issued this season, Ed Konetchy and Miller Huggins each obtaining two and Steve Evans one. The eight other National Leaguers who have been honored with complimentaries by Mathewson this season are Vlox and Mensor, of Pittsburg; Bares and Groh, of Cincinnati; Zimmerman, of Chicago, and Titus, Rariden and Maranville, of Boston.

The figures below show the number of games started and completed by the Giants' pitchers this season:

CINCINNATI ASKS FOR WAIVERS ON 4 PLAYERS

PITTSBURG, Aug. 14.—Before the Cincinnati Nationals left Pittsburg it was reported from their camp that waivers had been asked on Suggs, Sheckard, Egan and Bates, veterans of the team. All the clubs in the league have waived on Bates and Egan, and President Herrmann and Manager Tinker are trying to make deals for them with American League teams. They expect to pull off a trade for Egan with either the White Sox or the Highlanders, both being in need of infielders of Egan's class.

It is likely that several other changes will be made. On the present eastern trip all the clubs have also waived on Suggs, for whom Manager Tinker has been trying to pull a deal. Trades are under way for Sheckard.

WORLD'S SERIES GAMES WILL START OCTOBER 6

CHICAGO, Aug. 14.—The world's series games are to start on Monday, October 6. This was the information President Ban Johnson, of the American League, gave out. The play will continue on each succeeding day thereafter until one club has won four out of seven games.

Should two Eastern teams be fortunate enough to take down the glory in the National and American Leagues—and it looks certain—then Sunday will be an off-day, for the "blue" laws of the East forbid the parading of our national pastime on the Sabbath.

Conzelman and Price Will Work

Fans Will See Calvo in Right Field

By Joe Agler.

HOME again! And glad to be here, you may be sure. Especially as we won't have to hook any more rattlers and ride any more until the season of 1913 is history.

The boys talked it over, coming this way from Birmingham last night, and they decided the Crackers had one grand little chance to knock the everlasting lining out of about six other clubs in the next three weeks, and bring home another flag to Crackerville.

That's what we will try our best to do.

The Birmingham series has given us all a lot of confidence. We pounded the ball back of good work by our own pitchers, and put up a great fielding game. That combination will win regularly against anything in this league, if only we can keep it working.

* * *

CONZELMAN and Price will work in the double-header with Chattanooga this afternoon, and Dunn probably will have to catch in both, as Chapman has a bad ankle.

Chris Holtz has been released out right, and Jacinto Calvo, the Cuban outfielder Clark Griffith sent us, will be in right field. We hear he is a bear with the wood and fast on the bases, and that is what we will need from now on. Holtz is a crack fielder, but weak at the plate.

* * *

RETURNING to the last battle in Slagville, which is a very pleasant topic with us, it will be noted that Carl Thompson, Baron cast-off, pitched rings around his famous rival, Clinton Prough, stopping his winning streak at ten games, where he is tied with Coveleskie.

Prough showed the stuff in holding down the runs as well as he did, for the Crackers were surely hitting the old pill. Once McBride, by a great running catch, robbed Harry Holland of what looked like a sure homer, with the bases full at the time. Harry kept up his hitting streak, and is now in the charmed circle of the .300 wallopers.

And please don't forget Wally Smith. His drive to the center field fence probably was the longest hit of the season in Birmingham, and just about settled things for Mr. Prough and his help. The help also cracked under punishment while we kept up our good work in the field.

* * *

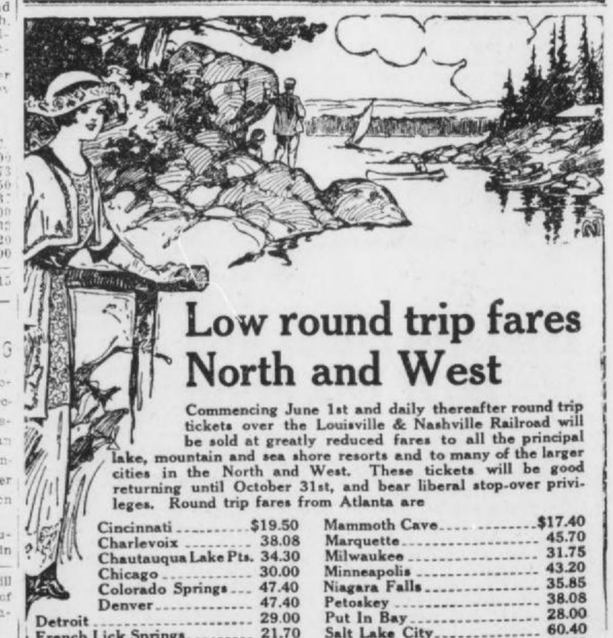

WELL, the Barons are out of the race, it seems, and it was our bunch that put them out when the rest of the league seemed powerless to head thm.

Now we will have a chance at the others.

We'll do our best.

REDS BUY CATCHER.

ROANOKE, VA., Aug. 14.—Mark Stewart, the big catcher of the Norfolk club, in the Virginia State League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Red Sox for $2,000. Stewart is a young catcher, and was playing college ball at Washington and Lee University a year ago. His batting average has been .300. He will finish the season with the Norfolk club and report to Manager Tinker at the conclusion of the season.

GRAVES, SWARTZ AND LOCKNER TO BATTLE FRIDAY

A THREE-CORNERED match race between Swartz, Lockner and Graves will be the feature of a fine program scheduled for the Motordrome on Friday night. These three lads have the fastest machines at the saucer and it will be a royal battle.

Holtz Given Release; Chapman Is Injured

The Crackers arrived, right side up with care, early this morning and went immediately to their quarters to rest for the double battle with Chattanooga this afternoon.

Every man was in tip-top shape, except Chapman, Manager Smith reported. The useful backstop turned an ankle in the last game at Birmingham, and, while he pluckily finished the game, he suffered with a god deal of swelling last night, and is not in condition to play to-day. Joe Dunn will have to catch games, and possibly the other two contests with the Lookouts.

Chris Holtz was released yesterday in Birmingham and turned back to Selma. He showed much class as a fielder, but his hitting was not of the caliber needed by the Crackers in their final dash for the flag. Jacinto Calvo, the chunky little Cuban sent on by Clark Griffith, will play right field the rest of the season.

AD WOLGAST SIGNS TO FIGHT DUNDEE SEPT. 9

Good Time Now For Blood Health

Blood Disorders Gone to Stay.

A few doses of that wonderful blood purifier, S. S. S., will start activities in the cellular tissues of the body and soon show decided changes in the skin. The skin is but a fine network of tiny blood vessels, and the specific action of S. S. S. is declared to be a pronounced stimulation of the activity of these cells. Certain it is that in a surprisingly short time any skin eruption shows a most remarkable change; it begins to dry up; the skin scales off in tiny flecks, and soon a layer of clear, healthy and firm tissue results.

The reason for this is in the peculiar stimulation of S. S. S., which enables the cells in the skin to select from the blood the nutriment it requires for regeneration.

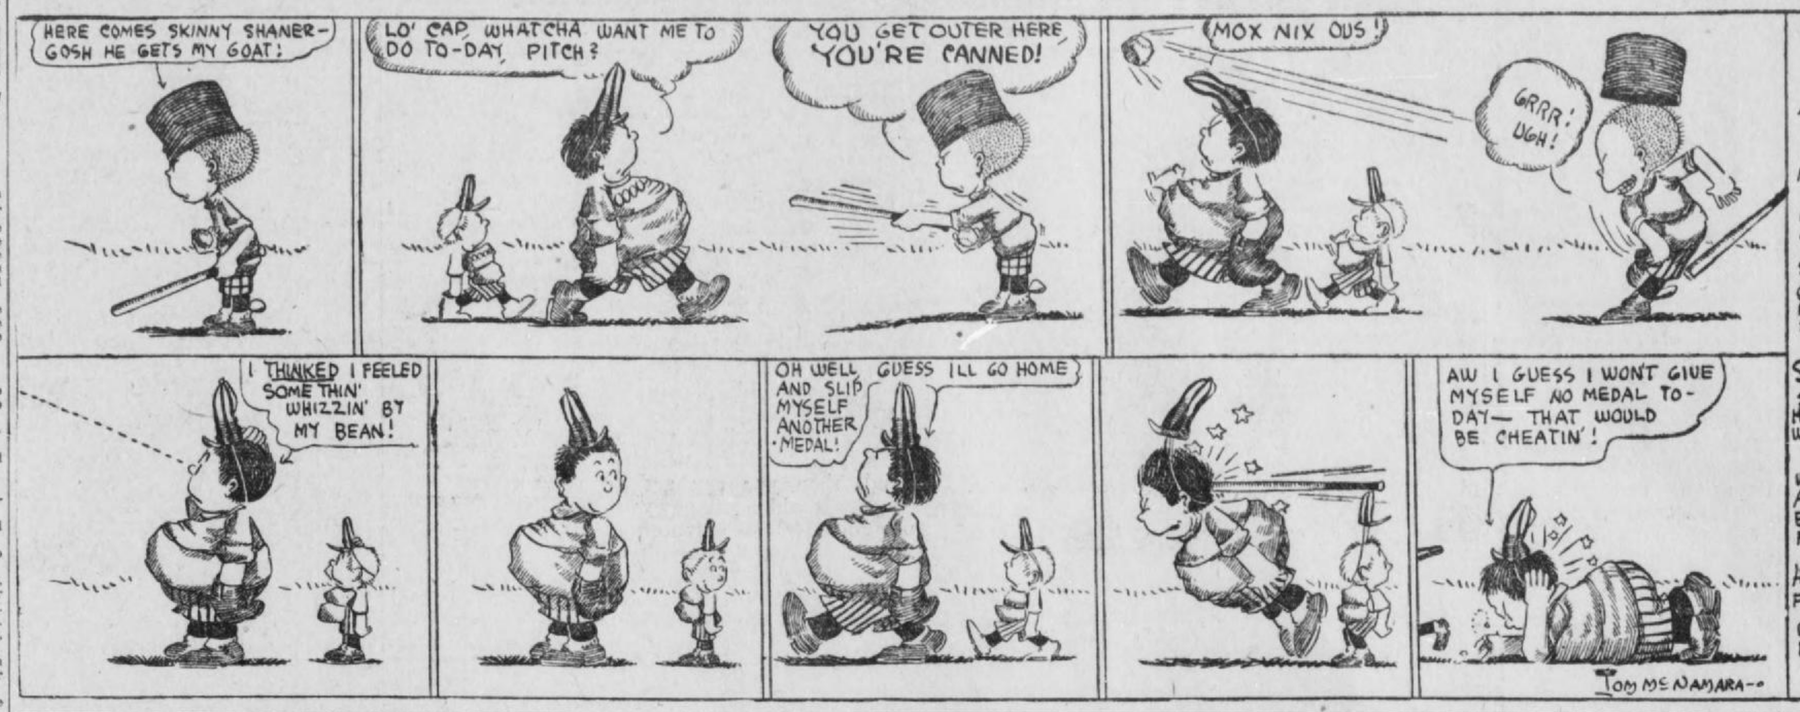

You can obtain S. S. S. at any well stocked drug store, if you insist upon it, but be sure you are not talked into something "just as good."

S. S. S. is prepared by the Swift Specific Company, 180 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga. Write for their illustrated book on skin diseases.

STARS.

Oft in the early fall,
With baseball fights near ended,
One stops to think where all
The springtime stars have wended.
The Second Cobbs have lost their jobs
And left us broken-hearted;
The Wagners, too, have up and blew,
The Speakers have departed.
Oft, as the autumn comes,
And pennant scraps are ended,
Lord knows where all the bums
Who starred in spring have wended.

Speaking of George McBride as manager of the Red Sox, McAleer could travel from here to Gehenna and back and not find a better one.

McBride never was a Lajole at the plate nor a Cobb on the bases, but he can think twice before the average athlete gets a start.

The report that Hugh Jennings has signed Messrs. Tutweiler and Fadrique simply shows how hard it is to get rid of a hobby.

It is important to know that the Pelicans won a game the other day from Memphis. This shows that the Pels can beat somebody.

While Packey McFarland depends more on his cleverness than on his punch, his recent effort at song writing has demonstrated that he can punch the English language without mercy.

Were we the manager of a white hope our first move would be to sign him with the Giants, where he could get a postgraduate course in the art of rough house.

ODE TO THE WALKING GHOST.

They say time drags on Sunday
When there is naught to do.
But, gee! it drags on Monday—
It seems to stick like glue.

It sure does drag that one day
From half-past twelve till one,
For one o'clock on Monday
*Is when we cop the mon.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR SPEAKER TO BE TRADED

BOSTON, Aug. 14.—While it is an open secret that President McAleer is pretty well disgusted at the way certain members of the Red Sox team have been going this season, there is very little ground for believing he has ever thought of trading Tris Speaker to the Washington club.

Of course, if, as a morning paper prints under a Milwaukee date, he intends making George McBride the Red Sox manager next year, he will have to get rid of Carrigan, for Bill would not be likely to show unusual enthusiasm for the common cause if he were deposed without a fair trial, and the tag end of a season can hardly be considered enough time in which to gauge any man's managerial ability.

* * *

BUT why Speaker? Especially if Carrigan is no longer with the team. A few weeks ago dopesters were figuring that Speaker would have to be traded because he could not get along with the new manager. Waiving the question as to whether Speaker has or has not given his best services to the team since Carrigan's appointment (in our opinion he has done his best), why should it be necessary to trade him after the cause of his discontent, if discontent he ever had, has been removed?

* * *

FOR is it at all likely that "Old Fox" Griffith is likely to let go the best base-runner in the American League, even if he should consent to break up his infield by releasing his shortstop.

Either Milan or Speaker would be a notable addition to any club, but the departure of either would, conversely, be a great loss to the team with which he is now connected.

McAleer is entirely willing to secure Milan, and Griffith, no doubt, could be prevailed upon to take Speaker. But neither cares much about letting his own star depart.

RED SOX TO GIVE $10,000 IN PLAYERS FOR REHG

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 14.—A baseball deal was engineered here whereby the Boston Red Sox will give $10,000 in players for Left Fielder Walter Rehg, of the St. Paul team, of the American Association. A big cash price was offered to Manager Friel, of the St. Paul club, but he turned down these offers for a trade.

ROCKFORD WINS LONG GAME.

ROCKFORD, ILL., Aug. 14.—A double and a single in the nineteenth inning gave Rockford the victory over Racine yesterday, 3 to 2.

RINGSIDE NEWS

After a layoff of two months Eddie McGoorty is ready to don the padded mitts again. Jim Coffroth has offered him either Sailor Petroskey or Bob McAllister, who boxed a twenty-round draw on the coast last week. McGoorty isn't particular which he meets, and has wired the California promoter to that effect.

* * *

Jimmy Grant, the Chicago bantamweight, who holds a knock-out victory over Spider Britt, is back in our midst once more. Jimmy has been spending a few weeks in Jacksonville, Fla., and is now anxious to get on with some of the local talent. Jimmy is one of the classiest fellows of his weight and should find little trouble in getting on here.

* * *

Johnny Dundee will make his next fight against Ad Wolgast on Admission Day. Dundee, by stopping Jack White, has won a warm spot in the hearts of the coast fans. He should not lack for admirers when he stacks up against the ex-champion.

* * *

Two clever newspaper men of Chicago, George S. Robbins and Joseph B. Bowles, have gotten out a bright and interesting little book covering the career of Frank A. Gotch. The wrestling champion is credited with the following: "In training, it is brains over brawn. The man who trains with his brain can get more good out of twirling a match than an athlete who does not use his brain can out of a 5-pound dumb-bell.

* * *

Joe Rivers, having had two chances against a world's lightweight champion, finds himself further from the 133-pound title than when he started to box in this division. The Mexican is carded to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, and unless he wins decisively, Joe will find himself in a class with Anderson and Baldwin.

* * *

* * *

For the 99th time Jack Dillon and Toni Caponi are matched. Reports from Winnipeg state that the two middleweights will clash in a scheduled twelve-round set-to some time next month.

* * *

It is even hinted that Welsh and Ritchie will pull the wool over the eyes of Vancouver sports, as each man is said to have an understanding that they will box for the benefit of the moving pictures only.

* * *

And now we learn Ritchie fears Murphy, too. One wonders what Ritchie does when he isn't looking up some new person to fear.

* * *

Promoter Coffroth, of San Francisco, is reported to have Arthur Pelky signed for three bouts. Charley Miller will be one of his opponents.

* * *

The manager of Gunboat Smith will now try and fill all the sporting pages in the country telling what a wonder Smith is and that he is the real champion. And all because he trimmed Jim Flynn.

PITCHER GIVES ONLY ONE HIT IN DOUBLE BILL

PETERSBURG, VA., Aug. 14.—Pitcher Hedgepeth established a new world's record here yesterday, when he pitched both games of a double-header against Richmond and was hit safely but once in the eighteen consecutive innings. He was not scored against; only gave three bases on balls—one in the first game and two in the second—and did not hit a batsman. Hedgepeth was sold to the Washington Americans several weeks ago.

The Pirates are again tied with Chicago for third place in the National League, having been trounced twice yesterday by the Brooklyn Dodgers. No other games were played owing to rain. No games were scheduled in the American League.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

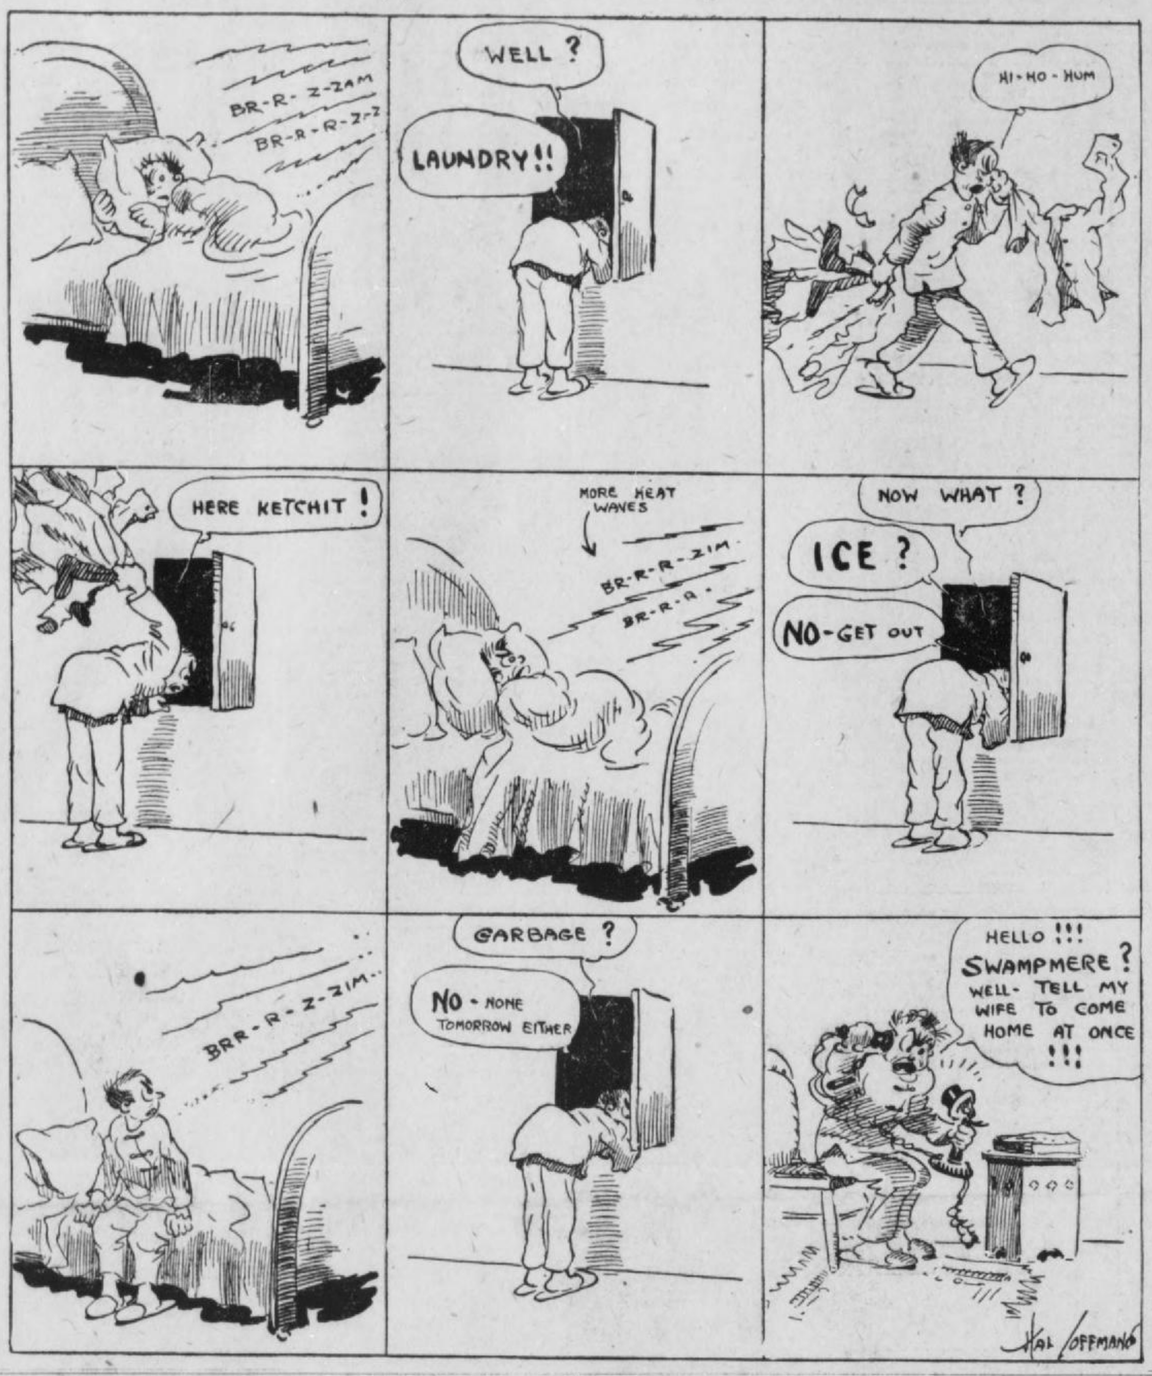

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the political forum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch,
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

DOROTHY DIX

Writes on

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and child-like exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spendilig an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.

FRANK'S MOTHER STIRS COURTROOM

Leaps to Defense of Son at Dorsey's Question

BATTLE TO IMPEACH SULZER WON

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

ALBANY, Aug. 13.—The Court of Impeachment will meet at the Capitol September 18 at noon.

ALBANY, N. Y., Aug. 13.—Governor William Sulzer was impeached by the New York Assembly to-day by a vote of 79 to 45. The specific charge in the indictment of "high crimes and misdemeanors" was that he used moneys contributed to his campaign for speculation in Wall street. The vote was taken at 5:15 o'clock after a night of acrimonious debate.

Wall street has claimed many victims, both high and low, but few cases have afforded a more pathetic spectacle than that of Governor Sulzer, standing alone after having fought his way up the political ladder through fifteen years or more of grueling battle.

To controvert evidence produced by the Frawley legislative committee, which showed that Governor Sulzer had used money contributed to his campaign for stock speculation, Mrs. Sulzer, was prepared to go upon the stand to testify that she indorsed her husband's name to checks without his knowledge and used them for stock purchases. Even this noble wifely sacrifice, declared the Governor's opponents, would not save him from political annihilation when the impeachment proceedings are actually begun by the managers appointed by the assembly.

Friends Make Hard Fight.

Governor Sulzer's friends, including Republicans, Democrats and one lone Progressive, made a spirited fight, but the antagonists were strong in numbers and logic and were able to prevail.

While the all-night battle raged Governor Sulzer remained alone in the the executive mansion, "the people's house," as he called it, refusing to see any one or to be seen. Comforted only by his wife he remained in lonely vigil until after dawn, when a messenger informed him that he had been impeached. Tears streamed down the Governor's face when he heard the news.

Governor Sulzer will be tried by the Senate and a majority of the judges of the State Court of Appeals, the evidence being presented against him by managers appointed by the Assembly.

Directly after the vote had been taken in the Assembly, Speaker Smith appointed Assemblymen Van-Woert, Cole and Bradley to inform the Senate officially of the impeachment.

Speaker Smith announced also that no time would be lost in preparing the articles of impeachment for presentation to the court, but Mr. Sulzer has twenty days in which to prepare his defense.

Shunned in Hour of Trial.

The articles of impeachment will be drawn up by Assemblymen Levy of New York, Deitz of Brooklyn, Kelly of Dutchess County, Daley of Onondaga County and Bryant of Genesee County. Mr. Bryant is a Republican; the others are Democrats.

After this committee had been appointed there was a conference in the office of Senator Frawley, chairman of the committee which investigated the Governor. Efforts to get word from Mr. Sulzer, however, were unavailing. In the darkened executive chambers Mr. Sulzer restlessly paced up and down. One wild report was

Soldier Held for Attempted Attack

PENSACOLA, Aug. 13.—Jack Gord, a soldier from Fort Barrancas, is being held in irons at the navy yard charged with attempting to attack a prominent young woman at Warrington. No warrant has been issued for him, although the United States District Attorney is now investigating the matter. It is claimed the soldier went to the room of the young woman in his stocking feet and wearing no coat or shirt. When the young woman screamed, the soldier ran and Deputy Game Warden Chapman knocked him down with a brick. The clothing of Gord was found downstairs.

The soldier denies all charges, claiming that his clothes had been stolen and that he went into the room upstairs in order not to expose himself improperly clad.

Carmack Trial Nears Finish at Opelika

OPELIKA, Aug. 13.—It is probable that the trial of Homer Carmack, which began Tuesday afternoon, will be concluded by noon Thursday. Carmack is charged with murdering J. J. Folke, an aged Phoenix City merchant, on Sunday night, June 22.

The State is represented by Solicitor C. A. L. Samford, of the Law and Equity Court of Lee County, assisted by his brother, T. D. Samford, while the defense is being represented by C. A. Hayes, of Phenix City, and Judge A. E. Barnett, of Opelika. Judge Lum Duke is the trial judge.

Victims of Promoter Found in Many States

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—Cashier Bohlin, of the Fort Payne bank, testified to-day that E. C. Drew, the oil well promoter on trial here for using the mail to defraud, had deposited $19,000 in the bank between January 1, 1912, and the present date. It was also shown he had deposited $6,000 in a bank at Collinsville.

The money was secured from investors, the largest amount from any one person being $1,000, which Mrs. Belcher, residing in Maine, had sent. Drew's alleged victims are found in many States.

Feud of Gamblers Cause of Killing

BIRMINGHAM, Aug. 13.—That the killing of W. Louie (Pat) Roney by Ed Ellis on one of the principal streets of Birmingham on the night of July 31 was a chapter of a feud among gamblers was brought out in the preliminary hearing, which has been concluded, Ellis being released on $2,500 bond.

Louie Smith, a partner of Ellis, was killed in Montgomery by Roney. Smith had killed Brooks Fuller, another gambler, some months before.

Boy Shoots Matches From Air Gun; Fire

EUFAULA, Aug. 13.—Mrs. H. C. Reynolds was seriously burned about the hands and face to-day in trying to extinguish a burning mosquito net and save her home from destruction.

Mrs. Reynolds' son, Henry Reynolds, was shooting matches from an airgun when one of them struck the iron bed, ignited and set fire to the net, which started a big flame.

Board of Examiners For Trained Nurses

TALLAHASSEE, Aug. 13.—Under the provisions of a 1913 legislative act providing for the State registration of nurses, Governor Park Trammell has appointed the following trained nurses as members of the State Board of Examiners:

Miss Anna Davids, of Miami; Miss N. B. Prewitt, of Tampa; Miss Irene M. Foote, of Jacksonville; Miss Maud Yothers, of Orlando; and Miss Anna L. Rutherford, of St. Augustine.

REV. C. E. WHEAT WILL RECOVER

GRIFFIN, GA., Aug. 13.—The Rev. C. E. Wheat, rector of St. George's Episcopal Church, who was stricken with ptomaine poisoning last Saturday, continues in a very critical condition, but his physicians state that the crisis has passed and that he will recover.

MOTOR TOUR LAUDED BY SENATE

Indorses Hearst's Sunday American Trail-Blazing Trip Through Dixie to San Francisco.

A resolution offered by Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, indorsing the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers to blaze an all-Southern highway from Atlanta to San Francisco, was passed unanimously by the Senate Wednesday morning.

In offering the resolution Senator McNeill declared that the proposed campaign undoubtedly meant much not only for Georgia, but for the whole South, as it will afford a direct road from the East to the South and thence to the Pacific Coast, where the great Panama-Pacific Exposition will be held in 1915.

"I offer this resolution for the indorsement of the Senate," said the Senator, "because the campaign is an effort to increase interest in good roads and highways in additions to affording a route from New York to the Pacific Coast through the South. The campaign is featured by the fact that it will not cost the State of Georgia one cent."

Senate Resolution in Full.

The resolution adopted by the Senate follows:

Resolved, That whereas the campaign inaugurated by Hearst's Sunday American in co-operation with other leading Southern newspapers for an all-Southern transcontinental highway from Atlanta to San Francisco will mean much for the promotion of good roads in Georgia as well as better facilities for the interchange of farm products between different States, this Senate does hereby indorse this movement, thereby encouraging the sentiment and interest for better roads and highways.

The Senate indorsement of the campaign followed fast on the heels of the indorsement of Governor John M. Slaton, who declared Tuesday that no better sign of the progress of the people could be had than just such movements as this one.

Other prominent citizens, including Shelby Smith, County Commissioner, also have placed their hearty stamp of approval on the project.

In fact, interest in the proposed tour has exceeded the fondest expectations of the good roads and highway boosters, who are leaving no stone unturned to make the transcontinental path-finding tour a success in every particular.

Pathfinder Arranges Details.

Perhaps the busiest of the boosters is "Pathfinder" Ferguson, who will conduct the big campaign. Mr. Ferguson arrived in Atlanta last Saturday, and since that time he has gone into every detail of the first lap of the journey from Atlanta to Birmingham. Scarcely a single detail of the "official" start, which will be made next Monday, has been overlooked. The pathfinders have their road maps in readiness and the Atlanta boosters who will have the parade in hand have announced "ready."

The parade will be one of the largest ever witnessed in Atlanta. Among those who will participate will be the Chief of Police, the Fire Chief, various city officials and other prominent citizens. Mr. Ferguson will go direct to Anniston, Ala., from Atlanta and thence to Birmingham, the first "official" stopping place. The proposed route extends through Birmingham, Montgomery, New Orleans, Dallas, Houston, San Diego, Los Angeles to San Francisco.

Death Answers an Invitation to Speak

GADSDEN, Aug. 13.—When the Etowah County Veterans' reunion opened here to-day it developed that the late Senator Joseph F. Johnston had been invited to make an address.

Senator Johnston died before making response to the invitation.

ARMORY FIRE THREATENS ARSENAL

Crowd Flees as Flames Near the Ammunition Room Over Taft Hall—Damage Heavy.

Rapidly making toward the room where many thousand rounds of ammunition were stored, fire did several thousand dollars' worth of damage in the storeroom of the armory over Taft Hall in the Auditorium early Wednesday afternoon.

The main auditorium was not touched, however. The blaze did not get within 100 yards of the huge organ.

The fire was discovered by Sergeant Wardwell, of the Artillery Corps, who happened to be in the basement at the time. Smoke came down the elevator shaft and he rushed upstairs into the office of H. J. Weaver, the keeper of the building. They hurried to the upper floor and discovered smoke coming out of the storeroom in which the tents of Companies C and D are kept. An alarm was turned in and several companies responded.

Firemen Find Doors Locked.

It required several minutes for the firemen to gain entrance into the room on account of the door being locked. The armory is on the top floor and it was necessary to use an aerial truck and enter through the window. The firemen were driven back for some time by the heavy smoke from the burning tents and were compelled to play several streams on them for more than half an hour.

The tents which were burned were used in the recent encampment at St. Simons Island, and it is quite probable that the fire had smoldered for several days. The loss to the National Guard will amount to several thousand dollars.

It required but a few moments for the room to fill with water to a depth of more than two feet, the fire being unusually hard to quench on account of the waterproof tents, and having started in the center of a huge pile of canvas.

Plastering Loosened.

The water seeped through the floor and the ceiling over Taft Hall, loosening the plaster there, while a heavy stream flowed down the stairways into the great lobby. When the fire was extinguished the firemen undertook the task of bailing out the storeroom, using large galvanized tubs for the work.

TAX BILL IS PASSED AFTER HARD BATTLE

If Representatives Sheppard of Sumter County and Stovall of Elbert County stand by their guns during the two remaining sessions of the Legislature, a determined fight to induce the House to reconsider its action in passing the Senate tax revision bill, providing for a State Tax Commissioner and county boards of assessors, will be inaugurated Wednesday or Thursday.

Both Mr. Stovall and Mr. Sheppard made strenuous efforts to get the floor immediately after the passage of the bill with a motion to reconsider, but were ruled out of order at their first attempt by Speaker Burwell. Then Ed Wohlwender, of Muscogee, stepped into the breach with one of his filibusters, and their opportunity was gone. They have served notice on the House, however, that they will make a motion to reconsider at the earliest possible opportunity.

Friends of the measure, however, who passed it after one of the most spectacular fights in the history of Georgia, declare that they have no fear that the efforts of Mr. Sheppard and Mr. Stovall will succeed. Backed by the approbation of Governor Slaton, who issued a statement Tuesday night that the House deserved the thanks of the State, they have no fear that their work will be destroyed during the short remaining time of the session.

Several members who voted against the tax bill declared Wednesday morning that in view of their friendship for the administration they will not support a motion to reconsider, even though it come from Sheppard and Stovall, recognized leaders of the anti-tax reformers in the House.

It took singing, much argument, a wild ride to the Capitol in an automobile, a deciding vote by the Speaker and one of Ed Wohlwender's noted filibusters to pass the bill, but after three hours' hard work, in which every foot of the march to success was a battle, it was finally done.

Bob Blackburn, of Fulton, led the singing that put courage into the hearts of the tax reformers; Henderson of Jones made the wild ride to the Capitol and cast the tying vote at the last moment, and then Speaker Burwell stepped into the breach and saved the bill by casting the vote that broke the tie and made the bill a law.

Sheppard, of Sumter, denounced the measure, declaring that it is unconstitutional, and Stovall, of Elbert, delivered an equally strong speech against the bill. McCrory, of Schley County, and Conner, of Spalding, also denounced it. Among those who spoke in favor of it were Wimberly, of Bibb; Jones of Coweta; Swift, of Muscogee; Fullbright, of Burke, and Greene, of Houseton.

At 5 o'clock Holtzclaw, of Houston, called the previous question, and at 5:15 the roll call began on the measure. The closeness of the vote was apparent before half a dozen names were called. The vote see-sawed during the entire roll call. At no time was either side more than three votes ahead. When the verification of the roll call began at 6:10 o'clock the antis had 86 votes and the reformers 83. Then one of the members arose and changed his vote from yea to nay, changing the figures to 85 to 84.

Then Gower, of Crisp, bethought

DEFENSE LETS DOWN ALL BARS FOR ATTACK ON FRANK'S CHARACTER

Mrs. Rae Frank, mother of Leo Frank, caused a dramatic scene in court Wednesday afternoon by rising in her chair and denouncing Solicitor Dorsey as he was making charges of grossl yimproper conduct on the part of Frank with young girls in his factory.

The Solicitor was asking Ashley Jones, an insurance man, if he had ever heard of a story that Frank had taken certain liberties with one of the girls at the factory c mfwcympfwy ... with one of the factory girls, giving her name.

Mrs. Frank goaded into hysteria by the accusations against her son, rose, trembling with fury, from her chair, and shrieked:

"No, nor you either!"

She shook her finger at the Solicitor and would have continued had she not been restrained by her relatives and court attaches.

Frank himself sought to calm her, and the younger Mrs. Frank joined in the efforts to quiet the older woman.

"We will have to listen to these slanderous lies and calumies and this scurrilous defamation as long as the trial lasts," said Attorney Arnold. "It is outrageous, but we may as well meet it calmly."

Mrs. Frank was led from the room hysterically weeping.

Pantomime Is Described.

Dr. Owens told of the re-enacting by himself and three other men of Jim Conley's story of the disposal of Mary Phagan's body. The testimony went in over the vigorous protest of Solicitor Dorsey.

Dr. Owens said that one of the men acted the part of Conley and another of Frank.. The other two men were timers. It required eighteen and one-half minutes to take the supposed body to the basement from the office floor and return to Frank's office, going through all of the movements described by Conley and repeating all of the conversation Conley quoted in his statement. This did not include the time spent in Frank's office where the negro said the notes were written.

Attorney Hooper gave Owens a long cross-examination to demonstrate that the re-enactment of Conley's story could not be taken as an accurate measure of the time required for the disposal of the body.

Attorney Arnold again threatened to move for a mistrial when the Solicitor began his cross-examination of Jones.

Dorsey asked Jones if he had not heard of Frank holding young girls on his lap in his office and taking other liberties with them.

"That is outrageous," shouted Arnold. "I shall move for a mistrial if such a question is asked again. It is most unjust and prejudicial that the gossip of crack-brained extremists should be allowed to come before this jury.

Dorsey Promises to Back Charges.

"I'm not four-flushing," retorted the Solicitor. "I'll bring witnesses here to prove all I have charged."

Jones said that as an insurance man he had the most favorable reports of Frank's character, and that he had never heard any of the reports of immorality and improper conduct.

Solicitor Dorsey spent two hours Wednesday afternoon trying to break down the story of Lemmie Quinn, foreman of the metal dpeartment at the National Pencil Factory.

Quinn had testified that he visited the office of Leo Frank at 12:20 or 12:25 the day the Phagan girl was murdered.

Dorsey with all his might sought to raise the suspicion in the minds of the jurors that Quinn either was not at the factory at all or that he came there much earlier than he testified.

He asked the witness if he had not told Policeman Payne that "he was glad he had not been in the factory the day the girl was killed," and if he had not also denied it to Detectives Starnes and Black. Quinn denied that this was true.

"Isn't it true," asked the Solicitor, "that you never said anything to anyone about having been in the factory on Saturday until after you had a conference with Frank, although you were with the officers off and on all day the Monday following the crime?"

Quinn acknowledge this was true. Quinn had explained this weeks ago on the ground that the police were at that time arresting every one and he did not want to be involved.

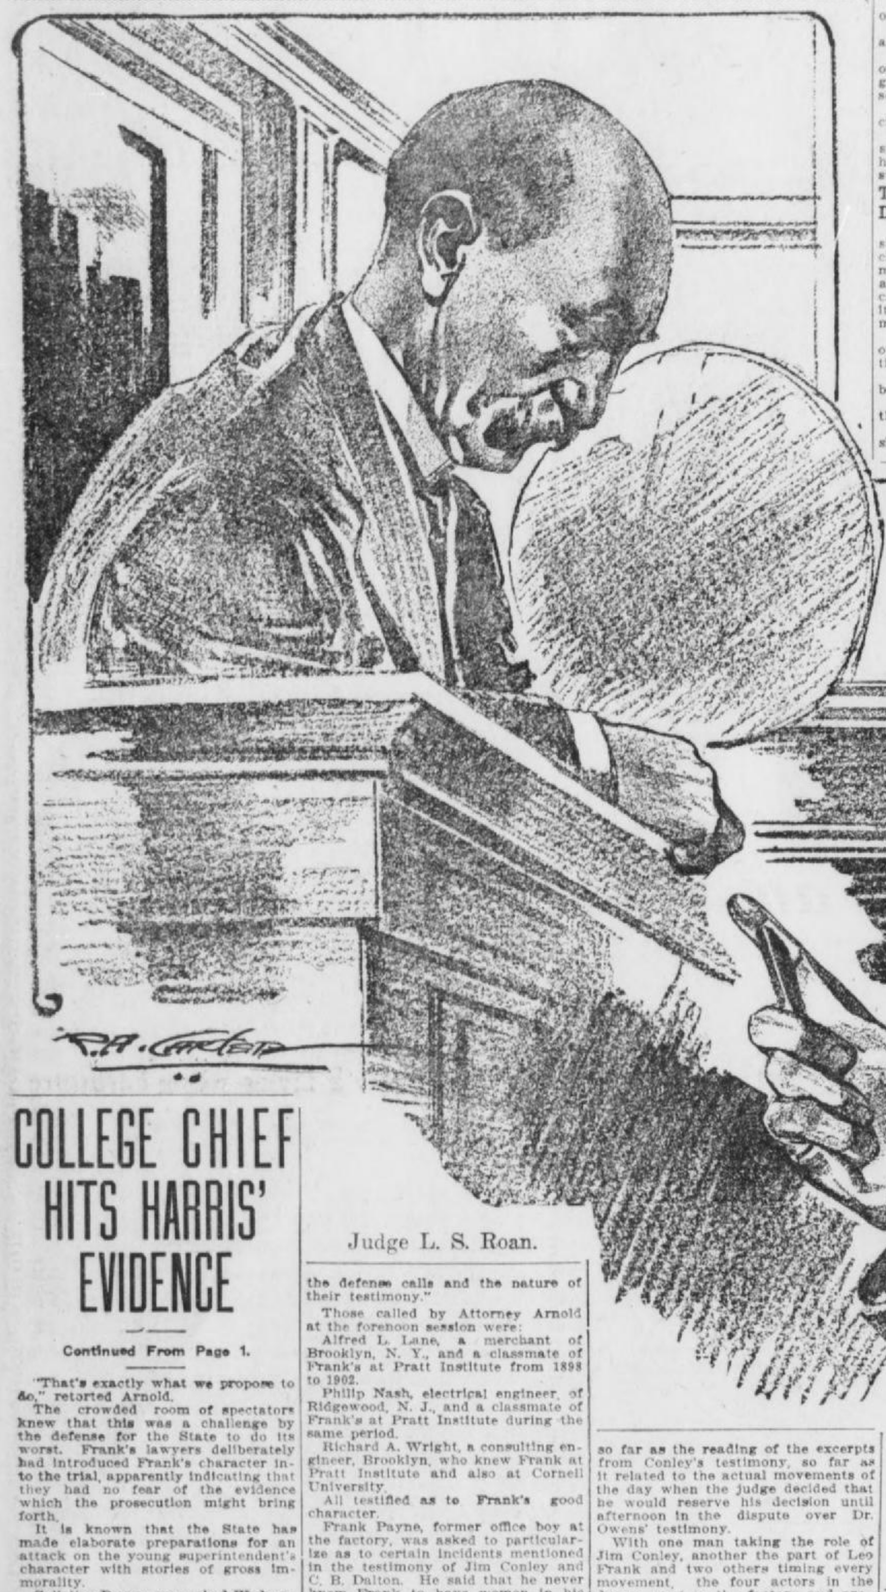

Three witnesses were produced by the defense to testify to Frank's good character. When the first one was called Solicitor Dorsey objected, saying:

"I don't see how this testimony is material, your honor, unless the defense intends to make the defendant's character an issue."

TRAGEDY RE-ENACTED TO PROVE JIM CONLEY'S STORY FALSE

Frank Trial Scene of Hot Battle on Admissibility of Evidence for Defense

COUNSEL FOR STATE AND DEFENSE IN HOT ARGUMENT BEFORE JUDGE ROAN

Judge L. S. Roan.

food had been in the stomach?—A. There is no way.

Q. Well, if a doctor were to say, from a chemical examination of the contents of the stomach, that it had been there only 30 minutes before death, could he know what he was talking about?—A. No.

Q. Are you a specialist on the stomach?—A. No.

Q. Is Dr. Westmoreland a specialist on the stomach?—A. No; he is a surgeon, but he would have to know something about the stomach.

Q. Is Dr. Hancock a stomach specialist?—A. No; he is a surgeon.

Q. You say you are not a stomach specialist?—A. Yes; but I have to have a general knowledge of the stomach to instruct in medicine.

Tilt Comes Over Doctor's Digestive Powers.

Q. Tables have been compiled showing how long it takes to digest chicken, cabbage, etc. You are familiar with the digestion of cabbage, are you not?—A. I can not digest cabbage at all myself. If I should eat it to-day, it would put me in bed tomorrow.

Q. I am not asking you about your own stomach. You may be a dyspeptic?—A. No, I am not.

Dorsey—I move that this answer be stricken out.

Arnold—He had a right to answer that question that way.

Q. Well, do you go out and practice medicine with your stomach as a standard?—A. I certainly do not.

Q. When did you read the last book on digestion?—A. About ten years ago.

Never Read Book On Digestion, He Says.

Q. You say you have not read a book on digestion in ten years?—A. I don't know that I ever read a book specifically on digestion. It hasn't been necessary. All the books are sent me free. I don't have to buy them.

Q. And there hasn't been any process in the study of digestion in ten years?

Arnold: I object to the Solicitor asking and answering the question.

Dorsey: They put him up as an expert, and I want to see what he knows.

Dorsey then put a hypothetical question, describing the conditions surrounding the analysis of the cabbage taken from Mary Phagan's stomach.

Q. Would you venture an opinion on how long that cabbage was in the stomach before death?—A. Nine days after death, I don't think you could tell a thing about it. Now, I will explain, if you desire.

Q. Wait a minute.

Arnold: Let him explain.

Dorsey: Can't the witness take care of himself?

to the statement of the witness as a lie. That is for the jury to decide.

Judge Roan sustained Hooper's objection.

Arnold—He admitted he lied. He changed his statement in a half dozen particulars. You can't judge a man who one time is a pup and the next time is a pig?

Dorsey—Your honor, if you admit this evidence, it will be a positive reversal.

Rules State May Show Time of Conley's Act.

Judge Roan—I don't remember that the question at the time was put up to me when I ruled on Conley's statement. If it is admissible to show how long it took to enact what Conley said was his part, then the state can show how long it took Conley to enact it. I won't reverse myself. I rule that the State may put in its evidence as to the time it took Conley to enact it.

Dorsey—All right, you honor; that is all I want.

Arnold—The Solicitor gets up every time he has an objection and almost cries about something that has been done to him on what he claims is a similar case. We will argue the point about the admissibility when we get to it.

"If the court rules, I am going to read the pantomime that this negro went through," said Arnold.

Attorney Joe Leavitt read for Attorney Arnold the negro's statement, detailing the events from the time the negro said he went to move the body notices her hat and slipper and the piece of ribbon.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what am I going to do with these things?"

Frank: "Just leave them right there." Conley pitched them in front of the boiler. Conley goes on elevator.

Frank: "Come on up and I will catch you at the first floor." Frank hits Conley a blow on his chest and jams him up against the elevator. Frank stumbles out of the elevator as it nears second floor. Frank goes and washes his hands and takes elevator keys into the private office. They sit down in the private office, Frank rubbing his hands and the back of his hair.

Frank: "Jim." Conley said nothing. All of a sudden Frank happened to look out of the door.

Frank: "My God, here is Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall." Frank runs back.

Frank: "Come over here, Jim; I've got to put you in this wardrobe." Frank puts Conley in wardrobe. Conley stayed there quiet a while.

Frank: "You are in a tight place."

Conley: "Yes."

Frank: "You done very well." Frank goes in the hall and comes back and lets Conley out of the wardrobe.

Frank: "You sit down." Conley sits down and Frank sits down. Frank reaches on table to get a box of cigarettes and matches, watch man comes, I will pay him myself."

Frank: "Well, all right; I don't see why you want to buy a watch for, either. That big fat wife of mine, she wanted me to buy an automobile and I wouldn't do it. (Pause.) I will tell you the best way. You go down there in the basement, you see that package that is on the floor in front of the shavings, take a lot of that trash and make up a fire and burn it.

Conley: "All right. Mr. Frank, you come down there with me and I will go."

Frank: "There is no need of my going down there, and I haven't got any business down there."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, you are a white man and you done it, and I am not going down there and burn it myself." (Pause.)

Frank: "Let me see that money." Frank takes money and puts in his pocket.

Conley: "Is this the way you do things?"

Frank: "You keep your mouth shut; that is all right." (Pause.) Frank turns around in his chair and looks at the money; looks back at Conley, turns his hands and looks up.

Declares Frank Cried, "Why Should I Hang?"

Frank: "Why should I hang? I have wealthy people in Brooklyn."

Conley: "Mr. Frank, what about me?"

Frank: "It's all right about you.

COLLEGE CHIEF HITS HARRIS' EVIDENCE

"That's exactly what we propose to do," retorted Arnold.

The crowded room of spectators knew that this was a challenge by the defense for the State to do its worst. Frank's lawyers deliberately had introduced Frank's character into the trial, apparently indicating that they had no fear of the evidence which the prosecution might bring forth.

It is known that the State has made elaborate preparations for an attack on the young superintendent's character with stories of gross immorality.

Solicitor Dorsey was asked Wednesday how many witnesses he expects to call.

"I don't know," he replied. "It largely depends on the number that the defense calls and the nature of their testimony."

Those called by Attorney Arnold at the forenoon session were:

Alfred L. Lane, a merchant of Brooklyn, N. Y., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute from 1898 to 1902.

Philip Nash, electrical engineer, of Ridgewood, N. J., and a classmate of Frank's at Pratt Institute during the same period.

Richard A. Wright, a consulting engineer, Brooklyn, who knew Frank at Pratt Institute and also at Cornell University.

All testified as to Frank's good character.

Frank Payne, former office boy at the factory, was asked to particularize as to certain incidents mentioned in the testimony of Jim Conley and C. B. Dalton. He said that he never knew Frank to have women in his office, although it was his custom to be at the office at the times Conley and Dalton testified that these gay parties took place.

A full three-quarters of the forenoon was consumed in a legal wrangle over the admissibility of Dr. William Owens' testimony. Dr. Owens was ready to testify in regard to the reproduction of the alleged movements of Conley and Frank in disposing of Mary Phagan's body, as Conley recited them on the witness stand. Judge Roan reserved his decision until afternoon.

Quinn was questioned minutely in regard to the time of his visit to the factory as soon as he was called to the stand. Attorney Arnold began by having him detail his movements throughout the day from the time he arose in the morning.

The foreman told an apparently straightforward story, although the Solicitor did not have time for cross-examination before the noon recess. He estimated that he entered the factory at about 12:20 o'clock. All of the doors were unlocked, he said, and the doors of the outer and inner offices on the second floor were open. The safe door, he thought, also was open. He testified that his conversation with Frank was very brief and that he left the factory within two or three minutes.

He said that R. P. Barrett, designated by Attorney Arnold as the "Christopher Columbus" of the Frank trial, had discovered the blood spots and the strands of hair on the lathing machine. Barrett frequently had remarked to him, Quinn testified, that he would draw down the big rewards if Frank was convicted. Quinn said that Barrett had mentioned $2,700 at one time and $4,500 at another as the sum he would receive because he had been the first to find the blood spots and other evidence.

The witness said that it was nothing unusual for factory employees to be hurt and bleed. He cited the case of C. P. Gilbert, who, he said, had been badly injured by the bursting of an emery wheel and was carried, bleeding, past the very place where Barrett discovered the blood spots.

He testified that he never had seen Frank speak to Mary Phagan and did not know that he knew her.

The defense was able to get only so far as the reading of the excerpts from Conley's testimony, so far as it related to the actual movements of the day when the judge decided that he would reserve his decision until afternoon in the dispute over Dr. Owens' testimony.

With one man taking the role of Jim Conley, another the part of Leo Frank and two others timing every movement, the four actors in the drama went to the factory and proceeded through the actions which the negro described in telling the story of the body's disposal.

Even the victim of the tragedy did not go unrepresented. A sack filled with material weighing 110 pounds, the weight of Mary Phagan, was carried from the rear of the metal room to the front of the factory and down the elevator to the basement.

Dr. William Owens was called to the stand. He was one of the timers. He said that William A. Fleming, a contractor and builder, took the part of Leo Frank and a Mr. Brent the part of Conley.

Dorsey objected on the ground that the judge had ruled out evidence as to the time it required Conley to reenact the disposal of the body.

Arnold replied that this pantomime was done under one of Conley's "lying affidavits," and not as he told of it on the stand.

Numerous authorities were cited by both sides. Judge Roan finally announced that he would reserve his opinion until 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and Dr. Owens was excused.

It took defense's men eighteen minutes and a half to re-enact the bare details of the disposition of the body. To this, if the testimony is allowed, the defense will explain, must be added the time the negro was in the closet—eight minutes—the time it took to write the notes, the time consumed in the conversation the negro reported, the alleged exchange of the roll of bills and everything else that transpired in the office that Conley told of.

Dr. W. S. Kendrick, head of the old Atlanta Medical College, was the first witness called Wednesday and testified in rebuttal of Dr. H. F. Harris. He was the first man who employed Harris as a chemical assistant.

Harris Testimony Again Attacked.

Attorney Arnold put his usual hypothetical question about the cut on the back of the head and the doctor answered:

"In expressing any opinion on a wound such as you describe that long after death is nothing more nor less than hazarding the wildest guess imaginable."

Q. Do you know of any way any physician could determine how long

Rosser—That is a reflection on this man, who is old enough to be the young Solicitor's father and a man of undisputed character.

Arnold—Your honor, we want you to rule out that statement of the Solicitor's about "shooting in."

Judge Roan—I must sustain Mr. Dorsey in his objection to the witness answering questions he was not asked. I also strike out Mr. Dorsey's comment on the witness.

Judge Objects to Dragging in Homer.

Dorsey—Dr. Kendrick, I am asking you about medical science—the processes of digestion have been, determined, have they not?—A. I am not a stomach specialist. I have had to know something about the stomach to practice.

Q. Isn't it true that Homer exceeded his teachers in knowledge?—A. I have had to make a living by the sweat of my brow. I haven't had time to read Homer. I had to teach Latin once——

Judge Roan—I don't think there is any reason to bring Homer into this case.

Q. Whenever you find free hydrochloric acid in the stomach, digestion is over with, is it not?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it not true that when you find it in a small degree you know that digestion has not progressed very far?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, if you find undigested particles of food in the stomach and only a small degree of hydrochloric acid, then would not the natural conclusion be that the food had only been there a short time?—A. Not necessarily. If I ate cabbage, it would be there the next day.

Q. I never asked you about cabbage. Get your mind away from that. You might have been laid up from eating a Welsh rarebit. Now, are there not certain infallible rules of digestion?

Arnold interrupted—Wait a minute, let him answer that other question.

Addressing the witness Arnold said: "He asked you if a Welsh rarebit would not affect you the same way as cabbage?"

Dr. Kendrick—I never saw one in my life.

A ripple of laughter ran through the court and even Frank laughed

Arnold: Yes, he can.

Dorsey: Then let him.

Dr. Kendrick Gives His Views on Case.

Dr. Kendrick: I have always thought that every stomach is a law unto itself. There is such a wide latitude for fear anger and a hundred other things to interfere with digestion that it is practically impossible to set a standard.

Q. You and Dr. Westmoreland and some others of you became very bitter against Dr. Harris, did you not?—A. I gave him everything he ever had in Atlanta, except his place on the State Board of Health. Dr. Westmoreland gave him that.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. What do you think about Dr. Harris, his eccentricities, etc.?

Dorsey objected and was sustained.

Q. Does this cabbage seem to be masticated?—A. No.

Q. What becomes of the hydrochloric acid after death?—A. I don't know, but I imagine it would stay in the body.

Q. Do you know what effect formaldehyde has on the pancreatic juice?—A. No.

Clash Over Real Estate-Physician's Testimony.

The witness was excused and Dr. William Owens was called. Arnold question him.

Q. What is your business?—A. A physician and real estate man.

Q. Did you, at our request, make certain tests of the building of the National Pencil Company regarding what Jim Conley said he did?—A. I did.

Dorsey—I object to this testimony. This man is no expert on this subject. The jury is just as capable of judging the time as this witness. It is a farce to have this man go through this testimony. The other day we tried to prove that Jim Conley had gone through this test, and your honor ruled it out. What is the difference in principle between the two?

Arnold—Your honor, you admitted the time the negro said he went through these acts. He said it was all completed about 1:30 o'clock. Jim Conley went through his act after his second lying statement.

Hooper—I object to him referring until he said he left the factory at about 1:30.

The statement follows:

12:56 o'clock. Conley goes to cotton box from the elevator stairs and gets a piece of cloth, but takes cloth back to where body lay and ties it just like a person that is going to give out clothes on Monday. Ties each corner and draws it in and ties it. Ties the four corners together and runs right arm through cloth, and went to put it up on his shoulder and found he could not get it up on his shoulder; it was too heavy, and he carried it that way on his arm, and when he gets to the little dressing room in the metal department, he let the body fall, and he didn't know if anybody heard him, and when he let her fall, he jumped and he was scared and said:

(Conley) "Mr. Frank, you'll have to help me with this girl. She is heavy." Frank comes and runs down there from the top of the steps, and after he gets down there, he caught her by the feet and Conley laid hold of her by the shoulders, and when they got her up that way they backed, and Mr. Frank kinder put her on Conley. Frank was nervous and trembling, too, and after walking a few steps, Frank let her feet drop, and then they picked her up and went to the elevator and set her on the elevator, and Frank pulled down on one of the cords and the elevator would not go

Frank: "Wait, let me go in the office and get the key." Frank goes in the office and gets the key and comes back and unlocks the storage box and after that he started the elevator down. The elevator went down to the basement.

Frank: "Come on." He opened the door that led there to the basement in front of the elevator (there is no such door) and carried her out and laid her down, and Conley opened the cloth and rolled her out there on the floor, and Frank turned around and went on up the ladder. Conley carries the body back to where the body was found. Conley goes around in front of the boiler and takes out a cigarette and match and hands Conley box of cigarettes. Conley lights cigarette and goes to smoking and hands Frank back box of cigarettes. Frank puts cigarettes back in his pocket and then takes them out.

Frank: "You can have these." Conley reaches over and takes box of cigarettes and sticks them in his pocket.

Frank: "Can you write?"

Conley: "Yes, sir, a little bit." Frank takes out his pencil and sits down. Conley sits down at table and Frank dictates notes. Conley taking the paper that Frank gave him. Conley writes one note and Frank told him to turn over and write again. Conley turns over paper and writes again.

Frank: "Turn over again." Conley turns over again and writes on next page.

Frank: "That is all right." Frank reaches over and gets a green piece of paper and tells Conley what to write and Conley writes. Frank takes and lays it on his desk and looks at Conley smiling and rubbing his hands. Runs his hands into his pocket, pulls out a roll of bills.

Conley: "Mr. Frank, don't you pay another dollar when that Don't you worry about this thing. You just go back to work on Monday like you have never known anything and keep your mouth shut. If you get caught I will get you out on bond and send you away."

Conley: "That is all right, Mr. Frank." (Pause.)

Frank: "I am going out home.

BOTH SIDES AIM FOR JUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF FRANK

With Judge, Jury and Councillors Performing Duty Well, Square Deal Is Assured.

By Jas. B. Nevin.

In considering the Frank trial, particularly with respect to the length of it, and the thoroughgoing exhaustiveness of the hearing, it must be borne in mind that the establishing of justice is the main object of both sides, and that, therefore, patience and poise are absolutely necessary in those who would be fair—fair not only to Frank, but to the State also.

With the average citizen, the home-loving and upright citizen, the Frank trial should be largely an abstract proposition.

As Frank Hooper himself has said, State's counsel that he is:

"It is not so much a question of convicting Leo Frank, as it is a question of convicting the murderer of Mary Phagan!"

The Solicitor General, Hugh M. Dorsey, is entitled to full and complete praise for the careful and painstaking labor he has put into the case.

It must be conceded that he is utterly conscientious and sincere in his endeavor to convict Frank. Frank has been duly indicted—Dorsey is the Solicitor General.

It is the duty—the sworn duty—of the Solicitor to prosecute with ALL the vigor and resourcefulness at his command all indicted persons. If he did not do that in the Frank case, the State would not be getting a square deal. And it is quite as much the province of Dorsey to see that the State gets a square deal as it is that Luther Rosser and Reuben Arnold see to it that Frank gets a square deal.

Dorsey Given Credit.

The Solicitor has made out a most impressive case against Frank, moreover.

With such circumstances and positive facts as he thinks he possesses—be they sound or otherwise, and that is for the jury to say—he has established a charge against Leo Frank that can not, and will not, be overcome without difficulty and circumspection of effort.

The Solicitor has handled himself extremely well—he deserves ungrudging credit for that.

He has abundantly proven himself to be a good man—an exceptionally able man—in a position that sometimes is the most trying of all official positions in Georgia.

No man can make me believe that Hugh Dorsey would, for an instant, seek to fix upon Leo Frank the awful charge brought against him, if Dorsey did not BELIEVE Frank guilty.

As much may be said of Frank Hooper, Dorsey's splendidly equipped assistant.

In making out his case against Frank, Dorsey took his time—he employed ten days establishing his contentions, before he closed.

He was right in doing that, if it required, in his matured judgment, that much time. It was clearly in order for Frank's friends, his relatives, and for Frank himself, to possess their souls in patience while the State's counsel—the people's advocate—was doing his duty.

No Quibbling Over Expense.

The defense will take quite as long—perhaps longer—and that, too, is as it should be, however much we may wish to see things hurried a bit.

Neither the State of Georgia nor the county of Fulton will quibble about the expense of the trial, nor the time of it, particularly in view of the stake in issue—a human life, a man's reputation and good name, an erstwhile happy and united household, and all of that—nor raise a protesting hand, in the circumstances.

In cases of the kind now being tried in the Fulton County Court both the State and the defense does well to make haste slowly.

The State, under the direction of the Solicitor, has built about Frank a mighty wall of circumstances, the which to scale it will require the ultimate ingenuity of the defense.

I do not know whether the defense can scale that wall or not—maybe it can. It has made marked progress—thus far, at least, so it seems—and it may get completely over. It isn't over YET, nevertheless.

The best thing to do is to keep your mind honestly open—to keep it "perfectly impartial between the State and the accused," as the jury is required to do.

The well-balanced citizen will oe prepared to say, after the hearings are completed and the verdict has been rendered: "Well, that is the TRUTH of the matter, for it is a finding brought about through a process of law evolved of a thousand years of Anglo-Saxon civilization, which is an ever-progressing civilization, and it approximates justice and right to the final extent that human ingenuity is able to approximate it!"

Dorsey and Hooper may be right, they may be wrong—Rosser and Arnold may be right, and they may be wrong. It isn't so much for you to say, reader, nor for me—the saying finally is the jury's business.

Isn't that right?

So many people, in undertaking to analyze and consider intelligently a case such as the one Judge Roan now is hearing, make the all too frequent mistake of jumping at conclusions.

You hardly can figure what the controlling effect of a bit of evidence may be, unless you endeavor to apply that evidence in all directions possible, and in the light of your best and most discriminating intelligence.

For instance, the defense is endeavoring to show that Frank on the afternoon of the murder engaged in three hours' most intricate clerical work, without making a mistake, or showing a sign of unusual excitement in the work.

The defense will argue from this, of course, that Frank is not likely the murderer of Mary Phagan, because, if he had been, the clerical work as aforesaid would have been an impossibility.

The State, however, is endeavoring to show that Frank may have done and did do this work in the morning before the murder, when his mind was free of the guilty knowledge of bloodshed, and cites as a further circumstance to prove that he might have done the work in the morning the fact that he had received an invitation to attend a ball game that afternoon, which he never had declined positively.

How Battle May Turn.

Now, what will be the effect of these two contrary theories upon the mind of the jury?

If the jury believes Frank did the work in the morning, and not in the afternoon, although it be shown that he did not attend the ball game, the defense's theory of calmness upon the part of Frank in the afternoon may or may not be upset—for Frank may have been calm in the afternoon, nevertheless. One prop to sustain the defense's claim of calmness upon the part of Frank would be removed, of course, but not more.

But suppose the jury finally believes that Frank DID do the work in the afternoon, as is claimed, it likely would conclude that he hardly could have done it with the weight of Mary Phagan's murder upon his conscience, and the State would THEN be in the unfortunate attitude of having combated unsuccessfully a theory of the defense, thereby emphasizing the State's FEAR of it, and thus necessarily emphasizing its importance!

Here, then, we have a bit of evidence, introduced by the defense and attacked by the State, wherein the State stands to gain not nearly so much in the event it beats down the evidence as the defense likely must gain through the State's failure to beat it down.

The question naturally arises whether the State might not better have left the defense's clerical work theory alone, because, as important as it may be, in any event its importance is magnified many times if the State attacks it unsuccessfully.

Easy to Miss the Truth.

And STILL, to have left it alone entirely that——

And just after that fashion do juries, being composed of mere humans, thrash out these matters!

One never can tell which way evidence, once in, is going to cut!

One can not proceed to the forming of a definite and fixed final conclusion about ANY matter, until after he has weighed carefully ALL the pros and cons—that is, he can not so proceed without grave danger of missing the real TRUTH—the very thing he is trying his best to hit.

You do not know that 2 and 2 make 4, save in that you know—or think you know—that 2 and 3 make 5, and that 2 and 1 made 3.

The two latter things being true, you naturally conclude that 2 and 2 make 4. And that conclusion, being as well perfected as human ingenuity CAN perfect it, we call definite and exact knowledge!

But if mankind's knowledge had never extended beyond the fact that 2 and 1 make 3, we should not know at all, of course, that 2 and 2 make 4. We would be as apt to guess that 2 and 2 make 5, as that 2 and 2 make 4.

Knowing, however, that 2 and 1 make 3, and that 2 and 3 make 5, we conclude that 2 and 2 make 4.

After all, then, it is only through a process of elimination that we know even so much as that 2 and 2 make 4!

Which 2 and 2 Make 4?

Now that is all elementary (my dear Dr. Watson), of course, but it is upon that same theory that murder problems, particularly in cases depending, as the Frank case unquestionably does, largely upon circumstantial evidence, most frequently are unraveled.

The jury will be asked to believe that Frank did thus and so, because, through a process of elimination it will be shown that Frank alone could have done thus and so.

The jury also will be asked to believe that Frank did not do thus and so, because Frank, having done something else could not at the same time have done thus and so.

In other words, the State will insist that its 2 and 2 make 4, and the defense will insist as strenuously that its 2 and 2 make 4.

Both can not be right—figures do not lie!

Either the State's 2 and 2 make only 3, or the defense's 2 and 2 make only 3.

Which 2 and 2 make 4, and no mistake about it?

That's the jury's business to determine.

GIRLS WHO TESTIFY FOR DEFENSE OF FRANK

MISS REBECCA CARSON. MISS CORINTHIA HALL.

State Calls More Witnesses; Defense Builds Up an Alibi

In anticipation of the close of the defense's case, the State Tuesday afternoon subpenaed a number of new witnesses to be called in the event that Frank's character was put in issue. It was said that Solicitor Dorsey had prepared against this move by the defense by getting affidavits from many persons who claimed to know the defendant.

An effort by the State to obtain testimony reflecting on the morality of Frank was resisted strongly by the superintendent's attorneys Tuesday. Solicitor Dorsey failed to get the answers he desired from the witness, Philip Chambers, a 15-year-old office boy, but Attorney Arnold moved that all of the testimony bearing on this matter be ruled out, although the boy had testified favorably to Frank.

The lawyer threatened that he would move for a mistrial if any further effort were made to introduce testimony of the sort which he branded as irrelevant and immaterial, as well as being defamatory, slanderous and highly prejudicial. He was sustained in his objection.

Alibi Being Established.

The defense had progressed considerably in establishing what it proposes to make an iron-clad alibi for Frank on the day of the murder when court adjourned Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Emil Selig, Frank's parents-in-law, with whom he lives, both testified that Frank arrived home Saturday afternoon for luncheon at 1:20 o'clock. Minola McKnight, negro cook, swore to the same statement. This would have made it impossible, according to the contention of the defense, for Frank to have had any part in the crime as it is described by the negro, Jim Conley.

Allowing ten minutes for Frank to catch a car and get home, this would have necessitated Frank leaving the factory at 1:10 o'clock. Conley said it was four minutes before 1 o'clock when he got the cloth in which to wrap the body of Mary Phagan and carry it to the front of the factory and down the elevator. This gives but fourteen minutes for the disposal of the body, the writing of the four notes, two of which were found beside the body, and everything else that took place before Frank left for home, according to Conley.

Claim Conley's Story Impossible.

The defense maintains that it would have been absolutely impossible for Frank to have accomplished all this in the short space of time. The negro's own estimate of the time required to take the body downstairs and return to the office floor is five minutes. The defense brands this an absurdity. After this Frank washed his hands and told Conley to come into his office, according to the negro. This must have taken until 1:05, at least, Frank's lawyers will assert. From experiments they have made in the factory they may declare that it would require even longer.

Conley said that after he got in the office some one approached and Frank locked him in a closet. He was in there seven or eight minutes, he testified, bringing the time to 1:12 or 1:13.

After this there were yet the notes to write. Conley said that he wrote them in a minute and a half or two minutes, but Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, testified that it required the negro six or seven minutes to write one note dictated word by word. Assuming that Conley required only half the minimum time designated by Scott, it would have taken him twelve minutes to write the four notes at Frank's dictation, bringing the time to 1:25.

Says He Was Interrupted.

The writing was not continuous, as Conley said Frank interrupted him to make some erasures. He also said there was considerable conversation about Frank's wealthy folks in Brooklyn, about burning the body of the murdered girl, and other subjects. Conley also said that Frank gave him a roll of bills and then took them back.

The defense lawyers will be able to argue that this took at least an additional five minutes, bringing the time to 1:30—ten minutes after Frank arrived home, according to the alibi set up by the defense and at the same time he arrived home by the testimony of one of the state's own witnesses, Albert McKnight.

Solicitor Dorsey sought to impeach both Mr. and Mrs. Selig by comparing their testimony with that they gave before the coroner's jury. He found discrepancies which the witnesses laid to lapse of memory or to mistakes made at the inquest.

Mrs. Selig, for example, testified at the inquest that Frank wore the same suit of clothes Saturday, Sunday and Monday. She admitted to the solicitor that she was mistaken.

Cook Accuses Sleuths.

The detectives were given a torture-chamber reputation by Minola McKnight, the negro cook at the Selig home. The McKnight woman signed an affidavit telling of conversations she overheard that were extremely damaging to Frank.

When she got on the stand Tuesday she declared vehemently that the statements in the affidavit were all a "pack of lies," which she said were invented by her husband, Albert McKnight.

She swore, to the amusement of the spectators, that the detectives took her to the police station in the "control wagon" and that they threatened to keep her in jail if she did not sign the papers.

"Ah signed 'em to keep out of jail. Ah'd do mos' anything to keep out of jail," she said.

Other important developments of the day were the showing up of the court and chaingang record and reputation of C. B. Dalton, the witness who swore women frequently were in Frank's office; the announcement by the State of its theory that Frank planned the attack on Mary Phagan the day before it took place, and the testimony of Miss Hattie Hall and Miss Magnolia Kennedy, which was intended to show that this theory was untenable.

State Charges Premeditation.

Attorney Frank Hooper declared it as the opinion of the State that the pay envelope of Mary Phagan was refused Helen Ferguson Friday night and that it was refused for the deliberate purpose of getting the Phagan girl to the factory the next day.

Magnolia Kennedy testified that she was with Helen Ferguson when she drew her pay and that the girl did not ask for Mary Phagan's pay.

Miss Hall asserted that Frank tried to get her to work for him Saturday afternoon and also asked Harry Gottheimer, a Montag Brothers salesman, to come over in the afternoon to talk over some business matters, indicating that he had planned no crime or wrongdoing of any sort for that afternoon.

Several pieces of testimony during the day struck at the story of Jim Conley. Miss Hall said that Lemmie Quinn did not arrive in the factory before she left at 12:02. Conley said that Quinn preceded Mary Phagan, whom he saw next, and Monteen Stover, who entered the factory at 12:05 o'clock.

Miss Corinthia Hall and Mrs. Emma Clark testified that they were not in the factory shortly after 1 o'clock when Conley said Frank exclaimed that these two women were coming.

Gordon Bailey, a negro at the factory, denied many of Conley's stories in regard to incidents in which Frank was alleged to have a part.

MORE WITNESSES FROM DALTON'S HOME SWEAR HIS CHARACTER IS BAD

Can you come back this evening and do it?"

Conley: "Yes, I am coming to get my money."

Frank: "Well, I am going home to get my dinner now and you come back here about 40 minutes from now. It is near my dinner hour and I will go home and get my dinner and fix up the money."

Conley: "How will I get in?"

Frank: "There will be a place for you to get in all right, but listen, if you are not coming back let me know and I will take those things and put them down with the body."

Conley: "All right; I will be back in 40 minutes." Conley looks at Frank; Frank looks around. Then Conley gets up, stands by the chair, looks down at Frank and Frank grabs a scratch pad from the typewriter table, starts to make a memorandum from the paper, but his hand trembles so that he can't. Frank gets up to go.

Frank: "Now, Jim, you keep your mouth shut, you hear?"

Conley: "All right, I will keep my mouth shut and I will be back here about 40 minutes." Conley goes out.

When the statement was read, Dorsey was on his feet with an objection that the statement was inaccurate in that things that occurred Tuesday were mixed with the things of Saturday, and this evidence would be nothing but an opinion. Judge Roan ruled that if it was an opinion he would have to exclude it. Attorney Arnold said that he was going to introduce actual time tests.

Judge Roan—I will let it in, then, because under these circumstances it would be fact and not opinion.

Dorsey—This witness can not pass upon the time it took Frank to choke the little girl.

Attorney Arnold (jumping up, angrily)—Of course, he doesn't know how long it took Conley to choke her.

Judge Roan—I think I understand the question now. There is no evidence here, Mr. Arnold, that they went through the movements as rapidly as Conley did, and I think it would only be an opinion.

Arnold—These men went as fast as they could.

Judge Roan—But the negro never said how fast he walked.

Arnold—Is your honor going to bind us by the unsupported story of this negro?

Rosser—Your honor, experimentation is purely for establishing relevant accuracy. Even the negro could not go through the same movements again in the same length of time.

Dorsey—Your honor, these men were not under pressure. They had not just choked a poor little innocent girl to death. They were not trying to dispose of the body. I challenge them to cite any authorities. I submit that if anyone of less standing and ability than these two gentlemen should urge such a proposition, you would not pay any attention to it. I think it is a fact that they have laid down the proposition that makes you reluctant to decide against them.

Judge Roan—They or anyone else can not influence me to do anything wrong.

Dorsey—I didn't mean that. I have respect for their opinions, but my authorities are clear that non-expert testimony based on tests outside of court is inadmissible. If Dr. Owens can get up here and testify that he thinks Conley could not have done it as he said he did, he might testify that he could have committed the murder. Then we could produce witness after witness to show that Conley did have time to do what he said. Thus the absolute absurdity of the proposition is revealed.

Attorney Arnold read several authorities.

Judge Roan—What is the reason this witness can't be called back this afternoon? I will rule on it now, if you gentlemen insist, but I would rather you would produce your authorities, to see if you can find any Georgia cases."

Dr. Owens was excused until 2 o'clock.

More Witnesses Score Dalton.

O. A. Nix, of Gwinett County, was next called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Do you know C. B. Dalton?—A. Yes.

Q. Is he the man who was tried in Gwinett County for stealing?—A. Yes.

Q. Would you belive him on oath?—A. No.

Solicitor Dorsey declined to cross-examine the witness and he was excused.

Samuel Craig, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was next called and declared that he knew Dalton and would not believe him under oath. On cross-examination, Craig said it had been fifteen years since he had known Dalton. The witness was excused and B. L. Patterson, a farmer, of Gwinett County, was the next witness. Arnold questioned him.

The witness was excused and Robert Craig, of Gwinnett County was called. Under Attorney Arnold's questioning Craig declared he owned 800 acres of land; that he knew C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

Ed Craig was the next witness. He declared he was a farmer of Gwinnett County, who had known C. B. Dalton and would not believe him on oath.

T. L. Ambrose and J. P. Byrd, also of Gwinnett County, testified along the same line as their predecessors.

Q. How old was he when you were together at Pratt Institute?—A. Between 17 and 21 years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. I do.

Q. What is it—good or bad?—A. Good.

Q. What is your business?—A. Electrical engineer for a telephone company.

Q. Where did you know Leo M. Frank?—A. I was with him at Pratt Institute for four years.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

The witness was excused without cross-examination. Richard A. Knight, of Brooklyn, a consulting engineer and a college mate of Frank's at both the Pratt Institute and Cornell, was called by Attorney Arnold.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Where did you know him?—A. I was his college mate at Pratt Institue and at Cornell.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. What is it?—A. Good.

Former Office Boy Called by Defense.

The witness was excused and Frank Payne, a former office boy at the National Pencil Company, was called.

Q. How old are you?—A. 16.

Q. When did you last work at the pencil factory?—A. About 8 months ago.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. Nowhere.

Q. Were you there last Thanksgiving day?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember what kind of a day it was?—A. It snowed.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Q. Did you see Jim Conley when you left?—A. No.

Q. What time did you leave the factory on Saturday?—A. About 5 o'clock.

Q. Did Mr. Frank ever have any women there?—A. No.

Q. How many weeks were you there?—A. Five or six.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. What were your duties there?—A. General office boy.

Q. You spent most of your time in Frank's office?—A. Yes.

Q. How long since you quit working there?—A. It has been seven or eight months ago.

Q. Did you ever see any beer bottles around there?—A. No.

Q. You say Jim Conley was there last Thanksgiving morning?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you notice him?—A. He was sweeping around there until about 10:30 o'clock.

Q. What time did you leave?—A. About 11 o'clock.

Lemmie Quinn Called to Stand.

The witness was excused and Lemmie Quinn was called. Arnold questioned the witness.

Q. Where did you work?—A. I am foreman of the metal department of the National Pencil Company.

Q. Is that the department Mary Phagan worked in?—A. Yes.

Q. Do you recollect Memorial day?—A. Yes, it was a holliday at the factory.

Q. Do you recollect the occasion when Mr. Barrett discovered the spots on the floor of the metal room and some strands of hair on a lathe?—A. Yes. He mentioned those discoveries to me.

Q. Did he ever mention any reward he expected to get if Mr. Frank was convicted?—A. Yes, he mentioned $2,700 once and another time $4,500. He said he had been told that if Mr. Frank was convicted there wasn't any chance to keep him out of his reward. He wanted my advice. I told him I was not a lawyer and could not tell him.

Q. Had anyone noticed them before Barrett said he discovered them?—A. No.

Q. Do you know what has ever become of that hair?—A. I think the detectives have it.

Hair Might Have Blown Into Lathe.

Q. Is there any place in that room where the girls dress their hair?—A. Why, there's a little gas jet about ten feet from the lathe.

Q. This jet is between the lathe and the west windows, and a breeze might blow the hair across to this lathe, might it not?—A. Yes.

Q. What time did you get your pay Friday night before the murder?—A. About 20 minutes to 6.

Q. Do you recall the place near the closet where the negro said he found the body?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any blood there?—A. No.

Q. Well, if somebody had washed up blood in one place would it not have been the reasonable thing to wash it up in another?

"I object," said Dorsey. "That's a question for argument, your honor.

"It's such a good argument," said Arnold, "that I could not help it. I withdraw the question."

Court took a recess until 2 o'clock. The cross-examination of Quinn was to be taken up immediately then.

Argument on Admissibility Of Evidence Resumed.

The argument on the inadmisibility of Dr. Owens' testimony was resumed with the opening of the afternoon session. Attorney Rosser addressed the court.

"The rule at the beginning of this hearing was that we would be permitted to introduce any evidence that would tend to shed light on the mystery," he said.

Attorney Rosser at this juncture read a Georgia decision, tending to show evidence of this kind as being admissible. Judge Roan interrupted.

"That part of it is all right, Mr. Rosser," he said. "The only point is whether the conditions are similar."

Rosser: "All right, your honor, I will read you some authorities on that point."

Attorney Rosser read a decision in a case in which such an experiment had been allowed in which the jury could make allowances for the differences.

"We will show that this man walked as fast as he could," said Rosser. "Is it possible that this court could have so far forgotten its common sense as to permit this jury to draw its own conclusions?"

"Only God Almighty can made identity," Rosser continued, "and He hasn't done it yet. There are no two leaves alike in the forest. I said a while ago that it was a one-horsed lawyer who wrote the opinion cited by my friend Dorsey. With a few exceptions, you and I know the authors of law books have not common sense enough to make a living practicing law.

"I don't think any more unsound principle of law could be embodied in the statutes than the one involved here, and I don't want to get in the contempt of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals. A man's life is involved and important light might be excluded. One of the cases I was just showing you said in cases of dissimilarity that the judge shall instruct the jury to make allowances."

Dorsey took up the argument.

"I take no issue with Mr. Rosser," said the Solicitor. "about this Georgia case by the Court of Appeals. That was an expert matter—the question of how long it would take to stop an engine. In the Moran case it was a question of whether a stick was a deadly weapon or not. It was declared to be a case not admitting opinion evidence. The jury was just as capable of judging as the witness."

Raises Question of Strain.

Judge Roan: "They propose to prove by Dr. Owens how long it took persons he watched to go through the things Conley said he went through with. He is to state facts. I won't permit any opinion and I don't want to hear any more authority on it. It is a questio of whether they can go through substantially the same things as Conley said he did as regards speech, pressure, etc."

Dorsey: "Who can imagine the pressure they were under after murdering a little girl?"

Arnold: "All during this trial we have admitted this kind of evidence. We had policemen to say they had sat in the toilet and tried to see how much of the body of Mary Phagan Newt Lee could see. We asked the policemen—they asked the man."

Judge Roan: "Mr. Arnold, I don't want anything on that. I want to know whether there is enough similarity between the cases for the jury to draw its own conclusions."

Arnold: "We know, your honor."

Judge Roan: "Well, this man don't know how long Conley stood over the body."

Arnold: "We think that negro's statement was sufficiently graphic as to detail to admit of the comparison."

Judge Admits Evidence.

Judge Roan: "I have some doubts about it, but I will give the defendent the benefit of the doubt and allow the evidence to be admitted."

The jury was ordered brought in.

Lemmie Quinn was then recalled to the stand. Attorney Arnold continued direct examination.

Q. Where are you working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Dorsey took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. When did the last man bleed on the second floor?—A. The last man dangerously hurt was a year ago.

Q. Was that a year from now, or a year from the date of the murder?—A. I mean just what I said.

Q. Can't you tell us the truth about it?

Arnold: "He has answered the question."

Dosey: "I am cross-examining the witness."

A. I can't tell you the exact time.

Q. When was the last time you noticed blood from this man?—A. Some time ago. I don't rememebr how long.

Q. Did it look like this blood found in front of the ladies' dressing room?—A. Yes, except the last I saw there was darker.

Q. You told Mr. Starnes, Mr. Black and the other officers that you did not go into the factory on that Saturday?—A. Yes.

Q. You did not tell anyone about being in the factory until after you had been down to see Frank, did you?—A. No, sir.

Q. What did Mr. Frank say when you told him?—A. He said he remembered seeing me, but didn't remember the time.

Q. Didn't he tell you to keep it quiet until he had seen his lawyers?—A. He didn't say keep it quet. He said he would talk with his lawyer.'

Q. When was this that you saw Frank?—A. Tuesday after the murder.

Q. You were with the police all day Monday and said nothing about it?—A. I wasn't with them all day.

Explains Why He Was Led to Tell of Visit.

Q. Off and on, all day?—A. I saw them a number of times.

Q. Are you absolutely sure about what time you were in Frank's office?—A. Reasonably sure.

Q. Do you deny that you told Officer Payne that you had not been to the factory since Friday?—A. I do.

Q. You admit refreshing Frank's memory about your visit?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us just what you said.—A. I told him that I was there and he said he remembered it, but not the time except that it was after the time Mary Phagan was there.

Q. Didn't you tell him, "I don't like to be brought into it, but if it will help you, I will"?—A. Yes.

Q. He told his lawyers and said they advised him to mention it, and you told the police?—A. Yes.

Q. Did you talk to Barrett before the Coroner's injuest?—A. No; that was after the Coroner's inquest.

Q. Where is Miss Jefferson, who discovered these spots, working now?—A. At the pencil factory.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. She was there yesterday in the polishing department.

Q. You saw her?—A. Yes.

Q. Now, you didn't tell the officers you were in the factory on Saturday, April 26, until the following Saturday?—A. The next Saturday.

Q. Didn't you say this to the Coroner's Jury? That you told Frank you were there, and he said he would mention it to his attorneys to see whether it was favorable or not?—A. I don't know whether I said favorable or not.

State Seeking Flaws In Quinn Testimony.

Q. Why was it that you said it was between 12 and 12:30, and that you arrived at the poolroom at 12:25, and now say you arrived at Frank's office between 12:20 and 12:25 and arrived at the poolroom at 12:30?—A. I overlooked part of it.

Q. Didn't they ask you if you could be definite and you said you never looked at a clock until you got to the poolroom?—A. Yes.

Q. I will ask you now about the back door. Was it locked or barred?—A. Closed.

Q. On May 12, in the presence of Detectives Lanford, Starnes and myself, did you not sign this statement?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, didn't you say that there was a bar on that door that cut off communication from the upper floor and didn't you say it was customarily Kept closed?—A. Yes

Q. Now, didn't I go further with you and say this: "That the door that leads from the office floor to the floor above is kept closed," and didn't you say, "No, the door is closed with a bar across it." Now, isn't that true?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, was that bar across it?—A. On pay days.

Q. Now, Mr. Quinn, I want you to tell me how you make these statements to-day and made entirely other statements before the Coroner?—A. I don't know.

Wasn't Sure of Time; Figured It Out Since.

Q. You don't know? All right. Now, wasn't the first time you ever mentioned Devoe's you said that you were there at 12:30?—A. I told you that when I made my first statement. I was not sure of the time, but I have since figured it out.

Q. What time did you leave home?—A. Eleven forty-five.

Q. How do you know what time you reached the town?—A. I figured it out.

Q. Now tell me how you changed the statements you made on May 5?—A. I never recall certain things.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. When you made that statement, you had forgotten about going to Wolsheimer's, hadn't you?—A. Yes.

Q. Who reminded you of that?—A. My wife.

The witness was excused, and Oscar Pappenheimer was called. Arnold questioned him.

Q. What is your business?—A. Manufacturer of furniture.

Q. Are you a stockholder in the National Pencil Company?—A. Yes.

Q. For how long?—A. Since March, 1910.

Q. Have you been getting comparative statments from Leo M. Frank?—A. Yes.

Q. Up to the time the postoffice

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 75.

Georgia's Senate and Her Children

"And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me--

"Even so, it is not the will of your Father who is in Heaven that one of these little ones should perish."

Matt. 18:5-14.

A child—

A girl—

All men would help her.

House Bill No. 4 will save girls who are children in years.

The PRISON COMMISSION has favored the Bill.

The PENITENTIARY COMMITTEE of the House has approved it.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS with WHEATLEY of Sumter as Chairman unanimously recommended its adoption carrying a $30,000 appropriation.

And men believe that GOVERNOR SLATON approves the measure.

Yesterday, Tuesday, the HOUSE COMMITTEE ON RULES, whose Chairman is the Speaker of the House, BURWELL, with BLACKBURN of Fulton its Vice Chairman, put the Bill upon the calendar. Without this, the measure would have been lost. Among those helping to pass it were NUNNALLY of Floyd and SHUPTRINE of Chatham. And for it BARRY WRIGHT did splendid service.

THE VOTE WAS 115 TO 46.

The forty-six who opposed it did not do so with the thought of harming girls. They misunderstood. At heart—if they consider—they too approved the JONES-MILLS' BILL establishing the "Georgia Training School for Girls."

It is no one man's measure—no group of men can claim it—it is a law for the want of which girl children of Georgia have suffered.

You would not continue to hurt and degrade them—you, too, would help.

To-day the Bill is in the Senate.

The COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS of that body, whose Chairman is Senator W. W. STARK, now has it under consideration; and the Senate RULES COMMITTEE will doubtless see that it is heard.

The President of the Senate, RANDOLPH ANDERSON, of Chatham, has long favored a Reformatory for girls in Georgia.

And since the question of taxation and finances has been settled, the only argument against the bill has been removed.

Of it, The Morning News of Savannah has rightly said:

"It is hard to see how anybody can truthfully say that it would not profit the State to spend $30,000 in that way."

The Senate will doubtless pass the Bill as it was adopted by the House, without an opposing vote.

All Georgia will approve.

RURAL CREDITS INDORSED BY PRESIDENT

Wilson Says Next Task Ahead of Him and Congress Is to Give Aid to Farmers.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The following statement was issued at the White House to-day embodying the views of President Wilson on rural credits:

"Again and again during the discussion of the currency bill it has been urged that special provision should be made in it for the facilitating of credits of the farmers of the country who stand in need of agricultural credits as distinguished from ordinary commercial and industrial credits. Such proposals were not adopted because such credits could only be imperfectly provided for in such a measure. The scope and character of the bill, its immediate and chief purpose could not be made to reach as far as the special interests of the farmer requires.

"Special machinery of a distinct system of banking must be provided for if rural credits are to be successfully and adequately supplied. A Government commission is now in Europe studying the interesting and highly successful methods which have been employed in several countries of the Old World and its report will be made to Congress at its regular session next winter. It is confidently to be expected that the Congress will at that session act upon the recommendations of that report and establish a complete and adequate system of rural credits.

Nation's Welfare Involved.

"There is no subject more important to the welfare and industrial development of the United States; there is no form in which I would myself seek a greater honor or privilege to take part because I should feel that it was a service to the whole country of the first magnitude and significance. It should have accompanied and gone hand and hand with reform of our banking and currency system if we had been ready to act wisely and with full knowledge of what we were about.

"There has been too little Federal legislation framed to serve the farmer directly and with a deliberate adjustment to his real needs. We long ago fell into the habit of assuming that the farmers of America enjoyed such an immense natural advantage over the farmers of the rest of the world; were so intelligent and enterprising and so at ease upon the incomparable soils of our great continent that they could feed the world and prosper no matter what handicaps they carried, no matter what disadvantage, whether of the law or of natural circumstances they labored under. We have not exaggerated their capacity or opportunity, but we have neglected to analyze the burdensome disadvantages from which they were suffering, and have too often failed to renew them when we did see what they were. One of the chief and most serious of these disadvantages has been that he had not been able to secure the extended bank accommodations he every year stands in need of without paying the most burdensome rates of interest and saddling himself with mortgages and obligations of every kind which he fairly staggered under, if he could carry them at all.

Effects in Other Countries.

"In other countries systems of rural credit have been put into operation which not only have relieved the farmer, but have put his enterprises upon a footing of easy accomplishment. Countries in which agriculture was steadily languishing because wholly unprofitable have seen their farming lands blossom again and their people turn once more hopefully to the soil for a living. Our farmers must have similar means afforded them of handling their financial needs easily and inexpensively. They should be furnished these facilities before their enterprises languish not afterward.

"And they will be. This is our next task and duty. Not only is a Government commission about to report, which is charged with advising the Congress of the best methods yet employed in this matter, but the Department of Agriculture has undertaken a serious and systematic study of the whole problem of rural credits. The Congress and the Executive, working together, will certainly afford the needed machinery of relief and prosperity to the people of the countryside, and that very soon."

Wife of Umpire in Faint as Angry Fans Threaten Husband

LOUISVILLE, KY., Aug. 13.—Mrs. James Murray, wife of the American Association umpire, was under the care of a physician to-day as the result of a nervous shock caused by witnessing an attack on her husband by infuriated baseball fans. During the game between Milwaukee and Louisville yesterday, Umpire Muray gave Milwaukee the benefit of a close decision. Fans from the bleachers and grandstand rushed on the field. Pitcher Jack Powell caught an angry man who was about to hurl a heavy hammer at the umpire.

Mrs. Murray, sitting in a lower box near the scene of the attack, fainted and was carried to an automobile.

BEAUTY CONTEST WON BY MISS MARY CARL HURST

Wires luck to the 500,000 club upon learning her picture will adorn Booster Buttons.

Popular Society Girl's Likeness Will Adorn 'Half-Million' Club Booster Button.

Miss Mary Carl Hurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carl E. Hurst, of No. 62 West Twelfth street, is declared the choice of Atlanta for the girl whose smile is to help spread the city's fame.

In winning the "Booster Button" Beauty Contest she becomes the sponsor of the 500,000 Booster Club, and her face will adorn the lapel buttons with this catchy slogan:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll get you yet, 500,000 by 1920."

When the voting ended Tuesday, this popular young society girl had a total of 18,340 votes, a good margin over her nearest competitor. Though decidedly the choice of Georgian and American readers, she did not win without a contest, and her permanent lead was never assured until the last days of the campaign. Her admirers were constant, though, and after her picture appeared as a nominee a steady stream of votes for her flowed in.

Winner a Piquant Brunette.

Miss Hurst is a striking type of a vivacious brunette. Her face scintillates smiles of good cheer.

There were all types of beauty in the contest—perfect blondes with cerulean blue eyes, auburn-haired girls with pink cheeks, girls with dark brown hair and big dreamy blue eyes, and various shades of brunettes. But the smiling face must have fit the slogan for a "Half Million City" better than any, for she got the most votes.

An order for the booster buttons immediately will be placed. Though Miss Hurst is sponsor for the club, she will lose her identity on the buttons, except as she is remembered as the girl. And, of course, everybody will remember that.

Wires "Luck to 500,000 Club."

There will be no name on the buttons, only the slogan of the Half Million City. Miss Hurst is out of the city, but in acknowledgment of her election she wired:

"Luck to the '500,000 Club.'"

The next step will be a formal organization of the "500,000 Club." Before many days the beautiful buttons will be distributed and a concentrated effort to boost Atlanta's population to 500,000 by 1920 will begin.

SENATE PUTS AN O. K. ON SLATON NOMINATIONS

Confirmation of Moon and Steed Ends Fight Begun When Brown Took Seat.

Confirmation by the Senate Wednesday morning of four appointments made by Governor Slaton settled a controversy of long standing in regard to the official status of Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, as members of the State Board of Education.

The appointment of Professor Moon and Mr. Steed dates back to the administrations of Governor Hoke Smith and Governor Brown, who precipitated a bitter fight when he appointed Moon and Steed after an adjournment of the State Senate, which had upheld the Hoke Smith appointments. In the shuffle which followed the two Hoke Smith men were ousted to give place to Moon and Steed.

On recommendation of Governor Slaton, Moon and Steed will serve four years each, dating from September 5, 1913.

The appointments of the Governor confirmed by the Senate are as follows:

E. H. Callaway, of Richmond County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

Joseph S. Davis, of Dougherty County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for six years from August 3, 1913.

F. G. Bell, of Chatham County, to be member of the board of trustees of the Medical College of Georgia for a term ending August 3, 1917, vice P. A. Stovall, resigned.

Professor A. H. Moon, of Appling County, and Walter E. Steed, of Taylor County, to be members of the State Board of Education for four years from September 5, 1913.

Kentuckian Named Minister to Panama

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—The President to-day sent to the Senate the following nominations:

William J. Bryee, of Kentucky, to be Minister to Panama; Thomas Scott Mayes, of Kentucky, to be Collector of Internal Revenue for the Fifth District of Kentucky.

CULBERSON ILL; TARIFF IN PERIL

Loss of Texas Senator's Vote Would Put Wilson's Reform Bill in Danger.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—News of the serious illness of Senator Culberson, of Texas, to-day discounted the feeling of relief among Democratic leaders occasioned by the announcement of the appointment by Governor O'Neal, of Alabama, of Representative Henry D. Clayton, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, to the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Johnston.

Senator Culberson is reported in a serious condition in a Connecticut sanitarium and, although the anxiety felt by majority leaders concerning the vote on the tariff bill was much relieved by the news of Mr. Clayton's appointment, the fact that possible death or enforced absence of Senator Culberson will throw the vote back to the same alignment as that obtaining before Mr. Clayton's appointment is causing much concern.

Before Senator Johnston's death the vote on the tariff bill stood 49 to 47 in favor of the measure. His death reduced the Democratic majority to one. Thus no tie would obtain and the dependable Democratic vote of the Vice President could not in any event come in to play. The changing of one vote would shift the majority to the Republicans. With the appointment of Mr. Clayton as a Senator ad interim, the Democratic vote of 49 is restored.

Culberson has not attended the extra session of Congress on account of his health.

ILLNESS HALTS COURT.

JUDGE ROAN WILL WIN OVER ALL OPPOSITION

Some Protests From Men Who Want Atlantan Named Are Made to Governor.

Persistent rumor that Judge L. S. Roan, of the Stone Mountain circuit, is slated for the judgeship in the newly created Superior Court of Fulton County has created a stir among members of the Atlanta bar, some of whom have protested to the Governor, it is understood, that an Atlanta attorney should receive the honor.

Thus far the Governor has given no indication of the probable appointee, but the general opinion prevails that Judge Roan will be the man.

While Atlanta lawyers are loud in their praise of Judge Roan and his recognized abilities, they insist that the new Fulton County judgeship should be awarded to a Fulton County man. The petition which has been drawn by the members of the Atlanta bar in substance sets forth this contention and protests the appointment of any other than a Fulton County man as a reflection on the Atlanta bar.

In anticipation of the appointment of Judge Roan candidates for positions which will be affected by the transfer are also showing marked activity. Charles S. Reid, of Palmetto, Solicitor General of the Stone Mountain circuit, it is said, will succeed Judge Roan on the bench. Aspirants for the Solicitor Generalship are carrying on a quiet campaign for the office now held by Reid.

Among the members of the Atlanta bar who are contending that an Atlanta attorney should be appointed to the new bench are Shepard Bryan, Albert Howell, Jr., General Clifford L. Anderson and Hollis N. Randolph.

Insane Father Fights For His Little Child

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Becoming unmanageable, J. C. Johnson, of near Buford, has been brought to the Hall County jail to await trial on a lunacy charge. He is 28 years old and has a wife and baby. He took his baby from his wife and started to leave home when his mother interfered, he struck her in the face and then knocked his father down. He was overpowered by friends, who brought him here.

On a former occasion Johnson went to Atlanta and aimlessly rambled over the city, leaving home without a cent of money.

Fuller, Miss Gertrude Fuller and Miss Margaret Cary, society women, of New Orleans, who are spending part of the summer at East Beach, near Biloxi, Miss., narrowly escaped drowning when Miss Fuller got beyond her depth in the channel and the other women got into deep water trying to rescue her.

Frank Treloar, of Biloxi, jumped from a nearby pier, reaching them as they went down. Almost at the same time two New Orleans men, C. T. Oberling and V. J. Allenbach, reached the scene in boats.

'Save Me From Jail And Disgrace,' Plea Of Woman Beggar

Arraigned on the charge of soliciting alms on the street, a young woman giving her name as Mrs. Eugenia Ward, but who declined to give any information concerning herself or her people, Wednesday morning pleaded with Recorder Pro Tem Preston to "save her from jail and disgrace."

Mrs. Ward was brought before the court after she had refused to tell the Associated Charities anything of herself when that organization sought to aid her. She was taken into custody by the police Sunday night for asking alms of pedestrians in Peachtree street. Just prior to this, a fund had been made up for her at the police station where she appeared and related a pathetic story of need.

MASSEE CHARGES GRAFT IN MACON

Says City Pays Too Much for Electricity and That Officials Get Free Lights.

MACON, Aug. 13.—In an interview this afternoon W. Jordan Massee, president of the new electric power company, charges that the city of Macon officially, and the Macon Railway and Light Company, are in collusion and that for this reason his charges of excessive payments by the city to the Macon Railway and Light Company were whitewashed by Council last night.

Massee charges that Mayor John T. Moore and City Electrician Charles Humphries do not pay for lights used in their homes. He also says that Council whitewashed his charges because of the fact that the administration party has received liberal campaign contributions from the Macon Railway and Light Company in the past and expects similar contributions in the near future.

The charges are vigorously denied by officials.

Senate Kills Bill Providing for Early Primary Elections

The Senate Wednesday killed the House bill providing for early primaries, 21 to 18, agreed to the appropriation for the Department of Agriculture and the printing of bulletins and passed a number of local House bills.

President Anderson declared the Senate calendar virtually was clear with the exception of the inheritance tax bill, which probably will come up for passage late Wednesday afternoon.

Sharp debate occurred Wednesday morning on the primary bill, which was championed by Senator Tarver and others. Senator McNeill, of the Twenty-second, charged that the measure was an effort of politicians to legislate themselves back into office.

Takes Fine Rather Than Perilous Trip On 'Water Wagon'

Fearful that he might be jolted off the water wagon, aged L. A. Cherry, 58 Fraser street, Wednsday declined to climb on when he learned that the losing of his seat would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"I want to get aboard the water wagon and stay there," said Cherry, asking for probation.

Acting Recorder Preston consented, explaining that a fall would mean thirty days in the stockade.

"Well, judge, you know there's a chance that I might accidentally get bumped off, and so I believe I'll just take a fine," said Cherry.

THE PLAY THIS WEEK

Ralph Herz Scores Hit.

Ralph Herz, the musical comedy star, in an act that abounds in pathos, is the feature of a splendid bill at the Forsyth this week. Herz, although in a field entirely different from that in which he has been seen for years, does an excellent bit of character work in "Old Blind Joe," and the heartstrings of the audience get a good tug. His other impersonations are good.

Wood and Wyde, in a singing comedy skit, score a genuine hit. Their songs are catchy and their patter is above the average.

Milo Belden and company have a sketch which gets many laughs. Other acts are the Randalls, sharpshooters, who do some remarkable feats; the Adlas family, in a first-class acrobatic turn; Willie Weston and company, in an entertaining musical number, and the Pathe play.

HAS NAME OPERATED ON.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Miss Marie C. Schwabenhausen, a kindergarten teacher, had the Supreme Court in Brooklyn amputate the eight rear letters of her name. Now her pupils can handle it.

LAST PLEA FILED FOR PARDON OF M'NAUGHTON

Doctors Said to Have Made Affidavits That Arsenic Could Not Have Killed Flanders.

That one last desperate effort will be made to save the life of Dr. W. J. McNaughton, under sentence of death in the Chatham County jail, was indicated Wednesday morning, when Judge F. H. Saffold, of Swainsboro, representing McNaughton, filed affidavits with the State Prison Commission setting forth that the death of Flanders, alleged victim of McNaughton, could not have been caused by arsenic.

Judge Saffold arrived in Atlanta Wednesday morning. He filed the affidavits with the Prison Commission shortly thereafter and announced that he would remain in the city until the decision is handed down. The affidavits, it is said, were made out by physicians who assert that Flanders could not have died from arsenic.

According to members of the Prison Commission the new evidence will be carefully examined, probably Monday afternoon, preparatory to a final decision not later than Thursday.

Dr. McNaughton, it is understood, has expressed hope of being pardoned and has already prepared to re-enter the practice of medicine.

Murray County Court Held All Over Town

DALTON, Aug. 13.—Lawyers returning here from Chatsworth to-day state that Murray County Superior Court is being held "all over town."

The change of the county site before the building of a courthouse at Chatsworth has worked inconveniences. The court, held in a secret order hall there, has no place in the building for jury rooms, the result being the jurors, when they retire to deliberate, are conducted by bailiffs about 300 yards, where they are locked up in a church. The grand jury is meeting in a room in a bank near the courthouse.

The members of the association and invited guests left the Piedmont Hotel at 4:30 o'clock in automobiles, after a short business meeting at which routine matters were disposed of. A committee was appointed to look after the delegates to the Georgia Hotel Men's Association, which meets in Atlanta the middle of November. Lee M. Jordan made an interesting talk on "Hotel Legislation."

The members present were J. Lee Barnes, J. F. Lutton, A. R. Evans, Ed R. Brown, Wallace Boyd, A. R. Keen, Lee M. Jordan, R Frank Taylor, Fred Limmell, Frank Harrell and Fred Houser. Among the invited guests were Edwin F. Johnson and Dr. J. S. Kennedy.

MOTHER OF PRISONER CRIES OUT IN PROTEST; WIFE WEEPS AT QUERY

ceased delivering mail on Sunday, when did you get your reports?—A. Every Saturday.

Q. Since that time when have you been receiving them?—A. Every Monday morning.

Q. Did you get the report of April 24?—A. Yes.

Q. When?—A. Monday morning.

Dorsey toow the witness.

Q. Have you got the envelope?—A. No.

Q. Have you received one since?—A. No.

State Objects to Defense Statements.

Arnold, addressing the court: We will introduce these statements, your honor.

Dorsey: I object.

Judge Roan: It is admissible.

Ashley Jones was the next witness called. Attorney Arnold examined him.

Q. Do you know Leo M. Frank—A. Yes.

Q. Do you know his general character?—A. Yes.

Q. Is it good or bad?—A. Good.

Dorsey took the witness.

Q. You are an insurance agent, aren't you?—A. Resident agent for the New York Life.

Q. You don't know anything of Frank's practices at the pencil factory?—A. No.

Dorsey Denies That He Is Four-Flushing.

Q. How do you know him?—A. He took a policy with our company in New York and, as you know, an insurance company makes a pretty thorough examination as to the moral and physical standing of the applicant.

Q. You never heard of his taking young girls into his lap, did you?

Arnold interrupted—Your honor, I think that question is outrageous. We are dealing with the date of April 26. We are not responsible for the lies and slanders circulated by cracked-brain extremists. All sorts of things have been circulated since this murder occurred.

Judge Roan—He can't ask him about anything that happened prior to the date of this murder.

Dorsey—Your honor, I am not four-flushing a bit. I am going to present a witness to prove these charges.

Arnold: "He couldn't prove it, even if it were true. These statements are all lies. If this matter comes up again I am going to make a motion for a new trial."

Dorsey: "You can take that up when I present the witness."

Mr. Dorsey (to the witness): Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank being caught with a girl in Druid Hills?—A. No. We had an investigator on the case and he never found any such thing.

Q. The members of your company took a great interest in this case? And wrote to the Grand Jury to indict Conley, did you not?—A. Three of us did.

Mother Cries Out Agonized Protest.

Q. Who were they?—A. Robert Leopold Cooney, Mr. Clark and myself.

Q. Was that not unusual?—A. We have not done it before, but we would do it again in the interest of justice.

Q. Mr. Jones, did you ever hear of Frank taking girls on his lap?

At this question Mrs. Rea Frank, mother of Leo Frank, interrupted, shouting to the Solicitor, "No, and you didn't, either."

Mrs. Frank broke into tears, and crying "My God, my God," was taken from the courtroom.

Q. Did you ever hear of him putting his arms around Miss Myrtice Cato?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him going in the dressing room where little Gertie Jackson was in September, 1912?—A. No. (Much of Mr. Dorsey's questioning is unprintable.)

Q. Did you ever hear of Mrs. Pearl Dawson going there to get her pay and of him putting his hands on her little girl and of Mrs. Dawson throwing a monkey wrench at him?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him getting familiar with a Mrs. Winggold?—A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of him having suggestive pictures on the walls and of him slapping girls?—A. No.

The witness was excused.

At this point Solicitor Dorsey asked Judge Roan to order Daisy Hopkins said as he was informed she was preparing to leave town.

Deputies Start Search For Miss Daisy Hopkins.

Dr. W. D. Owens was then recalled. Arnold questioned him.

Q. Dr. Owens, you heard the statement that was read here this morning. You and Mr. Walker used this document in making your experiments did you not?—A. Yes.

Q. Leave out the eight minutes the negro said he was in the wardrobe and the time he said he consumed in writing the notes—how long did it take you to go through the performance just as Jim Conley related it?—A. Eighteen and one-half minutes.

Q. How fast did you do it?—A. As fast as we could.

Q. Including the time the negro said he was in the wardrobe and allowing ten minutes for writing the notes, how long did it take?—A. Thirty-six and one-half minutes.

Hooper took the witness on cross-examination.

Q. Did you read this paper while you were making the experiments?—A. No. Mr. Hass did. I held the watch. Mr. Hass would read each movement that Conley said he made and then we would carry itout in detail.

Q. He had to give specific directions and then the act would be done?—A. Yes, most of the time. Sometimes directions would be anticipated.

Q. That is just what I wanted to know. Now, if the man who was doing this originally was doing it right along without any directions, couldn't he have done it much quicker?—A. Possibly. I don't think there would have been much difference, though.

Re-enacted Movements As Fast as They Could.

Q. Did you have the man who was doing this get excited?—A. No, we just went through the movements as fast as we could.

Q. This would take you a pretty good time at the foot of the elevator, would it not?—A. A minute.

Q. You didn't have any body to drop, did you?—A. No.

Q. Those knots which were tied around what was supposed to be the body didn't come untied, did they?—A. No.

Q. There were no heavy weights to carry, were there?—A. The sack 107 pounds.

Q. Did you see it weighed?—A. No.

Q. I understood you to say awhile ago that there were several points where you lost time?—A. I was going to explain that a little later. There were one or two places where I told them they were losing time, but they said it all belonged that way, according to the negro's statement.

Q. What is this spot right here? (Pointing out a spot on the Bert Green diagram.)—A. Where the body was found. Grant, who was going through the actions of Conley, carried the sack back from here (indicating another point.)

Q. Now, did you say they dragged the body?—A. They dragged the sack from the elevator.

Q. Where did you get the idea of dragging?—A. I don't know. They just dragged it.

Q. Did you notice the effect of dragging on the sack?—A. No.

Q. What kind of earth was it drawn over?—A. Just the plain earth found in the basement.

A recess of a few minutes was taken while the jury took its usual afternoon soft drink.

Questioning Resumed When Jury Returns.

Hooper resumed his questioning when the jury returned from its brief recess.

Q. You have got the statements here that Conley went to the cotton box and got a piece of cloth. Where was that piece of cloth?—A. He went to the corner of the cotton room.

Q. Who went?—A. Mr. Brandt.

Q. Who is Mr. Brandt?—A. He is a gentleman whom I have known for a number of years. I don't know what his business is.

Q. Who was playing the part of Frank?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. What is his business?—A. He is a builder.

Q. You know his initials?—A. No; I don't.

Q. Do you know how long it would take for an excited man to tie up a bundle similar in size to a body?—A. No, I don't.

Q. "Mr. Frank, you will have to help me with this girl, she is too heavy," the man playing the part of Conley said that?—A. Yes.

Q. How long did you stop after he said that?—A. Well, we stopped as long as we supposed Conley stopped.

Q. Who was giving these instructions?—A. M. Herbert Haas was one of them.

Q. The attorney here for the defense?—A. The man sitting there.

Q. Who else?—A. Mr. Wilson.

Witness Tells of Carrying the Sack.

Q. Mr. Wilson, of the Atlanta Baggage and Cab Company?—A. Yes.

Q. That is Mr. Haas' company?—A. I don't know.

Q. So Mr. Haas gave directions about how long to pause?—A. There was no pause.

Q. Mr. Frank came running down?—A. Yes.

Q. Came pretty fast?—A. Yes.

Q. How did he pick it up?—A. Well, there were two corners to the sack.

Q. Were the feet sticking out?—A. Well, if you want an accurate opinion, I could pick up the sack as quick as I could a body.

Q. You know as a matter of fact that a body is very hard to handle?—A. Yes.

Q. Now Frank was very nervous and trembling? Was your Frank nervous and trembling?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. After he went a little way, he let her feet drop?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, who went after the key?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. Who was he?—Mr. Frank.

Q. Well, there were two Franks?—A. No.

Q. Well, wro did the talking?—A. Mr. Haas.

Q. Dr. Haas did the talking?—A. Yes.

Q. Who unlocked the switch?—A. Mr. Fleming.

Q. What part did he take?—A. He was just the elevator boy.

Q. Was it not a fact that it was difficult to read in that basement?—A. We read, all right.

Q. Who did the reading?—A. Mr. Haas.

Q. Oh, yes. Did you read without glasses?—A. Mr. Haas, who did the reading, did not have to wear glasses.

Q. Well, which Mr. Haas was it?—A. Herbert.

Confused About Way The Sack Was Carried.

Q. Well, doesn't he wear glasse?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Why, look at him now. Hasn't he got on glasses?—A. Yes

Q. When you got off the elevator, who carried the body?—A. Conley.

Q. Did he carry or drag the body?—A. I am a bit confused as to whether it was dragged or carried.

Q. Do you recall how he carried it the first time?—A. Yes, he took it under his arms supporting it at his abdomen.

Q. Are you at all positive of that?—A. Yes.

Q. You were in front?—A. Yes.

Q. Well, where did he stay?—A. Near the boiler.

Q. Where the body was found?—A. Yes.

Q. What did they do with the hat, the parasol and the shoe?—A. They were not there. Frank said: "What am I going to do with them."

Q. What response was made?—A. Just throw them right along there.

Q. What was thrown?—A. I don't know.

Q. Well, you remember every time it means Fleming and when it means Haas?—A. Yes.

Q. Who washed his hands?—A. Fleming.

Q. Who impersonated Frank in his office?—A. Fleming, he got in Frank's office and rubbed his hands on the back of his head.

Q. Now, all of a sudden, Frank looked out of the door and said: "Here's Emma Clark and Corinthia Hall"?—A. Yes.

Q. What did he do?—A. He came running back and then we eliminated the time Conley was in the wardrobe.

Q. Who was Corinthia Hall and Emma Freeman?—A. We did not have them.

Q. Well, after a while they let Conley out of the wardrobe that he wasn't in, and he said: "Gee, you kept me in there a mighty long time"?—A. Yes.

Q. Then they sat down?—A. Yes.

Dorsey and Attorney Exchange Angry Glances.

Q. About how far apart?—A. Two or three feet.

Q. Then Frank gave Conley a cigarette, and let him light it, then he put the cigarette in his pocket?—A. Yes.

Q. You actually had some cigarettes?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did you have any money in the box?—A. I don't think so.

Q. Then they wrote the notes?—A. No, we just took cognizance of that time.

Q. Then Frank reached for a green piece of paper and told him to write? Did you take out for that?—A. Yes.

During Mr. Hooper's cross-examination Herbert Haas, one of the attorneys for the defense put his feet on the opposite side of the table from Solicitor Dorsy. With an expression of anger, he made a remark to Solicitor Dorsey; Dorsey looked at him and said: "Did you speak to me?" Solicitor Dorsey arose to be closer to him. They exchanged a few words in an undertone. Solicitor Dorsey paled as if from anger, and resumed his seat. He and Mr. Haas exchanged several angry glances.

Q. When did you write this letter to the Grand Jury?—A. Some time ago.

Q. At whose instance?—A. At the instance of myself and at the instance of Mr. Leonard Maas, who is my attorney.

Reads Appeal for Conley Indictment.

Q. Why did you write it?—A. I will explain. The attitude of the public has been one of prejudice. Shortly after Mr. Frank was arrested I met Mr. Haas on the street.

Hooper (interrupting): "I don't care to know about that."

Attorney Arnold objected, but was overruled by Judge Roan.

Arnold took the witness.

Q. Dr. Owens, why did you write this letter?—A. I wrote it as a matter of conscience.

Attorney Arnold read the letter again, which was an appeal to the Grand Jury urging the indictment of Conley.

Q. Dr. Owens, you did not laugh as much during this pantomime as Mr. Hooper, did you?—A. No, we did not.

Q. If you did laugh, it was Conley's own testimony?—A. Yes.

Dr. Owens was excused and Judge Roan ordered another witness called, but it was reported that all of the witnesses had gone, so court adjourned until 9 o'clock Thursday morning.

The man was dying when Policeman E. F. Davis found him lying in the middle of the sidewalk. He was taken to Grady Hospital, but died before the hospital was reached. On a scrap of paper found beside Brown's body was a note stating that he was afraid he was going crazy, and rather than "live a living death" had decided to commit suicide. He asked that his body be given to a medical college for an examinatoin of his brain. In this note he gave his name and address.

On the other side of the paper was a note in which he declared that, if the public knew of his trouble, it would wonder how he had stood it as long as he had.

Brown was a man of unusual height, well cut features and hair tinged with gray. He was roughly dressed.

Their Married Life

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

"HELEN! Helen! HELEN CURtis!"

Helen turned in almost frightened bewilderment. To hear one's name called in a familiar voice on a street in Paris!

Then through the crowd of hurrying Frenchmen rushed a young woman who caught her eagerly by the arm.

"Oh, I KNEW it was you!" excitedly.

"Why—why Marion Berkley!" stammered Helen.

The next few minutes were spent in a breathless torrent of questions. What are you doing in Paris? How long have you been here? Where are you staying?

"Well, we can't stand here on the street," laughed Helen. "Let's go somewhere for tea—where we can really talk."

"Come to my studio! I've got the cuaintest, dearest old studio in the Latin Quarter! You must see it! Come, that bus will take us!"

The next moment they were on the top of the bus laughing and talking with the eagerness and abandon of their boarding school days.

When they graduated, Marion had come to Paris to study art, but it had never occurred to Helen that she would be here still. It was wonderful to see her again.

"Have you forgotten about our old ambition—how you were to write a great novel and I was to illustrate it? So you gave up your career to marry Warren Curtis?"

"It wasn't much of a career," laughed Helen, "since I hadn't written anything but school essays."

"But they always took the prize, so we thought you were destined to be a great 'Lady Authoress.' Remember how you used to write my essays while I did your algebra?"

"Yes, and that awful examination in which I failed because I couldn't work a single problem?"

"Here's where we get off," interrupted Marion, when they reached the upper end of the Boulevard St. Michel.

A Real Studio.

Around the corner into a cobble-stoned back street, and Marion opened a high boarded gate to a quaint old garden. Helen followed her filled with the joy of adventure. To see a real studio in the Latin Quarter—and above all, Marion's studio!

The garden was a charming tangle of unkempt vines and shrubbery which almost hid the broken statuary and the moss-grown basin of an old fountain.

A well-worn path led back to a rickety old mansion now given over to studios. Up three flights of a dark winding stairway, and Marion unlocked a door on which was tacked her card.

Helen gave an exclamation of delight as they entered a big barn-like skylighted room. It was a real studio, the kind one reads about in the novels of the Latin Quarter. The place was littered with unfinished sketches, casts, curious bits of old brass, pottery and armor.

"I suppose you'd like to get a dust-cloth and 'tidy up,'" laughed Marion. "But it's in the atmosphere over here—you get so you can't work when things are 'straight.'"

"Oh, but it's wonderful! And you have some really fine old pieces," stooping to examine an old carved chest, for Helen was always interested in antique furniture.

"Bought that in a little curio shop for five francs. We students never have any money, so we learn to pick up things for almost nothing."

"Just look around—I'll be back in a minute," as she caught up a small pitcher and ran out bareheaded.

Left alone, Helen gazed wonderingly around the studio. It was plainly the living room, sleeping room and workroom in one. An old leather screen partitioned off one corner.

The heavy beams of the roof were bare and besides the skylight there was only one window, which looked out on the tangled garden. In spite of the dust and confusion, Helen felt the charm of the place. It was strangely quiet and peaceful, for in the shut-in garden, down this little back street, not a sound of the city was heard.

Marion came in now, breathless from her run up the steps, with a pitcher of cream and a bulging brown paper bag from some nearby shop.

"Remember our stolen midnight suppers at school?" as she cleared the table of paint brushes and drawings, and brought out the teacups and an alcohol lamp.

A Delightful Tea.

The bag held some delicious French pastry and a tiny pot of cream cheese. Helen wondered if, since the nights of the stolen suppers, she ever had enjoyed anything as she did this impromptu tea.

Marion told of her first three years of study and the last four of work—trying to make for herself a place in the art world here.

"I suppose the chances of success would be better anywhere else," musingly, "for there are so many workers here—so many that are talented. But I've grown to love this life. There've been times when I've been hungry, yet last winter I refused a good post as art teacher in a girls' school in Boston. I'd rather struggle along here hoping for the big success," with a wistful smile, "that may never come."

"But surely you're not dependent on your work?" asked Helen, anxiously. "I thought your father left a great deal of property."

"It was all mortgaged. After everything was paid off there was only a few thousand dollars, and that's gone long ago. For the last four years I've lived on what I've made. Occasionally I sell a picture and for a few weeks I live gloriously well. The rest of the time I do without, but that's the life of the Quarter."

"But don't you ever worry about the future?"

Marion shrugged her shoulders. "You learn not to worry over here. You live for to-day—nobody thinks of to-morrow. If you have money you spend it—if you haven't, you borrow from some fellow artist who has—or do without. You see," whimsically, "how it simplifies life."

"But when you grow older—when you're not so strong and young and hopeful? Shouldn't you try, Marion, to save something now?"

"Nobody saves in the Latin Quarter—you can't. When you've got a few extra francs you lend them to some poor devil to keep him in his studio. Nobody thinks of getting old—we only think of painting the great picture of the year—winning the Academy prize. Most of us never will—but we can all have the joy of dreaming."

There was a moment's silence. Then, as though to change to more cheerful thoughts, Marion went on hurriedly.

An Invitation.

"I want to take you to dinner some evening to Mme. Jouven's, a cheap restaurant here in the Quarter. You'll find it crowded with art students, and you'll see what jolly, carefree Bohemians we are."

"Oh, I should love to go! I've heard so much about those places."

"I'll give you the address now," scribbling on a slip, torn from the brown paper bag. "Come any evening that you and Warren feel in the mood—you'll almost always find me there. Mme. Jouven is a friend to all the art students. When we have money—we pay her. When we haven't—she credits us on her friendly slate."

"I wish you were here in the winter—the long winter evenings at Jouven's are so wonderful," musingly. "We furnish our own cabaret—dance, sing, recite until almost midnight. Then we all go to some one studio and have supper. If any one has just sold a picture or received a check from home—we have a feast. If not, we have just as much fun on a green salade and a few bottles of vin ordinaire. Wait, I'll show you a sketch of a studio supper."

"There! It isn't finished—but you can get the spirit. It's supposed to be Craig Stilton's studio—a party we had there last winter."

Helen was far from being an art critic, but instantly she felt the atmosphere of this picture. The great gloomy studio, the shadowy corners, and the uncertain candlelight which lit up the faces of those gathered around the midnight supper.

"Yes, it isn't bad," mused Marion, in response to Helen's enthusiasm. "I must finish that. But there are so many pictures of studio life—one of that type has to be remarkable to get any recognition. Do you like this?" drawing out another—a street scene of a push cart market. "It isn't finished either, but I think the coloring's good."

She brought out more canvases—most of them unfinished, but all with a certain interest and atmosphere. Helen was so absorbed that it was almost 6 before she realized it. What if Warren should get back to the hotel first and be worried?

Helen Hurries.

Marion, bareheaded, took her down the street, made her promise to bring Warren to Madame Jouven's some evening that week, put her on the bus, and stood waving her a good-bye from the corner.

How young Marion seemed, was Helen's strongest impression. How care-free—how full of the sheer joy of living. Although they were the same age, Helen felt curiously older, as though her life was half lived; while Marion's seemed only beginning, with the possibilities of a great success still before her.

There are times when every married woman, however much she may love her husband, thinks of the possibilities of some independent career that might have been hers had she not married.

And now as Helen left the bus and walked slowly toward the hotel, in the background of her thoughts was a stirring of vague dreams and ambitions that had long lain dormant.

His Misfortune.

The magistrate had the misfortune to be cross-eyed, the result of which at times was rather amusing. One day he had three prisoners before him.

"What's your name?" he inquired of the one to the left.

The man on the bench turned round quickly. "I was not addressing you, sir!" he snapped.

At this the one in the center, quaking and trembling with fear, stammered:

"I—I—I never opened my mouth, sir!"

Mirrors and Millinery

As It Is for Her Now - - - - - - - - - and Used To Be

Nell Brinkley Says

A LITTLE girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was eight and her legs were just longing out and she wore little pinafores with blue flowers on 'em, tied over her meager little shoulders. She sat on a gray rock with her little bare, scratched feet hanging down into the cool sedges close to the stream side.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a sailor hat. Its outermost ring of straw was ripped loose and flipped up and down with a nonchalance that only a ring of ripped straw on a hat can show.

Down into the green mystery of the water she looked sometimes. Here her round pinky face lay smooth, with the sailor hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery!

A big girl was deeply interested in mirrors and millinery. She was twenty-eight and her legs now were very long and she wore a brocaded blouse with an Elizabethan ruff over her round, beautiful shoulders.

Her hair was all in black rings around her face. On top of the black rings was a tulle hat. In the tip-top of its crown was the charming name of a Paris maker of chapeaux. On its tip-top was a great butterfly bow poised with half-folded wings. Into the silver mystery of the mirror she looked sometimes. Here her slender, lovely face was held—with the tulle hat above it. A maid and a mirror and millinery.

It was the same girl!

CUPID'S PLAY CROP

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

TOURISTS' guide books give explicit directions for those who wish to go to mountain or seashore suitably dressed for a climb or a swim.

Don't wear thin-soled shoes; don't wear long-trained skirts; don't wear silk hose; don't wear garments built exclusively for show; don't wear this and don't wear that; page upon page for the guidance of the girl who is packing her trunk, and not a warning about a certain little adornment commonly worn in summer in a most conspicuous place.

Here is the warning which they willfully omit: Don't wear your heart on your sleeve!

Beware the Moon.

A sole too thin, or a bonnet too perishable never returned from a summer outing showing such irreparable signs of wear as the heart that is worn on the sleeve. They may be replaced; it can never be. The damage to the shot and the bonnet are forgotten. One seldom entirely recovers from the damage done to one's heart.

Few things said in the moonlight are said seriously. A boy, a girl, a moonlight night with its poetic accompaniment of silence and solitude; and Cupid chuckles with impish glee. He knows a spell has been thrown over the man which will cause him to say things he does not mean. He knows also that the moonlight will make of the most doubting girl the most credulous. It is a rare setting for his annual play crop, and he raises his bow and takes careful aim at the heart worn so conspicuously, and so unguarded, on the girl's sleeve.

A play crop for Cupid, but seldom a play crop for those who are his victims.

The man, after the manner of his sex, recalls other moonlight nights with other pretty girls, on which were said and done the same things. Repetition of the story of love never increases its sacredness, and he has learned not to take himself too seriously. He enjoys making love. He makes it, and he forgets it.

She Is Blind.

The girl, after the manner of her unfortunate sex, wants to love and to be loved, and is so blinded by this longing to behold her lover that there is none but welcome lights in her eyes; not one little searchlight to seek out signs of insincerity.

She hears and believes, and returns from her vacation with her heart singing. She counts the days till that when he said he would come, and never learns till she has counted them off, over and over again, with her tears, that that which to her was seriousness was to him nothing more than a season's nonsense. He never comes, he never writes, and when she has waited till she can wait no longer she writes little tear-stained letters to me.

"What shall I do?" she cries. "I love him, and his silence is breaking my heart."

There is nothing she can do save wait patiently and quietly for the healing hand of time. Her heart has been battered, and the next season she doesn't wear it so conspicuously unguarded on her sleeve.

School Children's Luncheons

Selected by EDWIN MARKHAM

THE hygienic providing of school lunches is a thing in the front rank of educational aids. Mrs. Louise Stevens Bryant, in "School Feeding," gives the history and practice of this sensible custom at home and abroad. I quote from her opening pages:

"More and more are we coming to understand that education is for life, and that physical health is essential to full mental and moral development and effective living. To the extent that the body fails to serve the will, the will is paralyzed and the best emotions rendered useless. The establishment of the physical health has therefore come to be regarded as a most important part of education. To a very large extent health must depend on right habits of eating.

"The custom of providing meals for children at school has, in recent years, become well established both in America and Europe. In America the work was begun first in the high schools. For several years midday meals have been provided for high school children in many of our cities and larger towns. It is only recently that the more important task of providing meals for the smaller children has been attempted.

First in Germany.

"At present, meals are provided in one or more elementary schools in nearly half a hundred cities. In Europe this work was begun earlier than here—in Germany a century and a quarter ago—and the school luncheon is now a part of the daily program in the elementary schools of many of the most progressive countries.

"There is little doubt that the school luncheon idea, now well rooted in this country, will spread very rapidly, especially in our cities. In our large cities and smaller industrial towns many children come to school having had little or no breakfast. Many have eaten their breakfast at a very early hour, some as early as 5 or 6 o'clock, and so become hungry and faint before the noon hour. I have known many school children whose daily schedule of meals consisted of a light breakfast at 6 or 7 o'clock, a cold dinner bolted at 2 or 3 o'clock, and supper at 6 o'clock.

"Again many parents, instead of providing a luncheon for their children at school, give them small amounts of money with which to buy food, and which the children spend for unwholesome and unnutritious stuff sold at large profits from push-carts and corner stores.

The Main Object.

"The object of the school feeding movement is to supply such facilities as will make it possible for every child to secure an adequate, wholesome noon meal, despite the fact that he is attending school.

"The first provision of school meals of which we have record was made in Munich in 1790, when municipal soup kitchens were started by Count Rumford as part of his international campaign against vagrancy. The kitchens were designed to meet the needs of the people of all ages, and from the start the schools were encouraged to send groups of children to them for a warm meal at noon. This work was long unorganized but never discontinued, and in the seventies the obligation of providing meals was put upon the school authorities. From this ancient beginning the school feeding movement spread throughout the German Empire until now it is national in scope, and about half of the cities contribute to support wholly or in part school breakfasts or dinners.

Victor Hugo a Pioneer.

"School feeding began in France in 1849. The founder of school feeding in England was Victor Hugo, who, in the early sixties, provided warm meals in his own house in Guernsey for children attending a nearby school, and so gave the initial impetus which led to the establishment in London in 1866 of 'The Destitute Children's Dinner Society.'

"From these early beginnings in Germany, France and England, the work of school feeding has spread, until now, grown beyond the local issue, it has received national recognition and been made the subject of national legislation in France, Switzerland, Holland, Great Britain, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Finland, Austria and Belgium. It has also been started in Spain, Russia and the United States.

"The movement has attained great momentum in America in the last twenty years. The problem confronting those who have at heart the welfare of American public schools is no longer, 'Shall we have school luncheon?' but rather, 'How may we best guide this movement so as to develop all of its poetical benefits and at the same time avoid possible dangers?'"

Enjoyed Smoke.

Gibbs—I went on a railway journey the other day and took a box of cigars with me.

Nibbs—Well, I suppose you had a good smoke.

Gibbs—Aye, I had that; but when the train had started I found I had no matches.

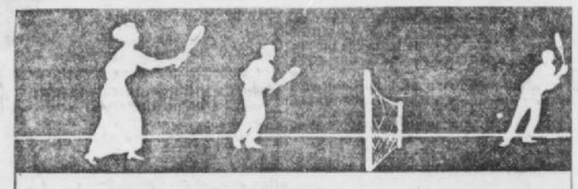

Nibbs—No matches, and yet you enjoyed a good smoke? How did you manage for a light?

Gibbs—Well, you see, I opened the box, took out one, and that made the box a cigar lighter.

Poor Appetite.

The Cleric—Just think, my dear lady, one missionary to every 15,000 savages!

The Dear Lady—Dearie me! Well, they must have poor appetites or very big missionaries!

Eat This Food During Summer

Be careful what you eat during hot weather. What you need is food that nourishes but does not heat the body.

Faust Spaghetti fits right into that class. It is a high gluten food—a bone, muscle and flesh former—but contains practically no fat, therefore cannot heat the body.

FAUST SPAGHETTI

makes a savory, appetizing dish. It can be served in a great many ways that appeal to the palate. It is easily prepared—it makes a nutritious, non-heating meal during the summer. Write for free recipe book, "Spaghetti and Its Uses." Faust Spaghetti put up in air-tight, moisture-proof packages.

One of the Greatest Mystery Stories Ever Written

By ANNA KATHARINE GREEN.
(Copyright, 1913, by Anna Katharine Green.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"And may I inquire who this person is?" returned Mr. Gryce.

"A physician and a friend of mine; Dr. Walter Cameron, of No. —— Fifth avenue."

No name could have awakened a greater surprise in Mr. Gryce's mind. Why, he could hardly have said. The two doctors were practitioners in the same school, and Dr. Cameron had owned to an acquaintance with Molesworth. Yet he was the last person Mr. Gryce had expected to hear mentioned in this connection, and it seemed in some way to lend quite a new aspect to the affair.

"But Dr. Cameron is out of town. He has gone with his bride to Washington, and I do not think he has yet returned."

A shadow passed over the other's stern face.

"I must see him, nevertheless," he insisted. "You have not yet shown me your warrant. Consider me as a man under your surveillance merely and go with me to Washington. You will not regret it." Then seeming to recognize the unreasonableness of what he asked, he added: "You are following the commands of a superior. Let me see him."

"You shall; but do you object to telling me what you want of Dr. Cameron?"

Julius Molesworth's face lighted up, a gleam flashed from that strange eye of his and he looked almost handsome.

"I could not make you understand, but—did you ever have any great ambition?" he suddenly asked, with rather a doubtful look at the elderly and somewhat benevolent countenance before him.

Mr. Gryce smiled.

"You may talk to me as if I had had," he rejoined.

His Secret.

"Listen, then. I am on the verge of attaining mine. I have a case, peculiar, striking in its complications, known to all the profession. It has hitherto baffled the skill of every man who has attempted to handle it. Even Dr. ——'s interest was aroused, and he gave his best attention, but to no avail, and now I, I know that I have found the requisite remedy, discovered the necessary course of treatment. You will find it all on that paper. And with this prospect before me, this certainty, I may say, you ask me what I want of Dr. Cameron, the ablest man I know among the rising practitioners of the day."

"I think I understand," said Mr. Gryce, "but put it into words. I want to know just what ground I am standing on."

"Well, then, if I must lose my liberty, this poor woman must not lose her life nor science the prospect of a valuable discovery. Though I should have preferred to make my own experiments, I shall be at comparative ease if I can get some one upon whose judgment I can thoroughly rely to make them for me. But where is the man I can trust? I can think of but one, Dr. Cameron. He has the ambition and he has the great qualities of mind necessary to carry out the test I propose in the face of all the opposition he will receive. To him, then, I wish to consign this case immediately. Have I made myself clear to you and is there any hope of my wishes being complied with?"

A carriage was at the door and they rode to police headquarters. What passed there it is not necessary to relate. Enough that in half an hour they emerged, and, getting again into the carriage, told the driver to take them to Jersey City.

The journey to Washington was decided upon.

As Mr. Gryce was buying the tickets, Dr. Molesworth whispered in his ear:

"One other thing is requisite. We must surprise the doctor in his room. I am no favorite of his, and I doubt if he would listen to me if he had opportunity to escape my arguments. Promise me you will take him unawares—as you did me."

The detective pocketed his change and turned. The prospect of traveling was evidently agreeable to him. He looked quite young.

"We will surprise him," he replied. "I have no wish to do anything else."

Did he anticipate making any discoveries in Washington?

At the Hotel in Washington.

THERE are dark pictures and there are bright ones. From the doctor's dull office let us pass to a sunny room in Washington, where, in the light of a declining sun, Dr. Cameron sits gazing with tender eyes upon his bride as she toys with a card of invitation which has just been handed in.

"You will have to answer it," she averred, closing the fingers of her right hand with a look of pain; "my rheumatism is no better."

"And what shall that answer be?" he inquired. "Yes or no."

For a moment she looked thoughtful; then she smiled.

"You enjoy these gayeties," she remarked; "let us make the most of them."

"And do not you enjoy them, too?"

She sighed, drew herself up proudly and replied:

"I enjoy being with you anywhere, even in crowds."

He knew she did; he knew that, contrary to all his expectations, he had a loving wife, and his heart warmed within him.

"Genevieve," he remarked, "you are coming out from under the shadow. You look almost brilliant to-day."

"Do I?" her look seemed to say. And moved by that look as he never expected to be by that of any woman, he arose and drew her down by his side, where he could contemplate her beauty to his heart's content.

For Genevieve Cameron was beautiful, far beyond what Genevieve Gretorex had ever promised to be. Even a stranger must acknowledge this fact, and how much more the husband, to whose love and devotion this pleasing change was undoubtedly due. Not only was her glance brighter and her smile more winning, but a physical change had taken place in her which altered her whole expression. He was thinking of this change now as he watched her color come and go under his gaze. He was thinking of it and wondering at its cause as he had often done since it was first revealed to him on the morning following his marriage. Though he showed no evidence of abstraction, but continued his conversation with unabated animation, he was in reality living over the astonishment and perplexity of that extraordinary moment.

Let me state what he recalled. The day was the one after his marriage and the time noon. He had just come in from a short walk. He had left his bride asleep on the lounge, worn out with the fatigues of their night journey and some trouble which he had not been able to fathom. He thought her still resting, so dark was the room and so void of any sound of welcome. But just as he was about to approach on tiptoe to the lounge where he had left her, he heard a low and smothered exclamation at his side, and turning saw the figure of his wife bending toward the mirror that hung between the windows. She was looking at herself, and the weird reflection of her countenance stared wildly out upon him as her voice rose almost to a shriek, crying:

An Amazing Change.

"Light! Give me more light!"

Astonished, and yet more troubled, for he had not forgotten the fainting fit with which she had sealed the varied experiences of the night before, he rushed to the windows and hastily raised the shades. A low cry from his wife drew him back to her side.

"Look at me!" she exclaimed, with her two hands clapsed over her face and her fingers buried deep in her hair.

"What is it?" he asked, and then gave utterance to an exclamation himself, for the head thus bowed in seeming shame before him was white as snow, white as a woman of ninety, whereas on yesterday it had been a glorious brown.

The exclamation made her drop her hands, and for a moment they stood looking wildly upon each other; then he said:

"Genevieve, you have had a terrible sorrow or some terrible pain to produce such an effect as this. Which of the two is it, my poor darling? Speak, for I long to comfort you, whether it is grief or some fearful, unknown complaint."

Her answer had been a moan of joy, followed by a sudden burst of tears.

"Good God!" she murmured, below her breath, "how shall I account for these?"

The sweetness in her face had made him her ardent lover. Stooping, he took up a tress of this lightly flowing hair and softly kissed it. "You will not need account for them," said he, "their beauty is their best excuse;" and lifting her to her feet he led her before the mirror and bade her look.

She did so, and thus started at the transformation she beheld. From being a woman of simply fine appearance and noble air, she had leaped as it were into magnificent beauty; the fair skin, the dark eyes, the white hair forming a combination that could never be passed again in street or parlor without leaving an impression behind of marvelous loveliness. She saw it and he saw it, and while neither spoke there was a subtle interchange of thought between them which called out a wary dimple in her cheek which to his eyes finished the picture. He smiled over her shoulder and in one breath both said:

"My own mother would not know me."

"I must show you to my friends. When shall we go back to New York?"

A shadow fell upon the brightness of her face. "O, must we go back?" she cried. "I wish we could live here always." Then, observing his astonishment, she added, "I hate New York; I should be glad if we never had to see it again. There, I shall have only a part of you; here I have the whole."

What could any man but two weeks married say in answer. He stooped over and gave her a kiss, and then with that strange sensation we sometimes have of an intruding presence, he lifted his head and was startled to perceive a dark figure gazing on him from the doorway, whose countenance he did not at once recognize, so great was his anger and chagrin.

"Who are you?" he cried, leaping to his feet. "I thought our door was shut—" But here the figure, stepping forward, he beheld a face he knew, but little expected to see in this spot, and greatly astonished, he paused and waited, while the other, advancing still further, said:

"Your pardon. We understood from the hall boy that this was a public reception room." And with this Dr. Cameron became aware that a second intruder had entered and was standing behind the first comer. The face was unknown to him, nor did he look at it twice, his attention being directed toward Dr. Molesworth, who was saying:

"I have some business with you, Dr. Cameron. May I venture to tell you what it is?"

"Business with me?"

"Yes, sir."

The answer was brief and slightly abstracted, for his gaze had fallen on Mrs. Cameron and he evidently felt that surprise and involuntary admiration which every stranger now experienced in seeing her for the first time.

"My wife!" was Dr. Cameron's cold introduction.

Both gentlemen bowed and Genevieve arose. A flush of indignation was on her brow, and she looked almost threatening. But she contented herself with a short bow, so icy and repellent that Dr. Molesworth dropped his eyes, and from that moment forward ignored her very presence.

"I will not detain you long," were the words with which Dr. Molesworth introduced his subject. "That my business is important I leave to you to infer from the fact that I have journeyed all the way from New York to see you."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Fashions of the Moment

No. 1.

Charming fall model in taupe cachemir de soie. The double band drapery on the skirt finishes in a heavy frill above the waist front and back, and the wide armholes are the distinctive features.

Two modern Evening Gowns—The one of heavy brocaded black satin has a fish-tail train, and the skirt is caught in a high-slit surplice to girdle that forms the foundation of the waist that finishes in shoulder pieces of black chantily. Silver edges the scarf of black chiffon and brightens the gown.

The white gown has a bolero of net done in an applique trimming of iridescent beads; this ends in a long angel sleeve design at the back and is weighted down by a huge tassel of the iridescent beads. The skirt has a drapery of the beaded net—this starts at the left hip in a straight panel and is crossed by a draped panel extending completely across the front of the skirt.

AT THE MERCY OF THE INQUISITION

IT was growing dusk when the high priest of the Inquisition, followed by a couple of henchmen, descended the stone stairs leading to the subterranean prison cells.

The door of one of the cells was opened and the priest entered into the presence of a man in rags, lying bloody and almost unconscious on a dirty and damp bed of straw.

The prisoner was a Jew, who, although he had been tortured for a whole year, still refused to give up the faith of his fathers and allow himself to be christened.

"Rejoice, my son," said the priest. "You are to be thrown into the fire, that God alone may judge your soul. Perhaps He will be merciful to you. Tomorrow your body will be placed on a grill and roasted over a slow fire. It will only be two or three hours before your soul leaves for the next world. Then your suffering will end."

With these words the priest kissed the bloody, obstinate Jew, whereupon a henchman relieved him of his chains.

Then they left him and the Jew gazed at the closed door.

But was it really closed?

He suddenly thought he saw light through the crack and dragged himself painfully across the floor to see if this was really so.

Yes, the door gave way, when he pressed against it. It was open. The henchman must have forgotten to lock it.

The Jew peered out, and saw a long row of candles illuminating the hall. But in the distance everything was dark and silent.

Crawling on his hands and knees he felt his way along the wall. Not a sound passed his lips, for at the end of the hall he could just make out a dim light, undoubtedly an opening which meant freedom.

Suddenly his heart almost stopped beating. He heard steps approaching and pressed himself against the wall while a jailer went by carrying instruments of torture.

He recovered from his fright. For a moment he thought of returning to his cell, but the hope of freedom gave him fresh courage. Exhausted, he crawled slowly toward the place where he thought the opening must be. The corridor seemed endless.

Once more he heard steps, slow and firm. It was two inquisitors passing by and talking together.

His heart beat wildly and he shut his eyes. He lay flat on the floor, imploring Abraham's, Isaac's and Jacob's God to save him.

The men stopped at the very place where he was lying. One of them was gesticulating excitedly, while the other stood staring at the ground.

Was the torture to begin over again? The Jew thought he felt once more the red hot tongs tearing his flesh. Now the inquisitor was looking at him, but he seemed so taken up with listening to his colleague's words that he did not notice the trembling prisoner.

Slowly the two men went on. They had not seen him.

Forward once more! He must hurry toward the goal which meant freedom to him. On his hands and knees he dragged himself along through the endless corridor.

He felt cold air upon his face. There was a small door. He pressed his shoulder against it and it opened.

"Praise be the Lord!" he sighed, when he saw the starlit sky above his head.

He was saved.

Through the orange grove he would be able to reach the mountains before dawn.

Suddenly he felt himself seized by two strong arms, and, horrified, he looked into the face of the priest. His heart stopped and a bloody foam covered his lips as he realized that what he had passed through during the last hours was a new devilish torture invented by the inquisition, the torture of hope.

One Woman's Story

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XX.

MARY DANFORTH thrust the letter she had just received into her bag and climbed the stairs to her apartment. She clung to the banisters, for she felt weak and giddy. Softly she let herself into her own front door, but not so softly that her mother did not hear her and come out into the hall to greet her. The daughter forestalled any question by saying, as soon as she had kissed the elderly woman:

"Mother, dear, I am tired. If I do not stop to talk with you now I will have a quarter of an hour in which to rest before supper. So I will go right to my room and lie down. I will see you later, dear."

Without waiting for a reply, the girl hurried on to her own room. Here she locked her door noiselessly that her mother might not hear the click of the bolt and suspect that something was wrong. She wanted to be alone to read her letter slowly and carefully. She had read it rapidly downstairs, after taking it from the vestibule letter box.

Gordon Craig wished to inform her of his engagement to a girl in San Antonio, a girl he had met six months ago. He had not forgotten the promise he and Mary had given each other that "if they continued to care for each other" until he had "made good" they would become formally engaged. But neither had he forgotten that other promise that they were not to consider themselves bound if any other love came into the life of either. The "understanding"—that is what he called it—had been, after all, but "a boy and girl affair," yet they had been such good friends that he wanted her to know of his newfound happiness. If he thought for a moment that she would be hurt by his action in this matter, he would be very sorry, but he was sure that she, like himself, had outgrown what was, after all, but a passing fancy. She must have noticed the change in his letters and that, for months, they had been those of a friend; that he had taken it for granted that now that each had seen more of life, and had been absent from the other long enough to shake off a youthful infatuation, friendship, and friendship only, existed on either side.

The change in his letters! Mary almost laughed aloud at the irony of the situation as she remembered the construction she had put upon his silence. She had been so sure of him, so certain that he was silent on the topic of their love only because he was planning to surprise her with the news that he would soon be able to claim her.

She despised herself when she remembered her thoughts, her musings—how she had whispered to herself each night, "He will write the truth to me soon," how her heart had beaten high at the hope, and how, only this afternoon, she had said to herself that her practice as stenographer and typewriter might make her of assistance to him after they were married.

She had even thought that if she could help him in this way it might spare him the expense of a private stenographer later on, when his business had grown large, and that would help pay for her mother's board and lodging in their home. Not that Gordon would think of that, she had mused; he was so good, so generous! Oh, what a blind fool she had been! What a blind fool!"

Sinking into a chair she buried her face in her hands. The window in her tiny room was open, and the people in the apartment across the narrow court were talking. What harsh voices some women had! Then she remembered what disagreeable intonations Elizabeth Preston had and how patronizing she had been. What was it that she, Mary Danforth, had admitted to Elizabeth only a few minutes ago? Oh, yes, that she was going to give up her work, that she was, perhaps, going to be married! She started to her feet and wrung her hands. Wounded love, aching heart, shattered hopes, all were overwhelmed in this supreme moment by tortured pride.

Her mother knocked at the locked door, tried the knob, said, "Oh, please excuse me!" and went back down the hall to the kitchen. Mary knew from the tones of the elderly woman's voice that she was hurt or offended at finding her daughter's door closed against her. This knowledge added a sense of annoyance and almost of guilt to the wretched girl's misery. From her childhood it had worried her to know that she had displeased her mother. The elderly woman must be pacified. The daughter must summon all her strength to face the catastrophe that had befallen her, and yet to spare the parent whom she loved.

Mary Danforth thrust Craig's letter into her desk, and, as she did so, her eyes fell upon a postscript on the back of the sheet. The words stood out clear, yet the fingers that penned them must have been a bit unsteady, for the chirography wavered somewhat. Perhaps the writer's heart had failed him for a moment. The girl read: "Send me a line, please, when you can. I want to be assured that you understand the situation. I would not hurt you for worlds."

Mary uttered an exclamation, half sob, half laugh. Her hand shook with anger as she held the letter to the gas flame and watched it burn, putting her foot upon the charred fragments as they fell to the floor.

"I will write to him!" she muttered. "But not until I have some news of my own to tell him."

She remembered that she had not taken off her hat, and started to draw out her hatpins, then paused, a sudden look of almost savage triumph flashed across her face. She unlocked her door and hurried down the hall into the kitchen where her mother stood awaiting her.

DUNDEE STOPS JACK WHITE IN NINTH ROUND

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13.—Jack White of Chicago, brother of Charley, proved no match for Johnny Dundee of New York, and after going a short distance into the ninth round, fell to the floor from two stout rights to the chin, a beaten lad.

Weary of mind and body, worn from the ewenty-odd minutes of high tension of slugging, White came out for the ninth. A couple of harmless exchanges and Dundee sent home a straight from the shoulder right to the chin. White's head sank low on his chest and his knees teetered under him.

He half turned around in a blind, staggering way and Dundee repeated with the same jolt, sending Jack flat to the canvas.

Sports and Such

FAMOUS IN SPORT—V.
The Marathon.

THE MARATHON WAS started some two thousand years ago by a young Greek who didn't realize what he was doing or he would never have done it, as the Greeks were a highly civilized and intelligent people. He can be excused only on the ground that he was young and flighty, and easily became excited over trifles.

A man named Darius had come over from Persia—which was the home of the White Hopes in those days—to fight for the title. Twelve men wanted first slam at him, and in the draw for the privilege one Miltiades won. The mill was pulled off at a little place called Marathon, and Miltiades knocked him dead in a punch, showing that White Hopes are much the same in all ages.

Although everyone expected this result, one young man, who is now believed to have been a cub reporter, got so excited that he ran 25 miles to Athens to beat everyone in with the news. The run killed him, the Greeks always being lucky in these matters.

Ever since that evil day other young men of unstable mental poise have gone forth in their underwear to run 25 miles on the slightest provocation, although only a few have died immediately after the finish. Many comparatively sane and useful citizens have been cast into the booby-hatch for less than a voluntary run of 25 miles 'n heat and dust, but the alienists have not yet taken up this species.

In this much the Marathon is a glorious institution. The fact that there is no law against it is the greatest single proof we have that our country is still the Land of Liberty.

(The next film will be knock-out—"The America Cup." Get it at any cost.)

"THE GERMAN COMMISSION will study various phases of amateur sports in America" is announced. Ah—er—including "summer baseball?"

THERE IS OBVIOUS INCONsistency in the ruling off of Jockey Wilson, who has been helping improve the breed of horses by pulling them up in such races in which they seemed to be going too fast. It is surely for the improvement of the breed not to overwork them.

AS THESE LINES ARE batted out Connie Mack has for the second time conceded the victory of the Athletics in the American League race. We are beginning to think that he is nervous.

THE FIGHT IN NEW YORK the other night demonstrates that Smith can hit hard enough to knock out Jim Flynn, and as knocking out Flynn has ever been simply a question of hitting hard enough, the battle doesn't prove much.

JEANNETTE-LANGFORD GO MAY BE DECLARED OFF

LOS ANGELES, Aug 13.—The proposed Langford-Jeannette match is "up in the air."

Jeannette claims that he must sail for Paris on October 10 to fill an engagement with Georger Carpentier, and asks for a September date in Los Angeles.

Promoter McCarey, of the Pacific A. C., replied that the September date is filled. Jeannette will have to postpone his Paris bout or cancel the local date.

Mexican Joe Rivers, matched to box Leach Cross on Labor Day, returned from the mountains last night and will open an early camp at Venice. Cross is due from Catalina today.

Ad Wolgast is en route to Medford, Oreg., for a rest. He will return here to train eight days for his admission day match against the winner of to-night's fight between Dundee and White.

HOUSE, SOX RECRUIT, HURLS NO-HIT BATTLE

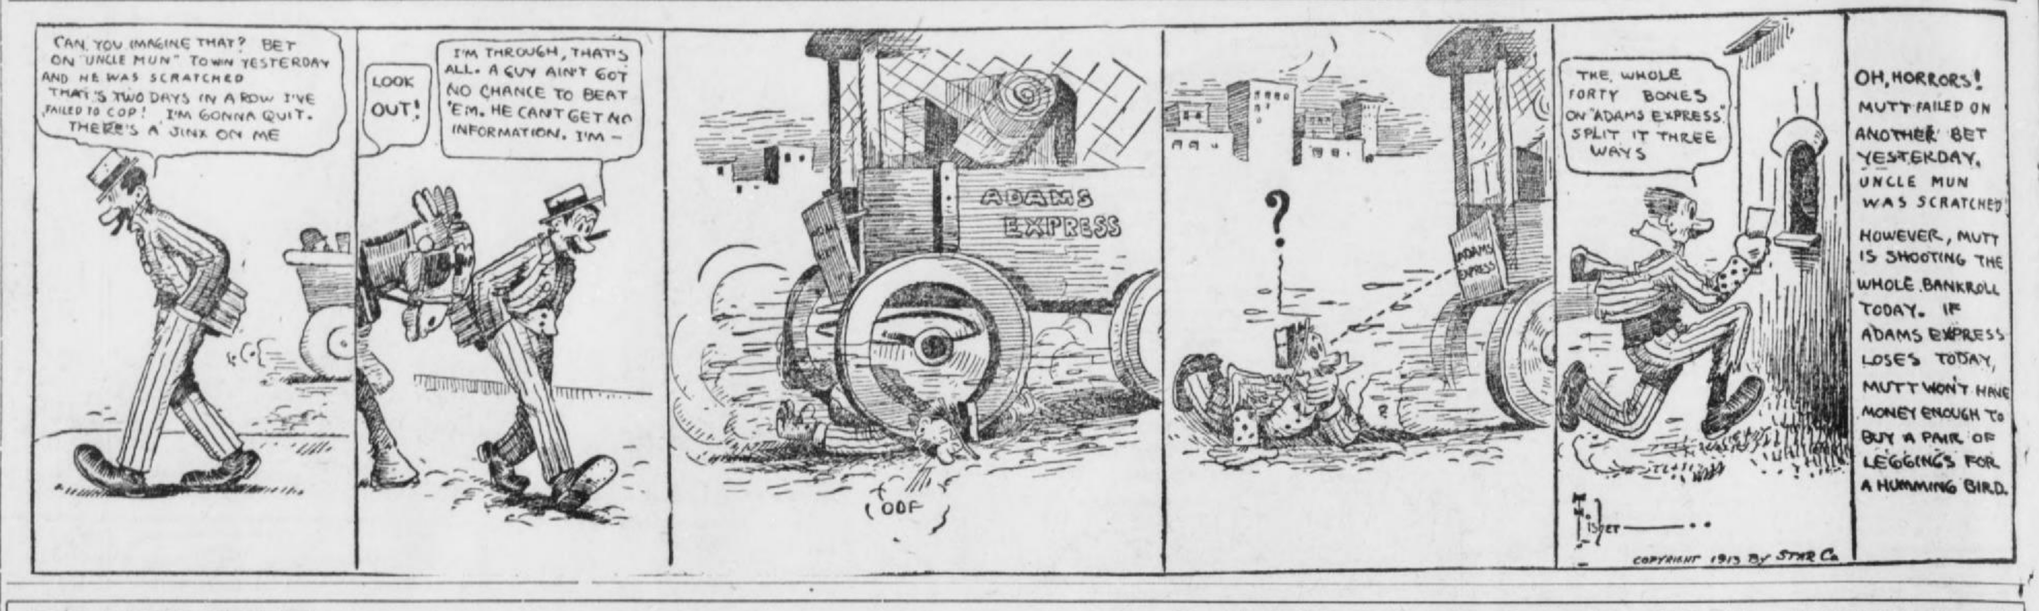

MUSCATINE, IOWA, Aug. 13.—Pitcher House, of the Kewanee Club, whose sale to the White Sox was announced by Manager Richards, pitched a no-hit game against the Muscatine club yesterday, winning 6 to 0. House has pitched 36 innings without allowing a single score.

George Huff, the Cleveland scout, made a trip to Muscatine to-day to pick up House, but the Chicago deal had already been consummated. Owner Comiskey paid $1,500 for the youngster.

Walsh to Visit Bonesetter Reese

Mighty Arm Loses Old Cunning

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., Aug 13.—The mighty Ed Walsh arm has gone.

The terrible whip that in years past kept the Sox in the running when they wabbled and steadied the team when it was going at its worst has lost its strength, its cunning and its power—and the Sox are flounderting. Nobody seems to know what is the matter with Walsh and they are arking Bonesetter Reese to make a diagnosis. Nobody is hinting that vast overwork has "killed" one of the greatest performers the diamond ever knew — not that, because Walsh seemed to be as good as ever when the spring season opened this year. He pitched and won and the Sox fans settled down comfortably to see "Big Ed" give them another season of phenomenal work.

* * *

BUT it wasn't to be. In a little while Walsh discovered that he "wasn't there," and it didn't take much longer for his friends to see the same thing. That shrieking spee.? had dwindled and the "spitter" that formerly almost dropped at the feet of the batter as he swung far over it didn't drop at all. The arm wasn't sore, but something had departed from it and it remained merely an arm—and without baseball value. Maybe the bonesetting man can give Walsh some relief. He has done wonders with some arms and knees and ankles and shoulders that weren't very far gone. But if Walsh doesn't come back it will be a tremendous blow to President Comiskey and his hopes. And it emphasizes again and again the tremendous value to a team of a single star pitcher.

CUB fans and Sox fans used to argue and even fight over the question of whether Mordecai Brown or Ed Walsh was the greater performer. And a year or so ago, when the everblooming Brownie, idol of the West Side, started to go wrong, the Sox fan laughed and said there was nothing to it; that Walsh was as good as ever and probably would go on for years skinning the Cubs in the city series and generally being an eyesore and a thorn in the side of the West Sider. Brownie was sent to the minors because he wasn't of service to the West Side team.

But there never was anything the matter with the Brown arm. His trouble was all in the knee, and when that was remedied, Brownie was as good as ever. That smart young fellow, Joe Tinker, knew and quickly grabbed Brown back from the minors. Brownie is beating National League teams in the same old style—has beaten the Cubs, too. This is both pain and sorrow for the West Side fan-comfort, though, in the thought that Brown is still going while Walsh isn't. Which may or may not settle the arguments of long ago.

* * *

THE pitcher is a tremendous factor in the baseball of to-day. And only a manager in Jimmy Callahan's present fix can realize what it means to have Walsh gone. Jimmy knows pitching angles a little better than other managers, because once he was one of the greatest of them all—certainly the greatest fielding pitcher we ever had here, and one of the best batters. He has been gtting a lot of good pitching out of Scott, Cicotte and Russell, and especially has worked the latter at a terrific pace. Hence the general fear that he may break the Texas wonder down. Oh, for an Ed Walsh at this stage of the battle!

Batting Eyes in Focus Once More

What Has C. Griffith Sent Us?

By O. B. Keeler.

TRULY it has been sawed:

"It's a long worm that has no turning."

Now that the Crackers' batting eyes have slanted back into something like focus, they don't know where to leave off.

The exhibition at Slagville yesterday must have been positively immodest—from a Baronial viewpoint.

But there is the Hon. Prough in the offing.

That probably will be where we get off.

Even then, the Town Boys will have got better than an even break on the last road trip of 1913.

* * *

WHILE in a mood for general rejoicing, kindly note the beneficent arrangement by which the hapless Gulls and Billikens have been cutting each others' goozles* while the Barons were getting theirs.

*Goozle—Early English for weasand.

* * *

Signor Calvo, who might reasonably be expected to take the leading role in Carmen, probably will be on hand to-day to sing right field the rest of the season, or as much of the period as Holtz is unable to warble near the .300 mark.

But Holtz is holding on pretty well, we notice.

OUR information is that Signor Calvo is a Cuban and came from Washington to this country. Clark Griffith thought well of him, but not quite well enough to bench Clyde Milan in his favor. Still, that oughtn't be held against the new hand. Particularly if he is a slugger, he will debut at a pappy juncture.

* * *

BEFORE letting go the Birmingham situation we beg to note the fact that Carl Thompson, who couldn't win for losing while with the Barons, is going to get the last crack at his ex-pals on their own lot this year.

It sticks in our memory that Bert Maxwell never lost a game against Atlanta after he went from the Crackers to the Pelicans. If he did, it was entirely an oversight. Pitchers notoriously are strong against clubs they once have played with. This is explained by two things—they work harder against them for one, and they are excessively familiar with their batting characteristics for another.

Now it is up to Carl to bear out these pleasant arguments.

* * *

WHILE passing around the boquets quets, let's not forget that Harry Holland, who was off on the wrong foot in his five games played here, has been batting crescendo ever since leaving home.

Harry has boosted his stick average to the .300 mark in spite of the big handicap of getting only one hit in the first five games. In Birmingham the Tech star has got five hits in two games, being charged with only six times at bat. The sixth time he reached first on an error, and the other four appearances, when he did not hit, he got on by being walked or hit by a pitched ball.

That coincides with our idea of a useful citizen.

* * *

THREE Musketeers have been sent home to rest up for the approaching struggle—Price, Dent and Conzelman. They got here this morning and began the resting process at once by hitting the hay for a long snooze.

It is not understood that Gil Price is home on suspension this trip, either.

* * *

IF the Frank trial continues being tried for the next two weeks, as appears likely, either the ball park or Judge Roan's courtroom is going to lose some patronage.

Our guess is that it will be the c. r.

John McGraw arises to remark that the Giants this year are stronger than they ever were. Reports from the front indicate that they are particularly strong with the left jab and the right hook.

The rough house among the Giants merely proves the old theory that Larry McLean is contagious.

In spite of the fact that Mr. McGraw once owned a billiard hall he does not seem able to handle the ivories.

GAMENESS — THAT'S A BUSINESS.

Lew Richie once claimed that he rode his motorcycle for pleasure, thereby demonstrating that he was one of our greatest comedians.

We take exception to the claims of those Western fight promoters that fighters are getting more money than they earn. A man who can amputate money from a fight promoter earns it.

The report that Porter track will be opened again indicates that the fall guy has saved up another bank roll.

George Lockner Won Sweepstakes

Morty Graves Injured an Eye

THE Forrest Adair Sweepstakes at the Motordrome last night proved to be one of the greatest speed struggles ever seen in the big bowl, and George Lockner finally finished in the lead in the last heat, doing the five miles in 3:39 4-5. Tex Richards won the first heat and George Renal the second, each of two miles.

The last heat was a whirlwind affair, with the riders bunched so closely that the proverbial blanket would have covered the field most of the time.

Morty Graves, captain of the riders, met with a slight accident that at first looked as if it might cause him the loss of his right eye.

Morty was tinkering on a pedal after winning the first heat of the three-cornered match race, when the pedal flew upward and struck him in the eye. Medical attention was secured at once, and late last night it was said the injury would not be permanent.

Here are the complete summaries:

JOHNSTON FORCED HARD BY LEONARD BEEKMAN

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., Aug. 13.—William M. Johnston, the California schoolboy tennis champion, was forced to play at his best in his match in order to win over Leonard Beekman, of New York, in the third round of the Meadow Club's invitation men's tennis tournament here yesterday. Beekman surprised the Western crack by winning the first set of their match 6-1. The second and third sets went to Johnston 10-8, 6-1.

In the second round Johnston defeated C. F. Walston, Jr., at 12-10, 6-1. Wallace F. Johnson, of Philadelphia, a member of the American Davis cup team, scored an easy victory over Eric Winston in the second round in straight sets 6-1, 6-3.

William A. Larned, the seven-time champion, defaulted to A. S. Dabney and afterward said he would not compete at Newport next week.

Play in the third round of the singles will be resumed to-day.

DILLON TO BOX KLAUS IN 12-ROUND BOUT AT BOSTON

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Aug. 13.—Jack Dillon has accepted terms for a twelve-round bout with Frank Klaus at Boston, August 26. These men have been recognized generally as the best of the middleweights during the last year. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion here in a ten-round go last May.

AUGUSTA AND TAMPA MAY JOIN SALLY LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., Aug. 13.—There is a movement on foot to add two clubs to the South Atlantic League next season, and in this movement the plan is to take in Augusta, Ga., and Tampa, Fla. The movement has the backing of the Columbus Board of Trade, and Secretary Willis B. Powell has already opened correspondence with business men of Tampa, his old home, and they are elated over the prospect of becoming members of a baseball league.

It is probable that more definite action will be taken within a few months that will result in the addition of two other teams to the league.

LAJOIE HAS BEEN IN BIG LEAGUES SEVENTEEN YEARS

RINGSIDE NEWS

Tom McCarey, the well-known Los Angeles fight promoter, is planning a welterweight tournament for the fall. He intends to give the winner a championship belt. At present, there is no champion in this class, and if Uncle Tom can only round up enough worthy candidates for the honors he'll surely hold the carnival.

• • •

Boston fans are to see a real middleweight scrap on August 26. Frank Klaus and Jack Dillon will get together in a twelve-round engagement on this date, and the fur should certainly fly. Klaus defeated Dillon in San Francisco, the bout being a twenty-round affair, and Dillon squarely beat the Pittsburg champion in a ten-round mix-up at Indianapolis.

• • •

Terry Nelson has been substituted for Eddie Hanlon against Mike Saul. Hanlon had his chin cut early in the week and is now threatened with blood poison. Nelson, however, is in great shape and should give Mike a tough argument.

• • •

Three bouts are scheduled to take place to-night. Young Brown and Jim Coffey will clash in a ten-round tilt at New York, Tommy McFarland will take on Joe Azevedo in a twelve-round set-to at West Oakland, Cal., while Frank Whitney and Charley White clash in the Auditorium-Armory.

• • •

Jack Britton is another Chicago boy who will get into action to-morrow night. Frankie Burns is to be Jack's opponent and the battle is to be staged at Denver, Colo.

• • •

Carl Morris is the champion lemon picker of the country. Morris is to be sent against Fred Lachlan on Friday night and it is a good bet that the latter has never taken part in a professional bout before. They are to mingle at Winnipeg, Man.

• • •

Joe Rivers and Leach Cross are to start light work to-day for their twenty-round mill at Los Angeles on Labor Day. This bout means much to both boys, as the winner will probably meet Willie Ritchie, while the loser will have to seek a place among the lesser lights.

Tango Puts Ban on Tight Corset Style

PITTSBURG, PA., Aug. 13.—The slit skirt, the tango and turkey trot are approved and the tight-fitting corset taboo with Miss Ruth S. Denis, the danseuse.

"You remember, a few years ago, if a girl could squeeze herself into a 17-inch corset she thought she would be just the right figure. No one could tango in that kind of corset now, and we particularly owe the healthier corset to the popularity of this dance."

SPARTA COMES BACK AND DEFEATS EAST POINT CLUB

SPARTA, GA., Aug. 12.—After having played a 12-inning tie yesterday afternoon with the East Point club, the locals clearly outplayed the visitors this afternoon in the presence of the largest crowd of enthusiasts that ever witnessed a ball game in Sparta. The final score was 8 to 2. The playing by both teams was brilliant at times, but the locals clearly had the class.

TO HAVE "REGULAR" PLANT.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—The New York American League team's new grounds will be located at 200th and Broadway and Exterior streets. The grandstand will be 665 feet on 225th street and 495 1-2 feet on 227th street, extending the entire block on Broadway end and will be 52 feet deep. The field stand will be erected at the Exterior street end and will be 264 by 54 1-2 feet. These stands will form a stadium, and the cost of the grandstand has been estimated at $250,000 and the field stand at $12,000. The stands will be of brick and terra cotta.

Noted Organist of England Plays Here

Atlanta music-lovers will have the opportunity next Sunday of hearing Eugene Wyatt, one of the most famous English organists, in a free concert at the Auditorium under the auspices of the Atlanta Music Festival Association.

During the next few weeks a number of the most prominent organists in the country will be heard in concert at the Auditorium in the contest for the place of city organist left vacant by Dr. Percy Starnes' resignation.

Mr. Wyatt, however, will not participate in the contest, his appearance here being a special attraction arranged by the association. Seton Blyth, a noted English organist, and Clarence Reynolds, organist at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, are two who will try for the place.

HEARNE PITCHES 20 INNINGS; HE ALLOWS NO RUNS

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Aug. 13.—Toronto's fallen champions and Jersey City's unhappy tail enders made baseball history at West Side Park of this city by playing what proved the most remarkable game of all time. These International League clubs went 20 innings to a scoreless tie, the darkness halting the pastime.

The game proved a world's record, for previously the longest scoreless battle was one played at Oakland, Cal., on August 6, 1910, of eighteen innings duration.

Hearne, the Toronto pitcher, has the distinction of the world's champion for number of scoreless innings in a single battle. He worked the entire twenty innings against the Skeeters, and what is even more remarkable, allowed Jersey City only seven scattered hits.

Brandon, formerly of the Pirates, who was a rival of "Rube" Marquard in the American Association, was sent to the rescue of Thompson in the fourteenth inning after a pinch hitter had batted for the twirler who started the duel against Hearne.

Toronto got eight hits.

SULZER SOBS AS HE HEARS HE IS IMPEACHED

Deserted by Friends, He Waits Through the Night, Comforted by Wife.

circulated that he would go in person before the Assembly and plead his own case before a vote was taken; another rumor had it that he would make overtures to his political enemies. All were wrong.

The Governor waited developments anxiously and impatiently. He made a forlorn figure. Just a short time ago his favor was courted by all, but when the tide of politics began to go against him he was deserted. Only his wife gave him comfort. Even friends of his own political party shunned him.

History of an unprecedented nature was made, for never before has a Governor of this State been impeached.

There was practically nothing doing during the hours before noon, as nearly all the legislators were in bed. Opponents of the Governor were busy, however, and Mr. Sulzer was severely criticised for his reported acquiescence to his wife's declaration that she was unwittingly responsible for the Wall Street speculation charges. "He should not try to hide behind petticoats to save his political face," said they.

Tammany's Hand Is Seen.

Friends of the impeached Governor are deeply distressed to-day over the action of the assembly. They still maintain that politics of a Tammany taint is rampant in the legislative halls. They go so far as to predict that Acting Governor Glynn, who is now the rightful occupant of the executive chamber, will be given full opportunity to decapitate appointments made by the Governor, in that it is expected that no impeachment proceedings will be started until late in October, which is the limit of time provided for in the Constitution when the impeachment trial through the court of impeachment must be instituted.

These friends of the Governor find solace in the fact that in addition to the 76 votes necessary to impeach, Tammany could muster but three additional votes. They point out that fourteen Republicans voted to sustain the Governor and feel that it was rock-ribbed political tactics which forced those who voted favorably on the impeachment resolution to do so.

It is not believed that the impeached Governor will be forced to vacate the Executive mansion although he may feel in honor bound to do so. Acting Governor Glynn has a home of his own in one of the most exclusive thoroughfares in the city and a summer home at Cedar Hill.

That the knotty tangle which the Democrats now find themselves in was due to the uncompromising attitude of Governor Sulzer was claimed by organization Democrats. They declare that Governor Sulzer frowned on all attempts made by the leaders "to get together" and that they had to "get him," that it was known that Sulzer had a checkered past, in spite of his continued declarations that he "was walking the .street called straight." All sorts of "I told you so's were forthcoming from Democratic legislators and whispers of more uncomplimentary pages of the Governor's life found utterance.

A prominent Democratic member said that the Frawley committee had in reserve a mass of evidence which, if used, would create more scandal of which the Governor would be the victim. This material may be brought out during the future sessions of the Frawley committee.

Briefly, the articles of impeachment which were presented to the Senate to-day charge that Governor Sulzer is guilty of the following allegations:

That he filed a false statement of campaign contributions with the Secretary of State, such statement having caused "great scandal" and reproach for the Governor of the State of New York, and that the said statement did not contain all the contributions received by him, and that he was guilty of a misdemeanor in failing to file a true report.

Charge Effort to Block Quiz.

That while Governor, William Sulzer induced Louis R. Sarecky, Frederick L. Colwell and Melville B. Fuller, by fraudulent methods, to withhold certain testimony from the Frawley committee, and that such acts were the commission of a felony.

That the Governor "practiced deceit and fraud and used threats and menaces" intended to prevent the committee and other witnesses subpenaed from producing books and papers desired by the committee, such act having been a misdemeanor.

That in preventing or dissuading Frederick L. Colwell from attending the hearing of the Frawley committee the Governor was also guilty of a misdemeanor in having violated section 2441 of the penal law.

That prior to his election the Governor appropriated campaign contributions to his own use, using the same, or a large portion thereof, to speculate in stocks, and that he thereby stole such checks and was guilty of larceny.

Abuse of Power Alleged.

That he promised and threatened to use his office to affect the vote of certain public officers, including Assemblymen S. G. Prime, of Essex, and Thaddeus C. Sweet, of Oswego.

That the Governor corruptly used his authority as Governor to affect the price of securities in the New York Stock Exchange, in some of which he was speculating and in other ways sought to influence legislation.

In conclusion the articles read:

"The assembly demands that the Governor answer concerning all these matters before the court which is to hear the charges, and offers to present proof of said matters at such time as the honorable court for the trial of impeachment may order and appoint."

Posed as a Poor Man.

William Sulzer less than a year ago enjoyed the confidence of the people of New York State to such an extent that he was elected Governor by a vote of 19,000 in excess of that given Wilson and the national ticket, and a few months later said in an interview, "The people understand me. I understand the people, and we trust each other."

Throughout his long career in the State Assembly, in the National House of Representatives, and during his recent campaign for election as Governor and his six-month tenure of that office Governor Sulzer always posed as a poor man and a friend of the poor man.

Refuses to See Reporters.

The Governor's secretary stated that Sulzer would not make any statement and would not see the newspaper men at the usual hour to-day.

When the Governor reached the Capitol this morning, he was asked how he felt and replied: "Fine. It's a nice breezy morning."

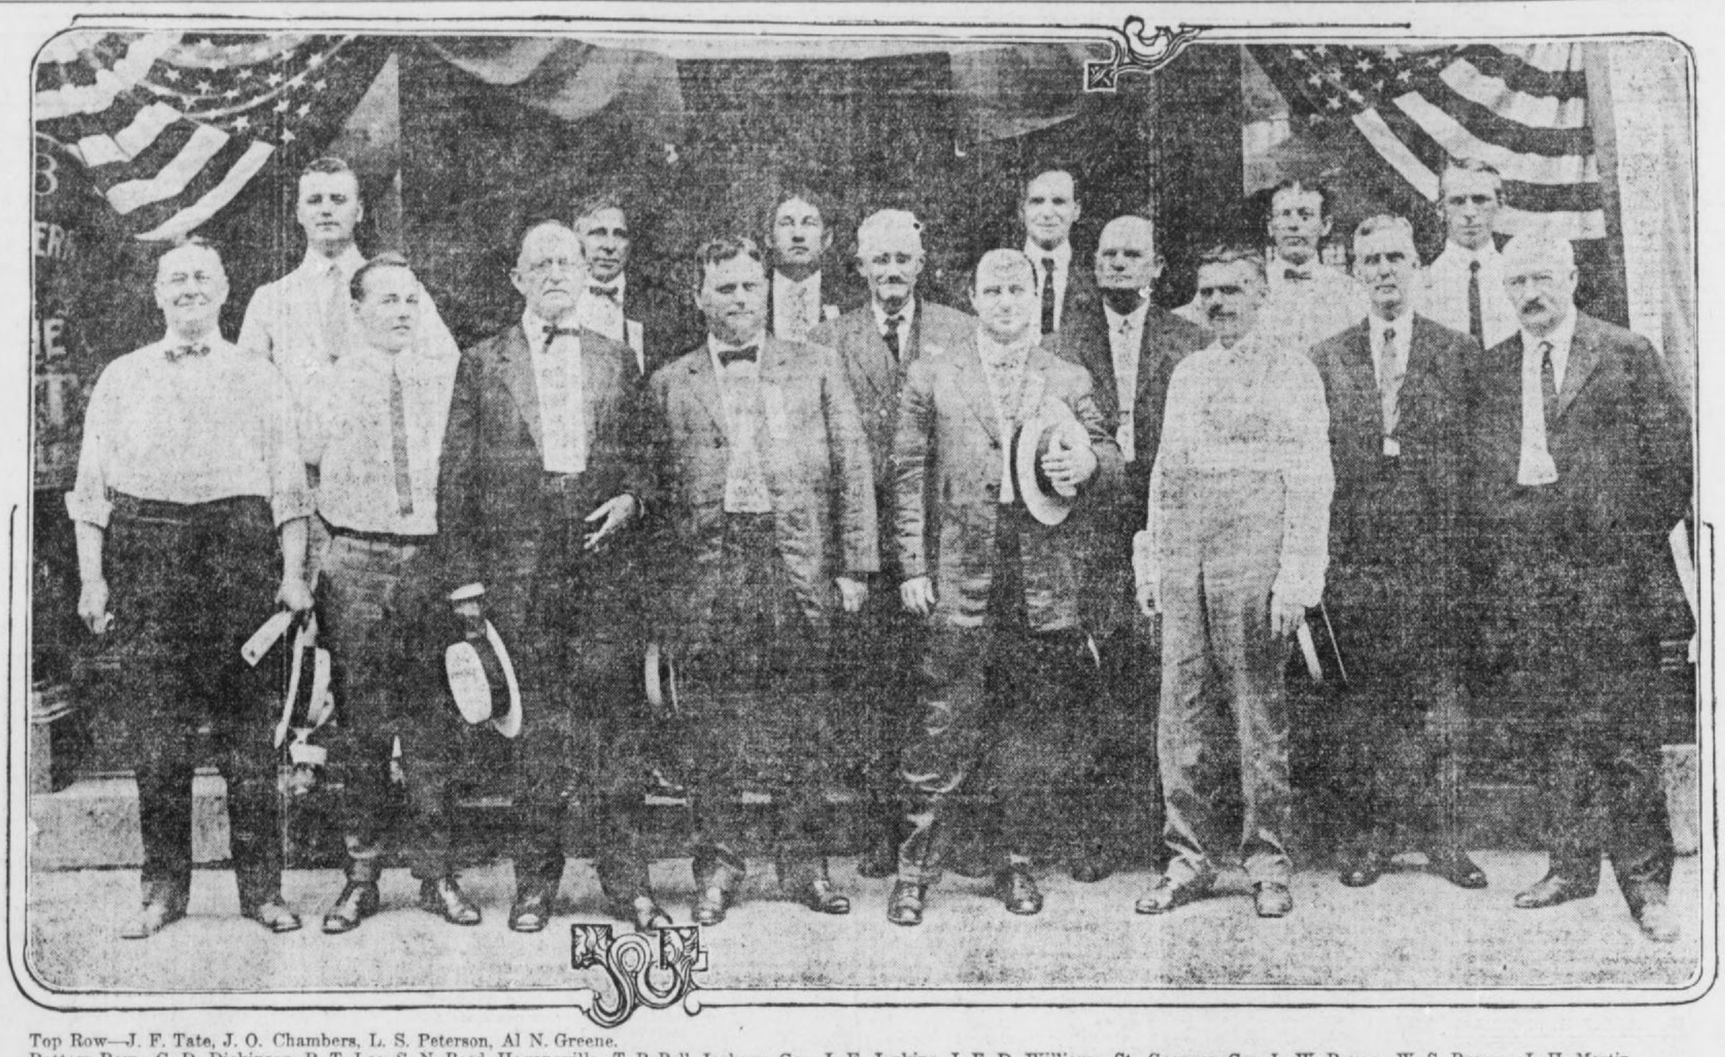

He seemed to be in excellent spirits and paused to allow his picture to be taken at the foot of the Capitol steps.

Although both houses of the Legislature were scheduled to meet at 11 o'clock, it was long after that hour when the lawmakers, hollow-eyed and sleepy in appearance, began to arrive. Many of them had not been to bed at all.

The Court of Appeals, it was learned to-day, could not be convened much before the end of September on account of many of the judges being in Europe and other places on vacations.

No word was forthcoming to-day as to whether Governor Sulzer would attempt to remain in office or fight his accusers. The Governor himself would say nothing whatever, and Judge D. Cady Herrick, before he went into consultation with the Governor, refused to discuss the situation. It is believed by friends of the Governor that for the time being the Governor will step aside, but no confirmation of this can be obtained.

FIVE BOYS HELD AS ROBBER BAND

Series of Burglaries Laid to Them—Two Who Fled Caught in Savannah.

Numerous burglaries committed in Atlanta within the last several weeks were laid to a band of youths in police court Wednesday morning.

Recorder Pro Tem Preston bound over to the State courts five lads arrested at different times in a systematic hunt by Detectives McGill and Gillespie. They are Fred Amasson, of 20 Glass Street; Harry Sharpton, of 162 Gibson Street; Roy Nash, of 12 Pittman Place; Lee Ellenberg, of 209 1-2 Marietta Street, and Dick Coppedge, a clerk.

Coppedge was held in one case of larceny from the house, it being charged that he watched for the gang on one occasion. His bond was fixed at $500. The bond of the other boys was fixed at $2,000 each.

Sharpton and Nash fled to Savannah recently. They were found there by detectives and brought to Atlanta.

The places said to have been broken into by the boys are Dr. C. S Kern's drug store, Edgewood Avenue; P. H. Hanson's grocery, 101 Wells Street; the store of the Sewell Commission Company, 113 Whitehall Street; a shoe shop at 171 Marietta Street; the Gem Hotel, 175 Marietta Street, and a residence at 82 West Cain Street.

200 Seek to Enjoin Road Law in Dawson

GAINESVILLE, Aug. 13.—Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northwestern Circuit, is soon to render a decision in an unusual case which has been heard by him in chambers here. It is a suit to enjoin the operation of the alternative road law in Dawson County recommended by the last Grand Jury of that county.

The petition, containing the names of 200 citizens and taxpayers of Dawson, alleges that the road matter was "railroaded" through just at the eve of adjournment and, in point of fact, a majority of the jury did not vote for the law.

Big Improvements At Shorter College

ROME, Aug. 13.—Great improvements are being made at Shorter College. Workmen are giving the walls of every room a coat of fresh paint; all bathrooms have been enameled, and all floors, everyone of which is of reinforced concrete, have been freshly painted.

A large out-of-doors gymnasium, 150 by 400 feet, is probably the greatest thing that the college has ever done for its students. There will be room for four or five tennis courts, several basket ball games and sufficient space for all kinds of gymnastics, callisthenics, etc. Electric lights will be arranged on the grounds, so that the girls may use the tennis courts and basket ball grounds in the evening.

The attendance for the next session at Shorter will be very large, the registration being far in excess of any previous year.

Girl Tells of Trip to Reno as Diggs' Wife

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—Marsha Warrington, the 19-year-old Sacramento girl whose flight to Reno with Maury I. Diggs resulted in his present trial on a charge of violating the Mann white slave law, resumed her story on the witness stand today.

Miss Warrington said that after eating luncheon in a cafe on their arrival in Reno, she, with Diggs, Drew Caminetti, jointly indicted with Diggs, and Lola Norris, went to a hotel, and under assumed names, registered as man and wife. The following day, she said, they moved to a bungalow that Diggs and Caminetti had rented for a month. They lived there as man and wife, she testified himself that Henderson, of Jones, a sterling friend of the measure, was not in the House. He began hunting for him. In five minutes he had located Henderson at the Majestic Hotel, where he was waiting for a message from his wife, who is very ill. Henderson was told the status of the vote and jumped into a taxicab and started on a wild ride to the Capitol. He arrived as the clerk was calling the S's in his verification. Mr. Henderson gained the floor and voted yea, tying up the vote. When the Speaker announced that the vote was a tie, there was a moment of breathless quiet.

Then Speaker Burwell voted yea and pandemonium broke loose. Members shouted and sang, jumped upon their seats, shook hands and relieved the tense feeling that had prevailed. None was happier than Pat Burney, one of the older members of the House. He jumped up on his desk and let out a whoop that could be heard five blocks. The din continued for five minutes before the Speaker could restore order.

Then Sheppard, of Sumter, and Stovall, of Elbert, began a systematic effort to bring about a reconsideration of the bill. Their efforts were defeated when Blackburn, of Fulton, moved that the House adjourn to 9:30 o'clock Wednesday morning, which is a debatable question. Wohlwender arose to the occasion—and the bill was saved.

In a statement issued last night Governor Slaton declared that the Legislature deserves the thanks of the people of Georgia.

"It has shown efficiency and business capacity in a form that commands the confidence of the entire business world, and can offer without embarrassment the bonds of Georgia to the strictest financier."

Announcement Soon Of $150,000 Sales

Smith & Ewing's Deals in Contract Stage—Great Interest in New Office Building—Other Notes.

Sales aggregating $150,000 are expected to be announced in a week by the Smith & Ewing Real Estate Agency. These are in contract stage and lawyers are busy examining titles. Several are for sums around $25,000.

This agency has sold through J. H. and Crawford Maddox for L. C. Durham, of Terrell County, to J. R. Smith, No. 96 East Cain street, 40 by 150 feet, for $6,000, or at the rate of $150 a foot. Mr. Smith bought for investment, and he may improve with an apartment house or building of similar character.

Comment on Skyscraper Plans.

Real estate men engaged in a good deal of discussion Wednesday on the 16-story office building which it is planned to erect on Dr. E. L. Connally's lot at the southeast corner of Whitehall and Alabama streets. Most of them expressed the belief that an office structure additional to the Atlanta National Bank Building would lend a great deal of prestige to the retail shopping district and the entire South Side.

The probable effect on tenants and leases was also discussed with interest. Announcement that Brown & Allen might move to the Lynch property across the way, which they leased a year ago, and that the United Cigar Stores Company might take the Brown & Allen corner caused much gossip on the probable new lease rate for the corner. The Lynch corner, according to reliable authority, would cost the drug concern $450 a month. This would be exclusive of the other space upstairs and on West Alabama street, which now brings Brown & Allen an amount above the entire cost. The Lynch property was leased by the drug company for seven years as a protection, and the lease contains an option for five years more.

The United Cigar Stores Company, it is reported, made Dr. Connally an offer on the Brown & Allen corner, but negotiations have not gone far. Dr. Connally promised Ed Brown, of the drug company, the refusal on the ground floor at a price which has not been given out. This is said to apply either to the store as it stands or to the office building space. The Brown & Allen lease is up September 1, 1914.

In the leases on parts of the Connally property it is said there is a one-year cancellation clause, which is taken to mean that when Dr. Connally made the leases he had a big building in view.

The old building is bringing a handsome return, and the only hesitation Dr. Connolly has about putting up a larger structure lies in the fact that a skyscraper would not pay as high a percentage on the investment.

Insurance Money Easy.

Insurance money continues to be lent more readily in Atlanta than previous to the announcement that $25,000,000 would be placed in Southern banks to move the crops. About twenty loan deeds went to record Tuesday. Approximately half of them were to the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, the Guaranty Trust Company, of Missouri, the Travelers' Insurance Company, of Connecticut, the Germania Savings Bank and the United States Mortgage and Trust Company.

Many Expected at Dinner.

Inasmuch as Chas. P. Glover, Harris G. White, S. B. Turman and Fitzhugh Knox will be present at the monthly dinner of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday, it is believed that a large crowd of realty men will attend. The above-named agents are full of the recent trip to Winnipeg, and they will be called on to relate their experiences in the Northwest.

President White has made announcement of a change in plan for the monthly dinners. Instead of holding them at 6:30 p. m., the time will be 12:30 to 2 p. m., and the place will be the Hotel Ansley. Friday's dinner will be held in the Georgia pine room of the hotel.

Interesting Apartment Leases.

H. M. Atkinson and J. D. Rhodes have leased apartments in the Ponce DeLeon, southeast corner of Peachtree street and Ponce DeLeon avenue, and will be quartered there this winter. The leases were made by Albert S. Adams, of the B. M. Grant Agency, who is the exclusive agent for this structure. Gen. R. K. Evans will move from the Bell place, northeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, to the Georgian Terrace.

The near approach of fall finds many people ready to move into new locations, and the renting agencies are in the midst of their busiest season. Mr. Aycock, manager of the renting department of the Charles P. Glover agency, declared that the tendency was to re-lease rather than to choose different houses.

Peachtree Lease Expected.

Another Peachtree lease is expected to be announced soon. The United Motor Atlanta Company, now the Maxwell Company, will move from its present location at the foot of Currier street to some location that suits its wholesale business better, and the Turman, Black & Calhoun agency, who have the building, will announce the plans of another concern which will move in.

Big Acreage Sale.

Extensive acreage tracts in South and Middle Georgia continue to be handled through Atlanta real estate agents. Sisson & Miller have sold to T. R. Owsley, through J. T. Kimbrough, the well-known realty agent, 160 acres of land three miles north of Fort Valley for $9,000, or $56 an acre.

Support for Exhibit Project.

Indications pointed Wednesday to success in the effort to place Atlanta-made goods permanently on exhibit in the four top floors of the Chamber of Commerce Building, southeast corner of North Pryor street and Auburn avenue. Several additional merchants and manufacturers assured the merchants and manufacturers' committee that they would take space. It has been feared that not enough exhibitors will be in the building to make the project a success, and W. H. Leahy, of the local industrial bureau, has given notice that prospective lessees must hurry and sign up for space, or it will be too late.

Unless action is taken at once the building will be converted into offices, as originally planned. Work is under way and the Chamber of Commerce officials want to know the decision of the exhibitors so as to determine definitely the character of the building.

Pushing Peachtree Work.

Indications were Wednesday that the county convicts would finish up during the day or early Thursday Peachtree repairs as far south as Fifteenth street and would be able to turn back from Fifteenth to Brookwood. There is probably five days' work before the entire job is completed, and then the gang will go back to the stretch lying between W. S. Witham's country place and the DeKalb County line.

People using Peachtree of late have expressed great satisfaction over the paving. The County Commissioners decided to make repairs rather than lay new material and to make the job new next year. The old paving was plowed up, pulverized and packed with a giant roller and for the present it does as well as when it was first laid.

COTTON SELLS OFF AFTER EARLY GAIN

The Market Ruled Very Narrow, Though There Was Some Cotton Wanted on Easy Spots.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—On reports of showers at a number of points in central Texas and Oklahoma, the cotton market opened 2 to 4 points lower, except August, which showed 1 point advance from the closing quotations of Tuesday. A private message from New Orleans stated that traders there expected further rains soon. However, the official weather map only showed a few rains and the official weather forecasts for Oklahoma and Texas was for clear weather.

After prices had declined about 1 to 2 points from the opening a sudden buying movement, led by prominent operators, started the market on an upward trend, with the results of prices showing a gain of 2 to 7 points over the initial level by noon. August, however, was not inclined to follow the advance and settled around 11.57 for a loss of 4 points from the previous close.

Liverpool reported weak cables and accordingly sent over a range of prices 3 to 6 points lower, based on rains in the Western belt.

It is generally believed that a continuance of dry weather will lead to early deliveries of high-grade white cotton in Texas, and on matter how dry it remains, this cotton will come into the market freely until the receipts from the eastern half of the belt become heavy. From present conditions an early movement is generally expected. Private reports recently indicated a good condition of 85 per cent of the cotton belt west of the Mississippi River.

Sentiment on the floor continues bearish.

As the map showed little or no rain and the detailed weather report posted at 11 o'clock, giving temperatures and rainfall for yesterday, was disappointing to the bearish element, as there was seventeen points in Oklahoma showing temperatures from 100 to 109 and ten points in Texas showing temperatures from 100 to 104, with much less rainfall than had been expected from the private reports that were received late yesterday afternoon. The market ruled very narrow, though there was apparently some cotton wanted on all easy spots. Some of the prominent interests who have been identified with the bull side of late were put down as the early sellers. It is purely a weather market and much depends on what may happen during the next two or three days.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 3 to 6 points from the closing quotations of Tuesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows rather general precipitation in the eastern part of Texas, although light so far. Generally fair in the western half of Texas and Oklahoma overnight, partly cloudy to fair in the rest of the belt. Scattered showers fell in Tennessee, the south central Gulf and Atlantic coast districts. Indications are for further precipitation west today, particularly in the southern and eastern part of Texas.

Liverpool came in very poor, with futures at one time, as much as 4 lower than due.

The last report to us from Liverpool says: "Feeling and opinion continue bearish, chiefly on account of the bad trade outlook. Spinners and manufacturers are complaining bitterly and understand similar conditions exist on the continent, so that even with a moderate crop a bull movement appears difficult."

This accounts for the poor response to reports of crop deterioration from Texas and Oklahoma and the slow business in forward shipments.

Trading here is quiet this morning with the market dull but steady around last night's closing figures. The relatively small new crop receipts, in view of the reports of active ginning in Texas, are the subject of comment. This is generally accounted for by the slow export demand, and the unfavorable news from Liverpool is in line with it.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Unless the drouth situation in the Southwest is relieved, we expect no activity at present.

Logan & Bryan: We do not think general conditions warrant any marked upturn at this time, and in the event of good soaking rains in the Southwest, a lower range of values will undoubtedly result.

COTTON GOSSIP

What d'ye think? Southwest received some rain last night, which promoted an active selling movement at the outset to-day.

* * *

The Government report yesterday, stating that July was the third dryest on record in Texas, fell flat and advices from New Orleans that the Clarke amendment was likely to be shelved, failed to stir the market.

* * *

In the absence of other advices the weakness of the late cables from Liverpool this morning were attributed to the reports of rain in the Southwest.

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and hot."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, Aug. 13.—The weather map shows generally cloudy over the eastern part of Texas, with precipitation rather general, although light so far. Rain at Taylor, Tex. Cloudy in Tennessee, Atlantic coast districts and central Gulf districts, with scattered showers over Tennessee, south Gulf States and the Atlantics. Indications are for more showery weather over the western States and further precipitation in Texas, particularly over the eastern half of the State; partly cloudy Central States and the Atlantics will probably have some scatterd showers.

Memphis wires: "The first new bale of the season of 1913-14 was received here this morning from Mississippi De-Lata Planting Company. With but one exception this is the earliest bale on record: first bale in 1902 being received August 10. This is about six days earlier than the average."

Temperatures: Galveston, clear and warm, good shower last night; Houston clear, 76; San Antonio, clear, 82; Taylor, clear, 85; Dalas clear, 85; Fort Worth, clear, 84; Sherman, clear, 80; Denison, clear, 82; Paris, clear, 80; Texarkana, clear, 76; Little Rock, clear, 78; Oklahoma City, clear, 81; Chickasha, clear, 81; Muskogee, clear, 88; McAlester, clear, 87; rain yesterday. Amite, clear, 69; Baton Rouge, clear, 78; Lafayette, cloudy, 73; Donalsonville, clear, 72; Alexandria, clear, 75; Franklin, cloudy, 74; Morgan City, cloudy, warm; Robeline, clear, 69; Grand Cane, clear, 71; Minden, clear, 69; Lake Charles, cloudy, 69; Helena, part cloudy, warm; Hattiesburg, clear, 80.

Rainfall: Taylor, .22; Galveston, .42; Palestine, .01; Fort Smith, .02; New Orleans, .24; Mobile, .04; Nashville, .04; Atlanta, .46; Wilmington, .01; Houston, .04.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Were the cotton market freed from the menace of hostile legislation it would probably do better now that crop damage reports are coming in from the west in great numbers. But, as matters stand, the markets reflect a heavy tone even in the presence of a more active demand for forward export freight room. Big crop people adhere to their belief that the drouth affected area in the west does not cover a great amount of territory and that even the dry region has produced crops in dryer years than this.

"Nevertheless, the Weather Bureau stresses the bad state of affairs resulting from lack of moisture in Oklahoma and Texas, and the detailed reports from 198 Texas stations for July show a rainfull deficiency of 1.62 inches, and a temperature excess of 1.2 degrees over the July normal.

"On the other hand, print cloths are now quoted at 3⅝c, or ⅜ of a cent below the quotations at this time last year, which is equal to about 2½c a pound on raw cotton. But raw cotton values are now very little lower than they were at this time last year. Meanwhile, trade attention continues to center on the weather in the west.

* * *

"North Carolina, 83 against 77; South Carolina, 82 against 75; Georgia, 80 against 76; Alabama, 80 against 79; Mississippi, 78 against 77; Tennessee, 87 against 90; Arkansas, 85 against 87; Louisiana, 78 against 79; Oklahoma, 72 against 61; Texas, 74 against 81; United States 77.8 against 79.6.

By Government July 25: "The status of the crop is now just the reverse of that of the early season in that highest conditions are shown in the Eastern and Atlantic States, which fact is due to exceptionally favorable weather there and severe drouth in Texas and Oklahoma, operating to advance the one and pull down the other. It is seldom that cotton maintains at this date the luxuriant growth and vigorous life that is characteristic of the plant in Georgia and the Carolinas."

COTTON SEED OIL.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13.—There will be showers during the next 36 hours in all the Northern States east of the Mississippi River. From Tennessee and the Carolinas southward the weather will be fair, except for local showers on the Gulf coast.

The temperatures will rise slowly in the Northern and Eastern States east of the Mississippi River. Forecast till 8 p. m. Thursday:

General Forecast.

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Thursday.

Virginia—Unsettled, local showers to-night or Thursday; warmer in central portion to-night.

North Carolina—Fair in west; showers in east portion to-night or Thursday.

Florida—Fair to-night, except showers in southwestern portion to-night or Thursday.

Louisiana—Fair in north; showers in southern portion to-night or Thursday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Thursday.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, Aug. 13.—The market shows same old nervousness over Texas weather. A few light rains fell in eastern Texas, but as a whole the State remains quite dry and hot. The semi-monthly condition reports show heavy losses in the Southwest, but improvement in the East, nearly offsetting the losses. Likely that drouth must continue or rains come or some setback occur in the East to move the market far away from 11 cents.

TEXAS COMPANY ATTRACTIVE ISSUE

Canadian Pacific and Harrimans Also Higher—Sentiment Becoming Optimistic.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, Aug. 13.—Texas Company and Canadian Pacific were about the firmest stocks at the opening of the stock market to-day, although much interest was attracted to trading in Harrimans. Texas Company advanced ¾ to 119¾, while Canadian Pacific climbed to 237¼, for a gain of 1¼.

After opening with a gain of ⅛, Southern Pacific went to 91¾, for the loss of ⅛. Union Pacific, which sold ex-rights, opened at 154½, against 154¼ at the close yesterday.

St. Paul opened ⅝ higher, but immediately declined. Among the other advances were American Can preferred ⅛, American Smelting ⅜, Bethlehem Steel ¼, United States Rubber common ¼, Western Union ¼, Utah Copper ⅜, Steel common ¼, Pacific Mail and Great Northern Ore ¾. Steel soon lost its advance. Erie, Anaconda Copper and several other issues declined during the first half hour.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were strong.

Pronounced strength developed in the leading issues in the last half of the first hour and prices moved up a point or more from the initial figures. Canadian Pacific was in brisk demand, advancing 1½, while gains ranging around 1¼ were recorded in Lehigh Valley, Steel common, Reading, Union Pacific and American Smelting. Substantial gains were also noted in Erie, St. Paul, Anaconda and Amalgamated Copper.

A number of profit-taking sales were made in the second hour, however, and many of the important issues receded fractionally.

Call money is loaning and renewing at 2¼ per cent.

STOCK GOSSIP

"I see no reason to change our opinion on the stock market at present, as all indications point to a higher level of prices," says G. D. Potter, of N. L. Carpenter & Co. "I still advise operating in the active issues like Union Pacific, Copper and Steel. Of course, from time to time we will have moderate reactions, but when they come holdings should be increased. The large interests have the majority of stocks and the holdings of the public are small. Until these conditions are reversed believe the upward trend will continue."

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: "In the wheat situation there was nothing new presented by the trade, except that sentiment was more friendly to the buying side, because of the strength in coarse grains and a little black-rust talk. Corn bulls last night were confident of their position, as temperatures over the Southwest ranged from 99 to 108 without any rain, except in Oklahoma.

"Comparatively few traders regard corn prices as high, except for the present, as there have been numerous years when May corn has been bought at the prevailing level and paid a good profit."

* * *

Price-Current says: "Corn in Kansas, Texas, Oklahoma, Nebraska, Missouri and a large part of Illinois and parts of Indiana, Kentucky and Tennessee is beyond restoration. The crop north of these States is in good shape, and rains have been sufficient to insure fairly good crops. The crop at best will be fully 400,000,000 bushels under last year and may drop below that. Spring wheat has delayed ripening somewhat, and bright weather is now desired to round out the filling period and provide for harvest."

Weather indications: Missouri, Kansas and Nebraska fair; continued warm. Minnesota and the Dakotas fair and not much change in temperature. Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, probably showers to-night or Thursday warmer.

"Corn—The map shows light rains in parts of Iowa, Nebraska, Missouri, Illinois and Ohio Valley. No rain in Kansas where high temperatures continue. There seems to be very little indication of any setback, for when one lot of buyers liquidates new ones appear.

"Oats—The market shows a firm undertone, with a good class of buying on weak spots.

"Provisions—There was further liquidation yesterday, which caused severe breaks."

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red .... .86 @88
Corn—No. 2 .... .77
Oats—No. 2 .... .42

CHICAGO, Aug. 13.—Corn closed around the best prices reached and showed further gains for the day of ¼ to ½c. Every professional in the corn pit will come down to-morrow morning long on that commodity and if there are no buying orders and in case liquidation is attempted, sharp price losses will be seen.

The sale of 425,000 bushels cash wheat in this market to-day to exporters was the strengthening factor in that grain and prices closed ¼ to ½c better.

Oats closed a small fraction lower to unchanged. Cash sales of corn were 125,000 bushels, and oats 195,000 bushels.

Provisions closed sharply lower.

Parcel Post, Fully Developed, Will Build Up Country Newspapers.

And It Will Also Build Up Great Factories and New Enterprises. It Will Do More for the Country Merchants Than for the Mail Order House.

(Copyright, 1913.)

Editor The Georgian: Fulton, Ky.

Dear Sir—It occurred to me that possibly you would like to know that there is one country paper that is adopting your suggestion as to the parcel post proposition. We are therefore inclosing you herewith a printed circular-letter, together with clipping containing your editorial, which we are sending out to all our merchants.

We are sure that your suggestions to the country editor and small merchant will prove of great value to both if they are followed out. Very truly yours,

MOTT AYRES,
Editor Fulton Daily Leader.

With that letter comes a circular, well planned and intelligently written, pointing out to the merchants the possibility of utilizing the parcel post in their business.

We repeat emphatically that the local editor and the local merchant should derive the greatest possible benefit from the parcel post.

With the parcel post in full working order, delivering books and everything else—except whisky, gin and other poisonous drugs—and delivering parcels at the lowest possible rates, the local merchant and the local editor would become the great distributers and salesmen of their neighborhood.

To-day the merchant must have in his store everything that he sells. There are many things that his customers want occasionally, and keeping them makes them shopworn and less desirable.

With the parcel post in full operation, the merchant could have his catalogue, his illustrations of goods, his tempting prices. He would know that the customer was reliable and would pay. With a postal card he would order the goods sent to his customer direct. The customer would remit to him and he would pay the bill to the shipper.

In this way the local editor, announcing the goods, carrying the advertisement of the big manufacturers into the homes, would act as preliminary salesman.

And the local merchant with the store, dealing personally with the customers, knowing that their credit is good, would be the intermediary through whom they would purchase and to whom they would pay and from whom the manufacturer would collect.

What everybody needs in this world is, first, to have people know what he has for sale, and, second, TO BE ABLE TO GET IT TO THOSE THAT WANT IT AT A FAIR PRICE.

The parcel post can be for the country editor a great, magnificent delivery system excelling in economy and effectiveness the delivery of the greatest city merchant.

The local editor can be the salesman, carrying the news of the enterprising manufacturer to the reader—WHOM HE ALONE CAN REACH. And the local merchant can be the distributer, taking the orders of his customers based on the advertising in the newspapers and based upon the catalogues and samples which he possesses. His business can be multiplied and prices made lower AND THE ENTIRE NATION BENEFITED.

It is quite true, as Mr. Ayres points out in the circular which he issues, a fact which we ourselves have pointed out, that the parcel post is not going to give any undue advantage to the mail order house. On the contrary, the parcel post makes it possible through the gigantic machinery of the postoffice FOR THE SMALL MAN TO DO CHEAPLY AND EFFECTIVELY what the great mail order house alone could do with its elaborate system of distribution, freight, et cetera.

The great distributer of goods is and should be the local merchant.

And the great salesman of the United States should be the country editor, the man who alone reaches the substantial, solid population of the country and of the small towns.

The editor who can reach a thousand or five hundred of the dwellers in villages and in the country should be worth more as a salesman, properly used, than any other in the United States.

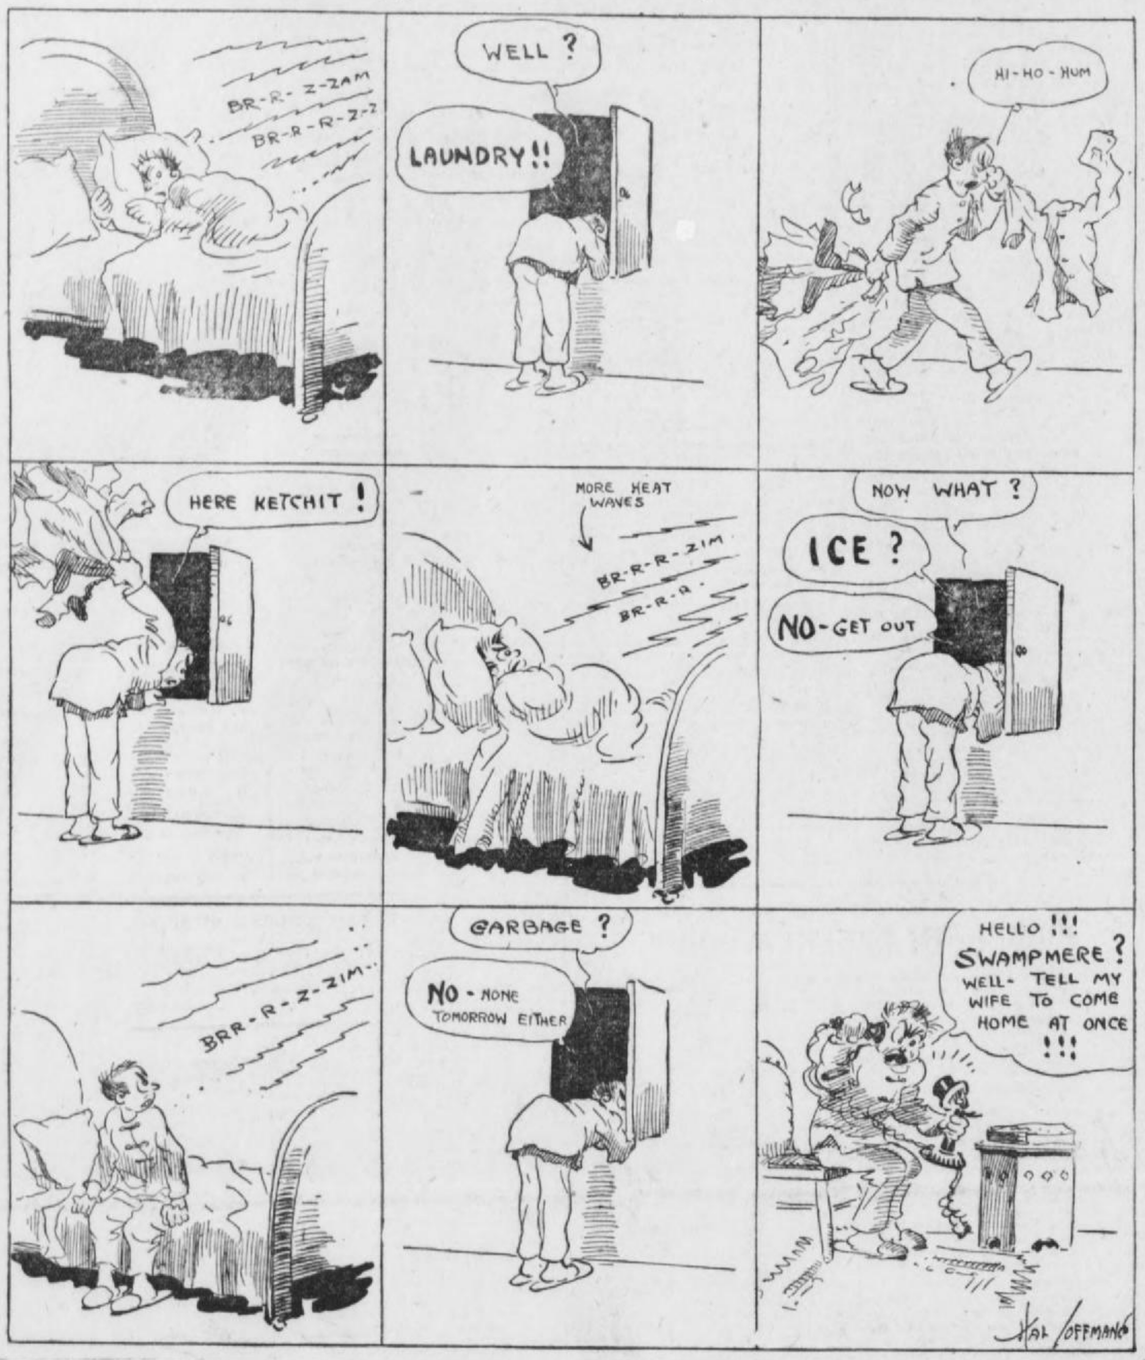

And in proportion to its circulation his newspaper is infinitely the most valuable advertising medium in the United States.

This we have said and shall repeat until the big manufacturers, the big national advertisers, realize what it means to them.

We do this all the more gladly, emphasizing the value of the country newspaper as an advertising medium, since this organization owns no country newspaper and can gain nothing by recognition of the country newspaper's advertising value except what may be gained by helping a useful class of professional workers in the nation—that is to say, the country local editors, who are the national policemen, the only superintendents that watch for the public welfare in the small places.

Our Practical Envoy to France

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

THE present Ambassador to France is not less a social ornament than an eminently practical and useful publicist.

Myron Herrick is a man of great wealth won by his brain and energies. He was William McKinley's friend, and financed the martyr President out of serious monetary trouble into the prosperity that relieved the last years of his administration. Mr. Herrick has been Governor of Ohio. He would probably have been Senator. But when William Howard Taft offered to send him officially to the politest and most charming social center of the world the genial gentleman and social magnate put aside the wrangle of the political forum and assumed the garb and dignity of an Ambassador to France.

The American Ambassador has consecrated himself with fine energy upon the soundest methods of financing the American farmer. He is practically the author and the chief advocate of the recent far-reaching agitation of farm credits.

This practical Ambassador entered into an extensive research as to the comparative high cost of living in our own and foreign countries. He had the aid of four Ambassadors and a long list of scholars and authorities, and his forthcoming volume will be of invaluable interest.

Its central conclusion reaches the one point of economy—to give the American farmer a fair chance to develop our vast resources, which are now apparently in embryo. Mr. Herrick's motive is altruistic and unselfish. He needs neither money nor position. His sole idea is in the most practical way to "back up" the farmer—not to preach at him the sounding shibboleth "Back to the Land!" but to help him get money at a low rate of interest and a surety of safety in the way of extended time. He is the foe to "the mortgage on the farm."

The American farmer pays a higher rate of interest for his money than any other class of investor in the country, sometimes as high as 12 per cent, while the European farmer secures loans on the same basis as the biggest railroad or corporation.

In the United States the average yield per acre is less than in any other country, being 14 bushels, to 20 bushels in France, 29 in England, 33 in the Netherlands, and Germany produces 46 per acre.

To cure this frightfully unbalanced condition has been the mission and the persistent labor of our Ambassador to France. It is a great work, and much has been done.

James Watt and His Engine

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY.

ONE hundred and forty-four years ago, July 26, 1769, James Watt secured the patent for his Steam Engine.

Old Oliver Cromwell used to say that "a man is never so wise as when he goes without knowing where he is going."

When Watt was on his way for his famous patent he certainly did not know where he was going, or what it was he was going after. Only a dim, vague conception had he of the tremendous agent he was about setting to work. No man living at the time grasped the full significance of the Scotchman's invention. To this day but few men out of the millions upon millions on earth realize what steam has accomplished. One hundred and forty-four years after its discovery and application not one man in a thousand has an intelligent comprehension of what it has done for the human race, materially, intellectually and morally.

Watt's invention annihilated time and space, or at least practically eliminated them from the account. Mountains, forests, deserts, oceans were no longer to separate men from each other. Distance was to be no more a barrier between the different nations and the various parts of the same nation. The crooked was to be made straight, the rough plain, and all flesh was to be brought together, to see, and benefit by, and rejoice in, the same great things.

The acquaintance of Man with Man, of Nation with Nation—the exchange of ideas, customs and sentiments—was to break down the ancient hates and make people love one another.

The Steam Engine has done more for the Evangelization of the World, for the promotion of human Brotherhood, and for the general fostering of peace on earth and good will to all the preachers, moralists and philosophers put together.

Judged by its results, the Steam Engine is the most sacred thing that is known to us. No talisman, however holy it may be esteemed, however it may be bowed down to and revered, is half so holy as is the wonderful piece of machinery that Watt patented on the 26th day of July, 1769.

It has been the greatest doer of things ever known—and the things that it has done are the things that could never have been done without it. In the light of its achievements the Steam Engine is the most important piece of work that ever was conceived in the brain of man. The inventions and discoveries that have come after it are but assistive; in no sense are they worthy of being compared with it. All things considered, the greatest benefactor of the human race, the earth over and the ages through, is the Scotchman James Watt, the inventor of the Steam Engine.

.:. The New Remedy .:.

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

"Mayor Shanks for a year," so the news item said,
"By compound rheumaticks was tied to his bed.
But he got himself stung by a squad of trained bees,
Which banished forever the hateful disease."

WHEN my aged Uncle Henry read this tense and terse dispatch,
The long extinguished lamp of hope was lit beneath his thatch.
"If bees," said he, "cures rheumatiz, there can't be any doubt
That the stings of other critters will allay the pangs o' gout."
So Uncle spent an evening in a spotted adder's den
And never had a touch of gout—or anything—again.

The item, sent from shore to shore, ranged over alien lands
Until it reached a Zulu chief on Afric's burning strands.
"I'll try it for the mumps," said he, and down beside the Niger,
His face irradiating hope, he waked a sleeping tiger;
The tiger rose and bit him, and the noble Zulu chief,
From the malady that vexed him, obtained permanent relief.

Abel Brown, the deep sea sailor, found the brief dispatch one day
In a sailor's boarding parlor down at Magdalena Bay.
"I will cure my corns," he muttered; and that evening after dark
Abel Brown experimented with an ocean-going shark.
That the cure is quite effective seems to be extremely plain,
For since then our deep sea hero hasn't had an ache or pain.

DOROTHY DIX

Writes on

Vanity of Men

They Are Just as Conceited as Women, and Far More Susceptible to Flattery, She Declares.

By DOROTHY DIX.

RECENTLY the papers contained the sad intelligence of the serious wounding of a young man whose throat was cut by his three-story collar.

The account of this deplorable accident says that the man is what is known as "a swell dresser," and that in particular he has a neck built upon such liberal and giraffe-like lines that he can wear a collar of such altitude that it is the despairing envy of all the other young men of his acquaintance. A few mornings ago, resplendent in all his shining expanse of white linen, in attempting to get off a street car his foot slipped, and he received a bad fall, as a result of which the sharp edges of his collar penetrated his neck, inflicting two gashes that required the services of a doctor.

A Man and His Ties.

This incident scores one against man for self-sacrificing vanity, for no woman has yet been choked to death by her collar, though many a short-necked woman has found out what that verse in the Bible means that says, "He, being in torment, lifted up his eyes."

The truth is that men have talked so much about women's vanity that we have come to think that the fair sex monopolizes this weakness. Far from it. Men are just as conceited about their looks as women are. Of course, they haven't as good an opportunity to show it, because unkind fate has narrowed them down to a Spartan simplicity in the way of personal adornment, but what they have they make the most of.

No debutante, fussing over her first party frock, was ever so particular as a man about his neckties. He doesn't hesitate to consign half a dozen white ones to the scrap basket if he musses them in tying, or fails to get the proper set to the bow, while no amount of family affection would induce him to wear a homemade one. There are places he couldn't be dragged to by wild horses unless he had on an evening suit, nor could you sell him a hat whose crown was an infinitesimal degree lower or higher than every other man's hat, even if you threw in a chromo with it.

Observe the pains he takes to show his fancy socks, and note that the crease in his trousers is never off his mind for a single instant. In the theater, in the car, in the parlor, the moment he gets seated he begins hitching at his trousers to preserve that razor edge, and it is worse than useless to attempt to engage his attention until it has been tenderly settled in place.

Belief Never Wavers.

Now it is just as awful and heart-breaking a thing for a tailor-made frock to bag at the knees as it is for trousers, but you never see a woman in public spending her time pulling at a seam in her skirt.

But the most amusing and child-like exhibition of vanity of which men are ever guilty is when one is told that he looks like some famous man, and goes around for ever after, in a ridiculous pose, trying to emphasize the resemblance.

Think of the commonplace young men we have all known who cultivated a distraught air and a pale and melancholy countenance because some indiscreet person had detected a fancied resemblance between them and Booth. Recall the pompous gentlemen whose principal object in life seems to be to cultivate a pair of whiskers and tell you how they were taken for Chauncey Depew, or the excessively English-American who develops an ingrowing British accent, and spends his days and nights imagining he looks like King George. This is a phase of vanity that is exclusively masculine. A woman's vanity never reaches the pitch of understudying celebrities.

Men are much vainer than women about their personal charms. A man's belief in his powers of fascination never wavers. He never grows too old, nor too fat, nor too bald to arrogate to himself admiration that a woman in her palmiest days would hardly dare to claim. The elderly millionaire, though he be the homeliest of his sex, can see no reason why he shouldn't fire the fancy and come up to the ideal of budding sixteen. In his own eyes he is, now and forever, the embodiment of all the manly charms and graces, and he can never be persuaded that any woman wouldn't have the time of her life sitting around looking at him and listening to him.

A woman, on the other hand, is taught from her cradle that she may only hope to inspire love while she is young and attractive, and when her glass tells her that this is no longer the case, she looks with distrust on the man who asks her to marry him. Of course, there have been cases where rich old women have married mere boys, but their insane jealousy of their young husbands proved that the women knew that the men married them for their money.

Men Easily Flattered.

The rich old man, however, who marries a young girl is troubled by no such doubts. His bride may yawn in his face, and shrink from his touch, but he never suspects that she had any other object in view than pure, unadulterated affection in marrying him.

A man shows his superior vanity to woman in the way he talks about himself. He thinks nothing of spendilig an entire evening in a monologue about himself, his business, his amusements, what he said to so and so, and what they said to him, etc., etc.—but no woman would dare to try to talk to a man for 30 minutes about her dressmaker, and her affairs. She knows that at the end of five minutes he would get up and beat it away from her presence.

Men are much more susceptible to flattery than women are. A woman looks a gift compliment in the mouth, but a man will swallow any kind of a jolly—hook, bait and sinker. This is what makes men the prey of the adventuress, and amenable to the tactful wife who knows how to judiciously spread the salve. Through their vanity are men worked, and we could better spare a better quality.

If men were not vain—but, thank goodness, they are!

Handling the Dog Question in a Humane Manner.

The City Sanitary Department has done well to do away with its old custom of killing, either by shooting or fracturing their heads with a hammer, all dogs brought to the city pound, regardless of the physical condition of the dogs.

Hereafter, all dogs worth while will be held for forty-eight hours, during which time citizens desiring them may have them for $1.25 per head, if they are not called for and released by their owners in the meantime, of course. All diseased or permanently disabled dogs will be asphyxiated.

Among the dogs brought to the pound are many really valuable animals, and it frequently might happen that citizens would be only too glad to purchase them. If they are sound and all right, there is no reason whatever why this desire should not be gratified.

Incidentally, the stated change in the sanitary regulations was brought about by the Atlanta branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. It was a sensible and humane move, and is to be commended.
